Clough added Edison, the third of the great pioneer recording companies, to his list in October, 1909, a few months after he began singing for Columbia.

As far as I definitely know, he recorded for only Victor, Columbia, and Edison, although Indestructible two-minute cylinder 1393, "Beautiful Garden of Roses," sung by a tenor whose name is given as Rome Fenton, sounds enough like Clough to make me suspect he used an assumed name and made this recording.

But I don't know that for a fact—any more than I know that his real name was Arthur Clough. However, we shall see that he recorded this same song, as "Garden of Roses," for Edison.

The tenor's first two-minute Edison Standard cylinder, 10233, "When the Meadow Larks Are Calling, Annie Laurie," was of a song we already have seen he had made for Victor. In November he had 10251, "It is Hard to Kiss Your Sweetheart When the Last Kiss Means Goodbye," and in December, 10261, "In the Shadow of the Carolina Pines." Number 10-311, "A Creole Lullaby," followed in February, 1911, and his final two-minute, 10497, "Garden of Roses," came in June that year.

Arthur picked another undying ballad for his first four-minute Amberol cylinder in March, 1911. It was 637, "Let Me Call You Sweetheart." In April, on 654, he had the assistance of the Premier Quartet, for reviving the equally immortal "Little Annie Rooney," one of the few complete records ever made of that old-timer, which was written in 1889 by an English music hall artist, Michael Nolan.

"Don't Wake Up, I Am Dreaming," followed in June; 787, "Let's Make Love Among the Roses," with the Premier Quartet, in September; 796, "Down By the Old Mill Stream," in October; and 866, "The Hour That Gave Me You," in January, 1912, when, as we have seen, he also sang it for the Victor list.

Clough then disappeared from Edison until October, 1913, when he sang on Blue Amberol 1927, "The Beautiful Dawn of Love," concurrently with the issue of his Victor of that song.

The Edison supplement said:

"Charles N. Daniels (Neil Moret) has written a song of very different type from his previous compositions. He will be remembered as the composer of 'Hiawatha' and 'Moonlight,' two of the most popular pieces of their kind ever written. 'Beautiful Dawn of Love' is a ballad, sentimental in theme, but with a fine dignified melody that makes a most enjoyable and lasting impression on the hearer."

After the lapse of more than a year, Clough was back in December, 1914, with 2481, "Roses Remind Me of Someone." In it he was assisted by a chorus.

The supplement commented:

"A sentimental ballad of exceptional merit—not the 'mushy' kind but one that is really impressive. The lyric is well above the average, set to a rather plaintive melody, very simple, quiet and sweet. Arthur C. Clough, whose clear tenor voice records particularly well, sings in an unpretentious manner, quite in keeping with the character of the selection."

By this time, Thomas A. Edison had introduced his Diamond Disc, and in 1915, Clough was represented by one lone "Re-Creation," that stayed in the catalog until the company went out of the record business in 1929. It was 80215, "Down By the Old Mill Stream," which also included a mixed chorus, and was coupled with "Way Down on Tampa Bay," by Owen J. McCormack and Chorus.

VI. Final Appearance

After that, the name of Arthur Clough did not appear, as far as I can find, in any record list for seven years. Then, in July, 1922 (and in keeping with Edison's custom of recording many numbers and issuing them later, though sometimes their popularity had gone), appeared Blue Amberol 4538, "A Girl I Know," sung by Clough and mixed chorus.

The supplement said:

"Here is a fascinating waltz-song, which Arthur Clough, an unusually good tenor, sings in a delightful and wholly satisfying manner. And, his enunciation, so essential in phonographic reproduction, is perfect."

No mention was made of the composer of the song. It had been recorded in 1915 but never had any popularity. At about the same time it appeared on Diamond Disc 50927, coupled with George Wilton Ballard singing "For You a Rose" which had

(Continued on page 52)

EFFECTIVE WAYS TO MOUNT SILVER SPOONS

More spoons from the collection of Mrs. Wilbur Gunnerson, Florida.

Top Row Includes:

Old, Odd, and Unusual; Around the World and a bit of glamour; Sports; Theatre; Fraternal, and Flowers; Trade; Advertising; Industry, and Health.

Bottom Row Includes:

Historical; Army; Navy; VIPS and Legend; Indians and Florida; Expositions, Fairs; Celebrations and Conventions; Education; Religion; Literary and Music.

Boards, velvet covered, 18 inches by 24 inches. All spoons hung at eye level for viewing.

On the Shelf Includes:

Silver sugar bowl; spoon holders, with sugar shells.

Silver basket with fresh flowers.

On the Table Includes:

Mostly books on plated silver, old silver, and Souvenir spoons. Look carefully and you'll see four spoons from Ceylon.

(SEE COVER)

The cover of this issue shows silver spoons from the collection of Mrs. Wilbur Gunnerson of Winter Park, Fla.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 40)

been recorded in 1917. Naturally, the record did not sell, since both songs were out of date.

And that, according to my information, ends the story of the recording career of Arthur Clough. Why he ceased to make records and how he occupied himself in the years that followed 1915 I do not know.

The man himself remains tantalizing obscure, but I hope he still is living and in good health, if at an advanced age. He was an admirable artist of his kind and if anyone can provide additional information concerning him I shall be happy to share it with HOBBIES readers.

(The end)

OLD MECHANICAL BANKS

(Continued from page 46)

now turned up in a different type. This new find has a larger size "can" made of cardboard with tin ends. The face of the boy and the lettering "Thank You" are somewhat different than the bank as pictured in the November, 1966, article. Other differences are in the color of the paper can coverings and the printing thereon. So we now have Calumet Bank (Tin), Type I (Metal Can), and Calumet Bank (Tin), Type II (Cardboard and Metal Can).

With the correction of the two Organ Banks and two Owl Banks and addition of the Pelican and Calumet, the "type" bank situation is now up to date and permanent as of this writing. Since, however, there is nothing so permanent as change, it is possible at some future date to have additions to the "type" banks. If and when this should occur readers will be so advised.

OLD METALS

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

THE ELDRIDGE R. JOHNSON MUSEUM & SOME BERLINER, VICTOR & EDISON HISTORY

PART I

By JIM WALSH

Certificate of Ownership. Landed Gentry. The cats and 'possum that make their home with Jim Walsh, author of HOBBIES' "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists," have acquired a possibly unique distinction as the only animals belonging to the Alaskan "landed gentry."

The Nystrom Family of HOBBIES readers in Anchorage, Alaska, has sent Petey, Nipper, Lucky Jim, Plum, and Possy a deed to a tract of land, as well as a certificate of ownership issued by the Security Title and Trust Company of Alaska.

No information was given as to the size of the tract, but Mr. and Mrs. Nystrom and their cats explained they wanted the Walsh family to be the only cats and 'possums in the world who could say truthfully they owned land in Alaska.

The cats and Possy are now talking of using their land as a base for gold prospecting.

INTERIORS, ANTIQUES by ESTHER
545 Bunker Hill Rd. Ashtabula, O. 44004
Ph.: 216 — 997-2141 (Eves.)

Rare Violin "Pittitjioa Alne" M.O.P. threading outlining top & simply beautiful M.O.P. design over all of reverse side, $250.

AND a Bow of, I believe, a senna wood with frog exactly as 1st bow on cover of June HOBBIES but with abalone at base & in turnkey end. Lapping has disappeared. Bow $400 or PAIR to first buyer, $550. auc

I. A New Museum

Possy, my cherished pet 'possum is walking about the yard and sniffing the breezes, as if he detects warmer weather not far away. The cats — Nipper, Petey, Lucky Jim and "Professor" Plum — also are active despite summer heat.

Concurrently, with Possy's burst of energy, I have received two letters I consider of exceptional interest to record collectors which deserve mention here. One contains what, to me, is astonishing news.

The first communication is from Leon deValinger, Jr., director of the Delaware State Museum at 316 S. Governor Ave., Dover, Del. Mr. deValinger tells me that on Tuesday, December 14, 1967, a museum was opened and dedicated in Dover to honor the memory of the late Eldridge Reeves Johnson, a Delaware native, who founded the Victor Talking Machine Company and became the most successful of all the pioneer manufacturers of phonographs and records.

"We are assembling," Mr. deValinger wrote, "everything pertaining to Mr. Johnson and the company he founded. Your articles (in the January and February HOBBIES) and the ones to follow naturally will constitute an important part of our reference material."

Mr. deValinger added that he hoped to visit me to obtain any information I could provide about Mr. Johnson and Victor records and sent me a program of the dedication of the

MUSIC BOXES

NICKELODEONS!

CIRCUS ORGANS!

You'll find collecting old-time music boxes, colorful nickelodeons with art glass fronts, gay circus organs and other automatic musical instruments to be an enjoyable and profitable hobby!

We are suppliers to collectors, dealers and museums all over the world.

Our large illustrated catalog offers outstanding values in all conditions and price ranges. Also music box books and recordings. Send $1 today and our fascinating catalog will be rushed to you!

BATHAWAY & BOWERS, INC.

Dept. 9; 11975 E. Florence Avenue

Santa Fe Springs, Calif. 90670 auc

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

WANTED

FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on

ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single - faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G.&T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.

Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla,

New York

tfx

MEMORY SHOP

1106 Eastwood, S.E.

E. Grand Rapids, Mich. 49506

Phone: 949-1398

RECORD COLLECTORS!

Who do you like? Gene Austin, Henry Burr, Billy Murray, Ada Jones, Ruth Etting, Eddie Cantor, Al Jolson, Nora Bayes, Frank Crumit, Vernon Dalhart — or

Excerpts from Broadway shows and Musical Comedies on 78's dating back to 1900? (Big list available) — or Operatic stars, Cornet solos, piano, organ, saxophone, xylophone, violin, or other old-time instrumentals?

Send $1 for RECORD IDENTIFICATION AND DATING CHART FOR LABELS PRIOR TO 1930. Send your want lists or request free lists of records available when ordering your Dating Chart. Mention category or artists desired.

Also 1905 VICTOR CATALOG Re-Issue at $5 is now available.

We buy old record catalogs or will swap for records. auc

Antique

MUSIC BOX SPECIALISTS

(Estab. Switzerland 1825)

Complete Repair Service - All Types

All Work Guaranteed

Finest Instruments Bought & Sold

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave., Pelham, N.Y. 10803

12c

Johnson Memorial. Eldridge Reeves Johnson Memorial Building, Delaware State Museum, 316 S. Governors Avenue, Dover, Del., 19901.

Eldridge Reeves Johnson Memorial Building. The program contained the following comments by E. R. Fenimore Johnson, son of the distinguished inventor, industrialist, and philanthropist.

I think these comments are well worth quoting:

"My father . . . was a Dover boy, son of Asa S. Johnson, a contractor and house builder in Dover. Father was born in Wilmington, Del.

"He was one of the industrialists who played a substantial part in the building of the prosperity of this country to the point where it has become the envy of the world. . . .

"My father was not the inventor of the talking machine. He was always quick to give the credit to Thomas A. Edison, to whom that honor solely belongs. My father was the inventor of many improvements of the basic device but there were many other talking machine inventors of equal and even greater importance, especially Emile Berliner.

"My reason for regarding my father as deserving to be remembered is that he is the one man who, by personal greatness, halted the petty quarrels which were retarding the progress of the newborn industry, and then by his inventive and business genius made it possible for the first time in the world's history for good music to be heard in even the most humble home.

"In this day in which music is heard everywhere at any time we have no conception of how little music entered into the life of the average person only 70 years ago.

"Soon after he founded the Victor Talking Machine Company of Camden, N.J., talking machines made their way all over the world. Travelers encountered them from the Eskimos' Arctic igloos to the thatched huts of the tropics.

"Talking machines became fixtures in all classes of homes, and they were almost invariably a feature of the plush parlors of the rich and the great. A

(Continued on page 50)

PHONOGRAPHS FOR SALE

PHONOGRAPH parts, repair and accessory catalog No. 8 solves every problem. America's foremost early phonograph supply house. Copy 25c. — Karl Frick, 940 Canon Rd., Santa Barbara, Calif. 93105 au3844

ANTIQUE outside horn type Victor, Columbia, Edison phonographs, parts, catalogs. Bought, sold, repaired. — Nugent, 3804 Charles City Road, Richmond, Va. au1061

Search For . . .

Nickelodeon Pianos---Orchestrions --- Band Organs

We are SERIOUS BUYERS of automatic musical instruments. We are not looking for bargains; we are willing to pay well for choice material. Whether you have a $200 instrument or a $200,000 collection it will pay you to contact us today.

At the present time we are looking for the following items to build our inventory and to fill our customers' want lists:

NICKELODEON PIANOS: ORCHESTRIONS

Coin-in-the-slot pianos and orchestrions (coin pianos with drums, xylophones, pipes, etc. added) made by: SEEBURG, WURLITZER, CONNOLA, CREMONA, WESTERN ELECTRIC, NELSON-WIGGEN, HUPFELD, NORTH TONAWANDA, WEBER, PHILLIPS, POPPER, BERRY-WOOD, LINK, etc. We are also interested in Capitol, Clark, Automatic Music Roll Co., etc. multiple-tune rolls for these instruments.

We also want all types of theatre instruments including SEEBURG and WURLITZER photoplays, American "Photoplays" and Reproducos. Also want OS, NOS, MSR, H and other rolls used for these instruments.

We also want other automatic instruments such as the MILLS VICLANO-VIRTUOSO, HUPFELD PHONOLISZT-VICLANO, WURLITZER AUTOMATIC HARP, ENCORE AUTOMATIC BANJO (we urgently need three of these), etc.

BAND ORGANS

We urgently need all types of BAND ORGANS and related instruments. Included are WURLITZER styles 103, 105, 125, 146-A, 146-B, 150, 153, 157, 165, 166, 180; all NORTH TONAWANDA MUSICAL INSTRUMENT WORKS styles; all ARTIZAN styles. All types of European organs wanted including LIMON-AIRE, PRATI, GAVICLI, MARENGHI, MCRTIER, HCCGHUYS, VERBEEK, BORSENS, BRUDER, etc.

Condition is not important. We want to buy them in all grades . . . and are willing to pay well in order to obtain them.

MUSIC BOXES

All types of REGINA, POLYPHON, SYMPHONION, KALLIOPE, KOMET, etc. music boxes wanted in better grades (in operating condition with all teeth intact in the comb). Regina single tune and automatic changing boxes wanted in all sizes.

CALLIOPE

We are in need of four calliopes at the present time. We are interested in ROLL-OPERATED models by TANGLEY, NATIONAL, ARTIZAN (AIR CALLIO) and HARRINGTON. Calliopes are wanted in any condition.

HERE'S HOW TO SELL TO HATHAWAY & BOWERS, INC.

We know what we are looking for and what we want to pay for it. Here's all you have to do: Send us a description of what you have available. A snapshot will help. Give a description of its condition. If we need any additional information we'll let you know. With the information at hand we will make you a CASH OFFER for your instrument.

You are under no obligation to sell if you don't want to. However, it is our hope that you'll find our offer sufficiently attractive to induce you to part with it. If you want information over the telephone you may call us at (213) 941-8774. You pay for the phone call. If we buy your instrument we'll reimburse you.

We are a firm which is experienced in the purchase and sale of hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of automatic instruments. When you sell to Hathaway & Bowers, Inc. you'll receive a fair price, immediate cash payment in full for all items purchased and, furthermore, you'll have a pleasant and enjoyable transaction. Contact us today!

HATHAWAY

& BOWERS, Inc.

Directors: Q. David Bowers,
Terry Hathaway

Dept. 9; 11975 E. Florence Avenue
Santa Fe Springs, Calif. 90670
Tel: (213) 941-8774

America's largest automatic musical instrument dealer.

Send $1 for latest sale catalog.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

Victor Founder. This portrait of Eldridge R. Johnson, founder of the Victor Talking Machine Company, was painted by J. Richards Essig of Philadelphia and is displayed in the museum which the State of Delaware recently opened to honor Johnson.

RCA Victor publicity distributed years ago, said Johnson sang "I Guess I'll Have to Telegraph My Baby" as the first record ever made by his company. Apparently the record was not placed on the market.

Pictures 2 and 3, courtesy of the Delaware State Archives, Hall of Records, Dover.

majority of these pleasure-giving machines bore the 'His Master's Voice' dog, made famous by placing it on products of only the very finest quality.

"The secret of my father's success was a quality product sold always at a fair price. For this feat of putting 'The Gift That Keeps On Giving' into the homes of the common man, I ask the people of Dover to see to it that Eldridge Reeves Johnson is not forgotten."

I should like to add my own conviction that Eldridge Johnson's greatest contribution to the sound-recording industry lay in his genius for advertising and his unflinching determination to enlist the services of the finest artists, regardless of whether he made, or lost, money by offering their recorded performances.

I believe no other manufacturer entered so wholeheartedly into cataloging the voices of the greatest operatic and concert stars, even though the Victor Company probably made money on the records of only a dozen or so of its Red Seal stars. I understand that the Red Seal department always operated at a loss and that the deficit was charged off to advertising. Red Seal records were made possible only by huge black label sales of "popular" discs.

The Victor catalogs, monthly supplements, and other publicity were incomparably the finest of any company, I think. For all his achievements Mr. Johnson, who was born in Wilmington on February 6, 1867, and died in Morristown, N.J., November 17, 1945, deserves to be remembered gratefully. I am delighted that the State of Delaware will maintain a memorial building in his honor.

II. Double Faced Berliners

In the same mail with Mr. deValinger's letter came one from a lady whose name and address I have promised not to make public, in order to prevent her from being besieged by collectors and dealers, since she has nothing she wants to sell.

But what she wrote tied in nicely with this account of the Johnson memorial, for she told me of going into her attic and finding a box containing about 90 seven-inch Berliner, Improved, and Victor records dating back to before the turn of the century. They had been owned by her late husband's uncle who was one of the first recording engineers for Berliner and Johnson.

I almost fell out of my chair when I read that one of the boxes contained a copy of what is considered the first record ever issued by Johnson — number A-1, George Broderick's recitation of Eugene Field's poem, "Departure." I had doubted that a single copy survived.

But, more astonishing! And I haven't got over this yet:

Three of the Berliner records, made about 70 years ago, which my correspondent found in her attic, were double-faced!

Think of that! I often have said there is no absolute truth in phonograph research and that, time and again, when I have been sure I have said the last word on a subject, something has turned up to prove me mistaken. So it has now.

I always have assumed that the first double-faced records were made in 1904 by the Fonotopia Company of Italy and Odeon Company of Germany.

The Columbia Company over here also issued a few in 1904, but withdrew them, when Odeon, which claimed world-wide patent rights to records playing on both sides, threatened suit. Later, their differences appear to have been adjusted, and Columbia resumed making double-faced records in 1908.

But now we find Berliner did the same thing around 1899 or 1900! I don't know whether any of these "play on both sides" seven-inch records were actually sold or whether they only were pressed experimentally, but I do know that the knowledge of their existence is amazing news.

And, although the lady doesn't want to sell the records, I hope she will consider willing them to the Eldridge R. Johnson Museum, or to the Library of Congress, where my own collection eventually will go.

Victor, it has been agreed, reluctantly followed Columbia's double-faced records example a few months later. Yet I have one Victor record that has puzzled me for these many years. It bears the Grand Prize label, introduced late in 1905, but is recorded on both sides, and the titles and dates are scratched into the label as was done with the earlier Monarchs.

One side is numbered 2035 and is called "Victor Talks to Juvenile Customers." The other side is 2036, "Hints to Victor Salesmen." The artist's name is not printed, but beneath the label the handwritten word "Spencer" (for Len Spencer) appears on both sides.

Part of the 2000 numerical sequence was reserved for dealers' demonstration records, of which this disc is obviously one, but I am puzzled by its being double-faced. The scratched-in date is November 3, 1905, which was just a little less than three years before the first list of Victor double-faced records was announced October 25, 1908.

Since I know that several enthusiasts are trying to put together complete lists of Berliner records, which were the first commercial discs, next month I shall quote here the contents of those boxes in the lady's attic. When she has provided the date, scratched into the record label, I shall give it, together with number, title, and name of artist.

(To be continued)

HISTORICAL RECORDS

(Continued from page 36)

zically and asked, "Do you know what's on those records?"

"No," I said, "but I'm willing to pay good money to find out."

The man thought for a moment. He probably figured that, since I wanted the discs so badly, they must represent something special. Again he refused to sell them as a separate unit.

What went on after that must have been a sight to behold. I kept on insisting, the man kept on declining. And so we argued heatedly for some 10 minutes, while my husband stood helplessly by not knowing what to do.

Finally, when all seemed lost, something made the owner relent. I really must have worn him out. He picked up the records, examined them one by one and said: "Oh, all right, take them."

I emitted a sigh of relief, quickly paid the man, bid him good-bye, and hurried to the door before he had a chance to change his mind.

Once home, I first tried O soave fanciulla and wasn't at all surprised to hear Caro nome instead, and not by Melba. I listened to the other recordings. And then came the big question — what on earth did I buy?

I seemed to remember that Ferruccio Giannini made some recordings for Rex, a Philadelphia company dealing mostly in popular discs. But I had no idea what other operatic or concert singers recorded for that firm.

Since then I've asked practically all my friend collectors. But nobody

(Continued on page 46)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

From left to right:

A GROUP OF PIONEERS—Samuel Siegel, the mandolin virtuoso, made Berliner and Improved 7-inch records before he appeared on Victor and Monarch labels.

Len Spencer, first internationally known recording artist, made both sides of a double-faced disc recorded in 1905.

Billy Golden is said to have been the first professional artist to record for Emile Berliner and was one of Eldridge Johnson's first singers.

THE ELDRIDGE R. JOHNSON MUSEUM & SOME BERLINER, VICTOR & EDISON HISTORY

PART II

By JIM WALSH

As I promised in Part I of this article, in the August issue of HOBBIES, I now shall list the contents of "those boxes in the lady's attic." Where she provided the date, scratched into the record label, I'll give it, along with number, title, and artist's name.

Beginning with the double-faced

Berliners: one combines "War is a Bountiful Jade," sung by Broderick, with Lincoln's Speech at Gettysburg, recited by William F. Hooley. Oddly, the first side is numbered A-72 and the second, A-56. This shows Berliner was using the "A" system of numbering before Johnson adopted it for Improved records.

Both sides of A-111 are taken up with "Sweet and Low," sung by the Haydn Quartet. No number is given for the third double-faced offering, which contains "Nancy" and "I'd Like It," both sung by S. H. Dudley.

The single-faced "E. Berliner's Gramophone" records, bearing patent dates of November 8, 1887; May 15, 1888; May 6, 1890; February 10, 1895; and October 29, 1895, are:

7y, William Tell Overture — Banda Rossa.
23y, Directorate March — Sousa's Band (Aug. 18, 1897).
40, Oriental Echoes — (Casey?) Oct. 15, 1896).

EARLL P. FRALICK

360 Barby Rd. Blue Bell, Pa. 19422
Phone 1-215 - 646-7141

REGINA MUSIC BOX. Table model. double comb. 15½" disc type in rich mahogany case with rope carving & orig. cherub scene on interior: 10 discs incl. Good cond. $475.

Postage, ins., & shipping extra. Photos 25c. sm

WANTED FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on

ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single - faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS such as ODEON, FONOTIFIA, G.&T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.

Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla, New York

tfx

- 47, El Capitan March — Sousa's Band.
- 79, The Crack Regiment March—Sousa's Band.
- 143zz, King Cotton March—Sousa's Band.
- 192x, I've Gwine Back to Dixie—George J. Gaskin (May 9, 1895).
- 196z, Whistling Ccon—George W. Johnson (May 18, 1896).
- 215, Last Night—Cornet solo by W. Paris Chambers (June, 1897).
- 230, Polka—Composed and played by Chambers (May 6, 1896).
- 221y, Miserere from "Il Trovatore"—Cornet and trombone duet by Messrs. Higgins and Pryor of Sousa's Band.
- 237, Nellie Bly Fantasia—Cornet solo by Chambers (Oct. 9, 1897).
- 259, Narcissus—Chambers (Oct. 9, 1897).
- 388, Die Nachtigall (The Nightingale)—German soprano solo by Vioni Eldner.
- 404w, Laughing Song—Johnson (Nov. 18, 1896).
- 646z, Departure, Eugene Field—Recited by George Graham (June 17, 1896).
- 686, Negro Funeral—Graham (June 17, 1896).
- 725w, Roll on de Ground—Billy Golden (Dec. 9, 1896). Golden is said to have been the first artist to record for Berliner.
- 726x, Turkey in the Straw—Golden (Dec. 9, 1896).
- 825, Columbian Anthem—National Hymn (E. Berliner Brass Quartet and Piano).
- 450, Belle of Virginia—Banjo solo by Steve Clement (Oct. 18, 1896).
- 912, Home Over There—J. W. Myers (May 4, 1896).
- 940, Drill, Ye Warriors Drill—Gaskin (Oct. 13, 1896).
- 943, When the Trumpet in the Cornfield Blows—Gaskin (Nov. 6, 1896).
- 993, Put Me Off at Buffalo by Harry and John Dillon—Sung by Dan W. Quinn.
- 2547, Piano solo—Kate Kicker (April 18, 1896).
- 3001, Kathleen (Mora)—Duet by Carrie and Lucie Badiner (April 7, 1897, Washington, D.C.).
- 3007, Selections from "The Fortune Teller" "Gypsy Love Song" and "Hungarian Movement"—Sousa's Band, signed by Harry Higgins.
- 3198, Sonnen Auf Gang Tyrolean—Graus Mountain Choir (June 2, 1897).
- 3003, The Mountain Climbers—Sung by the Graus Dun (July 3, 1897).
- 3406, Killamey—Cornet solo, Chambers.
- 3308, Little Nell, song and dance—Trombone solo by Arthur Pryor (July 27, 1897).
- 3410z, Answer—Higgins and Pryor.
- 3654, Last Night—Soprano solo by Helen Jennings.

A few comments about these Berliner records before proceeding to a list of Johnson's early Improved brand:

I hope the collectors who are trying to fathom the mysteries of the Berliner numbering system will be able to detect what is meant by the small "w's," "y's," "z's," etc., that follow some of the numbers.

You will notice George Graham recorded for Berliner, in 1896, the Eugene Field poem, "Departure," which Broderick did a few years later on Improved record A.1.

The lady's list attributes "The Home Over There" to George Meyers, but I thought she meant J. W. Myers and changed it.

I wonder if "Kate Kicker" is the

Antique MUSIC BOX SPECIALISTS

(Estab. Switzerland 1888)

Complete Repair Service - All Types

All Work Guaranteed

Finest Instruments Bought & Sold

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave., Pelham, N.Y. 10803

tfc

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

tfc

Wall case exhibit in Eldridge Reeves Johnson Memorial Building, Delaware State Museum, Dover.

—Photo, courtesy Delaware State Archives, Hall of Records, Dover, Del.

right name for the damsel who apparently played an unidentified piano solo. I never before have heard of her, or of the Misses Badimer. Miss Jennings was our cherished friend, the late Edith Helena.

The Improved records in the collection are:

- A-1, Departure—Recitation by George Broderick.
- A-20, More Work for the Undertaker—Sung by Dan W. Quinn.
- A-103, The Palms—Harry Macdonough.
- A-153, A Bunch of Rags—Banjo solo by Vess L. Ossman.
- A-186, How Was I To Know?—Sung by Edward M. Favor.
- A-187, They Wanted to Take My Photograph—Favor.

- A-271, Smoky Mokes—Metropolitan Orchestra.
  - A-200, In Old Ben Franklin's Day—S. H. Dudley.
  - A-109, Nearer, My God, to Thee—Haydn Quartet.
  - A-302, March from "The Charioteer"—Sousa's Band.
  - A-306, Stars and Stripes Forever March—Sousa's Band.
  - A-336, Star-Spangled Banner—Sousa's Band.
  - A-430, Mendelssohn's Spring Song—Violin solo by Charles D'Almaine.
  - A-449, Medley of Coon Songs—Mandolin solo by Samuel Siegel.
  - A-474, When Reuben Comes to Town—Quinn.
  - A-286, Jolly Fellows Waltz—Metropolitan Orchestra.
- I omitted to say the foregoing were listed as "Improved Gram-o-phone Records, manufactured exclusively by the Consolidated Talking Machine Co., Philadelphia, Pa." They appear to be later pressings than the following list of "Improved Records, manufactured exclusively by Eldridge R. Johnson:"

- A-7, Limburger Cheese—Burt Shepard.
- A-94, Holy City—Macdonough.
- A-125, Cornfield Medley—Haydn Quartet.
- A-382, American Patrol—Sousa's Band.
- A-391, Selections, No. 2, from "Iolanthe"—Metropolitan Orchestra.
- A-460, Romance from "L'Eclair"—Flute and saxophone duet, by Jean Moeremans and Frank Badollet.
- A-472, Chopin's Waltz—Flute solo by Badollet.
- A-482, Last Rose of Summer—Soprano solo by Rosalia Challa.
- A-506, A-507 and A-509, Minstrels First Part, Numbers 1, 2, and 4—by the Georgia Minstrels.

One Victor record is listed as "manufactured exclusively by Eldridge R. Johnson:" A-642, "Thy Sentinel Am
(Continued on page 92)

The original tin-foil phonograph, now on exhibition in West Orange, N. J.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

I," sung by Hooley. The following are the "His Master's Voice," type, with dog trademark, made by the Victor Talking Machine Co., Camden, N.J.

- 118, Massa's in the Cold, Cold Ground—Haydn Quartet.
- 119, Tumbling Tonight on the Old Camp Ground—Haydn.
- 619, Wedding Over the Hill—Golden.
- 665, Uncle Josh in a Department Store—Cal Stewart.
- 702, I Need Thee Every Hour—Westminster Chimes.
- 717, Rock of Ages—Trinity Choir.
- 833, Ye Bunks and Braes—Westminster Chimes.
- 1082, Some Time We'll Understand—Trinity Choir.
- 1259, Old Uncle Ned—Haydn.
- 1313, Home, Sweet Home—Haydn.
- 1314, When the Harvest Days Are Over—Haydn.
- 1830, Please Go Way and Let Me Sleep—Arthur Collins.
- 1691, There's a New Cue Coming in the Morning—Shepard.
- 1635, Down Where the Wurzburger Flows—Collins.
- 1723, First Rehearsal of the Huskin' Bce—Collins and Harlan.
- 1728, Closing Time in a Country Grocery—Collins and Harlan.
- 1790, Old Caken Bucket—Haydn.
- 1793, In the Good Old Summer Time—Haydn.
- 1893, Little Old Log Cabin in the Lane—Silas Leachman.
- 2118, Cat and the Fly Paper—Collins and Harlan.
- 2372, Onward, Christian Soldiers—Trinity Choir.
- 2350, Jim Lawson's Hogs—Stewart.
- 2380, Down On the Farm—Haydn.
- 2640, In the Glimming—Haydn.

Before leaving this Victor discussion I'd like to refute the story, common among collectors, that when the Victrola was introduced in 1906 (and who on the Victor staff designed it?) Johnson named it in honor of his wife, whose given name allegedly was Victoria.

Mrs. Johnson's maiden name really was Elsie Reeves Fenimore. Oddly, she and her husband both had Reeves for their middle name. They were married in Philadelphia October 5, 1897.

A more likely story is that when Johnson first heard the new machine with the enclosed horn, he remarked: "Why, it has a tone like a viola." And he combined the beginning of "Victor" and the end of "viola" to form the coined name, "Victrola."

III. Early Announcement of Edison Wax Cylinder Machine

Now let's conclude this miscellany with one of the first published accounts of what its heading calls "Mr. Edison's Latest Triumph." It describes the inventor's new cylinder phonograph that played wax cylinders, instead of recording on, and reproducing from, a piece of tin-foil wrapped around a mandrel.

I recently have obtained from a lady in Ohio a copy of a yellowed little magazine called "Golden Moments," published in Augusta, Me., and dated September, 1888. On the same page with an account of the death of Gen. Philip H. Sheridan is the following, which shows that even 80 years ago the claim was made that perfect reproduction had been obtained:

"The perfected phonograph is now ready for general introduction. It is a machine of admirable performance, whose utility is so wide and various that it is hard to determine just which work will give it the largest fields of employment.

"And then, too, aside from the practical use, is the wonder—for wonder it is—that not only can the human voice be registered, but it can be duplicated in countless electrotypes. A musician gives thus his experience of the instrument:

"It was proposed by Mr. Edison that I should play some of my own compositions and have them recorded by the phonograph. A funnel-shaped piece of tin, which resembled an exaggerated fish-horn, connected the phonograph and the piano.

"When I began to play, the sound waves entered the mouth of the big fish-horn, and by a curious mechanical contrivance made a little needle-pointed instrument press down upon a wax cylinder, from which it cut a thread of wax finer than sewing silk.

"After playing for four minutes the music was inscribed upon the wax cylinder in lines so fine that they were hardly perceptible to the naked eye, and a few moments later the delighted listeners were applauding a perfect reproduction of the composition I had played as it came from the phonograph.

"Then Mr. Edison laughingly said that he had made another one of his discoveries. This was to the effect that with the phonograph he could play a musical composition backward.

"In this connection he had found that the harmony of the composition was not destroyed, and that it retained enough of its individuality to be recognized. It was impossible to do this with any other instrument than the phonograph.

"On the piano an attempt to play a piece backward would result in discord. After this, a wax cylinder was adjusted to the phonograph, upon which was inscribed the music of "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep," which had been taken from the mouth of a New York baritone.

"The song, words and music, came from the instrument exactly as the singer had rendered it. All his peculiarities of intonation had been recorded, and the grace notes interpolated were reproduced with exact truthfulness.

"So natural, indeed, was it that the singer, in evening dress, seemed in fancy to be in the room, and going down his musical stairs into the caves of the ocean. Surely this century must ever be memorable above others because it is that which first preserved articulate speech for after time.

"All poetry, of every age, is full of yearning, one of the deepest in human nature, for the voice whose gentle greeting could be heard no more, and yet this tender sentiment will be gratified, and each illusive tone and accent now has conferred on it a perpetuity that is not an attribute of even the graven stone or brass."

I pause to remark that I should like to hear those "perfect" recordings of the piano and the baritone voice from a wax cylinder of 1888, and it's interesting to observe the reference to the cylinder's playing four minutes instead of the two-minute length that was standard for many years.

This probably was not an error, for Edison did make early experiments with four-minute records. The Edison Bell Company of England once advertised that it had made four-minute records in 1891, so Edison may have produced a few three years earlier.

I return now to the Victor portion of this article. Next month I expect to begin publication of a series, which probably will run through four or five installments, and will be called "How To Tell When Victor Records Were Made."

It will give a vast amount of information, never previously assembled, to my knowledge, on ways of telling the year Victor records were issued by such things as label peculiarities, the numbering system, types of accompaniments, and other factors.

In all respects this series should be one of the most useful I ever have written. I hope and believe it will prove helpful to thousands of collectors.

It will not, however, do much for those whose attitude is like that of a gentleman who once put in a long distance call to me after I had gone to sleep. He said he just had found a stack of old records and wanted me to tell him some method whereby, "just by looking at them," he could determine infallibly when a record was made. But, he said, the system mustn't take more than 30 minutes to learn because half an hour was all the time he had to spare.

I regretfully and drowsily replied that I was sorry I couldn't be of help. It had taken me more than 30 years, in addition to close study of thousands of old record catalogs and monthly supplements, to acquire the information I had gained, and if he couldn't spare more than a half hour, I said, there was nothing I could do for him.

(The End)

TIRED INVENTOR--This photograph, taken at 5:30 a.m. June 16, 1888, shows Thomas A. Edison sitting wearily beside his first phonograph that played wax cylinders. A contemporary account of the machine is given in the accompanying article.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

HOW TO TELL WHEN VICTOR RECORDS WERE MADE

PART I

By JIM WALSH

I. A Recurring Question

Through the years I have received many inquiries as to how the age of disc records, Victors especially, can be told by the label design and number.

Because of the interest in the record age question, I believe this article should prove helpful, as I doubt the information it contains ever has been assembled previously in connected form for ready reference.

For my study of Victor labels I relied largely on a large collection of single- and double-faced discs, sung by the tenor, Henry Macdonough. He was associated with the Company from its beginning and served many years as its artist and repertoire director. He was also, for a brief period in the early 1920s, Victor's advertising manager.

When I reached a period in which Macdonough — who made no Victor records after 1919 — was not represented, I resorted to Billy Murray's recorded repertoire. "The Denver Nightingale" began singing for Victor in 1903 and continued to record into the electric era.

II. Label Colors

First, let's come to an understanding about when the various colors of Victor labels were introduced and when they were withdrawn. Unlike its British affiliate, His Master's Voice, Victor never went to extremes in putting out discs with different colored labels, but a fairly wide range originated in Camden, N.J.

The black label, of course, was the most popular. It had been standard from the introduction of Berliner's 7-inch discs and continued through Eldridge R. Johnson's Climax and Improved records before the Victor name was adopted in October, 1901. The black label continued to designate Victor's best selling records as long as 78RPM discs were made, well into the 1950s.

The first "release" of Red Seal records, pressed from matrices imported from England, appeared in the May, 1903, supplement. The first American Red Seal recording was done April 30, 1903, in New York, when an Australian contralto, Ada Crossley, sang four numbers.

Red Seals were single-faced until September, 1923, when the greater part of the celebrity catalog was combined in double-faced form, to give lower prices and, perhaps, to battle the growing popularity of radio.

But as far back as late 1919, the price of single-faced Red Seals had been cut about in half.

EARLY LABEL. David Ferguson's 1907 Monarch records of bagpipe solos were issued with special Scotch plaid labels, but the plaid effect does not show in this picture.

The double-faced Red Seal records reduced the sale of the single-sided kind as sharply as double-faced black labels had cut into the single-faced business more than 10 years before.

In July, 1925, harder pressed than ever by radio competition, and with electrical recording just introduced, Victor announced that the remaining stocks of $1 single-faced Red Seals had been reduced to 65 cents; the $1.50 ones to 90 cents; and so on, in proportion, throughout the "classical" catalog.

This meant, of course, that the single-faced variety, after a career of 22 years, was being discontinued.

Incidentally, what a stroke of genius that Red Seal label was! I wonder who originated it. The bright red label gave Victor's "classical" and "celebrity" records a prestige no other American brand approached. And it led RCA Victor, in the late 1930s, to bring an unsuccessful suit against Columbia and other companies to keep them from using red labels on any type of record.

One of the least known Victor labels was introduced in 1903. A Scotch plaid design, it was used for single-faced discs of the Kilties Band of Canada, conducted by William F. Robinson, and for solos by a Canadian bagpipe virtuoso, David Ferguson.

Most collectors probably never have seen one of these gaily colored labels. Ferguson's two records, however, stayed in the catalog until November 1, 1910.

The single-faced purple label was introduced when 15 new records by Harry Lauder were announced in February, 1910. The first 10-inch purple label was 60,000, "I've Something in the Bottle for the Morning" (also known as "Foo the Noo"), and the

(Continued on page 52)

A TRIO OF PIONEERS. This series, which explains how the age of Victor records may be told, is based largely on label changes in the discs sung by Harry Macdonough (left) during his long career.

Vess L. Ossman (center), "The Banjo King," made records for Eldridge R. Johnson before the Victor label was adopted, and his version of "Tell Me, Pretty Maiden" from "Floradora" is said to be the oldest Victor master record still in the company's vaults.

S. H. Dudley (right) made the first 10-inch record Johnson issued, Monarch 3001, "When Reuben Comes to Town." Dudley also sang a double-faced 7-inch Berliner record.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

first 12-inch, 70,000, contained a longer version of the same song.

The last purple label, 70,125, "I Think I'll Get Wed in the Summer," also by Lauder, was announced in July, 1920. The following year almost all the purple label records still in the catalog were combined in blue label form.

Double-faced 10- and 12-inch blue label discs were introduced in the May, 1912, catalog. At first they were restricted to imported operatic offerings by artists not considered quite of Red Seal caliber. The label's scope, however, began to be extended in January, 1913, when 55030, which contained two piano solos by Frank La Forge, was issued.

Paul Althouse, whose initial records were announced in July, 1914, was the first American singer to be given blue label status. His introductory record was 45055. It contained "E lucevan le stelle" from "Tosca," and "Vesti la giubba" from "Il Pagliacci."

The blue label grew to feature the offerings of such singers as Olive Kline, Elsie Baker, Lucy Isabelle Marsh, Lambert Murphy, Royal Dadmun, and Lauder. But it survived only a short time after the change to electric recording.

The highest numbered blue label in the regular American list was part of the April, 1926, supplement, 45533 on which Dadmun sang "Father O'Flynn," and "Irish Names."

The last to be issued, however, was 45527, "Waltz in E Minor," and "Prelude." These piano solos by Master Shura Cherkassky, didn't appear until June.

This goes to show that sometimes you can't tell exactly by a record's number when it was issued.

Following the appearance of the 11-year-old wizard-of-the-keyboard, the blue label declined into oblivion. Five double-faced Japanese records, 45534 through 45538, were issued in May, 1927. They bore the blue label but were not included in the domestic American catalog.

The last 12-inch seems to have been 55290, "Barber of Seville Overture," by Rudolph Ganz and the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra. It was cataloged in March, 1926.

The blue label singers already mentioned were "promoted" to a new Red Seal classification that sold at the same price as the blue label had brought. Other artists, such as Walter C. Kelly, "the Virginian Judge," who previously had been among the "blues," were demoted to black label.

Two special records with blue labels and the numbers 300 and 301 were issued in August, 1927. They were "Gene Tunney's Health Exercises," but were not part of the standard 45000 and 55000 series.

In 1926 Victor introduced a green label that attracted little attention. Numbers 50 through 59 contained Prof. Louis Allard's series of "French Through Sound." And 65 through 76, made for educational use, dealt with "localized American speech . . . to show the vagaries of speech in different sections of the country."

During Victor's earliest days, sample records were provided for salesmen who called on dealers. These had white labels, with the names of titles and artists handwritten in ink.

In the early 1920s a special service was instituted by which single-faced pressings were provided of records that had been cut out of the catalog. Such records were available until some time in the late 1930s, at constantly increasing prices. These discs also had white labels, but all information was typewritten.

III. Climax and Improved Labels

Eldridge R. Johnson began to call his firm the Victor Talking Machine Company, as has been said, in October, 1901. He previously had done a small and harried business, seemingly confined to the years 1900 and 1901, as a record manufacturer.

He was associated with Emile Berliner, who, in 1894, brought out the first commercially issued disc records. Berliner records, all 7-inch single-faced, continued to be made through part of 1900. I have one, 01021, "In Old Ben Franklin's Day," sung by S. H. Dudley, with the recording date, 2/26/00 (February 26, 1900) scratched into the label.

Records of Victor origin were issued in Canada under the Berliner label and in different sizes for several years longer. Victor records may be considered the grandchildren of the small Berliner discs.

But before the Victor name was used Johnson had made Climax and Improved records, both single-faced, 7-inch. The Climax records appeared in 1900. They were the product of the Globe Record Company which Johnson briefly controlled.

After a few months, Columbia, which was not yet making disc records, sued, alleging infringement of its "Joe Jones" patent. Rather than fight through possibly long, expensive legal action, Johnson assigned all rights of the Globe Record Company to Columbia.

When Columbia began to issue disc records in 1902 most of its first offerings were Climax records and were so announced, even though they bore Columbia labels. Some of these apparently were recorded while Johnson still owned the Climax rights.

As I mentioned in these columns a few months ago, I have seen Climax labels with the letters, V.T.M. Co., in a lower corner. This seems to indicate Victor issued Climax records as a side line for a short time before parting with the label. Some of the single-faced Climaxes have brass rings around the spindle hole. All say they were made for (not by) Columbia.

Johnson's Improved records had black labels with gold lettering. The words, "Improved Record," are printed in a curving formation around the top. The labels say they were manufactured by Eldridge R. Johnson, Camden, N.J.; but some have a sticker on the blank side that identifies the maker as "Consolidated Talking Machine Company, Philadelphia, Pa., U.S.A."

Seemingly, few Improved records survive today. They safely may be classified as made in 1900 or possibly 1901. The numbering began with A-1 — George Broderick recited the Eugene Field's poem, "Departure," which another George — George Graham — had recorded for Berliner in 1896.

When Johnson began to issue 7-inch Victor records, he, at first, retained the A numbering system. For instance, "Limburger Cheese" was A-7 on both Improved and Victor, and many of the small Victors evidently were made from Improved masters.

(Continued in November HOBBIES)

OLD MECHANICAL BANKS

(Continued from page 46)

registering bank as per above, is in the writer's opinion a mechanical bank and not just a registering bank. It in fact registers nothing. The hand on the dial points to the amount of the coin deposited. This action is caused by the weight of the coin. Then when the lever is pressed the coin is released from the inside mechanism and the pointer hand returns to its normal position. Nothing is registered, only the type coin is designated, that is, if a penny, nickel, dime, and so one.

The Try Your Weight Bank is a very attractive item in the following colors: The base of the scale, top, and entire back is red, as is the medallion centered under the face of the scale. The drape effect on each side of the front is also red. There is various gold outlining and decoration of the peak, sides, medallion and scale face. Each side and front has interesting decorative effect in blue, green, brown and red. A small rural scene in circular form appears on each side. The lettering "Try Your Weight and Save Money" and "Cents" is black and the numerals are red. The face of the scale is white and a small white section with "Press Here" written thereon is by the coin release and resetting lever. The scale platform section of the base is a mottled blue, red and black. The picture in each circle on either side, by the way, consists of a German type thatched cottage with tall trees and sunset.

Figure 1 shows the bank front view. In Figure 2 the coin slot and lever are well defined as is the small circular picture referred to in the description of the coloring. Other than "Made in Germany" on the bottom left side, no other markings appear on the bank.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

HOW TO TELL WHEN VICTOR RECORDS WERE MADE

PART II

By JIM WALSH

In the October issue of HOBBIES Magazine we considered Label Colors, also Climax and Improved Labels. Now we continue the discussion on ascertaining the age of Victor records.

I. Pre-Dog Victors

At the time Johnson started producing both 7 and 10-inch Victor records in 1901 he called the smaller discs Victors and the larger, Victor Monarchs. Their first labels followed the Improved design except that Victor or Victor Monarch was substituted for Improved.

They flourished this stern warning:

"This record is leased for the purpose of producing sound directly from the record and for no other purpose; any attempt at copying or counterfeiting will be construed as a violation of this condition as a basis for legal proceedings."

No patents were mentioned.

I just said that the 7-inch discs were called Victors and the 10-inch Victor Monarchs, but when you investigate the history of the early talking machine companies you nearly always turn up exceptions to the rule.

For example, I have a 7-inch record, 125, of "The Cornfield Medley," by the Haydn Quartet. Its label, instead of merely saying Victor, says "Victor Monarch," although Monarch supposedly was reserved for 10-inch. There is no warning sticker on this record.

A possibility I have considered is that the supply of 7-inch labels for "The Cornfield Medley" unexpectedly became exhausted and a 10-inch size (the record was made in both 7- and 10-inch) was substituted. But the label, which has the dog trademark, seems too small for a 10-inch.

Another oddity about this record is that its recording date, February 13, 1902, is scratched clearly into the label, but it already had been listed, under the same number, 125, in the Victor catalog for February, 1902.

This makes it appear that the disc was cataloged before it was made! Perhaps, however, a re-make had become necessary, and the copy I have is one that was sung after the catalog was printed.

A salesman's white label sample record of 3183, "Old Black Joe," also gives cause for reflection. Instead of saying "Victor Monarch," its curvilinear heading reads "Victor 10-Inch Record," and is the only one of its kind, I think, that I have seen.

It contains the warning against infringement, but the title, number, and name of the quartet are written in black ink. The date is scratched into the label too faintly to be read.

At first, the 10-inch Victor Monarchs were numbered in a 3,000 series; however, by the beginning of 1902 other numbers, that began with 1 and continued in numerical order, were substituted. I have a copy of "When Reuben Comes to Town," sung by S. H. Dudley on 3001, but the February, 1902, catalog gives its number as 519. My copy obviously was pressed in 1901. Another change occurred in 1903 when it was given the number of M1912.

Sometimes, the old number was cut into the wax and its successor printed on the label. My guess is that the change began immediately after "Elbridge R. Johnson" gave way to "the Victor Talking Machine Company."

Even during 1901 Victor had begun to remake records. My "Reuben" has a piano accompaniment, but the one in the 1902 catalog is with orchestra.

By the end of 1902, the dog trademark — "His Master's Voice"—was appearing on all new records. The "Victor Monarch" designation for 10-inch discs had been shortened to "Monarch." An example is 1793, "In the Good Old Summer Time," which the Haydn Quartet had recorded November 20, 1902.

Seven-inch records all were called Victor, and the A prefix before 7-inch numbers had been dropped, although it continued to appear on the record's smooth inside rim. 10-inch serial numbers on the rim were prefixed with B, and 12-inch, with C.

The A prefix had been discontinued when the February, 1902, catalog was printed.

A revised numbering system, which also had been established prior to February, 1902, went this way: If a record number was preceded by V (for Victor) it could be had only in the 7-inch size. An M (for Monarch) indicated it was restricted to 10-inch. Omission of a letter before the number meant it was made in both 7- and 10-inch.

Twelve-inch DeLuxe records, introduced in 1903, had a separate numbering system in the 31000s, and 14-inch in the 41000s. A few of the 3000 series 10-inch discs remained in the catalog through August 31, 1904, but all had been discontinued when the November 30, 1904, catalog appeared.

The 3000 series soon afterwards was set aside for foreign language records. Further information concerning its foreign language use is on page 40 of HOBBIES for October, 1961.

Fourteen-inch records were called DeLuxe Special. They all were discontinued in 1905.

—o—

Later

Just after I concluded this installment, I received, by a happy coincidence, a letter from a distinguished collector of opera records, M. J. Prospect of New York City. Included were some comments on Climax records and 14-inch Victors that belong here. It is a pleasure to quote:

"I have been reminded of many 'little interests' from your articles, such as the portion dealing with the Climax record. In my talks years back, with Mr. (Emilio) De Gogorza, I got the impression that this was a small outfit of its own standing, as others had mushroomed in that era.

"As was the custom at the time, small companies were taken over by large ones. For some reason, both Victor and Columbia were interested in this Climax outfit, to get it for its own.

"According to Mr. De Gogorza, Victor experimented with many different sizes of disc recordings, from about 6-inch to over 20-inch; but the largest size actually issued was the 14-inch Victor De Luxe, and he recorded in this size.

"Although I have been fortunate to find four of these 14-inch, I have never heard of anyone else having any, and no De Gogorza. The 14-inch first came out in the 2000 series, and immediately after changed to the 4000 series, I sup-

(Continued on page 126)

DISTINGUISHED BARITONE. Emilio De Gogorza told M. J. Prospect, a leading collector of opera records, that he made 14-inch discs for Victor in 1903, but it is doubtful they were issued.

De Gogorza also recorded under several other names, including Carlos Francisco, Herbert Goddard, and Monsieur Fernand.

HISTORICAL RECORDS

(Continued from page 35)

world, only to find it, finally, a few miles away from home, through a "Wanted" ad in HOBBIES!

To be candid, I knew there were vocal riches to be found on hill-and-dale, but I never did realize the immensity of this wealth, nor its full grandeur, until I pored through the Girard-Barnes book. It's really amazing where the authors found all this information.

Of course, data was extracted from catalogs and other such printed material. But when one thinks that some of those old pamphlets are now rarer than the recordings themselves, the difficulty of the task becomes vividly clear.

A note in the preface states: "The Table is far from complete."

With the object of further enriching the work, it would be well if the readers would send whatever additional data they can supply to the British Institute of Recorded Sound at the foregoing address, perhaps an addenda which may be published in the future.

Names familiar to a collector of lateral-cut discs, and others found by him only as dubbings from H&D's, entice the reader's attention while scanning "Vertical-Cut Cylinders and Discs." I, myself, was fascinated completely. Just for the fun of it, suppose I thumb through its pages again and report some of my findings.

Right at the beginning are such lateral-cut friends as Aino Ackté and Agustarello Affre. I thought Affre made many "laterals," but heavens, his "verticals" run a close second. And all the labels his name adorned: Pathé, Columbia, Dutreih, Phrynis, Pathé-A.P.G.A. Included in this liberal output is his participation in the complete "Carmen," and "Roméo et Juliette."

The name of Suzanne Adams, and of those others who, like her, recorded on H&D solely for Bettini, lend additional lustre to the book. Their inclusion is justified even though the absence of their Bettini recordings appears somewhat enigmatic.

What bothers me in a way is the presence of such names as Milka Ternina, Emilio de Marchi, Jean de Reszke, and their like, who either have not recorded at all or whose recordings never have been traced.

I feel Mapleson's amateur dabbings do not place these singers in the category of "recording artists," priceless though the Mapleson cylinders are for their historic value.

A good many of these cylinders (one of a kind, of course) are now at the Lincoln Center Music Library, including those I had some of which were dubbed on a Herrold LP. A number of the others were dubbed by IRCC on 78 rpm and LP.

To go on with names, there are both Carlo and Emma Albani who are not related; also Henry Albers, Mario Ancona, Albert Alvarez, and Paul Aumonier who is a prolific recorder on various labels.

Amadeo Bassi, Hippolyte Belhomme and Ernestina Bendazzi-Garulli are listed. I wonder if she is as rare on H&D as she is on lateral-cut. A. V. Bogdanovich, Giuseppe Borgatto, and Marianne Brandt are included. To think that, were it not for her three H&D's, we never would know what this fabled contralto sounded like!

Wacław Brzezinski, D. I. Bukhtoyarov, Eugenia Burzio, Ada Crossley, Alice Cucini, and Lelio Casini — Ruffo's eminent mentor. Why, he made more verticals than laterals!

V. P. Damayev, Marcelle Demougeot — just one Phrynis cylinder of the "Mignon" Swallows duet with Nivette? Marie Delna, Marcelin Duclos — only one Paris Edison cylinder, the arioso from "Benvenuto Cellini?"

Dear me, I've just discovered that I'm the proud owner of the "complete Duclos" on H&D! I've always loved that recording, for the artist truly sings the beautiful piece merveilleusement.

Ignacy Dygas, Elise Elizza, Alma Fohstrom — once a super-rarity. Now I know three people who have it. John Forsell, Alfonso Garulli, O. I. Kamionskiy, Heinrich Knote, Janina Korolewicz-Waydowa, Jean Lassalle.

Tadeusz Leliva, Felia Litvinne, Adolphe Marechal, Leon Melchisedec — a venerable name, indeed! Lucien Muratore has an abundant selection of cylinders and discs on different labels.

Antonina Nezhdanova, Varva Panina, "Adelina Patti." Now this I just cannot buy, despite the announcement. Who, ever sings Auber's "Manon Lescaut?" Eclat de rire on that cylinder is no more Patti than I am Confucius.

Remember what De Luca told me? As a student he made cylinders announced as sung by Maurel, Kaschmann, and other established baritones of his day.

Listed also are Aureliano Pertile, G. S. Pirogov, Augusto Scampini, Emile Scaramberg, P. T. Sloutsov, L. V. Sobinov, Berthe Söyer, and Isabella Svicher. Oddly, she made four Pathe recordings but only one G&T, for which she is best known.

J. V. Tartakov is an extra-special rarity. Albert Vaguet made a plethora of recordings for Pathe. So did Ninon Vallin. Cesar Vezzani — only one recording on Phrynis? Giulietta Wermez, the Yuzhin couple and Ye. I. Zbruyeva.

Among the speakers stand out the thrilling names of Sarah Bernhardt, Benoit Constant Coquelin (the elder), Sacha Guitry, Rudyard Kipling — London Pathe, no titles known. Yvonne Prinemps and Adolf von Sonnenthal are included.

And in the instrumentalists' section, the names of Gustave Charpentier (conducting?), Joseph Lhevinne, and Mischa Elman seem the most appealing.

I did my picking, now it's up to my kind reader to choose his own preferences with book in hand, if at all interested in the wonderful world of hill-and-dale.

I recommend "Vertical-Cut Cylinders and Discs" wholeheartedly. Definitely the book is a "must" in every discerning record collector's library. Incidentally, with Christmas coming, it would make a lovely Yuletide gift.

—O—

REPLIES TO "S.O.S."

Several collectors familiar with H&D discs sent letters regarding the batch of Rex test-pressings I wrote about under the heading "S.O.S."

The basso in Il lacerato spirito definitely has been identified, for which I am grateful. I am also thankful for all the other tips, even if they were only suggestions and didn't lead to actual results.

As soon as I can, I'll give all the details. Meanwhile may I be permitted to keep my readers in a suspense similar to that in Pearl White's serials, which I once so dearly loved.

—A. F. A.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 36)

pose to make room for the Red 2000 series just being born. Have you any information on this subject?

"On page 39 of the January issue of HOBBIES, referring to the photo of 'Who are they?' the person in the center reminds me of a young Billy Murray, as I remember him."

In reply to Mr. Prospect, I, too, have had the impression that the Globe Record Company, which made Climax records, was acquired rather than begun by Johnson. But I have avoided this phase of the label's history as it was complicated and did not apply directly to the dating of Victor records.

Johnson has been quoted as saying that he knew nothing of the existence of the "Jones patents" when he began issuing Climax records. He was unaware that Joe Jones had acquired a patent on a system of lateral-cut disc recording which he had sold to Columbia. This made it possible for the latter to boast that it controlled "the basic patents of the talking machine industry."

Many years ago I wrote to my dear friend, the late Frank Dorian, who was associated with the Columbia Company from its beginning, and asked him what he recalled about Climax records and the Globe Record Company.

I have been able to find two letters from him treating of this subject, but since Mr. Dorian was in Europe from 1897 to 1909, he had no firsthand knowledge of Columbia's Globe activities, and his recollections for this reason, as he himself said, may be somewhat hazy. They are worth quoting, however, for their bearing on the subject. One letter said:

HEINRICH KNOTE as Rienzi

"When Columbia first began to make disc records, back in February, 1902, it purchased the presses, matrices and other equipment of the old Globe Co., and records made from Globe matrices were cataloged as 'Climax.' Names of the general runs of artists were omitted from record labels and catalogs, and just the classification given, such as tenor, baritone, male quartet, etc."

But there usually were spoken announcements at the beginning that identified the artists.

Later, Mr. Dorian wrote:

"I'm sorry to say I can't tell you a thing about the Globe Record Company. I have a very hazy memory that about the time you mention (1902) while I was still in Europe, there was a company by that name, and it is probable they pressed records for Columbia at the time the latter first began to do disc recording."

"I also have a memory, also very hazy, that Columbia bought them out in order to use fully their facilities and equipment; but I am not sure enough about that to make any definite statement."

Then follows a generally unknown, but picturesque bit of Columbia history:

"I do know that Columbia eventually bought the Burt Company, makers of various articles made of plastic materials under hydraulic pressure, in order to get their complete pressing plant. For a while the Columbia Company ran the Burt Company as a separate corporate entity — I know because I held stock in it, as did many other Columbia stockholders — but later they consolidated it with Columbia, removed the equipment to Bridgeport, and installed it in their own factories there."

"For a long time after the Burt Company equipment was moved to Bridgeport, Columbia continued to manufacture composition billiard and pool balls, poker chips, and other articles of that character, to complete contracts which the Burt Company had with distributors of such merchandise (such as U.S. Playing Card Company on poker chips); but as soon as the contracts had been fulfilled, Columbia declined any further business of that sort and devoted its pressing plant exclusively to records."

"I still have, in some old trunk, a quantity of beautiful poker chips which were pressed at Columbia's Bridgeport plant."

Mr. Dorian's letters, I think, confirm the impression that Globe was a separate record company afterwards acquired by Columbia — and by Eldridge Johnson before that. But Dorian evidently is wrong in saying Columbia bought it rather than that they received it from Victor in settlement of litigation — something he probably had forgotten if he ever had known.

As for the 14-inch Victor DeLuxe records, I never have seen them listed in any catalog under either the 2000 or 4000 series. I do know that, like the 12-inch, they first were issued in 1903, but, unlike the 12-inch, their life was short.

Unfortunately, there is a gap in my Victor record catalogs between February, 1902, and August 31, 1904. The November, 1904, Victor numerical catalog lists 21 14-inch discs, numbered from 41001 to 41022 (41010 is 1902 CATALOG COVER. Reprinted here is the cover of the February, 1902, catalog of Monarch and Victor records. It displays the labels of both 10-inch and 7-inch size discs. The dog trademark was used on the back cover, but had not yet made its appearance on record labels.

Both records shown in the picture contain "The Stars and Stripes Forever March," played by Sousa's Band under the direction of its assistant conductor, Arthur Pryor. This is one of the few Victor-made records issued before 1905 that gives the name of the composer in parentheses.

missing). Eight are by the Victor Orchestra, 11 by the Victor Band, and two by Jules Levy, the cornet virtuoso. There are no vocal selections by De Gogorza or any other singer, and I never have seen any listed.

In a later message, however, Mr. Prospect has proved beyond question that the 14-inch records did appear for what had to be a very brief period in the 2000 series. His collection includes one of "Mignon Selection," which appeared later as 41006, and bears only the number 2023, which is etched on the smooth outside circle of the record and appears on the label. He also has the two Jules Levy solos, as well as 41001, "Attila Selection," and 41017, "Morgenblatter Waltz."

A sticker on the back of the 14-inch productions reads: "By adapting governor to permit of but 60 revolutions per minute, you will obtain the best results from this record."

Mr. Prospect comments:

"This seems to be the earliest step toward extended play and LPs. Due to the enlarged extended incision in the record, loudness was added to the performance. I believe this is what Mr. De Gogorza meant (by saying they were made) for large audiences and schools, etc., inside or in the open."

In all probability, the necessity of slowing down the speed from the 72 or so revolutions per minute at which ordinary Victor records were made in those days proved a nuisance and caused the early death of the 14-inch.

Regarding Victor's having experimented with different sizes and types of records, I have read that the Company produced a very heavy, long-playing type around 1916, but it was not marketed and I don't know the size.

Mr. Prospect's suggestion that the young man in the picture might be Billy Murray will not stand up if, as I think, the picture was made late in 1901. Murray was then in the West and did not come East until a year or two later, and his first Victor records were not issued until November, 1903. If, however, the picture was at the

CHICAGO ANTIQUES EXPOSITION

Conrad Hilton

Nov. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13

Sponsored by HOBBIES

Charles Marston, Show Mgr.

taken after Billy's Victor association began, our helpful friend just possibly might be right.

—o—
Since writing the foregoing I have been informed by Miss Anna Marie Schilt of the Consumer Services Department of RCA's Victor Record Division that there is no information in the Company's files as to the identity of the pictured men.

So, it looks as if their names, and the circumstances that caused the photo to be taken, will remain a mystery.

(To be continued in December Hobbies)

PLAYING CARDS

(Continued from page 149)

Gettysburg Address as the Civil war drew to a close. Upon re-election for his second term he said: "... As I would not be a slave, so I would not be a master. This expresses my idea of democracy."

Five days after the end of the war, April 19, 1865, he was assassinated by a fanatical advocate of secession, John Wilkes Booth. However, tradition has made Abraham Lincoln one of the greatest of all symbols of American democracy.

The Anti-Slavery Amendment to the Constitution was ratified on December 18, 1865, after his death. The Proclamation and Anti-Slavery Amendment stand as a monument to a great and courageous President, and are part of the very life blood of our liberty and freedom today!

Then, there was Robert Edward Lee (1807-1870), commander of the Confederate armies in the Civil war. His courage, military abilities, and generous nature made him a great American figure as well as the symbol of the "lost cause."

With the able co-operation of "Stonewall" Jackson, he defeated the Union Army under Pope in the famous Battle of Bull Run. However, he was repulsed at Gettysburg, and finally surrendered at Appomattox on April 9, 1865.

Lee, too, stressed the importance of unity in these words: "All should unite in honest efforts to obliterate the effects of war and to restore the blessings of peace."

Clara Barton (1821-1912) was an American philanthropist, born in Massachusetts. At the outbreak of the Civil war she resigned from her clerkship in the Patent Office to become a volunteer nurse in the army hospitals and on the battlefields.

Later, she lectured on her war experiences, and then went to Switzerland for her health. During the Franco-Prussian war (1870) she assisted the Red Cross Society, and at the close of the war was decorated with the Golden Cross of Baden and the Iron Cross of Germany.

Upon the organization of the American Red Cross Society in 1881, she was appointed as its first president. Clara Barton, "a ministering angel" to the sick and wounded of the Civil war, left behind a legacy of which we can all be proud — the American Red Cross.

PLUM AS A PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE

As some HOBBIES readers already know, Professor Plum Duff Walsh, "The Perfect Personality," and latest addition to Jim Walsh's family of cats, is an independent candidate for President of the United States.

He is running on the "Harmony" ticket, designed to reconcile all differences among existing political factions, and to reconcile instinctive differences among animals.

Rumor says Plum declined to run for either President or Vice President as a Republican or Democrat, but decided his best role would be that of "The Great Harmonizer."

His running mate is Possy, Jim Walsh's pet 'possum. They are confident of winning the November 5 election not only by the vote of men and women but through heavy balloting by dogs, cats, and 'possums.

The photograph printed here shows "Loppy," a "calico" kitten of Rose Hill, Va., carrying a banner reading "Plum Walsh for President" while "Chip," an orange-colored tomcat, looks on approvingly.

Both cats belong to the feline family of Mrs. Lucie Jenkins, an enthusiastic HOBBIES reader and cat lover.

STAMPS

(Continued from page 133)

Theodore Roosevelt (1858-1919), better known as "Teddy," was not only a great American statesman, but he became the 26th President of the United States. When the war with Spain broke out in 1897, and the 1st regiment of United States Volunteer Cavalry was recruited, he was lieutenant colonel of the "Rough Riders." Later, he was promoted to colonel for gallantry in action.

As President during the Russo-Japanese war in 1905, his action led to the termination of the war and his ultimate winning of the Nobel prize.

Space and time are too limited to cover the many other heroes, including those of World wars I and II, the Korean war, and the present war in Viet Nam. All are heroes worthy of honorable recognition, and certainly they are glorious examples of courage in our constant struggle for a united survival.

There are others, too, whose names may mean little. Yet, in themselves many are great, such as explorers, pioneers, scientists, homemakers, and even the breadwinners.

If those who read this article believe that the democratic mode of government in the United States offers the greatest opportunity for achievement, security, life, liberty, and happiness, and all are worth fighting for, then the foregoing reminders will have fulfilled sincerely their purpose — that:

UNITED WE STAND!

unsought during the War of 1812, so a debt-ridden Trumbull returned home. President Madison commissioned him to execute four large historical paintings which now hang in the Capitol. These took eight years and earned him $32,000. One of these, "The Declaration of Independence" reveals Trumbull's passion for accuracy in portraiture. To complete it, he painted Jefferson in Paris, John Adams in London and 36 others from life, which required him to visit many locations. Nine of the principals he copied from other artists, two he painted from memory. One stand-in was necessary. Benjamin Harrison had died, so Trumbull painted his son, who was said to be the spitting image.

Trumbull's "The Surrender of General Burgoyne" was reproduced as a postage stamp in 1927. Two of his portraits of Washington became stamps in 1932.

In style, Trumbull was influenced by John Singleton Copley, whose work he admired while a student at Harvard. Young Trumbull, who could read Greek at the age of six, was qualified to enter college at 12, but waited until he had "matured" at 15 to enroll in Harvard's junior class.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

HOW TO TELL WHEN VICTOR RECORDS WERE MADE

PART III

By JIM WALSH

The November issue of HOBBIES discussed the Pre-Dog Victors. Now we will go on to early prices.

I. Early Prices

Since "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists" is primarily concerned with old "popular" records, emphasis will be laid necessarily in this series on how to tell the age of Black Label Victors. However, I hope the information we provide will be useful to collectors of Red Seals and other types.

The 7-inch, single-faced Victors introduced in 1901 sold for 50 cents each, or $5 a dozen. The 10-inch Monarchs were $1 each, or $10 per dozen. The 12-inch De Luxe, first marketed in 1903, were $1.50 apiece or $15 by the dozen. The 14-inch De Luxe Specials, also first offered in 1903, were $2 each. I never have seen any "by the dozen" discount for them.

Red Seal records sold at from $2 to $5 each, single-faced, and were not subject to a discount. Neither were imported Black Label records, which were 65 cents each for the 7-inch and $1.25 for the 10-inch.

On December 1, 1905, the price of 7-inch Black Labels was reduced from 50 to 35 cents; the 10-inch from $1 to 60 cents, and the 12-inch from $1.50 to $1. "By the dozen" discounts were done away with. Fourteen-inch records had been discontinued before the reduction went into effect.

Thickness of the records, which had weighed perhaps two-thirds as much as the later Edison Diamond Discs, was reduced by something like half when the price was cut. Red Seal prices were not lowered.

The last 7-inch records were issued in April, 1906. The two highest numbers reached before the series discontinuance were 4634, "Grand Old Rag," by Billy Murray, and 4635, "The Old Brigade," a duet by Frank C. Stanley and Harry Macdonough. Collectors who seek to fix dates in their minds may remember that no 7-inch Victor was issued later than April, 1906.

Eight-inch records were introduced in May, 1906. A total of 12 were offered. One was the "Grand Old Rag," under the same number, 4634, it has been given in 7-inch the month before.

Any 7-inch record of this number, which was for a time the biggest selling disc in the entire Victor catalog, must be a rarity, since it was offered for only a month.

The lowest numbered 8-inch offered in May was 4160, "The Star-Spangled Banner," by Stanley; and the highest, 4672, "My Old Kentucky Home," by Macdonough.

This makes it clear that it is hard to tell from its number exactly when an 8-inch record was made. If there was already a 10-inch version of the same selection in the catalog by the same singer, the 8-inch was given the same number as the 10-inch, which might have been made years before. Stanley's 10-inch "Star-Spangled Banner," as an example, was issued in 1904, yet here is an 8-inch with the same number that came out in May, 1906.

The following notice accompanied the first list of 8-inch:

"We take pleasure in presenting this month the first 12 of our new eight-inch records. They will be found to be much superior to the seven-inch, owing to the larger circle of sound waves. The seven-inch will now be gradually withdrawn or made over in the eight-inch size. A large demand is anticipated for these new records."

The 8-inch discs, like their 7-inch forerunners, sold for 35 cents each. They remained in the catalog until the first list of 100 double-faced 10-inch and 25 double-faced 12-inch records was announced October 25, 1908.

Since a 10-inch record that played on both sides was available now for 75 cents, Victor logically figured customers no longer would pay 35 cents for 8-inch records with music on only one side, so cut them out.

The final 8-inch list was printed in the October, 1908, monthly supplement. Four of the little records were offered: 5417, "American Polka," by John J. Kimmel; 5455, "Smarty," Ada Jones and Billy Murray; 5434, "A Mighty Fortress is Our God," Trinity Choir, and 5460, "Rah, Rah, Rah," from "The Soul Kiss," Peerless Quartet.

As an example of the trickiness of trying to judge the age of 8-inch records by their numbers, the September supplement had contained one with the highest number reached in the series, 5518, "Musette," by the Victor Orchestra. The three others were: 5383, "Bavarian Yodel," by Harry Macdonough and George P. Watson; 5397, "Smile, Smile, Smile," Ada Jones and Billy Murray, and 5377, "Uncle Josh's Letter From Home," Cal Stewart.

A point to remember in dating 8-inch records is that none was issued before May, 1906, and none after October, 1908.

The new 12-inch double-faced Victor record sold for $1.25. Victor's prices were higher than those of Columbia, which had brought out double-faced discs several months earlier. Victor followed. Columbias were 65 cents for 10-inch and $1 for 12-inch. The Victor-controlled Zonophone records sold at the same price as Columbias.

II. Warning Stickers, Announcements and Composer Credits

Early Victor and Monarch records, made before the "His Master's Voice" trademark was adopted, carried no infringement warning stickers on the unrecorded side. By the way, the Radio Corporation of America last year seriously considered abandoning the trademark but finally decided to retain it for use on records because "old Nipper has tremendous sentimental value."

The earliest date I have seen on these stickers is January, 1904, which means that an early type record without a sticker was made not later than 1903. The latest date for a sticker-type record is February, 1908, but the stickers were used through the monthly list for October, 1908.

Simultaneously, with the issuance of the first list of double-faced Victors, the label was changed to carry the infringements warning that had previously been printed on the back, and the first discs with the new type label, but without reverse-side stickers, came out in December, 1908.

There appears to have been no list of monthly releases for November, 1908, presumably because the factory was fully occupied in turning out the new double-faced "platters." I have no November, 1908, monthly supplement and don't think one was issued, for the December supplement lists in the back pages, the records for October, but says nothing about November.

The lowest numbered 10-inch record to start out with the new label seems to have been 5572, "Could You Learn to Love a Little Girl Like Me?" sung by Dorothy Kingsley, and the lowest 12-inch, 31715, "Uncle Josh Keeps House." The labels of these records were dated August 15, 1908.

On most, or all, of the Pre-Dog records the recording date was scratched somewhere in the upper right side of the label. These numbers can be read on some surviving records, but on others have become too dim. Large and, to my thinking, ugly type faces were used.

Johnson followed the example of Berliner and the cylinder makers in having his earlier records begin with spoken announcements. In the beginning, these were made by a gentleman with a peculiarly bland and ingratiating tenor voice, who sounds something like Harry Macdonough but probably wasn't. Surely, it couldn't have been Johnson himself!

In introducing Jules Levy, the
(Continued on page 53)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 36)

"great unknown" refers to Levy as "the world's greatest cornet player." Mostly, however, artists announced for themselves. Macdonough and S. H. Dudley did, and Bill Hooley did the honors for the Haydn Quartet, the first American Quartet, and the Georgia Minstrels. Cal Stewart introduced his "Uncle Josh" records.

Unlike Edison and Columbia, Victor did not use the brand name in its announcements. I never have heard an announcement concluding: "Victor Monarch Rec-cord!"

The announcements prevailed, from Johnson's going into the record business in 1900 to the monthly issue for November, 1903. The last announced Monarch I have been able to find is 2451, "It Was the Dutch," sung by Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan, and announced by Collins.

The next four records in numerical order, 2452, 2453, 2454, and 2455, constitute Billy Murray's historical first list for Victor, and they are not announced. The titles are "I Never Could Love Like That," "Up in a Coconut Tree," "My Little 'Rang Outang,'" and "Under a Panama."

It is odd that the decision to drop announcements was made just when the comedian, who was to become incomparably Victor's most popular pioneer artist, was just starting out.

The next 10-inch discs, numerically speaking, are 2456, "Aunt Dinah's Quilting Party" and "Juanita," both by the Haydn Quartet, and both unannounced. I have not been able to find any announced record with a number higher than 2451. My impression is that all records with announcements that remained in the catalog were remade to get rid of the spoken introduction.

Make a note: Any Victor, Monarch, or De Luxe record with a preliminary announcement, was issued before November, 1903.

(To be continued)

FREE LISTS

Send for our SOUVENIR SPOON LIST
or COIN SILVER LIST
Hundreds of Desirable Spoons Available

THERESA & ARTHUR GREENBLATT

800 South Long Beach Avenue

Freeport, New York 11520 dc

SPOONS FOR SALE

STERLING SOUVENIR and unusual spoons, $1.50 up. Approval selections upon request and reference. Souvenir & unusual spoon lists available $1 for four issues over a 12-month period.—Edward G. Wilson, 1802 Chestnut St., Philadelphia 3, Pa. my128632

SILVER SPOONS. Enamelled photo in bowl, filigree handle, $4. — Motiwalla, Third Bhoiwada 38H, Bombay 2, India. ja3652

From left to right:

THREE OF A KIND—These artists had something in common. They all made their first Victor and Monarch records in 1903. Billy Murray's first four discs came out in November, 1903, and were among the first not to have a spoken announcement at the beginning.

Bob Roberts made some of the last "popular" Victor records with piano, instead of orchestra, accompaniment.

Corinne Morgan's duet with Frank C. Stanley of "When You and I Were Young, Maggie" was one of the first records to appear under the Grand Prize label.

EARLY "GRAND PRIZE" SINGERS—Ada Jones and Henry Burr were represented in Victor's first list of "Grand Prize" records in September, 1905.

Ada Jones, the most popular of all pioneer women recording artists, sang "My Carolina Lady."

Henry Burr, who became by far the most popular tenor ballad singer, sang "Bonnie Doon."

LAST ANNOUNCED RECORD—Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan, most popular of early duet teams, sang what may have been the last Victor Monarch record to have a spoken announcement (by Collins). It was 2451, and the title was "It Was the Dutch."

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

A LAST LOVING TRIBUTE TO PETER DAWSON WALSH

By JIM WALSH

I hope that collectors who have been looking forward to another installment of "How to Tell When Victor Records Were Made" will forgive me for postponing the series till the February HOBBIES.

Many of our readers are as much interested in my occasional reports of my cats as they are in Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists. Consequently, I feel I should pay a tribute to the sweet heartwarming characteristics of my beloved Petey, who died September 4, in the same way I reported on the death of Roger Smith in February, 1966.

Also, I should like to apologize to hundreds of readers who have written to me this year but received no response. I have been in poor health for a long time and have given up my full-time job as a staff writer for the Roanoke Times. It is necessary for me to rest as much as possible, and I seldom am able to write letters.

During the 27 years I have been contributing to HOBBIES, I frequently have said I do not want to buy old records nor phonographs and cannot give information as to where such things can be sold. Nevertheless I continue to receive lists of records for sale, questions as to the value of old phonographs and records, and similar inquiries.

I want to make it clear now that I no longer can reply to such letters, regardless of whether return postage is enclosed. I have given my phonographic possessions to the Library of Congress and am not interested in the financial aspects of collecting.

—O—

A TRIBUTE TO PETEY

My first acquaintance with the dark gray Maltese cat who was to become one of my most cherished companions began in the summer of 1959, when I was considering buying the large Colonial-type house in which I now live at Vinton, Va.

When I called to inspect the house, Petey (who was unnamed at that time by his owners, although their next door neighbor, Mrs. Wavie Griffith, called him "Gray Boy") was on the back porch and began to follow me about. He wanted to go into the house with me, but one of the elderly ladies who occupied the place made it clear he was not permitted to go inside.

"We just let him stay around here," she said, "but we're not going to move him when we leave. If you take the house you can add him to your collection."

I learned later that Petey, who had a love for human companionship that I have never seen equalled in other cats, was so lonesome he usually fell into step with the mail carrier and made the rounds of the neighborhood with him, just to have somebody to be with.

I bought the house, and made up my mind that the lonely Maltese, who didn't look in good health because there were bare places down his spinal column where fur should have been, was going to be treated just like my other cats. He was to be given the free run of the house, to eat the same things Roger, Gray, and Little Nipper enjoyed and to become in every respect one of the household.

My friend, Miss Delrhey Fitzgerald of Pulaski, Va., had owned a cherished Maltese cat whose name had been Petey Dink. My Maltese looked so much like the Pulaski cat I decided to call him

(Continued on page 40)

From left to right, top to bottom:

PETEY AND JIM WALSH. The late Peter Dawson enjoying a rest in my lap. Petey probably was dreaming of Christmas and Santa Claus.

IN HAPPIER DAYS. One Sunday in the spring of 1967 Petey went calling on his friend and neighbor, Mrs. Nell Sink. They were photographed together as she was starting for church.

CHRISTMAS CLEAN-UP. Plum, "The Perfect Personality," has been using the vacuum cleaner to tidy the house before Santa's arrival. Becoming tired, he has stopped for a rest. He does not seem to be disappointed at not being elected President of the United States on the Harmony ticket.

NAMESAKE. Petey was named for the late Petey Dink because they both were Maltese and looked much alike. Petey Dink was the cherished companion of Miss Delrhey Fitzgerald of Pulaski, Va.

"BLACK POWER" EXPONENT. Coal-black Lucky Jim is the leading feline advocate of "Black Power" in his home town, Vinton, Va. This picture shows him being held by Mrs. Lucie Jenkins of Rose Hill, Va., during a visit to relatives in Vinton.

"HI-FI" ENTHUSIAST. Nipper is adjusting the record player to have Christmas music ready for Santa Claus' visit.

ONE OF THE FINEST DISPLAYS OF DOLLS AND TOYS IN THE EAST

1. Celluloid socket head, takes a wig, marked JUMEAU. Circumference 8". $1.25.
2. Celluloid socket head, molded hair, painted eyes, 10" circumference, marked SNF FRANCE. $1.50.

Postage extra.

Open Every Day
Hours, Daily:
10:00 to 5:00
Sunday:
11:00 to 6:00

16 colored doll postals, $1.60 p.p.

"Touring Mary Merritt's Doll Museum," 44 pages of photos and text, $1 plus 10c postage.
9 Doll Postals, 90c p.p.

Doll or Toy list 25c stamps or coin

MARY MERRITT'S DOLL MUSEUM

Phone 215 - 385-3809

R. D. 2, Douglassville, Pa.

(DEPT. H)

tfc

SPECIALS FOR THIS MONTH

German Baby Dolls, nicely dressed, perfect and original.

Four Bye-Lo babies, head circum. 8½" to 15". Prices $105, $110, $145, $195. Kaiser baby $150. Clo. mouth character $85.

GLADYS CHAMPNEY

406 No. Irving Fremont, Nebr. 68025
Phone 721-2156 jac

FABULOUS FIND OF "BUDDY LEE" DOLLS

(Inscribed across shoulders). They are 12½" h. & made of composition. Extremely rare. Dressed in their original Lee Work Clothes. Some of these dolls are sold. First money order for $100 gets one of these dolls.

DOCKO

4 N. Jerusalem Ave. Hicksville, N.Y. 11801
jam1

Stop and see the RAGGEDY ANN ANTIQUE DOLL & TOY MUSEUM

On the premises of the "House by the Side of the Road"

Antique Shop

Located on the Hope-Delaware Road in Hope, N.J.
A small admission fee is charged for the Museum only.

Rare dolls and toys are on display and for sale. Also 3 floors of antiques for sale in shop.

Open 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. Thurs., Fri., Sat., & Sun. during July and August, and on weekends only during the remainder of the year. tfo

FERNE E. MARSHALL 100 56th St. S.W. Grand Rapids, Mich.

350 Antique Dolls in China and Bisque

No Mail Orders

WANTED: SCHOENHUTS jac

While in the ST. PETERSBURG,
FLORIDA area, don't miss seeing RUHAMAH'S DOLL MUSEUM

Appointment or by chance — Phone 344-4663

MRS. C. HUNTER VON HOF
2801 Beach Blvd. So. (55th St.)

Duplicate dolls for sale at all times! mh96c

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 36)

Petey Dink in memory of Miss Fitzgerald's Petey.

Some time later I changed his name slightly to Peter Dawson as a tribute to the great Australian bass-baritone, Peter Dawson. But I continued to call him Petey.

Just how old Petey was when I acquired him I do not know. I thought he was probably about two, but Mrs. Griffith since has told me he was more likely four or five in 1959. That would place his age about 13 or 14 when he died. He certainly appeared years older at his death than Nipper, who is 11, but still looks and acts like a kitten.

I never shall forget the joyful, but almost incredulous look poor Petey turned upon me when I took possession of the house, invited him to come in and make himself at home, gave him as much as he could eat and told him that he was welcome to go into any part of the building. He seemed to understand and the expression he turned upon me was one of sheer gratitude.

And how hard Petey tried to become friends with the cats I moved in with me! He didn't meet with much success. Gray, gentlest and sweetest natured of cats, responded to his friendly advances, but Roger and Nipper resented him.

Nipper, a tiny little rascal to be a full grown cat, had a trick he delighted to play on Pete. He would make sweet, cooing noises—I called them "baby talk"—to tempt Petey to come close to him. Simple, trusting Petey would then try to rub noses with Nips as a sign of friendship, and Nipper would draw back his midge paw and slap Petey in the face. Roger, on the other hand, would hiss a warning for him to keep his distance.

This kept up for a few weeks while Petey patiently tried to win over Rog and Nips. Finally, however, when it was evident they wouldn't meet him half way, he decided to take the aggressive, and he soon had the unfriendly pair hiding from him, for he was stronger than either and was determined to exercise his strength.

Perhaps a feeling of jealousy, together with a question of possession, was involved. Roger and Nipper may have regarded themselves as the new owners of the house and felt that Petey had no right in it, but he, because of prior occupancy, may have considered them unlawful intruders in his home.

Both Roger and Nips returned several times to the house we had formerly occupied, and I suspect they left mostly because of Petey. Gray, by contrast, never went back and continued on good terms with "the old inhabitant."

It didn't take me long to learn that Petey was full of lovable qualities and individual traits. For one thing, he liked to sit in my lap and pound the keys of my typewriter while I was trying to write. For another, he would sit patiently in one spot on the floor for as much as a half hour each morning, waiting for me to dress and put on my shoes. He did all that waiting for the sake of playing with my shoe laces before I tied them.

We had been together only a few weeks before he made it clear he expected me to give him several "piggyback rides" during the day and evening. He would spring upon my shoulder, get a good tight grip and I would walk up and down stairs with him clinging to me. Sometimes we would make an inspection tour of all the dozen or so rooms in the house. And as he rode he would purr his happiness.

(Continued on page 92)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 40)

I never shall forget something that happened at around 2 o'clock one morning. Petey was sleeping with me when I woke with violent cramps in my legs. I almost fell out of bed, unable to straighten up, with the intention of walking about until circulation was restored.

My rising woke Petey, and when he saw that I was bent double he decided I had got up at that time of night to give him a piggy-back. So he leaped upon my shoulders, dug in, and I, suffering agonies with cramps, did my best to provide him with his accustomed ride while he purred and thought I was concerned only by a desire to give him a special treat.

One of Petey's most marked characteristics was a desire to welcome everybody who visited our home. He would stand on his hind legs, his front paws touching the caller, look into the visitor's eyes, and "talk" at the top of his voice. He was obviously trying to tell everybody something that was foremost on his mind. I hope he was saying he now had plenty of companionship and food. But who knows what he was seeking to convey?

It may have been that he was begging for a car ride, for, unlike most cats, he had a great fondness for riding and always would purr when being taken to the veterinary hospital for a check up. More remarkable, he seemed to like the hospital and would purr when he was placed on a table for examination and lick the doctor's hand. This led Dr. Barry Emerson to pronounce him one of the sweetest animals that had ever entered the Cooper Veterinary Hospital.

One snowy New Year's Day I went to work about 5 p.m. Petey followed me to within a short distance of the bus stop, then sat down on the sidewalk. When I returned it was almost midnight, but he was still in the same spot, patiently waiting, and covered with snow. Scores of times he tried to go with me when I went to the post office, and I would pick him up and take him back home, because I feared he might be struck by a car in downtown traffic.

During the earlier part of his stay with me, Petey acquired another name, "Thornton," bestowed upon him by my friend, Albert Via Jr., of South Boston, Va. "Jack" Via said Petey was as sweet as a rose but, like a rose, his sharp claws were full of thorns. So Jack always called him "Thornton," meaning that his paws had the piercing power of a ton of thorns.

Petey lived with us almost three years when what seemed a tragedy occurred. I became seriously ill just before my birthday on July 20, 1962, and on that birthday Petey disappeared. As ill as I was, I couldn't go searching for him until several weeks afterward, and I grieved, wondering what had happened to him and wanting him back.

A neighbor told me she had seen him a day or two after he ceased to come home, and he had appeared sick. My searches were unsuccessful, and I mournfully decided he must be dead. In the January, 1963, HOBBIES I reproduced his picture in my cats' annual Christmas and New Year's greeting, and referred to his being gone. By that time Gray had died.

The following spring, Dr. John O. Hurt, a Vinton physician, called to see me on a Sunday afternoon, and I went with him to the front door. I glanced toward the Doctor's car and was delighted when I saw Petey sitting beneath it! He was looking mournfully at his old home. His eyes could express the deepest grief and sense of hurt of any cat's I have ever known.

I called to him, but as the Doctor walked toward him he ran frantically up the street and was out of sight in seconds. Yet what a wonderful feeling

I had to know he was still alive! A few weeks later I saw him just outside the yard. Again he was looking forlornly at the house.

Some time after that Mrs. Griffith told me she had seen him repeatedly try to enter the yard, only to be driven away by "Percy, the Pitiful Persian," a large orange-colored tomcat to whom I had given a home during a deep snow a winter or two before.

Percy, who seemed to have been mistreated cruelly during his long life—he was already an old cat when I took him in—was so timid that, after he had crawled beneath the house to keep from freezing, he had stayed there eight months, afraid to come out, but I fed him.

It was a wonderful day for me when he ventured upstairs, stretched out at the head of the stairs, and showed he wanted me to play with him. I imagine mine was the first human hand that had touched him kindly since he was a kitten. But he had become jealous of Petey and, being larger and stronger, had driven him from home.

As cold weather came on, I discovered that Petey was sleeping at an old well house in the lower part of my lot. Each night, when I came home from work, I would fill a plate with food, take a flashlight and go to the well house.

Petey obviously had suffered during his wanderings what would correspond to a nervous breakdown in people, for he would scurry away when he saw me coming and hide in some nearby shrubbery. But after I had left the food and was nearly to the house, I would send the beams of the flashlight toward the well and see him eating hurriedly and ravenously as if he feared Percy would come along and chase him again.

Then, on November 22, 1964—the day President Kennedy was assassinated—Percy died of heart failure while in a hospital for treatment. Somehow or other, Petey sensed he was dead, for he gradually began coming closer to the house until at last I could feed him on the porch.

My elation was great one morning when I placed food in the kitchen, left the door open, and saw Petey walk in. I quickly fastened both kitchen doors, and he at once began wailing and screaming in a way that showed he was frightened almost out of his senses at the thought of being locked in.

After a while I managed to pick him up. Within a week he had adjusted to his former way of living and was almost back to his normal self.

In a few ways, though, he was changed permanently. He never again "operated" the typewriter or sat waiting to play with my shoe laces. And, to his last days, if one of my feet got what he considered too close to him he would turn and spit at me. I deduced from this that at some time, during his year and a half of homelessness, somebody had given him a brutal kicking that resulted in a permanent phobia against any nearness of human feet.

Petey looked in better health upon his return than he had been before he left home. All the bare patches had gone from his spine and, perhaps from having to be out in cold weather, sleeping without shelter, his fur was much smoother, glossier, and thicker than it had been before. I often have wondered what he ate and where he slept during that long time in which he was gone.

I was to learn after a few weeks that it had been necessary for Percy to die in order for Petey to live. One day while the "prodigal" was eating he stopped swallowing and uttered scream after scream. I at once took him to the hospital, where the doctors found a tumor in his mouth about the size of a 50-cent piece.

They were afraid it was cancerous, but it proved not to be and treatment soon healed it. However, if Percy hadn't died and made it possible for Petey to come home, he soon would have become unable to eat and could have done nothing but lie down and starve.

Only an hour after I buried Percy, a man whom I had never seen before and have never seen since, knocked at my front door. He was holding a coal black kitten, which he asked me to take, "because," he said, "my wife has got a young baby and she says she can't take care of a baby and a kitten, too."

I at first said I couldn't take the little fellow, but when it jumped out of the man's hand onto my shoulder and began "nuzzling" me I changed my mind. That kitten was Lucky Jim, whom I still have, but, unfortunately, Petey decided he didn't approve of him and gave him the same sort of bullying treatment he had received from Percy. They never did become friends, and I imagine Lucky Jim is happy not to have Petey any longer about the place.

Yet when I brought Plum home in October, 1966, Petey at once became his loyal friend and was always gentle and good to him. To my perception of cat language, Petey always called Plum "Junior" and Plum called him "Pwitty Papa Petey."

About a year and a half ago, Petey seemed not to be feeling well, and a visit to the hospital revealed that he had a tumor in his battered right ear, as well as a punctured ear drum. His remaining teeth had become so bad that the veterinarian pulled them all, and for the remainder of Petey's life he could eat only soft foods instead of his beloved beef liver.

Some time during last August, Petey ceased to meet me at the concrete steps leading to my front yard, to be given his usual piggy-back ride home. I wonder how many hundreds of rides I did give him during all those years.

Instead, he stayed away from home, "visiting" with families living at the foot of the hill. I suppose he felt so bad he didn't want to be where he constantly would have run-ins with Lucky Jim and, to a less degree, with Nipper. I would bring him home and he would stay only long enough to eat a small amount, then go back down the hill.

Finally, alarmed at his thinness and lack of appetite, I took him to the hospital, and he felt too bad to purr during the ride which he had formerly enjoyed. After a quick examination, I was told he probably had cancer of the liver—a statement that wrung my heart strings.

And so it proved. He was given special treatment and I soon brought him home, where for a week or so his appetite seemed much improved and he appeared better in every way. But one morning he wouldn't eat anything, and merely lay around, changing his resting place every few minutes.

I feared the worst and took him back to the hospital, where he died about 15 minutes after he had moved a last goodbye to me. I expected him to die, but I haven't gotten over losing him and don't feel I ever shall. He was placed in a white coffin and sleeps beneath a mulberry tree in my front yard. Roger lies in a separate grave adjoining his. More than any other cat of my knowledge, Petey loved everybody he met and everybody loved him.

Miss Fitzgerald once remarked: "Petey always has such a humble look." And he had. There was no pretense to him. His life was a checkered one. It involved much pain and neglect. But after I gave him a home he never lost an opportunity to show how grateful he was. It must have been an overpowering fear of the big Persian that caused him to run away and stay gone that year and a half.

Yes, Petey—may he have eternal sweet rest—is gone, but as long as Nipper, Plum, Lucky Jim, and I live Petey will not be forgotten. And I hope a hundred years from now somebody will pick up a bound volume of HOBBIES for the year 1969 and read this last loving tribute to him.

If so, Petey, in his small, humble way, will have achieved "immortality," even though his Maltese-colored body, together with the white coffin that now protects it, will have mouldered to dust beneath the mulberry tree.

I doubt that I shall feel well enough to send or respond to Christmas cards this year. But I join Nipper, Lucky Jim, Plum, and Popsy, a sweet "possum still with me, in wishing all HOBBIES readers a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

(The End)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

HOW TO TELL WHEN VICTOR RECORDS WERE MADE

PART IV

By JIM WALSH

In the December issue of HOBBIES we discussed Pre-Dog Victors and their Early Prices. We also started on Warning Stickers, Announcements, and Composer Credits. We will continue this last discussion now by getting back to the Pre-Dog.

Artists' names were given on the label but they were not identified as "tenor," "baritone," etc.

Composers' names usually were omitted. There were occasional instances in which the composer of a "standard" or "classical" composition might be mentioned, as "Largo," might be followed by "Handel" in parentheses. But I can't recall many examples.

Victor did not bother to give parenthetical mention to writers of "popular" music until June, 1905. Even then, some records issued that month had composer identification and some didn't. J. Fred Helf was not mentioned as the composer of Byron G. Harlan's record 4323, "The Waltz Must Change to a March, Marie."

On the other hand, "(Harry) Williams and (Egbert) Van Alstyne" were credited with writing and composing 4337, "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," rendered in fine, full harmony by the Haydn Quartet.

Beginning with the July records, composers' names appeared regularly on the labels. They had been consistently published in the supplements, however.

Another point to jot down: Any Victor Black Label record giving the name of a song writer or composer in parentheses almost certainly (there are a few exceptions) was not issued before June, 1905.

In September, 1905, the custom of identifying records as Victor, Monarch, or De Luxe was done away with. From that time, "Monarch" and "De Luxe" disappeared and every record became a Victor — a designation that previously had been reserved for the lowly 7-inch. Probably the last 10-inch to be identified as a Monarch was 4402, "National Hymn of Ecuador," by Pryor's Band.

And what a month was that September, 1905, which introduced the new "Grand Prize" label! Among other records destined to become famous, Pryor's Band played "The Whistler and His Dog" on 4418; Vess Ossman was heard in "Turkey in de Straw Medley" on 4424; Henry Burr sang "Bonnie Doon" on 4426; Corinne Morgan and Frank Stanley, "When You and I Were Young, Maggie" on 4428, and Ada Jones, "My Carolina Lady" on 4430.

Also, Arthur Collins had two of the greatest Negro songs ever written, on consecutive numbers — "The Preacher and the Bear" on 4430, and "Rufus Rastus Johnson Brown" on 4431.

Try to imagine such a shower of riches occurring in these days!

III. Piano and #### Orchestral Accompaniments

A few months before beginning to give the song writers credit for their productions, Victor had completed a transition of having popular song records accompanied by the recently formed Victor house orchestra instead of the piano. Of course, as with "When Reuben Comes to Town," there had been some with makeshift orchestral backing, but they were a small minority.

The change was well under way by the end of 1904, and the last piano-accompanied record of the popular type appears to have been 4134, "Back, Back, Back to Baltimore," another Williams and Van Alstyne

(Continued on page 44)

EGBERT VAN ALSTYNE A.S.C.A.P.
(In The Shade Of The Old Apple Tree)

FAMOUS SONG WRITER — Egbert Van Alstyne was one of the leading popular song writers of the early 1900s. The Haydn Quartet record of his greatest hit, "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," was one of the first Monarchs to give the composer's name on the label.

WANTED FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on

ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single - faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G.&T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts. Also old record catalogs

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla,

New York

FOR SALE

One of the finest Edisons known, in perfect condition. With 25 records. $450.00 or best offer.

R. L. JEFFERIES

Harrisonburg, Va.

or write to Box 165, Harrisonburg, Va.

See the ads of
HATHAWAY & BOWERS
on PAGES
98A & 98B
of this issue.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 36)

number, sung by that very fine comedian, Bob Roberts.

Roberts and Harry Tally seem to have been the last popular song recorders to draw piano accompaniments. Of course, Red Seal artists continued to be given piano support if the type of song called for it, as did instrumental soloists.

A few years later many of Vess Ossman's banjo solos, such as "Turkey in de Straw Medley," which had originally been made with an orchestral accompaniment that at times almost swamped Vess' skilful fingering, were improved by being remade with piano.

This was at the time when double-faced records were being introduced, and most of the discs made earlier were being done over to get the benefit of improved processes and smoother surfaces.

The "Back to Baltimore" record was issued in February or March, 1905. I lack supplements for those months and can't pin it down more exactly. During this "change-over" period most popular vocal records that seemed likely to keep selling were remade with orchestra.

An example is 2658, "The Man in the Overalls," sung by Joe Natus, which came out in April, 1904, with piano accompaniment. By January, 1906, it had been done over with orchestra.

But, in my opinion, most of the vocal solos, duets, and quartets would have sounded better even with a tinkly piano than with the clacking orchestral accompaniment provided in those days.

With few exceptions, Black Label records with piano backing were no longer being made after 1904. (Some of earlier origin, of course, remained a while longer in the catalog.) If a vocal Black Label record has a piano background it almost certainly was recorded before 1905. The Roberts and Tally records already mentioned probably were made in November or December, 1904.

Frank P. Banta, who conducted the Metropolitan Orchestra for Victor, played many piano accompaniments before his death in 1903. Two other Victor pianists were C. H. H. Booth, who accompanied some Red Seal singers and made the first 10-inch Victor piano record, 2508 (his own composition, "Gavotte in A") and Fred Bachman.

Edison also used Banta and Bachman, and later had 2 other piano players whose names began with B—Albert Benzler and John F. Burckhardt.

Before considering the early "Dog" labels and their successors I'd like to mention an intriguing example of the Monarch 3000 series. It is one of Dudley's whistling specialties, "His Old Familiar Tune."

The number on the label is 1245, but close examination shows the "1245" has been pasted over the original number. In the smooth blank space above the top of the label 1245 appears and below it, separated by a dash, is the original number, 3204.

Also worth mentioning is a 1902 10-inch Berliner Concert Grand Improved Gram-o-phone record, issued by "E. Berliner, Montreal, Canada," and patented February 24, 1897.

The single-faced disc is made of a reddish material, somewhat resembling that used for Vocalion records in the 1920s, and has a raised rim, like those of the old-style Columbias, inside the smooth outer edge. The number is 5585 and the selection, "In the Good Old Summer Time."

According to the label, the 1902 song hit is sung by the American-born comedian, Burt Shepard, who settled in England, but for several years crossed the Atlantic annually to go to Camden and make Victor records. However, my ears tell me the singer is Harry Macdonough and the Berliner record is pressed from a matrix of Victor 1655.

(To be continued)

NEW RECORDS

MONARCH RECORD

Frank C. Stanley
In the Shadow of the Pyramid from "Mrs Black is Back" 4210
VICTOR TALKING MACHINES CO.
CAMDEN, N.J.
Patented

VICTOR

Highest Award at St. Louis

Here are a few from the hundreds of splendid new records made by the world's greatest artists for the Victor.

Partly for their great variety, partly for the superb quality of its tone, the Victor has received the Grand Prize—the highest award—at the St. Louis Exposition.

Latest Records

By Marcelle Sembrich, one of the greatest artists of modern times. Three brilliant arias in Italian, Bellini's "Ah! non giunge," the "Ah! non giunge," and the famous Strauss Valse "Gnomes' music." "The Jewel Song" by French; two lovely songs in German by Schumann and Strauss; a Chopin song in her native language, Polish, and the special aria from Don Giovanni, "Batti Batti."

By Sousa's Band—the greatest of all concert organizations. "The Dying Swan," Sousa's latest in rich brilliant and melody. "Solemn" selections—the special successes of this popular opera, "Zampa" and "Post and Present" Overtures and others.

By Arthur Pryor's famous Band and Orchestra—"Humor and Pathos" selections—their "Lullaby" and "The Lullaby," "Love Duet," "The Walkure Fantasy" expanding the most popular.

All superbly rendered in your own home. Write us or ask your dealer for the book of latest Victor records.

Victor Talking Machine Company, Philadelphia
Original makers of the Gram-o-phone.

MONARCH LABEL—This Victor advertisement in the March, 1905, issue of Success Magazine, shows the type of label used for 10-inch Monarch records just before the Grand Prize label was adopted late in 1905. It was not customary, however, for the artist's name to precede the title of the song.

Ernest R. Ball composed "In the Shadow of the Pyramid," but he was not given label credit.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

HOW TO TELL WHEN VICTOR RECORDS WERE MADE

PART V

By JIM WALSH

I. Blue Sheets From Legendary Victor Talking Machine Company

Tuesday, November 12, has brought the first before-winter snow-storm of 1968 to the Roanoke Valley. Almost 10 inches have fallen — a record for this time of year.

My telephone is out of order, with a stretch of line draped the length of the front yard, but I still have electricity and heat, so this seems a good time to write another article for HOBBIES.

When I undertook this series on "How to Tell When Victor Records Were Made" I completed several installments, which now have been published. These I mailed to the editor, intending to write and submit the remainder in a short time.

Unfortunately, however, my health became increasingly bad, and I have not felt like essaying the considerable amount of concentrated research that remains to be done. Yet, my monthly contributions must be kept going.

Under these circumstances a life-saver has arisen. Some time ago I received an envelope postmarked at Vienna, Va., which contained a large number of blue sheets of paper that obviously came from a loose-leaf binder at one time owned by the legendary old Victor Talking Machine Company.

The envelope carried no return address. But I have deduced, correctly, I hope, that it came from Mrs. Fred Harbaugh of Box 65, North, Va.

Previously, Mrs. Harbaugh had sent me a dozen or so Spanish language Victor catalogs that go back to 1901. They had been salvaged by her husband, who was formerly an attorney for the Radio Corporation of America which took over Victor in the late 1920s.

Evidently the RCA representatives of that day had no interest in, or conception of, historical values as applied to the phonograph's life story, and had discarded a great deal of now valuable reference material.

Thanks to Mr. Harbaugh, some was retrieved, and because of Mrs. Harbaugh's kindness, I have obtained most of it. She still has two or three oil paintings, including one of Enrico Caruso. These would have gone to the scrap pile had not Mr. Harbaugh considered them worth saving.

It happens that the blue sheets, which I was so glad to receive, constitute, in their way, a miniature history of the Victor Company's early talking machines and records. Consequently, they fit splendidly into this series, although they do not fall into the direct line of telling just when Victor records were made — a subject I hope to resume as soon as this article has been concluded.

The sheets are concerned mostly with specifying when different models of Victors and Victrolas first were introduced, and the names of the jobbers, to whom first shipments were made. This is valuable information. I am glad to preserve it.

But, before I begin quoting from the contents of the old loose-leaf binder, I'd like to say I have many requests for information as to where old catalogs of records and phonographs, such as those I have acquired over many years and from which I frequently quote, can be obtained. Such things nowadays are very hard to find, although they do turn up occasionally, but I am unable to specify any specific source.

However, Allen Koenigsberg of 1532 Ocean Avenue, Apt. 4E, Brooklyn, N.Y. 11230, is coming to collectors' rescue with a series of the finest reprints of original old catalogs I have seen. It is virtually impossible to detect these sparkling facsimiles from the catalogs in their original state, and his prices are reasonable.

So far Mr. Koenigsberg is offering the 1899 catalog of the Talking Machine Company of Chicago, with reproduction of cylinder phonographs, and lists of records (including Silas Leachman's output up to that time) for $2.95; the 1907 catalog of Edison cylinder instruments, $2.65; and an 1878 article from Harper's Weekly, with illustrations of the first tinfoil model phonograph, for $1.35. Ten per cent may be deducted from orders for either or both of the catalogs if the Harper's etching is also included.

Mr. Koenigsberg says he plans to reprint a rare 1906 Columbia Graphophone catalog, an 1896 Berliner instruction manual, a portfolio of early etchings of tinfoil phonographs and sheet music, and other interesting items. I hope he will receive the encouragement he deserves, since his offerings up to now are remarkably fine.

II. Some Victor History

Taking the blue sheets in chronological order, the top of the stack (Continued on page 53)

Victor Junior Price $10

A Victor with a tone quality that is surprising, considering size and price. Oak cabinet; nickel plated sound box, combination brake and speed regulator and 8-inch turntable for playing all size records (can be wound while playing). Dark red flower horn with gold stripes.

CHILDREN'S PLAYTHING — The $10 Victor Junior Gramophone, mostly intended for children's use, was announced June 1, 1906.

FROM THE BLUE SHEET—"VICTOR JR. GRAMOPHONE" ..... $10.00

"June 1st, '1906' — First announced to the Trade. First shipment June 8th, '1906' on ticket No. 36802, to J. W. Jenkins Sons Music Co., Kansas City, Mo. Machine No. 182."

WANTED FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on

ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single - faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G.&T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts. Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla,

New York

rfx

See the ad of

HATHAWAY & BOWERS

on Page 98A

of the February issue.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 36)

reveals that the Victor Concert sound box was first announced to jobbers and dealers about January 1, "1901." (For some obscure reason, whenever a year is mentioned it is placed in quotation marks. I shall not hereafter follow that practice.)

By the way, the Concert sound box, or reproducer, was used for a few years. Eventually it was supplanted by the better known and more efficient Exhibition.

On November 7, 1917, the Exhibition was succeeded, or supplemented, by the Victrola Number 2, which thereafter was used on all old-style Victrolas except the Number 4, which sold for $15, and the $25 Number 6. That held good until the Orthophonic Victrola was introduced in October,

STERLING SILVER

All sterling new or excellent cond. All knives have stainless blades. Immediate shipment of orders with enclosed money order or cashiers check. Add $1.25 for postage & insurance on all orders. Residents of Fla. add 4% state tax.

Have many popular, active patterns — Royal Danish, Prelude, Modern Victorian, French Provincial, Damask Rose, Rambler Rose, etc. Have disc patterns — Lucerne & Pantheon — place settings & serving pieces.

Have most patterns sold direct to home—Easterling, fine arts and others. For reply send stamped self-addressed envelope.

REED & BARTON

FRANCIS I. New luncheon knives $11.25 each. Four (4) place place setting (knife, fork, teaspoon, salad fork) new — in plastic, $45.

BURGUNDY. Conventional 4 place place setting—new — in plastic, $43.50. Six (6) new cond. iced teaspoons, $58. Eight (8) teaspoons, $59.50.

CLASSIC ROSE. 8 luncheon knives, 7 luncheon forks, 8 salad forks, 2 cream soups, 6 iced teaspoons, 1 butter knife, 1 sugar spoon, 1 jelly server, $9.75 each, 8 teaspoons, 2 cocktail forks, $7.75 each, 2 tablespoons, 1 meat fork, 1 gravy ladle, $16.95 each. Above 54 piece set, $445. Newly polished.

WALLACE

GRAND BAROQUE. New, in plastic, 4 place place setting (knife, fork, teaspoon, salad fork), place setting, $47.50. Four or more place settings, $45.75 each.

GORHAM

CAMELLIA OR STRASBOURG. Six (6) place place setting (knife, fork, teaspoon, salad fork, cream soup, flat-handle butter spreader). Stainless blades, all pieces newly polished, excellent cond. $52.90 per place setting.

CHANTILLY. New — in plastic — conventional 4 place place setting, $44.05.

Will pay top dollar for your sterling. Excellent cond. only. Ship insured with price requested. Check or sterling returned within 24 hrs. of receiving.

PERFECT HOSTESS CO.

P.O. Box 173

Miami Springs, Fla. 33166

Phone Area 305 - 887-9709

mhp

RUBY BARBER'S ANTIQUES

205 Park Avenue

Hot Springs National Park, Arkansas 71901

Phones: Home, 633-5788 — Shop, 624-4083

Silver Thimbles from Mexico

Thimbles with Band, Mother of Pearl—$2.50
Thimbles w Band of scalloped applied silver—$3.50
Thimbles all over applied silver design—$4.00

From Our Silver Stock

Many souvenir spoons including Anton Hardt Also Birthday spoons, and many patterns of sterling & sterling service pieces by Tiffany, Gorham, etc. 12 Fruit Spoons, mint, by Kirk $75; Rose pattern Russian cut glass Ice Cream tray & 2 cake stands $300.00.

Send pattern of silver (make pencil tracing) and mark, if you do not know the pattern. Perhaps we can help you complete your service. spo

A New Kind of Victor

$200

Closed

Open

Victor-Victrola

The Ideal Drawing-Room Entertainer

So many people of means and taste demand the character of drawing-room entertainment which only the Victor can supply, that we have designed this superb new instrument, with the horn, all moving parts, and place for one hundred and fifty records and accessories, entirely concealed in a handsome mahogany cabinet—an ornament in any drawing-room.

By opening or closing the upper doors, the music is made loud or soft as desired.

With this Victor-Victrola you can treat your guests to such a refined, varied, complete drawing-room entertainment as no other means can supply.

If you will send us your name and address, we will see that the instrument is submitted for your approval.

All Victor dealers should carry the Victor-Victrola.

Victor Talking Machine Co.
Camden,
N. J.

When you write, please mention the Commodities

FIRST VICTROLA—The first Victrola was announced in August, 1906, and its initial advertising (reprinted here) appeared the following month.

1925. There is no sheet for the Exhibition, but it was available by 1906.

Victor 10-inch Black Label records were "first announced to the trade" January 5, 1901.

In May, 1901, Victor announced it had established a "premium department," presumably to furnish newspapers with cheap talking machines as a feature of plans to increase circulation, and to supply merchants who offered machines and records as "gifts" with the purchase of other merchandise.

Victor seems to have been far less active in marketing premium goods than was Columbia, which for many years provided disc and cylinder machines to many firms, especially Chicago mail order dealers.

The first shipment of a Victor external horn machine with a "rigid hollow" tone arm was made October 10, 1902, to the Chicago jobbers, Lyon & Healy. This was a Model 4 Victor, Number 4143.

Victor De Luxe 14-inch records were first announced March 11, 1903, and discontinued in 1905.

Now that I am on the subject of records for the moment, I'd like to mention an oddity which Quentin Riggs of Washington, D.C., owns. It is a 12-inch DeLuxe record with a 10-inch number, 1949, at the top of the label. At the bottom another number, C106, appears, which indicates that this was the 106th 12-inch Master Victor had recorded.

Its fortunate owner speculates that the record, "Tell Me, Dusky Maiden," sung by Harry Macdonough and S. H. Dudley, either was given a 10-inch number by mistake, or "possibly at first they planned to number the 12-inches in the same series as the 10 and 7-inches."

This record appears in the August, 1904, Victor catalog in 10-inch size under the number M1949, and in 12-inch as 31043.

The famous Victor tapering tone arm was first announced in April,

(Continued on page 98P)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 53)

1903, and on April 14 the first shipment of a machine with this arm was made to the Talking Machine Company of Chicago. This also was a Model 4, Number 5975.

Jobbers and dealers first learned on October 21, 1904, that a $100 Victor, the Model 6, with a mahogany cabinet and gold-plated fittings, was to be introduced. The first sample shipment was made November 23, 1904, to the Talking Machine Company. The machine was numbered 507.

A reduction in the price of records was announced December 1, 1905. This information, however, has been given in a preceding installment. Victor 8-inch records were publicized in April, 1906.

III. The First Victrola

On June 1, 1906, an announcement went out from Camden that a $10 machine, the Victor Junior, intended mostly to be used by children, was being introduced. It had an 8-inch turntable, a dark-red flower horn with gold stripes, and was described as "a Victor with a tone quality that is surprising, considering size and price."

J. W. Jenkins Sons Music Company of Kansas City, Mo., was the first jobber to get a sample. Machine Number 182 was shipped to Jenkins on June 8. Since Victor received only

BRITISH INVENTION—The Victor Auxetophone, invented by an Englishman, Chauncey A. Parsons, also was introduced in 1906. It used compressed air to provide an enormous volume of sound. The price was $500.

FROM THE BLUE SHEET — "VICTOR AUXETOPHONE ..... $500.00

"August 1st, '1906' — First announcement to the Trade. First shipment made August 21st, '1906' on ticket No. 40999, to Stanley & Pearsall, New York City, N.Y. Machine No. 100."

$3 of the $10 retail price, it is hard to see how a profit could be made on this toy machine.

That year of 1906 was a big one for innovations. On August 1, the Company announced the Victor Auxetophone, a machine that sold for $500 and gave enormous volume through the use of compressed air.

It was invented by an Englishman, Chauncey A. Parsons, and was distributed both by Victor and by the Gramophone & Typewriter Company of England. The first American sample was dispatched on August 21, to Stanley & Pearsall of New York City. It was machine number 100.

Of more historic importance was the announcement on August 7, 1906, of the first Victor Victrola. It was the Model 16, which retailed for $200. In my opinion it is an awkward looking affair, which was rather hard to play because the turntable and tone arm were situated in a deep "well" at the top of the instrument. The first shipment was made August 22. It was Number 505 and went to the Knight-Campbell Company, Denver, Colorado.

It didn't take long to learn that the design of the first Victrola could stand considerable improvement, and in September, 1907, a new Model 16 was introduced, which was easier to operate and bore a considerably greater resemblance to the standardized type which a few years later was famous the world over.

Shortly afterward, The Voice of the Victor revealed that the factory still had fewer than a dozen of the original models on hand and these would be supplied to people who insisted on having them as long as the supply lasted.

A Victrola in Louis XV design, the Number 20, was announced February 14, 1908 to sell for $300. The price afterward was reduced to $250, but the machine must not have sold well, for a notice went out February 18, 1909, saying it was being discontinued:

"... upon the advice and comments received from our Distributors. Up to date," the notice said, "we have not been able to supply the demand for our regular Mahogany Victrola XVI at $200, and it is our intention to bend our energies, for the present, to satisfactorily supplying this latter type."

Several months ago, incidentally, I remarked in HOBBIES that I wondered who designed the original Victrola. Since then I have found what appears to be the answer in a clipping pasted in an old scrapbook. The following news item was sent out from Washington, D.C., March 22, 1927:

"The claims of John Bailey Browning, a former mechanic, that he is the true inventor of the modern enclosed horn Victrola cabinet, were upheld by the Supreme Court.

"Lower courts also held Browning the true inventor, and the Victor Talking Machine Company appealed. It was the denial of this appeal by the court today that establishes Browning as the inventor."

Another small horn-equipped Victor talking machine, the Model O, a mahogany cabinet and an amber-hued flower horn, was announced April 15, 1908. The first shipment, of machine Number 705, was made August 19, to Sherman, Clay & Company, Seattle, Wash. (Victor seems to have liked to scatter the introduction of new models among widely separated jobbers.)

Double-faced records, reluctantly brought out to compete with the already introduced Columbia d-f's, were announced to the trade by telegraph September 17, 1908.

On February 5, 1909, dealers were sent a letter saying:

"We deplore the advent of the double-faced records at any price, because we do not feel that the change is worth the trouble it causes; but we are glad to notify our trade that we are fully prepared and amply able to handle the situation, and that, after the trouble and expense of the change are over, the Victor Trade and the Victor Company will be found more firmly entrenched than ever and with even a larger portion of the disc trade."

Meanwhile, dealers were assured that Victor had no intention to discontinue single-faced records. Rather:

"In all possible cases the new single-faced records will be by artists under our exclusive control, records of unusual quality and strong selling value or especially high musical merit; thus affording the trade protection against duplication of selections at cut prices by means of double-faced records."

"In no event will we change our entire catalog to double-faced records, but will continue to issue a properly graduated proportion of single-faced records at 60 cents and upward, as we know that the growing number of more musical purchasers will always demand single selections to a sufficient extent to warrant a substantial list."

Actually, the last single-faced Black Label record was issued in 1913 and the few that remained afterward in the catalog were cut out at the beginning of 1920. No more new single-faced Red Seal records were announced after August, 1923, when most of those in the catalog were combined in double-face form.

—O—

Postscript: Since the foregoing was written I have been shocked to learn of the accidental death of Mr. Harbaugh. He was killed when a loaded gun for which he was reaching was accidentally discharged.

(To be continued)

FINDINGS ON R S CHINA

(Continued from page 98M)

price and frantic collection of this porcelain when there is such a vast amount of it. Its beauty and popularity are undisputed, and its popularity seemed to bring a note of surprise from my German informants. They do not feel it is noteworthy, since it is too new to merit attention.

See marks.

I want to acknowledge the help of the following people who are not mentioned in the story:

Dr. Bruno Schrotter, Winchester, Ill., who gave me the name of a curator friend in Dresden, translated my letters, and helped with photography.

Frank Caldwell, Jacksonville, Ill., for the loan of plates.

Mary E. Mewes, Mercantile Library, St. Louis, Mo., for helpful information.

Mary Ruth Gerye, Topeka, Kans., (Geri-Lou Antiques, an advertiser in HOBBIES) for drawing of marks.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

HOW TO TELL WHEN VICTOR RECORDS WERE MADE

PART VI

By JIM WALSH

From left to right:

FIRST TABLE MODEL. Victrola Number 12 was the first Victor hornless instrument not to stand upright on the floor. It was announced in June, 1909, and sold for $125.

OPERA MODEL. This is a photograph of the Opera model cylinder phonograph introduced by the U.S. Phonograph Company of Cleveland, Ohio, in May, 1910. It sold for $65.

FOR SALE

One of the finest Edisons known, in perfect condition. With 25 records. $450.00 or best offer.

R. L. JEFFERIES

Harrisonburg, Va.

Phone 434-2797

or write to Box 165, Harrisonburg, Va.

WANTED FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on
ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single - faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G.&T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.

Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla,

New York

tfx

This is a continuation of a series of articles begun in the October 1968 issue of HOBBIES. Revealed last month, and in this issue, are some important dates in the history of the pioneer Victor Talking Machine Company as shown in blue pages from an old loose-leaf binder formerly kept in the Victor files.

On September 15, 1909, Victor announced to its jobbers and dealers that it could supply wooden horns, in oak and mahogany finish, at $10 each.

The following October 12 a Victrola Number 16 in "Moorish marquetry" was announced. Its price was $750. It probably set no sales record, since the average salaried employee or wage earner of 60 years ago thought he was doing well to make $15 a week, and some received a good bit less.

For the first time a table model Victrola was announced June 8, 1909. It had a mahogany finish, cost $125, and, with some minor differences of design, looked much like the $50 machine that was introduced in 1911. The first instrument of this type, Number 551, was shipped June 16 to Sherman, Clay & Company of Seattle, Wash.

Victrola Number 9, the $50 model, which became, perhaps, the most popular of all, was announced April 4, 1911. It could be had in either mahogany or oak finish, but nearly everybody took mahogany.

The first shipment in the United States consisted of 113 machines, and the lowest number was 751. The shipment was received happily by E. F. Droop & Sons Company, Washington, D. C.

On April 29, a sample of Model 9, Number 513, was shipped to the Berliner Gramophone Company of Montreal, Canada, and on May 15, eight machines, with the lowest number commencing at 758, were dispatched — presumably for export trade — to Neuss, Hesslein & Company, forwarding agents in New York City. The destination of these machines was not revealed.

A very important step in Victor's advancement as the industry leader was taken April 20, 1911, when dealers first learned the Company was setting up an educational department, to supply records and machines especially intended for public school use.

For many years afterward Victor dominated the school musical picture, although Columbia, too, soon had its own educational department. Victor's pioneer educational activities were in charge of Mrs. Frances E. Clark, who had been supervisor of music in the schools of Milwaukee, Wis.

The smallest table-type Victrola, known as the Number 4, was first heralded in August, 1911. It had an oak cabinet and sold for $15. The first shipment to a jobber was made August 28 to Sherman, Clay & Company.

This shipment included 131 machines, and the lowest number was 517. On May 15, sample machine (Continued on page 38)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 36)

Number 2151 was shipped to the Berliner Gramophone Company of Montreal, and June 13, seven Number 4s, with the lowest number 2714, went to M. J. Corbett, a forwarding agent in New York.

Also announced in August, 1911, was the Model 6 Victrola, that sold at $25. The first shipment in the United States went, on October 16, 1911, to W. G. Walz, El Paso, Tex. Mr. Walz really invested, for he bought 470 machines with numbers commencing at 5503.

Four days earlier, on October 13, the Bergstrom Music Company of Honolulu, Hawaii, was sent 10 Model 6s, with the lowest number 5971.

October 16 saw 12 of the little Victrolas shipped to Frazer & Company. The lowest number was 6184. And where do you think Frazer did business; Why, in Yokohama, Japan.

Another new model, introduced in August, 1911, was Victrola 8. It was a little smaller than the Number 9, and cost $40.

Old Victor dealers say that, for some not very clear reason, it didn't sound as well as the Number 9, and never sold largely. It was offered only in oak and that may have hurt it in competition with its slightly bigger brother, which, old-timers say gave as good results as any large cabinet Victrola.

The first shipment of the Number 8 in the United States was made September 29, 1911, to Sherman, Clay & Company. Evidently preparing for the Christmas trade, this favored firm received 757. The lowest numbered instrument in the shipment was 501.

A sample, number not given, was sent August 25 to the Berliner Gramophone Company. And September 30 saw 20 machines, with the lowest number 559, shipped to the New York & Cuba Mail Steamship Company, presumably for delivery to some Cuban jobber or dealer.

II. Other Companies' Products

That concludes the blue pages devoted to Victor Talking Machine Company productions, but probably there were others that escaped being saved. However, I also have a number of sheets devoted to competing firms.

One of these is the U. S. Phonograph Company of Cleveland, Ohio, which began making U. S. Everlasting cylinder phonographs and records in 1909, but went out of business in 1913. Names of the United States Phonograph officials are given as D. K. Bishop, president; G. H. Worthington, vice president; Thomas H. Towell, treasurer, and F. W. Treadway, secretary.

Since Victor contemplated action against the Cleveland firm regarding patents, it is interesting to note that after Treasurer Towell's name the following appears: "Also proprietor Eclipse Musical Co. of Cleveland, O., Victor jobbers." It looks to me as if Mr. Towell might have been about to lose out as a "Victor jobber" for serving as an official of a cylinder manufacturing firm.

Another page, without a photograph, is headed "U. S. Reproducers," and has this comment:

"These reproducers form the regular equipment for the original machines announced in 1910 and are constructed in tandem fashion — one used for the two-minute records and the other for the four-minute records."

There follows a page on which a photograph of a $30 cylinder machine, the U. S. Junior, has been pasted, with this notation:

"First demonstrated to the trade at and during the Piano Dealers' Convention held in Richmond, Va., during May, 1910."

Another page gives two views of the U. S. Banner at $45, with the same comment about the Piano Dealers' Convention.

A like procedure is followed with the U. S. Opera, a large external horn machine that retailed for $65. Its design, I think appears less attractive than the Edison Opera, which sold for $90.

Then come two photos of the U. S. Peerless — one in mahogany and the other in oak. Both of these were listed at $200 and apparently were intended to compete with other floor model phonographs, such as the Victrola, the Columbia Grafonola and the Edison Amberola.

Like those previously mentioned, these Peerless machines were first demonstrated at the Richmond Piano Dealers' Convention in May, 1910. U. S. Everlasting instruments must have had a small sale, for they rarely seem to turn up nowadays.

Next comes a page without a picture, devoted to the "U. S. Grand," with the statement: "This instrument was first announced to the trade in the Fall of 1911."

And, finally, as far as U. S. Everlasting is concerned, another pictureless page in the loose-leaf binder deals with the "U. S. Improved Peerless," a $200 machine. One wonders about the statement:

"This instrument was first announced to the trade in the Fall of 1911. Model purchased and turned over to the Legal Department."

The last, and latest, dated copy of the blue sheets, is devoted to Edison Blue Amberol records, with the simple statement: "Sep., 1912 — first announced to the trade."

It is hard to see how Edison's unbreakable cylinders could have disturbed Victor, but for some reason they were mentioned, and someone went to the trouble of maintaining the binder.

Finally, there is a page for the Vitaphone Company. Vitaphone officers are listed as C. B. Repp, president; J. H. Greene Jr., treasurer, and H. N. McMenimen, secretary and general manager.

I have just one American Vitaphone record. You may remember that many years later Warner Brothers chose Vitaphone as the name of the process by which their first talking pictures were made. My record is by Billy Murray and is of "Dear Sing Sing." Billy Murray sang this for Victor in 1904.

Next month I hope to resume our more detailed consideration of the problems included in "How to Tell When Victor Records Were Made."

MISCELLANEOUS MUSIC

ALL CYLINDER and outside horn disc phonographs, parts, reproducers, records, bought, sold, repaired. — Dave Houser, 203 Fifth, Minersville, Pa. 17954 ap120821

PLAYER PIANO BOOKS. Rebuilding the Player Piano $6.95. Player Piano Treasury $10. Put Another Nickel in $15. (See review on this, page 110, Sept. 1966 HOBBIES.) Satisfaction guaranteed. Ask for catalog of other books. Prices postpaid. — Vestal Press, Vestal 2, N.Y. 13850 ap68041

EDISON, Victor, Columbia reprints & many more to follow. Few Tinfoil to Stereo Books left. Will also have Portfolio Books soon. Large Edison Two-Minute Cylinder Record List Cross Indexed, one of the best, only $8.50 prepaid. Now ready. Keep in touch with the old reliable dealer for many items. Large Sales and Bid Lists now ready, one quarter each. Get your name on my preferred mailing list for one dollar (deductible). — A. Nugent, Jr., 3804 Charles City Road, Richmond, Va. 23231 ap1846

78 rpm STEEL phonograph needles, top quality, box of 50. 8 boxes $2; 25 boxes $5 postpaid. — Paul Dodington, 138 Eastbourne Ave., Toronto 7, Ontario, Canada. je3614

MUSIC BOXES, horn phonographs, crank organs, singing bird boxes, coin operated and game machines, etc. bought, sold, traded, serviced. Send $1 for large 4-page sales list, refundable with order. — Stephen Leonard, 12 Garden St., Great Neck, N.Y. 11021. Phone 212-389-4144. je120832

DECEMBER BID LIST now ready. February Sales list in February one quarter. 1969 Cylinder or Disc Record list fifty cents each. Large Wanted to Buy list one dime. All prices on Tinfoil to Stereo books advance January 15, 1969. — Nugent, 3804 Charles City Road, Richmond, Va. 23231 ap3673

WANTED: Welte-Mignon player piano attachment in repairable condition. — Chandler, 50 Deer Pk., Gaithersburg, Md. 20760 ap3652

BINDERS FOR HOBBIES

The wealth of information contained in each issue of HOBBIES is too valuable to be thrown around with consequent danger of loss.

Holds 12 issues.

Price each $3.00

HOBBIES Magazine
1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill. 60605

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Arthur Clough, Lawyer— Death of Edwin Smalle

By JIM WALSH

I. An Overwhelming Surprise

Once more I must apologize because of postponing for another month the series on "How To Tell When Victor Records Were Made."

I promise faithfully that by the time the next HOBBIES appears I shall have done the necessary research, and the installments for which many collectors are waiting will be resumed.

My decision to delay the Victor series was made partly because I feel it a sad duty to report the death of Ed Smalle, a highly popular recording artist of the 1920s, and also because I wish to give some further information about the excellent lyric tenor, Arthur C. Clough, as a supplement to my June and July, 1968, articles.

I am indebted for my Clough material to Harry Birdoff of New York City, who is familiar to HOBBIES readers as a guest contributor to Aida Favia-Artsay's fine Historical Records Department.

And Mr. Birdoff has knocked me fairly off my tottering feet by revealing that Clough was a lawyer before he became a vaudeville and light opera tenor and recording artist. Also that at one stage of his career Clough was contemplating seriously going back to the legal profession in the belief that he could sing juries into returning a "not guilty" verdict in favor of his clients.

I doubt that if I had been given 10,000 guesses I ever would have imagined such a bizarre situation!

II. Recollections of Arthur Clough

Now Mr. Birdoff will enlighten us in his own words:

Dear Mr. Walsh: This is in answer to your plea for help concerning the tenor, Arthur C. Clough.

"First, he was not popularly known with the middle C. In his name. Also, as the romantic lead, Clough usually wore a split moustache, with the ends turned up.

"What operettas! — the glorious airs from the best music factories in Vienna! Clough's voice was of wide range and power, and he sang with such ease, apparently enjoying it is much as the audience.

"In the spring of 1911, he suddenly resolved to resume the practice of law. The call of the footlights had lured him away from his law practice. He was appearing then as the tenor in 'The Prince of Pilsen' Company, the Pixley and Lunders musical comedy that was about to end its tour in Boston. Until the beginning of next season's tour he could find time to practice law again.

"He had been reading about the Texas lawyer who managed to have a criminal acquitted by singing—and he wasn't even a tenor! His client had been charged with murder in the first degree. After a brief summing up of the case the lawyer sang 'Home, Sweet Home' to the jury, thus achieving a verdict of not guilty.

"This decided Clough to embark in the practice of criminal law. He firmly believed that no power of silver-tongued forensic oratory could sway or hold a panel of jurors nearly as much as the ineluctable notes of a song.

"The selections, of course, should be governed by the nature or class of the case, Clough believed.

"Take for example," Clough said, 'The Passion Song' in 'Everywoman.' What an overpowering effect the rendering of that number would have on a court or jury in the case of a wronged woman held on a criminal charge! It would mean her immediate acquittal.

"I have a big repertory of grand and light operas and upwards of a hundred concert numbers from which I would have little difficulty in selecting a solo to suit any case in criminal jurisprudence. At any rate, I'm going to try it—watch me."

(Continued on page 44)

Wanted to Buy

Nickelodeon Pianos, Music Boxes,
Band Organs, Other Automatic
Musical Instruments

We list below some of the automatic musical instruments that are of interest to us at this time. If you have one or more of these, please send us a description. A photograph or two would be helpful. We'll reply with an immediate decision. Of course, we're always interested in the purchase of intact collections also.

NICKELODIAN PIANOS — Anything and everything by Seeburg, Wurlitzer, Coinola, Cremona, Western Electric, Hupfeld, Weber, Philipps, Popper, Nelson-Wiggen, Welte, etc. Also any type of orchestron (electric piano with drums, pipes, etc.). The condition is not important — they are wanted in all grades.

MUSIC BOXES — All types of disc boxes by Polyphon, Regina, Symphonion, etc. All disc sizes and styles of instruments wanted. Cylinder boxes: Overture boxes, large cylinder boxes, boxes with bells & drums, boxes with interchangeable cylinders, boxes with matching table — all wanted in choice condition.

PLAYER ORGANS — Reed organs with roll-players such as the Aeolian Orchestrelle. Also small hand-cranked organs such as the Gem, Celestina, Mandolina, Orguette, Ariston, etc.

BAND ORGANS, DANCE ORGANS — All types wanted by Wurlitzer, North Tonawanda, Artisan, Niagara, Gavioli, Marengli, Bruder Limonaire, Mortier, etc.

REPRODUCING PIANOS — All types of reproducing pianos — Duo-Art, Welte, Ampico — in ornate or "art" cases. Especially want unusual types such as the Duo-Art "Concertola" roll-changer, Ampicochron, cabinet styles, etc.

SUPPLIES — Music box discs in quantities of 25 discs or more; rolls for coin-operated pianos; reproducing piano rolls (in quantities of 25 or more only); NCS, CS, MSR, etc. player organ rolls; nickelodeon and orchestron art glass; literature, catalogues, old trade magazines, etc. relating to player pianos, etc.

MISCELLANEOUS — Tangley and National calliopes, Deagan Uga-Fon, Wurlitzer theatre organ, music boxes with moving figures (automata), violin-players such as the Mills Violano-Virtuoso and the Hupfeld Phonoliszt-Violina, theatre photoplayers, Reproduce piano/pipe organs, etc.

Do you have any of these items for sale? If so, write or call us today! A finder's fee paid for leads resulting in the purchase of collections or desirable individual instruments.

HATHAWAY & BOWERS, Inc.

The World's Largest Automatic
Musical Instrument Dealer

Dept. 9; 11975 E. Florence Ave.

Santa Fe Springs, Calif. 90670

Dealers: Terry Hathaway — Q. David Bowers
Tel. 213 - 941-8774

Business by appointment. If you want to buy automatic instruments, send $2 for our latest large illustrated catalog of music boxes, nickelodeons, organs, etc. for sale.

THE EDISON PHONOGRAPH

THERE is nothing so good for the family as laughing. The Edison Phonograph will produce more laughs to the minute than any other form of entertainer. Try it yourself.

EDISON FUN BOOKLET

1908, 2 1/2 x 4", 16 pages. Postpaid: 30c; 2 for 50c; 5 for $1; 50 for $7.50; 100 for $12.50. Sample page shown here, reduced. Better hurry. We only have a 99-year supply left.

GOLDEN MEAN PRESS

Box 943
Santa Rosa,
Calif. 95402 mfp

WANTED FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on

ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- * COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- * VICTOR, red seal, single - faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- * INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- * FOREIGN LABELS such as ODEON, FONOTIPLA, G.&T., etc.
- * "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts. Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla,

New York

tfx

DULCITONE FOR SALE: Made, Scotland, late 1800's. No strings. Hammers strike tuning forks. Legs fold under so 1 man can carry. Was Minnie Maddern Fiske's c. 1900. Make offer.

Shipping extra.

SCHNORMEIER'S ANTIQUES
Lamberton, Minn. 56152 mfp

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 36)

"There is no evidence that Clough actually tried it.

"But later on he did appear in operettas, such as 'Miss Dudelsack' (1911), 'Two Little Brides' (1912), 'The Rose Maid,' (1912), etc. Their scores had the same appeal as 'The Chocolate Soldier' and 'The Merry Widow.'

"The haunting melodies that Clough sang, with their lights and shades, survive today in the too few recordings he left behind."

Mr. Birdoff, you will observe, does not say if he knows whether Clough is still living, but he probably isn't, since his first records were made more than 60 years ago.

If he believed he could sing a defendant out of trouble he must have shared the common opinion that the average juror is a gullible goof. But then the feat of the Texas lawyer would appear to confirm Clough's opinion. Apparently it never occurred to that supposedly hard-boiled Texas jury to reflect that the murdered man never could return to any sort of "Home, Sweet Home!"

I am very grateful to Mr. Birdoff for his fascinating letter, and shall be glad to receive additional information concerning Arthur Clough from any source.

III. Ed Smalle's Death

In HOBBIES for May and June, 1955, appeared an article concerning Ed Smalle, who then was living in Westerly, R. I., and had been the recording duet partner of such famous stars as Billy Murray, Vernon Dalhart, Johnny Marvin, and Esther Walker. Smalle also had been the pianist and "harmony singer" of the recording and radio ensemble known as the Revelers, who, for many years, had world-wide popularity. Now I am sorry to report that the genial comedian and ballad singer died Saturday, November 23, 1968, at the almost patriarchal age of 81.

The 1955 HOBBIES articles about Smalle, were written by Oliver R. Graham, who lives in Westerly, and was a close friend of the singer, but they carried some additional comments by me. Mr. Graham has sent me clippings from the Westerly Sun, telling of Smalle's death. These have been supplemented by one from the Providence Sunday Journal, thoughtfully mailed to me by Frank O. Moon of North Kingstown, R.I.

I shall combine information from the two papers, avoiding overlapping as far as possible, in order to provide facts not contained in the preceding HOBBIES articles. I will paraphrase the newspaper articles instead of quoting them directly.

Edwin J. Smalle, (whose last name is pronounced as if it were spelled Smalley) lived at 94 High St., Westerly. His musical career of 62 years included two European tours and an appearance before the King and Queen of England in 1928. He died in the Westerly hospital, where he had been admitted a few days before his death.

A former musical arranger for the National Broadcasting Company, vocal stylist and arranger of many popular songs of the 1920 and 1930s, the tenor had made his home in Westerly since 1940.

He conducted the Ed Smalle Orchestra which played at local functions. And he operated his own music studio. His last public appearance as a pianist was with the Everett Perrin Orchestra at the Stonington Ambulance Corps' annual meeting in Mystic, Conn., on November 16.

In recent years he had spent much of his time giving piano lessons to private pupils, and was stricken with a heart attack on the Tuesday before his death while returning home from a lesson. He was taken to the hospital by the Westerly Ambulance Corps and remained a patient in the intensive care unit until he died.

During his earlier years he arranged such famous songs as "I'll See You in My Dreams," "Alice Blue Gown," "In a Little Spanish Town," and "My Blue Heaven" for stars who included Al Jolson, Fanny Brice, Fred and Adele Astaire, Billy Murray, John Charles Thomas, and the Duncan Sisters.

As already mentioned, Ed Smalle was pianist of the Revelers, who gained world-wide fame for their 1926 recording of "Dinah" and other close-harmony numbers. He toured Europe with the Revelers of the mid-1920s, and also coached the Seven Gs on the Phil Baker Show, did other radio shows, and made film "shorts."

Smalle was popular with Westerly organizations, particularly the Lions Club, for which he played the piano and led the group in singing during many of their meetings and social functions.

Mr. Smalle was born in Roxbury, Mass., November 3, 1887, a son of the late James and Mary (Rooney) Smalle. He began his career as a boy soprano in a church choir, but became a professional in 1906 when he gave up a $3-a-week job in a Boston shoe store to become a $7-a-week pianist in "The Old South Music Store" on Washington Street in Boston.

In 1914, at the urging of a colleague, he went to New York City. There he landed a job with the Harry Von Tilzer Music Company as a pianist and demonstrator.

In the summer of 1919 he demonstrated a new song by Andrew B. Sterling and Von Tilzer to Billy Murray, then the most popular recording

(Continued on page 98)

DUET SINGER. Dick Robertson who is still living at Newfoundland, N.J., was one of Ed Smalle's duet partners. Robertson's fine Decca records of old-time popular songs are treasured by many collectors.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

(Continued from page 44)

FRIENDLY GREETING: The late Ed Smalle waving to a friend in 1955.

MRS. MAUDE SMALLE and her husband, the famous recording and radio star.
—Photos, courtesy of Oliver R. Graham

HONORING EDISON

On February 11, Jim Walsh was a guest on Kathy Thornton's Panorama, a program telecast from WDBJ, Roanoke, Va., as a tribute to the 122nd birthday of Thomas A. Edison, inventor of the phonograph.

Edison records of the inventor's favorite song, "I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen," were played, and many of Jim's phonographs and pictures of recording artists were shown.

Mrs. Thornton is holding a large autographed photo of Edison in this picture taken during the program.
—Photo by Ken Weirigo

artist. It was "I Ain't-en Got'en No Time to Have the Blues," and Billy liked harmonizing it with Ed so well he invited Smalle to go with him to the Edison studios and make a trial recording. "I like it, and if I like it I think Mr. Edison will like it, too," Murray commented.

Edison studio officials did like it and had the team record it. They also sang it shortly afterward for Victor and Pathe, and during the remainder of 1919 recorded a number of other duets, which included "Open Up the Golden Gates to Dixie Land," for Aeolian-Vocalion, and "Oh! How She Can Sing," for Pathe and Emerson.

In late 1920, after Murray had become an exclusive Victor artist, he and Smalle began recording regularly together and continued through 1925. Meanwhile, Ed sang with other performers — among them Dalhart, Billy Jones, Dick Robertson, and Gerald Underhill Macy — for various labels, and made the duet arrangements. He was a brilliant arranger as well as a skilled pianist.

Smalle had a serious illness in 1940, while living in a summer home he had bought at Charlestown, Mass. But he recovered and continued active in his profession for another 28 years.

According to Billy Murray, Smalle was extremely nervous, and Billy used to tell laughingly of how, when they were recording a duet, Ed would dig his long fingernails into his palms all the time they were singing. By the time the recording was over his hands would be blotched with blood.

The tenor is survived by his wife, Maude F. (Ruddick) Smalle. Services were held at the Schilke Funeral Home in Westerly, at 2 p.m., Tuesday, November 26. Burial followed in River Bend cemetery.

It is a sorrowful duty to bid farewell to my old friend, Ed Smalle. I call him my friend, although we knew each other only by correspondence. Through the kindness of Maurice W. Wheeler of Nashville, Tenn., who came originally from Rhode Island and used to call on Ed Smalle when he returned to his native State, I have an excellent tape recording on which Smalle talks for a long time.

He tells of how he and Murray came to record that eccentric and original composition, "I Ain't-en Got'en No Time to Have the Blues," and recalls interesting things about his musical life. Finally, he agrees to play and sing "Casey Jones" for Wheeler.

Smalle has a hard time remembering the words, but finally strings them together in reasonably orthodox form, and gives a fine rendition of what Carl Sandburg called "the greatest ballad ever written on the North American continent."

Needless to say, that tape will be treasured as long as I live. At my death it is destined to find a permanent home in the Library of Congress at Washington.

(The End)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Arthur Walsh

By JIM WALSH

March 29, 1969

This is one of a series of "stand-by" articles I am preparing in anticipation of a hospital stay, which I hope will bring a speedy and complete recovery of my health.—J. W.

Wanted to Buy

Nickelodeon Pianos, Music Boxes,
Band Organs, Other Automatic
Musical Instruments

We list below some of the automatic musical instruments that are of interest to us at this time. If you have one or more of these, please send us a description. A photograph or two would be helpful. We'll reply with an immediate decision. Of course, we're always interested in the purchase of intact collections also.

NICKELODIAN PIANOS — Anything and everything by Seeburg, Wurlitzer, Colnola, Cremona, Western Electric, Hupfeld, Weber, Philipps, Popper, Nelson-Wiggen, Welte, etc. Also any type of orchestrion (electric piano with drums, pipes, etc.). The condition is not important — they are wanted in all grades.

MUSIC BOXES — All types of disc boxes by Polyphon, Regina, Symphonion, etc. All disc sizes and styles of instruments wanted. Cylinder boxes: Overture boxes, large cylinder boxes, boxes with bells & drums, boxes with interchangeable cylinders, boxes with matching table — all wanted in choice condition.

PLAYER ORGANS — Reed organs with roll-players such as the Aeolian Orchestrion. Also small hand-cranked organs such as the Gem, Celestina, Mandolina, Orguette, Ariston, etc.

BAND ORGANS, DANCE ORGANS — All types wanted by Wurlitzer, North Tonawanda, Artisan, Niagara, Gavioli, Marengi, Bruder Limonadre, Mortier, etc.

REPRODUCING PIANOS — All types of reproducing pianos — Duo-Art, Ampico — in ornate or "art" cases. Especially want unusual types such as the Duo-Art "Concertola" roll-changer, Ampico, cabinet styles, etc.

SUPPLIES — Music box discs in quantities of 25 discs or more; rolls for coin-operated pianos; reproducing piano rolls (in quantities of 25 or more only); NOS, CS, MSR, etc. player organ rolls; nickelodeon and orchestrion art glass; literature, catalogues, old trade magazines, etc. relating to player pianos, etc.

MISCELLANEOUS — Tangle and National calliopes, Deagan Una-Fon, Wurlitzer theatre organ, music boxes with moving figures (automata), violin-players such as the Mills Violano-Virtuoso and the Hupfeld Phonolist-Violino, theatre photoplayers, Reproduce piano/pipe organs, etc.

Do you have any of these items for sale? If so, write or call us today! A finder's fee paid for leads resulting in the purchase of collections or desirable individual instruments.

HATHAWAY & BOWERS, Inc.

The World's Largest Automatic
Musical Instrument Dealer

Dept. 9; 11975 E. Florence Ave.
Santa Fe Springs, Calif. 90670

Directors: Terry Hathaway — Q. David Bowers

Tel. 213 - 941-8774

Business by appointment. If you want to buy automatic instruments, send $2 for our latest large illustrated catalog of music boxes, nickelodeons, organs, etc. for sale. jeo

I. The Walsh "Cousins"

I can visualize some HOBBIES readers smiling, as they see the name at the head of this article, and telling themselves: "Ol' Jim has decided to write about some of his kinfolks this month."

That would be a reasonable, but not correct, assumption. Although the late Arthur Walsh and I referred to each other as "Cousin Arthur" and "Cousin Ulysses" we could not find that we had any relationship.

I have decided to write about Art because I consider him one of the most colorful personalities that played a part in the history of the sound reproducing industry.

He made his mark as a recording artist, Edison "tone test" specialist, Edison official, song writer, deputy administrator of the Federal Housing Administration during Franklin D. Roosevelt's regime and, finally, as a U. S. senator from New Jersey.

He was something of a prodigy. His Edison career began when he was only 19. Before he was 30 he was the company's advertising and music manager.

II. Information From "Who's Who"

It is odd that "Who's Who In America" apparently didn't seem to consider Arthur Walsh's Edison career worthy of mention; also that his name did not appear in its hallowed pages until he became a federal official. Perhaps, like many other important men, he was indifferent to being written up.

There is a fairly long biographical sketch of him in the 1946-47 edition, however, and from it I shall extract and paraphrase some information, as follows:

"CUZZIN ARTHUR." Jim Walsh says: "The late Arthur Walsh sent me this autographed photo shortly after he became a U. S. senator from New Jersey in 1943. Although he and I called each other 'Cousin' we were unable to trace any relationship. However, his features in this picture seem to me strongly to resemble those of my late brother, Edward Walsh."

Arthur Walsh was born in Newark, N.J., February 26, 1896, the son of Michael Joseph and Mary Ann (Shane) Walsh. He was educated in Newark public schools and by a private tutor, and attended the New York University School of Commerce.

On June 8, 1920, he married Miss Agnes Milvey, and they had one daughter, Barbara Louise.

He began as a concert violinist in 1915, at 19, and in the same year became a recording violinist for Thomas A. Edison, Inc.

Since West Orange, N.J., where Edison phonographs and records were made, is virtually a suburb of Newark, there is no reason for surprise that the talented young violinist soon attracted the attention of Thomas A. Edison's staff.

Walsh became one of the Edison "tone test" standbys, and toured the nation with such prominent singers as the late Marie Rappold, soprano, and the contralto, Christine Miller.

I am not sure whether Miss Miller is still living, although I never have seen any mention of her death. She retired from singing after marrying a wealthy Pittsburgh, Pa., man, Daniel M. Clemson. Her name used to appear

(Continued on page 98D)

WANTED FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS of GREAT SINGERS on

ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single - faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS such as ODEON, FONOTIPLA, G.&T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.

Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla,

New York

tfx

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 36)

in the Pittsburgh telephone directory, but was not in the latest one I consulted.

The young violin virtuoso would play in comparison with records made by such masters of the bow as Albert Spalding and Carl Flesch, to prove that the New Edison faithfully "re-created" violin tone quality.

At that time he had not made any records — at least they were not listed in the catalog. But he did make one in 1916. It was a Jean Becker composition, "Romance." Critics who heard the tone tests seemed to regard him as a good, if not a great, violinist. Perhaps "promising" would be the better word.

After his tone testing days were over, Walsh was, from 1924 through 1931, successively advertising manager, vice president, and general manager of the Edison phonograph division. Afterwards he was a director and vice president on the general staff.

ARTHUR WALSH
NEW JERSEY

While still in his 30's he served, in 1934-35, as New Jersey director of the Federal Housing Administration, and, from 1935 through 1938, as deputy and assistant FHA administrator.

I shall omit the long list of companies, mostly Edison affiliates, of which he was a president or director. They would make wearisome reading of little interest to record collectors.

In 1943, Charles Edison, who was a son of Thomas A. Edison and an Edison official, was governor of New Jersey. As governor, he appointed Arthur Walsh to fill the unexpired portion of W. Warren Barbour's term as a U. S. senator. Walsh served from November 26, 1943, to April 7, 1944.

With his senatorial term over, he returned to his Edison responsibilities, and was executive vice president of the company when he died of cancer December 13, 1947. His home was at 332 Redmond Road, South Orange.

Until 1922, Edison Diamond Discs came in an envelope that contained a printed description of the record. The notes from Walsh's record of "Romance" 80336 supplement the information obtained from "Who's Who."

"Arthur Walsh is one of the younger American violinists who has gained all his musical education in this country. He began the study of the violin at the age of eight, and when still a child appeared in concert.

"He has played with many important musical organizations throughout the country, and in 1916 made a trans-continental tour with Marie Rappold. The selection Mr. Walsh gives here is a charming "Romance" by Jean Becker.

"It is a simple, appealing melody that makes a thoroughly enjoyable record. The piano accompaniment, which adds greatly to the interest of the rendition, is by Robert Gaylor."

"A simple, appealing melody" — how often that term was used to describe Edison records of the artless type of compositions that Mr. Edison loved! And how many times self-styled "connoisseurs" thundered anathemas at Edison for not recording more "high brow" numbers!

The reverse side of the Walsh solo also was "simple and appealing." It was a flute solo, "Amid the Odor of Roses," played by Harold L. Lyman, who was an even more confirmed tone test performer than the senator-to-be.

And I just have noticed something that puzzles me. The record jacket says Robert Gaylor, who was an Edison staff accompanist, played the piano for Walsh, but I have two copies of the record — both with the execrable surfaces associated with the late 1916 and 1917-18 Diamond Discs — and the label of both gives the accompanist as William H. Keller.

Was there really such a player, or was Keller an assumed name for Gaylor? And did the man who wrote the annotation, slip up and give the secret away? I wonder.

"Romance" was not a good seller and was cut out of the catalog in 1924. But I was surprised to find that one of my copies is from an original "B" master take. The second is from a "G" master, indicating that it had been found necessary to remake the original performance, probably in 1918.

There seems nothing to choose between the two. I have never seen Keller's name in an Edison catalog or on any other record.

III. Advertising and Music Man

I wonder what remarkable business potentialities Mr. Edison found in the young concert violinist that resulted in Art Walsh's rapid ascent up through the company's official ranks. He evidently had unusual qualifications, for it is obvious that he won the inventor's affection and that his services were highly satisfactory.

As an indication of the esteem in which the Edison family held Walsh, newspaper accounts of his death said that he played "the Old Man's" favorite song, "I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen" in 1931 at Edison's funeral. This is rather puzzling, because contemporary accounts of the funeral reported that a New Edison phonograph played Walter Van Brunt's record of "Kathleen."

My guess is that Walsh played a

United States Senate

WASHINGTON, D. C.

December 15, 1943

Dear Cuzzin Ulysses :

I have received several thousand letters and telegrams of congratulation, but not one that delighted me more than yours.

Of course I have the happiest memories of our early association, and I hope we can play a return engagement together before long.

The clipping from the Roanoke World-News is a WOW and I shall treasure it among my important souvenirs.

I expect some new photographs next week and when they are received I shall consider it a privilege to autograph one to you.

Thanks a million times for writing me, and every good wish in the world to you.

Sincerely,

Mr. Ulysses Walsh
Editorial Department
Roanoke World-News
Roanoke, Virginia.

AW
1

FLEDGLING SENATOR — Arthur Walsh wrote this letter of appreciation to Ulysses (Jim) Walsh in his early days as a member of the U.S. senate. Note senate stationery.

violin obligato to the recorded music.

As Edison advertising manager, Arthur Walsh's duties hardly could have been taxing after the spring of 1922. At that time, just when phonograph companies were beginning to realize that radio was likely to cut sharply into their sales of instruments and records, Edison quit advertising in national magazines — after many years of telling dealers that no one could be a successful business man if he didn't advertise.

Presumably, advertising was continued in trade publications like The Talking Machine World. But Edison publicity ceased to appear in mass circulation magazines such as The Saturday Evening Post.

Walsh's advertising work consequently involved mostly writing "copy" for the monthly record supplements. As music manager, he also decided what compositions were to be recorded.

By 1924 Victor and Brunswick were the only phonograph companies still advertising consistently. Columbia had gone bankrupt but was still in business, and many firms that flourished before the sharp business recession of late 1920 and 1921 had "folded."

An interesting light on Edison's attitude toward advertising may be obtained from a Diamond Disc called "Holiday Greetings From the Bunch at Orange," sent late in 1924 as a Christmas greeting and morale builder to Edison dealers. Various company officials, including Thomas A. and Charles Edison, made brief "pep talks" on this disc, now eagerly sought by collectors.

Among the speakers was Arthur Walsh, who had a fairly high pitched, rather nasal voice, and a marked peculiarity of emphasizing small words, such as "a," in preference to long ones. Nearly every time he used "a" he pronounced it as if it began with a capital letter, as I shall indicate in the quotation that follows:

"This is Art Walsh, advertising and music manager, broadcasting on A wave of increased business. I'm the poor boob who writes those Saturday Evening Post ads you admire so. Aside from all joking, we are cooking up a lot of plans for next year that may not increase the size of the Saturday Evening Post, but will certainly increase the size of your Saturday night bankroll.

"Among other things, there will be a lot of good old tone tests. And, by the way, speaking of tone tests, A man remarked the other day: 'Say, if you could get A pair of tights to fit that phonograph and teach it to carry A spear you could get A job at the Metropolitan Opera House.'

"I have another confession to make. I pick the hits, so I'm going to beat it before you hit me."

Several "takes" were made, so the words and enunciation may differ slightly, according to the one being played. But why should Walsh — and Mr. Edison himself — have considered it a joking matter to talk about advertising in the late lamented Post, then undoubtedly the most effective selling medium in the world, when their phonograph business was rapidly sliding down hill?

Alas, those new plans that were being "cooked up" never were cooked to the serving point. A few months after harassed Edison dealers listened to the "Christmas Greetings," Victor, Columbia and Brunswick brought out electrical recordings and improved types of instruments to play the new discs which were louder and had a wider frequency range than Edisons, although the tone was rough and distorted and they wore rapidly.

YOUTHFUL VIOLINIST—Arthur Walsh, age 19, giving an Edison "tone test" in 1915. He later became Edison's advertising and music manager and executive vice president.

From that time, almost everybody who bought a phonograph instead of a radio chose an Orthophonic Victrola, a Viva-Tonal Columbia or a Brunswick Prismatone, and a little later electrical reproduction was made available by the Brunswick Panatrope, the RCA Victor Electrola, and the Columbia-Kolster.

Edison finally came around to electrical recording late in 1927 and introduced a new machine, the Edisonic. It was better than any other non-electrical phonograph of the period.

But by that time the other companies had skimmed all the cream, and Edison sales continued to be progressively smaller until the company discontinued the phonograph and record business in the fall of 1929, just as the world-wide depression began to grip the United States.

As music manager, Walsh was handicapped by being encouraged to select many songs that had been popular when "Old Man" Edison was a boy or young man, and to have them recorded, regardless of whether there appeared to be any public demand.

Some sold well, but most didn't, and I believe Edison acquired a reputation among dealers of making more "unsalable" records than any other company, though I doubt its being any worse in this respect than some others in the sapphire ball era.

As a musician and music manager, Art Walsh also had ambitions to be a popular song writer, and he produced a few songs that were recorded on a fairly extensive scale. One was a fox trot, "What a Smile Can Do," issued in March, 1925, on Diamond Disc 51501.

Walsh is listed as the author of the words, and A. Paganucci as composer of the music. It was played by Billy Wynne's Greenwich Village Orchestra, with singing by Charles Hart. Columbia also recorded the composition, and had it played by Ace Brigode and His Fourteen Virginians. There may have been other versions.

Then came a Walsh-Paganucci comic song, "As a Porcupine Pines For Its Pork (That's How I Pine for You)," issued in March, 1925, on Diamond Disc 51535, and sung by the great duet team of Billy Jones and Ernest Hare. They also recorded it for Victor and Columbia.

(Continued on page 98L)

Robert Phillip and the first Canadian clock delivered to Clock Manor in 1964

ON TIME

(Continued from page 49)

nat movements were among the best. The date 1914 is the dividing line for change of the name Berlin to the city of Kitchener. Previous to the 1914-18 war the city of Kitchener was known officially as Berlin.

The factory was not large and it was always a family business. The passing of this clock factory will recall to collectors the ingenuity that clocks manufacturers always have shown in their products.

Orville Hagans of Hagans' Clock Manor Museum, Bergen Park, Col., is the first Museum to seek out and have on display examples of Canadian, a la Pequegnat, the Office Clock, Canadian Time, and the School Model, Toronto.

BINDERS FOR HOBBIES

The wealth of information contained in each issue of HOBBIES is too valuable to be thrown around with consequent danger of loss.

Holds 12 issues.

Price each $3.50

HOBBIES Magazine
1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill. 60605

Please mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 98E)

Finally, in June, 1926, Walsh alone was credited with writing the words and music of "The Prisoner's Sweetheart," a reply to the enormously popular "Prisoner's Song." It was sung by Charles Harrison on Diamond Disc 51735, issued in June, 1926, with a Vernon Dalhart version of "The Lightning Express" on the reverse side.

I never have found this record, but should like to. "The Prisoner's Sweetheart" also was recorded by Henry Burr for Victor and Franklyn Baur for Columbia.

One Arthur Walsh composition which few persons now living have heard is "Say It to the Ediphone," written in 1927 to commemorate the 50th anniversary of Edison's invention of the phonograph and as a means of publicizing the company's dictating machines. The composition was recorded on wax cylinders.

Jones and Hare recorded it for a Diamond Disc that was not sold to the public but sent only to Ediphone dealers. On the opposite face, Charles Edison gave a "sales pitch."

"Say It to the Ediphone" may be considered a rhymed history of the phonograph, beginning with its first words:

"'Kreusi, make this,' said Thomas Edison.
'And I'll record the human voice as soon as it is done.'"

John Kreusi was the mechanic who built the first tinfoil phonograph to Edison's specifications. I have seen only one copy of this record.

IV. Personal Friendship

My friendship by correspondence with Arthur Walsh began in 1933 when I wrote the first article about record collecting published by any nationally circulated American magazine, as far as I know.

The article was called "On the Trail of the Rare Record." It was published in the New York Herald Tribune Sunday Magazine (forerunner of "This Week"), syndicated to many Sunday newspapers throughout the country, and reprinted in abridged form by a Canadian publication, Magazine Digest.

Apparently, the late Mrs. William Brown Meloney, editor of the Herald-Tribune Magazine, had sent my manuscript to Edison headquarters to have it checked for accuracy, for I received a copy of a letter dated July 17, 1933, which Arthur Walsh had written to her.

Rather, it was "voicewritten by Ediphone." In part it read:

"I must apologize to you for holding up the attached article by Ulysses Walsh. My absence from the office during the past few weeks prevented me from going over the article until today. . . .

"I think Mr. Walsh has written a good article which should appeal to your readers and we do not find anything in the article that is not thoroughly O. K. Faithfully yours, Arthur Walsh."

The carbon copy was accompanied by a letter from Mr. Walsh, inviting me to "come in and see me whenever you are in Orange and let's find out if we are any kin."

After reading, late in 1943, that Walsh had been appointed a senator from New Jersey, I wrote an article for the "Observant Citizen" department of the Roanoke World-News, telling something of his remarkable career. I sent him a copy of the column, and on December 15 he replied, using senatorial stationery.

I'll quote the letter, first reminding you that "Ulysses" is the name my parents gave me, and "Jim" only a nickname I acquired later:

"Dear Cuzzin Ulysses:

"I have received several thousand letters and telegrams of congratulation, but not one that delighted me more than yours."

"Of course I have the happiest memories of my early association, and I hope we can play a return engagement together before long."

"The clipping from the Roanoke World-News is a WOW and I shall treasure it among my important souvenirs."

FAMOUS "TONE TEST" SINGERS—Arthur Walsh made transcontinental tours in 1915-16 with a number of noted Edison artists. Here are Christine Miller, popular concert contralto, left, and Marie Rappold, Metropolitan Opera soprano, right.

"I expect some new photographs next week and when they are received I shall consider it a privilege to autograph one to you.

"Thanks a million times for writing me, and every good wish in the world to you.

Sincerely,
"Arthur Walsh."

V. I Meet "Cuzzin Arthur"

The meeting for which Arthur Walsh and I had long been hoping did not take place until September 8, 1947, when I was on my way to Hempstead, N.Y., to attend one of the late John Bieling's parties for some of his fellow pioneer recording artists and a few of his record collecting friends. On the way, I stopped at West Orange and called on Art, with whom I had previously made an appointment.

An amusing thing occurred when I gave my name to the receptionist as Jim Walsh and told her I had an appointment with the other Mr. Walsh. She phoned to his office and was told he was expecting his "Cousin Ulysses" Walsh, but not anyone by the name of Jim. I hastily explained, and was soon shaking hands with Art.

His photographs, taken as a young man, had shown him as a slender and rather delicate featured, but the man I now saw had grown stout, had heavy jowls, and his voice was rather deep and husky. His manner was cordiality itself, but I thought he had an air of weariness and that he smiled and made himself seem jovial only by an effort.

I did not suspect that within a few months he would be dead of cancer, and I don't know whether he realized his condition. He made no reference to his health.

Instead, we talked about our ancestry and soon decided there was no evidence we were related even though we had the same last name. He was a Democrat and a Roman Catholic. I came from a family that was Republican and Protestant.

As far back — which isn't very far — as I have been able to trace my ancestry on both my mother and father's sides, I have found no trace of Catholic forbears, although, of course, all of us whose forefathers came from Europe must have had Catholic ancestors at some time or other.

Art's relatives had settled in the North. Mine all seemed to have headed South. But we agreed that our seeming lack of relationship wouldn't interfere with our continuing to be "cousins."

"Cousin Arthur" may not have had any idea that he was seriously ill, for he told me that he and a group of associates were planning to build a new radio station in Newark and that he would like to have my "Walsh's Wax Works" program, which I gave from WDBJ in Roanoke, Va., as a regular feature, "even though you can't come up here and we have to pick it up by wire."

This gave me hope of a real "break" for myself, but of course it was not to be, since Art died only a little more than three months later. The Associated Press reported death occurred in Memorial Hospital, New York.

The report quoted his brother, Frank E. Walsh, as saying the former senator underwent an abdominal operation December 8 for a growth which the family suspected was cancer, and that his widow had authorized an autopsy "because it might help others, something that Arthur always wanted to do."

And so, at the tragically early age of 51, ended the colorful life story of my friend and "cuzzin," Arthur Walsh. His name may not go down in history as a great violinist, for he seems to have been by instinct more a business man than a musician.

But he accomplished a great deal of lasting worth during the years he was allotted. I wish he had been spared and were still among us today. He would be 73 if he were living yet, and 73 isn't so old, as our generation reckons age!

Editor's Note: Readers of Jim Walsh's Department will be glad to know his cats will be looked after, during his hospital stay, by a friend.

(The End)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Making Doubles Out of Singles

By JIM WALSH

I. A Play At Matchmaking

Do not be misled by the heading into believing you're going to read something about tennis. Frankly and honestly, this article is merely a makeshift, contrived to fill space until I can do better.

As I mentioned in the January

HOBBIES, I have been in poor health for some time and, as I didn't mention then, I've had an operation and hospital stay, but am coming along fine.

I have not been able to find strength to continue my research on the series I began last year, "How to Tell When Victor Records Were Made." It looks now as if it will be a few months before I can return to my digging and delving and complete the job.

Meanwhile, "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists" must continue to appear, and I have tried to find for this month an interesting subject that would not require much research effort. I hope what I am writing will prove I have succeeded.

II. Turning Singles Into Doubles

Recently, I was amusing myself during one of my compulsory stays in bed by turning through the numerically arranged Victor record catalog for May, 1914, and was mildly surprised to find that, of the almost 6,000 single-faced 10-inch Black Label discs which had been issued from 1901 through 1913, only 58 remained in their original form. Many hundreds more had been coupled with other selections to make double-faced records, and several thousand had been cut out of the catalog.

I was surprised even more to find that, by a hurried count, there were 243 12-inch single-faced Black Labels still extant in 1914. (All, whether 10- or 12-inch, were discontinued when the 1920 catalog was printed.) It struck me I could have fun by trying to arrange those 58 straggling single-faces into doubles, with as appropriate combinations as possible.

I decided to undertake this, and, whenever feasible, to use the same artists on both sides. Not much investigation was required to learn it would be impossible to turn the 58 single-faces into 29 double-faces and have a suitable coupling for each.

Those remaining records — all of which must have been good sellers in single-faced form or they would not still have been hanging on in the catalog — were of such wide variety I quickly determined there would have to be some rather incongruous matings. But, I resolved to do my best and fill some HOBBIES space by publishing the results.

To begin with, I'll give the list as it appears in the 55-year-old catalog. To save space I'll shorten the frequently recurring Haydn Quartet to HQ; Sousa's Band to SB, and Pryor's Band to PB. Perhaps you might like to try your own skill at making doubles out of singles before going on to read how I handled the problem.

Now, here is the list:

- 114 Annie Laurie. HQ.
- 656 Carry Me Back to Old Virginny. HQ.
- 722 Jesus, Lover of My Soul. Trinity Choir.
- 1168 The Warblers' Serenade. SB.
- 1172 Hearts and Flowers—Intermezzo. SB.
- 1193 Liberty Bell March. SB.
- 1235 My Country 'Tis of Thee. Victor Male Chorus.
- 1258 Anvil Chorus—"Il Trovatore." Victor Male Chorus.
- 1416 Medley of Plantation Songs. HQ.
- 1833 In the Good Old Summer Time. SB.
- 1997 My Old Kentucky Home. HQ.
- 2512 Heidelberg—"Prince of Pilsen." HQ.
- 2518 Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep. HQ.
- 2787 Star Spangled Banner. PB.
- 2813 Old Folks at Home. HQ.
- 2895 Vice-Admiral Quadrille—Third Figure. Dance Orchestra.
- 2896 Vice-Admiral Quadrille—Fourth Figure. Dance Orchestra.
- 2929 Where the Sunset Turns the Ocean's Blue to Gold. Harry Macdonough.
- 4116 Amour et Printemps Waltz. Garde Republicaine Band.

OLD-TIME RECORDING ARTISTS—And here is a 1916 page of sheet music, containing the photo of Maurice Burkhart who suggested the title of "Maybe You Think I'm Happy" to its composer, "Wolfie" Gilbert.

Burkhart, now dead, was a vaudeville singer of dialect songs and for a brief period was recording partner of the still living Walter Van Brunt. An account of Burkhart's latter life, after he gave up vaudeville and recording, would make interesting reading.

Admiral Evans and the Victor

"Fighting Bob" Evans

GALLANT "SEA DOG"—Admiral Robley D. Evans made a Victor record of his "Farewell Address to the Navy" when he retired. Jim Walsh has coupled it with "Auld Lang Syne," by Frank C. Stanley. This illustration is taken from the back cover of the Victor record supplement for December, 1908.

- 4160 The Star Spangled Banner. Frank C. Stanley.
- 4181 Cavalleria Rusticana—Intermezzo. Victor Orchestra.
- 4200 National Songs of Holland. PB.
- 4201 Spanish Patriotic Airs. PB.
- 4221 Patriotic Songs of Wales. SB.
- 4222 Patriotic Song of Poland. Victor Orchestra.
- 4223 National Air of Bohemia. Victor Orchestra.
- 4312 Sylvia Ballet—Valse Lente. PB.
- 4314 Rakoczy March—Hungarian Air. PB.
- 4328 Auld Lang Syne. Frank C. Stanley.
- 4351 Peer Gynt Suite, No. 1, Part IV. PB.
- 4418 The Whistler and His Dog. Pryor's Orchestra.
- 4643 Serenata—Serenade (Schubert) Spanish. Carlos Francisco.
- 4648 Dance of the Song Birds. Victor Orchestra.
- 4676 The Rosary. Alan Turner.
- 4737 Armorer's Song—from "Robin Hood." Eugene Cowles.
- 4796 Sweet and Low. Lyric Quartet.
- 4845 Traumerel. Cello solo by Victor Sorlin.
- 5333 Barcarolle—"Contes d'Hoffman." Victor Orchestra.

Collector's Item — Limited Edition

EDNA WHITE — Trumpet Virtuoso

12" L.P. record
Selections made in 1921-'57
"SOUND OF THE TRUMPET"

Debutante (Clark) - Civil War Medley - Then You'll Remember Me - Sweet Genevieve - Carnival of Venice - Intermezzo

$10 prepaid

CHANDLER

73 James St., Greenfield, Mass. 01301
See articles about Edna White in Jim Walsh's Dept., May, June, July, 1966. my07

Antique

MUSIC BOX SPECIALISTS

(Estab. Switzerland 1825)

Complete Repair Service - All Types

All Work Guaranteed

Finest Instruments Bought & Sold

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave., Pelham, N.Y. 10803

- 5393 Angel's Serenade (Braga). Victor Sorlin.
- 5540 The Labor Question. William J. Bryan.
- 5554 Rise and Progress of the Negro. William H. Taft.
- 5557 Our Foreign Dependencies. W. H. Taft.
- 5558 Irish Humor. W. H. Taft.
- 5614 B.P.O.E. (Elks' Song). Nat. M. Wills.
- 5632 Farewell Address to the Navy. Admiral Robley D. Evans.
- 5680 Akahi Hoi—Hawaiian. Genevra Johnstone-Bishop.
- 5681 Cyrano de Bergerac—"Non Merel." Recitation in French by Ralph Herz.
- 5688 Men of Harlech. (Welsh.) Mountain Ash Party.
- 5689 Soldiers' Chorus from "Faust." Mountain Ash Party.
- 5754 Barcarolle—Les Contes d'Hoffman. Vienna Quartet.
- 5843 Let Me Stay and Live in Dixieland. Elizabeth Erice and Charles King.
- 5847 That's Ever Loving Love. Erice & King.
- 5854 King of the Bungalows. Gene Greene.
- 5863 I Know a Bank. Elizabeth Wheeler and Marguerite Dunlap.
- 5864 O Wert Thou in the Cauld Blast. Wheeler and Dunlap.
- 5867 Carmen—Vocal Waltz. Lyric Quartet.
- 5869 Estudiantina Waltz. Lyric Quartet.
- 5871 Natoma—Vaquero's Song. Earl Cartwright & Victor Opera Company.

III. Arranging the Couplings

Deciding on combinations for some of the records proved a "snap," though it was impossible to mate others to my satisfaction. And, after I finally had decided on a set of 29 double-faced records, I encountered a mystery that made me almost frantic with bewilderment, and which for a day or two I could not solve.

Repeated counting indicated un-
(Continued on page 53)

EMINENT BASSO-COMPOSER — Eugene Cowles (1860-1948), famous basso of the Bostonians Opera Company, is represented in the 1914 Victor single-faced record list by "The Armorer's Song" from "Robin Hood." Cowles is remembered best today as the composer of "Forgotten," which he sang for Victor and Edison.

FOR SALE

Hurdy-Gurdy

In excellent condition. Two cylinders with six songs on each. One Thousand dollars or better offer. Including crating and shipping.

Box No. M.R.I.

c/o HOBBIES

1006 So. Michigan, Chicago, Ill. 60605

jlvc

WANTED FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on

ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- * COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- * VICTOR, red seal, single - faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- * INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO. Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- * FOREIGN LABELS such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G.&T. etc.
- * "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts. Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla,

New York

tfx

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

tlc

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 37)

mistakably that there were only 58 single-faced records — 34 on one page of the Victor catalog and 24 on the next. But, after I had coupled 58, I still had Frank C. Stanley's version of "Auld Lang Syne" drooping dismally without a mate.

"How on earth," I asked myself, "could I have an odd number left out of an even number of records?" Repeated checking finally revealed that I had coupled President Taft's amusing little talk on "Irish Humor," with two discs: Bryan's "Labor Question," and Admiral Evans' "Farewell Address to the Navy."

I, then, solved this problem by combining the Taft talk with Bryan's Labor oration, and — very appropriately, I think — by coupling the Admiral's farewell speech with Stanley's "Auld Lang Syne," which, until I made the change, stood alone in the world.

I had no trouble whatever in deciding to unite the Haydn Quartet's "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny" and "Medley of Plantation Songs." I debated briefly about whether I should combine the Victor Male Chorus' rendition of "America" with one of the versions of "The Star Spangled Banner," but decided it would be better to let the male chorus offerings stay together.

I didn't like to join together vocal and instrumental numbers, but there seemed nothing else to do with those classic "sob" pieces, "Hearts and Flowers" and "The Rosary."

"Jesus, Lover of My Soul" was a hard one, because it was the only outright, unabashed gospel hymn of the lot, but I decided that "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep" has a devotional theme running through it, and both songs are concerned with perils at sea, so they might as well join labels.

I have been wondering whether the Mountain Ash Party's "Men of Harlech" should not have been doubled with "Patriotic Song of Wales." But, they're probably the same thing in different forms, and I decided I'd rather have this Welsh singing group on both sides than to combine them with Sousa's Band.

"Where the Sunset Turns" wasn't an easy one, but I, at length, ruled

RUBIE KOHL ANTIQUES

2424 N.E. 22nd Street
Pompano Beach, Fla. 33062

STERLING SILVER FLATWARE— MATCHING SERVICE

Hard-to-find—obsolete, inactive & active patterns of all American Silversmiths. Over 400 patterns to select from. List your wants with us. If we do not have it, we will try to get it for you. If pattern is unknown, make a pencil sketch of the pattern and the maker's mark. We buy STERLING — Write or ship. If you accept our price we will mail you a check immediately. If not, we ship at our expense. Stamped envelope for reply. Go

FAVORITE VAUDEVILLIAN—This amusing picture, on the front page of a piece of sheet music, shows Gene Greene, once popular comedian, whose greatest hit, "The King of the Bungaloos," was on a single-faced Victor record.

Notice that Greene's last name is mis-spelled here, also that another recording artist, the late Maurice Burkhardt, was credited with suggesting the title to the composer of the song, L. Wolfe Gilbert, who is living and active still.

it would go as well with "Heidelberg" as with anything else. There was no effort required to decide the two Brice and King duets should go together, and that "The Armorer's Song" and "The Vaquero's Song," should hit it off. Similarly, the two 'cello solos by Victor Sorlin should be paired.

Which reminds me that until recently I have never known anything about Sorlin except that he had been a member of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, but now I have come across a copy of the Voice of the Victor for January, 1913, which reveals that this accomplished 'cellist died almost 57 years ago. I'll quote the death notice for the benefit of the many record collectors who admire Victor Sorlin:

"It is with the utmost regret that we inform our readers of the death of Victor E. Sorlin, the distinguished 'cellist. An acute attack of pneumonia was the cause of his death, which occurred November 20th (1912) at his New York home, 77 W. 68th Street.

"Mr. Sorlin was born in Worcester, Mass., 34 years ago. He was connected at different times with several of the largest symphony orchestras of the country. He was also a member of the Mendelssohn Trio, which for several years gave chamber concerts at the Hotel Majestic, and more recently he had conducted an agency for artists.

"Mr. Sorlin's 'cello records are an eloquent tribute to his technical skill and to the intelligence which actuated it. Through them he has reached a much wider public than was ever within hearing of the instrument which grew so eloquent under his fingers. Thousands of persons to whom "Victor Sorlin" was only a name will learn with regret that the ultimate accident has overtaken him."

(Continued on page 98J)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 53)

There is no need of going into further detail concerning the other choices I made. It was hard to find satisfactory couplings among the "national airs" series, and when I came to Herz's French recitation and Madame Johnstone-Bishop's Hawaiian record — the only one in the list — I simply threw up my hands and united this disparate couple until death should them part.

So, now, let's go down the line and see what double-faced couplings I effected. (I wonder, by the way, who did decide on the Victor combinations and whether an individual or a committee made the decision on which records should be cut out?)

Names of artists won't be mentioned except in the few instances where there was more than one offering of the same selection. We'll start numbering them at 6000.

- 6000 Annie Laurie/Sweet and Low.
- 6001 Carry Me Back to Old Virginny/Medley of Plantation Songs.
- 6002 Jesus, Lover of My Soul/Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep.
- 6003 Warblers' Serenade/Dance of the Song Birds.
- 6004 Hearts and Flowers/The Rosary.
- 6005 Liberty Bell March/Patriotic Song of Wales.
- 6006 My Country 'Tis of Thee/Anvil Chorus.
- 6007 In the Good Old Summer Time/Whistler and His Dog.
- 6008 My Old Kentucky Home/Old Folks at Home.
- 6009 Heidelberg/Where the Sunset Turns.
- 6010 Star Spangled Banner (Pryor's Band)/Star Spangled Banner (Stanley).
- 6011 Vice-Admiral Quadrille—Third and Fourth Figures.
- 6012 Amour et Printemps Waltz/Barcarolle (Vienna Q.L.).
- 6013 Cavalleria Rusticana Intermezzo Barcarolle (Victor Orchestra).
- 6014 National Songs of Holland/National Air of Bohemia.
- 6015 Spanish Patriotic Airs/Patriotic Song of Poland.
- 6016 Sylvia Ballet/Peer Gynt Suite.
- 6017 Rakoczy March/Schubert's Serenade. (I grimace at this one!)
- 6018 Auld Lang Syne/Farewell Address to the Navy.
- 6019 Armorer's Song/Vaquero's Song.
- 6020 Traumerl/Angel's Serenade.
- 6021 Labor Question/Irish Humor.
- 6022 Rise and Progress of the Negro/Our Foreign Dependencies.
- 6023 B.P.O.E./King of the Bungaloes.
- 6024 Akahi Hoi/Cyrano de Bergerac.
- 6025 Men of Harlech/Soldiers' Chorus.
- 6026 Let Me Live and Stay in Dixieland/That's Ever Loving Love.
- 6027 I Know a Bank/O Wert Thou in the Cauld Blast.
- 6028 Carmen/Estudiantina.

So there they are! Fifty-eight ancient Victor single-faced records combined into 29 appropriate, or not so appropriate, doubles! I'll be glad to hear from anyone who tackles this job and arrives at any markedly different conclusions from my own.

In the meantime, I rejoice that I have filled my space for the July HOBBIES.

LEO KAPLAN

3 Chelsea Road

New Rochelle, N. Y. 10805

Phone: 914 — 235-5118

PAPERWEIGHT COLLECTORS

D'ALBRET: Beautiful new MacArthur, $62; Leonardo DaVinci, $62; King of Sweden, $55; John F. & Jacqueline Kennedy, $59; F. D. Roosevelt, $55. Also, complete series available, including first overlay. Inquire.

BACCARAT: Good selection of regulars and overlays, including one-of-a-kind and first experimental Eisenhower.

ST. LOUIS: Coronation, 1967 Bi-centennial Commemorative, fruit & flower weights of the 1950's.

Large selection of weights by Charles Kazlun and Paul Ysart.

New PERTSHIRE crown weight, limited edition of 350.

Perfume bottle and large decanter w. Kazlun rose stoppers. White friars taperstick with laticinio stem and millefiori base.

We buy and sell Russian enamel & porcelain, and Swedish enamel, and are always in the market for a piece or an entire collection.

AUDREY DICKERSON, Antiques

Rt. 2, Box 26 (Chandler Hwy.)

Tyler, Texas 75701

Appointment Only

Phone: H. H. Dickerson (214) — 592-7639

1. Wedgwood Cheese Dish, 8 3/4" diam., 7" t., light blue with embossing of winged children and Grecian columns. $100.
2. Limoges Chocolate Pot, white background with peach colors and applied gold decor. as found on Sevres porcelain. $67.50.
3. Beaut. Jardiniere (not marked, but looks like fine Haviland). Stands on scrolled feet. Shape very unusual. $45.
4. Pair Robin-egg Blue Cloisonne Vases, 12" t., 4" diam. Very pretty, pictured with crane-like birds and flower sprays in subdued pastels. $295.
5. Art-Glass Vase, blue with amber applied tall feet and other applications of amber on sides. Very, very good buy at $150.
6. Collection of Shoes from $1 to $100 each. Some very rare, French Bisques, Porcelains, many with portraits, etc. For sale as collection or piece.
7. Two very fine enameled Boxes (not sg'd., either French or Russian enamel). One yellow with orig. tufted lining. One French blue, lining done recently. Write for color photo and price.
8. Three Dolls, two large, one medium size, in German Bisque. Dressed very nicely. $325 special price or will sell separately.
9. Large collection Pitchers, including 15 to 20 pieces copper lustre. Write for price.
10. Extremely old piece Sevres Porcelain. Lady seated at Poudre Table with mirror being coiffured by another lady. Write for color photo and price.
11. Large collection English Silver, Enameled Spoons (18 with handles done in relief, very unusual). Will sell as collection or $9.50 ea.
12. Collection of Carnival (90 or more pieces), assorted colors and designs. Sold as collection only. Write for price.

Mint condition unless otherwise stated. 90-day Layaway (no refund on merchandise returned to stock). Color photo $1 (refundable if purchased). No C.O.D. orders (include 3% tax; dealers furnish tax exemption number). Furnish stamped, self-addressed envelope with requests for photo or other information, collect calls not accepted. Goods shipped insured via express, bus or p.p., collect. jlyc

(Continued from back cover)

EDWARD G. WILSON

1802 Chestnut Street
Philadelphia, Pa.

form of a Fish. (25 available.) Sold individually. $3 each.

ADDITIONAL SILVER

31. Set of 6 ornate Sterling Berry Forks. $30 set.
32. Set of 12 beaded edge Sterling Parfalt Spoons, monogrammed. $90 doz.
33. Set of 12 Sterl. Tiffany Oyster Forks, Monogrammed. Plain pointed tip handle similar to Pointed Antique pattern. $72 doz.
34. Set of 11 Sterling ornate, monogrammed, Oyster Forks. $55 set.
35. Set of 6 Solid Silver Ice Tea Spoons. Oriental origin. Bowls formed by flowers. Handles in form of bamboo shafts. At the tip of each Spoon is a different Oriental item (i.e., Buddha, Rickshaw, Tea Pot, etc.) $36 set.
36. Dozen unusual Coin Silver Ice Cream Spoons with gilded bowls. Finely engraved pattern & monogrammed. $90 dozen.
37. An unique Dozen of Gorham Sterling Oyster Forks. Ornate with a fisherman embossed on the handle. $72 doz.

CHINA, GLASS & MISC.

38. Rose Medallion Tea Pot. $95.
39. Fine Lowestoft Tea Pot. $300.
40. Pink Lustre Creamer with figures of Hope & Faith on the sides. $27.50.
41. Early Blue & White Delft Ginger Jar with dog finial on the lid. 7 1/2". $95.
42. FEWTER CHARGER: Late 18th Century. 15" diameter. Worn marks. $75.
43. FEWTER CHARGER: Late 18th Century. 18 1/4" diameter. Worn English mark. $145.
44. FEWTER partial Tea Service. 2 Pots (coffee & tea) plus covered sugar bowl. Both pots are signed by J. D. Locke, New York. $375.
45. Choice dozen Red and encrusted Gold Rhine Wines. Tall and graceful. $360 dozen.

COMIC SONG HERO—In the days when single-face records predominated, a very popular song was "Peter Piper." It told the story of a small boy who cheerfully admitted he was a dunce.

It was sung by Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan. An even more popular version was a banjo solo by Vess L. Ossman. Its composer, S. R. Henry (Henry R. Stern) died only two or three years ago.

This drawing, pictured here from a 1905 Busy Bee cylinder record catalog, gives the famous cartoonist, Jimmy Swinnerton's conception of Peter Piper who "only grinned when people said all he did was sleep and eat." Swinnerton drew the "Little Jimmy" comic strip that was popular for many years.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Artist Who Sang in Choruses of Edison Amberol Cylinders

By JIM WALSH

I. Cylinder Records

Propped up in bed, with a portable typewriter across my knees, it occurs to me that I have devoted so much space during the past year to discussing Victor recordings that I should give the devotees of Edison cylinders a break by allotting one of these fill-in articles to them. And I think I have found a good subject.

Frequently, I have had letters from Edison cylinder owners, asking who assisted the soloists in records contained in their collections. Much of the time I have been able to give this information, but sometimes I haven't depending on whether the monthly Edison record lists and copies of the New Phonogram identified ensemble members.

Such information rarely is asked for about the Standard cylinders, because a 2-minute record was so short there was seldom any need for a chorus to reinforce the star performer and help fill up space.

When the 4-minute Amberols were introduced in November, 1908, however, the situation changed. More and more it was found that the soloist should have help to give variety to the record and keep it from becoming too monotonous, and increasingly other Edison singers were called on to assist.

The use of choruses seems to have reached its peak in 1911. A great many male or mixed choruses also were used in the indestructible Blue Amberols that were introduced in October, 1912, and, equally, of course, a large number of the Amberols were taken over into the Blue Amberol list. With an eye to space limitations, however, neither the 2-minute nor the Blue Amberol cylinders will be discussed in this article.

II. That Popular Premier Quartet

After the "soloist with chorus" system became well established, the Edison recording department used its artists the way an old-fashioned stock company of the legitimate stage operated. The star of one record would be found more or less contentedly singing in the chorus of another issued in the same supplement.

Billy Murray, the most popular of all Edison singers, for example, probably sang in the choruses of more than half the Amberols and Blue Amberols issued from 1908 until he became exclusive to Victor late in 1920.

The reason for Murray's frequent appearance was this: In 1909 he signed a contract restricting his services to Edison, Victor, and Victor's subsidiary label, Zonophone. The male quartet, which nearly all collectors of old "popular" records know well as the American on Victor and the Premier on Edison, had just been organized, and two of its other members — John Bieling, first tenor, and William F. Hooley, bass — also entered into joint Victor-Edison contracts.

The fourth member, Steve Porter, baritone, continued to "free-lance" and be paid by the "date," and it was a source of worry to Steve when Murray was late, as he sometimes was, for recording engagements. Occasionally he forgot them altogether, and Walter Van Brunt, a tenor with a voice much like his, was substituted in his place.

Porter had a habit of wringing his hands when he was worried, and the late John Bieling told me that when Murray didn't appear at the agreed on time, Steve would begin to wring his hands and say:

EARLY PHOTO OF COMEDIENNE—This photo of the beloved Ada Jones recently was discovered by Thomas Pollard of Soquel, Calif. It was taken in Chicago, probably in or around 1897, when Miss Jones was about 24. Although she had made test records, her recording career proper did not begin until 1904.
—Photo by Moflett, Chicago, Ill.

"Oh, oh, oh, I wish that Lord-blessed Murray would hurry up!"

Then Steve would turn to Bieling and Hooley and say:

"You fellows are doing all right! You've got a contract and you get paid whether you work or not! You get yours regardless. But I don't get mine till I make it!"

The quartet's being under yearly contract was largely responsible for its being assigned to sing in so many choruses.

Because the Premier Quartet pops up so often in chorus singing, I'm going to conserve space by omitting records in which Ada Jones, Billy Murray, Walter Van Brunt, and Will Oakland were assisted by a male chorus.

Murray, as we know, was the leader of the overworked foursome. Van Brunt sometimes substituted for him. Ada Jones was Billy's duet partner and naturally depended on his quartet when she needed chorus help. And Oakland seldom, if ever, worked with any other group.

Actually, the Premier Quartet, with Oakland added, was known as the Heidelberg Quintet. So if you have a record represented to be by any of (Continued on page 98L)

FAMOUS COUNTERTENOR AND QUARTET—The late Will Oakland (center) is shown here with the Grenadiers Quartet, which sang with him at his Will Oakland's Terrace night club. The picture was made in 1932.

Oakland often had the assistance of the Premier Quartet in his Edison Amberol records. When the five were not called "Will Oakland and Chorus" they were known as the Heidelberg Quintet.

SHEET MUSIC

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850. Catalog 25c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver, Colorado 80205 o12698

SHEET MUSIC: Old popular, 250,000 songs. A-Z. No list yet. — Robert Greenlaw, Room 412, 307 No. Rampart Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif. 90026. d6276

SHEET MUSIC, choose from thousands of popular, late 1800s to date. We also buy. — McNeill, 1117 South Taylor Ave., Oak Park, Ill. 60304 s3863

Collector's Item — Limited Edition
EDNA WHITE — Trumpet Virtuoso

12" L.P. record
Selections made in 1921-'57
"SOUND OF THE TRUMPET"

Debutante (Clark) - Civil War Medley - Then You'll Remember Me - Sweet Genevieve - Carnival of Venice - Intermezzo

$10 prepaid

CHANDLER

73 James St., Greenfield, Mass. 01301
See articles about Edna White in Jim Walsh's Dept., May, June, July, 1966. my07

Antique MUSIC BOX SPECIALISTS

(Estab. Switzerland 1828)

Complete Repair Service - All Types

All Work Guaranteed

Finest Instruments Bought & Sold

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave., Pelham, N.Y. 10803 tfe

WANTED FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on

ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single - faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G.&T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.

Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla,

New York tfs

FOR SALE

One of the finest Edisons ever offered, combination machine model K. In excellent condition with 25 records. $250.

R. L. JEFFERIES

Harrisonburg, Va.

Phone 434-2797

or write to Box 165, Harrisonburg aum

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island tfo

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 37)

these singers and a male chorus you can be virtually certain the ensemble is the Premier Quartet.

To conserve space further, in referring to the quartet, I shall abbreviate its name to P. Qt. I also shall give the names of the personnel of a few relatively unknown quartets who made one or more Amberol cylinders, as well as the members of other miscellaneous groups. The listings will be in numerical order, and necessarily will omit records with choruses about which I have no reliable information.

III. List of Chorus Records

- 3 Lucia Sextet. Marie Stoddart, soprano; Margaret Keyes, contralto; Harry Anthony (John Young) and George M. Stricklett, tenors; James F. Harrison (Frederick Wheeler), baritone, and George H. Bemus, bass.
- 24 Sword of Bunker Hill. Anthony. Harrison, Stricklett, and Gus Reed, bass. (Knickerbocker Quartet.)
- 63 Elks' Minstrels. Billy Murray, Edward Meeker, Steve Porter, Anthony, and Ada Jones. Eugene A. Jaudas was musical director.
- 79 Battle Hymn of the Republic. Elise Stevenson and Frank C. Stanley, assisted by Edith Chapman, soprano; Mary Jordan, contralto, Anthony and Harrison.
- 119 Casting Bread Upon the Waters. Empire Vaudeville Company (Edward M. Favor, Edith Sinclair Favor, and Porter.)
- 207 Lily of the Prairie. Pete Murray and P. Qt.
- 317 Paddy Duffy's Cart. Favor and P. Qt.
- 431 Characteristic Negro Medley. Peerless Quartet — Billy Murray, Albert Campbell, Arthur Collins, and Frank C. Stanley. This record is listed because Murray was substituted for Irving Gillette (Henry Burr), presumably because of his greater facility with Negro dialect comedy. It is, so far as I know, the only Peerless Quartet record in which Burr did not sing.
- 447 Red Clover. Frederic H. Potter and P. Qt.
- 457 Patriotic Songs of America. New York Military Band with P. Qt., and Inez Barbour, soprano.
- 465 Favorite Airs from "The Mikado." Edith Chapman, soprano; Edna Stearns, contralto; Anthony and Porter.
- 471 Mrs. Clancey's Boarding House. Empire Vaudeville Company, Porter, Meeker, Murray and Bieling.
- 506 Rescued from the Flames. Len Spencer and P. Qt.
- 512 Carry Me Back to Old Virginny. P. Qt. and Inez Barbour.
529. Mama's Boy. Len Spencer, assisted by his daughter, Myrtle Spencer, Ada Jones, Clarence Rockefeller, Steve Porter and P. Qt.
- 541 Red Wing. Potter and P. Qt.
- 552 A Cowboy's Romance. Spencer and P. Qt.
- 562 Valley Flower. Potter and P. Qt.
- 570 Man in the Silvery Moon. Helen Clark and P. Qt.
- 572 Uncle Tom's Cabin — Entrance of Topsy. Len Spencer, with Ethel Harboro, Myrtle Spencer, Ada Jones, and Vess L. Ossman and George and Audley Dudley, banjoists.
- 643 Somewhere. Irving Gillette and Peerless Quartet — Gillette, Campbell, Collins, and Stanley. As the Peerless was not under contract, it got little work compared to the Premiers.
- 654 Little Annie Rooney, Arthur Clough and P. Qt.
- 674 Let Me Live and Stay in Dixieland. Billy Murray, P. Qt. and Elizabeth Spencer.
- 685 Mother Goose Days (also called Jack and Jill Medley). Murray, Hooley, Jones, Anthony, Elizabeth Spencer and P. Qt.
- 700 Uncle Fritz's Birthday. Len Spencer, assisted by Pete Lamar, yodeler, Ada Jones, Myrtle Spencer, Master John Berkes, "and other children," names not given.
- 718 Down at Finnegan's Jamboree. Charles D'Almaine, violinist, assisted by Jones, Porter, Meeker, and George Werner.
- 730 Harp That Once Thro' Tara's Halls. Gillette with Peerless Qt.
- 755 By the Saskatchewan. Frederick Weld, baritone, assisted by Elizabeth Spencer, Cornelia Marvin, Anthony, and Hooley. Though never a leading recording artist, Weld made a few records for both Edison

GREAT TENOR'S GRANDSON—Walter Van Brunt (later known as Walter Scanlan) sometimes was termed "The Boy Wonder" after he became a recording star in 1908 at the age of 16.

Shown above is his grandson, "Jeff" Kerekes of Magnolia, Ohio. Jeff is following the example of Van Brunt, still living at 77, who was Thomas A. Edison's favorite tenor. Jeff has won a local reputation as a singer and made a number of recordings. His mother, Mrs. Ruth Kerekes, was Van Brunt's youngest daughter.

- and Columbia. In the reprint of a 1907 Columbia poster which accompanies this article he is the man on the extreme right of the seventh row. The poster, possibly the only one of its kind in existence, was sent to me more than 30 years ago by the late Walter Forbush, for many years a Columbia recording expert. Many of the men and women shown on it also made records for Edison, Victor, Zonophone, Leeds, and most of the other companies of more than 60 years ago.
- 770 I Want Everyone to Love Me. Anna Chandler, comedienne, and P. Qt.
- 775 Any Girl Looks Good in Summer. Walter Van Brunt, with P. Qt. and Elizabeth Spencer.
- 780 Down in Sunshine Valley. Manuel Romain, tenor, with Bieling, Van Brunt, Porter, and Hooley. This looks like one of the times Walter filled in for Murray. Van Brunt (also known as Walter Scanlan) is still living, at 77, in an Ohio convalescent home. He was only 19 when this record was made.
- 784 When I'm Alone I'm Lonesome. Chandler and P. Qt.
- 787 Let's Make Love Among the Roses. Clough and P. Qt.
- 788 The Vacant Chair. Elizabeth Spencer, Mary Jordan, Anthony, and Harrison.
- 792 I Like the Hat, I Like the Dress, and I Like the Girl That's In It. Edward M. Favor and P. Qt.
- 802 Light Up Your Face With a Smile. Van Brunt and P. Qt.
- 810 Under Southern Skies. Romain and P. Qt.
- 823 Dream Faces. Elizabeth Spencer, with Van Brunt, Anthony, Harrison, and Hooley.
- 825 The Old Town is Looking Mighty Good Tonight. Van Brunt, P. Qt. and Elizabeth Spencer.
- 831 The Owl in the Old Oak Tree. "That Girl Quartet" — Harriet Keyes and Allie Thomas, sopranos, and Presis Thompson, and Helen Summers, contraltos.
- 843 Pinafore Airs Number 3. Elizabeth Spencer, Jordan, Anthony, Van Brunt, Harrison, and Hooley. Three other "Pinafore" medleys were made, with presumably about the same group.
- 876 Music Caressing of Violins. Elizabeth Spencer and Anthony, assisted by Mary Jordan.
- 925 Inflammatus from "Stabat Mater."

Agnes Kimball, with Elizabeth Spencer, Nevada Van Der Veer, Reed Miller, and Frank Croxton.

- 929 Twenty-third Psalm and Lord's Prayer. Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church Choir — Mary Hissam De Moss, soprano; Cornelia Marvin, contralto; Edward Strong, tenor, and Frederic L. Martin, bass.
- 941 Pussy's in the Well. Manhattan Ladies' Quartet — Irene Cummings and Mabel Meade Davis, sopranos, and Annie Laurie McCorkle and Anna Winkoop, contraltos.
- 956 By the Light of the Jungle Moon. Van Brunt, with Elizabeth Spencer, Elsie Baker, Anthony, and Croxton.
- 998 When I was 21 and You were Sweet 16. Joseph A. Phillips, with Elizabeth Spencer and P. Qt.
- 1023 They Gotta Quit Kickin' My Dawg Around. Byron G. Harlan and P. Qt.
- 1058 O Gladsome Light and Lord's Prayer. Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church Choir. Same artists as for 929.

So there they are. I wish I could give the names of the chorus singers in many other records for which this information was omitted in the lists.

One thing that annoys me is the knowledge that I have seen a listing of an Edison cylinder — an Amberol, I think, in which Bert Fitzgibbons, the old-time vaudeville comedian and song writer, was a member of the chorus, but while doing research for this article I have been unable to find what it was. If I come across the information later, I'll add it as a post-script.

(The End)

— O —

CHIP JENKINS DIES

I am sure that pet lovers who saw the picture of "Chip," beloved cat of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Jenkins of Rose Hill, Va., in the November, 1968, HOBBIES, will join me in grief at his death last March 5 after more than a month's illness. Chip was an ardent admirer of Prof. Plum Duff Walsh, Ph.D., and the picture showed him with a banner reading "Plum Walsh for President." (Plum, who lisps, always referred to him as "Tip Denkins.") Chip was a cat of unusually sweet personality and high intelligence, and, although he lived only a little more than a year, he never will be forgotten and his memory always will be cherished by those who knew and loved him. —J.W.

— O —

ALLEN KOENIGSBERG'S EXCELLENT REPRINTS

Allen Koenigsberg of 1532 Ocean Ave., Brooklyn, N.Y. 11230, is continuing to issue reprints of phonograph catalogs and other rarities related to recorded music that are the finest I ever have seen.

To me the best of a fine lot is the beautiful copy of the 1909 Babson Brothers catalog of Edison cylinder machines. It contains 16 9- by 11-inch pages and the color work is so fine it would be virtually impossible to detect the copy from an original in new condition.

The catalog is amusing because the compiler of the catalog seems to have made many misstatements, such as its assertion that Edison wax 2-minute cylinders would "last forever," and its praise of Edison pipe

(Turn to page 98K)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

A Meeting with Tiny Tim

By JIM WALSH

PART I

I. A Real Dickens Character

It's strange how things work out, sometimes.

During all my life, from the time I reached the age of nine, Charles Dickens has been my favorite author. I suppose I must have read each of his books at least three dozen times. But never, while this reading was going on, did it occur to me that some day I would meet a namesake of one of Dickens' most famous characters, "Tiny Tim," and come to regard him as a dear friend.

Actually, when I first learned of the present-day singing star, "Tiny Tim" through the pages of Time and Newsweek, nothing would have surprised me more than to be told that within little more than a year I would go to Chicago especially to meet him and talk about our favorite Pioneer Recording Artists.

I had no idea Tim (from here on I'll cease to enclose his assumed name in quotation marks) had ever heard of me, much less that he had been for many years an enthusiastic reader of my HOBBIES articles and that he attributed much of the inspiration of his night club and television act to ideas he derived from my writings.

This article will be devoted primarily to an account of my meeting with Tiny Tim, so I shall not rehash in detail information that already has been published about him from one end of the land to the other.

Most of Tim's admirers know his real name is Herbert Khaury; that he was born and grew up in a New York tenement area; that he is of Lebanese descent on his father's side and Polish-Jewish on his mother's, and that, before adopting his present stage name, he appeared, without much success, under the pseudonyms of "Texarkanna Tex," "Emmett Swink," "Vernon Castle," "Darry Dover," and "Judas K. Foxglove."

He, of course, has undergone a great deal of ridicule from critics because of his long hair, his singing in a falsetto voice, his prominent nose, his eccentric costumes, and his carrying a ukelele in a shopping bag.

I didn't discuss with him anything having to do with his financial affairs, but the Chicago newspapers have said that last year was the first in which he made more than $50 a week. According to these papers, he earned more than half a million dollars in 1968, and was said to be receiving $25,000 a week for a two-week engagement at the Sherman House's College Inn, besides having free use of a hotel suite.

So it seems that, after years of being kicked around and thrown out of night clubs and other places where he sought engagements, Tim's genuine talent is paying off at last and his feet are planted firmly on the road to success.

II. A Meeting By Telephone

That will suffice for background. My first "contact" with Tiny Tim came, not when I met him in Chicago, but one morning in the autumn of 1968 when I found a telegram in my post office box. It asked me to call him by telephone, collect, at his Hollywood address and give him information about the famous tenor, Byron G. Harlan, whose records were huge sellers from 1899 through 1924.

Swallowing my initial surprise at the entertainer's wanting to talk with me, I put in the call and soon was speaking with Tim. My first impression was that his natural speaking voice is much deeper than it sounds on TV.

My second was that he was one of the most courteous persons with whom I ever had conversed. He called me "Mr. Walsh" throughout our talk of more than an hour, although he would have been perfectly welcome to refer to me as "Jim," just as I spoke to him familiarly as "Tim." And the sincerity and gratitude with which he received the information I gave him about Harlan was unmistakable.

CONGENIAL TRIO. "Tiny Tim" and his guests obviously were having a good time when this picture was taken May 24 in his suite in the Sherman House, Chicago. Besides Tim, shown strumming his ukulele, the cast of characters includes Jim Walsh, author of "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists," and Stephanie Muller, Queen of the Chicago Antiques Exposition, which was sponsored by HOBBIES in the Conrad Hilton Hotel.

Occasionally, when some of the things I said astonished him he exclaimed "Wow!" or "Bro-ther!" These exclamations he used dozens of times when we had our informal discussion session in Chicago.

Tim explained he was searching for the February and March, 1943, issues of HOBBIES as they contained a biographical sketch I had written of Harlan. Tim later obtained them through HOBBIES' help. He also wanted to find Harlan's 1899 Edison brown-wax cylinder of a "Gay Nineties" tear-jerking song, "Please, Mr. Conductor, Don't Put Me Off the Train."

I told Tim I used to own a copy of the record (a copy of which he has since acquired) but I hadn't been able to find it in recent years and had no idea what had happened to it. But, I said, I well could recall Harlan's high-pitched spoken announcement at the beginning: "'Please, Mistah Con-duc-tah, Don't Put Me Off the Train!' Sung by Byron G. Harlan. Edison Rec-CORD!"

It seemed to astonish Tim when I said Harlan had been known much better as a comedian who specialized in "rube" and blackfaced comedy parts than as a ballad singer.

My new-found friend in Hollywood also mentioned his great admiration for Harlan's 1907 Victor record of "School Days" and sang the song by long distance for me in his conception of the old-time tenor's voice.

Tiny Tim said whenever he heard the Harlan record it affected him so deeply he felt like crying, "because Mr. Harlan sounds so much like an elderly man dreaming over things that had happened to him when he was a child."

My guess is that if Tiny Tim were to prepare a list of his 10 favorite records "School Days" would be well up toward the top.

Besides giving Tim information by phone I also prepared a four- or five-page single-spaced manuscript about Harlan. This I sent to Tim with the information that it was more accurate than my 1943 HOBBIES articles, which I have found need revision in several respects.

A few months after our telephone visit I learned that Tiny Tim was to fill an engagement at College Inn in May, and that he wished very much I could visit Chicago during that time and we could have a "get-together."

Then came the discovery that I needed surgery. The night after I entered the Community Hospital of Roanoke Valley for an operation I received a telegram from him urging me to "hurry up and get well."

There didn't seem much hope for a few weeks after I had the operation that I should be able to travel any time soon, but my surgeon finally gave permission on condition that I go by plane, to avoid any possibly harmful bumping or jolting.

I hated to leave my cats, but my good neighbor, "Pete" Sink, agreed to feed Plum, Nipper, and Lucky Jim during my absence. And I not only wished to meet Tim but also to see the folks at HOBBIES for the first time since paying them a visit in 1951.

So it came about that on the afternoon of Friday, May 23, I boarded a Piedmont Airlines plane in Roanoke for Louisville, and at Louisville transferred to a Chicago-bound Eastern plane.

III. I Meet Tiny Tim

My visit to Tiny Tim at his Sherman House suite took place the following Saturday afternoon. Our appointment was for 4 o'clock, but before that I went to the HOBBIES offices and acquired a few gifts to be presented to Tim in behalf of Pearl Ann Reeder, the editor, and myself. These included perhaps two dozen old records; a miniature bust of Charles Dickens, who originated the name, "Tiny Tim," and a pair of miniature antique castanets, which Miss Reeder and I thought he might be able to use in his act.

I was accompanied by a teen-age boy, Rickie Bostrom, whose duty was to hold a heavy old Columbia Graphophone, shown in some of the accompanying photographs. It had been borrowed from Svoboda's Nickelodeon, Chicago Heights, Ill., for "local color" in the pictures that were to be taken.

Because of my operation, I was unable to give Rickie any help in transporting the heavy objects, and he obviously was relieved when he finally was able to stop a cab. So we began our ride to the Sherman House.

After arriving at the hotel a doorman told us no one was allowed to go to Tiny Tim's suite without an appointment. We replied we had one, but were first to wait in the lobby and meet Al Milton, the HOBBIES publicity representative, who would introduce us to Mark Hammerman, Tim's manager.

The tired youth and I stood around a few minutes in company with a photographer engaged for the occasion, before Mr. Milton, who is an efficient, fast worker with glossy black hair, arrived in company with the blonde and beautiful Miss Stephanie Muller. Stephanie was queen of the Chicago Antiques Exposition & Hobby Fair, a twice-yearly event, sponsored by HOBBIES, which was just getting under way, and Mr. Milton had thought it would interest the public to see her with Tim and me.

At 4 o'clock Mark Hammerman appeared and chaperoned the "delegation" up to Tiny Tim's suite, which, I believe, was on the 20th floor. Al

A TALK ABOUT PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS. "Tiny Tim" and Jim Walsh discussed the recordings of their favorite early recording artists and took turns singing old time songs. The Columbia Graphophone in the center goes back to about 1906. It was borrowed for the occasion from Svoboda's Nickelodeon, Chicago Heights, Ill. In the lower foreground is a copy of Tim's second long-playing record.

A PRIVATE RECITAL. Judging by Jim Walsh's expression which seems to indicate astonishment, "Tiny Tim" may have been taking a particularly high note as this picture was snapped. The popular entertainer rendered many numbers from his repertoire during the more than three hours he and Jim spent together.

Milton rushed about, getting the furniture and the old phonograph arranged for the best picture-taking effects, and then Tim was summoned.

Within a few minutes we were in the presence of the face and figure that have been made familiar by television, newspaper, and magazine stories, as well as by personal appearances. I had the usual experience of persons undertaking to interview Tim. At first he seemed a little shy, even timid, but he soon realized I had no wish to be funny at his expense. Instead, I simply wanted to talk with him as a friend about our common interests, and he relaxed and was at ease.

It didn't take long to discover that Tiny Tim is better looking in person than in pictures. True, he has the long hair flying in different directions, but his complexion has an attractive delicacy, and his hazel eyes are bright and intelligent. As his normal self, he is direct and manly.

Working rapidly, Mr. Milton soon had three photographs taken. One showed Tiny, Stephanie, and me. The other two featured Tim and me, without Stephanie. While the picture-making was in progress, the public relations man asked Tim if he knew anything about Olive Palmer and Paul Oliver, a popular radio singing team of the late 1920s and early 1930s, who were sponsored by the Palmolive Soap Company.

Tim didn't, but I explained that Olive Palmer was really Virginia Rea and Paul Oliver was Frank Munn, two well-known recording artists. This came as a surprise to Tim and he exclaimed "Wow!"

As he had his pictures, Al Milton went off accompanied by Stephanie, the photographer, and the boy, "Graphophone-carrying" Rickie. So,

Tim and I were left together. I had read that whenever Tiny Tim gave an interview he was surrounded by managers and press agents who hovered over him, directed the trend of the conversation and sought to keep him from doing anything that would impair his public "image" which had been so carefully built up.

This wasn't true when I talked with him, Mr. Hammerman said, "Tim's been looking forward a long time to meeting you, Mr. Walsh, and I know you two have lots of things to discuss together, so I'll just leave you to yourselves." Then he retired to his room nearby.

IV. What We Talked About

From that time on the conversation was, to use a cliché, "fast and furious." I had come with the intention of taking notes, but we talked so animatedly there simply wasn't a chance to use a pen.

After Tim had expressed his delight with the gifts I had brought and had said he was going to try to get "some of the Gold Diggers" (a troupe of attractive, wholesome-looking girls who appeared as part of his stage show) to teach him how to play the castanets, I asked him how he happened to adopt "Tiny Tim" as a stage name.

He told me that in 1963 his manager was a man named George King, "who was a fan of Charles Dickens. George King decided to give me the name of Tiny Tim, and it caught on."

Concerning his long hair, Tim said frankly it was a "gimmick" he adopted in 1954 when he was a struggling young singer trying to find a way to make himself distinctive so he would stand out among competing performers. The long hair had the desired effect, although it, of course, caused him frequently, in the beginning, to be jeered and hissed. Now, it had become a sort of trade-mark. He said he first began singing in a high falsetto voice in 1951.

Tim told me his first LP album, "God Bless Tiny Tim!" was a big success, with 200,000 copies being sold. His second LP, he said, was not doing so well because it had been undergoing competition from another album, "A Concert in Fairyland," which he sang several years ago under the name of Darryl Dover.

Tim laughed when I told him that a man whom I had met in the hospital had expressed the hope I would be able to go to Chicago "and meet Teeny Tim."

Then Tim soon had me laughing with his account of making a filmed television appearance with Bing Crosby, whom he admires greatly.

"Mr. Crosby," Tim said, "had two strong opinions. He didn't like men with long hair, so he was prejudiced against me to begin with, and he didn't like to work with people who had colds, for fear of taking the colds home to his children.

"Naturally, it had to happen that I began taking a cold a few days before the show was to be filmed." Tim said. "I tried desperately to shake it off, and called up a specialist

(Continued on page 42)

A MEETING WITH TINY TIM

(Continued from page 39)

(they do everything by phone in California) and asked him for something to make me snap out of it. But it didn't work. The cold kept getting worse."

I have forgotten whether the performance had to be postponed because of Tim's cold, or whether he rallied his forces sufficiently to be able to appear on schedule, but I do remember his mentioning "the funny way Mr. Crosby looked at me and my long hair, and after I had sung my first number he yelled: 'Give this guy a box of Snickers!'"

Nobody, Tim went on, seemed to understand what that cryptic exclamation meant, but after he had sung a second number Crosby exclaimed: "Give this guy another box of Snickers!"

"But," Tim said brightly, "it ended fine. After the filming Mr. Crosby put his hand on my shoulder and told me I was all right and had done a good job. It made me very happy, to receive praise from such a great artist."

This, incidentally, is more evidence that persons who begin by being prejudiced against Tiny Tim and by calling him "a long-haired weirdo," discover, after getting to know him, that they like him very much, indeed.

The principal reason for this liking is Tim's obvious, absolute, and utter sincerity. He is not "putting on an act" when he tells how much he admires and loves the old-time recording artists, or when he expresses his belief that their spirits enter into him when he sings.

Another reason for the admiration that first-hand knowledge of Tim inspires is that he is so unmistakably an idealistic, clean-living man. He doesn't smoke. He doesn't drink. He doesn't swear. And in every way he sets a good example for the young people who love to hear him.

This, he accomplishes by being his natural self. Unlike the bearded Hippies, he has a fetish for keeping himself clean. And he is one of the gentlest of humans. Nothing could be farther from his nature than engaging in demonstrations and committing acts of violence.

He doesn't like to eat in public, and his fondness for such foods as pumpkin seeds mixed with honey may strike most of us as odd. But I have no doubt that if teen-age boys and girls must have a "show business" personality to idolize they can't do better than fasten their affections on Tiny Tim, instead of some of the performers whose lives are public scandals.

Tiny Tim is one of the few persons I have met about whose character I could find nothing to criticize.

—o—
(To be Continued)

Phonographs of Yesteryear

(SEE COVER)

The old hand-wound phonographs shown on this month's cover are part of the collection of Jim Walsh, of Vinton, Va., author of "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists." The phonographs are not for sale since they are to become the property eventually of the Library of Congress in Washington, D.C.

Top row, from left to right:

A Columbia Graphophone of about 1906, with an "extra long" mandrel for playing both the standard 2-minute wax cylinder and the 3-minute "B. C." type.

A Model 4 Victor Talking Machine, circa 1906, which cost $50 with metal horn. A wooden horn, like that in the picture, cost $15 more. This machine came equipped with an Exhibition sound box, but is shown with an attachment for playing Pathe' hill-and-dale sapphire ball discs.

This "Opera" model Edison cylinder phonograph was at first called the "Concert." It was introduced a few months after the 4-minute "Amberol" cylinders were brought out in the fall of 1908, and played only the 4-minute records. Like all other cylinder models with external horns, it was discontinued late in 1912, and succeeded by the "hornless" Amberolas. Today the "Opera" is one of the most eagerly sought cylinder phonographs.

Bottom row, from left to right:

An Edison cylinder phonograph which played the huge 5-inch "Concert" cylinders that were introduced about the turn of the century. This model came equipped with a "Polyphone" attachment to use two large horns and two reproducers, but for the sake of clarity only one horn is shown in our picture.

A combination model Fireside phonograph introduced by Edison in 1909 for playing both 2- and 4-minute cylinders. This machine was equipped originally with a metal "Cygnets" horn which could be swung in any direction, but a wooden horn has been substituted here.

An Edison "Triumph" cylinder phonograph that played 2- and 4-minute cylinders and dated to about 1909. Some collectors consider the Triumph gave the best musical results of any external horn Edison cylinder phonograph, though others prefer the Opera.

A Number 8 table model Victrola first announced in August, 1911. It sold originally for $40.

—From the collection of Jim Walsh
—Photo by Glenn L. Robertson

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

A Meeting with Tiny Tim

By JIM WALSH

PART II

I. Tim is Surprised

Last month, in describing my visit to Chicago and my meeting with Tiny Tim at the Sherman House, I mentioned his surprise when he learned that "Olive Palmer" and "Paul Oliver," a popular duet team of 40 years ago, really were Virginia Rea and Frank Munn — both now dead.

Tim was to receive other surprises in the course of our three and a half hour "gabfest." He asked me if I knew who James F. Harrison had been. I replied that the famous baritone's real name was Frederick J. Wheeler, and he made records both as Wheeler and Harrison.

I also said that his duet partner, "Harry Anthony," was really John Young; and that another tenor, Reed Miller, sang duets with Wheeler under the assumed name of "James Reed."

At all this information Tim exclaimed, "Wow!"

But his surprise seemed to reach its height when I told him that one of his great favorites, Charles Harrison, also recorded under the names of Hugh Donovan and Billy Burton. "But, Mr. Walsh," Tim protested, "are you sure of that? Hugh Donovan doesn't sound like Charles Harrison!"

I assured Tim they were, nevertheless, the same man, and I ventured a guess that if Donovan records didn't sound like Harrison they probably were played at the wrong speed.

For my part, I was surprised to find that Tim apparently was not acquainted with Arthur Collins' record of "The Preacher and the Bear." This in the South at least, was incomparably the biggest selling piece of recorded music between 1905 and 1920.

To give Tim an idea of its merits, although its words would have to be altered to make it acceptable to present-day integrated audiences, I made a stab at singing it. Since I was slightly hoarse, my rendition came out as a bronchiectic bull-frog baritone, but Tim praised it and said, "It sounds all right to me!"

Tim produced from the famous shopping bag in which he carries his ukulele, an electronic device that he termed a "Mickey Mantle megaphone," and sang several numbers through it. He said he believed its sonorous qualities helped him to achieve a greater resemblance in his singing to the voices of the bygone recording artists.

One song I remember, was "On the Old Front Porch." This duet he has done often on television, in person, and on records, in the voices of Ada Jones and Billy Murray.

Several times Tim commented excitedly on my having told him I believed my old friend, Charles Harrison was still alive although I hadn't heard from him in several years, and that he was living in New Providence, N.J. I now have information, however, that Charlie no longer lives at New Providence, and I don't know his present address.

I asked Tim if he remembered the song on the other side of the Victor record of "On the Old Front Porch." It is "Ever Since You Told Me That You Loved Me (I'm a Nut)" and is sung by the inimitable Eddie Morton.

Tim replied it was one of the best numbers in his repertoire, and laughed heartily when I told him that, as a young man Eddie Morton was a Philadelphia policeman who lost his job because of sleeping on his beat. Eddie then went into vaudeville as a singing entertainer. I remarked that a few years ago Eddie Morton's son, Paul, was operating Morton's Restaurant in Wildwood, N.J., and I assumed he still was.

"I'm going to look him up the first time I go to Wildwood!" Tim exclaimed.

II. Tiny Tim's Favorite Songs and Artists

I didn't ask my long-haired friend for a list of his favorite songs and singers. But from some of his remarks I could make a pretty fair stab, I think, at guessing them.

Surely, among the songs, "Tiptoe Through the Tulips," which he uses in virtually every performance, usually to end the act, would rank at or near the top. The songs identified with Byron Harlan, "Please, Mr. Conductor," and "School Days," would certainly be up there. Tim also spoke enthusiastically of Charles Harrison's "Roses of Picardy." And, of course, "On the Old Front Porch" is one of the top-liners.

Still another Harlan recording for which Tim expressed great enthusiasm is a Columbia of "Bunker Hill," a patriotic song written in 1905 by the late Albert Von Tilzer. Tim sang

To my dear friend
Mr. Jim Walsh
I thank you for all the help you have given me with your knowledge of old time records and artists - You're the best!
Tiny Tim
5244

AUTOGRAPHED PHOTO—Shown here are both sides of an autographed photo "Tiny Tim" presented to Jim Walsh. The message written on the back in Tim's left-handed scrawl is rather difficult to read, but it refers to "my dear friend, Mr. Walsh," thanks Jim for the information he has provided concerning pioneer recording artists, and says, "You are the best!"

it for me in Harlan's voice and said he believed it could be made into a big hit today. I think he is using, or will use it, in some of his performances.

Yet another patriotic song, "America, I Love You," which he sang through the "Mickey Mantle megaphone," recently has been admitted to the list of Tim's favorites. He used this 1916 flag-waving number the next night in his stage act, and said his interpretation was based on a record by Henry Burr and the Peerless Quartet. I have been wondering since what record that could have been.

The Victor disc was by the American Quartet, and Billy Murray sang the lead ("You'll Be There," by the Peerless Quartet, is on the other side); the Columbia was by Sam Ash, a tenor whom Tim admires highly; and Edison made only a band version of it. Those were about the only record companies that mattered in 1916, aside from Pathe.

My Pathe catalogs are temporarily unavailable, and I can't remember whether there was a sapphire ball record of "America, I Love You." The Indestructible Company made a cylinder of it by Royal Dadrin, but Indestructibles had a very small sale. I can't recall any record of the composition by Burr and the Peerless Quartet.

Another favorite of Tiny Tim's is "Along Came Ruth," which Arthur Fields sang for both Victor and Columbia in 1914. Tim remarked that in one of them Fields had a "cackle" or a "crackle" (I'm not sure which word he used) in his voice, and said he preferred it to the other.

Tim also is extremely fond of Sam Ash's singing, "I Found a Rose in the Devil's Garden," and an Irving Kaufman interpretation of "Peg O' My Heart." Probably his list of favorites is modified almost from day to day.

Among the artists, Kaufman, Harlan, Charles Harrison, and Burr seem to rank at the very top with Tim. Perhaps Fields also comes into the top favorite category, and so may Nick Lucas, whose singing of "Tiptoe Through the Tulips" suggested Tim's own interpretation. He also is fond of Ada Jones, Billy Murray, Rudy Vallee, Bing Crosby, John McCormack, Al Jolson, the still living "Wee Willie" Robyn (pronounced "Roe-bine"), Cliff Edwards ("Ukulele Ike"), and a long list of others.

About the only thing that cast a cloud over our fan-fest was my remark, perhaps too emphatic, that I "couldn't stand" a couple of singers who hardly would be counted among the Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists.

It happened they were high on Tim's "like list," and his face had a look of distress as he exclaimed, "Oh, Mr. Walsh! Why don't you like them?"

I gave my reasons, but I don't think Tim found them convincing.

Someone in Chicago had sold Tim some Edison Diamond Discs, and he lamented not having an Edison instrument on which to play them. The labels had peeled off of some of the records, but I was able, by reading the numbers cut into the surface, to identify several.

GOOD ADVICE. — Barbara (Bobby) Nelson, pretty waitress at the Drum and Fife Restaurant, Vinton, Va., was one of the happy recipients of an autographed photo of Tiny Tim. He gave her timely advice to "keep serving that good food."

One coupled Billy Murray singing a song with one of the shortest titles in the English language, "O!" with Maurice Burkhart's rendition of a title that Tim found amusing, "Who Ate Napoleons With Josephine When Bonaparte Was Away?" I sang as much of the rapid-fire "O!" as I could recall, and Tim said he thought it would make a good number for his act.

His biggest laugh among the Edisons occurred when I identified one record without a label as the favorite basso profundo solo, "When the Bell in the Lighthouse Rings Ding Dong," rendered by an obscure, deep-voiced gentleman named Weltzin B. Blix, who, to my knowledge, never made any other record. It was coupled with "Out Where the West Begins," by Glen Ellison. After laughing about Mr. Blix's distinctive name, Tim jumped up and called to his manager.

"Mr. Hammerman," he exclaimed, "I've got a great idea! Before I come on tonight have somebody come out and announce that Tiny Tim is late, but to open the show the great bass singer, Mr. Weltzin B. Blix, will oblige with 'When the Bell in the Lighthouse Rings Ding Dong'! Then I'll appear and sing a little of it!"

Hammerman laughed heartily and said, "Maybe we could work out something like that."

As we shall see, Mr. Blix was mentioned at the ensuing Sunday night performance.

Tim told me he was not trying to acquire a huge collection of old records. "My principal interest," he said,

"is to use them to learn old songs that appeal to me and that I can sing in my act. But traveling as I do I can't transport a lot of records."

Tim and I had the pleasure of discovering we both have been lifelong baseball enthusiasts (he also is a hockey fan), and I was to prove my devotion to the "national pastime" the next day by almost freezing while I watched the Boston Red Sox narrowly defeat the Chicago White Sox.

Tim's favorite team always has been the Brooklyn (now Los Angeles) Dodgers. My favorites, which have included the White Sox, the Red Sox, the New York Yankees, and the Detroit Tigers, always have been in the American League. Now, however, I have added the Chicago Cubs.

It was beginning to grow late, and I suspected Mr. Hammerman was worrying for fear, if we kept talking, Tim would be late for his performance. But several of my friends had asked me to get them autographed photos of the singing star, and I asked him if he would write a message for those admirers on pictures of himself. He graciously agreed, and managed to produce eight photos — just enough to take care of the requests.

In autographing the cards in his hard-to-read, left-handed style, Tiny Tim proved himself a man of quick intelligence. I gave him a few words of information about each recipient, and without hesitation he dashed off personal messages.

One photo went to my HOBBIES colleague, Aida Favia-Artsay, with whom I talked by long distance for the first time that morning, and who had amazed me by guessing my identity as soon as I had said two words: "Hello, Aida!" She laughingly insisted that she had extra-sensory perception, and she must have a touch of it to visualize me making a phone call from Chicago when she had been thinking I was still in a Virginia hospital.

Aida told me she greatly enjoyed Tim's television performances, especially his male-and-female duet of "On the Old Front Porch."

He wrote her a greeting saying how much he enjoyed her HOBBIES articles about operatic stars.

Among the other messages, Barbara (Bobby) Nelson, a pretty waitress at the Drum and Fife Restaurant in Vinton, Va., where I live, was admonished to "keep serving that good food." Beth Ellen Holdren, 8, daughter of Vinton's postmaster, Francis A. Holdren, received an epistolary pat on the head.

So did Bridget Penticoff, 10, daughter of Mrs. Penticoff, an elevator operator in the HOBBIES building. Bridget was urged to "keep smiling that pretty smile." Her mother told me later that after Bridget received the picture she went to bed with it beneath her pillow.

Mrs. Lucie Jenkins of Rose Hill, Va., was so pleased at receiving an autographed photo that she gave the

"SHE NEARLY HAD A FIT"—Beth Ellen Holdren, 8, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Francis A. Holdren of Vinton, Va., was surprised happily when she received an autographed photo of Tiny Tim. Her father, who is Vinton postmaster, says: "She nearly had a fit, and went all over the neighborhood, showing the picture to everybody she could find."

latest kitten to be added to her cat family the name of "Tiny Tim."

And I especially was flattered by the inscription (shown with this article) on the photo Tim gave me.

When I had collected the eight signed cards — others went to Kathy Crumley, a friend of Mrs. Jenkins', and Mike Wingfield, a clerk in a Vinton supermarket — I knew that they would bring happiness to several grown-ups, teen-agers, and children alike.

As he autographed, Tim told me he had been interviewed by a Playboy writer a few days before, and had asked that the forthcoming article mention the debt he felt he owed me for the information I had provided about old-time recording artists. I imagine the interview will be published before many months.

The following Sunday afternoon, Tim and Mr. Hammerman were among the guests at the home of Playboy's publisher, Hugh Hefner.

When I finally compelled myself to get up and start for the elevator, Tim went with me all the way, telling me that our meeting had been "one of the greatest events" of his life, and that he earnestly hoped we could get together again. He assured me that if ever he found himself in the neighborhood of Vinton he was going to come to see me and listen to some of my old records.

I, too, said "goodbye" with the feeling that the afternoon had been one of the most memorable of my life.

III. Tiny Tim's Night Club Act

On the Sunday evening following that never-to-be-forgotten meeting,

Miss Reeder, editor and publisher of HOBBIES, and I were guests of Tiny Tim and his manager at Tim's performance in the Sherman House's College Inn. The place, like nearly all night clubs, was lighted dimly and full of smoke, and seemed in those respects rather unsuited to Tim's act.

As the star attraction, Tim, of course, closed the show instead of opening it. He was preceded by Peter Palmer's Orchestra, which also assisted him in several of his numbers, and by the Gold Diggers, a group of attractive girls who often appear as a singing line on the Dean Martin TV show.

When my friend first appeared, wearing his eccentric costume and carrying a shopping bag, there were a few uncertain giggles from the audience. But after he sang two or three numbers he won his hearers completely, and, as I afterwards remarked to Miss Reeder: "He held his audience in the palm of his hand."

There was soon no doubt about the sincerity and enthusiasm of his reception. And there has been no question about the warm welcome he since has been receiving in appearances throughout the country.

Tim did a great deal of informal talking to his audience and used the "Mickey Mantle megaphone" in several numbers. Sometimes he played his accompaniment on the ukulele; at others he was reinforced by the orchestra. He sang through the megaphone in warbling "Chicago, That Toddling Town," which brought down the house.

Without the amplifying device he gave two Ada Jones and Billy Murray duets, "On the Old Front Porch," and "I'm Glad I'm a Boy; I'm Glad I'm a Girl." He also showed his versatility by singing in the voices of Jeannette Macdonald and Nelson Eddy, and in doing a Maurice Chevalier turn with "Living in the Sunlight, Loving in the Moonlight."

With the aid of a mirror, into which he gazed with mock infatuation for his features, he provided a laughable version of "I Love Me," a comic song recorded in 1923 by Murray and several other comedians. For the tots there were such numbers as "On the Good Ship Lollipop," and "Animal Crackers in My Soup." (The audience included a fair sized number of children who had been brought by their parents to see and hear their idol.)

SINGER'S NAMESAKE — "Tiny Tim," the kitten Mrs. Lucie Jenkins named for the famous singer after he sent her an autographed photo. With such a name, it should be obvious that "Tiny Tim" is a long-haired cat!

GRATEFUL TEACHER—Mrs. Lucie Jenkins, a school teacher from Rose Hill, Va., showed her appreciation of receiving an autographed photo from the long-haired singer by giving the name "Tiny Tim" to the latest kitten member of her feline family.

"America, I Love You" was one of his most effective numbers. "If You Talk in Your Sleep Don't mention My Name," a comic song Billy Murray made popular on a Victor record in 1912, was one of Tim's funniest. Another was "Great Balls of Fire," in which he tore off his tie and rolled on the floor, in a wild burlesque of early rock music.

But it is worth noting that in Tiny Tim's entire production there was not an off-color line; not a single risqué "gag" — a fact that should make it memorable in night club history. The entire production was completely clean.

"Tiptoe Through the Tulips," of course, concluded the program. Sitting near me was a woman whose little boy couldn't have been more than five or six. He sat in her lap throughout the evening and remained quiet until Tim began the "Tulip" song.

Then the boy jumped down and walked forward as close to the stage as he could get. There he rapturously drank in every note. His mother told me he had been waiting expectantly for that song the entire evening.

Before Tim left the stage, he said he wished to express his thanks to several persons, including the orchestra members who had ably assisted him and a number of men concerned with the production of his show. He then went on, in words to the following effect:

"I especially should like to thank two wonderful people who are my guests tonight. One is Mr. Jim Walsh, who has come all the way from Virginia to see me. He is the world's greatest authority on old popular records and old-time artists.

"When people ask me where I obtained all my information about such things I tell them I wasn't around when the old records were being made, and that I learned what I know from the hundreds of hours I spent in the New York Public Library and other places reading Professor Walsh's articles in HOBBIES Magazine. Those articles were largely responsible for developing my act. Will Professor Walsh please stand up, so we can turn the spotlight on him?"

(Tim called me "Professor Walsh" several times. He evidently confused me with my university-educated cat, Professor Plum Duff Walsh, who is the only member of my family with the right to sport a Ph.D. title.)

I stood, and said, as the spotlight searched me out:

"I'm here, Tim, and thank you very much. But I want to ask you one thing — did you bring the great bass singer, Mr. Weltzin B. Blix, with you tonight, or did he fail to show up?"

Laughingly, Tim quickly arose to the occasion by telling the audience he had bought some old Edison records which he hadn't been able to play. I had sung to him the songs on some of them, he said, and had told him that one was a rendition of "When the Bell in the Lighthouse Rings Ding Dong" by the gifted but mysterious Mr. Blix.

"He made only one record," Tim exclaimed gleefully, "and I've got it!"

Collector's Item — Limited Edition
EDNA WHITE — Trumpet Virtuoso

12" L.P. record
Selections made in 1921-'57

"SOUND OF THE TRUMPET"

Debutante (Clark) - Civil War Medley - Then You'll Remember Me - Sweet Genevieve - Carnival of Venice - Intermezzo

$10 prepaid

CHANDLER

73 James St., Greenfield, Mass. 01301
See articles about Edna White in Jim Walsh's Dept., May, June, July, 1966. my07

Tim then introduced "... the other one of my wonderful guests, Pearl Ann Reeder, Editor of my favorite magazine, HOBBIES." And Miss Reeder unassumingly took a bow.

I still was standing, so I asked Tim if I might sneak in a "commercial." "I'm going to write an article about our meeting," I said, "for the September HOBBIES, and I hope some of the audience will buy it and help us to sell a few more copies."

Tim replied he'd be looking forward to this article, which is having to appear in two installments instead of the one I planned. Then Tim closed his act with the "Tiptoe" song.

Tiny Tim had worked so hard I should not have been surprised, when I dropped in, with Miss Reeder, at his dressing room, to find him in a state of collapse, but he was in full command of himself. In the dressing room we met a man who introduced (Continued on page 98)

CHRISTMAS Tunes 15½" REGINA

- 1028 Still Night, Holy Night— (Christmas Song)
- 1029 O Sanctissima — (Christmas Song)
- 1162 Adeste Fidelis (Hymn)
- 1423 O Tannebaum, (O Christmas tree)
- 3026 Come Hither Ye Children (Xmas)
- 3028 White Christmas
- 3029 Jingle Bells
- 3030 Noel
- 3031 Hark, The Herald Angels Sing
- 3032 Santa Claus is Coming to Town
- 1039 Ave Maria
- 1249 Auld Lang Syne

Price $5.00 each

Add $1.50 for packing and postage.

Christmas Tunes also for other size Regina Boxes. 27", $15 each; 20¾", $10 each; 12¼", $4 each; 11", $4 each. Tunes: Silent Night, Holy Night; Adeste Fidelis, & Ave Maria.

Not necessary to send any money now. Just send order. We will bill you when order is ready.

Lloyd G. Kelley bought out the Regina Music Box business in 1940, and since that time has been making and selling Regina tune discs.

With our new machinery we can now make all sizes discs up to the 27" and in the near future will also make many sizes of the Symphonon and Polyphon disc, etc.

We have a fine selection of all types of music boxes for sale. Always interested in buying one or a collection; and offer our services with 30 years' experience in restoring mechanical musical instruments.

REGINA MUSIC BOX CO., INC.

Lloyd G. Kelley

Sawnee Bean Road

Thetford Center, Vt. 05075

A.C. (802) 785-2669

dc

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

tc

Antique

MUSIC BOX SPECIALISTS

(Estab. Switzerland 1835)

Complete Repair Service - All Types

All Work Guaranteed

Finest Instruments Bought & Sold

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave., Pelham, N.Y. 10803

tc

WANTED

FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on

ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single - faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G.&T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts. Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla,

New York

tc

SHEET MUSIC

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850. Catalog 25c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver, Colorado 80205 o12698

SHEET MUSIC: Old popular, 250,000 songs, A-Z. No list yet. — Robert Greenlaw, Room 412, 307 No. Rampart Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif. 90026. d6276

SHEET MUSIC, choose from thousands of popular, late 1800s to date. We also buy. — McNeill, 1117 South Taylor Ave., Oak Park, Ill. 60304 d3253

TAPE RECORDINGS

REMEMBER RADIO? Send stamped envelope for list of tape recordings available from radio's golden age.—Lee Book, Box 6338, Pittsburgh, Pa. o6276

PIANOS AND ROLLS

COLLECTOR will pay top prices for Ampico piano rolls, especially the large Jumbo B Model rolls. — Kuykendall, 2510 Kenmore Ct., Austin, Tex. 78703 f122741

OLD PIANO ROLLS for sale. Free monthly lists. Duo-Art, Ampico, Welte, blues, foreign, rags, 88-note standards, Aeolian pipe organ & grand. — VI & S's Antiques, 28 Clifford Heights, Amherst, N.Y. 14226 o6829

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs & records, open horn disc phonographs, music boxes & discs, piano & organ rolls, player organ, pathe operatic records. — T. Gratello, 2614 Central, Alameda, Calif. my122971

ANTIQUE piano, c. 1800. Historic George Astor, museum piece. Completely restored. Price $2,000. Pictures, details, 25c. — Box 377, Gobles, Mich. 49055. o1861

GWEN HARRISON ANTIQUES

810 South Harrison

Cushing, Okla. 74023

Phones: 918—CA 5-1390 or CA 5-0638

Dear HOBBIES Family:

"Into each life some rain must fall . . ." BUT THAT SHOULDN'T NECESSARILY MEAN A "DAILY GULLY WASHING DELUGE!" Which is just about what I have had since my last big Doll ad in the March issue of HOBBIES. And for this reason, I haven't been able to get an ad in since. Even now, I don't have time, space, or money to "visit" with you as I really like to do, and this peeves me more than "somewhat" for, as most of you know by now, I do love to talk! Thought you might like to know, however, that most of my troubles have been due to the fact that I have been remodeling a little grocery store and a five-room house just across the street from my home, to be a "Country Store" Annex and a DOLL HOUSE AND MUSEUM in addition to my present place of business it is now almost complete. And I soon plan to write you a full account of the many experiences involved therein. You won't BELIEVE IT!

But for now, I must just say, I've missed you, and am very happy to be back. Now I must get rid of gobs of stuff to make room for those 1500 dolls. So, how about a little help?

Am listing various and sundry items, hit or miss, just looking around my place from ONE SPOT, and calling them as I see 'em.

This ad will be continued for the next 3 or four months, so don't miss a word. If you don't see what you want, write me. I probably have it! Better yet, come find it yourself—cheaper that way. No postage etc. And now, for starters, I offer the following:

ADVERTISING ITEMS:

COCA COLA: a. Hanging wall clock, electric, from grocery store, enameled sheet iron. "Drink Coca Cola" emblem in center, 18" dia. works. $35. b. Rect. tin tray, pretty girl drinking from coke bottle, excellent paint $55. c. Hanging outside thermometer: Shaped like Coke bottle, painted tin, dated 1924, $15. d. Another not so old, but nice, undated 17" L, 5" widest part, $7.50. e. Still another gold colored metal approx. 6" L, 3" W. $3. f. Coke glasses, clear with white enameled Coke emb. 5c size. (remember?) When have you seen a Coke glass? 6 for $5.

BEER:

a. Ash tray, cream colored china, red "Coors" $3 p.p. Miniature amber beer bottles "Falstaff" (salt & pepper shakers) $1.50 each, p.p. Miniature yellow CHINA beer bottle salt shaker, cork bottom. Red "Coors" $5. Round Tin tray, good paint, Falstaff $3.50. (no picture).

AUTOMOBILE ITEMS:

a. Wrought iron extending fender luggage rack $25. b. Ancient straight WINDSHIELD frame (iron) and with glass intact but cracked across one corner, photo available, $50 (don't know exact date but could be early as 1912 maybe earlier. c. Orange and white slag gearshift knob $8.50. d. Book: Dykes Automobile & Gasoline Engine Encyclopedia. 20th edition, approx. 1500 pp. "The Elementary Principles, Construction, Operation and Repair of Automobiles Gasoline Engines, & Automobile Electric Systems: including Trucks, Tractors, Motor Coaches, Automotive Diesel Engines, Aircraft Engines & Motorcycles. (the very thing in the world included in this huge volume. Pictures, sketches, working drawings. Old fire engines, locomotives, etc. Beginning with 1910 and continuing through 1943 or '45. Cover stained but ALL THERE, $50.

BOTTLES:

Clear glass round qt. milk bottles, $3.50. Cl. gl. round pt. (cream) bottle, $3.50. Cl. gl. 1/2-pt. cream bottle $1. Whiskey, Amber "Four Roses" pt. embossed roses etc. $5. Clear gl. fifth, "Hayner" dated, $8.50. Cobalt blue violin flask, tabs, $6.50. Deep emerald green violin flask (no tabs) blown BUBBLY GLASS with embossed music staff and notes on front, $18. Amber "Mrs. Butterworth, large, $5, same, small, $3.50. Cl. glass clown, bottle bank, slotted top, (Grapette) Camden Ark. 1933, $5. Avon Pony Post Decanter (tall) $12.50. Cl. glass McGreagor Horse head $5. Cl. gl. "Haig & Haig" pinch bottle, white enamel, $6. Miniature perfume bottle, figural "ROSE O'Neill Kewpie," no top $20.

BANKS:

Tin "Happy Days" Barrell (Chain) $12. White China Standing Pin with Oklahoma State profile on tummy, $10. Cast iron elephant with howdah, silver paint, $10. Gold pirate sitting on chest, metal, $12. Bronzed metal saddle & cowboy boots $12. Bronzed metal Stage Coach $12. HUGE CHALKWARE COCKER SPANIEL DOG, black with beautiful brown GLASS EYES, $20. Huge Chalkware TURKEY, natural colors, $17.50. Huge Chalkware LAMB, white with cole slaw type wool, big blue eyes looking to side, small chip off one foot, no harm, easily fixed, $15.

DOLLS &amp; TOYS:

17" blonde "Terri Lee" orig. clothes, $18.50. Rare COLORED 17" "JERRI LEE", face retouched, nude, $37.50. 13" "Betsy McCall" nude, $15. 15" "Linda Williams" original clothes, $20. 19" Cissy, Madame Alexander orig. organdie party dress and shoes etc. $30. 8" Cissette, Mdm. Alex. nude, $10. Story Book "Muffie" orig. clothes $8.50. Vogue "Ginny" orig. clothes, $8.50. Vogue "Ginnette" in diaper, $6.50. Colored "Amosandra" shows some wear, dressed, $10. "Gerber Baby" $17.50. "Chatty Cathy" orig. clothes $15. "Chatty Baby" orig. clothes $12.50. 15" comp. "Toni" orig. clothes $20. "Toni" nude, $15. Madame Alex. 8" "Wendy" orig. clothes, $15. "Wendy" nude, $12.50. "Sonja Heine" (face retouched) chip off one heel, as is $25. Orig. McGuffy "Anna" Mm. Alex. 18" orig. clothes, face retouched but good, $18. Orig. 15" "Ann Shirley" Effanbee, orig. clothes perfect, $37.50. Orig. cloth "Alice in Wonderland" 1924 issue by Madame Alex. as pictured August HOBBIES, $27.50. Orig. Mdm. Alex. "Alice in Wonderland" 1937 issue pictured same page, perfect but nude, $37.50. 15" orig. "Scarlett O'Hara" 12" comp. 1937 issue Madame Alexander, all orig. clothes, but faded, very good cond $35. Orig. label still intact. Scarce rare collector's doll. 17" bisque "Bonnie Babe" sgd Georgine Averill, dressed in real baby christening gown hat, booties, etc. The rarest of the rare, $285. All bisque frozen Charlotte type, movable arms only 5" L. blonde molded hair, huge blue eyes to side, nude, $10. (Japan) Toy Schoenhut GRAND PIANO. Mahogany finish case with American Sheraton style legs, excellent cond. with most of orig. label $50. Cast iron HUBLEY FIRE TRUCK with heliometer driver ladder missing, otherwise all there, cast iron wheels etc, $37.50. Painted tin COW, move tail and she "Moo's". Excellent paint, $15. Real BABY SHOES, new but OLD, from old store stock, black Mary Jane type straps, all sizes, $5 pr. Draw outline of your doll's foot for size. Postage paid on these. Toy wash board, tin panel, wood frame, old, $7.50 p.p. Miniature solid walnut rolling pin, one-piece, turned handles, approx. 2" L. $5. Old woven reed doll buggy with eisenglass windows on sides, (one cracked) movable hood, very good cond. $25 crated.

TOOTHPICKS:

Starch Blue & Maroon Slag (Marble glass) straight panels, very old, $18.50. Clear gl. straight panels, very old, $28.50. Clear gl. slide container sgd. $25. Deep amber "Holly Band" pattern. (Like Holly Amber) but NO Opaque panels $40. Maybe Chocolate amber(?) Blue & white slag footed urn, $15. Cobalt blue glass hat (stippled) $10. Vaseline Oaken Bucket with bail, large, toothpick or match, $17.50. Cl. gl. handled barrel - stippled, $6.50. Pr. of fine PORCELAIN toothpicks one with Revolutionary period costumed man on front (George Washington style) the other with befruffed wigged lady some style (Martha) on front. $15 ea.

CLEAR &amp; COLORED GLASS:

Almond Thumbprint flat saucer. Finest flint $6.50. Ruby Thumbprint water tumbler, finest flint, $17.50. GIANT SQUARE ASH-BURTON MUGS. Set of 6, extremely heavy brilliant glass with bluish tint, sham and kickup, faint signature in bases but can't make out, $15 ea. Flute (Flint) goblet, $20. Set of 6 Flute Flint HANDLED FOOTED tumblers, flaring sides, $17.50 ea. Carnival "Tree of Life" saucer, $5. Green "Tree of Life" large bowl with wide foldover rim, $27.50. Green Tree of Life saucer, $5. Vaseline "Tree of Life" saucer $6.50. Clear "Tree of Life" plate, $10 (have 2). Green "Tree of Life" Footed saucer or Master Salt $7.50. Clear glass Diamond Sunburst plates (2) $10 ea. PINK BALTIMORE PEAR LARGE BOWL. SANDWICH. STIPPLED. RARE.—$65. STARCH BLUE OPAQUE FIERY OPALESCENT LARGE BOWL. SIGNED MCK. (McKee) $50. Custard glass creamer, Blackberry band, signed McK. (McKee) $17.50. Silver Deposit on cl. gl. open sugar and interior ribbed creamer, $15 set. Mercury glass spooner or urn, footed, on low standard with gold lining $25. Mercury gl. witches ball which exactly fits top of above and looks great, $10. An extra ball identical same price. Fostoria "American" double shot whiskey glass, also makes fine toothpick or match holder, old, finest flint, sunburst base, $8.50 ea. (have 4) "SANDWICH STAR" square pint decanter, ground neck, no stopper, FINEST FLINT rare find, perfect, $75. Sandwich green "Cabbage leaf" creamer $35. Miniature cobalt free blown cruet, $17.50. Postage extra, stamp please. 5 day return privilege.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 40)

himself as a lawyer from East Tennessee.

When I remarked that many years ago I lived in East Tennessee as a reporter and editorial writer for the Johnson City Press, he exclaimed:

"I knew your face was familiar! I'm Ernie Ballou from Bristol! My brother, Bill Ballou, was a Johnson City lawyer, and so was my father, W. W. Ballou! I used to see you there and I knew your face, although it's probably been 30 years since we've met!"

I remembered Mr. Ballou's brother and, especially, his father, very well indeed. With the latter, who was an elderly man when I knew him, I used to engage in many long street-corner literary discussions. I especially remember one heated argument we had concerning which great author had given the world the largest number of immortal comic characters, Shakespeare or Dickens? "W. W." declaimed strongly in favor of Shakespeare, but I spoke up with equal fervor for Dickens.

I forgot to mention in its right place that, before I left Tim's hotel suite, he gave me a copy of his new book, "Beautiful Thoughts," which consists mainly of philosophical utterances he has saved because they appeal to him, although there is also a poem of his own in praise of the film star, Elizabeth Taylor.

The book is inscribed: "To my friend, Mr. Jim Walsh, a pleasure to know you. Tiny Tim, 52469." That number is Tim's abbreviated method of writing "May 24, 1969."

The following Monday evening concluded Tiny Tim's engagement in Chicago. He since has been making the rounds of several cities, appearing in bookshops and autographing copies of "Beautiful Thoughts." But he is soon to return to Hollywood and appear in a movie called "Good Guys, Bad Guys," in which the star will be his favorite actor Robert Mitchum. Tim will sing the title tune for the show.

As I returned to Virginia, where I found all my cats well and radiantly happy to be reunited with me, I had a well defined feeling that Tiny Tim is no "flash in the pan," but that he is a truly talented, clean-living gentleman who deserves his success and is likely to go on being a stellar attraction for a long time to come.

Whatever may be in his future, I hope to meet him again and he always will have my best wishes in whatever he undertakes. "Show Business" would rank much higher in my regard if it had more unpretentious, sincere, clean-living performers like Tiny Tim.

(The End)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Ferdinand Himmelreich, "The Blind Pianist"

By JIM WALSH

I. A Mystery Solved

Last spring, when I was in Chicago, I went to the Public Library on North Michigan Avenue and found the answer to a question that had been puzzling me.

For some time I had been planning an article about Ferdinand Himmelreich, who was known during his lifetime as "The Blind Pianist." However, I had been baffled by the problem of how Himmelreich, who was said to have been blind since he was 5, could have studied with a number of eminent teachers and profited by their instruction.

It seemed impossible that the teachers could have taught him to read conventional music, yet how otherwise could they have helped him? I knew nothing of piano technique, but I wondered if he merely had memorized the music as his instructors played it, or whether they had used a system of "translating" ordinary music into something like Braille. Even if they had, Himmelreich obviously could not have "read" such music while his fingers were traversing the keyboard. So, I was left wondering.

The mystery was solved, however, when I found, in the New York Times for Monday, December 13, 1937, an account of Himmelreich's death two days earlier and learned he was not totally blind. Instead, he had sufficient vision to be able to see the keyboard with the aid of specially installed, powerful lights.

Also brought out in the death notice was something which most collectors of Himmelreich records probably do not know — that, aside from his recording work, he was known better as a pipe organ player than as a pianist.

Incidentally, I believe that Himmelreich is the first pianist about whom I have written a HOBBIES biographical sketch. But now I shall let the obituary notice tell its own story.

It was headed:

FERD. HIMMELREICH,
NOTED ORGANIST, 57
Played 9 Years at Wanamaker's
Here and in Philadelphia —
Nearly Blind Since Birth

Now I quote:

"LAUREL SPRINGS, N.J., Dec. 12.—Ferdinand Himmelreich, who became widely known as an organist in spite of almost total blindness since boyhood, died at his home here last night in his 58th year.

"Born in New York, he was blind in one eye and had only about 10 per cent vision in the other after the age of 5. Specially designed, powerful lights focused on the keyboard helped him to overcome his impairment of vision.

"For nine years Mr. Himmelreich played the organ at the John Wanamaker stores in New York and Philadelphia. He played also at the Strawbridge and Clothier and Gimbel stores, and for four seasons was at Haddon Hall, Atlantic City. Known also as a pianist and composer, he frequently had appeared with Rudy Vallee's Orchestra and had done considerable recording.

"Surviving are his widow; a son, Kenneth H., of Gloucester, and a stepson, Franklin K. Chandler of Laurel Springs."

II. Early Recordings

"The Blind Pianist" obviously was of German descent, at least on his father's side. One of my friends who knows German says his family name may be translated as "Kingdom of Heaven."

Even before Himmelreich began making talking machine records, his name appeared both as a composer and a player in catalogs of music rolls. My collection of player piano reference material is scant, but in a clothbound catalog issued by the Aeolian Company in July, 1905, I find a roll 8094, "Valse Brillante," the composer of which is given as F. M. Himmelreich. He probably also played it, but names of the artists who cut the rolls were not included.

In a 1925 catalog of Ampico rolls appears 51663E, "Believe Me if All Those Endearing Young Charms," with the comment: "This favorite old Irish air is charmingly set forth in one of Mr. Himmelreich's well-known transcriptions."

There will be a reference later to an Edison Diamond Disc by Himmelreich of this beloved old song.

What seems to have been the pianist's first disc record was issued by Victor in May, 1912, as 17055, and combined his transcription of "The Rosary" with Lange's "Flower Song," by the Neapolitan Trio.

The monthly supplement contains a small profile photograph of Himmelreich. It shows him as a delicately featured, sharp-nosed man. He is wearing glasses, but nothing about the picture suggests blindness. The annotation reads:

"An attractive instrumental double is here offered, the first selection being a fine transcription of the favorite Rosary, by Ferdinand Himmelreich, the well-known pianist. Mr. Himmelreich is a most unusual player in many respects, one of his accomplishments being his great skill in improvisation.

"His technique is quite brilliant, difficult double-finger passages in thirds and sixths being played with ease. On the opposite side is a new Trio record of the popular Lange number."

Most of this description afterwards was published for years in the annual or semi-annual Victor record catalogs. The side view photo was also used briefly, but soon was replaced by a full-faced view shown with this article. It depicts him as an older man.

Since the great majority of the record-buying public liked "The Rosary" and did not agree with Ernest Newman, the eminent English critic, that "its greasy chromatics" made it "the worst song ever written," the Himmelreich record had large and steady sales until the advent of electrical recording in 1925.

AT THE KEYBOARD.—This picture of "The Blind Pianist" is reprinted from the Victor record supplement for February, 1917.

FULL-FACED VIEW.—Himmelreich's photograph appeared in the large Victor record catalog through several editions. The one shown here is from the 1920 issue.

Actually, I cannot recall a record he played for any company that was cut out of the catalog as long as the acoustic method of recording prevailed. He possibly may have made some Okeh hill-and-dale records that were discontinued when Okeh switched to lateral-cut recording late in 1919, but I lack catalogs to confirm or disprove this possibility. I merely seem to have a dim recollection of having read somewhere, years ago, a mention of him as an early Okeh performer.

In July, 1912, Victor coupled, on another Black Label 10-inch record, two favorite salon-type transcriptions by Himmelreich: Nevin's "Narcissus," and Gottschalk's "The Last Hope," which music is known nowadays as the melody of "Softly Now the Light of Day." The supplement comment was:

"Mr. Himmelreich's brilliant and clean-cut transcriptions of favorite light classics have greatly pleased Victor owners, and the announcement of this double, containing two highly popular numbers by Nevin and Gottschalk, will doubtless be most welcome."

But I have got a bit ahead of myself. In June, 1912, Victor had announced a 12-inch record, 35223, "Lucia Sextet — Transcription," played by Himmelreich, one of his favorite recording numbers. It was paired with "Caprice Espanol," rendered by the pianist-composer, Charles Gilbert Spross. This is what the catalog editor said:

"Mr. Himmelreich's mastery of improvisation is well exhibited in this superb rendition of the great Lucia Sextet, while Mr. Spross gives Moszkowski's beautiful Caprice in splendid style. Two most attractive pianoforte records, happily combined."

Despite the popularity of these first Himmelreich records, a long time elapsed before he made any new ones, so this seems a good place to pause and consider his choice of music and technique. Victor obviously did not consider him a celebrity pianist, like Paderewski and De Pachmann, who then recently had begun making records that only imperfectly mirrored their art, or Himmelreich would not have been restricted to the double-faced, Black Label category and to performing "light classics."

He was a player, however, whose delicate style of playing recorded better than that of the giants. Their Herculean performances simply could not be coped with by early recording methods.

Imagine, for instance, any effort to record Moriz Rosenthal's hammering technique if he had been alive in 1912! There probably were no truly representative recordings of a great pianist of the classical school until Sergei Rachmaninoff made his remarkable Edison Diamond Discs in 1918-19.

But Himmelreich's gentle methods and his choice of old familiar music did not overtax the recording techniques of the acoustic period. As for his improvisations, they seem, to a far from expert listener, to consist largely of a fondness for arpeggios and frequent sweeps of his hands across the keyboard as variations of the straight melody.

Without going deeply into that, he seems to me to have been recorded better than any other pianist of his time. I find little to choose from between his Victor and Edison discs when both are in good condition.

III. Later Victor Records

It seems strange that, since Himmelreich's first records achieved so much

Collector's Item — Limited Edition

EDNA WHITE — Trumpet Virtuoso

12" L.P. record
Selections made in 1921-'57

"SOUND OF THE TRUMPET"

Debutante (Clark) - Civil War Medley - Then You'll Remember Me - Sweet Genevieve - Carnival of Venice - Intermezzo

$10 prepaid

CHANDLER
73 James St., Greenfield, Mass. 01301
See articles about Edna White in Jim Walsh's
Dept., May, June, July, 1966. my07

CHRISTMAS Tunes 15½" REGINA

- 1028 Still Night, Holy Night—
(Christmas Song)
- 1029 O Sanctissima — (Christmas Song)
- 1162 Adesle Fideles (Hymn)
- 1423 O Tannebaum, (O Christmas tree)
- 3026 Come Hither Ye Children (Xmas)
- 3028 White Christmas
- 3029 Jingle Bells
- 3030 Noel
- 3031 Hark, The Herald Angels Sing
- 3032 Santa Claus is Coming to Town
- 1039 Ave Maria
- 1249 Auld Lang Syne

Price $5.00 each

Add $1.50 for packing and postage.

Christmas Tunes also for other size Regina Boxes. 27", $15 each; 20¾", $10 each; 12¾", $4 each; 11", $4 each. Tunes: Silent Night, Holy Night; Adesle Fideles, & Ave Maria.

Not necessary to send any money now. Just send order. We will bill you when order is ready.

Lloyd G. Kelley bought out the Regina Music Box business in 1940, and since that time has been making and selling Regina tune discs.

With our new machinery we can now make all sizes discs up to the 27" and in the near future will also make many sizes of the Symphonon and Polyphon disc, etc.

We have a fine selection of all types of music boxes for sale. Always interested in buying one or a collection; and offer our services with 30 years' experience in restoring mechanical musical instruments.

REGINA MUSIC BOX CO., INC.

Lloyd G. Kelley

Sawnee Bean Road

Thetford Center, Vt. 05075

A.C. (802) 785-2669

dc

WANTED FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on

ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single - faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G.&T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts. Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla,

New York

tfx

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

Antique
MUSIC BOX SPECIALISTS

(Estab. Switzerland 1825)

Complete Repair Service - All Types

All Work Guaranteed

Finest Instruments Bought & Sold

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave., Pelham, N.Y. 10803

tfx

FIRST SONG ABOUT THE PHONOGRAPH.—"The Song of Mister Phonograph," generally believed to be the first musical composition inspired by Thomas A. Edison's invention, was published in 1878. It was written, under the assumed name of H. H. vonOgraph, by a 15-year-old boy, Henry Holden Huss, who was, many years later, one of Ferdinand Himmelreich's teachers.

Mr G. Schirmer, Music Publisher & Dealer, 701 Broadway, has just published for the author, the latest newly (herewith find specimen copy) entitled:—

"The Song of Mister Phonograph."

which has been sung with great success at the Phonographic Exhibitions in New-York.

It is just long enough to be sung into one sheet of ten-fold and is admirably reproduced.

A discount of fifty per cent (50%) will be allowed to Phonograph Exhibitors on the retail price, which is twenty-five cents (25 cts) per copy.

Orders will be filled by C. O. D. unless accompanied by draft, or postal money order.

We do not enclose any money in letters.

Send all orders to

G. SCHIRMER,
Music Publisher and Dealer,
701 BROADWAY,
New York, City.

This is a good song and quite effective.

In introduction will be an excellent feature

James Redpath,
General Manager.

EDISON PHONOGRAPHIC EXHIBITIONS.

popularity, his name did not appear again in a Victor supplement until February, 1917, when he played, on 18194, "Carnival of Venice — Variations," and his own composition, "Whispering Winds — Reverie."

The supplement contains an excellent photo of him, shown with this article. He was seated at the piano. However, there was no sign of the powerful lights he was accustomed to use. The description reads:

"In offering the old 'Carnival of Venice,' with variations of his own, Mr. Himmelreich will bring pleasure to many who remember his operatic and other transcriptions in the past. The tune is decorated with sparkling arpeggios, rippling scale passages and fairy-like trills, such as reveal the special idiom of the pianoforte.

"The artist's own composition, 'Whispering Winds,' appears to be in the nature of an improvisation, for it has a captivating air of being unpremeditated."

"The Blind Pianist" next was heard from on Victor record 18245, when he played what captious critics would term "two old chestnuts," "Silver Threads Among the Gold," and "Listen to the Mocking Bird." The catalog editor made this sensible comment:

"The world of music ought to be grateful to Himmelreich for restoring to popularity a style of piano playing that almost died out with Sigismund Thalberg. Before the overpowering, passionate romanticism of Liszt and Rubenstein, Thalberg's pearly runs, clean-cut arpeggios, even trills, and singing legato tone had perforce to go, but though music gained immeasurably in emotional expressiveness, it lost something of grace and technique.

"Listen to the Mocking Bird" is an old coloratura air of Jenny Lind's day, and Himmelreich has allowed his transcriptive fancy to turn it into its natural pianistic paraphrase—a bravura salon-piece. Similar treatment has been accorded to 'Silver Threads Among the Gold.'"

Himmelreich's final Victor record was announced in August, 1917, and coupled two more cherished "old-timers," "The Last Rose of Summer," and "Blue Bells of Scotland." It is always a pleasure to quote James Edward Richardson, who in 1916, began serving as Victor's best catalog editor and supplement editor:

"18305. Berlioz, the famous French composer, singled out 'The Last Rose of Summer' as the one number worthy of praise in Flotow's 'Martha'—the work in which it was first introduced. 'The delicious Irish air,' he says, 'was so simply and poetically sung by Patti that its fragrance alone was enough to disinfect the rest of the work.'"

"Mr. Himmelreich's piano improvisations are very tasteful, the free use of arpeggios serving to suggest the Irish harp which might have accompanied the old melody in the days before Moore wrote his familiar verses which are now universally associated with the tune. Himmelreich precedes his variations on the old Scottish tune, 'Blue Bells of Scotland' with some striking bell imitations. The melody is then decorated with brilliantly played ornamentations."

Probably the fact that the United States by this time was "up to its neck" in World War I, and recording artists were being dropped instead of added to the Victor payroll, was responsible for Himmelreich's making no more discs for the Camden company. His records, however, continued to be in steady demand.

IV. Edison Cylinders and Okeh and Edison Discs

Ferdinand Himmelreich first became known as an Edison recording artist in February, 1913, when he played "Nearer, My God, to Thee" on Blue Amberol cylinder 1647. In all probability this hymn was selected because the band of the Titanic, known as the largest steamship in the world, had played it while the great steamer sank after colliding with an iceberg. Here is part of the supplement description:

"... The wonderful love that everyone cherishes for this beloved old hymn has been graphically shown twice within the last few years. When President McKinley lay dying from an assassin's bullet it was on his lips to the very last, and when the great steamship, 'Titanic,' sank in mid-ocean in April 1912, it was being played by the band and sung by the doomed passengers even as the boat took her final plunge.

IN LATER LIFE.—This photograph, taken a few years before Ferdinand Himmelreich died, appeared in a 1935 issue of the musical magazine, The Etude, which said that the pianist had "an amazing gift for improvisation."

"This piano rendition by Ferdinand Himmelreich is particularly impressive, as he introduces a series of chords giving a most interesting effect of chimes."

A month later, on 1726, Himmelreich played variations on another of his favorite numbers, "Annie Laurie." The Blue Amberol catalog for April, 1914, published a thumb-nail cut of (Continued on page 49)

SHEET MUSIC

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850. Catalog 25c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver, Colorado 80205 o12698

SHEET MUSIC: Old popular, 250,000 songs. A-Z. No list yet. — Robert Greenlaw, Room 412, 307 No. Rampart Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif. 90026. d6276

SHEET MUSIC, choose from thousands of popular, late 1800s to date. We also buy. — McNeill, 1117 South Taylor Ave., Oak Park, Ill. 60304 d3253

TAPE RECORDINGS

REMEMBER RADIO? Send stamped envelope for list of tape recordings available from radio's golden age.—Lee Book, Box 6338, Pittsburgh, Pa. ap6276

NEW 40-page catalog now ready, thousands of recordings, etc. $2.50 refundable. — Holyoke Gardens 4B, Holyoke, Mass. 01040 ja3882

RECORDER OWNERS, don't let your recorder gather dust. Get some use out of it, make new friends, receive tapes. — Universal Tape Pals, 7214 No. 34th St., Omaha, Nebr. 68112 n1422

PIANOS AND ROLLS

COLLECTOR will pay top prices for Ampico piano rolls, especially the large jumbo B Model rolls. — Kuykendall, 2510 Kenmore Ct., Austin, Tex. 78703 f122741

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs & records, open horn disc phonographs, music boxes & discs, piano & organ rolls, player organ, pathe operatic records. — T. Grattello, 2614 Central, Alameda, Calif. my122971

OLD GERMAN and French bisque dolls; also modern collectibles. SASE for list. — J. Whorton, 1604 8th Ave. West, Birmingham, Ala. 35208 n1861

COLLECTOR'S DOLLS. Always a nice selection at sensible prices. Large detailed list. 25c. — Mrs. Lloyd Hollister, 285 Goshen, North Little Rock, Ark. ja3253

PRIVATE COLLECTION dressed French, German, up to 44". Mail order or appointment. — Helen Fields, 1470 Egmont Place, Far Rockaway, N. Y. Phone 212 - FA 7-2470. je128041

DOLLS FOR SALE. German bisque. Character, old composition. — Daisy Cardoza, 1780 Buena Vista Ave., Livermore, Calif. 94550. Ph. 415-447-3115. mh122511

BISQUE, China dolls; Globe lamps; plates. Marked. List and one colored photo to 25c. — Doll Delights, Selden, Kans. 67757 d38821

ARKANSAS "Little People" hickory nut dolls, 18 characters, 8½" tall, $1.75 each postpaid in U.S.A. — Mrs. C. Hall, 3508 N. 23, Ft. Smith, Ark. 72902 ja3004

THE ENCHANTED Doll House on Rt. 7 in Manchester Center, Vt., is hoping you'll come see us this year or write for our catalog of miniatures, 25c. See our ad in Miniaturia. d64201

DOLL HOUSE. All wood, scaled 1" to 1'. Send 10c for brochure describing our "Turn of Century" model, $95. — Rinali, Box 3486, Olive Orange, Calif. 92665 mh6008

HAND-MADE DOLLS: "Western Settler," 10", antique look, $4.25. Real Peanut Baby, $1. — Second Chance Dolls, The Forks, Ukiah, Calif. 95482 d3023

AUTHENTIC Clarmaid dolls. Rare boy and girl Brus. Colored or natural fashions, Jumeaus, Belongs, Steiners, Poutys 14" to 24" Bye-Los, Three Faced baby, Pinky, Blue Boy, Geo. & Martha Washington, 100 other rare parlor and china dolls. Our trade-name and date incised. Price list for stamp. Group photos 50c. Formerly with Mamma Clear. Satisfaction or refund. — Clara M. Wade, 5911 McClain Lane, Paradise, Calif. 95969 f26501

Fine copies of rare Lady Bru, closed mouth Brus, Boy and Girl Brus, unusual Jumeaus including "Laughing Boy." Fashions, Poutys, Steiners, etc. Authentic detail, finest French bisque high fired, my name and date incised, so they can never be sold as old. Formerly with my mother (Clara Wade). Satisfaction guaranteed. Group photos: Brus 50c; Jumeaus, Fashions, 50c; Poutys, etc. 50c. — Neva Wade Garnett, Calli-Lou Doll Shop, 1881 Marywood Dr., Paradise, Calif. 95969 d38401

ALEXANDER DOLLS: Current and discontinued numbers, 20c for lists. Will buy dolls. — Elma Dorman, Starkville, Miss. 39759 mh124201

DOLLS FOR SALE: Antique dolls, French, German and Character. State wants. — Wright's Doll Ranch, 22065 DeBerry, Colton, Calif. 92324 ja6806

BEST OFFER takes any of these items: (a) 27" flirty-eyed Shirley Temple. All original except one leg. Good condition. Not dressed. (b) Schoenhut piano, 17½" tall, all keys play, some repair that doesn't show. (c) Nails used for dating railroad ties, 1908-1932 except 1910 through 1911. — Mrs. Reuel Bolin, Briggsdale, Colo. 80611 Ph. 303-656-2173. n1844

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 40)

him, with this informative biographical reference:

"FERDINAND HIMMELREICH, PIANIST. This artist was born in New York City, November 15, 1880. He seemed fascinated by the piano even when a child, and when hardly 4 years old would pick out the notes of any melody he heard. At the age of 7 he had already played in public, and attained a considerable fame.

"He studied the piano, harmony and composition under Xavier Scharwenka, Henry Holden Huss, Raphael Josefy, and Alexander Lambert. Himmelreich's playing, while distinguished for brilliancy and accuracy of technique, does not, however lack expression, and his interpretations of many famous compositions are exceptionally impressive."

It is intriguing to recall that one of those distinguished teachers, Henry Holden Huss, as a boy of 15 wrote, in 1878, perhaps the first musical number ever composed about the phonograph. It was called "The Song of Mister Phonograph," and the youthful Huss' name was disguised as "H. H. H. von Ograph." The cover design of the sheet music of this 91-year-old song is shown with this article.

These named in this Edison cylinder section, were Himmelreich's only Blue Amberol records in 1913, but some 10 years later two of his Diamond Discs were dubbed onto the cylinders. They were 4719, "Variations on 'Swanee River,' and 4749, "Lucia Sextet Transcription."

In 1922, Himmelreich made two Okeh records. One, on 4506, combined the familiar "Lucia Sextet Transcription" with "Silver Threads Among the Gold." The other, 4491, coupled "The Lure of Spring" — a composition unfamiliar to me, at least by that name — with "Transcription of 'Swanee River.'"

Probably the Okeh records were made about the same time Himmelreich began playing for Edison discs, for the "Sextet," and "Swanee River" transcriptions were issued by both companies.

Himmelreich first appeared in the Edison disc supplement dated February, 1923. Once more he offered ultra-familiar music. The record number was 51096, and its contents were "Lucia Sextet — Transcription," and "Variations on 'Swanee River.'" The supplement said:

"Ferdinand Himmelreich is known as the blind pianist. His sad affliction, though, does not appear to handicap him, for his technique is well nigh impeccable.

"There is no need to comment on the selections Mr. Himmelreich offers on this disc. They are known and admired by all lovers of real music. The arrangements given here are by Mr. Himmelreich and are wholly original."

During a period of about a year Himmelreich added several other time-tested numbers to his Diamond Disc repertoire. I'll give a list of them here. On two of them he played both sides, but where one of his performances was coupled with that of some other artist, I'll so indicate:

51107, "Annie Laurie," and "Love's Old Sweet Song."
51254, "O Sole Mio" — Transcription; "Frühlingsergen" (Victor Young).
51285, "Believe Me if All Those Endearing Young Charms," & "Last Hope."
51350, "Melodie in F" — Transcription; "Humoreske" (May A. Meyer).
51395, "Dance of the Elves" (a composition by Himmelreich); "Elegie—Concert Transcription" (Houston Ray).

Concerning the record of "Believe Me if All Those Endearing Young Charms," Compton Mackenzie, the editor of "The Gramophone," who is still alive and active in his late 80's, wrote in the issue for April, 1924:

"I have been enormously impressed by my first experience with the Edison instrument and the Edison Re-creations. The first thing that got me was the piano record by Ferdinand Himmelreich, 'Oh, Tell Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms' (sic) or, as I prefer to call it, 'My Lodging is on the Cold Ground' (I don't see why Tom Moore should have the credit of the melody), and I have never heard any piano record to touch it for realism."

Evidently, Mr. Mackenzie, whose magazine still is being published in England, didn't keep the name of the old song straight, but he did like Himmelreich's playing. And, apparently, he hadn't heard the Rachmaninoff records or he would have given them equally high marks for realism.

And so we come to the end of the story of Ferdinand Himmelreich. As we do, I find myself wishing that

(Continued on page 52)

DOLLS I HAVE HAD. Three different proof sheets of 126 rare dolls, sizes 12x9" and 17x9". Price $2 for the set.—Goldie Schnelder, 1047 W. Main St., Galesburg, Ill. 61401 ol20291

SELLING from private collection: 2 china dolls, glass eyes, one brown, one blue. — Dorothy's Dolls, 2707 E. Gum, Evansville, Ind. 47714 ja3633

PORCELAIN, bisque and china copies of antique doll heads, hands and feet (each indelibly marked with my name and year made). 25c for illustrated price list. — Fan Sieber, 608 Baron DeKalb Road, Wayne, Pa. 19087 d3065

HAND-MADE DOLLS: Western Settler, 10", antique look! $4.25. Real Peanut Baby, $1. — Second Chance Dolls, The Forks, Ukiah, Calif. 95482 d3023

ENGLISH WAX $60. Carved ivory doctor doll $100. A&M $70, 18" & 22", $80 ea. Effenberg family, 4 dolls, $25. Nude Patsy $17.50. Shirley Temple Ideal $25. Ideal mint 11" ladies $5. Mint original Alexanders, elaborate Queen Elizabeth 21", 50: 10", $25. Cissettes & Jeffs, $20 pair. Others $10 up. List 4 stamps. — Meme Claffee, 955 46th St. West, Birmingham, Ala. 35208 ja3069

CANADIAN composition, felts, china, rubber, foreign & domestic. List and photostat pictures 50c. — Tex, Box 522, New Westminster, B.C., Canada. ol26121

SEND 50c for list of reasonably priced antique dolls and related articles.—Mrs. Dorsey J. Linn, R. 1, Linn Acres, Bucyrus, Ohio 44820 ja3863

ITALIAN DOLLS: Hand-carved, non-commercial Nativty groups, Shrine figures, 1700's and 1800's. Most in original costume. Each a work of art. $1 cash covers each list, photos, postage.—Kathryn Kleinecke, Via San Marino 36, Rome, Italy. ap64811

MARKED ANTIQUE DOLLS: List No. 12. Dressed Jumeaus, Steiners, wax, large German bisques, Greiners, Superiors, celluloid, chinas, tin heads. Send stamped addressed envelope. — Mrs. W. Skutt, Rose, N.Y. 14542. Tel. 315-587-2272. ja3694 eton Bank, Coffin Bank, Fingers Bank, Mystery Bank, How To Get Wealthy, Musical Automobile, various musical Swiss Chalets, two types of Musical Dancing Clowns, and the Hippo Bank. The Hippo is one of the writer's favorites. A coin, when placed in position and the lever pulled, is automatically propelled forward into the opening and closing mouth of a hippopotamus.

The space banks provide another interesting group and those include the First Interplanetary Space Bank, several Rocket Banks, Flying Saucer Bank, Satellite Bank, Destination Moon Bank, Strato Bank, Plan-It Bank, Space Launcher, and Rocket Launcher. The space banks at this time have particular appeal since our great accomplishment of the Moon Landing. Some of the earlier space type banks are already hard to come by.

Speaking of modern mechanicals that are as of today quite difficult to add to a collection we would include the Hitler Pig, Dog Coin On Nose, Jack Benny's Bank Vault, The Lone Ranger, Dog House Bank, Mr. Peanut Vending Bank, Bomb-It Bank, Owl With Moving Eyes, Alligator Swallowing Coin, Woodpecker With Sound, and three Chein Banks — The Church, Uncle Wiggily, and 2nd National Duck Bank.

As with the old mechanicals there is a wide variety of subject matter utilized in the action of the modern group of mechanical banks. Now, of course, we have added interest of of the numbers of battery operated types and the space group. To this can be added such recent subject matter as the juke box, television, jackpots, gum ball banks, and others.

The earlier types of modern mechanicals that are closer to the 1935 and World War II period are already quite desirable collector's items and will become increasingly so as time goes on. Then too some mechanicals made in the 1950's were not produced in large quantities and these are difficult to find today.

In closing it bears mention that unlike the older mechanical banks that were mainly made in cast iron, the modern group are largely made of either tin or plastic, or in combination. A limited number of the modern mechanicals are made in cast iron, aluminum, and wood. Four of the cast iron mechanicals worthy of mention are the Mary Roebling (Trenton Trust), Birdie Putt, The Catboat, and the Strike Bank (Bowling). The last three made by Utex-qual more or less for collectors.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 49)

we had been left some records of his organ playing. But making decent recordings of the pipe organ was an impossibility when Himmelreich first began playing for sound recording devices, and he seems to have made no records of any kind after electric recording came in.

I suspect he probably played a great many piano rolls about which I have no information. For a man who had been virtually without sight since he was 5, he accomplished a great deal. His mastery of the organ, I think, is especially remarkable. He deserves our genuine admiration. I am sure Ferdinand Himmelreich would be pleased if he could know that, 32 years after his death, many collectors still enjoy his acoustic recordings.

(The End)

MECHANICAL BANKS WANTED

PLEASE NOTE my mechanical bank display ad in this section, listing various wants.—F. H. Griffith, P.O. Box 10644, Pittsburgh, Pa. 15235. ttx

OLD mechanical and still banks, toys, describe, state price, condition. — Scofield's, Box 457, Ridgefield, Conn. mh12069

MECHANICAL BANKS wanted by private collector. No reproductions. State condition, including paint, and price desired. — Max Berry, 388 17th St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006 au126351

COLLECTOR wants mechanical banks. Call collect 203-633-4984 after 5 p.m. — Bob McCumber, 201 Carriage Dr., Glastonbury, Conn. 06033. Member Mechanical Bank Collectors of America. d3255

Mechanical banks wanted by private collector. Highest prices paid for rare banks. No reproductions. State condition, including paint, and price desired. Free appraisal of collections or individual banks. All inquiries promptly answered. Member Mechanical Bank Collectors of America. — Max Berry, 388 17th St. N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. au122154

WANTED

ANTIQUE TOYS AND MECHANICAL BANK COLLECTION

Will Pay Cash
$5,000 to $25,000

TOYS, Inc.,
Box 548
Hermosa Beach, Calif.

tfs

COMMEMORATIVE APOLLO 8 MOON BANK

FIRST SPACE SHIP TO THE MOON —Limited Production—

A must for collectors and a sure thing for dealers. Made of cast iron 4½" tall, 1½ lb. Decorated in colors red, white, blue. Apollo 8, 1968, U.S.A. on ship. Borman, Lovell, Anders names appear on back of moon. Lettering indented.

Certificate of authenticity and number with each bank.

Sample $6.50 postpaid

3 for $16.50 postpaid

Dealer price $39.60 per doz. F.O.B.

Add 10% for postage, excess refunded.

Sold Exclusively by

THE TROJAN HORSE

Dept H, West Side Square

PARIS, ILL. 61944 - Pb. 217-465-3630

Also distributors of other iron banks & toys au07c

MECHANICAL BANKS FOR SALE

PENNY PINEAPPLE cast iron mechanical coin banks, cast iron toys. Picture brochure and prices 25c. — High, Dept. H4, 1219 Girard, Wyomissing, Pa. 19610 a122741

MECHANICAL BANKS. Collector will pay highest prices for individual specimens or collections. No reproductions. — Robert L. McCumber, 201 Carriage Drive, Glastonbury, Connecticut 06033. Member, Mechanical Bank Collectors of America. d4696

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8. (Except for change of address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rates.

All advertisers who submit copy for the first time are definitely requested to furnish therewith banking or other satisfactory references.

TOYS WANTED

Early toys and trains bought continually. High quality cast iron animal drawn carriages, wagons, and fire apparatus, Kenton comic toys. Royal Circus bandwagons, cages vans and calliopes. Large iron transportation toys. Animated bell toys, capshooters and bombs. Deluxe large electric trains and trolleys. Toy and train catalogs. Early tole tin toys. Lithographed paper on wood toys. Toy firehouses. Price with description. — Lloyd Ralston, 447 Stratfield Rd., Fairfield, Conn. d68061

PRE-1940 TOY CARS and trucks. Cast iron, Tootsie Toys, rubber, etc. — Al Sabol, 1257 Ridge Road, Wilmette, Ill. 60091 mh6046

ELECTRIC TRAINS wanted. Wide or "O" gauge before 1940. Also train catalogs and other Tootsie toy cars and trucks. Send price and full description please. — Marvin Benson, 740 Morgantown Rd., Uniontown, Pa. 15401 ja3215

COLLECTOR wishes to buy animated cap shooters, old toy pistols, B.B. guns. Please describe. — Charles Best, 6283 So. Pontiac, Englewood, Colo. 80110 mh6637

TOY TRAINS WANTED. Especially old. Will buy a piece, set or collection, any condition. Send full description and price. R. Robinson, 16517 S.E. 30th St., Bellevue, Wash. 98004 ja344

TOYS FOR SALE

LARGEST STOCK of new books and reprint manufacturers' catalogs on toys, trains, banks, etc. for sale anywhere. List, stamp please. — Lloyd Ralston, 447 Stratfield, Rd., Fairfield, Conn. 06604. d6249

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

History of

The Peerless Quartet

By JIM WALSH

I. A Truly Peerless Quartet

In my opinion, there can be little doubt that the Peerless Quartet was the most popular, successful and long lived of all singing organizations that made records. There are listeners who prefer the Hayden, the American, or some other four-man group, but the Peerless made more records than any of the others and, with changes of personnel, kept going longer — from 1906 through 1928.

When I was in Chicago last May, "Tiny Tim" told me he would like very much to have a history of the Peerless, whose leader through most of its history, Henry Burr, he greatly admires. Other collectors have said the same thing.

It is true that though a great deal of information about the ensemble has been published in scattered HOBBIES articles, it would be difficult to bring them all together and piece out a history. Consequently, I have decided to prepare this concise sketch to give the wanted facts.

The late Frank C. Stanley, whose real name was William Stanley Grinstead, and who was a New York church singer as well as an alderman of the town of West Orange, N.J., organized the Peerless in 1906 and served as its manager until his tragic death from pneumonia at the age of 41 in December, 1910.

In essence, the Peerless was an offshoot of the old Columbia Quartet, in which Stanley also had sung, and a successor to the Invincible Quartet (also called the Invincible Four), one of several vocal groups that Stanley organized, managed, and controlled.

The Columbia Quartet, whose personnel changed a great deal over the years, went back to the turn of the century before. The late Al Campbell, who was a member through most, or all, of its career, and who frequently sang "lead" in the early days, said one group consisted of himself, first tenor; James Kent Reynard, second tenor; Joe Belmont, baritone; and Joe Majors, bass. Another, a little later, included Campbell, Henry Burr, Steve Porter, and a basso, "Big Tom" Daniels, who, like Majors, now almost entirely is forgotten.

Before Burr came in, shortly after he began making Columbia records in 1902, George J. Gaskin had sung the lead. Daniels was succeeded by Frank Stanley, who, although a bass-baritone, did nearly all the lead singing after he joined.

With most quartets, the singing lead is the second tenor's prerogative, but Burr had little chance to function as head man until Stanley died, and he also took a subordinate part in the many duets they recorded. But after Stanley's death there were few records in which Burr didn't occupy the dominant role.

The Invincible Quartet, which Stanley had organized in the early 1900s, was making Edison cylinders by 1904. When working for Edison it comprised Byron G. Harlan, first tenor; George Seymour Lenox, second tenor; Arthur Collins, baritone, and Stanley bass.

On Columbia, American, and other disc records, Campbell or Burr sang the lead in the place of Lenox, who seems to have been exclusive to Edison. I never have seen his name in any other company's catalog.

The Peerless may have been primarily intended as a "revised edition" of the Columbia Quartet. At any rate, it was called the Columbia Quartet on Columbia records for six years after Stanley organized it. The Peerless Quartet name did not appear in a Columbia list until August, 1912, when it was credited with a disc of "That Raggedy Rag." Strangely, Victor also had the Peerless sing the same song, but didn't issue the record until May, 1913—nine months behind Columbia.

Even after Columbia had begun regular use of the Peerless Quartet name, the foursome occasionally was called the Columbia Quartet. The latter name still was used now and then through World War I.

II. Original Peerless Personnel When First Records Were Made

A few years ago, while reading some old Zon-o-phone record supplements, I was surprised to learn that the original Peerless Quartet personnel was not composed, as I long had believed, of Campbell, first tenor; Burr, second tenor; Collins, baritone; and Stanley, bass. Instead, I learned from the July, 1907, supplement that "each member of this quartet—Messrs. Burr, Howard, Porter, and Stanley, are soloists of marked ability and long experience."

"Mr. Howard," I may explain, was Albert Campbell, who made most of his Zono solo records under the assumed name of Frank Howard. But I had not realized that Stephen Carl Porter, better known as "Steve" Porter, ever had been a member of the Peerless.

Then I found myself wondering, as I still wonder, why Stanley, in organizing the Peerless, discarded Collins and Harlan his neighbors in West Orange, who had been singing in the Invincible Quartet, and replaced them with Campbell and Porter. Stanley remained on friendly terms with Collins, who afterwards became a member of the Peerless, as well as with Harlan, and they recorded duets until Stanley's untimely death.

I long had assumed that Porter stayed with the Peerless only a few months, for I never have seen a photograph showing him as a member of

PEERLESS FOUNDER.—Frank C. Stanley, an Orange, N.J., native, founded the Peerless Quartet in 1906. Stanley, who began his recording career playing banjo accompaniments, under the name of George S. Williams, for blackfaced comedy solos by Arthur Collins, organized and managed several other vocal groups, including the Invincible Quartet, the Metropolitan Mixed Trio, the Mendelssohn Mixed Quartet, and the Lotus Glee Club. He died of pneumonia in 1910.

FAMOUS DUET PAIR.—Arthur Collins (upper) and Byron G. Harlan (lower) sang in the Invincible Quartet, which preceded the Peerless. Collins then was baritone of the Peerless from 1909 to 1919. He and Harlan recorded together from 1902 through 1924—the longest and most successful career of any duet team in phonograph history.

the quartet, but lately have come to the conclusion that he must have remained until some time in 1909. I have a Columbia record by "The Peerless Minstrels," (that is only another name for the Peerless Quartet which was made late in 1908), and in which Porter serves as master of ceremonies.

My guess is that he left, and Collins took his place only after Billy Murray formed the American Quartet in 1909 (there had been another organization by that name on Victor records in 1901-02), and Billy prevailed on his old friend, Steve, to join the American. Its other members were John Bieling first tenor, and William F. Hooley, bass. So, according to my theory, as Porter went out of the Peerless, Collins came in.

When did the Peerless make its first records for the various companies? I have been turning through old catalogs, and have come up with some answers, but it is impossible to clarify that question where Columbia is concerned, for it continued to use the name of the Columbia Quartet, as we have seen, exclusively until 1912.

However, the Peerless Quartet name first appeared in a Zon-o-phone supplement in February, 1907, on record 673, "Where Is My Boy Tonight?"

Nevertheless, I suspect that the Universal Male Quartet, which began making Zono records in 1906, was really the Peerless, and that, since Zon-o-phone records were the product of the Universal Talking Machine Company, the Quartet was at first called the Universal Quartet, just as it was the Columbia Quartet on Columbia discs and cylinders.

The lowest numbered Universal Quartet record was 512, "Alice, Where Are Thou Going?" issued in August, 1906, and described as "a baritone solo with quartet chorus." That certainly sounds as if Frank Stanley were leading and that the ensemble was really the Peerless.

Three other Universal Quartet records were announced that same month: 520, "Nearer, My God, to Thee"; 521, "The Rosary," and 522, "Sweet and Low." It is worth observing that as Peerless Quartet records began to be listed, the Universal Quartet disappeared.

The Peerless was slow catching on with Victor, probably because the Camden Company had the Hayden Quartet under exclusive contract and felt it didn't need a competing organization. However, the new group achieved its first Victor appearance in April, 1908, with record 5392,

"Women!" from "The Merry Widow," and soon became a prime favorite that made more Victor discs than any other singing group.

I confidently am expecting someone to arise and gleefully inform me that the Peerless had made a Victor record earlier than this, because its name appears on single-faced record 1806, "Moonlight on the Lake."

The answer to this is that the Hayden Quartet originally recorded the "Moonlight" selection in 1902, and it remained in the catalog under the Hayden name until January, 1908. Then, at some time during the next few months, the Peerless remade it (I wonder why, for the Hayden was still active) and it was cataloged under the Peerless name in September, 1908.

The first appearance of the Peerless on Edison Standard 2-minute records was in April, 1909. It recorded on 10106, a comic sketch, "A Meeting of the Hen Roost Club," written by the famous "Uncle Josh" impersonator, Cal Stewart.

In the same month the Peerless was represented by its first 4-minute Amberol cylinder 110, "Choruses of Six Popular Songs — an attractive compilation in which the boys gave unaccompanied renditions of "Roses Bring Dreams of You," "In Grandma's Day," "When the Sheep Are in the Fold," "Mandy Lane," "Sweetheart Days," and the whirlwind hit of that time, the famous Indian song, "Rainbow."

The Peerless never was called anything except "the Quartet" on Indestructible cylinders, and seems to have made all the Indestructible Quartet records. Its first 2-minute Indestructible, "The New Parson at Darktown Church," also written by Stewart, was made available about November, 1907.

Its first U.S. Everlasting cylinders had the lowest numbers in that Company's list and came out in 1908. They were 201, "Peerless Minstrels 1," and 202, "Lady Love," the latter issued under the Peerless Quartet name. The Quartet also, of course, made records for American, Imperial, Talkophone, and other long-departed concerns whose lists are hard to trace, but I can't say just when their first efforts for those concerns were offered.

III. John Meyer Becomes the Basso

The first check to the Peerless Quartet's uninterrupted popularity and prosperity occurred when Frank Stanley died. There were no new Peerless records for a few months, but an agreement was reached under which Burr took Stanley's place as manager. He engaged John Meyer with whom he had been associated in church work, to take over as bass.

The new combination of Campbell, Burr, Collins, and Meyer soon had all the work it could handle. This was true particularly after 1914, when many new companies sprang into being, and the Quartet's services were sought by practically every record manufacturer in the Eastern United States.

AT THE PEAK OF ITS CAREER.—This photo, from a 1919 Aeolian-Vocalion catalog, shows the Peerless Quartet at the height of its popularity, when its members were Albert Campbell, John H. Meyer, Henry Burr, and Frank Croxton. Meyer's name is misspelled beneath his picture.

In those days, when few popular recording artists worked exclusively for any one company, it was important to "get the jump" on competitors, and when a song that seemed to have popular appeal turned up, to record it for as many firms as possible before the opposition "got wise."

"The Pussy Cat Rag" is a good example of this. Late in 1913 the Peerless obtained the assistance of Ada Jones to take the part of an "old maid sister," and, with her help, recorded that comedy skit for Victor and Columbia discs and Edison Blue Amberol cylinders — about the only companies that amounted to anything then.

A year later they were called on to sing it for an Edison Diamond Disc. As far as I can find "The Pussy Cat Rag" was not recorded by any other individual or group.

From 1915 on, the number of record companies grew rapidly, and, until late in 1920, the Peerless recorded for virtually all of them on the Eastern side of the continent, except Edison, with which Burr had quarreled in 1915 over a contract, and Brunswick, which began recording activities in the United States late in 1919. (It had made hill-and-dale records in Canada as early as 1917.)

Albert Campbell told me there was so much work to be done, especially since Burr had formed, in 1916, the Sterling Trio, which was the Peerless quartet with Collins omitted, that the group had to work three shifts a day to take care of its recording engagements. "We might," Al said, "sing for Victor in the morning, Columbia in the afternoon and Pathe, or some other company, at night."

Burr even added to the multiplicity of record companies by issuing his own Paroquette brand, a 7-inch hill-and-dale cut record, with music on both sides, that sold for a quarter; and the Peerless made so many records for Pathe that some were issued under the old name of the Invincible Four.

But, if all the quartet members were busy, Burr was the busiest of all, for he recorded hundreds of solos a year in addition to singing duets with Campbell and other artists, besides leading the Sterling Trio and Peerless Quartet. It seems impossible that one man could do so much and still find time to head the Record Maker Troupe—later the Eight Famous Victor Artists—on concert tours.

In order to get away, the group would record enough numbers to "carry over" until they returned from their tours, which sometimes lasted three months.

IV. Frank Croxton Succeeds Collins

Late in 1918 or early 1919, Arthur Collins left the Peerless, of which he

(Continued on page 130)

FIRST PEERLESS BARITONE.—Steve Porter was the first baritone to sing in the Peerless Quartet. He had previously sung in the Columbia Quartet and, after leaving the Peerless, was a member of the American and Harmonizers Quartets.

MUSIC BOXES

HURDY GURDY music box with 5 rolls, on wheels. Good playing condition. — Rafferty, 1615 W. 87th St., Chicago, Ill. 60620 f3023

SHEET MUSIC

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850. Catalog 25c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver, Colorado 80205 o12693

SHEET MUSIC: Old popular, 250,000 songs. A-Z. No list yet. — Robert Greenlaw, Room 412, 307 No. Rampart Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif. 90028. d6276

SHEET MUSIC, choose from thousands of popular, late 1800s to date. We also buy. — McNeill, 1117 South Taylor Ave., Oak Park, Ill. 60304 d3253

TAPE RECORDINGS

REMEMBER RADIO? Send stamped envelope for list of tape recordings available from radio's golden age.—Lee Book, Box 6338, Pittsburgh, Pa. ap6276

NEW 40-page catalog now ready, thousands of recordings, etc. $2.50 refundable. — Holyoke Gardens 4B, Holyoke, Mass. 01040 ja3882

VIOLINS

Violin for sale: 1 Antonius Stradivarius Cremonensis, Faciebat Anno, 1715.—Phone 912-233-5420. my70001

MUSIC BOX DISCS

NEED 13 3/4" discs for Symphonium music box. — Herman Unger, Jr., 209 W. Jackson, Chicago, Ill. 60606 d3272

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 40)

Peerless Quartet

FINAL PEERLESS QUARTET. — Taken from the January, 1926, Victor record supplement, this photo is believed to be the only one showing the Peerless in its final stage. In the front row are Henry Burr, its manager and second tenor, and Carl Mathieu, first tenor. Back row: Stanley Baughman, baritone, and James Stanley, bass. The quartet began in 1906 with Frank Stanley as basso and ended in 1928 with James Stanley filling the same part.

had been a member for approximately 10 years, and Burr obtained Frank Croxton, a genuine basso profundo, to take Collins' place. Meyer, who had been singing bass, changed over to being the baritone. When I asked Al Campbell why Collins quit, he replied, "It was a personal matter. He just couldn't get along with Burr."

I wonder, however. Collins and Byron Harlan, his duet partner, for many years had been among the most popular Victor and Columbia artists. Yet no more of their records appeared after October, 1918, when both Companies issued discs of them singing "When Uncle Joe Steps Into France."

It was about then that Edison engaged them to travel from coast to coast, giving the famous "tone tests." I wonder if their being dropped by Victor and Columbia was because those Companies resented their giving the tests, or whether Edison insisted that they not sing for the country's two largest record Companies while traveling and demonstrating the Diamond Discs.

Collins and Harlan continued to record for Pathe, Emerson, Gennett, Okeh, and most of the other companies of the time. Seemingly only Victor and Columbia took offense at their Edison demonstrations, if there really was offense.

At any rate, Collins, whose talents were suited better to being a "coon song" shouter than a quartet member, left the ensemble (perhaps he had resented being crowded out of the Sterling Trio), and with the golden-voiced basso, Croxton, coming in, the Quartet reached probably its highest point of efficiency and popularity.

There was more free-lance work than ever to be done, and it eventually became more than could be handled well. This led Burr to negotiate an exclusive contract with Victor in 1920, by which he and his associates were relieved of the harrying responsibility of rushing about to fill one "date" after another. Henceforth, they could record only for Victor and have ample time in which the Eight Famous Victor Artists could make long Atlantic-to-Pacific and Mexico-to-Canada concert tours.

V. The Final Change

This happy state of affairs continued for several years. The electrical recording process was introduced in 1925. Record 35753, "A Miniature Concert by the Eight Famous Victor Artists," in which Campbell, Burr, Meyer, Croxton, Billy Murray, Monroe Silver, Rudy Wiedoeft, and Frank Banta (all dead now) took part, was the first electrically made 12-inch record that Victor issued.

It appeared in June, 1925, two months or so after the group had given a special radio program to advertise their Victor records. Burr was called on for electrical re-makes of some of his best selling old records; Campbell and Burr sang several new duet recordings; and the Quartet produced a number of re-makes of its big sellers.

Then came a change that shocked most of the ensemble's admirers. The January, 1926, Victor record supplement announced a double-faced disc by "the new Peerless Quartet," of which only Burr remained from the old group.

Carl Mathieu, an excellent first tenor and comedian, who was not, however, well-known, replaced Al Campbell; Stanley Baughman, baritone, took the place of Meyer; and James Stanley, best known for his Pathe records, succeeded Croxton. It seemed especially shocking that Burr should oust Campbell, with whom he had been associated intimately for so many years and in association with whom he had made thousands of records.

When I talked with Al Campbell in 1940 I couldn't bring myself to ask him why such a sweeping change had been made in the Quartet, but Billy Murray told me many Victor dealers had complained that when John Meyer was in high spirits he "cut in so strong that he spoiled the record." Burr eventually decided to make a complete change of his supporting personnel. It must have been a fairly sudden decision involving a great deal of ill feeling but Mathieu, Baughman, and Stanley were taken into the Quartet and participated in another Victor radio concert given early in 1926.

Campbell, Meyer and Croxton remained for a time in recording work. Campbell, at the age of 54, formed a partnership with Jack Kaufman, and for a year or two they sang comic duets for Edison and a number of minor brands, including Harmony and Grey Gull.

Meyer entered into a partnership with Henry Moeller, who called himself "Henry Fairbank" on their records. They sang duets for some of the smaller companies. Before long, however, Meyer decided to return to personally managing his florist shop on Third Avenue, N.Y., which he had owned all the time he was a recording artist. He gave up singing.

Croxton became a member of another male quartet, the American Singers, which at first consisted, besides himself, of Charles Harrison, first tenor; Redferne Hollinshead, second tenor; and Vernon Archibald, baritone. Hollinshead was succeeded in the late 1920s by Lambert Murphy.

Even though there seemed no reason to suspect it, the Peerless Quartet's balmy days were already over by the time Burr decreed his sweeping personnel change. For one thing, the old Victor Talking Machine Company was sold to new owners, who decided not to renew the contracts of nearly all their high-salaried popular stars.

Lacking the prestige of a Victor contract, the stage show no longer could be given under the name of the Eight Famous Victor Artists. Then, too, talking movies were taking over and the demand for elaborate, expensive "live" performances, such as the Eight had given, was rapidly diminishing.

In 1928, with no contract and little demand for stage productions, Burr gave up and disbanded the troupe. And that was the end, after 22 years, of the Peerless Quartet.

All the fine artists who, at one time or another were proud to be members of the Peerless now have entered into their last, long sleep, except possibly Mathieu, who is living still in New York City.

"Jim" Stanley died a few years after developing cancer of the vocal chords, and Steve Porter passed on of a heart attack, in 1936. Collins had died in 1933, and his partner, Harlan, in 1936.

Burr followed in 1941, of a combined heart ailment and Bright's disease; Campbell in 1947, and Meyer in 1948. But their voices will live on dispensing mirth and melody, as long as their thousands of records survive.

(The End)

— o —

White gold is produced by the addition of 25 per cent of platinum or 12 per cent of paladium to a quantity of pure gold.

— o —

The oldest surviving self-propelled vehicle in America is a steam carriage built by Richard Dudgeon in New York about 1868.

— o —

The blowing of big conch-shell horns takes the place of church bells in Kyoto, Japan.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

A Monumental Catalog of Edison Cylinders

PIONEER TENOR—George J. Gaskin was one of the first recording tenor singers. Besides making innumerable solos, he was the leader and manager of the Manhasset Quartet.

EARLY OPERA SINGER—This drawing of a prima donna, Marie Rose, singing into an Edison tinfoil phonograph, first appeared in Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper for April 20, 1878. It is reprinted on the cover of Allen Koenigsberg's comprehensive catalog of Edison two-minute cylinders.

EDISON CYLINDER RECORDS, 1889-1912. Edited by and obtainable by mail only from Allen Koenigsberg, 1532 Ocean Ave., Brooklyn, N.Y. 11230, $12.95.

During the 28 years that I have been contributing to HOBBIES, I have written articles describing the contents of old record magazines and pioneer phonograph publications such as The Phonoscope, but this is the first time I have devoted my monthly department to a review of a recently published book.

Allen Koenigsberg's new compilation of Edison two-minute cylinder records, however, is such a remarkable achievement and has been done at the cost of so much hard work and heavy expense that I feel it is entitled to all the help I can give it. Never before has there been gathered between two covers such a monumental list of the wax cylinders produced in America by the Edison Company. And the manner in which the task has been accomplished is worthy of unstinted praise.

Mr. Koenigsberg tells me he has spent "a small fortune" in compiling and publishing the book, and I imagine about the most he can hope for is to get his money back. I admit $12.95 seems a high price for a loose-leaf volume of approximately 200 pages, but prices of books, like those of everything else nowadays, have been sent soaring upward by our economy's inflationary process.

Koenigsberg himself had to pay inflated prices before he could bring the book to publication. It is worth more than $12.95 of any serious record collector's money.

In effect, the handsome, beautifully printed red-covered book is an expansion and extension of the catalog of two-minute Edison cylinders published in 1957 by the late Dr. Duane D. Deakins, which has long been out of print. It goes farther, though, by giving much information that was unavailable to Deakins, and contains the names and numbers of hundreds of records about which the earlier research worker knew nothing.

For instance, the Deakins catalog mentioned only one record, 7753, "Mike, Mike, Mike," by the obscure comedian, Joe Bonnell, who was listed only as "Mr. Bonnell." Koenigsberg gives his full name and adds three more Bonnell records made in 1901: 7899, "Casey's Wedding Night"; 7833, "I Don't Like the Irish," and 7834, "That's What the Germans Sang."

There are even one or two turn-of-the-century artists I never before had heard of and a large number of previous unknowns who were making records in 1889 and the early 1900s that never appeared in a printed catalog. Among the mysterious artists is Myra Price (a soprano, judging by her repertoire) who made half a dozen cylinders in 1901.

Here I might mention that I am sorry Koenigsberg's listings do not indicate the voice quality of singers. It should not have been much more trouble, and would have taken little space, to add such things as "baritone," "tenor," or "contralto" after the performers' names.

I am sorry, too, that some factor—probably space limitations—caused the compiler to follow the Deakins example of listing records only by the names of the first artists to make them. After all, anybody who is trying to get a complete list of cylinders by, say, Billy Murray, will be missing something if he is not told that Billy remade, in 1906, the record of "In the Good Old Summer Time" that was originally made by William Redmond.

PROLIFIC SINGER—Dan W. Quinn (1859-1938) was one of the most popular of pioneer record makers. Two pages are required in the Koenigsberg book to list his two-minute Edison cylinders.

This practice also causes the contralto, Suzanne Baker, to be omitted from the catalog because her only contribution was a re-make of "Down Where the Blue Bells Grow," first sung by Louise Roberts. Her name appears, however, in an alphabetical list of artists.

I wish, too, that the four-minute Amberol records had been included, but perhaps Mr. Koenigsberg intends to combine them later with Blue Amberol listings in a separate book that would not require anything like the research that has gone into his present volume.

Perhaps I should mention that the lack of names of "re-make" artists is mitigated to a considerable extent by my article in the September and October 1965, HOBBIES, "Artists Who Re-Made Edison Two-Minute Cylinders." I did not undertake to deal with hands and orchestras, but did list singers and instrumentalists, although it is quite likely I missed a few re-made titles.

And, speaking of instrumentalists, I wish such performers were given separate listings under their own names instead of being lumped together under the instruments they played. To find the names of all of Vess Ossman's cylinders, for instance, you have to look under "Banjo" instead of "Ossman."

That is the extent of my adverse criticism, and such considerations become trivial indeed when weighed against the sheer comprehensiveness of the catalog, its relative freedom from typographical errors (the Deakins catalog contained large numbers of mistakes) and the amount of information that never before has been available.

To begin with the cover, there is a beautiful reprint of a drawing from Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper for April 20, 1878. It shows a prima donna, Marie Rose, singing an aria from "Faust" into Edison's tinfoil phonograph, which had been invented only a few months before. The same illustration appeared on the cover of one of the first pieces of music written about the phonograph, Charles D. Blake's "Phonograph — March Brilliant," which is illustrated with this review.

The book, dedicated to the memory of Dr. Deakins, gives an absorbing history of the cylinder phonograph, beginning with John Kruesi's making the first working model from Edison's instructions on November 29, 1877. (Edison also designed a disc machine early in 1878.)

I should mention that the book is the more interesting because of many fascinating illustrations. Also it contains a numerical listing of the huge "concert" cylinders that were made from 1898 to 1901.

SCIENTIFIC INTELLIGENCE.

Edison's Phonograph. — Dr. Thomas A. Edison, the greatest American, has invented a tinfoil phonograph, which speaks with great distinctness and loud enough to be heard at a distance of 150 feet. The speech is also repeated for twenty or a hundred feet, so that it can be heard by the ear and by the eye. The instrument is said to be unique, but it is not a record of the original, particularly as it is not a record.

THE LATEST SCIENTIFIC WONDER.

Edison's Speaking Phonograph. — If you are one of those who have been looking for a way to hear the voice of the dead, or to hear the voice of the living, you will find in Edison's Speaking Phonograph a way to do so. The instrument is said to be unique, but it is not a record of the original, particularly as it is not a record.

NEW JERSEY—Professor Edison exhibiting the phonograph to visitors at his laboratory, Menlo Park.

To me, however, the most interesting section is that reprinting the contents of the original Edison ledger sheets and giving names of the artists who made experimental records from 1889 to 1892.

Closely following is the listing of brown wax cylinders issued by the North American Phonograph Company from April 1, 1892, to August, 1894, when the firm went into bankruptcy and the right to sell phonographs and records reverted to Edison. There are many blanks in the numerical North American list, but presumably the Company was using the "block" system, as did other early manufacturers, and many cylinders with missing numbers never were issued.

Almost 50 years ago the late Ada Jones gave an interview in which she recalled that when she was a girl her stepmother took her to the North Jersey. — Professor Edison exhibiting the phonograph to visitors at his laboratory, Menlo Park.

Edison's Phonograph. — Dr. Thomas A. Edison, the greatest American, has invented a tinfoil phonograph, which speaks with great distinctness and loud enough to be heard at a distance of 150 feet. The speech is also repeated for twenty or a hundred feet, so that it can be heard by the ear and by the eye. The instrument is said to be unique, but it is not a record of the original, particularly as it is not a record.

EARLIEST CYLINDER RECORDING ARTIST?—Mrs. Harriet Atwood, who will be 105 years of age on March 23, 1970, believes she was the first person to record for the white wax cylinders which Thomas A. Edison developed in 1887-88. Mrs. Atwood, who was then Miss Harriet Haddon, a young piano teacher of West Orange, N.J., was summoned to Edison's laboratory to make experimental piano recordings. She later married Edison's assistant, George Atwood, who persuaded her to make the records. Mrs. Atwood has lived in a Richmond, Va., nursing home since 1956. This picture was taken on her 100th birthday.

—Photo courtesy of Richmond Times-Dispatch

FOR THE ADVANCED COLLECTOR OR MUSEUM
BAILEY'S MIDGET PIANO - 1881

For information write:

NORMAN PERRY

Plymouth, N. H. 03264

American laboratory and she made some test recordings. Two are listed here, 1289, "Sweet Marie," and 1292, "The Volunteer Organist." Both were made in 1894, when Ada was only 20 or 21, and they preceded the beginning of her professional recording career by 10 years. Hers is the only woman's name in the list of North American artists.

Edward M. Favor, vaudeville and musical comedy star, who later became a highly popular recording artist, also sang for North American. But its most prolific vocalist was a baritone or bass, Thomas Bott, of whom I never before had heard.

Another untiring contributor to the baritone repertoire was Edward
(Continued on page 50)

PHONOGRAPHS

OLD PHONOGRAPH catalogs! Beautifully illustrated reprints. For example, 1899 Talking Machine Catalog, 64 pages, only $2.95 postpaid. Free illustrated list available.—Allen Koenigsberg, 1532 Ocean Ave., Brooklyn, N.Y. 11230 ap6829

MAINSRING repairs for any phonograph. Let a specialist do it.—Keith Frick, 940 Canon Rd., Santa Barbara, Calif. 93105 ja3882

FOR SALE: 78 rpm vintage records. Most categories: Caruso, Jolson, Melba, etc. Also Edison disc and cylinders, many to choose from, some Berliner records. Books: Zane Grey, Edgar Rice Burroughs, Bobsey Twins, and many more. Please let me know your wants. No lists, please send self-addressed stamped envelope for reply.—Monroe Sands, 308 S. Ellen St., Homer, Ill. 61849 ap6029

SHEET MUSIC

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850. Catalog 25c.—Fore's, 3151 High, Denver, Colorado 80205 o12698

SHEET MUSIC: Old popular, 250,000 songs. A-Z. No list yet.—Robert Greenlaw, Room 412, 307 No. Rampart Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif. 90026. je6276

SHEET MUSIC, choose from thousands of popular, late 1800s to date. We also buy.—McNeill, 1117 South Taylor Ave., Oak Park, Ill. 60304 mh3253

TAPE RECORDINGS

REMEMBER RADIO? Send stamped envelope for list of tape recordings available from radio's golden age.—Lee Book, Box 6338, Pittsburgh, Pa. ap6276

NEW 40-page catalog now ready, thousands of recordings, etc. $2.50 refundable.—Holyoke Gardens 413, Holyoke, Mass. 01040 ja3882

SOUND reflections of Thomas A. Edison. Five choice selections including "Preacher and the Bear" from an Edison cylinder phonograph. Professionally recorded on three-inch real of tape at 3 3/4 IPS. $1.95 postpaid. No stamps please.—Worster Audio/Visual, 1622 Cruce St., Norman, Okla. 73069 mh3407

FABULOUS old time radio, on tape. Quality work at reasonable prices. Detailed catalog free.—The Great Radio Shows, Inc., Box 2511, Denver, Colo. 80201 ja1291

VIOLINS

Violin for sale: 1 Antonius Stradivarius Cremonensis, Faciebat Anno, 1715.—Phone 912-233-5420. my70001

SEASON 1887-88.

ENTIRELY RECONSTRUCTED. SUPERB COSTUMING. MAGNIFICENT PRINTING.

Edith Sinclair Comedy Co.
AND CELEBRATED CHINESE
BRASS BAND & ORCHESTRA, (A DECIDED NOVELTY.)
In the Original Musical Comedy, by Frank Dumont, adapted:

"A Box of Cash"

MISS EDITH SINCLAIR as Grace Ford.
Under the Management of J. H. WASHBURN.
MR. ED. M. FAVOR as Timothy O'Hair.

*Weymouth Mass.
Feb. 25, 1888.*

Dear Sir:
What open time can you offer above Co. in week of March 13, and very best showing terms. Carry over own Orchestra & Brass Band, & give very novel street parade, then like to arrange for one night.
Very Respectfully
Ed. M. Favor week of 27
Fall River
Mass.

FAMOUS COMEDIAN—Edward M. Favor, famous vaudeville and musical comedy performer, made cylinder records in the early 1890s and did not make his last until 1914. This is a printing of a letter written by him to a theater manager in 1888. Edith Sinclair was Favor's wife.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 40)

Francis, and since Emilio de Gogorza called himself "Ed Franklin" on some of his earlier records, I am wondering if Francis may have been a variant of Franklin.

One of the greatest surprises I received came when I learned that the great bass singer, Frank C. Stanley, who founded and managed the Peerless Quartet, made Edison cylinders of banjo solos in 1891 under his real name of William S(tanley) Grinsted. On October 22 he played 12 different numbers and probably recorded each eight or 10 times. He was also one of the artists for North American.

It was natural that Grinsted should be given a try at recording for Edison, since he was born and lived in West Orange, N.J., where the Edison laboratories were situated. He is said to have won the banjo playing championship of New Jersey in 1890, at age 21. Neither he nor anyone else seemed to realize then that he had a remarkable voice.

The Manhansett Quartet, one of the first, if not the first, male vocal organizations to make records, spent a busy Sunday, September 27, 1891, singing cylinders of 20 different songs. The members' names are not listed, but the 1892 catalog of New Jersey records identifies them as Gaskin, Girard, Riley, and Evans.

Gaskin, of course, was George J. Gaskin, the tenor, who made so many solo records. Girard, presumably, was Gilbert Girard, later best known as an animal imitator. Riley was Joe Riley. But I can't place Evans. There was also a unique Male Quartet, whose members are unknown to me.

One reprint of the early Edison ledger sheets was probably of more interest to me than it will be to anyone else who reads it. On a visit to Philadelphia in 1945 I met a talented writer, Edna Hyde McDonald, whose maiden name had been von der Heide, later Anglicized to Hyde.

She knew of my being a collector and asked if I had any records by a relative of hers (an uncle, I think), who had recorded in the very early days. I remember his last name being von der Heide, but can't recall his given name.

I told her I never had heard of Mr. von der Heide, but the page for December 6, 1890, shows him taking part in a very special recording engagement. He was a violinist, and together with A. T. Van Winkle (a descendant, I take it, of Rip Van Winkle), who played the xylophone and metalophone, whatever that may have been; George Schweinfest, the flute virtuoso; D. B. Dana, cornet, and Edward Issler, pianist, made 68 cylinders to be shipped to Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany.

Mrs. McDonald died in 1962. But I have learned that she has a sister, Miss Eleanor Hyde, who is still living, and if I can obtain Miss Hyde's address I shall try to learn the violinist's full name and relationship.

One of the remarkable things about Edison's earlier recording activities is the extent to which piano records were attempted although the piano was, and remained for many years afterward, the most difficult common instrument to record properly.

And it is amazing how many times a composition called "Slightly On the Mash," which probably almost no one now living has ever heard, was recorded by the piano and other instruments. Max Franklin was the pianist whose services seemed most in demand. "The Cat Song" was another favorite.

There were almost no vocal records made in 1889 and 1890, compared to those by instrumentalists, even though on July 19, 1889, "Miss Amy Murray and Master L. Fairlamb" sang "Merry June" and "God Keep You Safe, My Little Love."

On June 1, 1891, George W. Johnson, who must have been the first Negro recording artist, spent two and a half hours singing his laughing songs. Mr. Issler, the conductor of Issler's Band and Orchestra, which made so many records in the early 1890s, played the piano accompaniment.

Duffy and Imgrund's Fifth Regiment Band seems to have been the musical organization most often used. On September 27, 1889, it recorded "The Night Alarm." This for many years was a big selling descriptive specialty under all sorts of labels and by different bands.

George Schweinfest seems to have been almost as versatile a musician as Josef Pasternak, many years later the Victor recording director, who was said to be able to play every orchestral instrument except the harp. Schweinfest made flute, piccolo, piano, and violin cylinders. He was still active as late as 1915 when he took part in Edison tone tests, playing in unison with Diamond Disc "Re-Creations" of the flute. He didn't die until 1949, when he was 87.

One oddity is that the records on several ledger pages were listed as being "made for South America and Minneapolis." What was the connection between these two widely separated areas? Or did phonograph exhibitors from South America and Minnesota just happen to order records about the same time and the same instrumental offerings were recorded for both?

Most readers undoubtedly will be astounded to learn that one of the first persons to make records for Edison in 1887 or 1888, when he brought out his phonograph to play wax cylinders, is still living. She is Mrs. Harriet Atwood, who was a music teacher as a young unmarried woman, Miss Harriet Haddon.

(Continued on page 122)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 50)

One of Edison's assistants, George Atwood, asked her to make some experimental piano records. She did, and she later married him. Mrs. Atwood, who is now 104 and living in a Richmond, Va., nursing home, believes she was the first musician to perform for wax cylinders.

I do not find her name in the ledger pages reproduced in Koenigsberg's catalog, but there is a mention of a "Miss Hangs," who was a pianist. I wonder if this is a misreading of a handwritten entry for "Miss Haddon."

The question of why certain musical selections were recorded was as pertinent in 1889 as it is today. Why was something called "Ballet Music from 'Mathias Sandorph'" supposed to be attractive to the long ago handful of cylinder buyers? It was a clarinet solo played by William Tuson, and afterwards was issued on a North American cylinder by R. K. Franklin. Was "Mathias Sandorph" a now-forgotten opera? I confess my ignorance.

The late Eugene C. Rose, flute and piccolo virtuoso, told me in 1946 that he made Edison cylinders which were played in 1889 at the Paris Exposition. On the ledger page for Thursday, June 6, 1889, I find that "Weinert, Rose and Gast," who played soprano, alto and bass flutes, respectively, made 76 records to be sent to Paris, and on June 13 a total of 654 cylinders was shipped there. On June 15, the recording director, A. T. E. Wangemann, left for Paris, to be in charge of the demonstration.

In his introduction Mr. Koenigs-

ONCE MORE LUCKY JIM, NIPPER, PLUM, POSSY, AND JIM WALSH WISH YOU A MERRY CHRISTMAS AND A HAPPY NEW YEAR!

From left to right, top to bottom:

1. WAITING—LUCKY JIM has climbed to a bedroom mantel to keep watch for Santa Claus. Immediately below him are typewritten reference lists of Jim Walsh's HOBBIES articles.

2. TIRED BOY—Nipper, the "old man" of the Walsh cat family, is now 12 years of age, but has never been ill and is as lively as a kitten. When this picture was taken, however, he was tired after writing a letter to Santa. On the far right of the bed was his idol, the late "Peerless Roger."

3. IRISH DOCTOR—The beauty, intellectual, and spiritual qualities of the famous Prof. Plum Duff Walsh, Ph.D., are shown in this snapshot, where he is being admired by Mrs. Quentin Riggs. When Evelyn Riggs was a girl in Ireland her family physician was Dr. P. D. Walsh, and she immediately "recognized" Plum as her former medical man. That accounts for the affectionate pose.

4. GONE BUT STILL LOVED—This picture is a memorial to two beloved cats of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Jenkins of Rose Hill, Va. Both cats have died this year. In the foreground is Chip; in the background, looking as if she is wearing suspenders, his sister, Lucie-Jim. Chip died in March and the sorrowing Lucie survived him by only a few months.

5. FAITHFUL GUARDIAN—It seems only right to give Mister Jenks, Mr. and Mrs. Jenkins' cherished Boxer dog, a Christmas mention. Mister Jenks constitutes himself the guardian of every kitten born on the Jenkins' Cedar Crest Farm. This picture shows him with his inseparable white companion, Wynkyn.

6. INVENTOR'S NAMESAKE—"Thomas A.," who lived with Mr. and Mrs. Albert Via Jr. of South Boston, Va., died after being struck by a car on Christmas Eve, 1968. His going made Christmas anything but a happy time for Albert and Alice Via. He was named for Thomas A. Edison.

berg makes a statement which I take to mean that no company issued any two-minute cylinders after Edison quit making them in the autumn of 1912. This, however, is not correct.

Indestructible two - minutes were made as late as 1918. The Clarion Company of England made wax two-minute cylinders for several years after that, actually until 1923 or 1924. "Horsie, Keep Your Tail Up" was one of the last two-minute Clarion titles.

Incidentally, Koenigsberg points out that although all Edison cylinders made before the autumn of 1908 are referred to as being of the two-minute type, many of the records made in 1889, and a few years following, played for four or five minutes.

No effort has been made to catalog the cylinders made by Edison distributors who were unable to obtain sufficient quantities from the factory at West Orange. Included in this category would be the many solos and duets that Billy Murray and Matt Keefe sang in 1897 for Bacigalupi Brothers, Edison distributors in San Francisco.

Murray said some of these records were shipped to Hawaii, China, and Japan, but none found their way to Eastern United States, and probably none are still extant. Another distributor made records by an unknown soprano and represented them to be by Mrs. Thomas A. Edison.

I could go on and on writing about Koenigsberg's masterly achievement in producing this badly needed and thoroughly fascinating catalog, but space limitations must prevail. Once more I urge every collector who possibly can do so to invest $12.95 in this catalog, which almost certainly will become more valuable as time goes on.

Let's do everything in our power to assure that Allen Koenigsberg has not expended his "blood, sweat and tears" at a sacrifice and to encourage him to go forward with the other research projects he has in mind.

Koenigsberg deserves all the applause — and all the support — he can get.

(The End)

P. S. I have not obtained Miss Eleanor Hyde's address, but since the foregoing was written I have found, in the MacMillan Encyclopaedia of Music and Musicians, a mention of John Frederic Von der Heide, who probably was the violinist referred to in this article. He was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, February 28, 1857, and, besides studying voice, played many instruments. Von der Heide was director of the Buffalo School of Music from 1882 to 1884, then taught at the New York Conservatory of Music. The date of his death is not given.

DEATH OF THE PIONEER SOPRANO, ELISE STEVENSON

I have learned belatedly and with sorrow of the death of the famous pioneer recording artist, Elise Stevenson, on November 18, 1967, in the South Coast Community Hospital, South Laguna, Calif.

The soprano's maiden name was Elise Stevens, but she changed it to Stevenson for professional work, probably thinking the longer name had a more musical sound. She was born February 9, 1878, in Liverpool, England, and was the daughter of William Stevens, a native of England, and his wife, the former Miss Ann Meehan, who was born in Canada.

Miss Stevenson began making records in 1906, as the protegee of Frank C. Stanley. In the same year she was married to Rusling Wood at the Little Church Around the Corner in New York City. She sang with Stanley until his death in December, 1910, then as a duet partner of Henry Burr and other tenors and as a member of the Lyric Quartet. After the birth of her son, Rusling Wood, Jr., in 1912, she retired from record making and concert work. Her son survives.

The singer lived in East Orange, N.J., for many years, but moved to San Clemente, Calif., in 1950. A death notice in a San Clemente newspaper said that she sang in the beginning of her career with the Metropolitan Opera Company. Her death certificate gives the cause of her death as acute myocardial infarction. She was cremated and her funeral took place November 21, 1967, at Melrose Abbey Cemetery, Orange, Calif.

A biographical sketch of Elise Stevenson was published in HOBBIES for February, 1961.

—Jim Walsh

OLD MECHANICAL BANKS

(Continued from page 52)

extra fine condition of this rare bank is clearly visual in the photo.

Another Try Your Weight Scale turned up, as well as a fine example of the Signal Cabin, both tough tin banks to add to a collection. A Motor Bank, fair condition with the top missing, came to light, as well as another Presto — exterior parts only, all interior operating parts missing. This is the illusion bank where a penny changes into a quarter.

Among new finds during 69 were the World's Banker, Clown & Dog previously mentioned, Indian Chief Bust, Magic Safe, and, of course, Mickey Mouse as per December, 1969, HOBBIES. We should also include the Watch Bank (dime disappears), as while this was privately owned, it was not generally known and it changed hands during the year receiving recognition and exposure.

Another example of the Regina Musical Savings Bank showed up, a Robot, and a near mint Pelican With Rabbit. The excellent original condition of this Pelican With Rabbit makes it worthy of note as evidently the one with the rabbit is the really difficult Pelican to add to a collection.

And last, but certainly not least, we come to Figure 3 and the Tommy Bank. Here again in an outstanding year is an outstanding bank. It is the finest all original Tommy so far known to exist. This bank and the Wimbledon are the two most desirable of the English banks. Together they are a great pair with the soldier in prone shooting position on each. Prior to this Tommy it had been some years since the last one turned up and this bears out the fact that the bank was made in limited quantities during its limited production period.

That about winds up 1969 for now and here's hoping we can all look forward to a great 1970 in mechanical banking.

GLASS SALT SHAKERS

(Continued from page 115)

ter as having "profuse raised scrolling and cloud bands enhanced by floral motifs of various sorts, sometimes touched up with color or gilt."

Everglades shakers have been noted only in a "clambroth" color with fiery opalescence. Such shakers are difficult to photograph by either direct or indirect illumination. Other items in this pattern have been noted in custard glass and in clear, light blue or light green, with some opalescence.

Iris with Meander

This pattern was produced by the Jefferson Glass Company, beginning in 1904. (See HOBBIES, October, 1967, p. 98N.) Items were made in gold decorated: crystal (clear), blue, green, wine, opalescent, and canary.

Isabella

This design is a bust of Queen Isabella of Spain with exquisite detail. Her name is embossed near the base. This shaker, a companion to the Bearded Columbus, apparently commemorates the Columbian Exposition of 1892-3.

These opaque shakers have been observed in blue and in green. Like the Bearded Columbus, they are puzzlingly rare.

Tennessee

This attractive pattern — and the Iowa Pattern — were brought out by the United States Glass Company in 1900. Most items in this pattern are scarce. The shakers apparently are very rare.

—O—

Only one specimen of the rare Arctic bumblebee ever has been found in the world.

—O—

"Art . . . has seven philosophical faces: it is adventure, escape, necessity, creation, individual expression, projection of history, and utilitarian function."

—Felix Marti-Ibanez, M.D.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

The (Premier) American Quartet

PART I
By JIM WALSH

I. A Long History

Musical organizations usually undergo changes of personnel if they stay active a long time. That is true of the male-voiced group which was known as Victor records as the American and on Edison as the Premier Quartet.

Use of the American Quartet name on discs and cylinders goes back a long way—into the 1890s. In March, 1899, a pioneer talking-machine trade organ, The Phonoscope, mentioned that John Bieling, Jere Mahoney, S. H. Dudley, and William F. Hooley, sang for Edison as the Edison Male Quartet, and were later better known on Victor as the Haydn. They also were making records for other companies under the name of the American Quartet.

And in July, Phonoscope readers were told that among the artists recording cylinders for Reed, Dawson and Company, of 74 Cortland st., New York, and 516 Broad st., Newark, was "The Original American Quartet." This presumably was the same ensemble as the one referred to in March.

After Harry Macdonough succeeded Mahoney as the Quartet's second tenor, these artists in 1900, had a manufacturing firm of their own, the American Record Company. It specialized in making cylinders of any desired title to the customer's order.

Then, when the Haydn Quartet went to England in 1902, it presumably sang a series of records listed in the Edison Bell catalog as being by the American Quartet. The titles were largely those of numbers which the singers already had made in the States under the Haydn and Edison Male Quartet names. Presumably, these singers were not allowed to make records under the Haydn name for any companies except Victor over here and Gramophone over there.

II. Early Victor Records by the American

That is one phase of the appearance of the American Quartet name on early records. Another was its use in 1901, on some of the earliest Victor and Monarch discs. The name possibly may have been used also on the 7-inch Berliner and Improved records, which were the forerunners of Victors, but I have not seen it in any Berliner or Improved lists.

The late S. H. Dudley recalled this version of the American Quartet as being composed of himself as baritone; Albert Campbell, first tenor; W. T. Leahy, an Englishman whom he described as a "fine fellow," but about whom nobody seems to know anything nowadays, second tenor; and Hooley, bass.

The October, 1901, Victor catalog contained the following 7-inch discs by the America Quartet:

A916. Medley of Plantation Songs; A911,

(Continued on page 40)

VOL. VIII

October, 1910

No. 10

JOHN
H. BIELINGBILLY
MURRAYSTEVE
PORTERWM. F.
HOOLEY

PREMIER QUARTET

Their Records Are Always Popular Numbers in the Edison Catalog

QUICK POPULARITY—The (Premier) American Quartet gained acclaim so rapidly after being organized in 1909 that in October, 1910, the members' photos appeared on the front page of the Edison Phonograph Monthly.

WHEN YOU AND I WERE YOUNG, MAGGIE

Words by GEORGE W. JOHNSON

Music by J. A. BUTTERFIELD

Sung with Phenomenal Success by
Will Oakland

America's Premier Contra Tenor with

COHAN & HARRIS' MINSTRELS

5 SOUTHERN CALIFORNI
MUSIC COMPANY
1000 10th St. BROADWAY
N.Y.C. 10011

TOP TENOR—When Will Oakland's high counter-tenor voice was added to the (Premier) American Quartet the five-man ensemble was called the Heidelberg Quintet.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

Dancing on the Old Barn Floor; A912, Darling Nellie Gray; A913, Louisiana Lou; A914, Good Bye, Dolly Gray; A915, In Dixie Land; A916, The Bridge, and A917, Nationality Medley.

When the February, 1902, catalog was issued, "Good Bye, Dolly Gray" and "The Bridge" had been remade by the Haydn Quartet. But the following additional American Quartet titles were included:

42, A Negro Wedding in Southern Georgia; 43, A Night Trip to Buffalo; 1071, Quotation from the Last Speech and Favorite Hymns of President McKinley (another in the series of spurious "McKinley records"); 48, Sidewalks of New York; M3519, The Battle of Santiago; and 1068, The Yale Boola Girl.

All these could be had in both 7- and 10-inch versions, except "The Battle of Santiago," which was 10-inch only.

I suspect that Steve Porter may have taken part in one or more of these records, because I remember seeing him and Sam Rous (S. H. Dudley) credited somewhere with being co-authors of the "Santiago" sketch.

At any rate, although the American Quartet was one of the earliest names in the Victor catalog: it was also one of the first to disappear. By August 31, 1904, the Quartet's records no longer were listed, and its titles that remained in the catalog had been remade by the Haydn Quartet.

An oddity is the fact that I have two or three Monarch records with labels that say they are by the American Quartet, but which Hooley announces as being by the Haydn. Records frequently were remade in those days. My guess is that when Victor assigned the Haydn to re-do the selections, the Company had some labels still on hand with the American name, and put them to thrifty use.

I just have noticed something that previously had escaped my attention. The "Battle of Santiago" was listed in Victor catalogs from 1904 through 1909 as being by the Haydn Quartet. However, the catalog for January, 1910, gives the artists as the American Quartet, just as the lists had, prior to 1904.

I doubt, though, that the "new" American Quartet, which was organized in 1909, had remade the Haydn versions, for artist credit reverts to the Haydn in the issues for November, 1910, and May, 1911. It could have been the catalog editor's mistake.

III. The "Big" American Quartet

The American Quartet that disappeared from the catalog in 1904 was not an important part of sound recording history. On the other hand, the ensemble of the same name which was organized in 1909 carved out a lasting niche for itself in the talking-machine's hall of fame.

(Continued on page 50)

PHONOGRAPHS

OLD PHONOGRAPH catalogs! Beautifully illustrated reprints. For example, 1899 Talking Machine Catalog, 64 pages, only $2.95 postpaid. Free illustrated list available.—Allen Koenigsberg, 1532 Ocean Ave., Brooklyn, N.Y. 11230 ap6829

MAINSRING repairs for any phonograph. Let a specialist do it. — Keith Frick, 940 Canon Rd., Santa Barbara, Calif. 93105 ap3882

FOR SALE: 78 rpm vintage records. Most categories: Caruso, Jolson, Melba, etc. Also Edison disc and cylinders, many to choose from, some Berliner records. Books: Zane Grey, Edgar Rice Burroughs, Bobsey Twins, and many more. Please let me know your wants. No lists, please send self-addressed stamped envelope for reply.—Monroe Sands, 308 S. Ellen St., Homer, Ill. 61849 ap6029

EDISON STANDARD cylinder phonograph, with morning glory horn and 30 records, good condition $120. Piano rolls $1 each. Large amount of old sheet music. Banjos, etc. Transportation extra. Write me your wants. — Edward Sheppard, Antiques, Catskill, N.Y. 12414 f1023

PHONOGRAPHS Repaired: New spare parts for Edison phonographs. Send stamp for list. — Gerichten, 23 Waldo Ave., Bloomfield, N.J. 07003 ap3403

PIANOS AND ROLLS

COLLECTOR will pay top prices for Ampico piano rolls, especially the large Jumbo B Model rolls. — Kuykendall, 2510 Kenmore Ct., Austin, Tex. 78703 f122741

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs & records, open horn disc phonographs, music boxes & discs, piano & organ rolls, player organ, pathe operatic records. — T. Grattello, 2614 Central, Alameda, Calif. my122971

AMPICO rolls original, in black boxes wanted. Mint condition, no torn edges. Up to $10 each. — Lacy, Caltech Library, Pasadena, Calif. 91109 my123041

$100 IS YOURS for information which leads to purchase of paper roll-playing piano with pipes, drums, xylophone, etc. — Shaner, 1042 Myrtle, Cumberland, Md. ap6867

OLD PIANO ROLLS for sale. Free monthly lists. Duo-Art Ampico, Welte, blues, foreign, rags, 88-note standards, Aeolian pipe organ & grand. — V.I. & S's Antiques, 28 Clifford Heights, Amherst, N.Y. 14226 f3464

KNABE PIANO. Grand old square, going close to 100 years old. Call (814) 613-0802 or write. — Mrs. Kenneth E. Hileman, 2401 Brumbaugh Ave., Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 f1002

COLLECTOR buys Art Echo, Apollo, Ampico and Duo-Art rolls for own enjoyment. — T. Grattello, 2614 Central, Alameda, Calif. mh3403

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 40)

a contract restricting his services for disc records to Victor and for cylinders to Edison.

For several years he had been singing frequently on Victor records with the assistance of the Haydn Quartet, but now it was decided there was a need for a foursome in which he would star. So John Bieling and Hooley were borrowed from the Haydn Quartet (in which, however, they continued to sing) and Porter was brought in from the Peerless, where he had been singing baritone.

The resulting combination of Bieling, first tenor; Murray, second tenor; Porter, baritone, and Hooley, bass, was christened the American Quartet for Victor use. I don't know why Edison didn't want to use the same name, but it didn't. So the group was called the Premier Quartet on the great inventor's cylinders.

It is interesting to note that Murray, without whom there would not have been a new American Quartet, was much the youngest of the group. He had been born in Philadelphia in 1877, had lived as a boy in Denver, and was 31 when the new group was formed. Bieling, a native of New York City, was hovering around 41; Porter, who was born in Buffalo, N.Y., was 44; and Hooley, born in Ireland, was 47.

Murray must have seemed "just a kid" to the others. They sometimes found his professional behavior rather scatter-brained and irresponsible, even though they conceded he was a genius at interpreting and singing popular music.

The Haydn Quartet's repertoire relied heavily on sentimental ballads, old standard songs, and gospel hymns. But the American was formed to specialize in ragtime, comic songs, and humorous descriptive numbers.

The new Quartet's first record was presented in the Victor monthly supplement for May, 1909. The song, "Denver Town," paid tribute to the pioneer's day of the community in which Billy Murray had spent his boyhood.

One of the countless "cowboy songs," inspired by the great success of Harry Williams and Egbert Van Alstyne's "Cheyenne," was composed by George L. Botsford. He was to arrange most of the songs recorded by the American for several years. The supplement said:

"A new organization of male voices which makes its bid for popular favor with a 'cowboy' number, now quite in vogue. No praise for this new quartet is needed here, as the record speaks for itself—the voices being well-balanced, the words distinct and the music sung with spirit and precision."

"Denver Town" was a 10-inch single-faced record which cost 60 cents. Its number was 5683. A few months later it was combined on double-faced 16521 with a re-make of "A Night Trip to Buffalo." This first had been recorded for Victor by the earlier American Quartet, then remade by the Haydn and now appeared, in a much improved and funnier form, by the new American.

BIELING'S SUCCESSOR — John Young ("Harry Anthony") took John Bieling's place as first tenor of the (Premier) American Quartet in 1914. Young, who lived until the early 1950s, also sang in the Criterion Quartet.

"A Night Trip to Buffalo" has special interest for me because it was the first record I ever heard. I was 2 and being held in my mother's arms when I listened to its sounds emerging from the external horn of a neighbor's Victor. Through all these years I never have forgotten it!

One month after this New American record appeared, Edison also used "Denver Town" as the means of introducing the new Quartet, which it called the Premier, to its cylinder customers. The description in the New Phonogram for June, 1909, provides us with a puzzle, as you will discover:

"10155 Denver Town, Premier Quartet . . . Another cowboy song, telling how a cowboy wooed and won his bride. It is sung by a new combination of artists, including Will Oakland, John H. Blehling (sic!), Billy Murray and W. F. Hooley. Unaccompanied. Music, George Botsford; words, Harry Breen."

The puzzling thing about this annotation is that it mentions Will Oakland, the counter-tenor, as one of the members of the Quartet, but omits Steve Porter, the baritone. I never have heard the cylinder of "Denver Town," but Oakland certainly doesn't sing in the Victor disc, and it doesn't appear likely that a quartet would be composed of a counter-tenor, two tenors, and a bass.

Probably the use of Oakland's instead of Porter's name was just a mistake, but it may have been that Porter was missing when the recording date was scheduled, and Oakland was substituted. Of course, two or three years later a good many records were made in which Oakland was added to the American, and the resulting organization was called the Heidelberg Quintet.

I seriously question, however, that my old friend, Will, took part in the Edison cylinder of "Denver Town."

IV. Recorders of "Hits"

From the start of its recording career the new American Quartet was brilliantly successful. During the five-year period from the announcement of its first record in May, 1909, to John Bieling's leaving in the spring of 1914, the Quartet cut into wax many of the greatest song hits in American musical history, and a large number of its discs and cylinders had sales that were remarkable for that period.

When Victor issued its first alphabetically arranged record catalog in January, 1912, photos of Bieling, Murray, Porter, and Hooley were published, and the following comment was made under the American Quartet heading:

"This popular organization is composed of four singers well known to Victor audiences . . . and who have had a long and successful experience in the making of talking machine records. In their renditions of popular songs of the day and humorous specialties they are unequalled. 'The American Quartet makes disc records exclusively for the Victor.'"

A glance down the list of American Quartet records in the Victor catalog for November, 1914 (issued a few months after Bieling left because of throat trouble), gives a revealing idea of the number of hit tunes it recorded during its first five years.

This is by no means a complete list of the organization's early recordings. It is, however, an accounting of songs sufficiently popular to have been considered hits:

"All Aboard for Dixieland," "And the Green Grass Grew All Around," "Any Little Girl That's a Nice Little Girl," "Baby Rose," "Casey Jones," "Come, Josephine, in My Flying Machine," "Grizzly Bear," "Hitchy Koo," "It's a Long, Long Way to Tipperary," "I Want a Girl Just Like the Girl that Married Dear Old Dad," "Mary Was My Mother's Name," "Moonlight Bay," "Oh, You Beautiful Doll," "On the Banks of the Wabash" (a revival of a great 1898 hit), "On the Mississippi," "Ragtime Violin," "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," "Row, Row, Row," "Sailing Down the Chesapeake Bay," "That Mysterious Rag," "That Old Girl of Mine," "When I'm Alone I'm Lonesome," and "You're My Baby."

Most of these were made on Edison cylinders 2-minute Standard, 4-minute Amberol, and 4-minute Blue Amberol, as well as Victor discs. Whoever made the decisions as to the songs the Quartet would record proved he knew a hit when he heard one. And George Botsford's arrangements helped them to even greater popularity.

As the Heidelberg Quintet, with the addition of Will Oakland's tree-top high tenor notes the ensemble sang such genuine successes as "By the Beautiful Sea," "Floating Down the River," "Harmony Bay," "In Apple Blossom Time," "In the Heart of the Kentucky Hills," "My Little Lovin' Sugar Babe," "Teasing Moon," "Waiting for the Robert E. Lee" (one of the great hits of all time), "Way Down South," and "You're a Great Big Blue-Eyed Baby."

Of all the American Quartet records, "Casey Jones," which swept the Nation in 1910, was the biggest seller. Its popularity was so great it had to be re-recorded twice after the original version was placed on the market. Walter B. Rogers, the conductor of the Victor Orchestra, sang the baritone part in one of the remakes as a substitute for Steve Porter, who had not received a notice sent him to be present.

(Continued on page 130)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 50)

Variety said in an October, 1940, issue, when Billy Murray was emerging from retirement and making a recording comeback, that the Victor record had sold more than 2,000,000 copies. The Edison version, on both 2- and 4-minute wax cylinders, and the Blue Amberol, must have done almost equally well.

Probably the runner-up to "Casey Jones" was "It's a Long, Long Way to Tipperary," which was issued in November, 1914, after Bieling was no longer in the Quartet. "Tipperary" most likely would have equalled "Casey" except for competition.

Besides the Quartet record, Victor also issued it by John McCormack and a male chorus (probably the Orpheus Quartet), as a march version by the Victor Military Band, and as a 12-inch dance record. The Quartet's record of "Casey Jones" had no such rivalry.

"Waitin' for the Robert E. Lee," of course, was a huge seller. So was "Oh, You Beautiful Doll," among the many others I have mentioned.

Billy Murray used to tell an amusing story about the "Doll" song, which was a favorite of the austere President Woodrow Wilson. One day the Quartet received a disagreeable letter from an irate someone whom Billy (who wasn't a student of literature) remembered as Walt Whitman, the poet. The correspondent began by saying he simply would address them as "sirs" because he couldn't consider them either men or gentlemen. He then demanded, in pungent terms, to know how they could have played false to their artistic consciences by recording "such abysmal trash" as "Oh, You Beautiful Doll." The writer said they should be thoroughly ashamed of themselves and he hoped they wouldn't sing such rubbish any more.

The Quartet laughed over the letter, then dispatched a reply saying that the Victor record of "Beautiful Doll" already had sold half a million copies and the Edison cylinder also was going big. With this sort of a sale, they said, their artistic consciences weren't bothering them in the least.

Billy told this story to me in person in 1938. A few months later he used it on a nationwide radio program. I am sorry I didn't tell him its fatal flaw—that Walt Whitman had died in Camden, N.J., in 1892. This was 20 years before the "Beautiful Doll" record was made, and therefore he couldn't have criticized it except through a spirit medium or an ouija board.

The indignant letter-writer probably was Walt Mason, who wrote a syndicated newspaper column in verse. He frequently insisted in his column that the phonograph companies would do a much bigger business if they would stop recording comic specialties, ragtime, and Negro songs, and issue nothing but opera, chamber music, and symphony.

Mr. Mason used to expound his quaint ideas in letters to the recording companies. So I have no doubt it was he who took the American Quartet boys to task.

As far as I have learned, no one who heard Billy's broadcast referring to Walt Whitman as writing the letter realized that "the good gray poet" had gone to his glory many years before the irascible writer's communication gave the Quartet a good laugh.

By the irony of how things work out, "Oh, You Beautiful Doll," despite its undeniably crude words and cheaply expressed sentiment, has now perhaps on the strength of its irresistible tune, established itself as a popular song classic.

(To be continued)

CORRECTION

Through an error in make-up, the following three lines precede column 1, on page 130:

The evidence indicates that the new "big" American Quartet was formed largely because Billy Murray signed

JONE VAN VLEET
600 33rd St. West Des Moines, Iowa 50265
LeGras cameo vase, 5" barrel shape, 3" dia., purple cut & enam. flowers on peach, $65.
Wheat & Barley cov. butter, creamer, spooner, cov. sugar: clear, few minor chips, $48.
King's Crown spooner, $8.50.
R.S. Germany, grn. mk., hatpin holder, yel. & white roses on white, brn., & grn, $18.50
Deer & Pine Tree bread tray, sm. chip on bottom rim, $17.
Single FGMM milk glass plate, grn. paint, $6.
Trans. extra, SASE please. fp

CORNER CUPBOARD

52 N. Main Street

E. Hampton, Conn. 06424

Phone 203 - 267-2678 - By appointment.
RARIETY in cut glass: Vaseline footed bowl with rolled rim, knob stem, exceptionally fine cut, write. Cut bowl 8 1/2" diam., 3 1/2" h. Daisies, hobstars, cross-hatching, etc. $38. Lacy Sandwich 8" plate, peacock feather w. thistle & scroll center, $40.
Flint goblets: Horn of Plenty $36; Diamond Pt. $25; rare Minerva pattern water pitcher, slight base roughness, $35.
Roy. Vienna demi-tasse pot, covered sugar, creamer w. Angelica Kauffman scenes, 2 signed, cream, red, green, MUCH gold, excel. cond. Beehive, Austria mark, $80.
Staffordshire: Canova soup plate 10 1/2" diam. pink w. green border, T. Mayer, $20.
Salt glaze pitcher 8 3/4" h. allover raised design, applied handle, $40.
S lopian nides, c/s blue and white deer pattern $85. Pr. soft paste 6 3/4" blue and white plates, fisherman, cottage scene, $18 ea. Pr. 6" med. dk. blue plates, R. Hall, Hospital near Palissy, France, $16 each.
Porcelain: late 18th, early 19th cent., no mark, white w. baskets of flowers in shades of purple, gold excel. (a) bowl 6 1/2" diam, $14; pr. c/s w. applied hdlcs., $12 ea.
Coin silver: Serving spoon, Richards & Williamson, Phila., Pa. 1790s, excel. cond. $35; pr. tspns. J. Shoemaker, brite-cut, tips of bowls worn, 1790s, Phila., Pa., $28 pr.
Eagles on backs of bowls worn on all three. Tablespoon by Peter & Ann Bateman, London, 1803, $55.
List coin & English silver 30c.
Post. and ins. extra. PLEASE, SASE for replies or check return. fp

THE DALTONS

95 Ellery St. Providence, R.I. 02909
Phone 401 - 331-3486

Brass rooster nutcracker, $5.
Cute grey and white iron kitty with blue bow doorknob, 8" high, $10.
Iron still bank, black & white puppy with bee on rear, $15.
Iron cottage door stop, paint flaked some, $7.50.
Iron door stop, sm. basket of flowers, 5 1/2" high, flaked, $4.
Iron tobacco cutter, National Specialty Mfg. Co., #1, 15" long, original yellow and red trim, $8.50.
D... .. porcelain figurine, dog pulling skirt of little girl, $5.
Cloisonne cig. box, "China" blue with white flowers, white round jade insert on cover, bottom row of cloisons missing on back, $6.50.
Two Chinese figurines, men in green robes, one carrying basket of flowers, one a long pipe, China, $15 the pair.
Imari 8" plate, blue vase with terra cotta flowers and butterfly in center, $12.
Miniature unglazed gray teapot, 2" high, h.p. cherry branches and sheaf of wheat, rattan hdlc., no mark, $10.
Darling Japanese sugar bowl, 4 1/4" high, green handles, Jap. girls chasing butterflies, no mark, $5.
Postage and insurance extra. fp

THE OLD HOUSE

Buzzards Bay, Mass. 02532

Pittsburgh Daisy wine ..... $6.75
Horn of Plenty honey dish ..... 7.50
Loop & Dart Diam. orna. goblet ..... 8.50
Ripple 6" plate ..... 9.50
Diag. Band with Fan wine ..... 9.50
Beaded Swirl Band 10" tray ..... 9.50
Daisy & Button V orna. celery vase ..... 12.00
Flute Double egg cup ..... 12.50
Maple Leaf footed bowl ..... 12.50
Frosted Ribbon open compote ..... 20.00
Yellow Birch Leaf sauce dish ..... 8.00
Amber Diamond Quilted tumbler ..... 12.00
Transportation extra, No reproductions. fp

QUALITY

WHOLESALE ANTIQUES

Send 25c with proof of dealership, to receive our catalog with extensive listing.

KAUFMAN cup & saucer, sgnd., $5.00

HOUSE OF WILLIAMSBURG

11218 W. 62nd Street

LaGrange, Ill. 60525 fp

ANY MINT U.S.A. STAMPS WILL BUY JEWELRY

Huge NEW 200 page catalog offers 10,000 items to choose from... JEWELRY KITS - RINGS, PEARLS - BOOKS, etc.

TRADE YOUR SURPLUS STAMPS for GIFTS

FULL FACE VALUE ALLOWED on MINT U.S.A. stamps (No Postage Dues please) toward any item listed in GRIEGER'S FREE CATALOG. Stamps must have gum - but O.K. with thin spots, creases or small tears - MUST BE USABLE AS POSTAGE.

USED U.S.A. COMMEMORATIVES ALSO ACCEPTED. May be mixed kinds but must be in good shape... NO TEARS - NO THIN SPOTS - NO CREASES. Lots containing poor stamps will be returned to you intact - WE WILL NOT SORT. GRIEGER'S Inc. will allow 39¢ per 100 (off paper) and 21¢ per 100 (on paper) for USED U.S.A. commemoratives.

USED STAMPS ACCEPTED ONLY ON JEWELRY ITEMS AND CUT STONES. MINT STAMPS ON ANYTHING IN GRIEGER'S FREE CATALOG.

Imports from all parts of the world!

FREE CATALOG

Everything needed to "MAKE JEWELRY FOR PROFIT"

GRIEGER'S INC.

Dept. 24, 1633 E. Walnut, Pasadena, Calif.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

The (Premier) American Quartet

PART II

By JIM WALSH

I. Mr. Murray's Caprices

As I hinted last month, the other members of the male quartet known as the Premier on Edison records, and as the American on Victor, sometimes found Billy Murray's carefree behavior rather upsetting. This was especially true during spring training time for the major league baseball clubs.

Victor or Edison at that time might send out an emergency call for their star comedian only to find he was no where near the recording studios, but was making the rounds with the New York Yankees (then called the Highlanders) as they played their exhibition games.

Once in a while the Highlanders let Billy play right field on these jaunts, and then his happiness was beyond computing. He was such a baseball enthusiast that for many years he prided himself on knowing personally every player in the American and National Leagues, and when on tour he was a welcome visitor to the "dug-out" of any big league team.

One result of this happy-go-lucky attitude was that Murray sometimes failed to appear for recording dates and concert engagements, of which the Quartet had a great many in and near New York. When this happened young Walter Van Brunt (he is still living and better known today as Walter Scanlan) was called on to substitute for "The Denver Nightingale."

The 19-year-old Walter sang the lead in the American Quartet's Victor record 16962, "I Want a Girl Just Like the Girl That Married Dear Old Dad," and in 17030, "Mary Was My Mother's Name." He also took part in 17245, "Beautiful Doll, Goodbye," and finished several high notes that Billy began but found, for the time being, beyond his reach.

Harry Macdonough sang the lead in the Quartet record 17397, "On the Banks of the Wabash." I long have wondered why it was not labeled as sung by the Haydn Quartet, of which Macdonough was second tenor. Considerably later, in 1919, George Wilton Ballard took Murray's place in the Edison Diamond Disc of "Mammy's Lullaby" cataloged as being by the Premier Quartet.

The lovable Mr. Murray's proneness to be a "no-show" for concerts was so great that Bieling, Porter, and Hooley made an arrangement with Van Brunt to pay him $5 each to come to the theater or other place where the concert was to take place and sit in the audience. If Murray appeared, Walter just sat and listened. If the star tenor stayed elsewhere, Van Brunt filled in and received Murray's share of the fee.

PINCH-HITTER — Young Walter Van Brunt (known today as Walter Scanlan) sometimes was called on to substitute for Billy Murray in the (Premier) American Quartet.

Harvey Hindermeyer recalled that one time he went with the Quartet to Albany as second tenor for an engagement that found Murray among the missing.

Once in a while when Billy did show up his attitude was a source of vexation. John Bieling told me a hilarious story of an occasion when the Quartet had an engagement to sing in New York before some sort of group of wealthy men.

EDISON GROUP—This photo of the Harmonizers Quartet, which made many Edison records under the Premier Quartet name, appeared in the Victor record supplement for February, 1921. Left to right, members are Charles Hart, first tenor; Billy Jones, second tenor; Steve Porter, baritone, and Harry Donaghy, bass. Jones made Victor records under the assumed name of Victor Roberts.

"They were all millionaires," John said. And he recalled that well in advance of the concert the other members admonished Billy to be sure to come in formal attire, "because these rich guys expect us to be dressed up. They're not looking for a vaudeville quartet with a tramp comedian as one of the members."

"Sure, sure," Billy assured them, "I'll be there all dolled up in my soup and fish."

"But," said John, taking a deep breath and obviously living the experience over again, "he didn't show up at all until about 10 minutes before the show was to start. And, Jim, I wish you could have seen him! He had on a ragged old green sweater and a pair of shabby brown pants caked with grease and mud, and he looked like something no self-respecting cat would have dragged in. Of course, Steve, Bill and I jumped on him and asked what he meant by turning up for a millionaires' concert in a get-up Nat Wills would have been ashamed to wear in his "Happy Tramp" act. And Billy said:

"Well, boys, it was this way. I had some time to kill this afternoon, so I decided to go to my friend Joe's garage and work on my car. I dressed in these old clothes for the occasion. After I got my car fixed another one was brought in that needed some work, and you know me—I'd rather work on a car then eat—so I fixed it, too.

"Then, I started home to change clothes, but on the way I met some boys playing ball in a vacant lot and of course I couldn't pass up a chance to get in the game. The lot was muddy and I did a lot of sliding, so that's why I'm so dirty. Well, by the time the game was over it was too late for me to go home and put on my glad rags, so I just came on here."

"But, Billy," his associates protested, "what good are you going to be to us now? You can't go on the stage before all these rich men looking the way you do!"

"Oh, that's easy," the star tenor replied, "I'll just walk down to the footlights and tell these guys how I happen to be looking the way I do, and they'll eat it up!"

"And," said John, "he did and they did! He strolled down front and told those big shots about the way he had spent time working on cars and then got into a ball game with a bunch of kids when he started home to dress, and they almost fell out of their seats! I never heard men howl so! Billy had them eating out of his hand, and he was a lot bigger hit than if he had looked like a decent human being! He had such a personality he could pull that sort of a stunt and get away with it, but none of the rest of us could!"

II. Recordings on English Zonophone

Although Murray's contract permitted him to make solo and duet records for the American Zonophone Company, which was operated by Victor, the Quartet seems not to have sung for Zon-o-phone on this side of the Atlantic. Some of its recordings, however, were issued in England on discs, and most of its Edison cylinders sold well abroad.

I have a copy of HMV Record 2-4029, "That Hypnotizing Man," issued in Great Britain in 1912, which has the Victor record number, 17031A cut into it. Unlike the American version, it is single-faced.

Late in 1913, The British Zonophone Company began to splurge with reissues of records originally made in the States for Victor. In November, on 1163, it combined "And the Green Grass Grew All Around" with "Mary Was My Mother's Name" and bragged with a fine disregard of the literal truth:

"Absolutely and unreservedly exclusive to Zonophones! The name may look like some complicated names concocted by competitive firms to mislead you, but listen to the record and you'll hear the difference! The four famous singers have no equal in the world for part singing and make no disc records but Zonophones. Remember the simple name — American Quartet. There's not a pin to choose between the two exhilarating titles they open the ball with: for effective and pointed singing, clear diction, and general brightness and 'go' there's not a record on the market to beat 1163. And it's exclusive, let us repeat."

In February, 1914, Zonophone combined on 1228 the American Quartet version of "On the Banks of the Wabash" with "Goodbye, Summer," by the rival Peerless Quartet. On the American side the supplement said:

"The finest vocal quartet in the world—the American Quartet, exclusive to Zono—are responsible for the harmonious 'On the Banks of the Wabash.'"

In the same supplement Ada Jones and Billy Murray were called "perhaps the finest comedy duettists in the world," which, no doubt, they were, if only "mixed teams" were being considered. Zonophone ceased to import Victor matrices after World War I began, a few months later.

III. John Young Succeeds Bieling

I mentioned last month that first tenor John Bieling—known to his associates as "The Canary," because, as Billy Murray said, "he never blasted"—stayed with the Quartet for five years but was compelled to leave in the spring of 1914 because of throat trouble. His last records as a member of the Haydn Quartet seem to have been two issued in April—17544, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me" and 17545, "Cross the Great Divide (I'll Wait for You)." His final American Quartet record was announced in May—17554, "Do You Take This Woman for Your Lawful Wife?"

It is likely, however, that he also sang in the Heidelberg Quintet record

The Criterion Quartet

Come in and Hear Them Sing "Lucky Jim"—
Ask For It

TENOR AND BASS—Two of the members of the Criterion Quartet also sang in the (Premier) American. John Young (center, holding music) took John Bieling's place, and Donald Chalmers, at extreme right, became the bass when William F. Hooley died in 1918. Other members were Horatio Rensch, tenor, and George W. Reardon, baritone.

This photo is reprinted from the back cover of the Edison Amberola Monthly for October, 1921.

17560, "By the Beautiful Sea," which was held back until August for appropriate summer-time issue. It contains what I consider the trickiest line in any popular song: "I Want to be beside your side, beside the sea, beside the sea-side, by the beautiful sea."

Just possibly he was also in two Quintet sides couped in August on 17599, "They're On Their Way to Mexico" and "Across the Rio Grande." Both songs referred to border troubles the United States was having with Mexico.

Bieling's place was taken by John Young, then better known as the tenor of the gospel hymn-singing duet team of "Harry Anthony and James F. Harrison," whom Billy Murray used to refer to facetiously as "the Come to Jesus Twins." Young also sang in the Criterion Quartet, whose other members then were Horatio Rensch, second tenor; George W. Reardon, baritone; and Donald Chalmers, bass.

No announcement of the change in personnel was made when Bieling quit to become a traveling salesman for a Victor distributor in New York, but the following appeared in the March, 1915, issue of The Voice of the Victor:

"John H. Bieling, who has been a member of the road staff of the New York Talking Machine Company . . . for the past year, resigned from his position

FINAL PHASE—This grouping shows the American Quartet in its final phase (1920-1925), when it was the same as the Peerless, except that Billy Murray was substituted for Henry Burr to sing with Campbell, Croxton, and Meyer.

recently in order to enter business himself as a Victor dealer. Before commencing work in the retail field Mr. Bieling will take a short vacation, which he has well earned after his many years of active participation in the talking machine industry."

Bieling opened a Victrola shop in Hempstead, N.Y., and operated it until he retired.

In November, 1913, shortly before Young succeeded Bieling, Edison formally introduced the Diamond Disc phonographs and records. The Edison Company naturally wanted to offer Diamond Discs by Billy Murray and the Premier Quartet, but was unable to do so at first because Murray was under exclusive contract to Victor (and, by extension, Zonophone) for discs, and was allowed to sing for Edison only on cylinders.

It required some time to persuade Victor to renegotiate his contract. At length this was done, and Murray's first Edison discs, "California and You," "I'm Goin' Back to Louisiana," and "My Creony Melody," appeared late in 1914.

The Premier Quartet's first Diamond Discs — 50233, "Tennessee, I Hear You Calling Me"; 50245, "I'm On My Way to Dublin Bay"; and 50258, "Moonlight Bay" — appeared a few months later. From then until Murray signed an exclusive Victor contract in 1920, the Quartet was a prominent feature in both Edison Diamond Discs and Blue Amberol cylinder lists.

Of course, the Quartet had been making the cylinders all along. It is worth noting that its Standard cylinder 10575, "Skeleton Rag," was the last 2-minute record Edison issued before discontinuing the 2-minute series in November, 1912.

The combination of Young, Murray, Porter, and Hooley remained intact until "Bill" Hooley, who was born in Cork, Ireland, April 16, 1861, died in a New York City hospital, October 12, 1918. He had remained active until a few weeks before his death, and filled his last Victor recording engagement on August 1, 1918.

Like the earlier group, the revised Quartet recorded and helped to make popular many songs that were recognized as hits. Its first Victor record, 17639, "It's a Long, Long Way to Tipperary," issued in November, 1914, probably was its biggest seller, but "Tipperary" must have had a run for its money from 17652, "When You Wore a Tulip and I Wore a Big Red Rose," which came out in December.

The Quartet's other hit titles included "America, I Love You"; "Chinatown, My Chinatown"; "Gasoline Gus and His Jitney Bus"; "Goodbye, Broadway, Hello, France"; "Keep Your Head Down, Fritzie Boy"; "Oh Johnny, Oh Johnny, Oh"; "On the 5:15"; "Over There"; "Where Do We Go from Here?" and a revival of "You're a Grand Old Flag." Virtually all its records could be considered big sellers.

IV. Don Chalmers Becomes the Basso

Hooley's death made it necessary to find another bass, and Donald Chalmers, who sang with Young in the Criterion Quartet, was chosen. The new group's first Victor Record did not go on the market until July, 1919. It was a Theodore Morse composition, "Lullaby Blues," and was followed in September by "Anything Is Nice If It Comes From Dixieland."

Meanwhile, Billy Murray's 10-year joint contract with Victor and Edison expired early in 1919. He decided not to renew it, but to free-lance, since some singers, like Henry Burr, who worked for virtually all the numerous record companies of the day on a free-lance basis, were doing better financially than he.

The Quartet also free-lanced and sang not only for Victor and Edison, but many other companies, including Columbia, Pathe, Aeolian-Vocalion, Emerson, Gennett, Okeh—just about all that were of any consequence, excluding Brunswick, whose recording activities began late in 1919. Most companies called them the Premier-American Quartet, a combination of their Victor and Edison names, but Columbia used both American and Premier-American, and Okeh preferred American Quartet.

On the Aeolian-Vocalion record of "Anything Is Nice If It Comes From Dixieland," it was called the Murray Quartet. This shows the Company believed that without Murray there really would have been no Quartet.

V. Advent of the Harmonizers

The ensemble with Chalmers as the deep-voiced "foundation" remained active for only about a year, when Murray was offered a lucrative exclusive Victor contract in the summer of 1920. The Peerless Quartet also was signed exclusively, and under the terms of the new arrangement it was provided that the American Quartet would be the same as the Peerless of Campbell, Burr, Meyer, and Croxton, except that Murray would sing the lead in the place of Burr.

The last Victor record by the group that included Chalmers was "Floatin' Down to Cotton Town," issued in Jan-

(Continued on page 44)

AGNES KOEHN, ANTIQUES

5100 Johnson Ave. S.W.

Cedar Rapids, Iowa 52405

Phone 319 - 364-6591 Member N.A.D.A.

"FINE FRENCH DOLLS"

All dolls are closed mouth and completely perfect. Transportation charges are additional.

1. Marked E.J. 17½" t., finest quality bisque head with closed mouth, pierced applied ears, paperweight blue glass eyes with feathery lines, real blonde hair, fine cond. composition body with jointed wrists, old soft blue sat. dress trimmed in lace, jaunty straw hat, old French shoes with Paris Bee Depose mark, completely dressed, mkd. E 6 J low on neck, body has label "Bebe Jumeau Diplome d'Honneur, a very lovely early Emile Jumeau doll.
2. Early French Fashion. 19" t., finest pale bisque swivel neck head on bisque shoulders, unmarked, a real lady doll, blue paperweight glass eyes, closed mouth, pierced ears, old blonde human hair wig with orig. pale blue satin hat with flowers, old black and white checked wool dress, completely dressed even to the shoes, all hand stitched kid leather body in fine cond., separate toes and fingers with wires, a gem.
3. Marked E. D. 28½" tall, large composition jointed body in fine condition, lovely bisque head w huge blue paperweight glass eyes, closed mouth, pierced ears, dark brown human hair wig with long curls, completely dressed in pink cotton print dress, old shoes, jointed wrists, impressed E 13 D on head, boot shoes with girl and Depose trademark, a lovely large doll.
4. Marked Tete Jumeau. 15" tall, bisque head w closed mouth, pierced ears, blue paperweight glass eyes, marked "Depose Tete Jumeau Bte. SGD" in red on back of head, good composition jointed body, jointed wrists, body marked "Jumeau Medaille d'Or Paris," completely dressed in white cotton dress, old shoes, good auburn human hair wig, a sweet doll.
5. Marked Jumeau Fashion. 17½" tall, fine bisque swivel neck head on bisque shoulders, blue paperweight glass eyes, pierced ears, puffed dark brown human hair wig, good all kid leather hand stitched body w. body marked "Jumeau Medaille d'Or Paris," separate fingers and toes with wire, head has red Jumeau check mark, dressed in cotton dress, red top and tan plaid bottom, cute high button shoes, closed mouth.
6. Marked Phoenix Bebe. 20" t., has impressed star and No. 93 on bisque head, closed mouth, blue paperweight glass eyes, pierced ears, auburn human hair wig, fine jointed composition body, jointed wrists, completely dressed in navy blue wood sailor outfit complete even to shoes.

7. Marked Eden Bebe. 19" t., bisque head impressed "Eden Bebe Paris L." closed mo., pierced ears, blue paperweight glass eyes, brown human hair wig, fine composition jointed body, jointed wrists, completely dressed in old white cotton eyelet dress w. blue underdress, old shoes, very nice doll.
8. French Fashion. 18½" t., beautiful bisque swivel neck head on bisque shoulders, unmarked, pierced ears, closed mouth, blue paperweight glass eyes, old original blonde human hair wig, dressed in old blue wool suit, all kid leather hand stitched body, separate toes and fingers with wires, old shoes, a very beautiful fashion doll.
9. Marked Depose 8. 17" t., a fine early Jumeau doll with only the word Depose 8 impressed on neck, fine bisque head with brown paperweight glass eyes, closed mo., pierced ears, good compo. jointed body, jointed wrists, original auburn human hair wig with ribbon, old checked black and white dress, old shoes.
10. Marked Mascotte. 17" t., bisque head has large letter M impressed on neck, closed mouth, pierced ears, brown paperweight glass eyes, fine composition jointed body, jointed wrists, dressed in lavender satin trimmed in lace with a maroon bow, old shoes, auburn human hair wig.
11. Marked F. G. 12" t., marked impressed F 4 G on head, fine bisque head, closed mouth, pierced ears, human hair wig, good composition jointed body, jointed wrists, white cotton dress, old shoes.
12. Marked Tete Jumeau. 20½" t., marked "Depose Tete Jumeau Bte. SGD" in red on bisque head, brown human hair wig, closed mouth, pierced ears, good composition jointed body, jointed wrists, pink cotton dress with fancy ecru lace collar, dressed even to old shoes with girl and Depose trademark, body marked "Jumeau Medaille d'Or Paris."

Visit the Cedar Rapids, Iowa Antique Show on April, 9, 10, 11, 12. mhc

FAVORITE PIONEER
RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 40)

uary, 1920. The first by the drastically revised Quartet was "Stop! Look! Listen!" which came out in January, 1921.

Meanwhile, Murray's new Victor contract made it necessary for Edison to obtain another quartet to take the place of the Premier combination of Murray, Young, Porter, and Chalmers. So Edison formed an ensemble composed of Charles Hart, first tenor; Billy Jones, second tenor; Porter, baritone; and Harry Donaghy, bass.

These singers were known as the Harmonizers or Harmonizers Quartet on other makes of records, but since Edison retained the right to the Premier Quartet title, they became the Premier on Edison and their records were lumped together in the catalog with those that had been made by the Murray-dominated organization.

Those by the separate quartets may be distinguished as follows:

All Edison discs by the Premier Quartet up to and including 50601, "Alexander's Band Is Back in Dixieland" were by the old group.

All, beginning with 50607, "Floatin' Down to Cotton Town," were by the Harmonizers, excepting 50644, "Hippity Hop," in which Murray sings the lead; 50944, "Huckleberry Finn," which had been sung by Murray Young, and Hooley in 1917, but was not issued until 1922, and 50750, "Land of Minstrelsy," by the Premier Quartet Minstrels. This combination seemed to have been the one in which Chalmers sang with the addition of George Wilton Ballard and Edward Meeker.

Perhaps I should mention that several records by the Harmonizers, masquerading as the Premier Quartet, were issued on Blue Amberol cylinders, but not on discs. These were: 4185, "Down in Chinatown"; 4207, "Lindy"; 4112, "Polly"; 4163, "Sally Green"; and 4126, "Sunny Southern Smiles."

I am puzzled by another cylinder, 4540, "Blacksmith Rag." This was issued in 1922, when few ragtime songs were being written, and may have been something by the original Premier Quartet, which, like many other Edison recordings, was kept in the files for years before being issued. I never have heard it or I would know the answer.

Edison ceased to use the Premier Quartet name after 1922, when the Harmonizers apparently disbanded. They never had become widely popular.

VI. The American's Final Phase

There seems no need of discussing in detail the Victor discs made by Murray, Campbell, Meyer, and Croxton as the American Quartet. They sang some big-selling records—"Carolina in the Morning"; "In the Little Red School House"; "Strut, Miss Liz-in the 1883-84 Season when the Metropolitan first opened. It was Sembrich, also, who did Lakme during the 1906-07 Season! and de Hidalgo was the Amina, April 2, 1910, before Barrientos took over.

(Continued on page 124)

HISTORICAL RECORDS

(Continued from page 50)

After leaving New York, the prima donna made operatic appearances in France and Monte Carlo, concertized extensively, and then taught singing at the Conservatory of Buenos Aires from 1939 to 1945.

A year later, Maria Barrientos passed away in Paris, France, at 63, August 8, 1946.

These O.A.S.I. LP's are nice collections of Barrientos' Columbia recordings. But they would have been even nicer if the pitch were given correctly all the way through, and not set sharper, in a number of instances, than the pitch in which the selections were originally recorded.

— 0 —

CONCHITA SUPERVIA

Might as well go Spanish all the way and conclude with Supervia, whose records seem to sell like the proverbial hot cakes.

CONCHITA SUPERVIA — O.A.S.I. 524, Volume IV. Address and price as above: Side I — 1. Mal de Amores (Serrano) 2. La Farigola (Verdaguer) 3. Juena (Lopez) 4. Vidalita (Lugones) 5. Pandereleta Andulaza (Ochoa) 6. Solea (Prado). Side II — 1. Lola la Manola de Escayola (Cotarelo) 2. El Amor Es Como Un Nino (Nin) 3. La Del Panuel Rojo (Tabuyo) 4. Las Meninas (Capella) 5. Cantiga (Marques de Santillana) 6. Porque Me Beso (Alcazar).

I've said all I had to say about the gorgeous Conchita before. So, as the one and only Ethel Barrymore once so well put it: "That's all there is, there isn't any more."

FAVORITE PIONEER
RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 44)

zie"; and "Old McDonald Had a Farm," are examples. But the Quartet, in its final phase, never had the popularity of its forerunners.

This was perhaps, partly because Billy Murray's popularity declined sharply a few years after he became an exclusive artist. It also was partly because, during most of the ensemble's active period, record sales were declining owing to the craze for radio.

The last American Quartet apparently made no electrically recorded discs. Victor introduced its first electric records in June, 1925; and the American's final record, 19680, "Alabama Bound," did not appear until August. It was made by the acoustic method and must have been withheld several months before being announced. It had been cut from the catalog by October 1, 1926.

At that time the Peerless Quartet personnel had been changed almost completely. Campbell, Meyer, and Croxton had given way to Carl Mathieu, Stanley Baughman, and James Stanley, with whom Murray did no quartet work.

Curiously, some of the "last ditch" American Quartet records sound to my ears more as if they had been made by Young, Murray, Porter, and Chalmers than by the later group. It sounds to me, for instance, as if Young, rather than Campbell, sings first tenor in "The Brown High Blues" and "The Little Red School House"; and the bass seems more like Chalmers than Croxton.

It may have been that these records were made at a time when the Peerless Quartet personnel was unavailable, and Murray was teamed with members of the Criterion Quartet. Or it may be my ears are tricking me.

The American Quartet's career lasted for 16 years, from 1909 through 1925. During that time, throughout its different phases, it made its mark as one of the greatest of popular singing organizations, and as long as acoustically recorded discs and cylinders exist it probably will have many admirers and collectors.

I hope before long to write a history of the Haydn Quartet. For the time being its earliest days are shrouded by so much obscurity I hesitate to undertake the task. But if I ever find out what association those obscure gentlemen, Fred Rycroft and Charles Belling, had with the Quartet in the late 1890s I shall undertake to tell all I know about the Haydn.

THE SHAKE SHINGLE

Mrs. Joseph Allara

28 Elsie Rd. Lynn, Mass. 01904

Phone: (617) 598-0600

Salt Glaze pewter lidded pitcher, 7" h. Argyle pattern; registered mark 1865. Very graceful lines, $20.

Lalique signed 8 1/2" diam. deep dish, lily pads with opalescent centers forming 3 feet. Etched R. LALIQUE FRANCE #383. $32.

Candlesticks pair brass push ups 10 1/4". Very old, $32.

Cookie Jar handpainted pink floral pattern. Royal Devon Staffordshire china. Silver pltd. elaborate handle & lid. Pinched-in sides, $15.

Muffineer with Silver plated top. Cut glass elongated thumbprints all over. $10.

Battersea enam. patch box. Beautiful rose dec. Inside mirror missing, $60.

Christening mug white china 3" h. Decor. w. gilt and the words "Robert Tarbert Born 24th Dec. 1856. $11.

Commemorative Mug "Peace 1919" showing scenes of war and peace 2 1/2" h. $8.

Comm. pressed glass deep dishes. Pr. 9" diam., "The 60th Year of Queen Victoria's Glorious Reign" crown in middle w crossed sceptre and sword. Perf. one $15; One with sm. chip on edge, $10.

Doulton Lambeth 9" h. pitcher. Chocolate & tan colored relief pattern. Medallion showing early sailing vessel and decorative scrolls. "Christopher Columbus" & "Sighted America October 12, 1492". Impressed mark & #8693.

Minute flake under spout & tiny chip on base rib, unnoticeable. Collector's item, $30.

Doulton Art Nouveau 8" h. vase. Beautiful green mottled & blue & green relief pattern under heavy glaze. Imp. mark & sgd. by potter, $18.

Doulton bulbous vase 4" h. & wide. Imp. mark & potter's initials. Dark blue 1" band arnd. rim then small light blue hearts in band. Overall gilded curlicue design. Unique piece, $16.00.

Satin Glass oil lamp white shading to lemon. Base 4 1/2" h., 3 1/4" w. brass fitting for chimney 1" h. Nicely paneled & pinched in near base, $40.

Knife Rests set of 4 in velvet lined case. Silver plate heavy dumbbell shape, $15.

Gaudy Dutch or Welsh? very fine beautifully decorated cup & saucer. Cup has hairline age crack in base, only noticeable from underside. Lots of dark blue & lustre. Carnation patt. $28.

Lap Desk of rosewood with inlaid brass corners & name plate. 20x10 1/2 x 8 1/4". The key is missing & the top has wood-drying crack. Concealed drawer in false bottom is opened by one of the brass handles on side. Very interesting, $50.

Basket of vaseline glass shading to opal. white cased rubina. Silver plated holder 7" across. $35.00.

Kate Greenaway hand-painted scenes on 5" diam. old silk dollies, with 1" handmade lace border. 11 diff. scenes, ea. one a beautiful group of delicately painted children. 11 dollies ea. $12.

Pieces perfect unless otherwise described. Postage & Ins. extra. mhm

SPECIAL OFFERING

An unique collection of Pocket Watches—Grouped in lots

Lot 1 4 Howard Pocket Watches, 14K gold;

Open Face, all -----$400.00

Lot 2 2 Howard Pocket Watches 16 &amp; 18 size; G.F. &amp; G.P. cases; Open face.

All -----$70.00

Lot 3 1 992 Hamilton 21 J. Pocket Watch.

G.F. case -----$35.00

Lot 4 1 Waltham Pocket Watch. Vanguard; G.F. case; 23 J. -----$35.00

Lot 5 6 American Pocket Watches; Waltham, Elgin, Illinois, &amp; Hamilton.

18 size, nickel &amp; silveroid cases. all

-----$120.00

Lot 6 1 14K Gold Hunter's Watch; Elgin

or Waltham -----$75.00

Lot 7 5 Asst. Rockford Pocket Watches.

All -----$175.00

Lot 8 3 American Hunting Case Pocket

Watches; Elgin, Waltham, Hampden

All -----$100.00

Lot 9 10 diff. Civil War Tokens. All $20.00

—Want To Buy All Coins &amp; Watches—

JOSEPH BROS.

Phone: (312) ST 2-2774

5 So. Wabash Ave.

Chicago, Ill. 60603

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Harriet and George Atwood

OLDEST LIVING PIONEER RECORDING ARTIST—The January HOBBIES contained a photograph of Mrs. Harriet Atwood who is almost certainly the oldest living recording artist. It was taken on her 100th birthday in the Richmond, Va., nursing home where she has lived for several years. Mrs. Atwood's 105th birthday is March 23, 1970.

I. Hobbies Kindles A Friendship

As I often have remarked, "It's strange how things work out!"

Most readers of Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists will remember that we published, in the January, 1970, issue, a photograph of Mrs. Harriet Atwood, who lives in the Terrace Hill Nursing Home, Richmond, Va.

In commenting upon the picture, basing my statements on published accounts, I said Mrs. Atwood may have been the first person to record experimentally for Thomas A. Edison in 1887 or 1888 after he produced his first phonograph for playing wax cylinder records.

I also said that, at the time she recorded, Mrs. Atwood was a young music teacher, Miss Harriet Haddon, who later married Edison's assistant, George Atwood. He had persuaded her to make the records. Finally, I said Mrs. Atwood would be 105 years of age on March 23, 1970, a longevity achievement which surely must make her the oldest surviving pioneer recording artist.

PART I

By JIM WALSH

After the article appeared, I mailed a copy of HOBBIES to Mrs. Atwood, thinking she would enjoy seeing her printed likeness. Because of advanced age and impaired health, she is not able to engage in correspondence, but the Magazine and my accompanying letter were given to Mrs. Atwood's daughter, Mrs. Samuel (Margaret) Keil of Richmond, Va.

I was surprised and delighted to receive, while I virtually was snowbound the day after Christmas, a warmly worded 3-page letter from Mrs. Keil. She thanked me for the attention I had paid to her mother, and gave much fascinating information about both her parents.

At once it occurred to me I should write another HOBBIES article for the sake of historical interest and tell more about Mr. and Mrs. Atwood. I immediately suggested to Mrs. Keil that I do this. She agreed.

We since have carried on a constant correspondence, during which she has told me many things not only about George and Harriet Atwood, but concerning herself and her surviving sister and brother. She also has corrected some errors I made in January because I relied upon other published material. This article is the result of our collaboration and the friendship that was kindled by my January contribution.

In presenting the first installment of the Atwood series, I will rely largely upon quotations from Mrs. Keil's letters. However, I reserve the right to skip from one paragraph to another without regard for chronological order, and to make occasional changes in wording where, writing in haste, her phrasing was a bit repetitious. I also plan to quote a brief, unfinished, autobiographical sketch which Mrs. Atwood began at the age of 98.

Here goes, then, for excerpts from Mrs. Keil's first letter:

II. Mrs. Keil's Letter

"Dear Mr. Walsh:

"I found your envelope containing the HOBBIES magazine, along with your letter and very welcome Christmas greetings to my dear mother, Mrs. Harriet Atwood. Since she is too old and feeble to answer, I shall try to do my best.

"There are a few corrections to be made. . . . My mother's maiden name was Harriet Hedden, not Hadden, or Haddon. She was born March 23, 1865, in Orange, N.J. She was married before she was 18 and was a widow when she was 21.

"At the time she went to Edison's Laboratory she was the widow of Charles Brokaw. My mother and father married approximately in 1889. My oldest brother was born May 23, 1892, but there had been a baby born before who died in infancy.

"My brother, Robert Atwood, now is living in Kingsport, Tenn.; is an artist, and plays the 'cello. I, the youngest one in the family, was born February 9, 1898.

"It is true that my father worked with Thomas Edison. Father had a pack of letters written to him by Mr. Edison, which inadvertently were left in the attic of a home in Newark that was demolished shortly afterwards.

"There was also a picture of my father, with Mr. Edison and Samuel Insull, taken in front of the laboratory. They were standing in front of the old trolley car chassis, which is still there, but that picture also has been lost.

"Some months ago I wrote to the curator of the Edison Laboratory Museum to inquire if they had more information about my mother and father. They had no record that my mother had made any recordings, but informed me my father had a very important position there. He had charge of the machine shop, with 12 or 14 men working for him.

"The Museum sent me a copy of their payroll dated September 12, 1889. At that time my father was earning $36 per week, working 60 hours at 60 cents per hour.

"The lowest paid man received 10 cents per hour. Working 62 hours he received $6.20 per week. The highest paid machinist received 27.2 cents per hour. One man worked 68.2 hours and received $18.84. Another worked 79 hours, at the same rate, and received $21.74. Still another worked 75 hours at 25 cents per hour and received $18.75. So it appears that my father earned a fabulous salary at that time, and he was only 25 years of age.

"It is true my father, who was born in Rushville, N.Y., helped Mr. Edison perfect the phonograph. When it appeared they had it to the point of perfection. Mr. Edison said he wished they could get someone to play into the piano to test its results. My father then told him there was a young piano teacher living down the street, so my father was sent to bring Mrs. Brokaw to the laboratory.

"One published account has it that mother played 'Mary Had a Little Lamb,' but I have no way of knowing how true this is. She might just have played that as an experiment. However, mother did considerable composing and one of her numbers is 'American Triumphant March,' which was dedicated to Edison.

"I have in my possession her handwritten manuscript. She never had any of her compositions published. She has told me she played this composition for an Edison recording, but I doubt if any of her recordings ever were commercialized; maybe they just were used for experimental purposes."

Here I cease to quote Mrs. Margaret Keil for the moment to say, I doubt Mrs. Brokaw (later Atwood) rendered "Mary Had a Little Lamb" for Edison. If it was done, the inventor probably suggested jokingly that she play it because the nursery rhyme about Mary and her lamb was the first thing he recited into his original tinfoil phonograph.

It may be that the writer of that published story knew Edison had recited the verse and decided it would be a suitable number to represent Mrs. Atwood as having played.

FIRST HUSBAND—Mrs. Harriet Atwood is shown in this old tintype picture, made about 1885, with her first husband, Charles Brokaw, and their baby daughter, Clara. It was taken two or three years before she recorded for Edison.

Mrs. Keil's sister, Mrs. Irene Atwood Branin, who, with her husband, Franklin H. Branin, operates the Branstone Studio in Stanhope, N.J., also doubts the "Mary Had A Little Lamb" story. On January 13 she wrote to me:

"Dear Mr. Walsh:

"My sister, Mrs. Keil, has sent me copies of your letter regarding the article about my mother, Mrs. Atwood. We are very much interested in it and have written to subscribe to HOBBIES and have four copies of the January issue sent to us so that our children can enjoy it also.

"I do not recall any other information about the recording, but do agree that Mother would have played something much more important than 'Mary Had A Little Lamb.' This is a story that has come out recently. But the march she composed was the one played for Mr. Edison.

"Mother has given us the rich legacy of a musical family. All of her great-grandchildren play different instruments at family gatherings in a family orchestra.

"Thanking you for your interest in our dear mother, I am,

"Very truly yours,

Irene Atwood Branin."

Having gone thus far with quotations from the letters of Mrs. Atwood's daughters, I now shall devote a separate section to getting into print the remarkable old lady's unfinished autobiographical sketch.

III. Mrs. Atwood's Manuscript

"I was born March 23, 1865, and was one of 7 children, but only two of us lived—my sister, 11 years older, and I. My mother and father were both gray. I never saw them otherwise.

"My mother had her hair parted in the center with a pretty wave. My father had grown a long white beard and rather long hair on his head, which I used to braid and tie with red ribbons. They were a fine looking couple. The youngsters used to call him Santa Claus.

"God gave a talent for music and I can't remember the time I couldn't play. We had an organ, and before I took a lesson I played by ear everything I heard.

"I played in a school for the youngsters to march in and out of school, and after a while I started taking music lessons, which was hard, as I had played by ear so long. But with hard work I did learn to play by note, and though I still play by ear I also read and play by note.

"I seemed to have a little talent for composing, and if I had written down all the melodies that entered my mind, they would run into the hundreds. As I grew older I did write some music; but, being so busy, I couldn't spend too much time in writing music.

"My mother was a hard-working woman, and after two years of high school I decided it was my duty to get busy and make some money and help my dear mother. My Aunt Mary kept boarders, and one of her daughters did dress making, and I went to learn dressmaking.

"In the meantime, I had a cousin who wanted me to teach her to play, so I gradually had more pupils, and when my time with my cousin was up I could make a dress. I made my own dresses, and I soon got busy making dresses for others. It all lifted a load off my mother's shoulders, and eased my conscience.

"My precious mother and I were real pals through life, and I always have felt she had an undeveloped talent for music. Evidently she passed a wee bit onto me. How I love it, and how I thank God for helping me still to play though I am 98."

Unfortunately, that is where Mrs. Atwood's incompleting manuscript ends. I hope all of you who have read it find it as charming as I did, especially the pen picture of her mother, and of her father who had the long white beard that made youngsters call him "Santa Claus."

IV. Mrs. Atwood's Ancestry

Now I resume quoting from Mrs. Keil. The following is from her letter of December 31, in reply to the one I wrote her. It contains some information about Mrs. Atwood's ancestry that will be of special interest to students of genealogy:

"Dear Mr. Walsh:

"I was as surprised and pleased to receive your letter as you were to receive mine. I had no idea it would be of such value. Your letter really was like receiving an orchid.

"That story referring to 'Mary Had a Little Lamb'—I have no idea who the reporter was, but I do believe the interview was at a time when my sister Clara was alive, and at that time both my mother and sister knew what they were talking about. Clara was the daughter born of my mother's first marriage, to Charles Brokaw, but Clara was just about the dearest sister one ever could have. She was about five when mother remarried, so I am sure she would have known what had been talked about in her early years. I doubt if any of the young reporters down here would have known about Edison and his speaking that poem into the phonograph, as I never had heard of that myself.

"However, since it is more than a coincidence, I feel sure that mother must have played that tune when she made her first 'sample' for Mr. Edison. As I know my mother, she most likely would have asked him what he wanted her to play, and undoubtedly he might have suggested 'Mary Had a Little Lamb.'

"If the music had not been composed and copyrighted at that date, I would not be surprised if my mother might not just have played that tune herself. I cannot prove this, but since there always had been good music in our home as long as I can remember, I can remember that tune and the words as long as I remember anything.

"I think I was about 5 when we lived in a large house in East Orange. There always was company, all musical people, gathering at our home, and each one performed his or her art.

"I am getting together various pictures, etc., to send to you. There is one picture of my father. I believe it was taken about the time he worked for Edison. He was quite a handsome man, and a 'dandy.'

"If you are able to print this picture, would you be able to make up one or two for me? I would like to send one to the Edison Laboratory Museum, as they are making a collection of photos of Edison and his friends.

"Another is a tintype picture of my mother with her first husband, with Clara as a baby. It was not long after that picture was taken that Charles

YOUNG ENGINEER — George Atwood, age about 25, when he was in charge of Thomas A. Edison's machine shop, earning a princely $36 for a 60-hour week. This picture was made around the time he married a young widow, Harriet Brokaw.

ANOTHER ANNIVERSARY—Mrs. Harriet Atwood on her 103rd birthday, with her daughter, Mrs. Margaret Keil.

Brokaw died, so this will give you some idea what my mother looked like when she first played for Edison. This is a keepsake in the family, as it is an only one, so I surely would like to have these returned.

"I also have found two pictures taken of my parents when they were about 65. They are both good pictures. My father died in 1933.

"There is something a little special about my mother, a fact that she never has known all her life. The only thing she knew about her ancestors was that one of her great-great (etc.) grandfathers was a Scotchman.

"Little has she known she had some very illustrious grandparents. I only have learned about this within the past five years, when I learned the names of some of the ancestors and borrowed a copy of 'The Lyon Memorial' from a

CLIFF HOUSE MUSIC BOX COLLECTION PURCHASED

—Large Illustrated Catalog to be Issued!—

THE CLIFF HOUSE AS IT APPEARED
CIRCA 1890-1907

We have just purchased intact the fabulous collection of music boxes, nickelodeon pianos, organs, and other antique automatic musical instruments formerly displayed at the world-famous Cliff House in San Francisco. For many years this has been one of America's most popular collections. Thousands have seen the instruments and have heard them play.

We are now working on a large illustrated catalog which will feature the many beautiful instruments from the Cliff House. You'll have the chance to buy Regina music boxes (many different varieties including some that change the metal tune discs automatically.), Seeburg nickelodeons, Wurlitzer orchestrions (automatic self-playing orchestras), Swiss cylinder music boxes with mechanical figures and dancing dolls — and many, many other wonderful pieces. All will be offered at our customary low prices—so they'll sell quickly!

Only a few hundred extra Cliff House Collection catalogs will be printed. If you are on our regular mailing list, you'll receive one when they are ready. If you are not on our list, take advantage of this Special Offer! The Cliff House Collection catalog will sell for $2. But, if you reserve your copy NOW, we'll send you one for just $1. (Which is less than it costs us to produce this beautiful catalog!). Furthermore, we make this guarantee: If, after you receive the catalog, you don't agree that it is the MOST INTERESTING and MOST VALUE-FILLED catalog you've ever seen, just return it and we'll send your dollar back! So, you have nothing to lose—and a lot to gain. The catalog will feature dozens and dozens of fascinating antique self-playing instruments plus books and hi-fi records on the subject. There's a catch, however: We will have only 500 extra catalogs printed, and these will go to the first 500 who order. So, to avoid disappointment, air-mail your order today!

Name .....

Street .....

City ..... State ..... Zip .....

Check one: ( ) Enclosed is $1 for my copy of your forthcoming Cliff House Music Box Collection catalog (a $2 value). Or, ( ) enclosed is $5 for a subscription to your next 6 issues (a total $12 value). I understand that I must be delighted or my catalog payment will be instantly refunded.

HATHAWAY & BOWERS, INC.

"The World's Largest Music Box Dealer"

Dept. 9, Hathaway & Bowers Bldg., 11975 E. Florence Ave.

Santa Fe Springs, California 90670

Phone (213) 941-8774

Plan to visit our large showrooms the next time you are in the Los Angeles area. We're located halfway between downtown Los Angeles and Disneyland - about a half hour drive from either place. Hours: Monday - Friday 9-noon, 1 to 5, Saturday 1 to 4.

ape

By Harriet Atwood

I was born on March 23rd 1884 and was one of seven children but only two of us lived my whole life span older than my brother and father were both young men when we were born. They both had their hair parted in the center with a pretty wave. My father had grown a long white beard and mother long hair on her head with a French braid and the white ribbon and they were a fine looking couple. The youngsters used to call him Santa Claus. God gave me a talent for music and I can remember the time that I could play and had an organ and before I took a lesson, I played by ear everything. I played in school for the youngsters to march and out of school and after a while I started taking piano lessons which was hard having played by ear and singing but with hard work I could learn to play by note and while I still play by ear I also read and play by note. I seemed to have a little talent for composing.

ORIGINAL MANUSCRIPT—A part of an unfinished biographical sketch begun by Mrs. Atwood at the age of 98.

SEARCH FOR MUSIC BOXES, NICKELODEONS, AND ORGANS

Immediate Decision — Immediate Payment!

To maintain our large inventory we must constantly buy. We're not looking for bargains but are willing to pay well for choice pieces. Our large worldwide business (over $1,000,000.00 in sales per year) is built on high volume and fast turnover. We're willing to work on a low margin of profit—a fact that will put more dollars in your pocket when you sell. It's easy to sell to Hathaway and Bowers, Inc. Here's all you do: (1) Give us a brief description of the instrument you have for sale. (2) Send a photo or two of the instrument (simple Polaroid snapshots will be fine).

We'll reply and indicate our interest. If we purchase your instrument you'll be paid immediately in full. And, on larger instruments such as nickelodeon pianos, organs, etc. we'll take care of all the shipping arrangements—you don't have to lift a finger!

If you have a choice musical instrument for sale, consider us to be buyers! Contact us today. You'll be glad you did. Below are some of our main purchase interests:

- *COIN-OPERATED PIANOS — Electric coin-in-the-slot paper roll instruments made by Seeburg, Wurlitzer, Nelson-Wiggen, Western Electric, Coinola, Cremona, etc. Especially want larger instruments (orchestrions) with drums, xylophone, pipes, etc.
- *REPRODUCING PIANOS. Electric grand pianos, especially those in ornate or "art" cases, by Welte, Ampico, or Duo-Art. Also wanted: Ampico, Duo-Art, and Welte rolls—especially in large quantity lots.
- *DISC MUSIC BOXES — All types of Regina music boxes including automatic changers. Polyphon, Symphonion, etc. disc boxes with discs 15" or larger in diameter.

*CYLINDER MUSIC BOXES — Large models with interchangeable cylinders, on matching tables, in ornate cases, etc.

*BAND ORGANS, CALLIOPIES. Circus band organs, player calliopes wanted.

*OTHER AUTOMATIC INSTRUMENTS: Our needs are large and varied. If you have some other type of automatic self-playing antique instrument that you think will be of interest, let us know.

*ENTIRE COLLECTIONS — We are especially eager to purchase entire private and museum collections of automatic instruments.

Have an interesting music box, nickelodeon, or other instrument for sale? We'll look forward to hearing from you! Use the coupon below if you wish.

Name .....
Street .....
City ..... State ..... Zip .....
Tel. No. ....

I have the following instrument(s) for sale. Please advise me of your interest.

.....
.....
.....

HATHAWAY & BOWERS, INC.

"The World's Largest Music Box Dealer"

Dept. HM, 11975 E. Florence Ave.

Santa Fe Springs, Calif. 90760

Tel. (213) 941-8774

cousin.

"It would take too long to go into full detail as to the origin of the Lyon family, but three brothers, Richard, Thomas, and Henry Lyon, were members of Oliver Cromwell's army. While they were on duty at the Banqueting House at Whitehall, England, they witnessed the regicide of King Charles I. They had to flee from England immediately, and sailed for the New Haven Colony shortly after January 30, 1648.

"Many years prior to that, one John Lyon, who was secretary to King Robert II, the first Stewart and founder of that dynasty, married his daughter Princess Jean, and was brought into the reigning family. And in 1372 he was given lands and Thanedom of Glamis in Scotland.

"These three brothers who fled to America came from Glen Lyon in Perthshire. Henry Lyon first settled in Milford, Conn., then, several years later, he joined Robert Treat, the Rev. Abraham Pierson, Deacon Azariah Crane, the Baldwins, and many others, and sailed up the Passaic river.

"They were the first settlers and founders of Newark, N.J., in 1666. They bought the land from the Indians. At that time Newark covered a much great-

(Continued on page 50)

MUSIC BOXES

LARGE PRIVATE collection rare Swiss and disc types, table models, overtures, cuff boxes, automatics, many important makes for the advanced collector. Write your special wants or phone, 914 - PE 8-1506. — R. Bornand, 139 4th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. 10803 je3428

TAPE RECORDINGS

REMEMBER RADIO? Send stamped envelope for list of tape recordings available from radio's golden age. — Lee Book, Box 6338, Pittsburgh, Pa. ap6276

NEW EXTENSIVE 42-page catalog. Opera to Jazz. Thanks to great response $1. — Holyoke Gardens, 4-B, Holyoke, Mass. 01040 ap3882

SOUND reflections of Thomas A. Edison. Five choice selections including "Preacher and the Bear" from an Edison cylinder phonograph. Professionally recorded on three-inch real of tape at 3 1/2 IPS. $1.95 postpaid. No stamps please. — Worster Audio/Visual, 1622 Cruce St., Norman, Okla. 73069 je3407

Free Circular - new country records and 8-track tape cartridges. Hoe down fiddle tunes, waltzes, gospels. Mac Wiseman, Hylo Brown, Red Smiley, Legandary, J. E. Mainer, others. — Uncle Jim O'Neal, Box A-Hob., Arcadia, Calif. 91006 mh120633

VIOLINS

Violin for sale: 1 Antonius Stradivarius Cremonensis, Faciebat Anno, 1715.—Phone 912-233-5420. my70001

VIOLIN FOR SALE: 1 Giovan Paolo Maggini Brescia 1640. — Phone 968-3537, Stephenville, Texas. je3802

ORGANS—MELODEONS

REED ORGANS, melodeons, bought, sold, repaired. Reeds tuned, revoiced, replacements. — C. H. Gunzinger, Box 276, Williamsville, Vt. 05362 s6675

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8. (Except for change of address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rates.)

All advertisers who submit copy for the first time are definitely requested to furnish therewith banking or other satisfactory references.

FAVORITE PIONEER

RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 40)

er area than now.

"Henry Lyon was the first tax collector, and served without pay. The Rev. Abraham Pierson was the only one of the settlers who received any pay. My mother's mother was Clarissa Lyon, and was one of the seventh generation from this Henry Lyon. All the above mentioned men were ancestors, as there was inter-marriage among their children.

MRS. ATWOOD'S DAUGHTER—Mrs. Margaret Keil of Richmond, Va., provided Jim Walsh with the information in this article about her mother and father. She is one of Mrs. Atwood's three living children.

"The Rev. Abraham Pierson was the founder of the First Presbyterian Church in Newark. It still is standing, but greatly improved. He was also its first pastor.

"His son, the Rev. Abraham Pierson, Jr., was pastor of that church. Later, he returned to New Haven, where he was founder of the Collegiate College of Connecticut, now known as Yale, and served as its president.

"I had heard of these names when I was going to school in Newark, but never had any idea that they were my own ancestors.

"I wish you knew how much I enjoyed HOBBIES. Had I known people collected old buttons, hat pins, etc., I never would have thrown or given away anything in my life!

"In 1918 I bought a phonograph and had many good records, but when Dad converted the phonograph into a radio I gave all those good old records away. Dad had arranged the needle on the phonograph so it also could play Edison disc records, of which I had many.

"I noted on page 160 of HOBBIES that Ballards' Antique Costumes in Indiana wanted old clothes of any time prior to 1935. I wrote them about a beautiful georgette crepe (plain) dress I had, heavily designed with black jet beads. Also of two white silk skirts my cousin had given me, as they had been in one of about six trunks her grandfather's sister had left in a bank vault in New York. They are really museum pieces.

"This old lady died without leaving a will. Her first husband had been a diamond merchant, and there was a fortune of diamonds in the trunk, including a diamond tiara. Most of these were sold and many of the old clothes were thrown away or given away.

"The old lady never had parted with a thing. She had lived in some hotel in New York for years, and thought of leaving her money to the manager, but when she found it would cost her $50 to make a will she was too frugal to pay that much. My cousin and her brother, and their mother's sister, were the only living relatives, so they received everything she left.

"My black dress, I mentioned above, I wore to a sister's-in-law wedding 45 years ago, and had bought it prior to that. It still hangs in the closet, but if I live long enough maybe the style will come back again, as these mini skirts can't go any higher; they soon will begin to go to the extreme opposite direction next, and everything again will be out of style. Maybe I am a pack rat, too, as some things I think are too valuable to discard."

I have quoted the last few paragraphs of Mrs. Keil's letter primarily for the benefit of HOBBIES' lady readers, who certainly will be fascinated by the account of the old dresses and other things left behind by their venerable owner who had a prejudice against spending money to make a will. Although I have no interest in dresses as such, I found this section of the letter both intriguing and amusing.

Next month I shall give, among other things, more of Mrs. Keil's recollections of her father.

(To be continued)

CHICAGO
ANTIQUES EXPOSITION & COLLECTORS' FAIR

MAY 23 - 27

at the

CONRAD HILTON

Sponsored by HOBBIES Magazine

Charles Marston, Show Mgr.

Pay Roll in Machine Shop (Bottom Floor)
Week ending Sept 12th 1889

Name	Hours	Rate	Total	2¢	Deduct	Balance	Hours	Rate	Total	Deduct	Balance	Hours	Rate	Total	Deduct	Balance	CP	Notes
Ed. Edwards	40	4	36	00	36.00
J. Keil	7 1/2	2 1/2	19	75		80	15.33
E. Keil	7 1/2	2 1/2	18	75			50	5.62	9.75	50	23.7
B. H. H. H.	7 1/2	2 1/2	21	75					21.73
E. G. H. H.	6 1/2	10	6	20	100		100	1.65	2.55
H. B. H. H.	6 1/2	2 1/2	18	98					9.35	2.20	3.88	3.85
E. H. H. H.	7 1/2	2 1/2	17	63	1.38				16.25
B. H. H. H.	6 1/2	2 1/2	18	84					5.33	2.89	10.32
A. H. H. H.	6 1/2	2 1/2	18	01	1.51		1.23	9.63		2.48		3.16
B. H. H. H.	6 1/2	2 1/2	13	40	20												60	12.60
J. H. H. H.	7 1/2	16 1/2	12	00					12.00
J. S. H. H.	4 1/2	2 1/2	10	69					4.62	5.06	10.1
			241	96	40.09	80	20.13	8.57	91.57	18.65	17.76	3.88	3.16			60	12.60

INVENTOR'S PAYROLL—A page of the Edison machine shop payroll, for the week of September 12, 1889, when George F. Atwood was the foreman. The items listed are examples of what the well-paid American workman was earning 80 years ago. The original of this page is in the Edison National Monument at West Orange, N.J.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Harriet and George Atwood

PART II

By JIM WALSH

(NOTE.—This is the concluding installment of an article which began last month, in which, at the request of Jim Walsh, Mrs. Margaret Keil of Richmond, Va., reminisces about her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George F. Atwood. Mrs. Keil's mother, Mrs. Harriet Atwood, who is now 105 years of age and a resident of a Richmond nursing home, made experimental piano records for Thomas A. Edison more than 80 years ago. Shortly afterward she married Mr. Atwood, who was then an engineer in charge of Edison's machine shop).

I. Praise From the "First Lady"

One of the memorable events of Mrs. Harriet Atwood's long life occurred when she was 96. In October, 1960, she was a special guest at the annual convention of the American Nursing Home Association in the Mayflower Hotel, Washington, D. C. She played the piano for the delegates and made a brief talk, in which she said:

"My dear Friends: I am so grateful to meet you all in Washington today and to tell you how I feel toward the nursing homes and, as I look over this vast audience, to know that most of you have nursing homes where you welcome God's aged sick souls.

"I don't know of any business one can enter and receive more blessings and happiness than making homes for elderly sick people, with the help of doctors and kind nurses.

"As we grow older and become sick and need a nurse, in some cases 24 hours a day—and very few can afford that—the nursing homes are a blessing.

"It is not an easy life for the heads of these homes, but the blessing and happiness received makes it worth while.

"When my daughter Clara, a sufferer from arthritis, and myself, with exhausted nerves, entered the Terrace Hill Home (in Richmond), we were made welcome by Mr. Maslan and kind nurses, who relieved me of the care of my daughter, and I began to improve.

"One day Mr. Maslan introduced me to a guest and told my age (91 at that time) and said that I had all of my faculties. There isn't a pill in the drug store that could help me as much as those words said by the head of the home. In a short time I was playing the piano for the patients, and received a great blessing to see them enjoying the music.

"I am enjoying this lovely home, and my prayer is that God will bless each one of you having these homes."

The Washington Post for October 18, 1960, published a photograph of Mrs. Atwood at the piano, playing one of her own composition, with two-year-old Jeryl Lynn NeMarow standing by. The little girl's father was executive director of the Aurora Health Institute in Rye, N.Y.

Together with the picture, the Post had a news story, written by Marie Smith, about the convention, in which this laudatory mention was made of Mrs. Atwood:

"Star performer at the luncheon which was a highlight of the opening day program was Harriet Atwood, 96 . . . Introduced as 'the Grandma Moses of the

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

October 18, 1960

Mrs.
Dear Miss Atwood,

It has just come to my attention that at the young age of ninety-six you are composing beautiful music. I am also told that your special composition "Victory and Peace" which you dedicated to the President provided the guests at the American Nursing Home Association meeting with inspiration and pleasure. My compliments to you together with my best wishes for your happiness always.

Sincerely,

Mamie Doud Eisenhower

Mrs. Harriet
Miss Maria Atwood
American Nursing Home Association
Mayflower Hotel
Washington, D. C.

GREETINGS FROM FIRST LADY.—Mrs. Dwight D. Eisenhower wrote this cordial greeting to Mrs. Atwood in October, 1960, after this 96-yr.-old Richmond, Va., resident had spoken and played the piano at a meeting of the American Nursing Home Association in Washington, D.C. Two errors made by Mrs. Eisenhower in Mrs. Atwood's name have been corrected.

keyboard,' she played three of her original compositions on the piano.

"One of them, 'When I First Met You,' was dedicated to the idol of the teenagers, singer Pat Boone, and his wife, Shirley. A 'Victory and Peace' march was dedicated to President Eisenhower.

"The spry, talented nonagerian, who taught piano for 35 years, said she presents a concert daily for other residents of the Home in Richmond, and also plays for their church service on Sunday. She expressed hope that some of her composition will be published and provide her an income as she approaches a century of living.

"She began playing the accordion at the age of 5 and played for dances 'my older sister and her crowd used to have in the kitchen' in the family home in New Jersey. Later she studied the piano."

Subsequent newspaper stories credited Mrs. Atwood with composing her "Victory and Peace" march when she was 96, but Mrs. Keil said it was composed "many years ago. I do not know when it was. She played this at the convention and then dedicated it to President Eisenhower. Eighteen hundred people attended this meeting and she stood before them and read the speech she had composed herself.

LATE MIDDLE AGE. This photo was taken of Mrs. Atwood when she was 65. She has since lived an additional 40 years.

A gratifying sequel to Mrs. Atwood's star performance was her receiving a letter from Mrs. Dwight D. Eisenhower, dated October 18, 1960. Mrs. Eisenhower erroneously referred to Mrs. Atwood as "Miss Maria Atwood," but there was no mistaking the complimentary tone of her greeting:

"Dear Miss Atwood:

"It has just come to my attention that at the young age of 96 you are composing beautiful music. I am also told your special composition, 'Victory and Peace,' which you dedicated to the President provided the guests at the American Nursing Home Association meeting with inspiration and pleasure. My compliments to you together with my best wishes for your happiness always.

"Sincerely,

Mamie Doud Eisenhower
Miss Maria Atwood
American Nursing Home Association
Mayflower Hotel
Washington, D.C."

We'll return a little later to Mrs. Atwood and discuss her present-day life. Meanwhile, Mrs. Keil has some interesting things to say about her father, who was born June 19, 1864, and died in 1933:

II. George Atwood's Achievements

"My father had a very brilliant mind, and though he never had a college education he was a fine electrical and mechanical engineer. He invented and installed the fog bells on the Erie and Lackawanna Railroad ferry slips in Hoboken and New York, on the Hudson River. These fog bells have different signals for the captains of the ferry boats to hear in order to guide the boats into the proper slip during a heavy fog on the Hudson River.

"During World War 1 my father was sent to Nahant, Mass., to experiment on submarine detectors. I do not know whether this was in conjunction with Rear Admiral Bradley A. Fiske, who had invented a submarine detector. My father was working for the Western Electric Co. at that time, and I noted in Admiral Fiske's books about his inventions that they were made up by Western Electric, so they must have all been working in conjunction with each other. I recall my father having said that he would have been washed overboard, had it not been for the quick thinking of someone who threw his own body at my father's feet to keep him from going over. That was in the winter time, too.

"Admiral Fiske had also invented the galvanometer. One of his books that my father had was about this instrument. I have no idea what its purpose was, but when I was about five years old I used to see my father watch and study the workings of this equipment during the evenings at home, as he had one in the house to study. I suppose all this was in line with his 'helping solve many of the perplexing problems' that Admiral Fiske thanked him for in that book he presented to him. I guess Dad was too modest to brag about the many things he worked on, but I do recall that before the dial telephone system was released to the public he had worked on the mechanics of that while at Western Electric. I do not say that he invented it, but merely say that he helped with the problem of getting it to work. I think he was assistant superintendent of the model shop before he retired. It just about broke his heart when he had to retire, because he loved his work so dearly."

"Just tonight Sam reminded me that Dad installed the electric chimes in Trinity Church, New York. I guess there were many other things he did that we have never known about or had forgotten. One sort of Ruhe Goldberg gadget he made was for turning on the furnace in the morning. He had an alarm clock (set for a certain time), and when the alarm went off it triggered a mouse trap which, in turn, opened the damper in the furnace pipes, and so when he got up in the morning the house was warm and no one had to go down cellar to turn on the furnace."

In another letter, Mrs. Keil says:

"I correspond with a daughter of a man who had worked with Edison at the same time my father worked there. She has written me that her father left Edison's because credit for all the ideas his engineers had contributed went to Edison. Well, I suppose that is to be expected, as that is why they are employed. While working for the Western Electric Co., my father was paid $1 for each of his inventions but that was the agreement. . . . Last August I personally presented three of Admiral Fiske's books to the U.S. Naval Academy Museum at Annapolis. One book was printed in 1894, one in 1896, and the one for which he won a gold medal, his Prize Essay, 1905, 'Policy of the U.S. Navy.' In the latter Admiral Fiske had written on the fly page:

"To George F. Atwood, who has helped the writer in solving many perplexing problems, this little book is presented with the cordial regard of Bradley A. Fiske, April 14, 1905."

"I must say that Admiral Fiske was generous in giving credit and appreciation where it was due. I treasured this book and felt that the proper place for it was in the Museum.

"One of the inventions my father had was the speedometer for use on bicycles, but he never had it patented. Then about 50 years ago he fixed up a sort of washing machine in the kitchen. He used the frame of an old bicycle, fastened it to the ceiling over the wash tubs, attached those vacuum plungers with long handles to the peddles of the bicycle, and had a motor attached so that the washing was done that way, instead of on the old rubbing board. Many years later the Easy Washing machine used improved suction plungers on their machines.

"Another thing, which might have been the first central system of vacuum cleaners in the home, was rigged up by using one of those large old dairy milk cans, fastened to the ceiling in the cellar, with motor attached of course, and a pole, approximately two inches in diameter, going through the floors to the second floor, with an outlet on the first and second floors of the house, to which a flexible hose could be attached, and with equipment could be used for vacuum cleaning the first and second story floors. These, of course, were just simply to make cleaning easier than using the old broom or carpet sweeper. He had some kind of a suction pump in the basement. There might have been many more ideas and things he did that I never heard about.

"My father recognized the artistic ability my brother had, so used to take him to art galleries in New York City."

III. Mrs. Atwood's Recent Years

Returning to Mrs. Atwood when her 100th anniversary was observed March 23, 1965, newspapers throughout the nation printed feature stories about her, and now each year, as another birthday comes around, there is more publicity, so that, in her own laughing words, she has become "a notorious woman."

On January 13, 1970, Mrs. Keil wrote:

"It is too bad that my mother is unable to realize all the publicity she is receiving at this time. It is interesting to know how many people have kept up their correspondence with me since I wrote to thank them for the letters and cards they sent to mother on her last birthday, many of them requesting her autograph. I had to use her signature from old canceled checks. One is Dean Oliver, a junior in Madison Heights High School in Michigan, who is interested in Edison. He is a very fine boy. Last week I received a very nice letter from Nancy Sittig, a little 12-year-old girl in Columbus, Ohio, enclosing her picture. She wrote and said that she wished she had known Mr. Edison. I answered her letter and told her that if she would like to write to Mr. Theodore Edison or Mrs. Madeline Edison Sloane, they could be reached by sending the letters to Llewellyn Park, West Orange, N.J."

Mrs. Keil says that Nancy and her eight-year-old brother, Freddie, wanted to buy an Edison cylinder phonograph, which they were offered for $80, and shoveled snow to earn the money. At latest report they have two records, one, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," by the Knickerbocker Quartet, and the other "a song about a man wanting to give a woman a ring." She wrote a letter to The Edison National Monument, asking how they could get more information about their records, and the archivist, Miss Kathleen G. McGuirk, replied, suggesting that they read HOBBIES, "which," she said, "is much used by people wishing both to buy and sell old records and machines."

(Incidentally, Mrs. Keil also says that when she and her husband lived in New Jersey, they used to see trucks going from the plant of the Celluloid Company in Newark, to the Edison factories at West Orange, loaded with tubing for the Blue Amberol cylinder records. That, of course, was after the wax cylinders had been discontinued. The unbreakable Blue Amberols had a celluloid-type surface.)

Continuing with the discussion of her correspondence:

"Some of these people with whom I correspond are the nicest people one would want to meet. Dean Oliver, in his first letter, told me about his grandmother taking him to Greenfield Village many times, and he hopes to work there when he is able. He is a very intelligent and clean living boy, religious, and interested in patriotism and trying to improve the image of the 'teen agers that are ruining the reputation of the school systems. There are many good ones that we do not hear about, and that is too bad, because they all have to be punished by the reputation of the radicals."

On January 27, Mrs. Keil wrote:

"I told you about Buck Shaffer, who phoned me from Porterville, Cal., three weeks ago, and wanted to know if I could get my mother to play 'Mary Had a Little Lamb' on a tape recorder, so he could use it in his spring concert and in his next Americana record. That school band he has trained is just terrific. His brother, Melvin Shaffer, who works at the Audio-Visual department of the Medical College of Virginia is going to bring a small hand-size tape recorder for me to see if I can get mother to play, but I have no idea how successful I shall be. It all depends on how she is feeling at the moment."

Two days later I received this follow-up report from Mrs. Keil:

"Last night, Melvin Shaffer stopped by here with the tape recorder. He showed me how to use it, so this morning I phoned the nursing home and found that mother was the same, so decided to go over and try my luck. Mother's lunch was just coming up, so I fed her, and told her about what we wanted her to do, and asked if she felt up to it. She said 'I guess so,' so we went down and wheeled her to the piano. Since her cataracts prevent her seeing the keys on the piano, I played the tune of 'Mary.' put her finger on the first note to strike, and we were in business. It was rather feeble, and after a couple of tries she ended up with part of 'Jingle Bells.' I asked her if she could play 'God Bless America,' and she said she couldn't recall the tune, so I played it for her. She made a little try, and then I asked her if she wanted to try her 'American Legion March,' and she could play a few notes of that. Then I read off, a few words at a time, a greeting which Buck Shaffer thought he could use at his spring concert and on his next Americana band record, but when we got to the words, 'Panther Band,' she couldn't get that quite clear, but we managed to get through with most of it.

"Melvin Shaffer stopped by this evening and picked up the recorder. I asked him if he could make an extra tape, as I thought maybe you would like to have it, and I told him you were the one who had told us about Edison talking 'Mary Had a Little Lamb' into his tinfoil recording, and he said he would make a couple for me, even though I don't have a tape recorder. He said maybe some day I would have one or else could use it on someone's recorder. He seemed very grateful, and I was happy to be of any assistance. If a man took the time to make a day call from California in an effort to have my mother's voice on one of his records, I felt I would do everything in my power to accommodate him. I told him about what you are doing and he was interested in that, too.

"Buck Shaffer must do a tremendous job with those children who play in the band. He starts the children with music when they are in grade school. Porterville is not a very large town, and is quite isolated. Melvin says it takes a day to get there from either Los Angeles or San Francisco. These children have plans for traveling all over the country. When I had time to listen to a record he sent me of the band's playing, I was really flabbergasted. It was fantastic! They sounded like professionals . . . I have been busy digging out mother's manuscript copies of her music, and have had three copies made of her marches (one dedicated to Edison) and will send them to Mr. Shaffer to see if his band can use them. It was always mother's ambition to have her marches played by a band and I hope I can be instrumental in having that done."

FAMILY GET TOGETHER—Mrs. Harriet Atwood's children had a reunion in October, 1959, and were photographed together. In the front row are Mrs. Samuel Keil, Mrs. Robert Atwood and Mrs. Franklin H. Branin. Husbands are standing behind their respective wives.

In another reference to Buck Shaffer's Band, Mrs. Keil says the youngsters 'have played at concerts all over the country. The State Department sent them to Japan and Korea last year, and every year they play at the White House. Mr. Shaffer used to play the saxophone in Glen Miller's and Benny Goodman's Bands, but became tired of 'one night stands,' went back to teaching music in high schools, and has had wonderful results. Some of the older members of the Panther Band are now playing in Lawrence Welk's Band and other orchestras, so he has done a remarkable job for teaching good music to these children."

IV. Mrs. Atwood's Children

This article would be incomplete if I ended it without some further reference to Mrs. Atwood's three surviving children.

There cannot be many other women still alive at the age of 105, and with three living children all in their 70's—children, too, of whom any mother should be proud.

Mrs. Keil modestly disavows possessing any special talents, but her brother, Robert Atwood of Kingsport, Tennessee, who is himself an artist and a 'cello player, says she is "the writer in the family," and certainly the excerpts I have quoted from her letters testify that she has a gift for clear, coherent narration.

Her sister, Irene Atwood Branin, and her husband, Franklin Huling Branin, who operate the Brandstone Studio in Stanhope, N.J., celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary June 24, 1966. Mrs. Branin plays the piano and harp, and she and her husband are greatly interested in antiques, which she buys and sells. She also makes lamp shades, while Frank Branin buys, repairs and sells antique clocks, and refinishes old furniture.

Robert Atwood, the oldest of the children, has had a long and successful career as a painter. Although now living in Tennessee, a few years ago he had a studio in Phoenix, Ariz., and an issue of Arizona Days and Ways Magazine for December 3, 1961, shows a picture of him with one of his landscapes. He, Mrs. Branin and Mrs. Keil have proved themselves worthy descendants of their gifted musician mother and their brilliantly talented inventor father.

V. And, Finally

I'm sure it goes without saying that I hope to receive the tape recording of Mrs. Atwood's voice and piano playing, and shall cherish it as a priceless remembrance of the lady who was perhaps the first person to perform for Edison's wax cylinders. I am writing on February 1, when Mrs. Atwood's 105th birthday is still almost two months distant, but I hope it will be a wonderful one and wish her improved health and great happiness in the years to follow. It is almost impossible to realize the length of her life span. She was born about two weeks before Lee surrendered to Grant and was a tiny baby when Lincoln was killed.

One other thought occurs to me in closing: Among the great pleasures of writing for HOBBIES for so many years has been the knowledge that I have brought happiness through my articles to many pioneer recording artists or their surviving relatives, as well as winning a multitude of friends among HOBBIES readers. When I wrote a series about Frank C. Stanley (William Stanley Grinstead) in 1949, his widow was so pleased that she "adopted" me as her son, and now, even though Mother Grinstead is gone, I still seem to be considered a member

Talented daughter, Mrs. Irene Atwood Branin has inherited her mother's musical gifts. She plays both the harp and the organ. This photo was taken in 1950. (See page 130 for photograph of Irene Atwood Branin and her husband on their golden wedding anniversary.)

MUSIC BOXES

LARGE PRIVATE collection rare Swiss and disc types, table models, overtures, cuff boxes, automatics, many important makes for the advanced collector. Write your special wants or phone, 914 - PE 8-1506. — R. Bornand, 139 4th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. 10803 je3426

TAPE RECORDINGS

REMEMBER RADIO? Send stamped envelope for list of tape recordings available from radio's golden age. — Lee Book, Box 6338, Pittsburgh, Pa. o6276

NEW EXTENSIVE 42-page catalog. Opera to Jazz. Thanks to great response $1. — Holyoke Gardens, 4-B, Holyoke, Mass. 01040 jly3882

SOUND reflections of Thomas A. Edison. Five choice selections including "Preacher and the Bear" from an Edison cylinder phonograph. Professionally recorded on three-inch real of tape at 3 3/4 IPS. $1.95 postpaid. No stamps please. — Worster Audio/Visual, 1622 Cruce St., Norman, Okla. 73069 je3407

Free Circular - new country records and 8-track tape cartridges. Hoe down fiddle tunes, waltzes, gospels. Mac Wiseman, Hylo Brown, Red Smiley, Legendary, J. E. Mainer, others. — Uncle Jim O'Neal, Box A-Hob., Arcadia, Calif. 91006 mh120633

VIOLINS

VIOLIN FOR SALE: 1 Glevan Paolo Maggini Brescia 1640. — Phone 968-3537, Stephenville, Texas. je3802

ORGANS—MELODEONS

REED ORGANS, melodeons, bought, sold, repaired. Reeds tuned, revoiced, replacements. — C. H. Gunzinger, Box 276, Williamsville, Vt. 05362 s6676

PHONOGRAPHS

OLD PHONOGRAPH catalogs! Beautifully illustrated reprints. For example, 1899 Talking Machine Catalog, 64 pages, only $2.95 postpaid. Free illustrated list available. — Allen Koenigsberg, 1532 Ocean Ave., Brooklyn, N.Y. 11230 o6829

PHONOGRAPHS Repaired: New spare parts for Edison phonographs. Send stamp for list. — Gerichten, 23 Waldo Ave., Bloomfield, N.J. 07003 o6806

Please mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements.

of her family. The late Mrs. Margaret E. White, of West Newton, Mass., became such a devotee of my writings that she proclaimed me to be her godson, and I made two trips by plane to visit her during the last years of her life, when she was far into her 80's.

I just wonder what my chances will be, after this article appears in print, of being "adopted" by the Atwood family!

THE END - NO. 325
P. 130

PIANOS AND ROLLS

WANTED: Cylinder phonographs and records, open horn disc phonographs, music boxes & discs, piano & organ rolls, player organ, pathe operatic records. — T. Grattelo, 2614 Central, Alameda, Calif. my122971

AMPICO rolls original, in black boxes wanted. Mint condition, no torn edges. Up to $10 each. — Lacy, Caltech Library, Pasadena, Calif. 91109 my128041

COLLECTOR buys Art Echo, Apollo, Ampico and Duo-Art rolls for own enjoyment. — T. Grattelo, 2614 Central, Alameda, Calif. je3403

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

WANTED

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS before 1900 wanted. Strings, brass, clarinets, flutes, drums, mechanical, novelties. — William Kugler, 1124 Dionne, St. Paul, Minn. 55113 au6445

MISCELLANEOUS MUSIC

ALL CYLINDER and outside horn disc phonographs, parts, reproducers, records, bought, sold, repaired. — Dave Houser, 203 Fifth, Minersville, Pa. 17954 ap120821

FOR SALE: Disc and cylinder records, piano rolls and phonographs. 25c for lists. — Coppernoll's Early Phonographs and Records, P.O. Box 6, Palatine Bridge, N. Y. 13428 je3863

PLAYER PIANO BOOKS. Rebuilding the Player Piano, $6.95. Player Piano Treasury, $10. Put Another Nickel In, $15. (See review on this, page 110, Sept. 1966 HOBBIES.) Satisfaction guaranteed. Ask for catalog of other books. Prices postpaid. — Vestal Press, Vestal 2, N.Y. 13850 ap122572

MUSIC BOXES. HORN Phonographs, crank organs, singing bird boxes, coin operated and game machines, etc. bought, sold, traded, serviced. Send $1 for large 4-page sales list, refundable with order. — Stephen Leonard, 12 Garden St., Great Neck, N.Y. 11021. Phone: (212) 389-4144. je124262

SHEET MUSIC

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850. Catalog 25c. — Fore's 3151 High, Denver, Colorado 80205 o12698

SHEET MUSIC: Old popular, 250,000 songs. A-Z. No list yet. — Robert Greenlaw, Room 412, 307 No. Rampart Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif. 90026. je6276

SHEET MUSIC, choose from thousands of popular, late 1800s to date. We also buy. — McNeill, 1117 South Taylor Ave., Oak Park, Ill. 60304 je3253

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Real Names of ### Edison Cylinder Performers

By JIM WALSH

One of the many interesting features of Allen Koenigsberg's new book, "Edison Cylinder Records — 1889-1912," is a list of assumed names used by singers and players who made Edison 2-minute cylinders.

The compilation, however, is not complete, and it has occurred to me that it would be a good idea for me to supplement it by an article including not only the artists the book mentions but others who are omitted. Of course some of the examples are almost overly familiar. It is generally known, for instance, that "Irving Gillette" was really Harry H. McClaskey and "Frank C. Stanley" was William Stanley Grinstead.

On the other hand, few collectors seem to know that Will Oakland's legal name was Herman Hinrichs and that Sophie Tucker's maiden name was Sophie Kalish, even though, her father, for personal reasons, changed his last name to Abusa. Information of this sort, I think, will be welcomed by serious collectors.

It is also true that many other artists used shortened or altered forms of their genuine names. Billy Murray's parents named him William Thomas Murray, and Byron G. Harland turned around his original name of George Byron Harlan. Bob Roberts more formally was Robert A. Roberts.

"RED HOT MAMA." — Sophie Tucker's maiden name was Sophie Kalish, but she changed it three times by marriage. This photo is from a circular issued by a theater in Sydney, Australia.

I think it will also be interesting to give the married names of some of the women members of the Edison "talent," but in a good many instances, I don't have such information. And, while the following list may be considered fairly comprehensive, there undoubtedly are artists who used pseudonyms that I have not detected. I am including those who recorded for the 4-minute wax Amberol cylinders as well as the Standard 2-minute, but lack of space precludes dealing now with the large number of relative newcomers who made their debut on Blue Amberols.

The arrangement is this: First, the artist's recording name is given, followed by a colon. Then comes the real name or a longer form of the legal name and, in a great many instances, women singer's married names. The latter will be enclosed in parenthesis.

Here goes, then, for the "low-down":

BESSIE ABOTT: Bessie Pickens.

HARRY ANTHONY: John Young.

BLANCHE ARRAL: Clara Lardinois.

ELSIE BAKER: Elsie West Baker.

INEZ BARBOUR: (Mrs. Henry Hadley.)

JOE BELMONT: Joseph Walter Fulton.

SARAH BERNHARDT: Rosine Bernard.

JOHN H. BIELING: John Henry Bieling.

LUCREZIA BORI: Lucrezia Borja.

DAISY BOULAIS: (This lady is a mystery. She made no solo records, and worked only with Frank C. Stanley and Byron G. Harlan in a few "rube" sketches. The one photo Edison published of her name seems to resemble early pictures of Mrs. Stanley. I knew Mrs. Harlan in her last years and the photo certainly isn't of her, but I am wondering if it could be Mrs. Elizabeth Grinstead. If I can obtain information about this from one of Mrs. Grinstead's surviving children I'll pass it on.)

GRACE CAMERON: Grace Kerr. (Miss Cameron was living at Long Beach, Calif., in 1962, and presumably is still there. I assume she was married, but don't know her wedded name. She was the first theatrical performer to buy advertising in the initial issue of Variety, back in 1905.)

ALBERT C. CAMPBELL: Charles Campbell.

ANNA CASE: (Mrs. Clarence Mackay.)

BELOVED COMEDienne.—Marie Dressler was one of the most deservedly popular artists of her time. But her real name was far removed from her stage one.

(Photo from March, 1910, New Phonogram.)

THOMAS CHALMERS: Thomas Hardie Chalmers.

MISS CHAPPEL: Edith Chapman.

HELEN CLARK: Helen Price Clark (Mrs. Evan Cameron.)

HERBERT L. CLARKE: Herbert Lincoln Clarke.

ARTHUR CLIFFORD: Clifford Alexander Wiley.

ARTHUR COLLINS: Arthur Francis Collins.

SHE WAS UP TO TRIX!—Comedienne Helen Trix was known to her family as Helen Yeiser.

LADY OF MYSTERY.—Who was the mysterious soprano, Miss Daisy Boulais? Could she have been the wife of a famous recording star? (See the accompanying article for speculation on this interesting subject.) This photo is from The New Phonogram for October, 1905.

RAY COX: That seems to have been this clever vaudeville comedienne's real name. She had a sister, Hazel Cox, who was also on the stage, but they never worked together. I think Ray Cox's cylinder of "The Baseball Girl" is the funniest record I have heard by a woman.

EDGAR L. DAVENPORT: Edgar Longfellow Davenport.

ELEONORA DE CISNEROS: (Eleonor Broadfoot.)

MARIE DRESSLER: Leila von Koerber.

S. H. DUDLEY: Samuel Holland Rous.

EDWARD M. FAVOR: Edward M. Le Fevre.

CARLOS FRANCISCO: Emilio De Gogorza.

IRENE FRANKLIN: (Mrs. Burt Green.)

FREDERIC C. FREEMANTEL: Frederic Charles Freemantle.

P. FROSINI: Pietro Frosini.

"THE BASEBALL GIRL."—Ray Cox was a vaudeville comedienne who made only one record, but many hearers consider her 1909 monolog, "The Baseball Girl," made with the help of Edward Meeker, one of the funniest skits ever recorded by anybody.

(Picture from the September, 1909, New Phonogram.)

"MISS CHAPPEL."—Edith Chapman, soprano, made her first Edison cylinders as "Miss Chappel." Later she used her own name. She was also called Ethel Costello on Columbia discs.

(Photo from February, 1909, New Phonogram.)

IRVING GILLETTE: Harry Haley McCaskey.

BILLY GOLDEN: William B. Shire.

FRED HAGER: Frederick Wallace Haga.

BYRON G. HARLAN: George Byron Harlan.

CHARLES HARRISON: Charles William Harrison.

JAMES F. HARRISON: Frederick James Wheeler.

EDITH HELENA: Helen Jennings (Mrs. Domenico Russo).

MURRY K. HILL: Joseph T. Pope, Jr.

HARVEY HINDERMEYER: Harvey Wilson Hindermeyer.

FLORENCE HINKLE: (Mrs. Herbert Witherspoon).

JOE HUGHES: (Joseph Savory).

GEORGE W. JOHNSON: George Washington Johnson.

ADA JONES: (Mrs. Hugh Flaherty).

MARY JORDAN: (Mrs. Charles Clement Cresson).

MAY KELSO: May Kelso. (Her name was announced on records as "May," because the early cylinder phonographs couldn't record the following syllable.)

JOHN J. KIMBLE: John J. Kimmel.

HARRY MacDONOUGH: John Scantlebury Macdonald.

A. D. MADEIRA: (I'm just wondering. Can anybody tell us what Madeira's initials stood for?)

RICCARDO MARTIN: Hugh Whitfield Martin.

STELLA MAYHEW: (Mrs. Billie Taylor).

MABEL McKINLEY: (Mabel McKinley Baer).

EDWARD MEEKER: Edward Warren Meeker.

REED MILLER: (This is only a guess, but Miller's full name probably was James Reed Miller, since he made records also under the name of James Reed. It is interesting to know that he was a cornettist in the Spanish-American War.)

CHRISTINE MILLER: (Mrs. Daniel Clemson).

CORINNE MORGAN: Corinne Morgan Welsh (Mrs. C. W. Dumont).

BILLY MURRAY: William Thomas Murray.

J. W. MYERS: John W. Myers.

MARIE NARELLE: Mary Ryan.

GRACE NELSON: Grace Hornby.

HENRY NESBIT: Harvey N. Emmons.

MARGUERITE NEWTON: (Mrs. George P. Watson).

WILL OAKLAND: Herman Hinrichs.

VESS L. OSSMAN: Sylvester Louis Ossman, Sr.

HERBERT PAYNE: Ernest Pike.

CYRUS PIPPINS: Byron G. Harlan.

STEVE PORTER: Stephen Carl Porter.

MARIE RAPFOLD: Marie Winterroth (Mrs. Julius Rappold, Jr.; Mrs. Rudolf Berger.)

GUS REED: Harold Nelson.

JAMES REED: Reed Miller.

BOB ROBERTS: Robert A. Roberts.

EUGENE C. ROSE: Eugene Carl Rose.

FREDERIC ROSE: (Eugene?) Schmachels.

JOSIE SADLER: Josephine Rauscher (Mrs. Josephine S. Geddes.)

ELIZABETH SPENCER: Elizabeth Dickerson (Mrs. Otis B. Spencer; Mrs. E. B. Southworth, Jr.)

GRACE SPENCER: (Mrs. Willard Foster Doolittle.)

HARRY SPENCER: Henry Caleb Spencer, Jr.

LEN SPENCER: Leonard Garfield Spencer.

BORROWED FROM ROYALTY.—Opera Singer Marguerita Sylva adapted her stage name from her own first name and from Queen Carmen Sylva of Rumania. Her first name really was Marguerite, as it is shown on this sheet of music.

FRANK C. STANLEY: William Stanley Grinstead.

ELISE STEVENSON: (Mrs. Rustling Wood.)

CAL STEWART: Calvin Edward Stewart.

A. L. SWEET: Albert L. Sweet.

MARGUERITA SYLVA: Marguerite Alice Helene Smith (Mrs. W. D. Mann and Mrs. Bernard L. Smith.)

TASCOTT: Years ago, someone—I think it may have been the veteran song writer, the late Warren Raymond Walker—gave me the remainder of "Tascott's" name, but I cannot find it now. I should be grateful if any student of old-time vaudeville would supply it.)

STELLA TOBIN: (Mrs. Paul Southe.)

HELEN TRIX: Helen Yeiser (when very young she was married to a noted actor, Frank Fogarty, but they were soon divorced.)

SOPHIE TUCKER: Sophie Kalish (Mrs. Louis Tuck, Mrs. Frank Westphal and Mrs. Al Lackey.)

WALTER VAN BRUNT: Walter John Van Brunt known after 1916 as Walter Scanlan.)

CLARICE VANCE: Clara Ella Black (Mrs. Moses Edwin Gumble.)

NEVADA VAN DER VEER: Mrs. Reed Miller.)

BERRICK VON NORDEN: Ber- rick Schloss.

"MR. AND MRS. WATEROUS." This couple was Herbert L. Waterous & his wife, Jayne Herbert Waterous.

GEORGE P. WATSON: The German yodeler's death certificate gives his father's name as Philip Zint, so presumably Watson was a stage name and the singer's real name was George P. (Philip) Zint.

ELIZABETH WHEELER: Bess Nicholson (Mrs. William Wheeler.)

WILLIAM WHEELER: Wheeler told me he had a middle name, but discarded it. His father's name was William Watson Wheeler. Perhaps the tenor's middle name also was Watson.

BILLY WILLIAMS: William Banks.

GEORGE S. WILLIAMS: William Stanley Grinstead.

NAT M. WILLS: Louis McGrath Wills.

And so there they are: The most comprehensive list of assumed names, full names and married names I could prepare, based on my present stock of information. Perhaps some other time I can get around to compiling a similar list of other artists who made Blue Amberol cylinders and Edison Diamond Discs.

IDENTIFY YOURSELF

Mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements

SEARCH FOR MUSIC BOXES, NICKELODEONS, AND ORGANS

Immediate Decision — Immediate Payment!

To maintain our large inventory we must constantly buy. We're not looking for bargains but are willing to pay well for choice pieces. Our large worldwide business (over $1,000,000.00 in sales per year) is built on high volume and fast turnover. We're willing to work on a low margin of profit—a fact that will put more dollars in your pocket when you sell. It's easy to sell to Hathaway and Bowers, Inc. Here's all you do: (1) Give us a brief description of the instrument you have for sale. (2) Send a photo or two of the instrument (simple Polaroid snapshots will be fine).

We'll reply and indicate our interest. If we purchase your instrument you'll be paid immediately in full. And, on larger instruments such as nickelodeon pianos, organs, etc., we'll take care of all the shipping arrangements—you don't have to lift a finger!

If you have a choice musical instrument for sale, consider us to be buyers! Contact us today. You'll be glad you did.

Below are some of our main purchase interests:

•COIN-OPERATED PIANOS — Electric coin-in-the-slot paper roll instruments made by Seeburg, Wurlitzer, Nelson-Wiggen, Western Electric, Cohnola, Cremona, etc. Especially want larger instruments (orchestrions) with drums, xylophone, pipes, etc.

•REPRODUCING PIANOS. Electric grand pianos, especially those in ornate or "art" cases, by Walte, Ampico, or Duo-Art. Also wanted: Ampico, Duo-Art, and Walte tolls—especially in large quantity lots.

•DISC MUSIC BOXES — All types of Regina music boxes including automatic changers, Polyphon, Symphonion, etc. disc boxes with discs 15" or larger in diameter.

•CYLINDER MUSIC BOXES — Large models with interchangeable cylinders, on matching tables, in ornate cases, etc.

•BAND ORGANS, CALLIOPIES. Circus band organs, player calliopes wanted.

•OTHER AUTOMATIC INSTRUMENTS: Our needs are large and varied. If you have some other type of automatic self-playing antique instrument that you think will be of interest, let us know.

•ENTIRE COLLECTIONS — We are especially eager to purchase entire private and museum collections of automatic instruments.

Have an interesting music box, nickelodeon, or other instrument for sale? We'll look forward to hearing from you! Use the coupon below if you wish.

Name .....
Street .....
City ..... State .... Zip...
Tel. No. ....

I have the following instrument(s) for sale. Please advise me of your interest.

HATHAWAY & BOWERS, INC.

"The World's Largest Music Box Dealer"

Dept. HM, 11975 E. Florence Ave.

Santa Fe Springs, Calif. 90760

Tel. (213) 941-8774

jec

HISTORICAL RECORDS

(Continued from page 36)

up to his voice category — organ-like, ample, a real Viking vocal instrument.

Nothing surprising, since its possessor was born in Oslo, Norway. What's more, he studied in Stockholm, Sweden, and began his operatic career in that city.

Unavoidably, opera houses in Germany and Austria soon claimed him, as did those of other countries, including the United States.

On records, the sonorousness of his large voice is most impressive. His Long Play disc very well attests to that.

IVAR ANDRESEN—Rococo 5313:

Side 1—1. Der Skrek en Fugl (Singing)
2. MEISTERSINGER VON NURNBERG: Num hort . . . Das schone Fest 3. GOTTERDAMMERUNG: Hagens Ruf 4. PARISAL: Titirel der fromme Held 5. TRISTAN UND ISOLDE: Der ode Tag zum letzten Mal (w. Graarud, Sattler) 6. TRISTAN UND ISOLDE: Dies wundervolle Weib 7. ZAUBERFLOTE: In diesen heiligen Hallen.

Side 11—1. EUGEN ONEGIN: Envar pa jorden 2. HUGENOTTEN: Choral 3. MACBETH: Come dal ciel (in Swedish) 4. REQUIEM: Confutatis (Verdi) 5. Der Selt'ner Beter (Lowe) 6. Der Doppelganger (Schubert).

Although familiar with Andresen's singing, I was again impressed by its vastness, but also, this time, by what seemed to me its monotonousness.

The vocal "coloring" appeared the same in almost everything he sang. There was no Wagner, Tchaikovsky, Verdi, Meyerbeer — there was good vocalizing, but that's not enough.

The plethora of beauty in his singing is of a rather phlegmatic nature; seldom does the subject come to life through the music with clarity. Once only, in Lowe's "Selt'ner Beter," did the tonal picture break through the musical background well delineated and with conviction.

GITTA ALPAR

A light soprano gifted with a pure-textured voice and ability to convey a musical thought gently but also energetically when underlining a phrase, is certainly a rare specimen among singers. But when her coloratura is not always immaculate, nor her trill spontaneous, nor attack and intonation unerring, the performance becomes less attractive.

I gathered these impressions from Alpar's LP. She is a fine artist and I do appreciate her art, but I also wish she sang more evenly.

GITTA ALPAR—Rococo 5303:

Side 1—1. FIGAROS HOCHZEIT: Sagt, holde Frauen 2. BARBIER VON SEVILLE: Fragst du mein bekomm'nes Herz 3. TRAVIATA: Ah fors'e lui 4. RIGO-

SOME COLUMBIA TALENT

OLD POSTER—Many men and women who made Edison Amberol cylinders are shown on this 1907 Columbia poster, which may be the only one of its kind in existence. It is owned by Jim Walsh.

Among the 68 artists are the rather obscure baritone, Frederick Weld (last man in the seventh row) and Pete La Mar, yodeler (second man in eighth row from top). Note the clarity of Ada Jones' bold signature.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

"A Matter of Identification"

By JIM WALSH

I. A Title From Dickens

In the June issue, you read, I hope, my article commemorating the approaching 100th anniversary of the death of Charles Dickens. To "tie in" with this observance, I have chosen the title of this month's Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists from one of my favorite Dickens books—"Our Mutual Friend," which many present-day critics are becoming more and more inclined to consider perhaps the finest novel the great English author wrote. It is also the last book he lived to complete.

Those of you familiar with "Our Mutual Friend"—and every lover of fascinating fiction should know it—will recall the scene near the end of the story in which John Harmon is asked by a police inspector to remain concealed until the inspector, talking with some other men, utters the words, "a matter of identification." Harmon, the nominal hero of the book, is then to show himself, as an important step toward clearing up a murder mystery. He does, with gratifying results, while his beautiful young wife, the former Bella Wilfer, looks on uncomprehendingly.

I shall now explain how this article is also centered around "A Matter of Identification." And to explain, I must tell something about a visit my friends, Quentin and Evelyn Riggs, who now live in Huntington Beach, Calif., paid to the beloved baritone singer and recording artist, Elliott Shaw, at his home in Sharon, Conn., during the summer of 1969.

II. Remarkable Group Photo

During a conversation between Quentin and the artist he had ardently admired for many years, Elliott remarked that he'd like to show an unusual group photograph. He produced it, and Quentin at once saw that the term "unusual" was not exaggerated. The picture, in fact, included perhaps the most remarkable group of recording artists ever photographed together, and Quentin could hardly control his excitement as he gazed. The performers were all men, and he recognized some at first glance, but others baffled him.

Elliott Shaw, himself, unfortunately was not able to be of much help. Now 82 years of age, he has extremely poor eyesight and could not see the picture well enough to identify most of the men. Nor could he say exactly when, where and why the photo was taken, but he did remember that he was in the group (Quentin had no trouble identifying him) and he was sure the man at the extreme left of the top row was Clifford Cairns, who was the Victor Artist and Repertoire Department manager when the photo was made.

Quentin and Evelyn visited me shortly after their call on Elliott Shaw, and he was full of discussion about the picture from which he had a negative made, and promised to send me a print after he had become settled in his new home.

True to his word, he mailed me a copy of the photo. I became as excited as he, and thought at once what a "find" it would be to share with readers of HOBBIES, as I am now doing. But I too found myself perplexed by some of the faces and could not identify them no matter how hard I tried. Others I knew at once, but I am ashamed to say that I jumped to the conclusion that the man standing between Shaw and Lewis James in the top row was Reinald Werrenrath, although "Werry" was a much larger specimen than the one shown in the picture.

I was especially tantalized by a very young looking fellow in the rear row of seated men. He looked exactly like my present-day friend, Glenn L. ("Whitey") Robertson, a photographer at television station WSLs in Roanoke, Va., who took the pictures of my old phonographs that were displayed on the cover of the September, 1969, HOBBIES. Even though I now know who this man was, I keep thinking of him as "Whitey" Robertson, which he couldn't be, since the picture was taken some 45 years ago, a long time before "Whitey" was born.

Quentin and I were determined to identify every one of the 20 men shown in the group, and he had a batch of copies printed of the picture. He sent one to every man whom he knew to be still living and whose address he could obtain, as well as to some other surviving recording artists who might have known these singers. For my part I deduced, correctly, that the ensemble was the Victor Male Chorus and that its members were gathered in front of old Trinity Church in Camden, N.J., a building with remarkably fine acoustic qualities, which Victor used for large-scale choral and symphonic recording. I also guessed that the picture was taken in 1926, but am now inclined to think it was done in September, 1925, when the Male Chorus made some records in the old church. I chose this date because some of the men are holding topcoats (the others probably had hung theirs up inside the building), which makes it seem the weather must have been rather chilly which it might have been in mid-September. My fellow sleuth in California did not hear from all the artists to whom he had written, but he did receive enough replies to make it possible to pin-point some of the men who were puzzles to us. In a few instances, however, those who replied gave differing identifications, which served to increase our bewilderment. Carl Mathieu, first tenor of the Peerless Quartet in its final phase was especially helpful, since he supplied the names of four men who had perplexed us, despite the fact that Richard Crooks had already tentatively identified two by their last names.

There was still some uncertainty, however, so in an effort to resolve it I made a long distance call on Sunday, February 22, to Wilfred Glenn, the 89-year-old basso, founder and manager of the Shannon Quartet and the Revelers, who now lives in retirement at Charlottesville, Va. I had previously written "Bill" a letter, telling him I was trying to complete the job of identifying the members of the choral group and asking him to have his copy of the picture before him at the hour I said I would call.

I am sorry to say, though, that Bill had been feeling bad for two months and hadn't opened his mail of the past week, so my letter had gone unread. Nevertheless, he entered enthusiastically into the project and, basing his opinions on his vivid recollection of the picture, told me precisely who was who as he recalled them. By the time we finished talking, I felt that I had sufficiently positive identifications to proceed with writing this article, although, since Mr. Glenn didn't have the picture before him, there are a few instances in which I still feel a little shaky as to whether we have the right man. Anyway, here goes to identify the group as you see them in the accompanying photograph. (See next page):

III. Who They Are

I was especially concerned to ascertain definitely who was the first man on the left in the group standing just in front of the church door. Elliott Shaw said positively it was Clifford Cairns, and Olive Kline had gone along with that identification. Carl Mathieu, however, had taken him to be Hugh Herndon, a booking agent.

REMARKABLE PHOTO—This is undoubtedly one of the most remarkable pictures ever taken of a group of famous recording artists. It was made some 45 years ago and shows the Victor Male Chorus, assembled in front of old Trinity Church, Camden, N.J., for a recording session. Members of the group are identified in the accompanying article.

When I asked my friend, Bill Glenn, he said boomerily there wasn't "a bit of doubt in the world about it—it's Cliff Cairns. I suggested to Cliff that he send for a photographer and get a picture made, because it was so unusual to have so many leading singers together at one time. He agreed with me, and the picture was taken." Mr. Glenn said he hoped Cairns was still living and added that he had never heard of his having died. Then he commented: "He was certainly a fine fellow. The first time I ever saw Cliff Cairns was shortly after I went to New York to live and heard him sing bass in an oratorio."

I am sorry to have to place on record the fact that Mr. Cairns is dead. He was born August 30, 1880, and died in New Smyrna Beach, Fla., December 14, 1955, at the age of 75. A death notice in the New York Times gives his full name as Clifford Irving Cairns, and terms him a composer of sacred music, whose most noted work was a musical arrangement of the 23rd Psalm. Beside his artist and repertoire work for Victor and, later, RCA Victor, and his singing in many records made by Victor male and mixed voice groups, he had also directed the "Firestone Hour" on radio. The accomplished basso had lived in Florida for eight months preceding his death after having previously made his home in Montclair, N.J. (he was a native of New Jersey), and Scarsdale, N.Y. He was survived by his widow, Mrs. Greta Cairns; a brother, Edward, of Upper Montclair; a stepson, Lindsey M. Donaldson of Miami, and a stepdaughter, Mrs. Robert Postle of Buffalo, N.Y. I am now convinced, in view of Bill Glenn's account of the picture's origin, that the first man on the left is Clifford Cairns and that our good friend, Carl Mathieu, was mistaken in his Hugh Herndon identification.

Quentin and I were puzzled concerning the tall, rather thin man next to Cairns, but Olive Kline revealed that he was James Stanley, a Peerless Quartet bass. He continued to sing in Victor groups for several years after the Quartet disbanded, but at some time in the 1930s developed a cancer on his vocal chords. The growth was successfully removed, but after that "Jim" Stanley was able to speak only in a hoarse whisper. He has been dead for many years.

This back row must have been reserved primarily for men with deep voices. I was somewhat surprised to find, standing with one hand to a derby hat that shades his face, another basso, the late Frank Croxton, whom Henry Burr dismissed from the Peerless Quartet late in 1925 in favor of James Stanley. There must not have been any ill feeling on Croxton's part toward his successor for them to be together. A book of Victor Master Records, compiled by an English record authority, Brian A. L. Rust, for the years 1925-36, shows that Stanley and Croxton sang together in many concerted Victor engagements until well into the 1930s.

Next in order is Elliott Shaw, to whom we are indebted for calling this picture to Quentin Riggs' attention. Then comes the rather small man whom I at first mistakenly took to be Werrenrath, but who is really Rosario Bourdon, skilled violoncellist and pianist, and assistant conductor of the Victor Orchestra, Bourdon of course, directed the recording session for which the singing group had been engaged.

The rear row ends with a tenor, the late Lewis James—the only high-voiced man of the lot, unless Bourdon also was a tenor.

Let's turn now to the gentlemen who are standing in the foreground. On first sight I identified the man wearing the light colored hat, and with walking stick propped behind him, as the late Charles Hart, who was the original first tenor of the Shannon Four, but who left it in 1923. Quentin was doubtful about its being Hart, but several other persons said it was, and Bill Glenn said so, positively and unmistakably. He even described just where and how my old friend Charlie was standing. It is odd that Hart, who had been one of Victor's most popular soloists until late in 1923, never again made any records alone, although he sang for several years in choruses. He went to Germany in 1925 to study for opera, and there is a question in my mind as to whether he returned in time to take part in a picture made in September of that year. If not, this group snapshot must belong to 1926. Pending further information, that will remain a matter of uncertainty.

There is no doubt concerning the man beside Hart. He is Royal Dadmun, the famous baritone, who is still living in Williamstown, Mass. Quentin sent him a copy of the picture, but I believe has had no reply.

Passing by the seated singers for the time being, we come to the two men standing on the right. The rather short, burly man holding the top-coat, was the first I recognized. He could be no one but the late Henry Burr, most popular of ballad singers and second tenor of the Peerless Quartet, who had a larger personal following than any other singer in the convocation.

The identity of the man beside Burr, however, was, and still may be, uncertain. Quentin had an idea he might be Robert Simmons, a tenor who sang in the 1930s with Wilfred Glenn's Revelers. I couldn't remember having seen a picture of Robert Simmons, but I did remember that an old Pathe record supplement contained one of William Simmons, a baritone. My Pathe reference material is at the Library of Congress, but from what I remembered of the picture, Burr's companion resembled William Simmons. My viewpoint received support when he was identified as "Bill Simmons" by Carl Mathieu.

But when I mentioned the mix-up to Wilfred Glenn he said the rather stocky, young-looking singer was "Bob Simmons." "He did a lot of work with us," Bill remarked, adding that he couldn't recall that William Simmons ever had any Victor connections.

Unfortunately, since that conversation, I have become muddled again, because Robert Simmons' name does not appear in the Victor Master Book, so far as I can find, until October 25, 1932. To make it more puzzling, William did have Victor "connections" and was for a time a member of the Victor Mixed Chorus. On September 3, 1926, he sang with a group that also included Helen Clark, Della Baker, Mrs. Charles Hart (Esther Nelson), James Price and Frank Croxton.

So now, since Bill Glenn was speaking without having the picture before him, I don't know what to think. Tentatively, I'm sticking with his identification of Robert Simmons, although there is a chance we may find it was really William. I'd like to hear further from Mr. Mathieu about that.

OLD AND NEW RECORDING METHODS—The top photo shows Rosario Bourdon, assistant conductor of the Victor Orchestra, supervising a recording session by the acoustic method which was discontinued in 1925. Note the Stroh trumpets on the violins to amplify the sound and throw it into the recording horn. In the far background, the gray-haired man playing a cornet is the famous trumpeter, Emil Keneke. William H. Reitz, bell and xylophone soloist and drummer, who played in thousands of Victor records, stands at the extreme right.

The lower picture shows Bourdon conducting a microphonic recording session, with members of the orchestra comfortably seated. Reitz is at the drums, on the extreme right-hand side. Bourdon also directed the recording session of the Victor Male Chorus, shown in the accompanying large photograph.

I'll skip for the moment the first seated man in the front row, and pass on to half a dozen artists whom Quentin and I had no trouble identifying. The second man on the steps is the late Lambert Murphy, one of Victor's popular soloists and first tenor of the Orpheus Quartet and the American Singers. Next comes our friend, Wilfred Glenn, the renowned bass who was 89 in April, and who instigated the taking of this photograph. He is smiling broadly as if he is well pleased with the favorable reception of his picture-making suggestion to Cliff Cairns. We come next to Carl Mathieu, who has been so helpful in the identification work, and last, on the end, is Stanley Baughman, baritone of the final Peerless Quartet, who was also sometimes called a basso cantante, meaning a bass singer with a high range. Just behind Mathieu and Baughman is Richard Crooks, who is still living in California, in poor health but who helped Quentin with his identifications. This famous tenor was mostly a Red Seal artist. Then, next to Crooks and within touching distance of Simmons, is the late Franklyn Baur, wearing an unhappy expression and a hat that seems too large for him. Baur was only 21, if this picture was made in 1925, so must have been the youngest man of the lot.

IV. The Mysterious Four

Finally, we come to the four singers whose identification gave more trouble than all the others, because none was a regular recording artist or well-known record-making soloist, although all turn out to have been prominent in concert and oratorio. We were stumped by the seated man between Dadmun and Murphy, until Carl Mathieu identified him as Foster House. When Quentin informed me of this, I couldn't recall any singer by that name, but did remember Judson House, a tenor who made a few Columbia records in 1915-16 when he was only 21 years of age.

It occurred to me that Carl might have remembered House's first name incorrectly, and when I looked up Judson House's pictures in a couple of 1916 Columbia record supplements, I decided he almost certainly had erred, because the 1916 House wore his hair in the same style as the man in the group photo. When I talked with Wilfred Glenn, he said the fellow in the big picture certainly was Judson House, who did a great deal of ensemble work, but Bill declared that he had never heard of a Foster House. He described Judson House as "sort of heavy-set," but the man in the group photo doesn't appear of abnormal size.

I decided that the man beside Murphy certainly must be Judson House, and when I turned to Rust's book I was pleased to find that this tenor did frequently sing in Victor choruses. But—oh, my aching head!—I also found a couple of entries for "F. House," who took part in occasional concerted work. That certainly seems to indicate that there was a Foster House. So now I'm wondering which is right, Mathieu or Glenn? On the strength of Judson House's much more frequent appearances, I'm tentatively identifying the smiling singer as Judson, but maybe he was really Foster.

Richard Crooks had referred to the man sitting immediately behind Murphy as "Price." Carl Mathieu made the identification explicit by saying he was "Jimmy" Price—otherwise James Price, a well-known New York tenor of the 1920's, who, Rust's book shows, often sang in Victor groups. The Musical Blue Book of America for 1921 describes him as a "lyric tenor" and as a member of the Oratorio Quartet, whose other members were Vera Curtis, soprano, Alice Moncrieff, contralto, and J. Campbell-McInnes, baritone.

Carl Mathieu identified the genially smiling man beside Price as Justin Lawrie, and Bill Glenn agreed. I had imagined that Lawrie, about whom I knew nothing, was a baritone, but Bill said he was a tenor. A day or two after the talk with my Charlottesville friend, I received a letter from Quentin, saying he had been looking through some old Columbia record lists and had discovered that in 1926 Justine [sic] Lawrie had made double-faced disc 721D, "My Lord and I" and "Sometime We'll Understand." That made me remember having seen that record in Columbia catalogs and, since no indication was given of the singer's voice quality, I had wondered whether "Justine Lawrie" was a man or a woman. Rust's book, which lists him variously as John Lawrie, James Lawrie and Justin Lawrie, shows that he did a great deal of singing in Victor groups.

And now, to complete our identifications, we have the very young looking man whom I think of as "Whitey" Robertson. Carl Mathieu referred to him as "Fred Baer," and Wilfred Glenn said that was right. In a musical reference book I found that Frederic Baer, native of New York City, was a bass-baritone (I had taken him to be a tenor by his appearance), who was a pupil of Adelaide Geschmidt, Cesare Sodero (who directed the Edison recording orchestra for years and afterwards was conductor at the Metropolitan Opera), and Charles Albert Baker, a pianist who played recording accompaniments for many famous singers. One book said that Baer "has appeared with several of the leading symphony orchestras and choral organizations; also at many music festivals."

I have no information as to whether House, Price, Lawrie and Baer are still living, but have not learned of the deaths of any. If they are living, all are probably 70 or more.

So there we have the entire ensemble at least tentatively identified. Besides Bourdon, the conductor, it includes 11 tenors (counting the uncertain Simmons as Robert instead of William); four basses, one bass-baritone, and three baritones. I'd like to have copies of this issue of HOBBIES sent to all living members of the group whose addresses I can obtain, because I'm sure they'd be interested in seeing this picture reproduced so many years after they posed for it.

V. Victor Male Chorus Recordings

And now alas! we come to more mystification! Rust's book is supposed to list every Victor record, issued or unissued, made from the beginning of the electrical recording era in 1925 through most of 1936, but I have been unable to find any offering by the Victor Male Chorus that uses exactly the artists shown in this picture. Baer is invariably omitted, and neither William nor Robert Simmons appear.

For interest's sake I'll mention the various ensemble recording sessions briefly and tell who took part in them, even though none corresponds exactly to the picture personnel.

On April 2, 1925, the Victor Male Chorus recorded "Homeland" and on April 17, "Winter Song." This was done in Camden, and the songs were issued on record No. 19650, but the artists are not identified.

The next engagement was July 30, 1925—certainly not topcoat weather—when, with "Rosy" Bourdon conducting the orchestra, two concerted numbers were recorded, "The Soldiers' Chorus from Faust," and "Chorus of Bishops and Priests," from "L'Africaine." The Soldiers' Chorus was issued on No. 19783, but the other number was never offered for sale. The singers were Murphy, James, Baur, Albert Campbell, Burr, Shaw, Dadmun, John Meyer, Glenn, Croxton and Cairns. This record was obviously made before Campbell, Meyer and Croxton were dropped from the Peerless Quartet in the autumn of 1925, and while most of the mentioned singers are in the group photo, the picture obviously was taken at a different recording session.

Three efforts were made to record Sir Edward Elgar's "Land of Hope and Glory" before a satisfactory result was obtained on September 15, 1925, which I am assuming to be the day the picture was made. On July

Two Ballads by Judson House

A 2011 (10-inch 75c.) I KNOW A LOVELY GARDEN. (D'Hardelot.) Judson House, tenor. Orchestra accompaniment.
FORGOTTEN. (Cowles.) Judson House, tenor. Orchestra accompaniment.

It seems almost unbelievable that a man just turned twenty-one, the age of Judson House, could sing with the perfection of detail shown in the month's offerings by this artist. D'Hardelot's exquisite gem is very short but very perfect; each word, each note has its own individual beauty, and House sings with complete understanding of each perfection.

House

YOUTHFUL TENOR—This picture of Judson House is illustrated from the July, 1916, Columbia record supplement. House may be one of the men in the group photo reproduced with this article.

30, the singers were Baur, Mathieu, Campbell, Judson House, Murphy, Price, Shaw, Glenn, Croxton, Cairns, Meyer and Dadmun. On the next, September 9, trial, Crooks, James, Burr and Lawrie replaced House and Price. The personnel remained the same on September 15 except, according to the book, Charles Harrison replaced Mathieu.

Now, what are we to think? Charles Harrison isn't in the picture, but Charles Hart is. Could the Victor files mistakenly have identified Hart as Harrison? Perhaps so, but then Mathieu, whose place Harrison is supposed to have taken, was also present in the photo. Anyhow, the successful "Land of Hope and Glory" was issued on the reverse side of the Soldier's Chorus.

On Sept. 9, the chorus unsuccessfully attempted to record a Medley of War Songs, but managed on September 15 to make an acceptable

(Continued on page 50)

TAPE RECORDINGS

REMEMBER RADIO? Send stamped envelope for list of tape recordings available from radio's golden age. — Lee Book, Box 6338, Pittsburgh, Pa. o6276

NEW EXTENSIVE 42-page catalog. Opera to Jazz. Thanks to great response $1. — Holyoke Gardens, 4-B, Holyoke, Mass. 01040 jly3882

SOUND reflections of Thomas A. Edison. Five choice selections including "Preacher and the Bear" from an Edison cylinder phonograph. Professionally recorded on three-inch reel of tape at 3 3/4 IPS. $1.95 Postpaid. No stamps please. — Worster Audio/Visual, 1622 Cruce St., Norman, Okla. 73069 s3407

Free Circular — new country records and 8-track tape cartridges. Hoe down fiddle tunes, waltzes, gospels. Mac Wiseman, Hylo Brown, Red Smiley, Legandary, J. E. Mainer, others. — Uncle Jim O'Neal, Box A-Hob, Arcadia, Calif. 91006 mh120633

FREE: Old records on tape. Send blank tape, reel or cassette and type of music you like from old records. 1900-1930. I will return it with sampling of music you like. — Glen Dunston, 1533 Adeline, Yuba City, Calif. 95551 d60821

ORGANS—MELODEONS

REED ORGANS, melodeons, bought, sold, repaired. Reeds tuned, revoiced replacements. — C. H. Gunzinger, Box 276, Williamsville, Vt. 05362 s6675

PHONOGRAPHS

OLD PHONOGRAPH catalogs! Beautifully illustrated reprints. For example, 1899 Talking Machine Catalog, 64 pages, only $2.95 postpaid. Free illustrated list available. — Allen Koenigsberg, 1532 Ocean Ave., Brooklyn, N.Y. 11230 o6829

PHONOGRAPHS Repaired: New spare parts for Edison phonographs. Send stamp for list. — Gerichten, 23 Waldo Ave., Bloomfield, N.J. 07003 o6806

WANTED: EDISON cylinder phonograph, with brass trumpet horn, in working condition. — Ralph Hufsey, 1049 S. Lincoln, Marshall, Mo. 65340 au3023

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS before 1900 wanted. Strings, brass, clarinets, flutes, drums, mechanical, novelties. — William Kugler, 1124 Dionne, St. Paul, Minn. 55113 n6445

PIANOS AND ROLLS

AMPICO Rolls wanted in black boxes. Mint condition, no torn edges. Up to $10 each. — Lacy, Caltech Library, Pasadena, Calif. 91109 my124431

FOR SALE: Rebuilt player pianos, also orchestrated pianos, playing O-roll drums and so forth. — Paul Tilson, Elwood, Nebr. Ph.: 785-2522. au3633

MISCELLANEOUS MUSIC

ALL CYLINDER and outside horn disc phonographs, parts, reproducers, records, bought, sold, repaired. — Dave Houser, 203 Fifth, Minersville, Pa. 17954 ap120821

PLAYER PIANO BOOKS. Rebuilding the Player Piano, $6.95. Player Piano Treasury, $10. Put Another Nickel In, $15. (See review on this, page 110, Sept. 1966 HOBBIES.) Satisfaction guaranteed. Ask for catalog of other books. Price postpaid—Vestal Press, Vestal 2, N.Y. 13850 ap122572

FOR SALE: Disc and cylinder records, piano rolls and phonographs. 25c for lists. — Coppernoll's Early Phonographs and Records, P.O. Box 6, Palatine Bridge, N.Y. 13428 s3863

SHEET MUSIC

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850. Catalog 25c — Fore's 3151 High, Denver, Colorado 86205 o12698

SHEET MUSIC: Old popular, 250,000 songs. A-Z. No list yet. — Robert Greenlaw, Room 412, 307 N. Rampart Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif. 90026 d6276

SHEET MUSIC, choose from thousands of popular, late 1800s to date. We also buy. — McNeill, 1117 South Taylor Ave., Oak Park, Ill. 60304 s3253

RECORDS WANTED

BERLINER, Climax, Zonophone, Monarch and Deluxe Victor, B&S Columbia discs wanted: popular and classical. Will buy or trade. — P. Charosh, 60 Clarkson Ave., Brooklyn, N.Y. 11226 jly6693

I WANT TO BUY: first class copies of the following cylinder records: U. S. Everlasting, 1295, Arcadie is Ever Young, and 1562. Flora's Holiday; Edison Blue Amberol, 1950, Singing Girl Selection: 5065, New Gaiety, and 5377, Banjo Medley. — Jim Walsh, Box 476, Vinton, Va. 24179 tfx

WANTED: Jazz and popular LP years 1949-1965. Write giving label, number, title, artist. — P.O. Box 127, New York, N.Y. 10040 n6008

RECORDS FOR SALE

FOR MONTHLY LISTS of the finest operatic LP's and 78 rpm discs write: — The DomArt Collection, 126 Fifth Street, Providence, R.I. 02906 au128041

OVER 100,000 hard-to-get records. 1903 to L.P. — Jack's Record Cellar, 254 Scott St., San Francisco, Calif. 94117 my122517

35,000 CLASSICAL records. Domestic Europeans. Also 50,000 popular. Many cut-out LPs. Magazines (Opera News, Opera, etc.). Books (Biographies, etc.). Reasonably priced. — J. Scignano, 29 Columbia Ave., Nutley, N.J. 07110 n6069

RECORDS 78s of King Oliver's Creole Jazz Band Okeh 4906 Gennett 5133 ex. cond. Best offer. Also Jolson originals. Tape of 20 songs by Al Jolson taken from original. 78's only $6. — John Widmar, 3304 8th Ave., Kenosha, Wisc. 53140 jly1023

PRICE GUIDE to Collector's records including revised value chart, $3.75 postpaid. Collector's Guide to American Recordings 1895-1925, $6.95 postpaid. — Julian Morton Moses, P.O. Box 2295, Grand Central Sta., New York, N.Y. 10017 je126712

HISTORICAL records, & Doltology — Phyllis Lipe, W. Lake Rd., Skaneateles, N.Y. 13152 au3802

My friends and customers of the past twenty years will be happy to learn that I'm again amassing stock preparatory to resuming listings within a few months. Though as always great numbers of choice operatics are on hand, more are always needed. Therefore I'm ready to buy good classical vocals from single rarities to the largest collections or accumulations. Unlimited quantities but no junk, please. I'll pay high prices for choice records and will travel anywhere in the country to buy if the material warrants it. Lists always welcome. — Milt Weiss, 1220 NE 171 St., North Miami Beach, Fla. 33162 o60084

OFF THE AIR operatic LP's and tapes at reasonable prices. — Thomas John Harold O'Shaughnessy, P.O. Box 281, Rochester, Minn. 55901 d6407

DICK HAYMES Collection 78 rpms — For Sale, any reasonable offer. — E. Maren, 588 Pelton Ave., Staten Island, N.Y. 10310 au3403

RECORDS 78's of all kinds. Please let me know all you can about your needs. — T. Thibault, 561 Ferry Ave., Camden, N.J. 08104 jly6637

FREE CATALOG, unusual and different records; sound effects; historical spoken word, educational, talking books, old-time radio; many more; huge selection not available in record shops including 700 long-play at $1.98 each. — Odd Records, 300 Chelsea, Louisville, Ky. 40207 d120652

RECORD COLLECTORS: We supply 78's and cylinders in all categories: operatic, old-time popular show biz, jazz, military, C&W, organ, piano, violin, banjo, etc. Send $2 for our Record Valuation, Identification & Dating Chart. Also 1905 Victor Red Seal Catalog re-issue available at $2. Free lists of available records sent with above or send your wants. — Arnold's Archives, 1106 Eastwood, S.E., E. Grand Rapids, Mich. 49506 s34201

BUY, SELL, TRADE 12" and 16" radio transcriptions, all types. — Paul Scriven, 238 West State, Niles, Ohio 44446 d6675

RELUCTANTLY DISPOSING of choice operatic 78's: Balhi-Curci/De Luca and Chamlee unreleased Test pressings, 25 Vocalians, 125 Brunswicks, 20 Pathes, 150 Columbias, 500 Victors, 200 Imported Hmv, Polydor, G&T etc. Common material Already Sold. Will deliver. — Thomas O'Shaughnessy, Box 281, Rochester, Minn. 55901 jly3276

ELECTRIFY PLAYER PIANOS
PUMP ORGANS

YOU CAN QUICKLY END TIRESOME FOOT-PUMPING
With a Compact Low-Cost Leo Silent Suction Unit

EASY TO INSTALL
FULLY GUARANTEED
1000'S IN USE
write to
LEE MUSIC MFG. CO.
325H, Venezia, Ave.
Venice, Calif. 90291

mh17p

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 41)

version, which was listed as No. 35844. The book says the personnel was the same as that already given for this date.

Our next mention of the Victor Male Chorus is for August 20, 1926, —again most certainly not topcoat weather—when records were made, for educational purposes, of "The Duke of Marlborough," and a combination of "War Songs of the Normans" and "The Crusaders' Hymn." This was issued on No. 20152, but the group taking part was much smaller than the one in the picture. It consisted of Burr, Mathieu, Baughman, Stanley, Price, Shaw and Glenn.

The Male Chorus seems not to have recorded again until September 13, 1928, by which time Burr was no longer singing for Victor. This was a vastly changed group, including Frank Crumit, Frank Luther, Croxton, Jackson Kinsey, Murphy, James Melton, James, Shaw, Glenn, Carson Robison, and—surprisingly—Geoffrey O'Hara, whose name hadn't previously appeared in a Victor list since 1918. They sang two medleys, "Over Here" and "Over There," which were issued on record No. 35937.

And, finally, on December 20, 1928, the male chorus recorded "Dixie" and "Maryland, My Maryland," which were combined on No. 21919. Many familiar names are here, but this wasn't the group shown in the photo. Members were Murphy, James, Hart, Harrison, J. House, F. House, Lawrie, Dadmun, Shaw, Baur, James (Jackson?) Kinsey, James Stanley, Glenn, Croxton and Baughman. Which leaves us wondering whether Judson and Foster House were brothers. And, by the way, an oddity of the photograph is the fact that Richard Crooks is between two men whose names were almost identical—Baer and Baur.

Perversely, Rust's book doesn't say when the male ensemble version of "The Pilgrims' Chorus" from "Tannhauser," which was issued on record No. 20127, was made, nor who was in it, although it was certainly electrically recorded. The other side is the "Anvil Chorus" from "Trovatore," which was made May 5, 1926, with 26 blended male and female voices. Do you suppose the men in the group picture were waiting to "join the ladies" and that the Pilgrims' Chorus was recorded the same day? That's another mystery. But early May could easily have called for topcoats.

And that seems to be it. I can only surmise that, after the picture was made, some other artists arrived or were summoned, and changes were made in the recording personnel. However that may be, I think we can justly say that the photo is one of the most remarkable in recorded music history.

One thing more: I am sure that Quentin Riggs, whose address is 18321 Delaware St., Huntington Beach, Calif. 92646, would be willing to have glossy prints, 8x10 or larger, made of the group picture for any enthusiasts who would like one for framing. He, of course, would expect to receive a price that would allow him a fair profit for his time and trouble in having the copies made. Anyone who feels he would like to have a print should write direct to Mr. Riggs.

APRIL 25—Since the foregoing was written several weeks ago, "Ollie" Kline has positively identified the two men who were in doubt as Judson House and her old friend, Robert Simmons. In the meantime, I have found a picture of the Revelers with William Simmons as one of the members, and he was too young appearing when the picture was taken in 1935 to be the Simmons shown in the Male Chorus photo. William Simmons did, however, sing "The Rosary" in a Victor Red Seal album of Ethelbert Nevin's music issued in November, 1929.

I have also learned that Judson House, who was known in his later years as "The Silver Voice of Radio," died January 6, 1945, at his home in Dumont, N.J. He was 50. House had sung with the Chicago and San Francisco Opera Companies. He was survived by his widow, Ethel May Atkinson House of Dumont, and his brother, Foster House, who lived at Chappaqua, N.Y., and who, as we have seen, sometimes was heard in Victor ensembles.

HISTORICAL RECORDS

(Continued from page 36)

his voice and singing — ah, yes, those were all that and more!

I'm digressing, but this play on words reminds me of a musician, relative of Leoncavallo, and I simply must tell the story, even if it will lose some of its zest in translation.

While playing in an orchestra under the baton of Leopoldo Mugnone, the chap put out some sour notes. Reprimanded by the conductor, he indignantly inquired: "Do you know who I am, Maestro?" "No," said Mugnone, assuming a tongue-in-cheek attitude, "so, let's hear who you are."

"I am related to Ruggiero Leoncavallo," declared the musician with pride swelling his chest that wide. Here Mugnone thought for a moment, and with his inimitable Neapolitan sense of humor replied:

"I bow before your relative — he is a leon (lion) and a cavallo (horse). But you are not even a donkey!"

But coming back to Granforte and his gran-forte vocalizing — he really was a vocal marvel at the tail end of the golden-age era. It's fine for a purist to worship at the shrine, but when listening objectively, some of the late-comers could very well have been definite assets to the haughtiest of early phonograph labels.

I, myself, was once a stubborn, unreasonable conformist. There was no one outside Caruso, Ruffo, Chaliapin, and a few other name I was brought up with, to be even considered as vocal material. And no amount of convincing by friend or foe would help, until it dawned on me that some of these idols' successors, then "operating," indeed were worthy of utmost attention.

And so it was that I "discovered" singers entirely new to me, among them Granforte. At first it felt as if I was betraying Ruffo. Imagine, liking other baritones! But, then — didn't Verdi set to music something about the woman being fickle? It's hard to resist when the voice is as captivating as the one that peals forth from Apollo's LP.

APOLLO GRANFORTE—CL 99-47:

Side I—1. GIOCONDA: O monumento
2. ANDREA CHENIER: Nemico della patria
3. CAVALLERIA RUSTICANA: Turiddu mi tolse l'onore (w. Manna)
4. AMLETO: Brindisi
5. TOSCA: Già, mi dicono venai
6. TRAVIATA: Di Provenza
7. La Leggenda del Piave (Mario)
8. Inno a Roma (Puccini)
Side II—1. BARBIERE DI SIVIGLIA: Largo al Factotum
2. DON SEBASTIANO: O Lisbona
3. ZAZA: Zaza, piccola zingara
4. ZAZA: Buona Zaza
5. RIGOLETTO: Ah, veglia o donna (w. Saraceni)
6. RIGOLETTO: Piangi, Fanciulla
7. Trovatore: per me ora Fatale W. Masini, b.s.)
8. Alma Llanera (Gutierrez).

Born in Legnano, near Verona, Italy, July 20, 1886, Apollo Granforte traveled to Argentina at the age of 18. There he and his brother worked together as shoemakers.

Some connoisseur of voices must have heard his rare vocal instrument, and advised him to place it in expert hands for proper polishing. He did just that, and after a period of studying in Buenos Aires under professors Guido Capocci and Nicola Guerrera, he was ready for his operatic debut. The event occurred in Rosario, Argentina, and the role was that of Germontpère in "La Traviata."

He returned home to serve in the Italian army during World War I, but somehow managed to squeeze in some operatic performances.

In 1916, he reportedly sang in Malta and Zurich. In 1917 he was at the Costanzi of Rome, and in 1918 at the dal Verme of Milan. It's a wonder he found the time to do any fighting at all.

The war over, he finally joined the forces at La Scala in 1921, and sang there repeatedly later on. Paris heard him in 1922, and in 1934 he visited Australia with a company directed by Nellie Melba.

In the course of his career, Granforte also sang in England and in South America. There, as everywhere else he appeared his enormous vocal beauty and skill evoked the deepest appreciation from audiences and critics alike.

At the end of World War II, he lived and taught in Milan. Then, oddly, he managed for a while the National Opera of Prague, Czechoslovakia. While there, I'm told, he died. I'll try to get the details.

For those who have or will acquire this LP, please note that the Spanish song on the last band (see my listing above) is missing from both the record and envelope labels. Vocally, it's a very effective item, and I certainly was no end surprised when the spirited cancion came on while I was getting up to take off the disc.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Chauncey Olcott

PART I

By JIM WALSH

1. A Stage Irishman

Chauncey Olcott's real name was Chauncey John Olcott, and, despite a widely held belief, he was not a native of Ireland, although his ancestors may have been from there.

Two generations ago, the tenor, a native of Buffalo, N.Y., was almost certainly the most popular man on the stage who starred in productions with so-called Irish backgrounds. The plays were no more truly representative of Ireland than the sweet-voiced Olcott was typical of the average Irishman, but they had a large and loyal following among persons who wanted to believe in an Eire of song, story and romance that was as mythical as its "befo' the Civil War" Southern American counterparts. Olcott, an accomplished singer, was an ideal performer of the synthetic material he was called on to deal with.

This being true, it was inevitable that he should receive, at the peak of his career, an invitation to make phonograph records. As far as I know, his voice had never been recorded for commercial use until he signed a contract with Columbia in 1913, though of course, there is always the chance that he did a little experimental work for some of the obscure cylinder manufacturers who quickly came and went in the 1890s.

Even so, Olcott's name, if not his voice, had been heard on records 10 years before he himself began making them. In 1903 Billy Jerome and Jean Schwartz wrote a song hit, "Bedelia," which was described as "an Irish coon song serenade." Its refrain contains the line, "I'll be your Chauncey Olcott if you'll be My-Molly-O." ("Molly-O" was the name of the heroine of one of Olcott's plays.) The song was sung on Victor Monarch discs by the Haydn Quartet; on Columbia by George J. Gaskin and there were two Zonophone records, one a baritone version by Arthur Collins, and the other a tenor rendition by Gaskin.

The impish Billy Murray sang "Bedelia" on an Edison 2-minute cylinder, issued in December, 1903, just four months after he had begun his professional recording career as a specialist in what were then called "coon songs"—an offensive term nowadays. Concerning Murray's performance of "Bedelia," whose publishers modestly called it "the song of the century," the Edison Phonograph Monthly said: "In No. 8550, 'Bedelia,' Billy Murray has broken away from the singing of coon songs in which he has found many admirers among the users of Edison Records. This song has made a big hit throughout the country. Mr. Murray's rendition of it is even better than his coon Records."

In the recording, however, Billy's never-failing sense of humor got the best of him, and instead of singing, "I'll be your Chauncey Olcott . . ." he sang "I'll be your Chauncey Oil-cloth"—something Chancellor John Olcott may not have appreciated if he heard the record.

At least twice in much later years, Olcott's name was mentioned on records—both times in medleys of Irish songs sung by the still living tenor who began recording under his real name of Walter Van Brunt, then changed to Walter Scanlan when he sang leading roles in Irish musical productions. In "Famous Songs in Irish Plays," on an Edison Diamond Disc made in 1915 but not issued until 1921, he refers to the times when "Chauncey Olcott, Andrew Mack, Bill Scanlan and the rest would sing those good old Irish songs, the ones you love the best."

This was followed in 1929 by "Walter Scanlan's Irish Medley," which was issued a few months before Edison quit the record business. This fine electrically recorded medley refers to "the days of Bill Scanlan, my friend Andrew Mack, and Olcott, the 'Wild Irish Rose.'"

Incidentally, in my opinion, Van Brunt/Scanlan sang the songs associated with Bill Scanlan and Olcott better than Olcott did—or John McCormack, for that matter. I consider him the best of the "Irish tenors"—and in view of his Dutch ancestry perhaps he should be called "the Dutch Irishman."

For this occasion I shall depart from my usual custom of giving first a biographical sketch of the artist, then concluding with a discussion of his records. I am sure most readers of Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists are more interested in Olcott's recorded work than a detailed listing of his performances on the stage, so I will tell first about his Columbia discs—not a long list—and follow with accounts of his career as an actor and singer, taken from reference works of varying periods.

(Continued on next page)

WANTED FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS of GREAT SINGERS on ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single - faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G.&T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts. Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla, New York
tfx

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

OLCOTT'S FORERUNNER. — William J. (Bill) Scanlon was for years the most popular American tenor singing and composing "Irish songs." He gave way in the 1890s to Chauncey Olcott.

A BIG SEND-OFF.—The Columbia Co. went all-out to publicize Chauncey Olcott when his first records were issued in June, 1913. His photo, showing him in a typical Irish musical play costume, was reproduced on the front cover of the monthly record supplement.

II. Olcott's 1913 Columbia Records

The tenor, who was also a song writer ("My Wild Irish Rose," which he composed in the '90s, will always be inseparably associated with his name) made his first Columbia records in 1913, and three double-faced blue label discs were listed in June. Since he sang on both sides of all and they sold for 75 cents instead of the ordinary price of 65 cents for a 10-inch black and silver label Columbia double-faced disc, it is likely that he was paid royalties in addition to standard recording fees.

Columbia was so proud of signing Olcott to compete with Victor's much more impressive roster of stage stars that it went all out to publicize his engagement. The front cover of the June supplement (reproduced with this article) contained a photo of him, sharing the "spotlight" with the great German symphony orchestra conductor, Felix Weingartner. In addition, all of page two and half of page three was devoted to a description in small type of the singer and his songs. Not many other recording artists ever received such a "send off." Since few readers probably have seen this supplement and it tells a great deal about the tenor, who was then world-famous at the age of 53, I think the write-up worth quoting:

"Another Columbia surprise and one that will gladden the hearts of the millions of admirers of the most popular Irish tenor that ever trod the boards in this country! Chauncey Olcott's position in the theatrical and musical affairs of America is absolutely unique. No other singer of popular Irish ballads has occupied the stage so long and so uninterruptedly or with anything approaching such unvarying success. Year after year with a new play for each season he has scored in a manner that makes other successes seem tame in comparison. During his latest engagement in New York City in January and February of this year (1913) in the Grand Opera House, the largest auditorium devoted to theatrical productions in New York, his audience twice broke the records of this theater. No other Irish singer has ever combined such ability as an actor with a voice of so much charm and personality.

"Olcott's career as a singer commenced when, as a boy, he sang with Billy Emerson's Minstrels in the Bush Street Theatre, San Francisco. His voice showed so much promise that a few seasons later he went abroad to study for opera and was heard in London by Charles Wyndham, who engaged him to appear in a light opera, 'Miss Helyet.' In this production he attracted the attention of the American manager, Augustus Pitou, who engaged him to take (William) Scanlon's place in a projected production of an Irish play, 'Mavourneen.' This was Olcott's introduction to a long list of Irish plays, with songs interpolated by himself, which he has produced year after year throughout the United States and Canada. Among the most popular of these are 'Sweet Inniscarra,' 'Ragged Robin,' 'The Irish Artist,' 'Old Limerick Town,' 'A Romance of Athlone,' 'Macushla,' 'Terence' and 'Barry of Ballymore.' His production this year is 'The Isle of Dreams,' one of the most successful of all the successes he has had.

"Mr. Olcott's singing appeals irresistibly to the Irish temperament and almost equally so to all who like to hear a good ballad well sung. It is his polish and finish of style almost equally as much as the natural beauty of his voice that has gained Mr. Olcott such a universal following. The numbers he has recorded for the Columbia are amongst the best in his repertory, these including, it is almost needless to say, the famous Olcott ballads, 'My Wild Irish Rose,' 'Molly O,' 'Sweet Inniscarra,' and practically all of the real hits of his early stage successes, as well as the hit of his present production, 'When Irish Eyes Are Smiling.'

These were the records included in that first Olcott list: A1308, "My Wild Irish Rose" and "I Used to Believe in Fairies"; A1309, "Molly O" and "Sweet Inniscarra"; and A1310, "I Love the Name of Mary" and "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling." It was certainly a grouping of outstanding interest to lovers of pseudo-Irish balladry, for most of the songs have proved in the many years since they were written to be of lasting worth.

Two months later, in August, 1913, another Olcott record was announced: A1337, the world-famous "Mother Machree" and one of Olcott's own compositions which is not well remembered today, "My Beautiful Irish Maid." Under the heading, "Two More Irish Ballads by Chauncey Olcott," the supplement annotator, George Clarence Jell, said:

"The wisdom of the Columbia in inducing Chauncey Olcott to record a series of his Irish-American ballads has been amply proven in a most phenomenal sale of those already issued. In this double disc we have two more and many will say that we have kept the best selections for the last, that is to say the last of the present series, as Mr. Olcott has already promised to make a number of additional records for next season. 'Mother Machree' is an old-fashioned song and incidentally one of Mr. Olcott's greatest successes. Its popularity is simply phenomenal (again!) and though many other singers have sung it, it requires Mr. Olcott to do it justice. The sympathy, sincerity and expressiveness of his rendering of it as recorded will prove an unfailing source of pleasure and satisfaction. 'My Beautiful Irish Maid,' another characteristic Olcott number, is as Irish as Mr. Olcott's admirers like his songs to be and as tuneful as anyone could wish."

In December, 1913, just in time for the Christmas trade, Columbia announced the last two Chauncey Olcott records it was to issue for almost seven years. They were A1410, "Too-Ral-Loo-Ral-Loo-Ral" ("That's An Irish Lullaby"), coupled with "Dream Girl of Mine," and A1411, "Me Little Duden" and "Peggy Darling." Of these four songs only the "Irish Lullaby" won any real popularity, and the records did not sell so well as those that had gone before. The supplement annotation said, "Chauncey Olcott Sings the Hits of His Latest Production," and Editor Jell commented:

"In his entire career, successful as few others have been on the American stage, Mr. Olcott has never before had a production that has to quite such an extent caught the popular fancy as his 'Shameen Dhu,' in which he is now starring. A sufficient cause, quite apart from Mr. Olcott's fine acting and singing, is found in the songs themselves, which are quite exceptionally tuneful and catchy in an unmistakably Irish way. We lost no time in securing by Mr. Olcott recordings of the most successful numbers in the production and have combined them as listed below, one double comprising a charming lullaby, 'Too-ral-loo-ral-loo-ral' and a quietly tuneful reverie, 'My Little Duden.' In the other almost enticing love song, 'Peggy Darling,' and a melodious serenade, 'Dream Girl of Mine.'"

III. Final Recordings

I suspect that Columbia had entered into an agreement with Olcott for him to sing only 12 of his favorite numbers, for, despite the asserted "phenomenal" popularity of his records, not another was issued until November, 1920. By that time descriptions in the Columbia supplement had been shortened, and No. A2988, "Macushla Asthore (Pulse of My Heart)" and "Tis an Irish Girl I Love and She's Just Like You," both from the musical play, "Macushla," were dealt with briefly:

"Blarney and love and Ireland are forever young—so also is Chauncey Olcott. Olcott has made Irish songs and ballads a part of America's musical life for half a century. A thousand welcomes await Chauncey and Macushla."

Despite the statement that Olcott was "forever young," he was nearing the end of his long and honorable career when this disc was announced. The last of his records that Columbia ever issued, although I have an impression that a few more were made but not placed on the market, came out in March, 1922. It combined two more songs, composed, like those just mentioned, by Ernest R. Ball for the "Macushla" production, and the titles were "That's How the Shannon Flows" and "I'll Miss You, Old Ireland, God Bless You, Goodbye." The number was A-3525, and the supplement description went:

"Chauncey Olcott is a name close to the hearts of all lovers of the poetry and melody of Irish songs. To hear him sing the songs of the Emerald Isle would fairly wring tears from the hardest rock.

"That's How the Shannon Flows" and "I'll Miss You, Old Ireland, God Bless You, Goodbye," from his latest play, "Macushla," give you Olcott at his imperishable best.

"What an appropriate record for St. Patrick's Day is this one!"

I have found it intriguing to leaf through old Columbia catalogs and decide upon the relative popularity of the Olcott records. All six 1913 couplings held their place through September, 1917, but a year later the comparatively unknown "Me Little Duden" and "Dream Girl of Mine" had succumbed. And now I have just noticed that the writer of the December, 1913, supplement made an error in saying that "Too-ral-loo" was coupled with "Me Little Duden," and "Peggy Darling" with "Dream Girl of Mine." Perhaps that was the original intention, but actually "Too-ral-loo" had "Dream Girl" as a partner, and "Me Little Duden" was wedded to "Peggy Darling." It's a wonder the error wasn't caught.

Now prepare for a surprise. By 1922 only three of the six original Olcott recordings were still doing duty. Beside the one just mentioned, "Too-roo" and "Dream Girl" had been excused, and—this is the surprise—so had "My Wild Irish Rose" and "I Used to Believe in Fairies." It seems more than a little strange that "My Wild Irish Rose," the song most indelibly associated with Olcott should have undergone the indignity of being cut out of the catalog, although there was a fine record of it (No. A1855) remaining by the Columbia Stellar Quartet. Just how intimate was Olcott's musical association with his untamed Irish rose is indicated in the following comment from the Victor record supplement of December, 1914, when John McCormack's version of the tuneful number was issued (No. 64426):

"This is the most permanently popular of Chauncey Olcott's songs. No matter how many new ones he sings each year, the public always demands the melodious 'Irish Rose.'"

Today, 38 years after Olcott's death, I think it would be well-nigh impossible to say whether "My Wild Irish Rose" is still the top ranking number of all he ever sang, or whether "Mother Machree" and "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling" share equal billing or possibly are even a bit more popular than their predecessor. All have now established themselves as musical classics that are likely to endure as long as the best of Stephen Foster, Franz Schubert or Hugo Wolf.

In 1925 the remaining three 1913 records were still being catalogued and so were the two dating from 1920 and 1922. Electrical recording took over in 1925 and made the greater part of the laboriously built up catalog of former years obsolescent, if not obsolete. In 1927, however, one of the Olcott records still remained under its old number. It was the most enduringly popular of the lot, A1310, "I Love the Name of Mary" and "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling."

But that was not all. Columbia had set up a special division to supply records of songs, dances, and sketches of predominantly Hibernian appeal to the Erin-go-bragh residents of Irish sections of such large cities as New York, Boston and Chicago, and many of the old acoustic discs of Irish songs had been transferred to this restricted series. The new records had numbers beginning with 3300F and were outfitted with special green labels. And all the Olcott records that had still been current in 1925 were decked in the new Irish regalia. They were 33011F, "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling" and "I Love the Name of Mary," which was still, as we just saw, available under its old number; 33012F, "I'll Miss You Old Ireland" and "That's How the Shannon Flows"; 33018F, "Tis an Irish Girl I Love" and "Macushla Asthore"; 33022F, "Sweet Inniscarra" and "Sweet Molly O"; and 33024F, "Mother Machree" and "My Beautiful Irish Maid."

In 1929, "I Love the Name of Mary" and "When Irish Eyes" could still be had under the A1310 number, but 33011F had been dropped. In its stead, William A. Kennedy, a nasal-voiced Irish tenor reminiscent of John McCormack, had recorded an electrical version of the two songs, which was issued under two numbers, 1003D and 33167F. No. 33018F had been discontinued, but the others held on. Olcott was in poor health and, probably, poor voice by 1929, which may account for his not being asked to do electrical re-makes, and the job being turned over to Kennedy.

Then came that never to be forgotten worldwide depression, which virtually killed the record business, although the corpse was destined to be raised from the dead after a few years and become stronger than ever. The 1929 catalog was the last complete edition issued by Columbia in that trying period. Supplementary lists appeared in 1930 and 1931; there was no catalog in 1932, and by the time 1933 arrived, Columbia ownership had changed, and the once bulky yearly catalog had been succeeded by a sleazy, poorly printed, paper-bound pamphlet which listed only a tiny fraction of the records that had formerly been available. None were left by Chauncey Olcott, who had died the year before.

That, I think, takes care of Olcott's recording activities. Next month I will do some digging into "ancient" musical history and tell more about the man himself and his long career.

(To be continued)

"A FRIEND INDEED"

That's what your collector friends will call you when they receive the gift card from us informing them that you have subscribed for HOBBIES in their name.

Each issue they receive will remind them of your friendship, because HOBBIES is a practical gift that will give them more pleasure in collecting.

Fill out the blank below and mail it with your remittance of $5.00 (Canada $6.00; foreign $6.50) to HOBBIES, 1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill. 60605

Please send a gift subscription to:

Name .....

Address .....

My name and address is:

.....
 .....

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Chauncey Olcott

PART II

By JIM WALSH

I. 1901 Biographical Sketch

Last month, you will remember, I published the first installment of this series about Chauncey Olcott, whose real name was Chancellor John Olcott, and who, beginning in the 1880's, was the most popular "Irish stage tenor" for a period of more than 40 years. Attention was centered on discussing the singer's Columbia records and not a great deal was said about the man himself. Now I intend to go through several reference works in which he is mentioned and try to give some idea of his long career.

BEAUTIFUL REGINA
MUSIC BOX

- A. Model No. 33.
- B. Automatic Record Changer.
- C. Twelve 27" discs.
- D. Piano Back Construction.
- E. Veneered Mahogany Cabinet.
- F. Absolute Original Condition.

Priced at $2900.00 F.O.B. our Shop.

We suggest you visit us and look at this fine piece or Phone 419-478-1526.

CUSTER ANTIQUES

4139 Monroe Street
Toledo, Ohio 43600

The first source is a hard to find volume, "The Players Blue Book," compiled by A. D. Storms in 1901. It contains a fine photograph of Olcott as he appeared when a comparatively young man (it is reproduced with this installment), and the following fairly informative sketch:

"CHAUNCEY OLCOTT . . . Mr. Olcott has attained an enviable position both as an actor and singer and continues to grow in popular favor. He is the son of Mellon W. Olcott, a well-known resident of Buffalo, N.Y., in which city Chauncey was born on July 21, 1860. He received his education in public-school No. 36 in his native city.

"His first appearance on the stage was with Emerson and Hooley's Minstrel Company, in the city of Chicago. He was 19 years old at this time and was billed to sing ballads. His talent was of so pronounced a nature that it was impossible for him to remain long in obscurity, and soon after his first appearance he was seen in roles which showed his talent to more advantage. For three years he was in London, where he was received and acknowledged as a singer of great merit. During his stay in London he devoted a great deal of his time to study.

"Mr. Olcott has been seen in large number of successful plays, but probably the most notable ones have been 'Mavourneen', 'Sweet Inniscarra', 'Romance of Athlone' and 'Garrett O'Magh.' The latter named play is his latest and has been acknowledged by many critics as the best play in which Mr. Olcott has been seen as a star.

"Besides being a member of several clubs Mr. Olcott is a member of the Knights of Columbus Lodge."

II. Olcott as a Minstrel

Now let's move up about another ten years to 1910 and examine a second scarce book, "Monarchs of Minstrelsy: From 'Daddy' Rice to Date," by Edward Le Roy Rice. This is a slapdash, slipshod, carelessly written production, which I have found not overly reliable, but it gives some information concerning Chauncey Olcott that I have not seen anywhere else.

Don't blame me if any of its statements seem to contradict others that already have been quoted, or remain to be. I am not attempting the almost impossible task of reconciling discrepancies in these bygone reference works. Here is what this compendium of information concerning one-time minstrel show performers says about Olcott:

"CHAUNCEY OLCOTT, the favorite singing Irish comedian, was many years a minstrel.

"On the 21st day of February, 1876, Mr. Olcott, full of hope, became a member of the Alabama Serenaders, a minstrel (Continued on next page)

WANTED FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on
ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single - faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G.&T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.

Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla,

New York

172

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

173

strel company, which closed at St. Thomas, Canada, at the end of the third performance. Had the treasurer of the organization been as good as the show, they might still have been traveling.

"In the fall of the same year he joined Lew Benedict's Minstrels. Mr. Olcott's banner year as a minstrel was in 1879; here's the record. September 13, opened with Simmons and Slocum's Company in Philadelphia; November 27, he played a full season with the Three Rankins' Minstrels, opening at Columbus, Ohio, on the above date, and closing with the Company (which also closed) November 27, 1879, after a consecutive run of one consecutive night. Was Mr. Olcott discouraged? Not much; he became a member of Haverly's Mastodons at Buffalo, N.Y.; prior to which he was with Hooley and Emerson's Megatherians. July 31, 1880, he opened with Haverly at the Drury Lane Theatre, London, England.

"October 17, 1881, he opened in San Francisco with Billy Emerson's Minstrels. About January, 1884, he married Miss Carrie Armstrong in Philadelphia.

"Mr. Olcott was with Carnecross' Minstrels in Philadelphia, where he remained about two or three years. Seasons of 1884-85-86 he was with Thatcher, Primrose and West's Minstrels. September 11, 1886, he again joined Simmons and Slocum's Company in the Quaker City.

"A short time after that he became a member of the 'Old Homestead'; later he played 'Nanki Poo' in the 'Mikado'; subsequently entering the field of Irish drama.

"Chauncey Olcott was born July 21, 1857, at Providence, R.I."

In that concluding sentence we have the makings of one of those discrepancies that render difficult the path of the researcher. "The Players Book" said Olcott was born in Buffalo on July 21, 1857, and now here comes Edward Le Roy Rice, giving Providence as the birthplace and putting the date three years earlier. Both "authorities" agree that July 21 was the day of the month.

Well, the Blue Book must have been right and the minstrel compilation wrong, for Olcott himself said, in the brief sketch that he prepared for the 1918 edition of "Who's Who in America," that Buffalo was the place and July 21, 1860, the date. Next we come to another discrepancy, for there is no mention in "Who's Who" of the Miss Carrie Armstrong whom Rice says the tenor married "about January, 1884."

Instead, we are told, after learning that Olcott received his education in "Buffalo common schools" and was "brought out as a singer by the late R. M. Hooley" in 1880, that he married Margaret O'Donovan of San Francisco on September 28, 1897. Was there really a Carrie Armstrong of Philadelphia whom he married in his early twenties, and if so, did she die or were they divorced before he wed Miss O'Donovan? As a Catholic he would have found divorce rather difficult.

"Who's Who" goes on to say that Olcott was with Hooley's company for two years, then consecutively with Haverly's company, the Carnecross Minstrels, Denham Thompson ("The Old Homestead") and the Duff Opera Company for several seasons. He sang two years in England in comic opera, then succeeded W. J. (Bill) Scanlan as the star in Irish musical dramas; and 'has since appeared in various leading roles in U.S. and England." Olcott's 1918 address was given as 43 East 62nd St., New York City.

YOUNG TENOR — This photo of Chauncey Olcott is copied from "The Player's Book," which was published in 1901. Olcott was then 41, but the picture probably was made some years earlier.

(The many HOBBIES readers who like to receive the latest information about my cats will be interested to know that the two paragraphs just preceding were typed under hardships, because Little Nipper, the 12-year-old patriarch of my feline family, who had been sleeping outside, came in while I was writing, jumped into my lap, began biting my fingers and butting my hands with the top of his head, and striking some of the keys himself. Nips is the eternal kitten, even at his relatively advanced age, and I regret to say I was obliged to escort him out of the room in order to go on with my work.)

Now we come to the 1952 edition of the "ASCAP Biographical Dictionary," published by the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers, of which Chauncey Olcott, who joined the society in 1914, was a charter member - and again we have discrepancies. For the ASCAP volume says Olcott was born July 2 (not 21) in Buffalo and gives the year as 1858, not 1860. He died abroad, in Monte Carlo, on March 18, 1932, somewhere in his 70s, depending on what you accept as his birthday.

I have an old scrapbook containing a newspaper clipping, which I imagine goes back to 1929 or 1930. It shows a picture of Olcott, looking old and worn and wearing a derby hat, with this cut line: "CHAUNCEY WELL.

—Chauncey Olcott, ballad singer, whose life was feared for recently, sailed for a two years' vacation in Europe, apparently in good health." This makes it appear that he was still taking that "two years vacation" when he died at the famous European gaming resort.

Continuing with the ASCAP biography, we again are told that Olcott was educated in Buffalo public schools and by the Christian Brothers, which I take to be a Catholic educational group. After being with minstrel show, he was a member of the male quartet that in 1888 sang in Denham Thompson's original production of "The Old Homestead." (Thompson played the part of the lovable New England rustic, Uncle Josh Whitcomb, and it was this that gave his understudy, Cal Stewart, the idea of making comic talking records about Uncle Josh Weathersby.)

After going to London in 1890 to study voice and make stage appearances, Olcott returned to the States in 1893 "for three decades of starring in Irish romantic plays." Songs which he had a hand in composing are listed as "My Wild Irish Rose," which he published in 1899; "Mother Machree," "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling," "In the Sunshine of Your Love," "Good-bye, my Emerald Land," "Every Star Falls in Love," "Your Heart Alone Must Tell," "Wearers of the Green," "Laugh With a Tear in It," "The Last Long Song," "Tic Tac Toe," and "Day Dreams."

Harry Macdonough made a fine 12 inch Victor record of the latter, and Miss Pearl Ann Reeder, editor-publisher of HOBBIES presented a copy of it to me when I was in Chicago. Aside, perhaps, from "Day Dreams," the only remembered Olcott compositions now are the first three mentioned — "Irish Rose," "Mother Machree" and "Irish Eyes."

The late Sigmund Spaeth, in his "History of Popular Music," terms Olcott

"unquestionably one of the most popular musical figures of all times, important enough to be mentioned in a contemporary song, 'Bedelia,' as a paragon to be desired by every right-thinking woman . . . He wrote a number of songs, besides singing them in a most attractive style, but 'My Wild Irish Rose' remains his one great hit." Spaeth also said:

PRAISE FROM AUTHORITY — The late Sigmund Spaeth (1885-1965), famed radio "Tune Detective" and author of many books on music, termed Chauncey Olcott "unquestionably one of the most popular musical figures of all times."

"Chauncey Olcott continued for nearly 20 years to appear in his own shows, getting valuable co-operation from Ernest Ball, who wrote the popular 'Mother Machree' for him (1910), as well as 'When Irish Eyes Are Smiling' (1912) and other hits. Rida Johnson Young supplied him with three of his books (the words for his shows), 'Barry of Ballymore' (1911), 'Isle of Dreams' (1912) and 'Shameen Dhu' (1913). She also wrote the words of 'Mother Machree.' Theodore Burt Saye was responsible for the text of 'Edmund Burke' (1905), 'Eileen Asthore,' (1906) and 'O'Neill of Derry' (1907). The final show of the series was 'Terence' (1914), with a book by Mrs. Edmund Nash Morgan."

III. Help From "The Silent Swede"

No account of Chauncey Olcott's theatrical career would be complete or fair without some reference to Ernest R. Ball, known to his friends as "the silent Swede," because of his lack of conversational qualities, but one of the greatest popular song writers the North American Continent has ever produced. Ball was a master of the waltz rhythm as a medium for expressing sentiment, and he was the greatest writer of the so-called "Irish ballads," though he was no more Irish than my cherished friend, "Tiny Tim."

Ernie Ball was born in Cleveland, Ohio, July 21, 1878, and died, aged 48, in Santa Ana, Calif., May 3, 1927. He studied at the Cleveland Conservatory and when he was 13 gave lessons to acquire money for his own musical education. At 15, he composed a march, and from 1907 to 1927 he was a staff composer for the pioneer music publishing house of M. Witmark & Sons.

Ball's first hit tune was "Will You Love Me in September As You Do in May?" the words of which were written by a young fellow who became one of New York's most colorful mayors, James J. (Jimmy) Walker. In 1906 Ball composed "Love Me and the World is Mine," one of the all-time great hit songs, which was translated into many languages. (Dave Reed, Jr., wrote the words.) It was also one of the most deceptive in construction, for although it actually covers a slightly less range than the average popular song, it is so cunningly contrived that a singer seems to be taking an extremely high note when he jumps from "I only know to 'LOVE YOU—love me and the WORLD is mine."

Beginning in 1905, Ball, with Maude Lambert, his wife, starred in major vaudeville theaters throughout the United States. Meanwhile, his ability to write sweetly sentimental "Irish songs" with haunting, well constructed melodies, was a godsend to Chauncey Olcott.

"Mother Machree" already has been mentioned. Although Olcott is credited as a co-writer of the music, I doubt that he had anything to do with it, and suspect his name was printed on the sheet music, as many singers' were, because his rendition helped make the song popular. (Al Jolson is an example of a singer who wanted his name to appear on music he introduced as one of the writers, although he had nothing to do with composing it.)

Similarly, it is unlikely that Olcott, although capable of writing songs of his own, helped Ball with the music of such other numbers as "I Love the Name of Mary" and "When Irish Eyes are Smiling," the words of which were written by my friend, George Graff, Jr.

Other great Ball successes included "Till the Sands of the Desert Grow Cold," which sounds to me as if it were suggested by Bayard Taylor's older "Bedouin Love Song," "Allah, Give Me Mine!" "Dear Little Boy of Mine," "I'll Forget You," "A Little Bit of Heaven (Shure They Call It Ireland)," which I have heard massacred by more than one tenor; "Let the Rest of the World Go By," "In the Garden of My Heart," "My Dear," "Who Knows?" "Goodbye, Good Luck, God Bless You," "Turn Back the Universe and Give Me Yesterday," "To the End of the World With You," "Roll On, Beautiful World, Roll On," "As Long as the World Rolls On," and "West of the Great Divide."

You probably have observed that several of these songs were variants of the enormously successful "Love Me and the World is Mine" theme, but Ball was at his most successful and melodious when he wrote ditties for Olcott dealing with the romantic charms of Ireland.

Not long before Ernie Ball succumbed with tragic suddenness to a heart attack in his dressing room in a Santa Ana theatre, John McCormack, who seemingly never tired of singing the Ball ballads, proclaimed that "The Silent Swede" was a musical genius who had done an incalculable amount of good with his clean, lyrical melodies.

McCormack expressed the belief that when Ball died (which nobody had any idea would occur for many years to come) Franz Schubert and the other great by-gone composers would hurry to grasp his hand and thank him for the good he had done with "Mother Machree" and his other great songs. McCormack scorned the self-constituted "highbrows" who sneered at Ball's music because it was tuneful and popular.

No one had greater reason to hold Ball in high esteem than did Chauncey Olcott, for his songs were the making of more than one Olcott show. I am sorry that I have been unable to find an adequate photograph of "the American Tosti," as Ball was sometimes called, to reproduce with this article.

I was grieved to read a short time ago that his grave in Cleveland had been neglected and was completely overgrown by brush and weeds. Cleveland should do better than that by its distinguished native son, who was, is, and will remain a substantial figure in American musical history.

I trust that better care has been taken of Chauncey Olcott's final resting place. Both he and Ernie Ball, as well as George Graff and the other creative personalities associated with them, were a wholesome influence in their day. Their art gave unpretentious pleasure to millions, and I wish that their type of music, rather than the dissonance of rock 'n' roll, were in vogue today. From Ball to the Beatles has been a tragic plunge downward, I think.

CHAUNCEY WELL—
Chauncey Olcott, ballad singer, whose life was feared for recently, sailed for a two years' vacation in Europe, apparently in good health. (International Newsreel)

NEAR THE END — This newspaper clipping, telling of Olcott's going to Europe for a two-year rest, was published a few years before the tenor died at Monte Carlo in 1932.

The End

VIOLIN FOR SALE

1721 "STRADIVARIUS" LABEL. Registered. Appraised circa 1827. With tuning pegs circa 1770. Good condition. Mathematically correct. For advanced player. Current appraisal $1,200. Make offer. — Mrs. Russell Larson, Elkhorn, Wis. s1042

TAPE RECORDINGS

REMEMBER RADIO? Send stamped envelope for list of tape recordings available from radio's golden age. — Lee Book, Box 6338, Pittsburgh, Pa. o6276

ARIAS, ballads, brass bands instrumentals, speaking records. We have plenty of each. A stamped envelope brings full information. Want lists are welcomed. — Holyoke Gardens 4-B, Holyoke, Mass. 01040 o3054

RADIO RERUNS. Complete broadcasts of old favorites. Catalog $1.00 (refundable). Box 724, Redmond, Wash. 98052. au12069

(Continued on next page)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Seven Bygone Edison Singers

Part I

By JIM WALSH

I. A Bit of History

Thomas A. Edison contended for years that it would be impossible to make an "unbreakable" cylinder record without distorting the sound and marring the delicacy of tone.

But by 1912 Edison's wax "rollers" were losing ground steadily to the flat disc records and the U.S. Everlasting and Indestructible cylinders. And in October Edison announced he had developed and perfected a cylinder that was virtually unbreakable. It could be played 3000 times, or more, without wear. The two-minute wax Standard and four-minute Amberol records were discontinued, and the first list of 55 Blue Amberol cylinders went on sale in November, 1912.

At the same time, Diamond Disc phonographs and records (later to be called Re-Creations) began to be produced in tiny quantities, but were not formally announced until a year later, in October, 1913, when increased production made it possible to turn them out on a larger scale.

With new types of records and phonographs in production, Edison also began to look for new artists, and during the four-year period from 1912 through 1916 a fairly large number of singers and players who had not made wax cylinders were engaged and recorded on both discs and Blue Amberols. Most of these men and women, though some were not widely known, were excellent performers, but none enjoyed long careers as recording artists, nor were any active beyond 1917.

Over the years, five men and two women, all singers, have been of special interest to me, because their recorded work was confined to the period I have mentioned, and, with one exception, they appear, so far as my research goes, to have sung only for Edison.

Once their services ceased to be required at the Fifth Avenue studios in New York, they seem to have made no more records. Yet as singers they were all good and some were excellent.

In deciding to write about "the long-silent seven," I hit upon the term "Seven Bygone Edison Singers," to describe them, but this does not mean that they are deceased. Nor does it mean they are still living. I never have read of the death of any of them, but neither do I know that even one of the seven has survived until today.

The odds against their survival are great, for the youngest probably is 80, or more, if still living. I simply know nothing whatever concerning these artists except what I have read in old Edison catalogs, which must be my authority for the statements I shall make.

One reason for preparing this article is the hope that it may be read by somebody who can give more specific information about the Seven: Mary Carson, Charlotte Kirwan, Emory B. Randolph, Owen J. McCormack, Royal Fish, Arthur C. Lichty, and Burton Lenihan. Anybody with knowledge of the latter years of these artists may be assured that information will be welcome.

I am inclined to consider Randolph the most important of the group from the standpoint of possessing a superb voice and having made the most outstanding list of records, with Mary Carson ranking second. However, ladies should come first, so in considering the group I shall lead with the Misses Carson and Kirwan. Then will come the five men in the order I have named them in the preceding paragraph.

Following the biographical information concerning each will be a list of her or his Blue Amberols and Diamond Discs, but, although I have searched the Edison catalogs diligently, I do not guarantee that no records have been overlooked. And of course the list does not include concerted work, such as Gilbert and Sullivan, in which they may have taken part.

First, then, the dark-haired, vivacious, and, judging by her pictures, very attractive Mary Carson.

II. Mary Carson and Her Records

Mary Carson was born in Houston, Tex., and as the Edison Phonograph Monthly for September, 1914, says she "made her first public performance as a songbird when but six years of age."

She continued to sing, and journeyed, obviously as a very young lady, to Italy where she underwent "a vigorous course of study under some of Italy's greatest masters." Her professional debut was made, at some time prior to 1912, in Italy, when she appeared as Amina in "La Sonnambula."

"The Italian papers with one accord proclaimed her fascinating and highly artistic in every endeavor, and the public greeted her performance with tremendous applause. Her extensive repertoire consists of about 25 operas in Italian, French, and German, together with almost innumerable English songs. Miss Carson has participated in many notable musical events, but perhaps one of her greatest achievements was the singing of 'Barbiere di Siviglia' twice in one night—a feat which the average opera singer would scarcely dare attempt.

Returning to America, Miss Carson

WANTED FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on
ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single - faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G.&T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts. Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla,

New York

tr

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

tr

"COVER GIRL" — Mary Carson's photo adorned the cover of the Edison Phonograph Monthly for September, 1914.

began to give recitals and was generously praised. In fact, one unidentified newspaper really went overboard in paying her the following tribute:

"Mary Carson is superb, and no one who heard her in her recent debut can justly deny her rank among the famous singers of the day. A brilliant career will be hers, for the gifts of the gods have been showered upon her in generosity. Artistic, dramatic, temperamentally gifted to the highest degree, she sways her listeners at will.

With an intellectual development of the greatest capacity she interprets, losing no opportunity of technical import to secure the very finest effects. While listening to her there is but one thought — that of the absolute delight she gives through the sweet sounds, which are as free and unconstrained as from a bird.

"But when one recalls the experience from a recital viewpoint the foremost thought is of the marked intelligence and judgment displayed by the singer. Naïve, graceful, with the charming simplicity of a child, she seems like a fragile bit of exquisite, rare china, or perhaps even more like a lovely flower; but as she sings the glorious womanhood finds expression.

"The years of patient, faithful determination to develop to the fullest the gifts God has placed at her disposal seem to have come to the fullest fruition, for she has even yet in her youth more than realized the outcome of the unyielding ambition which has ever been hers and has justified the faith of the hundreds of friends who have believed that a world-wide fame would crown her efforts."

Miss Carson's photograph was published on the front cover of the September, 1914, Edison Phonograph Monthly, which also contains some remarks that should interest our friend, Aida Favia-Artsay, and other lovers of opera:

"In speaking of how it feels to sing to children, Miss Carson said: 'I find that all "kiddies" who are brought to hear Grand Opera by their parents love to hear the story first. They seem to be more thorough in what they want in the way of enjoyment than "grown ups." They do not seem to be particularly interested in whether your singing is that of an angel or not. I am speaking, of course, only of the child under 10 years of age.

"I have always envied the European children their delight in going to hear Grand Opera. It is a part of the family training in Europe, and it is surprising to the American, when in various European countries, to hear the little children singing arias from operas with the same ease that you hear American children whistling or singing ragtime.

"This is of great assistance to the child who may later develop her voice, because he or she has become so thoroughly saturated with the great arias of operas that when they come to study them it is like acquiring a dormant second nature.

"I think it would be ideal if the American parents, now that Popular Grand Opera in English seems to have become an institution within the reach of all, would take their children to see and hear the productions of the masters, thereby making it part of their education."

Alas for Miss Carson's ardent belief in the universal European enthusiasm for opera! Information from Europe today is that, even in Italy, love for opera is virtually dead among the younger generation. Italian children for the most part no longer sing, hum, or whistle operatic arias, but have succumbed to the world-wide popularity of "rock 'n' roll."

Miss Carson's first Blue Amberol cylinder was included in the initial list for November, 1912. In typical Edison fashion, instead of being asked to oblige with bit of opera, she was assigned to interpret "O Dry Those Tears." The supplement description is interesting:

"An old favorite by a new Edison singer. Music lovers will be charmed by the rare purity and beauty of Mary Carson's delightful soprano. With the exquisite violin and cello obbligato forming an additional artistic setting to that of the piano, the voice shows to exceptional advantage.

"During her comparatively short musical career Miss Carson has sung in practically all the principal operas in Italy, and has given many notable performances in this country. . . . The most precious criticism which the gifted singer has ever received, and the one which she treasures most, is that of a little fisher boy who, upon hearing her sing in Devonshire, England, told his mother that Miss Carson's singing was sometimes 'like a lark in the sky' and sometimes 'like a thrush on the ground' . . ."

So far as one can judge from the catalogs, all Miss Carson's records were sung in English. This may have been because of a reputed decree by Mr. Edison that none of his artists would be allowed to sing excerpts from opera in foreign languages unless they were members of the Metropolitan or Chicago-Philadelphia Opera Companies. Actually, nothing in the Texas soprano's recorded repertoire classifies as grand opera. It consists mostly of ballads and waltz songs.

One of the latter, "The Kiss Waltz," was her biggest seller on Diamond Discs and was listed among the 300 most popular Edison records. Its runner-up was "I'll Change the Shadows to Sunshine," which she sang with Emory Randolph, but probably the duet's reverse side, "Sing Me the Rosary," which was the only solo Diamond Disc by "Irving Gillette" (Henry Burr), was more popular with the average buyer.

There are a couple of rather surprising items in the Blue Amberol list. One is a duet with Walter Van Brunt of Irving Berlin's great 1915 hit, "The Simple Melody." Another is a duet with Billy Murray, in which she is called "Kathleen Kingston." They sing a tuneful Jerome Kern number, "You're Here and I'm Here," which came out in 1914.

But apparently Mary Carson was considered too much of a "highbrow singer" for the taste of the predominantly rural customers who bought Blue Amberols. When the 1920 catalog was issued only one of her cylinders remained: "The Lover and the Bird," and it is hard to understand why it was more lastingly popular with country patrons than "O Dry Those Tears," "The Kiss Waltz" or "The Simple Melody." Perhaps it was because of the bird imitations by my dear old friend, the late Joe Belmont. One of her cylinders, 23398, "Spring's Awakening," was made primarily for sale in the British Isles.

Miss Carson's Diamond Disc held their popularity better. Three were still available in the 1927 catalog, "The Kiss Waltz," "I'll Change the Shadows," and "Violet." The first two remained until Edison quit the record business on November 1, 1929.

And, by one of those characteristic Edison decisions, another Blue Amberol cylinder was resurrected from the files and issued in the fall of 1923, after Mary Carson had done no recording in many years. It was 4785, "When Love Is Young," and probably almost nobody bought it, even though Edison had dropped the price of the Amberol from 60 to 35 cents in an effort to salvage the tottering cylinder business. (Another such move involved selling cylinders direct from the factory to the individual customer.) "When Love Is Young" was not issued on a disc.

Now here is the listing of Mary Carson's records:

BLUE AMBEROL CYLINDERS By MARY CARSON

- 1751 La Paloma (The Dove).
- 2181 Madcap Duchess—Love is a Story That's Old (with Chorus).
- 1593 O Dry Those Tears.
- 2665 The Kiss Waltz (Il Bacio) (with Chorus).
- 2418 Lover and the Bird (Bird imitation by Joe Belmont).
- 2607 Watch Your Step—The Simple Melody (duet with Walter Van Brunt, tenor).
- 2733 Spring Flowers.
- 23398 Spring's Awakening.
- 2521 Chin-Chin-Violet (with Chorus).
- 2260 The Girl On the Film — Won't You Come Waltz With Me? (duet with Harvey Hindermeyer, tenor).
- 2800 Alone at Last—Pretty Edelweiss.
- 4785 When Love is Young.

BLUE AMBEROL CYLINDER By "KATHLEEN KINGSTON"

- 2253 You're Here and I'm Here (duet with Billy Murray, tenor).

DIAMOND DISCS By MARY CARSON

- 80189 Chin-Chin — The Grey Dove. Reverse: Love's Melody (Elizabeth Spencer and Emory B. Randolph).
- 80192 I'll Change the Shadows to Sunshine (duet with Randolph). Reverse: Sing Me the Rosary (Irving Gillette and Chorus).
- 80061 Kiss Waltz (with Chorus). Reverse: Silver Threads Among the Gold (Elizabeth Spencer and Chorus).
- 82056 Palomita—Ah! This Heart With Joy is Bounding. Reverse: Parla — Vocal Waltz.

EDISON GROUP—Four of the singers discussed in the accompanying two-part article were present when this photo was taken in September, 1914, before a series of records from Gilbert and Sullivan operas was to be made.

Front row—Marie Kaiser, soprano; Agnes Kimball, soprano; Elizabeth Spencer, soprano; MARY CARSON, soprano; Mary Jordan, contralto; Helen Clark, contralto; E. Eleanor Patterson, contralto, and CHARLOTTE KIRWAN, soprano.

Second row—Albert Farrington, baritone; Edward Meeker, comedian; Frederick Wheeler, baritone (John Young, tenor, is just behind Wheeler); Harvey Hindermeyer, tenor; Harvey N. Emmons, recording expert; ROYAL FISH, tenor; William F. Hooley, bass; Vernon Archibald, baritone; John F. Burckhardt, pianist and bells solist; and EMORY B. RANDOLPH, tenor. Fred Rabenstein, Edison paymaster, is behind Archibald and Burckhardt. To the rear of Emmons are Walter H. Miller, recording manager; H. Voorhis, technician, and W. H. A. Cronkhite, recording director.

Back row—Donald Chalmers, bass; Andy Webber, of the Edison technical staff; George Agnew, technician; Robert A. Gayler, piano and celesta, and Eugene A. Jaudas, violinist.

82054 The Butterfly — Vocal Waltz. Reverse: Ecstasy—Vocal Waltz.

82052 Manola. Reverse: Villanelle (Oft Have I Seen the Swift Swallow).

80289 Alone at Last—Pretty Edelweiss. Reverse: The Girl Who Smiles—Teach Me to Smile (duet with George Wilton Ballard, tenor).

80275 Spring Flowers. Reverse: Carmina —Vocal Waltz (Metropolitan Quartet).

80188 Chin-Chin—Violet (with Chorus). Reverse: Chin-Chin—Love Moon (Spencer — Van Brunt).

III. Charlotte Kirwan

Considerably less space will be required to discuss Charlotte Kirwan and her recordings. Like Mary Carson, she was a soprano, and in a group photo of Edison artists taken in September, 1914, she looks to me like a plump, smiling, good-natured German fraulein.

We have, however, the April, 1914, Blue Amberol catalog's word for it that:

"This favorite artist is a native of Newark, N.J., of English and Welsh ancestors, many of whom were musicians and actors of fame. She received her musical training in New York City, where she studied under Emma Thurby.

She has appeared in many light operas, singing principal soprano roles, and has sung in all the Gilbert and Sullivan operas. In addition, she is a well-known concert and church singer, and in the church work has held many prominent positions."

Miss Kirwan's first Edison record was Blue Amberol 1717, on which she and Harvey Hindermeyer, a favorite Edison tenor, sang Rudolf Friml's beautiful "Sympathy." It was contained in the undated sixth list of Blue Amberols, which must have come out in the spring of 1913.

The soprano made only one other Blue Amberol, or at least just one more was listed, 2117, "The Lord Is My Shepherd," a duet with Katherine N. Staats, contralto, about whom I know nothing. Miss Kirwan's list of Diamond Discs was not much longer, but one, 82024, "Ave Maria," sung in Latin, was included in the first preliminary list of Diamond Discs issued late in 1912 or early 1913. It was coupled with a flute and clarinet duet, and this combination stayed in the catalog only four months before giving way to a new coupling with "Sweet Spirit, Hear My Prayer," sung by Marie Narelle, the Australian soprano and chorus.

Miss Kirwan's "Hark! What I Tell
(Continued on page 44)

—★—

CHURCH SOPRANO—Charlotte Kirwan was a well-known Newark, N.J., church and concert singer who recorded for Edison at the time the Diamond Discs were introduced in 1912-13.

TAPE RECORDINGS

REMEMBER RADIO? Send stamped envelope for list of tape recordings available from radio's golden age. —Lee Book, Box 6338, Pittsburgh, Pa. o6276

ARIAS, ballads, brass bands instrumentals, speaking records. We have plenty of each. A stamped envelope brings full information. Want lists are welcomed. —Holyoke Gardens 4-B, Holyoke, Mass. 01040 03054

RADIO RERUNS. Complete broadcasts of old favorites. Catalog $1.00 (refundable). Box 724, Redmond, Wash. 98052. au12069

HAVE MANY rarely heard, uncommonly performed, operatic broadcasts. Will swap tape for tape, free lists (stamp please). —Jackuboski, CMR 4025 Vance AFB, Oklahoma 73701. d3493

SOMETHING NEW!

This book contains 104 pages and includes the history of the Raphael Tuck family and 70 illustrations and descriptions of Raphael Tuck paper dolls and toys.

LIMITED EDITION
$10.00 P.P.

BARBARA WHITTON JENDRICK

R.F.D. 1, Hut Hill Rd.

Bridgewater, Conn. 06752

Paper Dolls and Paper Toys of Raphael Tuck & Sons

Barbara Whitton Jendrick

OC

JOEL HARMON & CO. PRESENTS —

An Outstanding DOLL HOUSE

Handcrafted, of excellent quality, and old-world craftsmanship.

Features include:

Tiled Kitchen,
Asbestos Shingles,
Brass Door Knob & Hinges,
Shaped Floor &
Ceiling Molding,
Carpeting, Staircase,
Colonial Wallpaper,
Shuttered Windows.

A Deluxe Doll House;
5 rooms with partitioned attic.
21" high, 32" long, 12½" deep;
on wheels.

Completely Hand Crafted.

$80.00 ea.

No C.O.D.

4—6 weeks delivery.

Send Check or Money Order only.

Showroom: 1206 So. Maple Ave. - Room 508

Los Angeles, Calif. 90015 - (213) 994-1812

dc

SEVEN BYGONE EDISON SINGERS

(Continued from page 37)

"To Thee" had the distinction of being doubled with a Spanish number by the great Metropolitan soprano, Lucrezia Bori. But Miss Kirwan's one record of lasting popularity was "When the Robins Nest Again," which was combined with Christine Miller's version of "The Rosary." It was one of the 300 most popular Diamond Discs.

Notes have survived in Mr. Edison's handwriting indicating that something about Charlotte Kirwan's singing did not appeal to his defective hearing, and this is probably the reason her Edison association was a short one. Here is a list of her records:

BLUE AMBEROL CYLINDERS By CHARLOTTE KIRWAN

2117 Lord is My Shepherd (duet with Katherine N. Staats, contralto).
1717 Sympathy (duet with Harvey Hindermeyer, tenor).

DIAMOND DISCS By CHARLOTTE KIRWAN

82511 Ave Maria (in Latin). Reverse: Lullaby—Sweet Spirit, Hear My Prayer. Marie Narelle, soprano, and Chorus).
80102 Hark! What I Tell to Thee (The Spirit Song). Reverse: Malaguena (Lucrezia Bori, soprano).
82024 Ave Maria. Reverse: Norma, Hear Me Norma (Flute and Clarinet duet by Julius Spindler and A. Giamatteo).
80100 When the Robins Nest Again (with Chorus). Reverse: The Rosary (Christine Miller, contralto, and Chorus).

That takes care of the two bygone sopranos. Coming, Messrs. Randolph, McCormack, Fish, Lichty, and Lenihan!

(To be continued)

Beautiful Leather Pieces

Glove leather - various size small pieces in assorted colors. Ideal for doll shoes, hand bags, trim. $2.00 per pound plus $1.00 postage and handling.

THE LEACHMAN FRIESEN COMPANY

P.O. Box 668

Oakley, Kansas 67748

op

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Seven Bygone Edison Singers

Part II

By JIM WALSH

I. Emory B. Randolph

Last month's installment of this series discussed the recordings of two accomplished sopranos, Mary Carson and Charlotte Kirwan. This month we have for consideration the tenor Emory B. Randolph, who, in virtue of his artistic accomplishments and longest list of records, takes pride of place.

Emory Randolph's first Blue Amberol cylinder was announced in January, 1914, and was a ballad of the old-fashioned type, "When the Song Birds Sing No More." The record was given an advance listing in the Edison Phonograph Monthly for December, 1913. A photograph of the tenor also was published, accompanied by the following biographical mention:

"One of the finest church and oratorio singers in New York, Mr. Randolph has for the past 10 years been identified with the best known artists in concert, oratorio and church work. His success at every appearance is assured, because of the unusually beautiful quality of his voice, and the sound musicianship which he brings to his work.

"Mr. Randolph was born in Western New York State. As a child he displayed a great interest in music; at the age of 14 he played the cornet and other instruments in the orchestra.

"For many years now he has been a notable figure in church musical work. For 12 years he has been soloist in leading metropolitan churches; soloist at Ocean Grove, Thousand Island Park, and with many choral and oratorio societies.

"In addition he has organized numerous male quartets, glee clubs, etc. His special work is oratorio and English songs teaching voice development. At present he is singing in the Calvary Methodist Church of East Orange, N.J.

"Mr. Randolph's voice is eminently suitable for recording purposes. It is rich, warm and powerful and possesses that even steadiness of tone so desirable."

This comment from the Edison publication does not in the least exaggerate Randolph's abilities. To me he is one of the best tenors Edison ever had. His voice was both sweet and powerful and his enunciation virtually faultless. It is hard for me to understand why his services were not retained for a longer period.

That Emory Randolph was not only a singer, but a student of musical art is evident from an article by him, "Save Your Breath," that appeared in the Edison Magazine, Along Broadway, for July, 1921. It reveals how carefully he had studied and analyzed the technical problems of voice production, and I think it is worth reprinting for the benefit of ambitious singers:

II. Advice on Breath Control

"One of the greatest problems that confronts the singer, or the student of singing, is the management of breath. Numberless books and lectures have been written and given on the subject of deep breathing and proper breath control, but the subject is still mooted.

"There has always been a tradition among singers and teachers of singing that it was necessary to take in a full breath before each phrase sung. Like many another tradition, this can be proved false and unfounded. Such laborious breathing is the cause of a great deal of unnecessary effort on the part of the singer, and will prove a serious drawback.

FOR SALE: Antique, square Baby Grand piano in excellent condition. Make offer.

JOHN RUSSEFF

724 Bradford Ave. Champlin, Minn. 55316
Phone: 421-3621 np

EMORY B. RANDOLPH

WANTED FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on
ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single - faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G.&T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts.

Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla,

New York

tfr

Antique

MUSIC BOX SPECIALISTS

Complete repair service, cylinders re-pinned, combs repaired and tuned, all work guaranteed.

Large stock of finest
instruments for sale.

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. 10803

Phone: 914 - PE 8-1506

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

tfr

EARLY "TALKIE" ARTIST—Royal Fish was a member of a sextet that recorded The Lucia Sextet for Mr. Edison's "talking pictures" in 1912 or 1913. From left to right the artists are Charles Harrison, Mary Jordan, Agnes Kimball, Fish, Frederick J. Wheeler, and Donald Chalmers. The sound was recorded on large concert-size cylinders of the Blue Amberol type, and the phonograph and film projector were geared to synchronize when the picture was shown.

"This recommended 'full breath before each phrase' has a tendency to tighten the throat, restrict the tongue, push up the larynx, and spread out the voice in a mouth formation, so preventing true placement of tone. Indeed, it is a dangerous stumbling block in the roadway of vocal progress.

"When the necessary development and facility have been acquired in the muscular machinery which controls the voice, the 'problem' of breath control will disappear and the breath will not have to be 'taken in,' but will function as easily, quickly and silently in singing as in speaking, working or playing.

"The origin of the idea that a great breath must be inhaled before singing is something of a mystery. Although a harmful habit, the practice seems to be quite universal. By this I do not mean that deep breathing is wrong—I merely speak of its wrong indulgence.

"Real, deep breathing, and the development of the muscles for breath control, are of the utmost importance for voice, as well as for health. It should be strictly a muscular operation, performed without thought of breath.

"The 'elastic' of properly developed muscles should enable the singer, skilled in this work, to sustain a long phrase, and then, without stooping for breath, or taking away from the length of the notes sung, to go right ahead with another long phrase in this way. It is possible to start the phrase with tone instead of starting with a breathy sound and sliding to the tone. Thus will be obtained a clear, pure tone, free from that objectionable breathy quality so common, and eliminated also will be the waste of breath which the average singer experiences.

"Breath management is of greatest importance in making phonograph Records. A breathy tone is the prime cause of much trouble. In recording, the tone must be clear, pure and freely emitted for successful result.

"When properly controlled, the coordination of the various muscles of cheeks, lips, throat and diaphragm produces pure tone. How frequently we see singers gasping for breath, raising the chest and shoulders, and making more effort in 'taking in' the breath than should be necessary in the actual singing of the phrase. Sometimes their breathing can be heard the length of a hall or theatre.

"This same effort would certainly be ridiculous if used in speaking, or in playing an instrument, or, in fact, in any kind of work or play. If singing is to be enjoyed by the average listener, it must not appear to be an effort, for this ruins esthetic pleasure.

"Watch your muscles, develop them, and so be able to 'save your breath.'"

Not being a singer, I shall not try to pass judgment on the foregoing advice, but it certainly reads as if it makes sense. Incidentally, although published in 1921, this article must have been written several years before, probably about 1916, for the tenor long had ceased to make records when it was printed.

III. Randolph's Records

Randolph's fairly long record list does not call for extended comment. Although he was described as a specialist in oratorio, music of that type is absent from his recordings. I had thought I perhaps had a copy of each of his Diamond Discs, but I took inventory and found I lack two "Love's Melody" (a duet with Elizabeth Spencer) and "Spirit Flower."

It may be interesting, however, to know that his most popular Diamond Disc, issued in 1915, was "Irish Love" (Continued on page 50)

VIOLIN FOR SALE

FOR SALE. Old violin, Anionue - Stradivarius - Gremonenfis - Fae - Iedat - Anno. Made in 1737. Price $50,000. — Write Samuel Goodwin, Route 7, Owensboro, Ky. 42301. n1481

MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

MIRA floor model music box, 41 discs, $1000.00. Trans. extra. — Robert Tramuola, 1637 Sherman Pl., Des Plaines, Ill. 60016. Phone 312-824-0684. ja3633

MUSIC - ORGANS

PARLOR & chapel reed organs.—Write Box 169, Brainerd, Minn. or call 218-746-5491. E. Peterson, person to person. ja3882

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS before 1900 wanted. Strings, brass, clarinets, flutes, drums, mechanical, novelties. — William Kugler, 1124 Dionne, St. Paul, Minn. 55113. my68801

HISTORICAL RECORDS

(Continued from page 38)

it lavishly, but she also knew when and how to use only the interest. Ardent, like the Vesuvius under which she was born, she nevertheless gave of her temperament in singing only when necessary, and then sparingly, in good taste.

In other words, she was an all-around exceptional artist, something that may be deduced at once from her first utterance—Suicidio!—on her new Long Play record.

MARIA CANIGLIA—OASI-538:
Side 1—1. GIOCONDA: Suicidio! 2. ANDREA CHENIER: La mamma morta (not from set) 3. CAVALLERIA RUSTICANA: Voi lo sapete, o mamma 4. AMICO FRITZ: Non mi resta che il pianto 5. MANON LESCAUT: In quelle trine morbide.

Side II—1. BOHEME: Donte lieta uscì 2. TOSCA: Vissi d'arte (not from set) 3. LOHENGRIN: Sola ne' miei prim'anna 4. LOHENGRIN: Aurette a cui si spesso 5. SIBERIA: Qual vergogna tu porti 6. Mi Madre, Se Mi Date Giovannino (Florentine Song) (Composer B. E. Giuranna at the piano).

Born in Naples, May 11, 1906, Maria Caniglia studied singing there at the San Pietro a Majella Conservatory, under Pietro Agostino Roche, distinguished vocal coach, pianist, and composer.

She made her debut in Turin as Chrysothemis in "Elektra," January 1, 1930, and before the year was over, Milan's La Scala presented her for the first time as Rosaura in "Le Maschere." Following that happy event, she remained at the Italian opera temple for the duration of 18 years.

Although a permanent member of La Scala, she made guest appearances elsewhere in the course of those years. The audiences of the 1935 Salzburg Festival, Teatra Colon of Buenos Aires, London's Covent Garden, the Vienna State Opera, and other important opera houses, in Italy and abroad, heard and applauded the state-prima donna for her excellent performances.

Our Metropolitan had her listed on its roster only for 1938-39. But it thought enough of the diva to let her open the Season on November 21, as Desdemona in "Otello," with Martinelli and Tibbett as the other principals.

Maria Caniglia continued her career until the mid-fifties. At present she is retired, living in Milan, but unlike some of her colleagues, is not reported to be engaged in passing on her vocal knowledge to others. And that is a real pity, if true—for good vocal pedagogues are now most difficult to find.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

Song," which was written by a Boston composer, Margaret Ruthven Lane, who is, or was, a year or so ago, still living, although considerably past 100. (She was born in 1867). "Irish Love Song" was one of the much publicized 300 best selling Edison discs.

Other consistently popular Randolph records were "The Bubble," in which Miss Spencer assisted him in the refrain; "I'll Change the Shadows to Sunshine," a duet with Mary Carson; "In the Gloaming," and "Macushla." Most of his Re-Creations were issued from 1914 through 1915, but three "Lorna," "Spirit Flower," and "What Have I to Give?" appear to have been made somewhat later and were placed on sale in 1917.

The tenor was heard in six Blue Amberol duets with Helen Clark, but only two of these "In the Candle Light" and "Love's Golden Dream" were issued on the discs. And, like Mary Carson, sang one cylinder that was not made public until long after his recording career ended. This was 4542, "Faithless Heart," which was announced in July, 1922. It strikes me as a very dull song.

Again like Mary Carson, Randolph made one Blue Amberol especially for sale in the British Isles, 23366, "Make Me King of Your Heart." In my opinion he was a superb tenor and I wish his recording days had been much longer extended.

BLUE AMBEROL CYLINDERS By EMORY B. RANDOLPH

- 2740 Ah, Could I But Once More So Love, Dear.
- 2692 Beautiful Lady in Red.
- 2621 Bid Me to Love.
- 2211 The Bubble.
- 2522 Dear Old Songs of Long Ago.
- 4542 Faithless Heart.
- 2341 Farewell.
- 2399 I Seem to Hear You Gently Calling.
- 2852 In the Gloaming.
- 2315 In the Valley Where the Bluebirds Sing.
- 2635 Little Gray Home in the West.
- 2844 Lorna.
- 2452 Love's Sorrow.
- 2955 Spirit Flower.
- 2875 What Have I to Give.
- 2120 When the Song Birds Sing No More.
- 3207 Would You Take Back the Love You Gave Me?
- 23366 Make Me King of Your Heart.

BLUE AMBEROL DUETS

By RANDOLPH and HELEN CLARK

- 2254 In the Candle Light.
- 2398 In the Palace of Dreams.
- 2198 Love Has Done Wonders for Me.
- 2592 Love's Golden Dream.
- 2333 On the Banks of Lovelight Bay.
- 2302 When the Maple Leaves Were Falling.

BLUE AMBEROL DUET

By RANDOLPH and MARIE KAISER

- 2535 One Wonderful Night.

BLUE AMBEROL DUETS

By RANDOLPH and ELIZABETH SPENCER

- 2502 Love's Melody.
- 2497 When the Roses Bloom.

DIAMOND DISCS

By EMORY B. RANDOLPH

- 80288 Ah! Could I But Once More So Love, Dear. Reverse: Nightingale — Vocal Waltz (Metropolitan Quartet).
- 80235 Bid Me to Love. (Reverse: In the Garden of the Gods (Thomas Chalmers, baritone).
- 80131 High Jinks — The Bubble (with Chorus). Reverse: Little Cafe—Just Because It's You (Elizabeth Spencer and Chorus).
- 80228 For You Alone (with Elizabeth Spencer). Reverse: Little Grey Home in the West (Randolph with Chorus).
- 80126 Good-Bye, Rose. Reverse: When the Song Birds Sing No More.
- 80132 I'll Change the Shadows to Sunshine (with Mary Carson). Reverse: Sing Me the Rosary (Irving Gillette and Chorus).
- 80151 In the Candle Light (with Helen Clark). Reverse: We'll Always Be the Same Sweethearts (John Young and Frederick Wheeler).
- 80145 In the Gloaming (with Chorus). Reverse: When the Twilight Comes to Kiss the Rose Good-night (Helen Clark and Vernon Archibald).
- 80152 Irish Love Song. Reverse: Love's Dream After the Ball (Spencer).
- 80149 Let Me Rest Where the Loved Ones Are Sleeping (with Chorus). Reverse: Sally in Our Alley (Knickerbocker Quartet).
- 80167 Love's Golden Dream (with Helen Clark). Reverse: Little Daisy's Evening Prayer (Merle Alcock, contralto, and Chorus).
- 80189 Love's Melody (with Spencer). Reverse: Chin-Chin — The Grey Dove (Mary Carson).
- 80175 Love's Sorrow. Reverse: The Spanish Dancer (La Spagnola). Elizabeth Spencer).
- 80133 Macushla. Reverse: Land of Golden Dreams (Spencer and Archibald).
- 80156 O Happy Day, O Day So Dear. Reverse: Nightingale's Song (Christine Miller, Contralto).
- 80191 One Wonderful Night (with Marie Kaiser). Reverse: You Are the Rose of My Heart (Archibald).
- 80134 When the Roses Bloom (with Spencer and Chorus). Reverse: Boat With My True Love's Name (Clark and Archibald).
- 80330 Lorna. Reverse: Sweet Genevieve (Ida Gardner, contralto, and Chorus).
- 80314 Spirit Flower. Reverse: Song of Hybrias the Cretan (T. Foster Why, bass).
- 80335 What Have I to Give? Reverse: Cradle Song (Ida Gardner).

"A FRIEND INDEED"

That's what your collector friends will call you when they receive the gift card from us informing them that you have subscribed for HOBBIES in their name.

Each issue they receive will remind them of your friendship, because HOBBIES is a practical gift that will give them more pleasure in collecting.

Fill out the blank below and mail it with your remittance of $5.00 (Canada $6.00; foreign $6.50) to HOBBIES, 1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill. 60605

Please send a gift subscription to:

Name .....

Address .....

My name and address is:

.....
.....
.....

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Seven Bygone Edison Singers

PART III

By JIM WALSH

This month we will consider Owen J. McCormack, a baritone, and the tenors, Royal Fish, Arthur C. Lichty, and Burton Lenihan.

As far as Randolph (told of last month), or Fish, Lichty, and McCormack are concerned, it is doubtful if they are still living. Judging by their photographs, published from 1912 to 1916, all then were nearing 40, if they had not reached it.

If still living, they must be somewhere near the 90's. Lenihan's photo appears to be that of a man about 25, but at least 55 years have passed since it was taken, so he hardly can be under 80 if he has survived.

I. Owen J. McCormack

It happened that Owen J. McCormack, the only baritone in this group of bygone Edison artists, made his first record about the same time as Emory Randolph, and it, too, appeared in the January, 1914, supplement. The December, 1913, Edison Phonograph Monthly referred to him as follows:

"Born in Utica, N.Y., son of the late O. F. McCormack, famous bandmaster and cornetist, Mr. McCormack started his professional career as a violinist. After several years he decided to train his voice (a most promising natural baritone), and studied under White, Stevens and Mazzio, all prominent vocal instructors of New York City.

"He became connected with the Aborn Grand Opera Co., where he sang many baritone operatic roles. He also sang in several Klax and Erlanger productions, and was with the Henry W. Savage 'Everywoman' company.

"In addition to his stage work, Mr. McCormack has sung in many of the leading New York Church Choirs, and for the Edison Talking Pictures, with which latter he has made a notable success. His first record (is) an Irish ballad called 'The Lass From The County Mayo.'"

The title of McCormack's first record will interest record collectors because it was a revival of a song which had been published in 1897. It was the first number Billy Murray and his boyhood singing partner, Matt Keefe, the yodeler, recorded when they were engaged to make experimental cylinders for the Bacigalupi Brothers of San Francisco, the year the song came out.

A generation ago, a man insisted to me he had heard John McCormack give an Edison "tone test" and he refused to be convinced by my truthful statement that the tenor couldn't have done anything of the sort, since he never made any Edison discs and was under an exclusive Victor contract that didn't expire until February, 1938.

I'm wondering if he heard Owen McCormack instead. And McCormack, by the way, is the only one of the group of Edison artists who, to my knowledge, sang for any other company.

I have one of the little-known Rex hill-and-dale records that came out in 1915. It is 5203, and on one side McCormack sings "Back to the Carolina You Love," a popular tune he also recorded for both Edison cylinders and discs. The label gives his name as "O. J. McCormac." The reverse side is one of Byron G. Harlan's typical "rube song" renditions, "When He Gets to New York Town."

McCormack was a good singer, but

*****

PLAYER PIANO ROLLS

WANTED

Ampico, Duo-Art, Welte, and red Welte's.
IVAN SHAPIRO
169 E. Burlington Rd.
Riverside, Ill. 60546 fp

*****

WANTED FOR PRIVATE COLLECTION RECORDS

of GREAT SINGERS on
ALL LABELS

Particularly the following:

- ★ COLUMBIA GRAND OPERA RECORD ten-inch, single-faced, with red and gold and black and silver labels.
- ★ VICTOR, red seal, single - faced, with MONARCH and DE LUXE labels.
- ★ INTERNATIONAL ZONOPHONE CO., Disco Zonofono, Disque Zonophone.
- ★ FOREIGN LABELS such as ODEON, FONOTIPIA, G.&T., etc.
- ★ "OFF THE AIR," "OFF THE STAGE" and "PRIVATE" recordings by great singers, including complete opera broadcasts. Also old record catalogs.

AIDA FAVIA-ARTSAY

50 Prospect Avenue

Valhalla, New York
tfx

IF YOU'RE MOVING

★ So that there will be no interruption in your subscription, please give us 6 weeks advance notice.

★ Please state OLD and NEW address, and date you will be at new address. Please be sure to include old and new Zip Codes.

Circulation Department
HOBBIES MAGAZINE
1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill. 60605

Antique

MUSIC BOX SPECIALISTS

Complete repair service, cylinders re-pinned, combs repaired and tuned. all work guaranteed.

Large stock of finest
instruments for sale.

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. 10803

Phone: 914 - PE 8-1506

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

tfx

Owen J. McCormack

Royal Fish

with, it seems to me, nothing especially distinctive about his style except rather Italianate pronunciation of vowels. During his brief career, which ended in 1915, he was assigned mostly to sing genuinely popular songs.

The Company must not have anticipated the large demand for his Diamond Disc of "Goodbye, Girls, I'm Through," as about a year after it was issued, the supply of moulds apparently was exhausted. It was remade by another baritone, Joseph A. Phillips, best remembered as a recording and "tone test" duet partner of Helen Clark.

BLUE AMBEROL CYLINDERS

By OWEN J. McCORMACK

- 2562 Back to the Carolina You Love.
- 2201 Dixie Days.
- 2543 Goodbye, Girls, I'm Through.
- 2304 In the Town Where I Was Born.
- 2142 Lass From the County Mayo.
- 2541 Way Down on Tampa Bay.
- 2703 Welcome to California.
- 2163 When It's Springtime in Virginia.

DIAMOND DISCS

By OWEN J. McCORMACK

- 50220 Back to the Carolina You Love (with Chorus). Reverse: There's a Bungalow in Dixieland (Morton Harvey, baritone, and Chorus).
- 50214 Goodbye, Girls, I'm Through (with Chorus of Girls). Reverse: My Lady of the Telephone (Joseph A. Phillips and Chorus).
- 50313 In the Land of Love With the Song Birds (duet with George Wilton Ballard, tenor). Reverse: She's the Daughter of Mother Machree (Burton Lenihan).
- 50215 Way Down on Tampa Bay (with Chorus). Reverse: Down by the Old Mill Stream (Arthur C. Clough, tenor, and Chorus).
- 50272 Welcome to California (with Chorus). Reverse: Sweet Kentucky Lady (Arthur C. Lichty, tenor, and Chorus).
- 50245 When It's Moonlight in Mayo (with Chorus). Reverse: I'm On My Way to Dublin Bay (Premier Quartet).

II. Royal Fish

Many recording artists had unusual names, and there is something about Royal Fish that strikes me as particularly distinctive.

The April, 1914, catalog of Blue Amberol records has the following to say about this tenor, whose voice does not seem to have been especially powerful, but was peculiarly soft and sweet:

"This American artist was born in the Middle West. His early musical training was received under his father, Stephen Fish, who was a well-known tenor about 20 years ago. Later he studied with some of the best teachers in Chicago and New York.

"For some years Royal Fish has sung leading tenor roles of all the standard operas. His repertoire also includes standard oratorios and classic and modern songs.

"He has sung for many of the leading societies of the country, and has sung as soloist at the First Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, and at the Marble Collegiate and Grace Methodist Episcopal Churches, New York. At present he is engaged in concert and oratorio work, and in teaching."

Royal Fish may have been familiar with all the standard operas and oratorios, but that was not the sort of music he was called on to sing when he began with Edison in 1913. His first Blue Amberol was that great "barber shop quartet" hit of 1903. "Sweet Adeline" which, of course, is just as immortal in its way and will live as long as any "classical music." The supplement description told nothing about Fish, but gave the following description of the cylinder:

"This ballad needs no introduction to the American public . . . So popular a few years ago, (it) has received a new lease of life by being sung persistently during the recent season at the baseball games . . . Elizabeth Spencer and Donald Chalmers, both so familiar to all Edison owners, can be heard in the chorus of this rendition, which is particularly melodious . . ."

Fish's most popular Blue Amberol seems to have been "In the Shadow of the Pines," which he sang as a duet with Vernon Archibald. Most of his Diamond Discs, were steady sellers for years. "Where the Morning Glories Twine," "Marguerite," and "On Yonder Rock Reclining" probably were the leaders. The latter excerpt from "Fra Diavolo" was so popular that, after Fish no longer was recording, it had to be remade by Marie Kaiser and Vernon Dalhart.

In the first list of Diamond Discs, purchasers were given their choice of couplings for "Where the Morning Glories Twine," and "Marguerite." By paying $1 the buyer could get "Morning Glories" combined with a tarantella, "Forsetta," played by the American Symphony Orchestra. For $1.50, it could be had doubled with Frank Croxton's vigorous bass rendition of "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep."

Both these combinations were offered for only four months. After that "Morning Glories" settled down to long-time popularity as the coupling for "In the Valley Where the Blue Birds Sing," by an English tenor, Alfred D. Shaw.

"Marguerite" was first offered with "Dolores Waltz," by a Reed Orchestra, as the coupling. After that four months this was withdrawn, and "Where the Water Lilies Grow" was placed on the other side. The latter song previously had been wedded to "Forest Whispers," by the Reed Orchestra.

It was one of Mr. Edison's ways, when he began his disc business, to offer records in several couplings, and sometimes it was possible to pay $1, $1.50, or $2 for the same selection, depending upon what was on the other side. This obviously resulted in unnecessary duplication of stock, and the scheme soon was abandoned when there was objections.

Arthur C. Lichty

Burton Lenihan

Like Owen McCormack, Royal Fish was a successful singer for the Edison talking pictures that flourished from about 1912 through 1915. Among other things, he and five other Edison artists recorded a "talkie" version of the Lucia Sextet.

BLUE AMBEROL CYLINDERS

By ROYAL FISH

- 2077 If We Were On Our Honeymoon (duet with Elsie Baker, contralto).
- 2226 Love Divine, All Love Excelling (duet with Marie Kaiser).
- 2735 Where the Water Lilies Grow (with Chorus).
- 2193 The Battle Eve (duet with Vernon Archibald, baritone).
- 1625 You're the Flower of My Heart, Sweet Adeline (with Chorus - naturally!).
- 2073 In the Shadow of the Pines (duet with Vernon Archibald, baritone).

DIAMOND DISCS

By ROYAL FISH

- 50070 Marguerite (with Chorus). Reverse: Where the Water Lilies Grow.
- 50042 Marguerite. Reverse: Dolores Waltz (Reed Orchestra).
- 50121 Fra Diavolo—On Yonder Rock Reclining (duet with Marie Kaiser). Reverse: Soldiers' Chorus (English Opera Co.).
- 50088 Roses, Roses Everywhere (duet with Marie Kaiser, soprano). Reverse: Maritana—Scenes That Are Brightest (Agnes Kimball, soprano).
- 52040 Silent Night (with Elizabeth Spencer, soprano, and Thomas Chalmers, baritone). Reverse: Bird on the Wing (Metropolitan Quartet).
- 50094 There Is No Love Like Mine (duet with Marie Kaiser). Reverse: I Wish That You Belonged to Me (Walter Van Brunt and Chorus).
- 50062 Where the Morning Glories Twine Around the Door (with Chorus). Reverse: In the Valley Where the Blue Birds Sing (Alfred D. Shaw, tenor, and Chorus).
- 50136 Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm (duet with Elizabeth Spencer, soprano). Reverse: When the Haying Time is Over (Spencer and Van Brunt).
- 50174 Ring On, Sweet Bells (with Vernon Archibald, baritone). Reverse: Song of Steel (Donald Chalmers, bass).
- 50157 Iolanthe—Faint Heart Never Won Fair Lady (with Archibald and D. Chalmers). Reverse: Pirates of Penzance—Stay, Frederick, Stay (with Kaiser).
- 50024 Where the Morning Glories Twine. Reverse: Forsetta—Tarantella (American Symphony Orchestra).
- 50023 Where the Morning Glories Twine Around the Door (with Chorus). Reverse: Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep (Frank Croxton, bass, and Chorus).
- 50033 Roses, Roses Everywhere (duet with Kaiser). Reverse: Tancredi Overture (American Symphony Orchestra). 50041 Where the Water Lilies Grow (with Chorus). Reverse: Forest Whispers (Reed Orchestra).

III. Arthur C. Lichty

This tenor's name strongly resembles that of another better-known recording artist, Arthur C. Clough, and their voices are so much alike that, if it were not for the difference in their photographs, one would be tempted to take them for the same man.

Lichty had a remarkably brief Edison career. With the exception of one Blue Amberol issued early in 1913, his activity appears to have been confined to a couple of months in 1915. His first cylinder, No. 1617, was of a sentimental song, "Sleepy Rose," and the following description was given in the supplement:

"This song ballad, whose peculiar rhythm and graceful melody have made it such a pronounced success, has never been more beautifully rendered on this record. Arthur C. Lichty, an American baritone of exceptional ability, made his debut in the opera 'Faust,' singing the part of Valentine in Savannah, Georgia, in 1909.

"Not only is he famous as a singer, but he has done good work as a concert pianist as well. His voice is exceptionally smooth and clear of tone, and is displayed to good advantage in 'Sleepy Rose.'"

Although Lichty is called a baritone in this annotation, he was described as a tenor when his disc records were made, and his recorded voice is unmistakably tenor in quality.

It's worth noting that just as Emory Randolph played the cornet and other instruments and Owen McCormack had been a violinist, so Lichty was a pianist. He was also—which the supplement doesn't mention—a writer of movie scenarios. I have a film exhibitor's magazine for 1915 which describes the plot of a scenario he had written.

After "Sleepy Rose" there were no Edison records by Lichty for more than two years. Then, in October, 1915, two Blue Amberols by him were issued. Each contained a reigning hit of the time: No. 2700, "My Little Girl," and 2707, "It's Tulip Time in Holland." Both were sung with the help of a chorus.

The "Tulip Time" record is by far the most attractive version issued by any company of Richard Whiting's lovely song. Its harmonized chorus "makes" it.

During this same period three Diamond Discs sung by Lichty were issued. They were 50282, "It's Tulip Time in Holland," combined with "There's a Little White Church in the Valley," by Irving Kaufman and Chorus; 50283, "My Little Girl," with "Circus Day in Dixie," by the Premier Quartet; and 50272, "Sweet Kentucky Lady" (with Chorus), whose coupling was "Welcome to California," by Owen J. McCormack and Chorus. After that, no more was heard, Edisonically speaking, of Arthur Lichty.

Edison Enthusiasts. Thirteen-year-old Nancy Sittig and her eight-year-old brother, Freddie, of Columbus, Ohio, are ardent collectors of Edison cylinder records, and Nancy avidly reads HOBBIES. Their father, John Sittig, is head of the radio and audio-visual education department of the Columbus public school system.

IV. Burton Lenihan

And now we come to the last of our Seven Singers. Burton Lenihan, who began making Edison records in 1915, was born in Saginaw, Mich., and studied music in Boston for several years. Then he went to New York and obtained minor parts in several Broadway musical productions.

His big chance came when he was engaged to sing the leading tenor role in "The Firefly," an operetta in which Emma Trentini was starred. His brief Edison career followed. Lenihan's photo reveals him as a boyish, clean-cut looking young fellow.

His first two Blue Amberol records were made public in January, 1916, and both, "Auf Wiedersehn" and "Chin Chin," were duets with Gladys Rice, who was just beginning what was to be a long and successful recording career. These songs were also issued on Diamond Discs.

Lenihan sang mostly the popular ballads of 1916, but recorded a good version of Schubert's "Serenade"—which I doubt Schubert wrote. Lenihan was a capable, if not especially outstanding tenor, but his record of Egbert Van Alstyne's beautiful ballad, "Memories," is disappointing, for he doesn't make as much of the exquisite high notes at the end of the refrain as some other tenors—say, Walter Van Brunt or Emory Randolph could have.

By the end of 1916, Lenihan did no more Edison work, and apparently

(Continued on page 50)

ORGANS—MELODEONS

REED ORGANS, melodeons, bought, sold, repaired. Reeds tuned, revoiced replacements. — C. H. Gunzinger, Box 276, Williamsville, Vt. 05362. mh6675

SHEET MUSIC

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850. Catalog 25c —Fore's 3151 High, Denver, Colorado 80205 o12698

SHEET MUSIC: Old popular, 250,000 songs, A-Z. No list yet. — Robert Greenlaw, Room 412, 307 No. Rampart Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif. 90026 d6276

SHEET MUSIC, choose from thousands of popular, late 1800s to date. We also buy. — McNeill, 1117 South Taylor Ave., Oak Park, Ill. 60304. d3253

MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

MIRA floor model music box, 41 discs, $1000.00. Trans. extra. — Robert Tramutola, 1637 Sherman Pl., Des Plaines, Ill. 60016. Phone 312-824-0684. ja3633

MUSIC - ORGANS

PARLOR & chapel reed organs.—Write Box 169, Brainerd, Minn. or call 218-746-5491. E. Peterson, person to person. ja3882

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS before 1900 wanted. Strings, brass, clarinets, flutes, drums, mechanical, novelties. — William Kugler, 1124 Dionne, St. Paul, Minn. 55113. my68801

HISTORICAL RECORDS

(Continued from page 36)

I confess, I was taken by surprise when Plancon came one with Le veau d'or, but then I realized that to enrich the "Faust" set, two of his solos from this opera were included in the disc.

POL PLANCON

And here is the French basso on his own LP. What I said about Eames, goes for Plancon as well. New superlatives would have to be found in order to describe anew his superiority in the art he practiced with so much grandeur.

POL PLANCON—Cantilena 6220:

Side I—1. FLAUTO MAGICO: Possenti numi 2. FLAUTO MAGICO: Qui sdegno non s'accende 3. SONNAMBULA: Vi ravviso, o luoghi ameni 4. FAUST Le veau d'or (B1051) 5. FAUST: Vous qui faites l'endormie (B992) 6. DAMNATION DE FAUST: Devant la maison 7. DON CARLOS: Je dormirai dans mon manteau royal 8. MIGNON: Del suo cor calmai le pene.

Side II—1. Le Vallon (Gounod) 2. Le Soupir (Bemberg) 3. Le Lac (Niedermeyer) 4. Embarquez-Vous (Godard) 5. Si Tu Veux, Mignonne (Massenet) 6. Le Lazzarone (Ferrari) 7. Le Flibustier (Georges) 8. Minuit, Chrétiens (Adam) 9. Les Rameaux (Faure). (Please note that the "Faust" recordings are different from those on the Eames LP.)

While I was writing, I listened to Plancon and marveled at what he does on records. How did they go about acquiring so much vocal refinement in the olden days, anyway? Then it dawned: they had no records, radio, movies, or television to entertain them, so they had to make their own music. And they did just that—but well.

This is the Season when people unite in prayer for Peace On Earth Among Men. May I join my prayer for this much-needed blessing, and also wish my kind readers a Joyful Christmas and a Very Happy New Year!

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 39)

he sang for no other company. Here is a list of his records:

BLUE AMBEROL CYLINDERS By BURTON LENIHAN

2840 In Monterey.
2877 Memories.
2910 Serenade (Schubert).
2805 She's The Daughter of Mother Machree.
2775 Auf Wiedersehn (duet with Gladys Rice, soprano)
2788 Chin Chin (duet with Gladys Rice).

DIAMOND DISCS

By BURTON LENIHAN

80280 The Blue Paradise — Auf Wiedersehn (with Gladys Rice and Chorus). Reverse: The Blue Paradise—Waltz of the Season (George Wilton Ballard, Frederick J. Wheeler and Chorus).
80281 Hip-Hip-Hooray—Chin-Chin (with Gladys Rice and Chorus). Reverse: Two Is Company—In the Land of Lorraine (Frederick Wheeler, baritone).
50328 In Monterey. Reverse: Along the Rocky Road to Dublin (Premier Quartet).
50375 Ashes of My Heart. Reverse: There's a Garden in Old Italy (Irving Kaufman, tenor).
50345 Memories. Reverse: What a Wonderful Mother You'd Be (Van Brunt).
80303 Serenade (Schubert). Reverse: Bells of Lee (Helen Clark, contralto).
50313 She's the Daughter of Mother Machree. Reverse: In the Land of Love With the Song Birds (Ballard and McCormack).

So here we are, at the end of the list of Mr. Edison's one-time Singing Seven. It surely would be interesting to know how many, if any, of these bygone popular artists still are living at a necessarily advanced age.

DOLLOLOGY

(Continued from page 48)

Japan. The doll was dressed by a group of girls at the YWCA who did hand-work for charity bazaars. She was accompanied by other Japanese toys and playthings.

Mabel has a kid body, made in Germany. The name is on her neck. Snow White is with one of the Dwarfs.

Baby Doll, large, is wearing a baby dress of Margaret's and is in the doll carriage. (Compare it with Rhoda's.)

Red Riding Hood, 15 years old, is a later purchase of Mrs. Drake. Note the basket filled with flowers for Christmas.

Meet the Teddy Bear. Margaret was born during T.R.'s administration so teddy bears were the order of the day. This one was much beloved. It suffered tragedy in the loss of one eye. But Margaret's dad, was a doctor. He replaced it with a "glass eye" although it was not quite the same color as the original.

Louise, along with Teddy, was Margaret's favorite doll. It was thought when the larger and more beautiful Janet came Louise would take second place but she never did. Beloved probably because she was "earned," she was the reward for three subscription to the Ladies Home Journal.

The chair in which Teddy and Louise sit is a small black Pennsylvania Dutch one which was brought from New York State by the Waggoners. It was used both by Rhoda and her daughter Margaret.

Baby Bumps, one of the early realistic baby dolls, is much beloved. She is wearing one of Margaret's baby dresses which is more than 60 years old.

These Negro dolls, four of them I am sure kept me from developing any so-called "race prejudice." This first is a happy, pig-tailed youngster. The second gay little clown, unfortunately, now "blind," as it has lost both eyes. I'll have to replace them soon. The third, a large rag Mammy doll is much beloved. The fourth, best of all, is an upside-down doll—black, and when tipped up—white.

This clown, white with a gay flannel suit, has misplaced his pointed cap.

Mabel, a larger doll, 21 inches tall, also came from Germany. She was renamed Gertrude.

Mildred, was a reward for Sunday School attendance. She was given by the teacher, a leading merchant in town.

Note this large baby doll. Mostly Margaret took good care of her dolls but this one bears the marks of carelessness. He was left outside and a shower came up. He is speckled with the "first drops" and remains disfigured, but is nonetheless beloved.

Meet Peter Pan. With all the girl dolls, I did so want "a boy." Then, one Christmas he came. Peter Pan wears a smart sailor suit, plain blue knickers, and a blue-and-white plaid blouse with plain blue collar. He really made a hit and with his gay red tie has been a joy.

Many other small dolls are a part of this "family." Some are on the wall shelves, and one is in a wee cradle in front beside Rhoda's old cupboard. A pair of Chinese dolls are under the Christmas tree.

The tree itself is about 70 years old. It is German-made, with feather-wound branches. Toys, the blocks, Noah's ark, the cooking utensils, stereoptican, sideboard, and three ornaments all bring back Christmases past.

"A FRIEND INDEED"

That's what your collector friends will call you when they receive the gift card from us informing them that you have subscribed for HOBBIES in their name.

Each issue they receive will remind them of your friendship, because HOBBIES is a practical gift that will give them more pleasure in collecting.

Fill out the blank below and mail it with your remittance of $5.00 (Canada $6.00; foreign $6.50) to HOBBIES, 1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill. 60605

Please send a gift subscription to:

Name .....

Address .....

My name and address is:

.....
.....

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

In Justice to George Washington Johnson

PART I

By JIM WALSH

I. Defining an "Old-Timer"

Back in the 1920's, a writer of editorial page paragraphs for a Virginia newspaper remarked:

"An old-timer is anybody who can remember when Billy Murray wasn't making Victrola records."

If that paragraph still were writing today he very well might change his definition to read:

"An old-timer is anybody who can remember when Jim Walsh wasn't writing for HOBBIES."

"The Denver Nightingale's" primary recording career lasted from 1903 to 1931, a span of 28 years, although he made a brief comeback in 1940 and '41. On the other hand, I now am completing my 29th year of editing a HOBBIES department and have grandiose ambitions of extending the stretch to 50 years at least.

So, from a longevity stand-point, my writing career already parallels Billy Murray's recording activities, and the paragraph's definition of an "old-timer" would apply equally well to anyone whose memory takes him back to the days when my name didn't appear in this magazine.

Before I conclude this article, I intend to mention a surprising discovery I have made about the beginning of Murray's recording career—one that seems to disprove a statement that Billy himself, in all good faith, gave me. But now I must get down to the prime purpose of this contribution, which is to apologize to the memory of a man to whom I unintentionally did an injustice 26 years ago in HOBBIES for September, 1944.

II. Doing Justice to George

The man I have in mind is the late George Washington Johnson, who called himself "The Laughing Coon" and "The Whistling Coon." According to Frank Dorian, a pioneer Columbia Phonograph Company official, Johnson was born into slavery on a Virginia plantation. He was burly and coal black — and I said in my brief sketch of him that his life ended in tragedy, because he was hanged for killing his wife.

That statement was made on the authority of a book written by the late Fred Gaisberg, which was called "Music On Record" in England, and "The Music Goes Round" in the States. Gaisberg, a gnome-like little man, had begun his professional career around 1890 as a piano accompanist at Columbia's Washington studios. He was then 16.

Later he became associated with Emile Berliner, and in the late 1890's went to England, where he helped establish the Gramophone Company and came to be its director of artists. His book was published in 1942, and he died September 2, 1951, at 77.

Among the early recording artists whom Gaisberg had known well, Johnson was one of the more outstanding. In putting together his book, Gaisberg recalled playing accompaniments for Johnson and other performers and wrote:

"The late nineties can be rated as the 'high spot' of the phonograph cylinder as an entertainer, brought about, strangely enough, through the vogue of the slot machine. Automatic Phonograph Parlors, as they were called, sprang up like mushrooms on the busy streets of most towns in the United States. They did a flourishing business for just two years and then the craze vanished.

"A singer with a loud voice could record to five machines simultaneously . . . Favorite records of those days (included) the tragic Negro, George W. Johnson, in 'The Whistling Coon' and 'The Laughing Song.'

"George achieved fame and riches with just these two titles. His whistle was low-pitched and fruity, like a contralto voice. His laugh was deep-bellied, lazy like a carefree dandy. His life ended in tragedy."

Farther over in the book, Gaisberg discussed Burt Shepard (whose name he misspells as Sheppard) an American comedian born in New Orleans, who went to England as a young man and spent most of his professional life there.

Shepard began making Gramophone (H.M.V.) records about 70 years ago, and his "Boy and the Cheese" was 7", Improved and Victor single-faced record 7. From about 1901 to 1907 Shepard crossed the ocean once or twice a year to make Victor records in addition to those he was recording in England for Gramophone, Zonophone, Pathe, and other companies.

He declared that "fat, jolly Burt Shepard, with his powerful tenor voice and clear diction, gave us our most successful results" (in England). Then Gaisberg went on to say:

"Burt Shepard's 'Whistling Coon' and 'The Laughing Song' were world-famous. In India alone over a half million records of the latter were sold.

"In the bazaars of India I have seen dozens of natives seated on their haunches round a gramophone, rocking with laughter, whilst playing Shepard's laughing record; in fact this is the only time I have ever heard Indians laugh heartily. The record is still available there, and I believe that to this day it sells in China, Africa, and Japan.

"I brought these songs over from America, having transcribed them from memory, and taught them to Burt. I had acquired them from George W. Johnson, the tragic Negro mentioned earlier, who was hanged for throwing his wife out of a window when in a drunken frenzy."

Shepard's association with "the Laughing Song" record was mentioned in an interview with him published in the Talking Machine News of London for April 1, 1907:

"Mr. Shepard is confident he has made more records for the Gramophone Company than any other artist, and all 'big sellers.' Take that laughing song of his, for instance. He has repeated his visits to their laboratory over and over again to make fresh masters of this popular record.

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

SEVENTY YEARS AGO — George W. Johnson (32) was the only Negro in this group of Edison recording artists, photographed in 1900, at West Orange, N.J. It is believed that everyone shown in the picture is now dead. Jim Walsh says that if a Pioneer Recording Artists' Hall of Fame ever is established, he believes the performers whose names are preceded by an asterisk should be elected to membership.

Quentin Riggs, P.O. Box 415, Midway City, Calif. 92655, will supply copies of the photo, size 8 by 10 or larger, at a reasonable price to anyone who would like to have a copy for framing or permanent preservation. The artists, identified by number, are:

1. *Joe Belmont, whistler. 2. Nick Scholl, trombone. 3. A. Zimmerman, cornet. 4. L. W. Lipp, yodler. 5. *Byron G. Harlan, Tenor. 6. *Fred W. Hager, violin. 7. *Arthur Collins, baritone. 8. *S. H. Dudley, baritone. 9. W. C. Deusing, German baritone. 10. M. Guarini, tenor. 11. *William Tuson, clarinet. 12. Will N. Steele, recitations. 13. Jim White, recitations. 14. *Walter H. Miller, recording manager. 15. *George Broderick, bass. 16. Frank Kennedy, comedian. 17. Albert C. Sweet, cornet. 18. B. Russell Throckmorton, recitations. 19. Harvey N. Emmons, chimes. 20. Ruby E. Brooks, banjo. 21. *Samuel Siegel, mandolin. 22. *Albert Benzler, piano, bells, and xylophone. 23. Senorita Maria Godoy, Spanish songs. 24. *Joe Natus, tenor. 25. *William F. Hookey, bass. 26. May Kelso, contralto. 27. J. J. Fisher, baritone. 28. *Will F. Denny, tenor.

29. *John Bieling, tenor. 30. Marguerite Newton, soprano. 31. Fred Bachman, piano. 32. *George W. Johnson, comedian. 33. A. D. Madeira, baritone. 34. Frank S. Mazzotta, piccolo. 35. *Frank P. Banta, piano. 36. *Charles D'Almaine, violin. 37. *George P. Watson, yodler. 38. *Dan W. Quinn, tenor. 39. *Harry MacDonough, tenor. 40. *Edward M. Favor, tenor. 41. *Albert Campbell, tenor. 42. *Jere Mahoney, tenor.

(Continued from page 37)

14

Songs—Johnson

Geo. W. Johnson

IN HIS

TWO GREAT SPECIALTIES

Up to date, over 25,000 records of these two songs have been made by this artist, and the orders for them seem to increase instead of diminish. Mr. Johnson's laugh is simply irresistible. Whole audiences are convulsed by simply hearing these songs reproduced. No exhibition box is complete without these two records.

Laughing Song
Whistling Coon

JOHNSON'S EMPLOYER — Len Spencer used Johnson as a doorman at his Lyceum during the Negro comedian's last years. Spencer and Johnson sometimes worked together in recorded minstrel shows and comic sketches.

"More than one dealer has told me that it sells like wildfire. The natives of various parts of India especially would seem to like it very well. Friends write and tell me that all a native wants out there is a loin-cloth, a machine and my laughing record," said Mr. Shepard."

III. The Facts in the Case

Gaisberg's book is so demonstrably inaccurate in so many ways that ever since my 1944 article appeared, I have had qualms about having reported, on the strength of the book, that George Washington Johnson was hanged for murder. For one thing, I understood that Johnson was living in New York City when the alleged murder occurred, and the statement that he was hanged sounded like an anachronism. How long has it been since New York has executed convicted persons by hanging?

For another, none of my friends among old-time recording officials and artists who mentioned Johnson ever said anything about his being put to death. One thing I knew: If he was executed, it must have been later than 1909, for I have a record that Johnson apparently made in that year.

Of another thing I was certain: The hanging, if it ever took place, must have been around 1910, for all Johnson's records disappeared that year from the Victor catalog. I thought Victor must have decided it would not be good "public relations" to continue to offer the discs of a convicted wife-killer.

PHONOGRAPH PIONEER — The late Fred Gaisberg, author of the book, "The Music Goes Round," in which it wrongly was said that Johnson was hanged for killing his third wife.

I still think Johnson died around 1910. And for reasons to be shown I am positive he could not have been living as late as 1914. But I also have learned beyond dispute that he was not put to death as a common criminal.

This article, therefore, is to set the record straight. It is my hope and belief that 100, or 200 years from now researchers in the early history of the phonograph will be conning bound volumes of HOBBIES, and I don't want to pass out of this world knowing that I helped to blacken permanently the name of a presumably innocent man. Hence this act of retribution, 26 years after my original statements about Johnson appeared.

I only can assume that Gaisberg, after so many years abroad, suffered a lapse of memory that made him believe Johnson had been executed. Or possibly some visitor to England gave Gaisberg false information.

But my first unshakable proof that he was wrong came through the merest chance when a California record collector—Harold A. Layer of San Francisco—courteously sent me some "antique" Columbia reference material he had found stored away in an old barn that burned a month after he salvaged its contents.

Many of the items Mr. Layer so kindly lent me will provide material for a series which I believe will be

(Continued on page 50)

Edward Issler played the piano accompaniments for Johnson's first experimental Edison records in 1891 and afterwards accompanied him on Columbia records.

LUCKY JIM, PLUM, NIPPER, POSSY AND JIM WALSH AGAIN WISH THE GREAT HOBBIES FAMILY A MERRY CHRISTMAS AND A HAPPY NEW YEAR

1. LUCKY JIM has been looking through his records, to select a program of Christmas music with which to greet Santa Claus.
2. PROFESSOR PLUM DUFF WALSH, Ph.D., besides holding high rank as a statesman and poet, also operates a detective agency in conjunction with another cat, Siamese Marshall. The Professor here is industriously sniffing out a clue.
3. NIPPER has been making an industrious search in his letter files, to check up on past correspondence with Santa. Although he is now 13 years of age, Nips still

- believes in the patron saint of Christmas.
4. This picture is a memorial tribute to the late CHIP JENKINS, beloved friend of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Jenkins, of Rose Hill, Va. Chip is shown "laying" for H. C. Haley, the mail carrier, intending to throw rocks at him if he hasn't brought the latest issue of HOBBIES with Chip's picture somewhere inside it.
5. In memory of THOMAS A., cherished pet of Mr. & Mrs. Albert Via Jr., of So. Boston, Va. Thomas always entered thoroughly into the spirit of Christmas. jax

PUBLIC NOTICE HUGE MUSIC BOX COLLECTION — Being Sold! —

We are now offering for sale on a piece by piece basis the fabulous Marvin Collection of music boxes. You can take your pick of dozens and dozens of Regina, Polyphon, Symphonion and other disc boxes; Swiss cylinder boxes of all kinds and descriptions including overture boxes, bell boxes, orchestra boxes, and instruments with matching tables.

Of particular interest are the large music boxes that once were owned by financier J. P. Morgan and actress Sarah Bernhardt.

You can also buy player organs, nickelodeon pianos, orchestrions (automatic orchestras), circus organs, Ampico, Duo-Art, and Welte reproducing pianos, and many, many more things!

The Marvin Collection catalogue gives clear illustrations and detailed descriptions of the instruments being offered. The catalogue regularly sells for $2, but while a few hundred copies last we'll send you one for just $1 postpaid.

Guarantee: If you don't find the Marvin Collection catalogue to be the most value-packed and interesting music box catalogue you've ever seen anywhere, your dollar will be instantly refunded!

You can't lose! On the other hand you really can gain — by having an early chance at the most spectacular collection of music boxes we've ever offered for sale!

Send $1 and request "Marvin Collection Catalogue."

HATHAWAY & BOWERS, INC.
11975 East Florence Avenue
Santa Fe Springs, Calif. 90670
Tel. (213) 941-8774

Complete facilities for low-cost world-wide shipping — or plan to visit us in person the next time you're in the Los Angeles area. Showroom open Monday — Friday 2 to 4 p.m. We're located halfway between downtown Los Angeles and Disneyland — about a 20 minute drive from either place. A wonderland of fun awaits you! fe

ORGANS—MELODEONS

REED ORGANS, melodeons, bought, sold, repaired. Reeds tuned, revoiced replacements. — C. H. Gunzinger, Box 276, Williamsville, Vt. 05362. mh6675

SHEET MUSIC

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850. Catalog 25c — Fore's 3151 High, Denver, Colorado 80205 o12698

FOR SALE: 150 pieces piano sheet music all about 50 yrs. old; many World War I songs. — Mary Lanting, Box 291, DeMotte, Ind. 46310. ja1002

SHEET MUSIC, choose from thousands of popular, late 1800s to date. We also buy. — McNeill, 1117 South Taylor Ave., Oak Park, Ill. 60304. mh3253

OLD popular sheet music, 250,000 songs in A-Z order. — Robert Greenlaw, 307 N. Rampart, Room 412, Los Angeles, Calif. 90026. d126121

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS before 1900 wanted. Strings, brass, clarinets, flutes, drums, mechanical, novelties. — William Kugler, 1124 Dionne, St. Paul, Minn. 55113. my68801

MUSIC - ORGANS

PARLOR & chapel reed organs. — Write Box 169, Brainerd, Minn. or call 218-746-5491. E. Peterson, person to person. ja3882

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 39)

of outstanding interest and will appear later in HOBBIES. But at the present time I chiefly am concerned with issues of The Columbia Record for September, 1907, and The Columbia Salesman for the following month.

One of the features of these numbers was a continued article on "The Making of a Disc Record," written by Victor H. Emerson, then manager of Columbia's recording department, who, in 1916, founded the Emerson Phonograph Company. Emerson took his memory back to 1890 and recalled:

"I was with the New Jersey Company at that time and believed the future of our business lay in the exploitation of the musical record branch and endeavored to get our board of directors to see it . . . I set up ten recording machines and one day heard on the street a 'mud gutter band' of four pieces playing 'Boulanger's Patrol.'

"The leader said that they couldn't work cheap — no use asking him. We finally closed the bargain at $3.50 for all of the four men for the afternoon. We made 500 records and sold them for two dollars each . . .

"Geo. W. Johnson, who sings the 'Laughing Song' and 'Whistling Coon' was the next to make records, and I believe the first man who made commercial records for the public. George got twenty cents a song.

"The price paid the talent in those days was from twenty cents to one dollar per song. There were no duplicating methods: at that time and all records sold were original . . ."

In October Emerson continued, with information that bore directly on the question of whether George Washington Johnson was a murderer:

"My manager . . . finally allowed me to make nine more laughing songs by Johnson and that increased our stock 100 per cent . . .

"Speaking of Johnson recalls to my mind the famous case of the State of New York versus Johnson in which he was arrested for murdering his wife. Two wives prior to this last one had met with violent deaths, and in New York when the third wife meets with a violent death the police sometimes become suspicious and so the poor man was arrested.

"Johnson was always sober, industrious and gentlemanly, and nobody believed that Johnson would do it on account of the risk involved.

"Some of the talent held a meeting to provide ways and means to help him, and after the object of the meeting was stated one of them said, 'Well, boys, we ought to all chip in because there is no telling when some of us might be in the same fix.' The subscription after that speech was $2,100 on paper and we afterwards borrowed $100 real money . . .

"Johnson was acquitted by the judge upon the recommendation of the district attorney."

So there you have the truth, on the word of Victor Emerson, who was writing while Johnson still was alive and making records. Columbia issued, in fact, a six-inch BC cylinder, No. 85130, of "The Laughing Song" the same month this article appeared.

The supplement described the song as: "... the most famous and laughable of all Negro specialties. The first time ever recorded on BC records. The most cheerful lyric since the word began, with the quaintest conceivable words and melody sung by their genuine African originator. The hearty laugh and good humor this song provokes is worth much more to you than the price of the record. A perennially popular selection positively without equal."

FROM 76-YEAR-OLD CATALOG — The pen-and-ink drawing of George W. Johnson shown here is reproduced from a catalog of New Jersey cylinder records dated March 31, 1894. Formerly owned by Len Spencer, it is now the property of Jim Walsh.

IV. Effort to Learn the Details

I experienced considerable excitement as I read Emerson's recollections, thanks to Mr. Layer. Here was proof positive that Johnson was not hanged for murder, and the year of the alleged "hanging" could not have been 1910, as I had speculated. Johnson still was alive and working at his specialty in 1907, but he hardly could have been said to gain "riches" in addition to fame, despite what Gaisberg had said.

What of the threads left dangling? When had his arrest on the murder charge occurred? Had it been in the early 1900's or, more likely, in the 1890's? Emerson wrote as though the trouble had occurred a considerable time before 1907, but, provokingly, gave no dates.

My best guess was, and is, that the murder charge was brought in the '90's. But I wondered what was the name of Johnson's wife? Under what conditions had she met her death? What were the suspicious circumstances under which two preceding wives had died? And just when did Johnson himself pass on?

These questions are still unanswered. However, that is not my fault. Almost immediately I wrote to Frank S. Hogan, District Attorney of the County of New York, and asked for any information his files contained regarding the Johnson murder case. I imagined a card index was kept of all cases and it would not be hard to ascertain the needed information.

The result of my efforts, however, was a note from Kathryn E. Zenoff, Mr. Hogan's law assistant:

"Dear Mr. Walsh: I am sorry to inform you that without an exact date of Mr. Johnson's trial, the information you have requested will be almost impossible to locate."

That stumped me, for I was asking the D.A.'s office for the date of trial. And, without its help, I know of no way to get it. I told Abel Green, editor of Variety, about my effort to track down the truth, and he said he thought he would publish my letter in the hope that some reader possibly might know something about it. Variety used the letter as an article in its August issue. Then, a few days ago, I happened to be looking through some letters I had received from the late Fred Rabenstein, who was Edison's recording paymaster for a great many years—letters I hadn't glanced at in some 20 years. Suddenly, in the midst of a discussion of the great pioneer recording comedian, Len Spencer, I came across the following:

"When Len opened his Lyceum he had a doorman in full regalia — he was none other than George W. Johnson (who made the old laughing song records). George was something to behold in his full dress admiral (or was it general?) uniform.

"It was all right for a while — George had a room at the Lyceum, but after they moved, from 14th Street to 28th Street things caught up with George. He used to run errands and always being a little short of cash he used to borrow money from the clients. He never paid back and after a while he was afraid to go to some of the places.

"George could only do the 'Laughing Song' and therefore it was hard for him to pick up extra money. Then he liked to drink. After George died Len started to clean out the room and in a closet they found remains of many lunches (bread, bottles, ham, etc.), including roaches and other livestock.

"Len did not get another doorman, but had an office boy. We understood that Len treated George all right, but was afraid to let him have much money because the 'doorman' would be indisposed for several days afterward."

Writing many years after Johnson's death, Fred Rabenstein, like Gaisberg, gave the impression that Johnson was a heavy drinker, but Victor Emerson, commenting while Johnson still was alive, says he was sober and gentlemanly. For the sake of a reputation that already has been blackened sufficiently and unjustly, I prefer to believe the latter.

At any rate, we know now that George Washington Johnson did not depart this life at the end of a hangman's rope, but that he was working when he died for the great Len Spencer, with whom he had participated in making more than one record.

Spencer himself died December 15, 1914, and Rabenstein made it clear that he had outlived Johnson. I still think 1910 the most probable year of Johnson's death, for I have found no records by him after 1909.

And it is not true that his repertoire consisted of only "The Laughing Song" and "The Whistling Coon." In addition to these, which were by far the best and most popular of his recorded offerings, he also sang "The Laughing Coon" and "The Whistling Girl," two numbers that were mediocre by comparison with the "top two" which he sang thousands of times.

(Continued on page 91)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 50)

I am wondering where Johnson got the words and music of "The Laughing Song." "The Whistling Coon" is no mystery. It was written by a minstrel performer, Sam Devere, but I never have seen any composer credit for its popular companion.

It seems unlikely that Johnson, who presumably was almost illiterate, could have written it. There are expressions in it, such as "fearful gap," "he would have been the apple of their eye if he had not been a quince," "simple little lay" and "a quiet bit of chaff" that seem unlikely to have been thought of by an uneducated Negro.

For old-time's sake let's quote the words of this Laughing Song, which Johnson was singing on records 80 years ago:

"As I was coming around the corner
I heard some people say,
'Here comes the dandy darky.
Here he comes this way.
His feet are like a snow plow,
His mouth is like a trap,
And when he opens it gently
You will see a fearful gap.
'They say his mother was a princess,
His father was a prince,
He would have been the apple of their eye
If he had not been a quince.
He'll be the king of Africa
In the sweet bye and bye.'
And when I heard them say it
Why, I'd laugh until I'd cry.
'So now, kind friends, just listen
To what I have to say.
I've tried my best to please you
With my simple little lay.
So whether you think it funny
Or a quiet bit of chaff,
Why all I'll try to do is Just end it with a laugh."

I have omitted the refrain, which begins "And then I laughed," and is followed by one "Ha Ha Ha!" after another. Rereading the lyrics, I feel confident that a man born as a slave on a Virginia plantation never could have acquired enough knowledge of literate English to compose them. The words sound like the production of some vaudeville writer.

Late in 1906 the Music Trades Review of New York published an amusing short article about Johnson, which is worth reproducing here 64 years later, although it may not be entirely accurate:

"One of the most unique characters in the talking machine world is George Johnson, who is now working for all the companies, doing 'laughing' songs. Johnson is said to be the most infectious laughter in the country.

"He is described by the talking machine men as the original 'haw-haw' man, and practically every laughing song heard on the phonograph is sung by him. He even figures in some songs which have only a few bars of laughing chorus or a laughing line.

"Johnson is a Negro who has been making a living by his exuberance for years. In the old days, it is said, he once sang the same song 56 times in one day, and his laugh had as much merriment in it at the conclusion as when he started.

The interior of the Lyceum.

"A talking machine man tells of Johnson that he was in a Western City one day in a gallery at the theatre. A black comedian came out and did a laughing song. Johnson snorted after the first chorus. He moved about restlessly and at the end of the second verse shouted a protest.

"'You ain't singing dat song right!' he cried.

"'What's the reason I aint?' declared the singer from the stage angrily. 'Praps you can sing it better!'

"'I sure can,' declared Johnson.

"'Well, come down and try it.'

"Johnson left the gallery, slipped into the stage entrance and took up the dare. He scored his usual success."

V. Some More Questions

In thinking of George W. Johnson's life story, many fresh questions arise. How old was he when he began making records? And how old was he when he was dismissed on the charge of murdering his wife? When was he born? How did he make a living before he began to singing "The Laughing Song" and "The Whistling Coon" into recording horns?

These are questions to which we never may know the answers. But I'll hazard a guess that Johnson was born somewhere around 1847, the year of Thomas Edison's birth, consequently was about 18 when the Civil War ended, and was no longer a slave. And I also guess that he became a street musician, singing his limited repertoire—the smallest ever possessed by any successful recording artist—and passing the hat.

If Johnson really had been a slave he certainly was born well before 1865. A catalog of New Jersey cylinder records, dated March 1, 1894, contains a pen and ink drawing of him that makes him appear to be more than 40. In the 1900 photo of a group of 42 Edison artists, reproduced with this article, he looks to be over 50.

This picture also was published with the September, 1944, article in which I quoted Gaisberg's statement that Johnson was hanged, but it is so sharp and clear I think it deserves to be used again. Of all of the "turn of the century" artists shown, Johnson was the only Negro.

Should a Hall of Fame for pioneer recording artists ever be established—and I think there should be one—about half of these 42 men and women, in my opinion, should be elected to membership. I have indicated by asterisks before the individual names in the cut lines those whom I think deserve the honor.

Again, a photo from the 1907 Columbia record supplement makes the Negro comedian then appear to be 60 or more. It probably would be a safe guess that he was close to 70, if he had not reached a "borrowed time" age, when he died.

Next month I shall give as nearly complete a list as possible of Johnson's recordings, beginning with the start of his phonograph singing some 80 years ago.

(To be continued)

MAKE JEWELRY FOR PROFIT

FREE!

200 PAGE
CATALOG

GRIEGER'S Inc.

GIFTS! PERSONAL WEAR!
PROFIT!

EASY TO DO...no special skills required.
EASY TO SELL!...because your creations are different — no two need be alike. FREE CATALOG contains everything you need to get started in JEWELRY MAKING for personal wear...gifts...or profit. Sell your creations for 2 to 5 times what you paid for them...endless variety of styles at your fingertips. This FREE CATALOG contains everything you need...earring mountings, pendants, brooch Pins, tie tacks, bracelets, rings, button backs and endless styles of imitation & natural stones for use as high fashion buttons to add that finishing touch to your sewing creations. This catalog is a MUST... and it's absolutely FREE... no obligation! 10,000 items, thousands of which not available elsewhere...Imports from all over the world...BARGAINS GALORE! Get started today...FOR FUN! FOR PROFIT!

SEND FOR YOUR FREE CATALOG NOW!

GRIEGER'S Inc.
Dept. 24, 1633 E. Walnut St., Pasadena, Cal. 91109

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

In Justice to George Washington Johnson

PART II

By JIM WALSH

I. Johnson's Career Begins

I said last month that I would do my best to give as nearly complete a list as possible of George W. Johnson's recordings, but no claim is made that the compilation which follows includes all.

For one thing, Johnson surely must have been called on to sing his popular specialties for some of the manufacturers of cylinder records who sprang up in the 1890's, but were in business only a year or two. Those were companies whose catalogs I don't have.

It is possible that Johnson did his first recording work in Newark, N.J., for the United States Phonograph Company, which made New Jersey records. We quoted Victor Emerson on this last month. However, Johnson might have sung earlier in Washington, D. C., for Columbia.

One wonders, among so many other things, where he lived. He seems to have been available equally to Columbia in Washington, New Jersey in Newark, and Edison in West Orange. Still later he sang for Victor in Philadelphia or Camden, and for Columbia in New York.

Johnson's first recorded work for Edison seems to have been June 1, 1891, when he spent two and a half hours singing and whistling, and making cylinders to Edward Issler's piano accompaniment. Issler was a band and orchestra conductor for New Jersey during Victor Emerson's stay with that ill-fated firm, which was absorbed by Columbia in 1897.

Judging from what Emerson said, the comedian began with New Jersey in 1890. In the 1894 catalog, which listed "George W. Johnson In His Two Great Specialties" (the "Laughing Song" and "Whistling Coon," of course), this statement was made:

"Up to date, over 25,000 of these two songs have been made by this artist, and the orders for them seem to increase instead of diminish. Mr. Johnson's laugh is simply irresistible. Whole audiences are convulsed by simply hearing these songs reproduced. No exhibition box is complete without these two records."

And Johnson had made those records, remember, by singing them over and over, with not more than five copies turned out at a time! It is likely that Issler usually played the accompaniments, as he had done at Edison.

The first Columbia mention I find of Johnson is in the cylinder record catalog for August, 1896, but it is likely he had sung repeatedly for Columbia before then. Columbia catalogs in those days contain statements that they had made records of which the stock was too limited to be included in the "book." Under the heading of "George W. Johnson's Great Specialties," the catalog said:

"Johnson is the original 'whistling coon.' The two records listed below have had a wider sale than any other specialties ever made. Johnson's laugh is simply irresistible."

The two were No. 7601, "Laughing Song," and No. 7602, "Whistling Coon."

On May 1, 1898, after the New Jersey Company had gone bankrupt, Johnson was one of a group of artists who signed a contract to make Columbia records exclusively during the coming year. If the signature reprinted in the 1899 catalog was written by him and not for him, he was not altogether illiterate, for the "Geo. W. Johnson" is small and neat and does not look like the effort of a person unaccustomed to penmanship.

Other artists who signed the contract were Vess L. Ossman, Dan W. Quinn, George J. Gaskin, Steve Porter, Tom Clark (conductor of the Columbia Orchestra), Len Spencer, the Columbia Brass Quartet, George Schweinfest, Will F. Denny, and Russell Hunting (who went to England to live later in the year).

The 1899 catalog contained four records by Johnson — the two that had been listed in 1896, plus No. 7603, "Laughing Coon," and No. 7604,

(Continued on page 39)

PUBLIC NOTICE HUGE MUSIC BOX COLLECTION — Being Sold! —

We are now offering for sale on a piece by piece basis the fabulous Marvin Collection of music boxes. You can take your pick of dozens and dozens of Regina, Polyphon, Symphonion and other disc boxes; Swiss cylinder boxes of all kinds and descriptions including overture boxes, bell boxes, orchestra boxes, and instruments with matching tables.

Of particular interest are the large music boxes that once were owned by financier J. P. Morgan and actress Sarah Bernhardt.

You can also buy player organs, nickelodeon pianos, orchestrions (automatic orchestras), circus organs, Ampico, Duo-Art, and Welte reproducing pianos, and many, many more things!

The Marvin Collection catalogue gives clear illustrations and detailed descriptions of the instruments being offered. The catalogue regularly sells for $2, but while a few hundred copies last we'll send you one for just $1 postpaid.

Guarantee: If you don't find the Marvin Collection catalogue to be the most value-packed and interesting music box catalogue you've ever seen anywhere, your dollar will be instantly refunded!

You can't lose! On the other hand you really can gain — by having an early chance at the most spectacular collection of music boxes we've ever offered for sale!

Send $1 and request "Marvin Collection Catalogue."

HATHAWAY & BOWERS, INC.
11975 East Florence Avenue
Santa Fe Springs, Calif. 90670
Tel. (213) 941-8774

Complete facilities for low-cost world-wide shipping — or plan to visit us in person the next time you're in the Los Angeles area. Showroom open Monday — Friday 2 to 4 p.m. We're located halfway between downtown Los Angeles and Disneyland — about a 20 minute drive from either place. A wonderland of fun awaits you! tc

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

tic

(Continued from page 37)

JOHNSON IMITATOR — Records of the "Laughing Song" by the American comedian, Burt Shepard, were highly popular throughout Great Britain and the British Empire. This photo is reprinted from the Talking Machine News of April 1, 1907.

ORGANS—MELODEONS

REED ORGANS, melodeons, bought, sold, repaired. Reeds tuned, revoiced replacements. — C. H. Gunzinger, Box 276, Williamsville, Vt. 05362. mh6675

SHEET MUSIC

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850. Catalog 25c — Fore's 3151 High, Denver, Colorado 80205 ol2698

SHEET MUSIC, choose from thousands of popular, late 1800s to date. We also buy. — McNeill, 1117 South Taylor Ave., Oak Park, Ill. 60304. mh3253

OLD popular sheet music, 250,000 songs in A-Z order. — Robert Greenlaw, 307 N. Rampart, Room 412, Los Angeles, Calif. 90026. d126121

GROUP of 24 unbound songs etc., 7 Civil War period. 2 bound volumes of songs & dances of 1850's. 1 bound volume of songs & dances of 1830's. Volume of drawing room dances (with figures & calls) arranged by Elias Howe, 1861. Volume of piano practice studies & "Art of Fingering" about 1850. Please make offer on above items. Postage extra. — W. Ford Haviland, 462 N.E. 70th Ave., #2, Seattle, Wash. 98115. fl865

OVER 5,000 different sheets of music. Era of 1895-1920. All in Mint Condition. Send $1.00 for 70 page catalogue, credited on 1st order. — L. Koenig, 345 S. 8th Ave., LeGrange, Ill. 60525. ja122112

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS before 1900 wanted. Strings, brass, clarinets, flutes, drums, mechanical, novelties. — William Kugler, 1124 Dionne, St. Paul, Minn. 55113. my68801

PHONOGRAPHS

OLD PHONOGRAPH catalogs! Beautifully illustrated reprints. For example, 1899 Talking Machine Catalog, 64 pages, only $2.95 postpaid. Free illustrated list available. — Allen Koenigsberg, 1532 Ocean Ave., Brooklyn, N.Y. 11230. ap6829

500 OLD TIME loud steel needles. $2.00 postpaid. — Norris Dullum, Colfax, N. Dakota 58018. mh3291

"Whistling Girl." They stayed in the cylinder catalog for several years, but No. 7603 and No. 7604 were gone by 1904, and "The Whistling Coon" by 1905.

It is interesting to note that the Bettini Company, which specialized in cylinders by famous operatic stars, listed "Geo. W. Johnson in His Specialties" in its catalogs dated June, 1898, and April, 1900. The records cost $1.00 each and were — have you guessed? — "The Laughing Song" and "The Whistling Coon." A photograph of George, who looked somewhere around 50, was included.

Not only that, but Bettini's French catalog for "Juin, 1901" included Johnson "dans ses specialites Americaines." The selections were "Le fou rire" and "La Chanson du sifflet — otherwise, "Laughing," and "Coon." The price of the French cylinders was three francs — about 75 cents in those days.

Another cylinder firm that issued Johnson's records was the Kansas City Talking Machine Company. In an undated catalog that probably was issued in 1899, the comedian's four stock selections are listed, but this concern handled both Columbia and Edison cylinders, and its Johnson records probably were made by Columbia. The numbers are blurred, but appear to be: No. 101, Laughing Song; No. 102, Whistling Coon; No. 103, Laughing Coon, and No. 104, Laughing Girl.

The Talking Machine Company of Chicago, operated by the Babson Brothers, made its own records by Silas Leachman, a Chicago comedian and ballad singer, but also stocked

"DENVER NIGHTINGALE" — Billy Murray remade George W. Johnson's Columbia record of "The Whistling Coon," and, with S. H. Dudley (Sam H. Rous) also sang the song for Victor. It was Rous who gave Murray the nickname of "The Denver Nightingale." This photo was reprinted from the May, 1908, issue of the English edition of the Edison Phonograph Monthly.

...the week, but
...to church on Sunday, so
...that he's an honest man!"

GEO. W. JOHNSON
Laughing Song George W. Jo
BC Cylinder

IN LATER LIFE — This photo of George W. Johnson, in which he appears to be around 60, was published in the Columbia Record for August, 1907, in which his BC cylinder record of "The Laughing Song" was announced. The magazine is owned by Harold A. Laver of San Francisco, Calif.

Edison and Columbia cylinders. Its 1899 catalog included the standard four titles — are you becoming as tired of them as I am? — which probably also were Columbias in disguise; No. 459, Laughing Coon; No. 454C, Laughing Song; No. 458C, Whistling Coon; and No. 462, Whistling Girl.

II. Johnson's Edison Cylinders

We have seen already that George Johnson put in a few hours in 1891 singing for Edison cylinders. By 1898 his four titles were in the Edison catalog: No. 4004, Laughing Song; No. 4005, Laughing Coon; No. 4012, Whistling Coon, and No. 4013, Whistling Girl. They also were listed, in the foregoing order, in the 1900 catalog of the large concert cylinders, under the numbers of No. B482, No. B483, No. B485, and No. B484.

Johnson must not have been available for a while when Edison switched to the gold moulded process, for the catalog dated February 1, 1902, contains "The Laughing Song" and "The Laughing Coon" by — of all people, Cal Stewart, the "Uncle Josh" specialist. And S. H. Dudley had been engaged to render "The Whistling Coon!"

Perhaps this change was made during the period of Johnson's marriage trouble that led to the charge of murder. However that may be, by August, 1904, he was back in the Edison catalog, under the old numbers, with "The Laughing Coon" and "Laughing Song."

Dudley, however, still had "The Whistling Coon" and had added "The Whistling Girl." Perhaps he was considered a more skilled whistler than Johnson, but not a better laughier.

I should have mentioned earlier

A ROW OF DUMMIES — "... Although George Johnson sometimes worked with Len Spencer in Columbia minstrel records, he was not included in Spencer's Columbia Minstrels' display at Coney Island in 1907. The troupe, or group, consisted of models of nine famous Columbia artists. Music was provided by Sound-Magnifying Graphophones with their horns hidden behind the "dummies" white shirt fronts.

From left to right, the models were replicas of Billy Murray, Arthur Collins, Byron G. Harlan, Steve Porter, Frank C. Stanley (interlocutor), Albert Campbell, Henry Burr, J. W. Myers, and Spencer. All the representations lost their "lives" during a great fire that swept Coney Island.

— Photo reproduced from the Columbia Record for August, 1907.

that in the April 1, 1903, catalog the "Laughing Coon" was still by Stewart, but Johnson had taken over "The Laughing Song." By November, 1905, "The Laughing Coon" and "Laughing Song" by Johnson, and "The Whistling Coon," still by Dudley, had been remade with orchestral accompaniments, instead of piano. "The Whistling Girl," by Dudley, remained with piano.

These four records, by Johnson and Dudley, stayed in the catalog until Edison issued the first list of Blue Amberol cylinders in October, 1912, and quit making the fragile wax records. "The Whistling Girl" retained its piano accompaniment until the end.

However, it seems rather odd that Edison never had Johnson make four-minute records of his tried-and-true specialties. Probably it would have been hard to stretch them to run that long, without considerable elaboration.

Even the U. S. Everlasting Company, which engaged Johnson in 1908 or 1909 to make an indestructible cylinder, No. 324, of "The Laughing Song" was contented to issue it in two-minute form, with the comment: "You are compelled to join in with this record. If it does not make you sing, it will certainly make you laugh."

In 1917, long after Johnson's death, Edison issued a Diamond Disc of the Laughing Song, by Edward Meeker, assisted by the Empire Vaudeville Company (in this instance the Premier Quartet and Vess L. Ossman, "The Banjo King"). The disc which was dubbed on to Blue Amberol cylinder No. 3427, was not placed on sale until 1921, but was a good seller.

It was combined, on No. 50745, with one of Len Spencer's famous old-time sketches, "Flanagan's Night Off," enacted by Ada Jones and Steve Porter. A couple of months later Meeker and the Vaudeville Company recorded "The Whistling Coon," which was issued on Diamond Disc No. 50478 and Blue Amberol No. 3466.

Oh, here is something else I have been about to overlook! Even as early as 1894, the "Laughing Song" had been made a feature of a series of minstrel recordings.

That New Jersey catalog, from which I already have quoted, lists minstrel performances by Len Spencer, Dan W. Quinn, and Billy Williams — the latter a now forgotten comedian not to be confused with Billy Williams, the Australian singer of comic songs who came along later. The catalog said:

"These gentlemen have together produced a most decided novelty in their new minstrel records. Spencer and Quinn are well known to all users of the Phonograph. They are ably assisted by Mr. Billy Williams, the aged Negro delineator and comedian, as well as by Geo. W. Johnson in his inimitable laughing specialty. . . . They have been arranged in a series of six records. . . ."

The catalog mentions that something in the first record "strikes the audience as being a witty sally, and they applaud and laugh vociferously, Mr. Geo. Johnson's hearty laugh particularly being heard above the din and confusion."

Johnson is not mentioned as taking part in any of the other records except No. 6, which "embraces the great 'Laughing Song,' by Geo. W. Johnson." Minstrel skits that featured "The Laughing Song" were issued afterwards by Columbia and other companies.

III. Johnson's Berliners and Other Discs

Obviously, since Emile Berliner invented the lateral cut disc, he was the first maker of "flat records" to engage George W. Johnson. On November 18, 1896, the roly-poly comedian recorded "The Laughing Song," but he apparently had sung "The Whistling Coon" several months earlier, for its number was 196.

And on record No. 403 he sang and whistled "The Mocking Bird," a number ordinarily associated with another Gay Nineties whistler, John York Attlee. That brings Johnson's known repertoire to five selections. I wonder why he seems not to have recorded Septimus Winner's classic "Mocking Bird" for anyone else.

A catalog issued, apparently in 1899, by the Wonder Bell Company, which made a phonograph with two large horns, contains these same records. They are unmistakably of Berliner origin, though it isn't clear whether the Berliner name was left on the label or Wonder Bell was substituted.

The numbers are the same as the Berliners except a "1" has been placed in front; thus, "The Whistling Coon's" Wonder Bell number is No. 1196 instead of No. 196; "The Mocking Bird" No. 1403 instead of No. 403; and the "Laughing Song" No. 1404 instead of No. 404.

The Wonder Bell instrument, which must have been sold only a year or two, was invented by G. C. Conn, who operated a band instrument company at Elkhart, Indiana. He obviously made a deal with Berliner to supply the Berliner records, then the only discs available, for use with his eccentric looking machine.

When Berliner began to do business in England, both "The Whistling Coon" and "The Laughing Song" appeared in a list dated November 16, 1898. "The Mocking Bird" was there, too, but the performer's name is given as W. M. Clark, so Johnson's original presumably had been remade. Artists were changed frequently in those days.

Burt Shepard already has been mentioned as having made one or more records of Johnson's "Laughing Song" that had a remarkable vogue in the Orient. In January, 1902, The Gramophone Company issued a seven-inch version, No. 2-2030, and for some reason a new edition was offered in October as No. 2-2164.

But — and this is strange — in February, 1902, 10-inch records of "The Laughing Song" and "The Whistling Coon" were offered (under the numbers 2-2584 and 2-2585) by another laughing and singing comedian, Wilson Hallett.

(Continued on page 50)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 40)

Shepard's 10-inch "Laughing Song" didn't come along until June, 1903. It was numbered 2-2803. In December, 1905, his "Whistling Coon" (3-2361) was announced. During that same period Shepard also recorded the Laughing Song on a Pathe cylinder.

When The Gramophone Company belatedly decided to market double-faced H. M. V. records, Shepard's "Laughing Song" and "Whistling Coon" were made available on No. B468. And for many years an English Zonophone double-faced record, No. 553, of his "Laughing Song" could be had, coupled with "Tickle Me, Timothy," by Johnny Wakefield.

Before dismissing Burt Shepard I'll mention, for the sake of comprehensiveness, that in September, 1907, Victor issued the first of a series of 10-inch, single-faced records, numbered in the 52000s and consisting of selections imported from its English affiliate.

This record, No. 52000, was called "Laughs You Have Met," by Five Famous Comedians, and about six years later it was coupled in double-faced form with "Ticklish Reuben," by Cal Stewart, on No. 17232. This is the 1907 description of "Laughs You Have Met:"

"Laughter is always contagious, and if hearty and genuine is sure to spread among the listeners. Here are some examples of the art of laughing as expounded by well-known laugh-makers.

"Mr. Will Evans illustrates the ordinary every-day laugh; Fred Moule, the man who laughs at everybody's misfortune; Miss Amy Augarde, the old maid's laugh; Mr. Maurice Farkoa, the Frenchman's laugh; and finally Burt Shepard, who exemplifies the well-known 'Laughing Coon.' A very funny record and a complete novelty."

As his part of the skit, Shepard sings part of the "Laughing Song." One odd thing about the record is that, all the way through, it contains indistinct noises as though persons not taking part in the performance are talking in the background.

IV. Zonophone Victor and Columbia Discs

I do not find anything by Johnson in the Gramophone record catalog issued in December, 1899, by the National Gramophone Corporation, the company which obtained control of Emile Berliner's disc business and put him out of business the following year. National then changed the name of its record and talking machine to Zonophone.

Neither is the Negro comedian listed in a Berliner catalog issued at some time after the spring of 1900, just before the National takeover, nor in a list of Zonophone records dated November-December, 1900. He also is missing from a catalog of "Superba" nine-inch Zonophones issued May 10, 1901.

The familiar name popped up, however, in 1902-03, when George W.'s four standby tunes were issued on the nine-inch, single-faced Zonos. In order of issue they were: No. 5432, Whistling Coon; No. 5631, Laughing Song; No. 5697, Laughing Coon, and No. 5852, "Whistling Girl."

Zonophone 10-inch records were introduced at the beginning of 1904, and in March that year Johnson presented, on record No. 71, the "Laughing Song," which he must have grown heartily tired of singing. It was described as "by the originator of this song."

No other Johnson specialties were made available on the 10-inch Zonophones, but when the Company (controlled since 1903 by Victor) began issuing double-faced records in 1908, the "Laughing Song" was doubled on No. 5141 with "A Singer Sang a Song," by Eddie Morton.

Meanwhile, Eldridge R. Johnson's infant Victor Company announced in its record list for February 1, 1901, seven-inch versions of all the well-known Johnson numbers. They were No. A581, "Whistling Girls;" No. A582, "Whistling Coon;" No. A583, "Laughing Song;" and No. A584, "Laughing Coon."

A year later only the seven-inch records still were available. But by August, 1904, all four could be had both in seven and 10-inch size, with the same numbers, except that the A prefix was dropped from the 10-inch.

When the 1909 record catalog appeared the "Whistling Girl" had been cut out, and by November, 1910, the three others were gone. None was taken into the double-face catalog.

It was this abrupt procedure that made me fancy for years that Johnson must have been executed in 1910. As I have said, although I know now it wasn't so I still suspect he died in 1910. Probably the masters were beginning to show signs of wear and since there was no satisfactory substitute for Johnson to remake them it was considered best to remove them from the list.

In the November, 1910, catalog a double-faced record, No. 16821, of "The Whistling Coon" was issued, but the singing was by Billy Murray and the whistling by S. H. Dudley. On the B side Pryor's Band played "The King of Rags."

I am unable to identify the minstrel record Quentin Riggs mentions in a letter which reached me just as I was completing this article. He says:

"The last time I visited Ernie Bayly in England, on my way home from Germany, he played an old minstrel record that I wish I owned. Johnson has a bit of conversation with Sam Rous (S. H. Dudley) and they tell a couple of jokes. Then Harry MacDonough sings 'Goodbye, Dolly Gray,' assisted by the Haydn Quartet in the chorus. It was an excellent minstrel record, especially because of Johnson's appearance. As I recall it was called 'The Christy Minstrels.'"

A search through old Victor and Berliner catalogs does not reveal any record on which Macdonough sang

"Dolly Gray," which became popular in 1900. He does sing "Goodbye, Little Girl, Goodbye," on an "Olden Time Minstrel" disc, No. 4082, made in 1904, and I am wondering if Quentin has confused the songs.

The name, "Christy Minstrels," didn't come along until about 1907. It was used for records by a quartet consisting of Murray, Porter, Collins, and Harlan.

Columbia cylinders by Johnson already have been discussed. The Company began disc operations in February, 1902. Within a short time the "Negro Laughing Song" (described as "an old standard") had been issued on No. 210, and "The Whistling Coon" on No. 211, in both seven and 10-inch sizes.

In the fall of 1908 Columbia aroused Victor's angry emotions by bringing out double-faced records and dropping all single-faced listings. The "Laughing Song" was issued on No. A297, with piano accompaniment, and coupled with George J. Gaskin singing "Little Alabama Coon." The latest patent date on this version of the "Laughing Song" is February 11, 1908.

Johnson does his own announcing and pronounces "Laughing" as "Lah-fing," which seems to indicate he came from the part of Virginia around Richmond, where the broad A is common. In singing, however, he usually pronounces it as "laffing."

Some years ago I picked up another copy of the "Laughing Song," still with the No. A297 number and with the Gaskin song on the reverse side, but was astonished when I played it to find there was no announcement. Instead of the piano an orchestra accompanied, and the tempo had been quickened so that Johnson sang four verses and choruses instead of the three the piano-accompanied record had.

Obviously he had been called on to remake the classic old song in 1909, for the latest patent date, missing from the earlier record, was November 30 that year. I imagine this was the last record Johnson ever made. I would think he made it at the same time he recorded the six-inch cylinder with its longer playing time, except that the cylinder had a piano accompaniment.

I received another surprise when I picked up a copy of a double-faced record No. A292, which contained "The Whistling Coon." I thought I should hear Johnson sing it, as he had done on single-faced No. 211. But when the record started it was announced as by Billy Murray, and the announcement was by Murray himself. (The other side was "Ma Pretty Chloe From Tennessee," by the Columbia Male Quartet.)

Well, I thought, this record helps to pin-point the period of Johnson's death. Obviously his "Whistling Coon" was taken out of the Columbia catalog because the jovial comedian had died, I thought, a felon's death, and Billy Murray had been assigned to remake it. Now I know better.

(Continued on page 92)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 50)

For one thing, Columbia didn't issue any discs with announcements after 1904, so Murray could not have remade a Johnson record in 1909-1910 and told its name, his name, and the brand of record, before he began to sing. Furthermore, the speaking voice in which the announcement was made was identical in sound with that in which Billy spoke at the beginning of his Columbia records, such as "Navajo" and "Meet Me in St. Louis," made in 1903-04.

Obviously, the Johnson version, issued in 1902, had been considered unsatisfactory and was scrapped after only a couple of years. The double-faced records of "The Negro Laughing Song" and "The Whistling Coon" stayed in the catalog through November, 1914. Presumably one was still by Johnson and the other by Murray when they were discontinued, but the artists' names are not given in the catalog listing.

Another Columbia disc in which Johnson participated was single-faced No. 644, "The Laughing Song Minstrels", in which he was assisted by "Mr. Henry" (Henry Spencer) and "Mr. Spencer" (Len Spencer.) It is evident that this was a re-do of the "Laughing Song Minstrel" that New Jersey had issued in 1894.

Columbia, incidentally, had listed the "Laughing Song Minstrels" as early as 1898, No. 13004, and it was still available under that number, in gold moulded form, in 1907. I imagine it was retained until Columbia quit making wax cylinders in 1909.

One other Columbia disc remains to be mentioned. It is No. 3374, issued in May, 1906. The title is "The Merry Mail Man" and the artists are Len Spencer and his Lyceum doorman, George W. Johnson. The supplement said:

"This jocular record depicts the postman (Len Spencer) delivering letters and jests. Passing from door to door he finally encounters George W. Johnson (The Laughing Coon), whose merry laugh concludes the record."

As far as I have found, this comic sketch was not made by any other company.

And now I have just remembered hinting last month that I had made a surprising discovery about Billy Murray's first records. Billy himself told me emphatically long before his death that the first records he made after he came East with the Al G. Fields Minstrels in 1902 were the Edison records that were issued in August, 1903.

His first Victors weren't announced until December, and I had thought his initial Columbias came a little later than that. But now a California collector, Ed Foster, writes me that he has a Columbia disc record, No. 1163, of Murray singing "Tessie (You Are The Only, Only)."

Ed's statement seems to prove that Billy had forgotten the sequence of his recording dates, for "Tessie"

(which was the "official song" in 1903 of the Boston Red Sox baseball rooters, who sang it before every game in the Red Sox's World Series that year with the Pittsburgh Pirates) also was issued on cylinder No. 32099.

I have a Columbia cylinder list for February, 1903, and the highest number is 32095, "Strike Out, McCracken," by Collins and Harlan. I don't have the March supplement, but it is obvious that No. 32099 should come immediately after No. 32095 and that the disc version of the same song, by the same singer, would have been issued almost concurrently. Probably both were cataloged in March.

Consequently, it now appears that "Tessie" was Billy Murray's first record, aside from the cylinders he sang in San Francisco for Bacigalupi Brothers in 1897. And "Tessie" antedated his Edison cylinders by several months.

I long had known there was a record of "Tessie" in the old Columbia catalogs, but from 1899 to 1907 they did not give the names of artists and it was described only as a tenor solo. It never had occurred to me that my old friend, Billy, was the soloist.

Oddly enough, there appear to have been no more Columbians by him until the 1600 series was reached, though I may be mistaken about that, too. It just goes to show you that in this business of record research you never can be sure you have achieved the last word! It is, of course, possible that "Tessie" was at first sung by another tenor, and Murray was called on to remake it a year or two later.

With this digression we have reached the end of the story of George W. Johnson's life and recording career. If more information about his family life should crop up later I'll be glad to share it with HOBBIES readers. In the meantime, I am glad to do him justice after 26 years.

THE END.

Edna White's Son,

DOUGLAS CHANDLER, Dies

Douglas M. H. Chandler, well known actor and hotel executive, and son of Edna White Chandler, known professionally as Edna White and usually regarded as the foremost woman trumpet player, died of cancer October 22, 1970, in Franklin County Public Hospital, Greenfield, Mass.

Mr. Chandler, whose father was the late Myron Hall Chandler, was born July 23, 1917. A graduate of Roosevelt College, he obtained a Ph.D. degree in psychology and was an accomplished linguist who could speak fluently in 11 languages, including Chinese. He was cast in feature roles in 14 Broadway plays, including "The Hasty Heart" and "Wonderful World," with Carol Channing. He was also a radio and television actor and writer. Other activities included being an expert on radiography, driving racing cars professionally and management of hotels in Puerto Rico and Santo Domingo.

Besides his mother, he is survived by his wife, Mrs. Nora Nartowicz Chandler; a stepson, Richard Dunn of Holyoke, Mass.; and two stepdaughters, Dianne Torres, Boston, Mass., and Mrs. Patricia Heidler, Sandoval, Ill.

Shortly before his death, Mr. Chandler began a mail order business offering "Letters of Bequest." The letters, 8½ by 11¼ inches in size, are printed in black and gold on parchment, with photographic mount, and are described as: "A beautiful message to send to your son or daughter, using the words you have always held in your heart without quite knowing how to say them," and are designed as an ideal gift for any occasion during the year. Space is provided for a father or mother's signature.

Douglas Chandler's mother, whose life story was told in HOBBIES for May, June and July, 1966, is carrying on her son's mail order business.

HISTORICAL RECORDS

(Continued from page 36)

a beautiful old portrait that has become partly faded and discolored.

The following story is told of Jenny Lind when she was attending an outdoor party held on Lady Burdett-Coutts' lawn. A gentleman conversing with one of the guests remarked on the merits of Christine Nilssen, and alluded to her as the "Swedish Nightingale."

A thin, aged woman sitting nearby overheard this. She arose, and in a quivering, sweet voice said, "You are wrong, sir — you are grossly wrong. I am the 'Swedish Nightingale' — I am Jenny Lind."

To the enduring fame of the singer, moss-encrusted cylinders continually turn up, her name scratched into the wax on the rim. An oddity about the "finds" is that more often than not they are described as having been found in an old Salem attic.

I once received a long-distance call from a collector, who said he had come across an unusual record. He could hear distinctly not only the voice of Jenny Lind, but also those of Otto Goldschmidt and Signor Belletti! He read the label in an excited voice. This find proved to be "Trio," a number sung in Guy Bolton's biographical operetta of 1926, "The Nightingale."

The bonafide Nightingale has not been snared as yet, but the pulses of record-hunters quicken at the mention of it. The game is afoot!

Everybody, of course, is certain that the record exists.

This is a witness in point. I was attracted one afternoon to a junk cart at the curbstone. The peddler watched me curiously as I tried to decipher the inscription on a wax cylinder, pitted by mold, nibbled by mice. He queried wryly, "Mebbe you're looking for Jenny Lind?"

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Sam Ash

By JIM WALSH

I. Shortest Name

Our personality this month has an individual distinction: He used the shortest professional name of any recording artist about whom I have written or am likely to write. Although some record labels spell out his name as Samuel Ash, he ordinarily was known both on the stage and on records as just plain Sam Ash.

There also is about as little known concerning Ash's early life as that of any performer whom I have discussed. His death certificate shows his full name as Samuel Howard Ash and he was born in Kentucky (name of the town not given) on August 28, 1884. He died in Los Angeles, Calif., October 20, 1951.

I find that date easy to remember because of recalling that I was in Chicago in October, 1951, and bought a copy of Variety in which I found Ash's death briefly mentioned. When I showed the notice to Pearl Ann Reeder, publisher-editor of HOBBIES, I mentioned my sorrow at the tenor's passing and said I intended to write an article, some time, about him. This is that article, but it has taken me almost 20 years to begin it.

The Variety obituary notice did not do justice to Ash's achievements. It simply said:

"Samuel Howard Ash, 67, screen actor, died Oct. 20 in Hollywood.
"He appeared in a number of Broadway musicals before becoming a character player in the films. His wife and two sons survive."

There was no mention, you observe, that he had been, for several years, one of the most prolific and popular recording artists.

Returning to the death certificate, the information it contains was given by the singer's widow, Emma Sloane Ash. It reveals that his father's name was Samuel Thomas Ash, and his mother had been Martha Swan. Both parents were natives of England, which makes it appear likely they met and married there before they came to the States and settled in Kentucky.

Sam Ash had lived for three years at 715 North Sweater Ave., Los Angeles, and Russell L. Jones, M.D., gave the cause of his death as "cardiac arrest" (heart failure), induced by coronary thrombosis from which he had suffered for five years. He also during the same period had had angina pectoris, another heart condition, and emphysema. His body was cremated October 23, 1951, at the Chapel of the Pines.

CENTER OF ATTRACTION — The Aeolian-Vocalion record supplement for August, 1920, contained this informal photo of both Mr. and Mrs. Sam Ash.

This information concerning the end of Sam Ash's life is sufficiently specific. On the other hand, I know nothing about him from the time he was born in Kentucky until he is revealed, in 1915, as already married, a vaudeville and musical comedy star, and a Columbia recording artist.

It's obvious that he married young, when he was not more than 22, for Variety of February 22, 1960, recorded:

"Sam Ash, Jr., 53, son of the late Sam Ash, musical comedy and film actor, died Feb. 18 in Hollywood of a heart attack. He had been paralyzed by polio from the age of nine."

What a sad conception of a lifetime of handicaps and suffering that short death notice provides! But if Sam Ash, Jr., was 53 in February, 1960, he must have been born in 1907 or, more likely, in 1906, and since his father's birth year was 1884 a very early marriage of his parents is indicated.

II. Beginning of Recording Career

I have no idea as to what sort, or how much, formal musical training Sam Ash received before he began his professional career. When I talked with the late Lewis James, another famous recording tenor, about Ash a few days after the latter's death, "Lew" recalled that he had sung with Sam and described him as having "an untrained, but a very musical and attractive voice."

However that may be, by 1915 Ash was well-known in vaudeville and musical comedy. He was singing one of the principal roles in "Katinka,"

(Continued on page 39)

MAIL AUCTIONS

Plano Rolls and 78 Disc. 12c in stamps for list. Please state list wanted. We buy 65 & 88 note rolls if possible.

MUSICAL NOTES

12 Grafton Street
Greenlawn, N.Y. 11740

myp

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

(Continued from page 37)

a successful operetta with words by Otto Hauerbach and music by the distinguished Czechoslovakian composer, Rudolf Friml, who is still at it, though past 90, and who, incidentally, has numbered among his several wives Elsie Lawson, a beautiful girl from my former home town of Marion, Va.

Daniel Blum's large volume, "A Pictorial History of the American Theatre," contains a photo of Ash and another actor, Franklyn Ardell, with the leading lady, May Thompson, as one of the scenes in "Katinka."

It was at this period of his career, apparently, that Sam Ash, then a slender, good looking young man of 31, first made records, unless he previously had recorded under an assumed name. The earliest Ash record I have been able to trace is a Columbia, announced in April, 1915.

No detailed comment is given concerning the records in that month's supplement. There is a statement, however, that "A special feature of the list is that several excellent new singers are introduced."

The new tenor was represented by two selections. On No. A1697, he sang "Goodbye, Virginia," assisted by a quartet, presumably the Peerless, which was heard on the other side in the then raging hit, "I Didn't Raise My Boy to be a Soldier." The disc was a big seller, undoubtedly because of the Peerless side.

On another record, No. A1701, Ash insisted, "I'm Not Ashamed of You, Molly," the sort of song that music publishers call a "dog"—one that attracts no notice and doesn't sell. Turning the record over you found another unsuccessful number, "Sweetheart of Mine," by the Columbia Stellar Quartet.

Although the fledgling Columbia artist had not received a preliminary "send-off," by the time the June, 1915, record catalog appeared he had three more songs—"Virginia Lee," "My Own Venetian Rose," and "Moonlight On the Rhine," to his credit. And the catalog editor gave him a big plug:

"The moment Mr. Sam Ash demonstrated in the Columbia Laboratories that he possessed rare ability to sing popular music, not only in a popular but thoroughly masterly way, the Columbia Graphophone Company made an exclusive contract with him.

"Mr. Ash sings songs of sentiment with a complete grasp of every musical value and a beautifully clear natural voice. He has made a sudden and meteoric career before the best vaudeville footlights in the country, and is rapidly becoming recognized as a headliner in his profession."

Ash's Columbia association began in the spring of 1915. It continued, with scores of records to his credit, until his last for that company was issued almost exactly six years later. It was No. A3374, "Over the Hill" and "I Found a Rose in the Devil's Garden." By that time Columbia, which had plunged into unwise expansion activities, was suffering financially from the 1920-21 depression, and dropping some of its more expensive artists.

III. Ash as a Free-Lance Singer

There is no need of discussing at length the many hundreds of records made by Sam Ash. He was simply, for the most part, a singer of popular ballads, and seldom undertook humor, although he did record, "I've Been Floating Down the Old Green River," and "Huckleberry Finn" for Columbia. He was seldom assigned to sing duets with other singers, but he did a few with two Columbia sopranos—Edith Chapman and Louise McMahon.

And I especially want to mention that he and my dear friend, Elida Morris, sang "Hello, Frisco!" from "The Follies of 1915" on Columbia record No. A1801. I am glad to say that Elida, who observed her 84th birthday last November 12, is still active, alert, and singing each Sunday in a church in Santa Barbara, Calif.

Sam Ash's exclusive Columbia contract probably was for two years. I have not found him making records other than Columbia until 1917, when he began to sing for almost every well-known company from then until 1922.

His name was never in the Victor catalog, and if he made Victor tests they were not issued. Neither did he work for Brunswick, which began making lateral-cut records in 1919. But he had a try at just about every other label that amounted to anything.

It is specially noteworthy that Ash made more of the 5½-inch, single-faced Little Wonder records sold for 10 cents in a dime store than any one else, with the possible exception of Henry Burr. These fragile discs were recorded by Columbia for a company headed by Henry Watterson, the New York music publisher.

"HONEYDEW" — Dorothy Follis and Sam Ash.

Some time after Little Wonders were discontinued around 1921, Watterson started the Cameo Record Com-

(Continued on page 49)

PATHE STAR — In 1920 the Standard Phonograph Company of Chicago, which sold Pathe products by mail, issued an elaborate catalog. On page 7 were photos of star Pathe recording artists, including Sam Ash.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 39)

pany, which made double-faced, 10-inch records that sold for 35 cents. I can't be positive, but I believe Ash had stopped recording before the first Cameos were announced in 1923. No artists' names were given on Little Wonder records, but if you have one marked "tenor solo" and can't recognize the voice as Burr's the singer is probably Sam Ash!

A quick check of my own collection reveals lateral-cut recordings of Sam Ash's voice on the following brands, and there probably are others I didn't catch: Columbia, Cleartone, Emerson, Gennett, Grey Gull (made in 1921 when Grey Gull was competing in the standard priced record field instead of turning out the cheap discs it offered during most of the 1920's), Little Wonder, Okeh, Silvertone (made by Columbia), and Supertone (another Sears, Roebuck record, but probably from Gennett masters).

Ash's song on my one Supertone by him is "I'm Falling in Love With the Girl of My Dreams." The words are credited to "Ash" and the music to "Cormack," so I take it that Sam himself wrote the lyrics and Rennie Cormack composed the music.

My hill-and-dale records by Ash include Aeolian-Vocalion, Brunswick of Canada, Edison, Okeh, Pathe, and Rishell. The Brunswick and Rishell records, however, are Rex discs under a different label. I don't have any Lyric records sung by the tenor, but I think his name appeared on them.

Recently, Frank Johnson of Chicago sent me a taped copy of the Lyric hill-and-dale record of "There's a Long, Long Trail," sung by "James Tree," a tenor he couldn't identify. After several playings I decided that Tree was really Sam Ash. With reasoning worthy, perhaps, of Sherlock Holmes, I called Mr. Johnson's attention to the fact that Ash is a variety of Tree, and said I imagined somebody with a sense of humor had decided to give him Tree for a fictitious last name.

Aside from Columbia, Ash probably recorded more for Aeolian-Vocalion, Okeh, and Emerson than for any other companies. In 1947 Lou Stevens, a young collector who knew the tenor in Hollywood, wrote me Sam had said he considered that the Okeh Company got the best results of any lateral-cut record manufacturer he had worked for.

Sam Ash made only one Edison Diamond Disc, which was not dubbed onto the Blue Amberol cylinders. In fact, he appears to have made no cylinders—at least not under his own name. His one Edison solo was issued in May, 1921, on No. 50721, and had for its companion, a baritone version by Thomas Chalmers of "Wondering." Four months earlier he had sung the same song for Vocalion.

This is the description Edison gave of the Ash offering, on which his voice sounds slightly lower-pitched and with more fullness and depth than on the needle-cuts:

"It is appropriate that the first Re-Creation bearing the name of the well-known tenor, Sam Ash, should be that of a song from the musical comedy, 'Poor Little Ritz Girl,' for he is a musical comedy star. . . Mr. Ash sings, 'When I Found You,' the principal number from the 'Poor Little Ritz Girl.'"

"It is a song with an appealing lyric and an ingratiating melody, offering Mr. Ash a fine opportunity to display his delightfully fresh voice. The pleasure we get from this Re-Creation is intensified by the fine tone of the orchestra in their playing of the interlude."

"The music is the composition of Sig-mund Romberg, long known as the possessor of unusual melodic gifts. The words are by Alex Gerber."

It seems odd in view of Ash's widespread popularity, that Edison did not engage him for more records, but perhaps Mr. Edison, whose word was law, just didn't like Ash's voice. And this probably is a good place to mention that the Edison "fan magazine," Along Broadway, for February, 1921, showed a photo of Ash with Dorothy Follis, as they appeared in the operetta, "Honeydew," for which the still-living great Russian violinist, Efrem Zimbalist, wrote the music. Zimbalist was the husband of the famous opera soprano, Alma Gluck, and the father of the present-day novelist, Marcia Davenport.

One more record catalog description clamors to be reprinted here, for the sake of its amusing misprint of a word. In the Gennett catalog for 1923 there is a photo of Ash, with the following commentary:

"Sam Ash has the envious faculty of pleasing everybody. The possessor of a clear, rich and smooth tenor voice, he sings in a manner truly inspirational to the hearer who finds himself humming or whistling the songs as soon as the record is finished. His past recordings are always in big demand so look for his latest Gennett releases."

To me that use of "envious," which means a feeling of envy, in the place of "enviable," is priceless.

IV. Who Was Will C. Robbins?

One question that has intrigued me a great deal is: "Who was Will C. Robbins?" Robbins' name began to appear in the Columbia record lists for 1915, mostly as a duet partner of Ada Jones, and he sounds a great deal like three other tenors who also sang for Columbia. His voice resembles those of Billy Watkins, M. J. O'Connell and Sam Ash. I often have wondered if Ash, who ordinarily did not go in for assumed names, may have been Will Robbins.

Quentin Riggs and I once made a series of comparative tests, and it seemed to us that Robbins sounded more like Billy Watkins, a vaudeville singer who died 20-odd years ago, than he did like Ash or O'Connell. We considered the possibility that Will C. Robbins was his real name and Watkins a stage one.

Worthy of attention, too, was the fact that both Robbins and Watkins sang duets with Miss Jones, and that the name of Watkins ceased to be used just before that of Robbins came into the monthly Columbia lists. In other words, as Robbins came in, Watkins went out.

INFORMAL SNAPSHOT — A picture of Sam Ash taken from the Aeolian-Vocalion record supplement of February, 1920.

I still think Watkins the more likely choice—assuming that Robbins was anybody but Will C. Robbins himself. Sam Ash did no duet work under his own name with Miss Jones, but the Ash records and those by Robbins began appearing almost simultaneously and for a time usually were in the same supplements.

As we have seen, the number of Ash's first record was A1697. That of Robbins' first duet with Ada Jones, "He'd Keep on Saying Goodnight," was A1680. And as long as the name of Robbins continues to appear, his numbers run right along with Ash's. That, considering the similarity of the voices, is a suspicious circumstance.

As for "Mike" O'Connell, he didn't begin making records until 1916, when the name of Robbins had dropped out. So he's the least likely possibility of the three.

There are one or two other factors to be considered, however. Will C. Robbins made an Indestructible two-minute cylinder, No. 811, "If You Cared for Me," which was issued in 1908. Sam Ash was then only 24. And on file at the Edison National Monument in West Orange, N.J., are some scrawled comments by Thomas A. Edison himself, who wrote on February 2, 1915, after listening to some test records by Will Robbins:

"The 2nd record is a great improvement, but he is not good enough for us. He appears unable to interpret. He is like a school boy reciting 'The Boy Stood on the Burning Deck.' in usual monotonous drone without accent. Voice is pretty good but his interpretation is dull and monotonous."

"Tell him to put some action in his singing, not one continuous, monotonous intonation, without change of volume. He could be a good singer when he can put snap in."

It should be kept in mind, in considering this criticism, that Mr. Edison was almost totally deaf and probably didn't hear "Robbins" the way the tenor sounded to listeners with normal ears. At any rate, since he is listed as Will Robbins on the Edison test sheet, maybe there's a good possibility, after all, that he was singing under his own name and was neither Watkins, O'Connell, nor Ash. Some of these days I'm going to get ambitious and write Columbia to ask if their files show who Will C. Robbins actually was. If I get that information I'll pass it along.

(Continued on next page)

VETERAN ACTOR — Sam Ash sent this autographed photo to Jim Walsh in 1947. At that time Ash was playing character roles in Hollywood films.

V. In the Movies

I can't pinpoint the exact date at which Sam Ash stopped making records, but it seems to have been in 1922 or '23. Since he was a popular artist, and was singing for many companies, it's likely that the decision to quit was made by Ash himself, rather than by a simultaneous decision on the part of all the manufacturers that they didn't need him any longer.

My guess is that he had decided to give up recording and stage appearances and go to Hollywood to try his luck in the movies. However, in an old scrapbook that I so far haven't been able to turn up, I have an advertising picture taken of him in 1924 or '25, in which his address, I believe, is given as Elmhurst, L. I., N. Y. He is shown sitting in a barber's chair and smoking a cigar, the merits of which he is endorsing. If my recollection is correct, this indicates that he didn't go to California immediately after he stopped making records.

Eventually, however, he did go, and remained there until his death. I can't find the letter Lou Stevens wrote me about him, but it seems to me Lou said his friend Sam had played character roles in hundreds of movies, though perhaps the word was "scores" instead of "hundreds."

Lou, from whom I haven't heard in more than 20 years, told Ash I admired him and would like to have an autographed photo. The result was that he sent me a picture, together with a note, dated October 30, 1947, which I quote, with spelling and punctuation as in the original:

"Dear Mr. Walsh. At the request of Mr. Lou Stevens I am sending you under separate cover a photo of myself. I understand you have played some of my records on your 'Wax Works', thanks very much. If and when you see some of my old recording pals say 'Hello' for me. Yours very truly, Sam Ash. 753 1/2 North, Hayworth Ave., Hollywood 46, Calif."

Besides acting in films, Sam also was operating Ash Woodcraft, a firm that manufactured tackle boxes and line dryers. His letter was written on the Company's stationery. The business was at 8524 Beverly Boulevard, Hollywood, and the photo showed the tenor and veteran character actor as a rather grizzled-looking, middle-aged man with a mustache.

I never would have recognized it as that of the young singer whose picture had appeared in record supplements a quarter of a century before. Four years later he was dead, at the age of 67.

Sam Ash made many fine popular song discs during the seven years in which he faced the recording horn, and he deserves to be remembered affectionately for the pleasure his singing has given and still affords.

JIM WALSH'S "NIPPER" DIES — DEATH OF "TINY TIM" JENKINS

The multitude of cat lovers among HOBBIES readers will be sorry to learn that Jim Walsh's oldest cat, "Little Nipper," whose Christmas and New Year's greetings have been a year-end feature of the magazine since 1959, died suddenly, January 9, at the age of thirteen.

Nipper had seemed in good health until ten days before his death when he became unable to eat and the Cooper Veterinary Hospital discovered he had cancer of the stomach. Previously, four other of Jim's cats — Gray, Percy, Roger and Petey — had died of the same ailment, which kills more cats past the age of 10 than any other disease. By a coincidence, his death occurred on the 93rd birthday of his staunch friend, Kenly M. Smith, widely known as "Mr. Vinton," who died last May 26.

We are also sorry to report the death, from pneumonia, of "Tiny Tim," cat belonging to Mr. and Mrs. Walter Jenkins of Cedar Crest Farm, Rose Hill, Va. He succumbed to pneumonia last December. A picture of Tim, who was named for the famous singing entertainer, "Tiny Tim," appeared in HOBBIES in October, 1969, as an illustration of an article about his namesake. Tiny Tim had grown up to be a huge strong cat with luxuriant long hair, and his death came as a shock to his bereaved owners.

As soon as Jim is able he will write "A Last Loving Tribute to Little Nipper" for publication in HOBBIES.

HISTORICAL RECORDS

(Continued from page 36)

be ambiguous. Under "Baritone" it has: "If the voice approaches the bass in quality or compass, it is often termed a bass-baritone." And under "Bass" the explanation is practically repeated, only the other way around: "... the variety slightly higher than normal is the bass-baritone."

According to these definitions, the term can be applied equally to a high bass or low baritone — voices which in Italy are labeled Basso cantante and Baritono drammatico. Capable basses have been known to take over, on occasion, baritone parts and vice versa, but in the transition the identity of each voice invariably remains intact.

Unhappy with the information, I sought the answer in the recordings of Michael Bohnen, one of the best known exponents of bass-baritone singing. I listened carefully to his LP. As the selections rolled by, it became increasingly apparent that his was, by nature, a limited basso, which he resourcefully lengthened at both ends to well over two octaves. On the LP, he reaches from second E below middle C (in "Zauberfloete") to G above the same note (in "Hamlet") — a truly enviable extension for any low male voice to encompass.

Agreed, the worked-out notes lack power and/or freedom, as the case may be, but considering they are there, such as they are, thanks to the amazing know-how of their intelligent possessor, it becomes a rare experience to hear how skillfully they are produced.

Practically every scanty voice has latent possibilities at the extremities, but it takes much understanding and perseverance to materialize them. I remember reading with awe that Malibran added height to her short contralto voice with the aid of papa Garcia, but I never expected to come across a similar feat more recently accomplished.

Oh, dear—I've just noticed there is no room left for a biographic sketch. But then, Bohnen's unusual voice is too fascinating a subject to be disregarded in favor of a few notes about his career, which can be postponed until some time in the future.

—o—

The religions of the world are the ejaculations of a few imaginative men. —Emerson

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Assisting Artists in Edison Cylinders

Part 1

By JIM WALSH

I. Unheralded Helpers

In August, 1969, this department carried an article called "Artists Who Sang in the Choruses of Edison Amberol Cylinders." Since then it has occurred to me that it would be equally interesting to publish a list of performers who gave assistance to the "name" performer on Edison records, usually without their own names being included in the preliminary "announcements."

Such incidental aid was not uncommon in the early days of recording, not only on Edison cylinders but on other makes of records as well. For instance, in September, 1913, Victor issued, on No. 17377, a record of Arthur Collins singing "That Baseball Rag."

Near the end there is a snatch of sound supposed to be coming from a ball park, and the voice of Collins' partner, Byron G. Harlan, can be heard addressing an imaginary player: "Hey, you're running like an ice wagon!" There is no mention on the label of Harlan's helping his buddy.

It often happened that some such assistance was needed, and, presumably, whatever other artists happened to be in the studio when the recording was being made were asked to lend their hands, or, rather, their voices. To me it is fascinating to track down these assisting performers on the old two-minute Edison Standard, or Gold-Moulded, cylinders, and, to a less extent, on the four-minute Amberols. I think the result of my investigation is worth preserving.

The information to be given here is not represented as all-inclusive. Most of it is taken from files of The New Phonogram, but some has been determined by listening to the records themselves. Undoubtedly, there are many other cylinders in which the principal artists have the benefit of friendly assistance, but which I have not heard and whose unheralded helpers are not mentioned in published descriptions of the records.

Generally speaking, the cylinders reviewed here were issued from the beginning of the Gold Moulded process in February, 1902, to the adoption of the "unbreakable" four-minute Blue Amberol in October, 1912. Those with numbers from 8000 upward are two-minute; those below 8000, with one or two exceptions, four-minute Amberol. Blue Amberols are not included because there are too many of them to be easily considered, but many of the Amberols to be discussed here were later reissued in Blue Amberol form.

Since the wax cylinders frequently were remade, there is a possibility that some of those I list were done over afterwards with different assisting artists than those to be mentioned.

For convenient reference, I have arranged the different subdivisions of this article alphabetically, either by the name of the assisting artist or by a descriptive title such as "Christmas Records." But before the subject headings begin, suppose we consider the assistance rendered to his fellow artists by that undisputed king of helpful intervention, Edward Meeker.

II. The Helpful Mr. Meeker

Ed Meeker lived all his life in an "Edison environment." He was born in 1874 in Orange, N. J., the city in which the Edison manufacturing works were situated, and died in nearby Newark in 1937. By the time the Gold Moulded cylinders were well established, he had become known as the man who made the announcements at the beginning of records. But although he was an excellent

(Continued on next page)

Fine European Collection OPERA VOCAL SCORES

SELL ALL OR PART

JACOB SCHIFFMAN

309 Patton Dr., Silver Springs Md. app

MAIL AUCTIONS

Piano Rolls and 78 Disc. 12c in stamps for list. Please state list wanted. We buy 65 & 88 note rolls if possible.

MUSICAL NOTES

12 Grafton Street
Greenlawn, N.Y. 11740

myp

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

tzc

comedian, it was not until March, 1906, that his first solo record, No. 9234, "What's the Use of Knocking (When a Man Is Down)?" appeared.

From that time until Edison went out of the phonograph business in the autumn of 1929, Meeker was associated in some capacity with the firm's recording activities. During this period he made only one record for any other company, Victor No. 16291, a comic song called "Broke," which came out in 1909. Perhaps his most popular records were "Clancy's Wooden Wedding," and "Steamboat Bill," which he made both on cylinders and the Diamond Discs.

Probably because he announced nearly all the Edison cylinders until the spoken introductions were done away with late in 1908 and was consequently always on hand for a recording date, Meeker had hardly any rival as an unbilled assistant to other performers. As an example, he did the talking in the Gold Moulded version of No. 597, "Virginia Skeddaddle" (earlier there had been a brown wax offering), by the Edison Symphony Orchestra. (What a composition for a "symphony orchestra" to play!)

Charles D'Almaine, the violinist who hung up the fiddle and bow in 1914 to become a chiropractor in Newark, was credited with making No. 8146, "Down at Finnegan's Jam-boree." But he merely played its dance tunes.

The Irish dialect talking was done by Meeker. When cylinders were made to provide music for dancing lancers and quadrilles, he called the figures. These included Nos. 8247 to 8251, "U. S. Army Lancers"; Nos. 265 to 267, "Superba Lancers," and

Nos. 268 to 270, "The Petunia Quadrille."

Meeker gave Len Spencer help in No. 9119, "The Musical Yankee," sang with a German accent in No. 9354, "Old Heidelberg," by the Edison Concert Band, and took the part of "the man with a laugh like a goat," in No. 9864, Steve Porter's comic sketch, "The Laughing Spectator."

Ed Meeker was helpful also to Porter in No. 9970, "Pat O'Brien's Automobile" and was one of a group assisting the vaudeville comedienne, Stella Tobin, in No. 9758, "Will He Answer 'Goo Goo?'" The other helpers sound like the Edison Male Quartet.

Another record in which Meeker worked unbilled with Porter was Amberol No. 4, "Flannagan and the Reillys at a Baseball Game," in which he seems to have taken the part not only of the umpire but also of a spectator who objected to Mrs. Reilly's stream of inane questions. He impersonated a footloose fiddler in No. 1110, "Two Rubes and the Tramp Musician," by Porter and Harlan, and was "the hot corn man" in No. 518, "Bear's Oil," by Billy Golden and Joe Hughes.

One of Meeker's outstanding anonymous performances was in Amberol No. 196, "The Baseball Girl," by the comedienne, Ray Cox, in which he did a take-off on "Silk O'Loughlin, a major league baseball umpire who was famous for the way he bellowed: "Ball tuh!" for "ball two."

"'Ball tuh?' The Baseball Girl exclaims in disgust. "What sort of language is that? He doesn't care what he does to the king's English, does he?"

In Amberol No. 401, "Rastus, Take Me Back," Meeker carries on a conversation with Marie Dressler, who is pretending to be drunk, and in No. 1049, when Murry K. Hill is telling a purportedly sad story about 14 children who were "Seated Round an Oil Stove," he is called on to exclaim "Fourteen!" on several occasions.

Going back a moment to the "U. S. Army Lancers" records already mentioned, No. 8248 contains whistling by "Mr. Nightingale," who almost certainly would have been Joe Belmont. Number 8249 has a "rube monolog" by "Squire Hawkins," probably Harlan, and No. 8250 a singing and whistling duet by "Nightingale and Hightops." Most likely they were Harlan and Belmont, who frequently worked together around 1902-03. Later these records were reissued without the incidental musical features.)

I have no doubt there are many other records in which Edward Meeker took a helpful, if unchronicled, part. This would apply to Diamond Disc and Blue Amberols as well as the wax cylinders. In "Cohen On His Honeymoon," for example, he asks John F. Burkhardt, the pianist, to play "She May Have Seen Better Days," and laughs frequently at Monroe Silver's humorous remarks.

In at least two records, "When My Baby Smiles At Me," by Rachel Grant and Billy Murray and "I Want a Jazzy Kiss," by Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan, Meeker does an imitation of Harry Raderman's once famous "laughing trombone." He also frequently imitated animals in other records.

But here is a brow-wrinkler: who worked with Meeker in record No. 9984, "I'm a Yiddish Cowboy," which was issued in November, 1908, and included "a cowboy chorus and cowboy and Indian yells?" The Edison Male Quartet by that time had signed up exclusively with Victor, the Premier Quartet hadn't been organized, and the Knickerbocker Quartet didn't go in much for comedy.

(Continued next page) 2

ORGANS—MELODEONS

REED ORGANS, melodeons, bought, sold, repaired. Reeds tuned, revoiced replacements. — C. H. Gunzinger, Box 276, Williamsville, VT. 05362. s6675

SHEET MUSIC

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850. Catalog 25c. — Fore's 3151 High, Denver, Colorado 80205. o12678

SHEET MUSIC, choose from thousands of popular, late 1800's to date. We also buy. — McNeill, 1117 South Taylor Ave., Oak Park, Ill. 60304. ie3863

OLD popular sheet music, 250,000 songs in A-Z order. — Robert Greenlaw, 307 N. Rampart, Room 412, Los Angeles, Calif. 90026. d126121

OVER 5,000 different sheets of music. Era of 1895-1920. All in Mint Condition. Send $1.00 for 70 page catalogue, credited on 1st order. — L. Kopernik, 345 S. 8th Ave., LeGrange, Ill. 60525. ia122112

FOR SALE. Old sheet music, 25c for list. Also buy music, large or small lots. — Beverly Hamer, 60 Davis Road, Merrimack, N.H. 03054. my3023

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS before 1900 wanted. Strings, brass, clarinets, flutes, drums, mechanical, novelties. — William Kugler, 1124 Dionne, St. Paul, Minn. 55113. my68801

PHONOGRAPHS

OLD PHONOGRAPH catalogs! Beautifully illustrated reprints. For example, 1899 Talking Machine Catalog, 64 pages, only $2.95 postpaid. Free illustrated list available. — Allen Koenigsberg, 1532 Ocean Ave., Brooklyn, N.Y. 11230. ap6829

300 OLD TIME Columbia steel needles, $2.00. 500 needles, $3.00 postpaid. — Norris Dullum, Collar, N. Dak. 58018. ie3652

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8.

(Except for change of address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rates.)

All advertisers who submit copy for the first time are definitely requested to furnish therewith banking or other satisfactory references.

EDWARD WARREN
MEEKER
(1874-1937)
COMEDIAN
AND ANNOUNCER ON EDISON CYLINDER
RECORDS

CHAMPION HELPER — Edward Meeker, Edison staff announcer and comedian, assisted more fellow recording artists than any other performer.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Assisting Artists in Edison Cylinders

PART II

By JIM WALSH

III. These Also Assisted

ACCORDION INTERLUDES AND ACCOMPANIMENTS. Since John J. Kimmel (whose name Edison misspelled as Kimbble) was the only accordion player making cylinders in 1907, he almost certainly played the musical interlude in Steve Porter's comic Irish specialty, "Thim Were the Happy Days," issued in January, 1908.

All Kimmel's accordion solos for Edison cylinders are recorded with piano accompaniment. The pianist isn't named, but must have been Kimmel's inseparable associate, Joe Linder, who worked with him from the beginning until virtually the close of his recording career.

FRANK P. BANTA. This pianist, who died November 30, 1903, was the father of the better known Frank E. Banta, a member of the Eight Famous Victor Artists. The younger Banta died in 1969. The Edison Phonograph Monthly for January, 1904, said the elder Banta had played the accompaniments for more than half the cylinders then in the Edison catalog.

GEORGE H. BEMUS. This little known singer took the bass in "When It's Moonlight on the Prairie," which Byron G. Harlan sang on No. 9850 with the assistance of an otherwise unidentified male quartet. Mr. Bemus also sang bass in Amberol No. 3, "Sextet From 'Lucia.'"

BIRD IMITATIONS. Joe Belmont, already mentioned for his work in the lancers dance series, whistled bird imitations in several records. These included No. 8643, "Dance of the Song Birds," by the Edison Symphony Orchestra; No. 9170, "The Choristers," Edison Concert Band, and No. 9186, "Robin Redbreast," soprano solo by Marie Narelle.

DAISY BOULAIS. A few months ago I speculated on the possibility that this mysterious soprano, who never had a record to herself but worked mostly with Byron G. Harlan and Frank G. Stanley, might have been Mrs. Stanley. Since I knew Mrs. Harlan, I can say without hesitation that Miss Boulais' previously reproduced photograph does not resemble her. She probably was not Mrs. Stanley, either, but the theory that she could have been is intriguing.

For the Gold Moulded cylinder list in 1903 Harlan warbled on No. 8409, "In the Valley Where the Bluebirds Sing." The catalog description mentioned "an echo effect sung by a soprano voice." A few years later someone asked the New Phonogram who sang soprano in that record and was told "Miss Daisy Boulais."

Our baffling lady friend also sang in No. 9061, "Violette," and No. 8736, "Two Rubes at the Vaudeville" with Harlan and Stanley. She gave a beautiful rendition of part of "Blue Bell" in the "rube" act. Miss Boulais also helped Harlan in No. 9004, "Down in Blossom Row," which is likewise represented to contain voices of a group of children.

She and Harry Anthony remade two duets that previously had been sung by "Miss Chappel" (Edith Chapman) and Harry Anthony. They were No. 8395, "Life's Dream is O'er," and No. 8601, "Far Away," which presents a puzzle.

The Chappel Stricklett version of "Far Away" was issued in February, 1904. By February, 1906, it had been remade by Boulais and Anthony, and by July that year it was cut out of the catalog. The puzzle: Why go to the trouble and expense of doing over a record that was such a slow seller it was discontinued a few months after being remade?

CHILDREN'S VOICES. Byron G. Harlan, as I have said, sang a record of "Down in Blossom Row," in which he purportedly was helped by a group of children. "H. B. L." of Harrodsburg, Ky., asked the New Phonogram who the youngsters were and was told "a children's group that sings in church choirs."

Another inquirer was informed that Daisy Boulais took the soprano part. Still another Harlan record with a "chorus of children" was No. 8919, "I've Got My Fingers Crossed (You Can't Touch Me)," which he recorded in 1905. This song was written by Joe Maxwell, a tenor with a walrus mustache, who himself became an Edison recording artist a few years later.

Speculation as to the identity of the children no doubt is useless, but I wonder if Harlan used the same group of tots when he made Victor and Columbia records of "I've Got My Fingers Crossed." Personally, I have a lurking doubt that children actually were involved, and suspect the assistants may have been sopranos who sang in a "kiddish" way. Children's voices were hard to record.

See also the entry under "June Rossmore and Stella Tobin" for other "child voice" cylinders.)

CHRISTMAS RECORDS. In De-

(Continued on next page)

MAIL AUCTIONS

Piano Rolls and 78 Disc. 12c in stamps for list. Please state list wanted. We buy 65 & 88 note rolls if possible.

MUSICAL NOTES

12 Grafton Street
Greenlawn, N.Y. 11740

myp

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

tfr

ALL OF THESE MODELS WILL PLAY THE NEW BLUE AMBEROL RECORDS JUST AS WELL AS OUR AMBEROLA MODELS. SEE THE OTHER SIDE OF THIS PAGE FOR PARTICULARS

TRIUMPH
Model A

STANDARD
Model A

HOME
Model A and B

GEM
Model A

TRIUMPH
Model B

STANDARD
Model B

HOME
Model C and D

GEM
Model B and C

TRIUMPH
Model C and D

STANDARD
Model C and D

HOME
Model E, F and G

GEM
Model D and E

TRIUMPH
Model E, F and G

STANDARD
Model E, F and G

FIRESIDE
Model A

FIRESIDE
Model B

BALMORAL
Model M and E

IDELIA
Model B1

IDELIA
Model D1

OPERA

CYLINDER PHONOGRAPHS — These are the Edison instruments in vogue during the period when two-minute Standard and four-minute Amberol cylinders were played in millions of homes. Edison issued this circular in 1926 when the Company was offering attachments to equip older model phonographs to play Blue Amberol records.

(Continued on page 40)

ASSISTING ARTISTS IN EDISON CYLINDERS

(Continued from page 38)

cember, 1907, Edison issued a rather ambitious cylinder, No. 9703, "Ring Out the Bells for Christmas," by the Edison Concert Band, in which two distinguished concert artists, Reed Miller and Reinald Werrenrath, sang a Christmas carol without being credited on the record with their help.

This happened too in December, 1910, when the Concert Band played "The Angels' Song" and was assisted by James F. Harrison and a mixed chorus, whose other members probably were Harrison's associates in the Edison Mixed Quartet—Florence Hinkle, soprano, Margaret Keyes, contralto, and Harry Anthony, tenor.

Similar combinations of the Concert Band and the Mixed Quartet were offered in December, 1909, on Standard No. 10257, "While Shepherds Watched," and Amberol No. 305, "Angels From the Realms of Glory."

This has nothing to do with Christmas, but on Amberol No. 594, Anthony was helped to sing "Girl of My Dreams" (not the later song of the same name associated with Gene Austin) by a chorus, which probably included the other members of the Mixed Quartet. In his Amberol No. 82, "The Song That Reached My Heart," he was assisted by Misses Hinkle and Keyes.

CORNET VIRTUOSOS. The combination of xylophone and cornet certainly sounds unusual, but in Gold Moulded record No. 8931, "Come Take a Trip In My Airship Medley," John Hazel, one of Edison's star band and orchestra virtuoso, plays variations on the melody which Albert Benzler hammers on the xylophone. A cornet duet is featured in Amberol cylinder No. 443, "Foxy Kid." The featured instrumentalists are M. Schlossberg and W. N. Bar-tow of the Edison Concert Band.

"DARKIES' DREAM." In the pioneer phonograph days, the descriptive specialty by this name was almost as popular a band record as "The Jolly Coppersmith." Edison issued, in January, 1905, a remake of its old brown wax version, with incidental talking by Billy Murray and Harry West.

The later is almost as much a mystery as Daisy Boulaïs, for he made only one Edison solo record, No. 8445, "I Could Love You in a Steam-Heat Flat." I'm sorry it never occurred to me when Billy was alive to ask him what he remembered of West. Near the beginning, one of the speakers addresses Frank R. Seltzer, who was then the director of the Edison Military Band, by saying: "Cut 'er loose, Frank!"

In passing, Frederick W. Hager was the director of the Edison Concert Band, and conducted when the band played his own popular Indian composition, "Laughing Water." Hager also directed the Zonophone house bands and orchestras, including the so-called "Victor Herbert's Band." Eugene A. Jaudas was the conductor of the Edison Symphony Orchestra, which as a rule played anything but symphonic music.

IV. A Helpful Foursome

EDISON MALE QUARTET. John Bieling, Harry Macdonough, S. H. Dudley, and William F. Hooley became legends in their lifetime because of their singing in the Edison Male Quartet, which was known even better as the Haydn or Hayden. Until they left Edison, late in 1908, to record exclusively for Victor, they were second only to Ed Meeker in the amount of incidental assistance they gave other artists.

The English-born tenor, Edward Barrow, made three two-minute cylinders. In one, "Lorna" (No. 9147) he was helped out by the quartet, which also sang with Byron G. Harlan in No. 9562, "School Days."

Billy Murray probably received more Edison Quartet assistance than any other singer. Murray records in which the quartet participated include No. 9204, "Lazy Moon;" No. 9474, "Alice, Where Art Thou Going?;" No. 9496, "Waiting for a Certain Girl;" No. 9547, "San Antonio;" No. 9938, "Starlight Maid;" No. 9968, "Pride of the Prairie;" and No. 10022, "My Rosy Rambler," besides Amberol No. 130, "I'm Awfully Strong for You." The foursome also did a great deal of singing with Murray on Victor discs before the American Quartet in which he starred was organized.

Another tenor, Frederic H. Potter, was supported by the Edison Quartet in No. 9622, "Red Wing," and No. 9882, "Topeka." Both the ensemble and Edward Meeker seem to have helped Stella Tobin give a properly coquettish touch to "Will He Answer 'Goo-Goo?'" The boys sang with Edward M. Favor in No. 9831, "The Girl Who Threw Me Down," and with Allen Waterous in No. 9835, "Summertime." I have little doubt there were other examples of quartet assistance that have not caught my eyes or ears.

BYRON G. HARLAN. This genial ballad singer-comedian gave unheralded aid to Len Spencer and Gilbert Girard when they recorded two-minute cylinder No. 9779, "Auction Sale of a Stranded Circus," which was issued in March, 1908. Using his squeaky "Cyrus Pippin" "rube" voice, Harlan pretended to buy the animals traveling with the Circus, so he could present them to the town for a "zoo-a-mo-logical park."

V. Others Who Helped

PARKE HUNTER, a versatile musician, was not only a brilliant ban-joist but also played many other instruments. He assisted Len Spencer in several comic sketches, playing the banjo, violin, or something else, while Spencer did the talking. These included No. 8202, "The Arkansas Traveler" (Eugene A. Jaudas probably played the fiddle in Spencer's four-minute record, No. 181, of the same skit), and No. 8361, "Making the Fiddle Talk."

Hunter also played banjo in No. 8844, "Down Tennessee Barn Dance," by the Edison Symphony Orchestra, in which Bieling, Macdonough, and Hooley sang. Another record in which he "picked" is No. 8772, "The Wanderer's Return." Spencer and the Edison Male Quartet do the talking and singing.

ADA JONES. It is likely that the phonograph's most popular comedienne assisted Len Spencer in a number of records for which formal acknowledgement was not made. She sang part of "De Gospel Train Am Comin'" in No. 8975, "Parson Spencer's Discourse on Adam and Eve," and assisted in a remake of No. 8190, "Marty Maloney's Wake." Spencer, in turn, helped her in No. 9859, "All She Gets From the Iceman is Ice" and Amberol No. 54, "When Grandma Was a Girl." He impersonated an ice wagon driver and a street car conductor.

CORINNE MORGAN, beginning in 1902, was one of the few early women singers who made satisfactory records. Two of her three Gold Moulded cylinders had violin obligatos by Charles D'Almaine: No. 8499, "Happy Days" and 8543, "Once in a While."

"MOZARTO." A European vaudeville entertainer whose specialty was playing two instruments at once. His name appeared with Spencer's on some of their cylinders, but he also played, unbilled, in No. 9815, "Si and Sis (the Musical Spoons)," by Jones and Spencer. His stunts included blowing two clarinets simultaneously and playing two ocarinas in unison.

BILLY MURRAY. "The King of Comic Song Singers," as S. H. Dudley called him, made himself useful in many ways. On No. 9615, "Street Piano Medley," August Molinari was credited with manipulating the instrument, but Murray, also known as "The Denver Nightingale," did the talking in Italian dialect.

I wonder whether there really was an Italian musician named Molinari who went about with a street piano, and if so, whether he was the "Signor Grindolino" and "Signor Hurdigurdi" who made Victor and Columbia discs, respectively. I also have seen the name of P. Molinari in some record catalog as a street piano operator, but can't remember which.

VESS L. OSSMAN. "The Banjo King" played accompaniments for several vocal records, but he was such a notable I think his name always was announced. These included No. 7817, "All Coons Look Alike to Me" and No. 7779, "I've Got a White Man Working for Me," sung by Collins; No. 7665, "Negro Recollections," by Collins and Harlan, and No. 8969, "My Little Dinah Lee," by Bob Roberts. It is probably also he who is heard in No. 1117, Collins and Harlan's "When Uncle Joe Plays a Rag On His Old Banjo."

In the late 1890's, Frank C. Stanley played banjo accompaniments, under the name of George S. Williams, for some of Collins' solos on brown wax cylinders, but I cannot find a list of them.

STEVE PORTER. Although he specialized in Irish roles, Porter was almost as versatile a comedian as Len Spencer. He assisted Spencer by impersonating an Irish woman in "Pedro the Hand Organ Man." And I wonder if Porter himself was helped by Stella Tobin in No. 9888, "He and She in Vaudeville." Miss Tobin took part in Indestructible cylinder No. 818 of the same skit. She is not mentioned on the Edison.

PEERLESS QUARTET. I have said more than once in HOBBIES that "Characteristic Negro Medley" (Amberol No. 431 and Blue Amberol No. 1876) is probably the only record by the Peerless Quartet in which Henry Burr didn't sing. (Burr of course was known always on Edison cylinders as Irving Gillette.)

The statement was made because someone wrote to the New Phonogram and asked the names of the artists in the record, and was told: "Mr. Campbell, Mr. Murray, Mr. Collins, and Mr. Stanley." It looked as if Murray had been substituted for Burr because of his greater facility in comic Negro dialect.

Since beginning this article, however, I have played the record and found that Burr unmistakably appears in it, although so does Murray. In fact, Burr does a bit of his favorite stammering act in the talking near the beginning. Murray apparently was called in as the "lead" to reinforce the quartet members, but Burr is still in the cast.

PREMIER QUARTET. Since it was not organized until late in 1909, Billy Murray's Quartet did less incidental work in two-minute cylinders than in four, but it probably sang with Murray in No. 10213, "Take Me Up With You, Dearie," and certainly did in No. 10281, "Funny Nursery Rhymes," and No. 10354, "He's a College Boy."

It also assisted Frederic H. Potter in No. 10452, "Goodbye, Betty Brown." As I mentioned in my August, 1969, article, it is almost certain that any Edison record made after 1909 by Murray, Ada Jones, Walter Van Brunt, or Will Oakland, which has the assistance of a "male chorus," includes the Premier.

The Quartet takes a prominent part in Amberol No. 361, "Darkies'

LEFT TO RIGHT:

EDISON MUSICIANS — Charles D'Almaine (left) did the fiddling in "Down at Finnegan's Jamboree," but the talking was by Edward Meeker. He also played violin obligatos to Corinne Morgan's contralto solos. This picture was taken in 1900. D'Almaine was smooth shaven in later life.

Frederick W. Hager (center) was conductor of the Edison Concert Band, but had made violin solos on brown wax cylinders in the late 1890's. He directed the band when it recorded his popular Indian song, "Laughing Water."

John Hazel (right) was Edison's staff cornet soloist. Hazel played a cornet obligato to a xylophone record by Albert Benzler.

LEFT TO RIGHT:

THREE EDISON TENORS — English-born Edward Barrow, left, who made three Gold Moulded cylinders, was assisted by the Edison Male Quartet in his record of "Lorna." The Quartet also sang with Frederick H. Potter in his highly popular record of "Red Wing." Joe Maxwell (right), made several cylinders around 1910. He also wrote the song, "I've Got My Fingers Crossed," which Byron G. Harlan recorded in 1905 with the help of "a group of children's voices."

Jubilee," by the American Symphony Orchestra, and I think Ed Meeker is also included.

GUS REED. I was surprised to learn recently that this splendid basso made one Amberol cylinder that was sold in England but not in the States. It was No. 12088, "The Song of the Turnkey," from "Rob Roy," and appeared in the English list for November, 1909. I wonder whether Reed made the record during a visit to England or whether Edison's British branch imported the moulds. If the latter, why was it never offered over here?

JUNE ROSSMORE AND STELLA TOBIN. These ladies had two things in common: Both were better known as vaudeville singers than recording artists, and both provided "child voices" in Gold Moulded cylinders by Byron G. Harlan.

Miss Rossmore, who made only one solo cylinder (No. 10062, "I Don't Like You") assisted in the refrain of No. 10151, "Schoolmates," by Harlan. Earlier, Miss Tobin, who also made No. 9824, "Tipperary" and No. 9852, "Daddy's Little Tom-Boy Girl," in addition to "Will He Answer 'Goo-Goo?'," helped Harlan in No. 9834, "Hoo-oo! Ain't You Comin' Out Tonight?"

Stella Tobin, by the way, was the wife of the late Paul Southe, a vaudeville comedian who made a few very poor Columbia discs. Like most vaudevillians, Southe could not make good records, and his Columbia A800 of "Cubanola Glide" was so bad it stayed in the catalog only a month before being remade by Collins and Harlan. Southe's wife's voice sounds to me much better on records than his own.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

VICTOR RECORD SALES

(From 1901 to 1942)

By JIM WALSH

1. Court Action Over Color

From January 4 to April 28, 1943, Hon. John M. Woolsey judge of the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in New York, was occupied in hearing an interesting court action.

The Radio Corporation of America, which had acquired the old Victor Talking Machine Company some 15 years before, was seeking an order prohibiting the Columbia Recording Corporation from issuing a 50-cent popular series record with a red label, and Decca Records, Inc. from making a 75-cent red label "Personality Series" disc.

RCA contended that because it had inaugurated the famous Victor Red Seal records in 1903, the fame and prestige of that series entitled Victor to the exclusive use of red as a label color, and maintained that people were buying the cheaper Deccas and Columbias in the belief they were getting "genuine Red Seals". This claim was made despite the introduction of evidence showing that scores of companies other than Victor had been using red labels throughout the Red Seal era.

Judge Woolsey made it clear throughout the hearing that he considered the RCA case flimsy. He referred to "the judicial cliché that there can be no trademark in color." When his decision was given he had no hesitation in finding against the plaintiff and ordering it to pay the defendant companies' costs.

An amusing incident occurred during the trial when Clifton Cooper, one of RCA's lawyers, repeated an oft-made but not strictly true argument:

"It shows how valuable the Red Seal is that the greatest artists in the world insist on recording on it and won't record on anything else."

The old Victor Company had contended the same thing in the acoustic era of recording, despite the easily ascertained fact that most of the artists who made Red Seal records had performed at one time or another for other companies.

In this instance, Judge Woolsey skeptically retorted:

"There isn't any artist great enough in the world, if he was offered adequate pay, who would not take any color record."

This was true, as anybody who knows recording artists well understands. It is the amount of payment rather than the color of label that determines whether a contract will be accepted.

11. Victor Record Sales Chart

I have mentioned this rather ridiculous court procedure because one of the curiosities of my collection of phonograph reference materials is a set of four volumes of arguments and evidence given during the hearing. And perhaps the most interesting page of the entire collection is one on which RCA listed the sales of Victor records by classes from the beginning of the old Victor Talking Machine Company in 1901, through the first seven months of 1942.

So far as I know, these figures never have been published, and I am certain they will be of great interest to collectors of old records. That is why I have decided to write this article discussing them.

It will be impossible to mention each year's sales totals in detail. I hope, however, I can obtain a clear facsimile of the page to be reprinted with what I write.

For the years spanning 1901 through half of 1942 a total sale of 797,437,131 Victor records was claimed. A few years later the billion mark was reached, and a special gold-plated record was pressed to commemorate it.

One side was supposed to be "Stars and Stripes Forever March", played by Sousa's Band, but the wrong matrix was picked up. The result was a pressing of Vess L. Ossman's banjo rendition of "Tell Me, Pretty Maiden", from one of the oldest masters still left in the Victor vaults.

It is not clear whether the 1901 totals included the entire year or merely the three-month period, from October, 1901, when Eldridge R. Johnson founded the Victor Talking Machine Company, to the end of that year. In view of the small aggregate, 256,908, followed by the much higher total, 1,696,296 for 1902, the latter assumption seems more likely.

HELP!

VOD-VIL QUARTETS:

Records & Illustrated Sheets

I'm writing a discography and short biography of the quartets that predated the Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barber Shop Quartet Singing in America—started in 1938.

Need info on the following groups in form of newspaper clippings, records, sheets, music, etc.: Aeolian, American, A&P Gypsies, Amphion, Apollo, Aristocrats, Avon Comedy Four, Blue Dandies, Binghamton Kiwanis Quartet, Broadway, Brunswick, Cameo Male Quartet, Chicago Glee Club Quartet, College Four, Clover Quartet, Columbia Stellar, Criterion, Deep River Boys, Diplomats, Edison Quartet, Cities Service Quartet, Elm City Four, Empire Staters, Eton Boys, Harmonizers, Haydn, Heidelberg, Imperial, Invincible, Knickerbocker, Metropolitan, Merry-makers.

National Male Quartet, National Music Lovers Stellar Quartet, Orpheus, Peerless, Eton Boys, Premier, Quixy Four, Revelers, Shannon, Southern, Sportsmen, Sterling, Universal, Church City Four, That Quartette, Stanford Four, Electric City, The Big Four.

DON DONAHUE

65 Mountain Ave.

Cedar Knolls, N.J. 07927

aucN

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those that know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and bird cage bellows restored and birds refeathered.

Barrington - GEORGE A. BIDDEN - Rhode Island

EXHIBIT
SALES BY CLASS OF RECORD
AND TOTAL SALES OF RECORDS BY UNIT
TRANS 1901 AND 1941 INCLUSIVE
SEVEN MONTHS PERIOD ENDING AUGUST 1, 1942

U. S. Dist Court
S. D. of N. Y.
JAN 25 1943
670
JAN 26 1943

(V 10-412)

Year	Red Seal	Black Label	Bluebird	Miscellaneous	Total
1901		244,065		12,845	256,910
1902		1,611,451		84,845	1,696,296
1903	306,312	1,561,422		98,302	1,966,036
1904	404,308	2,060,952		129,751	2,595,011
1905	555,540	2,531,855		178,284	3,265,679
1906	1,098,680	3,600,306		338,289	5,037,275
1907	1,197,604	6,104,770		384,335	7,686,709
1908	817,671	4,168,069		266,407	5,252,147
1909	722,857	3,684,653		231,973	4,639,483
1910	932,942	4,755,662	No	299,400	5,988,004
1911	966,895	4,928,738		310,296	6,205,929
1912	1,425,646	7,267,209		457,519	9,150,374
1913	1,727,296	8,804,869		554,324	11,086,489
1914	2,115,450	10,775,286		678,249	13,568,985
1915-a)	4,054,947	13,431,394		1,168,688	18,655,029
1916	4,045,127	20,619,981	Sales	1,298,164	25,963,272
1917	4,225,714	22,040,072		1,387,568	27,753,354
1918-a)	5,761,848	14,004,062		1,781,157	31,547,067
1919-a)	6,023,014	21,842,914		2,989,799	30,855,727
1920-a)	9,516,052	24,074,141		1,836,402	35,426,595
1921-a)	12,594,212	39,655,577		2,871,066	54,920,855
1922-a)	6,049,348	29,202,897	Until	1,910,472	37,162,717
1923-a)	6,318,070	32,287,417		1,699,995	40,295,482
1924	5,115,866	26,067,865		1,641,144	32,824,875
1925	3,921,784	19,991,240		1,238,380	25,151,404
1926	4,965,971	25,315,968		1,597,681	31,879,620
1927-a)	2,984,501	34,234,957		405,991	37,625,449
1928-a)	2,921,414	32,677,018	1933	2,166,474	37,764,906
1929-a)	2,060,666	27,798,769		4,634,012	34,493,447
1930-a)	1,245,350	15,365,999		1,101,171	17,712,520
1931-a)	544,044	6,117,241		422,632	7,083,917
1932-a)	505,876	2,469,013		348,160	3,323,049
1933-a)	257,347	1,648,214	678,469	1,051,685	3,635,715
1934-a)	368,509	1,679,253	1,267,651	1,105,842	4,431,255
1935-a)	770,679	2,365,108	1,225,287	592,145	4,953,219
1936-a)	865,770	3,519,695	2,691,720	599,541	7,076,726
1937-a)	1,305,678	4,117,917	3,868,707	1,204,308	10,496,610
1938-a)	2,207,453	5,850,592	4,454,000	695,321	13,207,366
1939-a)	3,504,365	9,447,474	10,575,158	721,792	24,248,789
1940-a)	5,778,273	13,948,330	14,096,089	1,735,795	35,558,487
1941-a)	15,092,727	16,194,507	23,409,916	1,611,285	55,808,435
7 Nov. July 1942	7,008,884	11,076,464	17,410,691	470,688	35,966,727
Total to Date	131,736,650	541,671,542	79,697,688	44,331,251	797,437,131

SALES CHART. This is the chart, depicting the year by year sale of Victor records, that was introduced as evidence in RCA's 1943 court action against Columbia and Decca.

III. Onward and Upward—Until 1908

One thing publication of the chart will do is dispel some common misconceptions about the trend of record sales from the turn of the century. Writer after writer has said that, prior to 1900, the cylinder record dominated the field, but that from 1900 on, the disc began to take over, moved steadily forward with greater sales every year, and the cylinder went immediately into a decline. Such statements simply aren't so.

It is true that Victor record sales showed a progressively upward trend from 1901 until, strangely, a peak was reached in 1907. That was a year with a severe panic. But sales dropped off sharply in 1908 and the 1907 level was not regained until 1912.

From that time the trend was upward again until the nation became involved in World War I. Then the greater part of the Victor manufacturing plant was used for making submarine detectors and other War work.

With the end of the War, a remarkable new high level was set in 1921. Competition of the radio resulted then in a downward trend.

It was not until 1941 that the 1921 total again was equalled or beaten. Even then nearly half of the sales were of the 35-cent Bluebird disc.

In considering Victor sales for 1901, I find myself puzzled by one thing. Records in those days were almost entirely single-sided and seven inches in size, though a small quantity of 10-inch Monarchs may be included in the total. But since there were no Red Seals and no Purple and Blue labels, what sort of record was included under the heading of "12,845 miscellaneous?"

It is odd, too, to find that the sale of Black Label records, which were always Victor's mainstay "bread and butter" line, dropped from 1,611,451 in 1902 to 1,561,422 in 1903. Perhaps the introduction of Red Seals had something to do with the lower 1903 black label total.

That first year's Red Seal sales figure was 306,312—a respectable total considering how much the records cost. The average man, with a weekly income of $7.50 to $15, wasn't buying Red Seal records, one of which would cost him two or three days' pay.

Again there is a mystery as to what the "miscellaneous" series included, with 98,302 of these being listed for 1903. Victor controlled Zon-o-phone records, but I imagine their accounts were kept separately.

Total record sales for 1905 were 3,565,679, but 1906 and 1907 really saw a jump. I think I know why. On December 1, 1905, both Victor and Columbia reduced the price of their 10-inch, single-faced Black Label records from $1 to 60 cents, and of the 12-inch from $1.50 to $1.

This lower price made it possible for more people to buy more records. The aggregate shot up to 7,051,775 in 1906, and 7,686,709 in 1907. On the other hand, there was no over-all reduction in Red Seal prices, but their sales increased in the same proportion as the Black Labels—from 555,540 in 1905 to 1,197,604 in 1907.

Perhaps the gain was caused largely by increased factory facilities. We know Mr. Johnson constantly was adding to the record pressing plant, as well as to the remainder of the Victor organization.

But why did record sales drop in 1908 to 5,248,147, nearly 2.5 million less than in 1907, then take another tumble to 4,639,463 in 1909? In 1910 things were better, with 5,988,004; 1911 was still better with 6,205,929; and 1912 finally surpassed 1907 with 9,150,374. From then on, with the dancing craze getting under way, records were needed for home dancing, so they went up and up until 1918.

Going back to 1908, my guess is that Columbia's action in converting its entire "popular" catalog to double-faced records had something to do with the decline in Victor sales. On October 25, Victor, to meet competition, issued its first list of 100 10-inch and 25 12-inch double-faced records. However I understand they asked dealers to do their best not to sell them, and explained: "We don't want to sell double-faced records, but we want to keep Columbia from selling theirs."

Apparently, the Columbia move had taken Victor by surprise, just as Edison, it seems, had been caught off guard half a dozen years before when Columbia cut the price of its 2-minute cylinders from 50 cents to 25 cents in a vain effort to outsell Edison.

On October 31, 1908, a trade paper, The Musical Age, commented on the feud that Columbia's price-cutting had set off when 10-inch double-faced

(Continued on page 49)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

Columbias sold for 65 cents, against 60 cents for a single-faced Victor):

"Today we doubt if there is a single talking machine owner in the United States who does not know that he can get a double-sided record for practically the same price he was paying for a single disc.

"This brings about a peculiar condition: The dealer in Victor machines and records is instructed to meet this competition with the 125 double-faced records just issued by the Victor Company, but in the same breath is instructed not to push them. Reliance, of course, is placed by the Victor Company in the single-disc records, large stocks of which are held by every Victor jobber and dealer.

"As the situation exists today it appears that the Columbia Company has the whip hand, and that the scope of the Company must be immensely broadened in the near future."

Perhaps that last paragraph, which I have placed in italics, is the answer to the problem. With its usual proud attitude of being beyond competition, Victor refused to meet Columbia's double-faced prices but charged 75 cents for a 10-inch record and $1.25 for a 12-inch. (Columbia's 12-inch were $1.)

It may be, as The Musical Age said, that, for a time, Columbia acquired "the whip hand."

From 1908 to 1912 Columbia sales may have been greater than Victor's, despite the belief, held today invariably that Columbia was an "also-ran." Considering the fact that Columbias were pressed under perhaps 50 different labels—Standard, United, Harmony, Diamond, Oxford, Lakeside, Thomas and innumerable others it doesn't appear especially improbable.

IV. Cylinder Versus Disc

Meanwhile what of the belief that, throughout the early 1900's, the disc record was driving the cylinder to the wall?

There is no doubt that during those years many small cylinder manufacturing companies, as well as many disc concerns, were forced out of business. It is also true that Columbia found it increasingly impossible to compete effectively against the better quality Edison cylinders, and gave up the fight in January, 1909, rather than try to buck Edison's new 4-minute Amberol cylinder.

But Edison was not suffering any decrease in business. Like Victor, it constantly was building factory additions. In November, 1904, Edison issued no new monthly record supplement as it was trying to catch up on back orders for cylinders already in the catalog.

By 1906, the inventor's Company was according to its own figures, turning out 1,000 phonographs each day, and about 100,000 cylinders six days a week. A few years later this asserted total had grown to 1,500 phonographs daily and 150,000 records.

In 1910, totals of more than 50 million records, and nearly half a million phonographs a year were claimed. Such totals make Victor's 1910 record sales of a little less than 6 million seem small by comparison. They certainly do not substantiate the belief that the disc remorselessly was putting an end to the cylinder and that Victor was a colossus bestriding the record business.

I admit I am somewhat skeptical about these Edison statements. Certainly, I do not believe the American people were buying 50 million Edison cylinders and half a million Edison phonographs a year.

The Edison factory, however, made records for virtually the entire world. Thus the quoted figures, which appeared in American publications and the Sound Wave in England, may have been on a world-wide basis.

In offering cylinder records and phonographs, Edison, of course, was sponsoring a much lower-priced line than the disc. Therefore, it may be that, in spite of the greater sales volume, the cash return from the sale of Edison instruments and cylinders was not as great as that of Victor's from a smaller unit business.

Obviously, it can't be denied that the cylinder business did decline, as time went on, until it had dwindled to almost nothing by its last year, 1929. It probably was on the downgrade in 1910, for Edison already had begun experimenting with the Diamond Disc, although the factory worked day and night shifts, six days a week, to meet the demand.

My own feeling is that Edison doomed the cylinder when he introduced the 4-minute Amberol. It required a special gear shift and a new reproducing point for it to be played on an ordinary cylinder machine.

Customers had been clamoring for a longer record, but probably the vast majority of owners of old instruments didn't bother to buy attachments to convert their machines for playing the new records. These soon wore out because the grooves were too close together.

Owners realized that, with a disc

FABULOUS ITALIAN TENOR. ENRICO CARUSO for many years dominated Victor's Red Seal catalog of great opera singers. This photo was published in "The Voice of the Victor" shortly after the tenor's death in August, 1921.

RED SEAL STAR. JOHN McCORMACK was born in Athlone, Ireland, but was of Scotch descent. He was probably the most popular of Victor's Red Seal singers during the acoustic recording period. This photo is one that was sent to persons who wrote to Victor to praise McCormack's 1925 and 1926 radio programs.

machine, all you had to do to play any size record was to put it on the turntable and lower a needle. There was none of this gear shift, special reproducer business.

Too, Edison had begun to meet bothersome competition from the Indestructible and U.S. Everlasting Records. These virtually were unbreakable and unwearable, whereas the Edison cylinders were fragile, easily could be broken by dropping or pushing them too far onto the mandrel, and they were subject to considerable wear.

This led Edison, in October, 1912, to introduce his Blue Amberol Cylinder, which was better than its competitors, but required a special diamond point to be played properly. Again, innumerable owners of cylinder machines just didn't bother to make the change over, and when Edison quit making records for 2-minute phonographs a vast percentage of his business was lost.

As an example of how the cylinder business declined: at the height of the wax 2-minute vogue, the factory kept a reserve of 2 million records in stock. By 1916, only Blue Amberols were being made, and the reserve was down to 400,000—a fifth of the former total. Yet, even in 1918, during World War I, an Edison spokesman said the factory was more than a million records behind in filling orders for Blue Amberols, and the demand was increasing.

However, by 1923, cylinder sales were so badly on the wane the price was dropped from 60 cents to 35 cents in a desperate effort to stimulate business, and the factory began to fill direct mail orders from rural customers instead of relying on local dealers.

Even so, it is abundantly clear the disc records, and particularly Victor records, did not start to knock out the cylinder from the very beginning of the 20th Century.

V. Some Red Seal Surprises

One of the most interesting features of the Victor sales chart is the column devoted to the sale of the higher-priced Red Seals records by opera singers, famous pianists, violinists, and other celebrated artists. The chart contains a good many surprises.

Most lovers of "classical" music do not realize that Victor's Red Seal business never was a paying proposition, and that losses on its operation were charged off to the advertising account. There perhaps were a dozen or so highly paid singers and virtuosos who made money for Victor despite their expensive contracts, but the remainder were carried at a loss.

Everybody, of course, knows that Enrico Caruso was one of Victor's great Red Seal money-makers. However, John McCormack's discs probably outsold Caruso's, partly because they were cheaper and partly because they were sung mostly in English. They were largely favorite old ballads and Irish songs, and had a greater mass appeal than operatic arias in Italian and other foreign languages.

Alma Gluck also specialized in sweetly sentimental ballads. Her record No. 74420, "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny," another big seller, is said to have been the first Red Seal to sell more than a million copies. Tetrizzini and Galli-Curci were tops among coloratura sopranos.

Fritz Kreisler's and Mischa Elman's violin solos of simple, melodious pieces like "Humoresque" and "The Meditation from 'Thais,'" always met with a ready sale. And there were a few other profitable artists. But mostly the Red Seals didn't pay their way.

Eldridge R. Johnson's attitude towards records of this type was exactly opposite to that of Thomas A. Edison. Johnson was willing to lose money on the sale of Red Seals for the sake of prestige and effective advertising.

Edison started out making a great many "celebrity" records on his Diamond Discs. But when he found he was losing money he reduced that type of recording to a minimum and frankly admitted he wasn't interested in selling good music at a loss. The same attitude had been taken by Edward D. Easton, president of Columbia, when his series of records by famous operatic stars in 1903 was a financial failure.

Victor's Red Seal sales passed the million point in 1906 with 1,098,680, but by 1908 the decline in sales had begun and they were down to 817,671. The million mark was not attained again until 1912, when 1,425,646 was reached. There was a terrific increase by 1915, up to 4,054,947.

BIG BLUE LABEL SELLER. OLIVE KLINE was one of Victor's best selling artists on double-faced Blue Label records. Her biggest hit combined "An Old-Fashioned Garden" and "The Japanese Sandman." She autographed this photo in 1969 to Quentin Riggs.

In 1918, a year when fewer records were being produced, the total went to nearly 5,800,000 as compared to almost 4,324,000 the year before. On the other hand, Black Label records, which had sold over 22 million in 1917, dropped to just over 14 million.

This is puzzling. Perhaps it can be accounted for on the assumption that the factory had large stocks of Red Seals on hand, and dealers, desperate because they couldn't get as many popular records as they needed, decided to try to sell Red Seals instead.

There was a big gain in Red Seal sales in 1919-20, and in 1921 the total went to a new high figure that would remain for years to come, 12,194,212. No doubt this increase was caused largely by Victor's having drastically reduced the price of most of the single-faced Red Seals in 1919, and by dealers ordering heavily of records the factory could not produce in war-times.

But how are we to account for the drop in 1922 to 6,023,014—less than half the 1921 figure? True, radio was beginning to be talked about widely, but few homes had it—certainly not enough to cause such a drastic reduction.

In September, 1923, Victor, apparently alarmed by radio competition and the decline in Red Seal sales, offered them for the first time in double-faced combinations, at great savings. The sales went up slightly for the year to 6,318,070. But alas! in 1924 they were only a little more than 5 million.

In 1925 Victor began to sponsor radio broadcasts by John McCormack, Lucrezia Bori, Frances Alda, and other Red Seal stars on the theory that hearing these singers on the air would induce listeners to buy their records.

(Continued on page 92)

HISTORICAL RECORDS

(Continued from page 36)

'Tis evening from "The Queen of Spades," in which Miliza again sings a duet with herself, only to find out once more why this LP had to wait so long on my shelves to be reviewed.

To begin with, of the 3 stanzas in the Lisa-Pauline meditation upon the beauty of nightfall, only 2 customarily are given. For some reason, each is done here twice, and this version becomes a 4-stanza drag.

Also, the accompaniment of repeated inverted chords has been changed, into appoggiolos for the greater part. I could not even recognize the instrumental introduction when it began.

Further, in the score Lisa and Pauline have different musical lines throughout the duet. Instead, while Miliza-Lisa's principal melody is followed to perfection, Miliza-Pauline's harmonizing is mostly unison singing one octave lower.

And in addition, the turn by the two voices in the Finale is not executed in full, as required.

I can just picture the face of Margaret Eichenwald, creator of Prilepa in "The Queen of Spades" at the Bolshoy and my vocal teacher, had she heard these innovations!

Next, I sought solace in Joan of Arc's poignant Farewell, but found more liberties. The aria is sung minus its dramatic recitative and middle section, with only touching adieus left for the artist to interpret. And that she does very admirably.

Then I went on through "The Gypsy Baron" and one more Farewell in "La Traviata," to the "Nightingale and the Rose," another of those Oriental cantilenas in which Miliza so eminently excels.

Here darling William is in all his glory. His impersonation of the nightingale is very pretty indeed, but had Rimsky-Korsakov wanted a bird in this song, I'm sure he would have indicated it.

Dear me, with all the space I used up on subjects that interested me most, all I can do now is give the contents of the remaining 2 LP's with only an over-all comment for each.

NIGHT IN VIENNA WITH JOHANN STRAUSS—Stereo 933:

Side I—1. The Beautiful Blue Danube 2. A Night in Venice.

Side II—1. DIE FLEDERMAUS: Klänge der Heimat 2. Die FLEDERMAUS: Excerpts 3. DIE FLEDERMAUS: Mein Herr Marquis 4. DER ZIGEUNERBARON: Wedding Cake Polka, which is in Russian. All in German on both sides, except the Wedding Cake Polka, which is in Russian.

Miliza's all-around excellence in these numbers shows that she still is unrivaled in this field. For admirers of Johann Strauss' lilting tunes, the above record is a must.

DIVINE MUSIC—Stereo 966:

Side I—1. ORFEO ED EURIDICE: Che puro ciel! (Gluck-in German) 2. Two Worlds (Offenbach-in German) 3. Ave Maria (Gounod-in Latin) 4. Stille Nacht (Gruber).

Side II—1. MESSIAH: He shall feed his flock (Handel-in German) 2. Panis Angelicus (Franck-in Latin) 3. Ave Verum (Mozart-in Latin) 4. Open My Eyes (Scott).

Apparently this album was meant to represent music of a more or less religious nature, although how "Orpheus in Hades" in Offenbach's "Two Worlds" can be considered as such, I'll never know. The last song is dedicated fervently to "The Whole World" by Miliza Korjus.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 50)

The house organ, The Voice of the Victor, was filled with copies of letters from ecstatic tuners-in, asking for the good work to continue.

But most of these appreciative souls seemed to take their gratitude out in listening and didn't buy records. The 1925 Victor Red Seal sales were only 3,921,784 — this despite the lower-priced, double-faced combinations.

One element in the downward trend may have been the fact that Victor had authorized dealers to clear out single-faced Red Seals at low prices—65 cents for a 10-inch and 90 cents for a 12-inch. Many customers may have preferred buying the cut-rate old discs which were already in stock and would not count as records sold by the factory during the year.

VI. Red Seals in the Electric Era

Mid-1925 brought the Orthophonic Victrola and electric recording. This generally is believed to have caused a great renaissance in American interest in "classical" music and the sale of Red Seal records.

For the first time it became possible to give reasonably adequate recordings of symphony orchestras and to make piano records that called into play the full resources of the keyboard. The Phonograph Monthly Review, which was founded in 1926, proclaimed that the nation was being swept by a demand for high-class recordings by the greatest artists, and sales were increasing by "leaps and bounds."

But again it just wasn't so. True, the novelty of the Orthophonic and electric recording did cause Red Seal sales to reach nearly 5 million in 1926. But the novelty wore off and in 1927 they were down to less than 3 million. A year later, despite the greatly lowered prices and double-faced combinations, they were only 2,921,414, and, this seems almost incredible, in 1929 were just a little over 2 million fewer Red Seals than had been sold, single-faced, in 1914, at much higher prices.

I remember how incredulous I was when an Edison jobber told me in 1929 that "nobody ever made any money out of classical records" and that Victor's Red Seal department always had operated at a loss.

"But," I objected, "surely sales are going up now, with all the great symphony orchestras recording and better records all the way around!"

"Son," the jobber said, with a smile of pity for my misguided juvenile ignorance, "they're nothing like what they used to be. Victor's not even selling as many Red Seals as they did 15 years ago."

How he knew I don't know, but he did know.

From 1929 until 1933, as we all know, the depression caused the record business to go into a tailspin. The sales for 1932 were only 305,876 Red Seal, 2,465,013 Black Label, and 348,160 miscellaneous—which included Blue Label and a few odds and ends.

Throughout the period of the sales chart, the sale of Red Seals was estimated to average 16 to 18 per cent of the total (nowadays "classical" records account for only about 5 per cent of the various companies' sales totals), and Blue, Purple, and other miscellaneous labels, 5 per cent.

Harry Lauder was one of the best selling Blue Label performers. Others were Olive Kline, Elsie Baker, Reinald Werrenrath, Lucy Isabelle Marsh, Royal Dadmun, Lambert Murphy. "Ollie" says the combination of "The Japanese Sandman" and "An Old-Fashioned Garden" brought her more royalties than any other record.)

Victor's 1932 sales total for all classes of records was only 3,119,049—less than the figure for 1905. In 1933 it went up to 3,635,713, but this was largely because 678,469 of the 35-cent Bluebird records, introduced that year, were included. Take away the Bluebirds, and the Victor sales were less than in 1932.

But from 1933 the trend was upward again, and, as you can see, remained that way through the life of the chart—that is, through July, 1942. A great deal of the gain, however, was attributable to the lower priced Bluebirds.

Why did Victor's Red Seal sales fall off so drastically in the early electric era? There may be several reasons. For one thing, most recordings of complete symphonies were made in Europe, and the rejuvenated Columbia Company again got the jump on Victor by importing large numbers of such records from its English affiliate. Brunswick also imported foreign matrices. Such competition may have cut deeply into Victor's business.

For another thing, most of the Red Seal singers with huge popular followings were dead, past their prime, or inactive. Caruso was gone, McCormack's electric recordings didn't have the vogue of his acoustics; Schumann-Heink was "over the hill," and Galli-Curci was peaking out.

Too, the electric process put what the Phonograph Monthly Review called "an almost unbearable edge" on the voice of many singers. Lawrence Tibbett's "Pagliacci Prologue" was singled out as an especially glaring example of this objectionable quality.

And, more and more, the average man or woman who just wanted to hear a tune without the trouble of cranking a phonograph and changing a needle or going to the expense of buying records, was turning to radio. This trend continued until "juke boxes" made recorded music enthusiasts of a new generation of youngsters.

And now, in the year 1971, the record business is again in a precarious condition. More discs—45's and 33-

RPM's—are being made than ever before, but Variety estimates only about 5 per cent sell enough to cover production costs.

Dealers, who, in the old days of 78-RPM's were allowed to return for credit 5 or 10 per cent of their unsold records once or twice a year, now have a 100 per cent return privilege. And, according to Variety, one company almost went broke last year when it was swamped at one time by 18 million dollars worth of returned discs.

Moreover, with tape cassettes already competing for the buyer's dollars and television playbacks just a matter of time, the record business again seems headed for hard times.

Meanwhile I hope this survey of long-ago Victor record "sales trends" has proved both interesting and enlightening.

THE END

DOLLS

(Continued from page 40)

Collectors are able, from time to time, to find characters from the Schoenhut doll from the collection of Frances Merrit Boudey.

—Photo by St. Joseph's Portrait Studio, St. Petersburg, Fla.

Schoenhut circus. Sometimes lucky collectors find the whole circus. We understand one sold recently for as much as $300 for a complete set.

At the time of Teddy Roosevelt's exploits in Africa, Schoenhut produced a likeness of the great "rough rider," and also many jungle animals.

Collectors who specialize in baby dolls will enjoy the carved wooden babies of Schoenhut which were so popular in the early 1920s. There are many little girl and boy dolls of the "teens and twenties" of this century.

The accompanying photographic print by Joseph of St. Petersburg, shows dolls which belong to Frances Merritt Bowdey (Mrs. John A. Bowdey). They are typical. The dolls are beautifully and authentically costumed. They represent the period of dolls about 1911-1912.

For further information about Schoenhut dolls see the Coleman book, "Encyclopedia of Dolls."

IRENE M. SIMMERS

P.O. Box 151 Ocala, Fla. 32670
Phone: (904) 622-6792

TOOTHPICKERS:

Clear anvil, 2 1/4", $3.
Canary Top Hat, hobnail w/vaseline brim, $6.50.
Cobalt blue Top Hat Ashtray, $4.
Clear, stippled, panel bucket Ashtray, 2 1/4", $2.00.
Scottie Candy Container, $4.50.
4-footed Sauce or Honey Dishes, 3 1/4", pressed lacy pattern. Each, $3.
Spoon Holder, D & B scalloped base, plain bowl w/etched flower (no harm chip one scallop), $6.50.
ABC Plate, 6 1/4", scalloped beaded edge, flower center (chip one scallop), $5.
Amber D&B w/crossbar tp, 6 1/4" sq. Bowl, some edge roughness, so, $10.
4 dark, Flow Blue, 6" Plates "Waldorf," ea., $5.00.
2 light Flow Blue, Sauce Dishes, "Paris," ea., $2.50.
Same pattern, Cup & Saucer, $8.
Same pattern, Saucer only, $2.50.
Same pattern, 6 1/2" Plates (2), ea., $4.
Same but small chip on rim, $3.

CUPS & SAUCERS:

Large size, allover old lustra, fluted with scalloped edge, Germany, $8.
Large size, stippled bkgd. w/much gold decor, $8.00.
HP pink flowers, "Forget-Me-Not," in gold, (hairline) no mk. except numbers, $5.
HP thin porcelain Nippon (rising sun) small, deep orange flowers $4.
HP thin porcelain Nippon (rising sun) shaded yellow bkgd., house & trees, etc., $4.
HP Nippon, large pink roses, $3.
Child's Set, 6 C/S, 1 1/2x2", rainbow iridescent w/pretty flowers, Germany, $10.
HP Nippon Hair Receiver, pink blossoms (no harm inside rim chip), $5.
Porcelain Pitcher, 4", embossed leaves & flowers, pretty pink & yellow dainty flower decor, $4.

PORCELAIN PLATES:

8 3/4", Austria, dainty, HP pink & yellow roses, embossed rim, $4.
9 1/4", Haviland, deep, HP violets, embossed, scalloped rim, $6.
6", Germany, HP pink roses on shaded green & brown mat finish, $4.
6", Germany, HP white tulips, shaded green lustre bkgd., $3.
6 1/4" HP Nippon, lakeside scene, shaded yellow bkgd., $3.
6 1/2", HP Nippon, flower wreath, yellow roses, $2.00.
7 1/4", HP Nippon, lakeside scene, shaded lavender & green, $3.50.
8", HP Nippon, lakeside scene, yellow, blue & lavender, $4.

Parcel post & insurance extra. (Please send enough). Satisfaction guaranteed. jem1

Please mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements.

MART WANTED

WANTED: Obsolete or broken cameras. Paying $2 and up. We also pay shipping. No recent box cameras, please. Also encyclopedia Britannicas.—E. Romney, Forest City, N.C. 28043 jcl632

WANTED: Old country store items: Adv. signs, cannisters, barrels, mdse. display, coffee grinders, oil lamps, show-case, etc., or what have you.—Rowe-Morse Emporium & Country Store, Clifton, N.J. 07012 myl24891

MART FOR SALE

For Sale: Cigarette lighter collection approximately 700 lighters. Some date back to late 1800's up to modern lighters. Also one of a kind hand-made lighters including microscope, glass, bolt, lighters and other odd table and pocket lighters. Call or write — R. Ferraro, 310 Westminster Pl., Lodi, N.J. 478-3659. je1006

PLAY POKER electronic slot machine. Deals new hand every time handle pulled, $5.95 postpaid. Dealers hurry! Details, SASE.—Rosato, 3438 Newton Ct., Fremont, Calif. 94536 au3004

CIVIL WAR PRINTS—Original pages Harpers Weekly and other illustrated periodicals 1850 to 1900 all states and areas. Send $1 for 2 full page Civil War reprints and catalog of originals.—Waterfront Galleries, P.O. Box 1008, Pensacola, Fla. 32502 jcl213

ENGINE rebuilding chemically. Motoloy replates rings, valves, cylinders. Add to gas. Lifetime treatment $5.98. Details SASE.—Rosato, 3438 Newton Ct., Fremont, Calif. 94536 au3863

1,000 GUMMED address labels $1. Free gift included — Rosato, 3438 Newton Ct., Fremont, Calif. 94536 au3042

JO'S & TOMMY'S ANTIQUES

660 Neblett St. Stephenville, Tex. 76401
Phone: (817) 965-4798

DISPERSAL OF PRIVATE COLLECTION

More choice examples of art glass, fine porcelain & dolls. ALL SALES FINAL. All proof unless noted. SASE with all correspondence. Trans. extra. Color photos $1. A personal visit will be well worth your time.

PLEASE NOTE: From April ad. p. 120, following items still valuable: Nos. 3 (Webb Brides Basket), 4 (Moser Vases) & 7 (Parlin-Bisque Bonnet Bowl).

1. ENGLISH EPERGNE, green opalescent, 2 lilies with applied rigaree, 2 twisted crystal arms w. hanging baskets, 10" center bowl, overall 22" l. Pictured on cover of Lagerberg's "British Glass" $165.
2. STEUBEN VASE, fan shape, topaz to fiery opal, topaz foot, 8" t., 10 1/2" fan spread. Lovely, unsqd. $47.50.
3. NORTHWOOD'S (unsqd.) GREEN OPAL. DRAPE, water set. Ruffled top pitcher & 5 tumblers. Beaut. set, minor roughness underneath few tumblers from use set $110.
4. MIDWESTERN AMBERINA Celery Tray, "Pineapple & Fan" pat. by Higbee. Sawtooth rim. Unusual. $55.
5. MT. WASH. ACID FIN. BURMESE LILY, 12 3/4" t. Photo available.
6. FIREGLOW VASE, "warm peach" glossy fin., magnificent enamel decor. Dutch scene, berries, huge autumn leaves, gold, etc. 12 1/4" t., 4 1/2" rim. Gorgeous! $65.
7. R.S. PRUSSIA (R.M.): 10" open-handled cakeplate, unusual fruit center; pears, grapes, plums, "shadow cherries & lves. $78. Large WATER PITCHER, shaded emer., huge molded poppies arnd. top & base, rococo handle, open red roses in profusion, mouth-watering! $225.
8. ROYAL BAYREUTH extra-rare figural poppy cracker jar. White w. green highlights, lavish gold, satin-pearlized. Leaf feet, stem finial. Exquisite. Unmkd. $125.
9. DOLLS: 21" bisq. hd. A.M. Ger. shldr.-hd. on kid body, bisq. hds. Slip. brn. eyes, molded eyebrows, new wig, beaut. face & coloring, wine velvet dress $70; 16" baby girl, bisq. hd. 12" circum. mkd. "ABC" (Alt. Beck. & Gottschalek), slip. blue eyes, blonde wig, compo. body w. curved legs, adorable face, orig. clothes, $95.00.
10. SGD. FRENCH BRONZE & MARBLE GARNITURE, clock & 2 covered urns. Excell. detail on girl figurine. Sgd. "F. Moreau," also inscribed "La Fontaine, Aux Mesanges Medal 'd Or.'" Photo available. Set $400. jec

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

CORINNE MORGAN

PART I

By JIM WALSH

VIVACIOUS CONTRALTO—This photo of Corinne Morgan is reprinted from the English edition of the Edison Phonographic Monthly for September, 1907. She was then 32.

WILLIAM H. WARD

2110 Elm Ave. Rapid City, S. Dak. 57701

MARIE MICHALOWA, Soprano, in Russian. "Let Joy Abide," Baialaika accompaniment. Recorded in St. Petersburg; Victor Red Seal 61181. 10" single side w/crown imprint in matrix. Very good playing condition, $100 minimum.

COLUMBIA 12" Symphony Series, sgd. Giovanni Zenatello; Double side. Matrix 30890, "E lucevan le stelle," 30881, "Morte d' Otello." Surface noise but voice is loud, clear, distinct, $40 minimum.

HOT RECORD SOCIETY ORIGINALS: 2 12" doubles, 2001 & 2003. BECHET-SPANIER BIG FOUR. Fine condition, each record $20 minimum.

Columbia, 35686, Boyce Brown (Brother Mat-thew), Mares, Suncon, Pecora. "Maple Leaf Rag," in fine condition. Flip has objectional flaw last 1/2". 35880, same personnel, fine condition, $20 & $30 respectively.

Decca Album 144. 6 records "New Orleans Jazz." Fine condition, $36 minimum.

Columbia Album C-40, "Comes Jazz," 4 records, fine condition, $25 minimum.

Columbia Album C-43, Frank Teschemacher, 4 records, but only 3 are in playable condition, and they are almost like new. Price open.

Columbia Album C-29, Belderbecke. Fine condition. Price open.

Hot Record Society Album, "Belderbecke and the Wolverines, 5 records, good to very good. Price open.

Columbia Album C-82, Boswell Sisters, 4 records, fine condition, $25 minimum.

Victor Album P-56, "Chamber Music Society Lower Basin St.," 3 records, fine condition, $20 minimum.

Decca Vol. 2, "Gems of Jazz." Price open.

Decca Album 17-5, Vincente Gomez, guitar. 3 records, fine condition, $18 minimum.

Columbia Album C-34, "Jerome Kern," Al Goodman Orch. 4 records, fine, $20 min.

25 STANDARD RECORDS skipping from No. A9 thru A953. Include 2 "Uncle Josh," a possible Harry Lauder, Ada Jones, Billy Murray, Arthur Collins, Byron Harlan, Frank Stanley, Carroll Clark, Arthur Clough, Henry Burr. At least 4 records have 2c or 4c royalty stamps affixed. Willing to correspond. All letters answered. Money back guarantee. jlyp

1. Bookbinders With Musical Names

Sixty-some years ago, the late Corinne Morgan and Frank C. Stanley went frequently to Camden, N.J., where they recorded solos and contralto and baritone duets for the Victor Talking Machine Company.

On their way to the recording studios they must have passed a building mostly occupied by the "steam printing" plant of the West Jersey Press, but it displayed a sign in a ground floor window that probably made them smile or even laugh. The sign said:

"MORGAN & STANLEY

Bookbinders

BLANK BOOK MAKERS"

I can imagine Frank Stanley looking at that sign, chuckling, and saying: "Well, Corinne, it looks like we're in business!"

This duplication of names was rather a remarkable coincidence. It would have been an even more striking one if the bookbinders had possessed the same legal names as the singers, who were really Corinne Morgan Welsh and William Stanley Grinstead.

As I write, I am possibly the only person now living who recalls that

Antique

MUSIC BOX SPECIALISTS

Complete repair service, cylinders repinned, combs repaired and tuned, all work guaranteed.

Large stock of finest instruments for sale.

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. 10803

Phone: 914 - PE 8-1506

there once was a Camden printing firm of Morgan and Stanley within a block or so of the Victor plant. Frank Stanley has been dead more than 60 years. He died December 12, 1910; and Miss Morgan has been gone for about a quarter of a century.

The grimy structure in which the bookbinding firm had quarters was demolished in the spring of 1913, after Victor had bought an entire block of buildings, torn them down and used the space for an addition to its cabinet manufacturing facilities. There may be a few ancient residents of Camden who remember that Morgan & Stan-

HELP!

VOD-VIL QUARTETS:

Records & Illustrated Sheets

I'm writing a discography and short biography of the quartets that predated the Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barber Shop Quartet Singing in America—started in 1938.

Need info on the following groups in form of newspaper clippings, records, sheets, music, etc.: Aeolian, American, A&P Gypsies, Amphion, Apollo, Aristocrats, Avon Comedy Four, Blue Dandies, Binghamton Kiwanis Quartet, Broadway, Brunswick, Cameo Male Quartet, Chicago Glee Club Quartet, College Four, Clover Quartet, Columbia Stellar, Critterion, Deep River Boys, Diplomats, Edison Quartet, Cities Service Quartet, Elm City Four, Empire Staters, Eton Boys, Harmonizers, Haydn, Heidelberg, Imperial, Invincible, Knickerbocker, Metropolitans, Merry-makers.

National Male Quartet, National Music Lovers Stellar Quartet, Orpheus, Peerless, Eton Boys, Premier, Quixy Four, Revelers, Shannon, Southern, Sportsmen, Sterling, Universal, Church City Four, That Quartette, Stanford Four, Electric City, The Big Four.

DON DONAHUE

65 Mountain Ave.

Cedar Knolls, N.J. 07927

aucN

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Re feathered

Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

tfc

DUET PARTNER—James F. Harrison who today is better remembered under his real name of Frederick J. Wheeler, sang duets with Corinne Morgan for Zon-o-phone, but apparently not for any other company.

ley was a firm of bookbinders, but there surely can be very few.

(Another amusing coincidence involving names occurred in a 1916 issue of The Voice of the Victor. A man living in Brooklyn, N.Y., advertised he had some money he would like to invest in a Victrola shop. His name was Dudley and he lived on McDonough Street. Such a combination automatically brings memories of the duet team of "Dudley and Macdonough"—S. H. Dudley and Harry Macdonough, baritone and lead tenor of the Haydn Quartet, whose real names were Sam H. Rous and John Scantlebury Macdonald.)

Now, having started with a smile, let's consider as much as we can of the life and recording career of the once famous contralto, Corinne Morgan.

II. Writing A Biography

Occasionally I write about an artist of whom I know little in the hope that my efforts will bring further information from some unexpected source. That is the procedure I am following with this sketch of Corinne Morgan. I am well acquainted with the details of the recording career of this dynamic and effervescent contralto who sometimes indulged in a cyclonic, or volcanic, burst of temperament, but of the woman herself I don't have a great deal of reliable information.

I find myself thinking that the anonymous person who wrote the biographical sketches in the "Our Artists" department in the English edition of the Edison Phonograph Monthly in the early 1900's relied too much on his imagination for details.

A good example is the article concerning Corinne Morgan in the issue for September 1907 which I quote now. (I have omitted the list of the contralto's Edison cylinders since I intend to publish as nearly a complete list of her records as I can compile at the conclusion of this installment.)

"The subject of our biography, Miss Corinne (Sic!) Morgan, is one of the most popular contraltos now before the public.

"As a little girl, Miss Morgan showed a decided taste for music. Discarding her doll—and other delights of infancy—she would beg her mamma to let her listen to the piano, while even the street organ delighted her beyond measure. As she grew older a better class of music claimed her childish attention, and she became an ardent admirer of the splendid orchestral societies which are so important a feature in the musical life of the United States.

"In due course she developed a voice of such extraordinarily fine quality that her relations and friends were unanimous in declaring that so great a gift should be cultivated to the utmost. After some pressure the little girl's parents agreed to the proposition, and after a while she was handed over to the care of a voice-producer.

"After studying assiduously for some months Miss Morgan had made such progress that she was permitted to make a public debut, and shortly after this interesting and successful event she joined the ranks of singers.

"Her voice is a contralto of exceedingly fine quality, while the weight which she gets on her low notes is something out of the common. In fact, the voice is good right through, the upper notes being in every way the equal of the lower ones.

"Miss Morgan's motto in artistic matters is 'thoroughness.' She never dreams of singing a song in public till she has thoroughly mastered all its details, and even then she does not care to face an audience till she has submitted her rendering to the judgment of some reliable critic. It is artists such as Miss Morgan who uphold the honor of their profession, and who are a credit to artistic America.

"Like most singers, Miss Morgan has her favorite songs, and, happily for those who possess an Edison Phonograph, she has sung them for the benefit of her countless admirers. Amongst these are 'Happy Days' and 'Whisper And I Shall Hear,' both of which are furnished with a violin obbligato. The list also includes a number of charming duets which she sings with Mr. Stanley Chief amongst these are 'By the Old Oak Tree,' 'In the Starlight,' 'Juanita,' an old-time favorite; and 'Just My Style.' The gifted pair also sing 'Listen to the Mocking Bird,' 'Nobody's Looking But the Owl and the Moon,' 'O Tell Us, Merry Birds,' 'O That We Two Were Maying' and 'Sweet Maid Divine.' . . ."

It is logical that when it was discovered Corinne Morgan had a good voice admiring friends and relatives insisted it should be cultivated and her parents agreed. That she was "handed over to the care of a voice-producer" was a safe guess since she must have had music lessons.

Naturally, she studied assiduously, made her debut, and became a singer but would not sing in public until she had mastered a song and tried it out on a reliable critic. She was a singer predominantly of concert and classical training.

Most of her records were intended for buyers of popular music. I have wondered if this is why that gifted contralto sang under an assumed name.

III. Recording Career Begins

Of Corinne Morgan's parents I know nothing, but it appears likely that they were well-to-do, to be able to give their daughter a musical education and launch her upon a successful career. It also seems probable that her mother's maiden name was Mor-

(Continued on page 40)

PANTOMIMING "PAGLIACCI"—"Grace Nelson," a contralto who took Miss Morgan's place for a short time as Frank C. Stanley's duet partner, is shown here with Umberto Sorrentino, impersonating characters from the opera, "Pagliacci," during a Victrola demonstration in Wanamaker's Auditorium, New York City. Miss Nelson's real name was Grace Hornby.

CORINNE MORGAN

(Continued from preceding page)

gan, to account for her full name of Corinne Morgan Welsh. Both Morgan and Welsh are Welsh names, so this would point to the singer's being of predominantly Welsh extraction—an assumption that seems confirmed by her dark hair and, judging by her pictures, equally dark eyes.

I know nothing of Miss Morgan's life until the year 1902, when she became the duet partner of Frank Stanley and also began making solo records. Their association probably resulted from her singing with Stanley in a New York church. She also sang in church with John Young ("Harry Anthony"), who was to begin making records about the same time.

When her recording career began, Corinne Morgan was 27. According to Stanley's widow, Corinne then was living in a New York apartment with her sister, whose name I don't know.

And now, for a special reason, I shall do something that I never have done before—publish a list of an artist's recordings before completing the biographical sketch concerning him or her. Because of illness I have fallen behind with my HOBBIES schedule, and desperately need to get copy to the printer.

Thus, it is fortunate that some time ago I compiled as nearly complete a list as I could put together of Corinne Morgan's discs and cylinders, although it omits some brands, such as Leeds and Imperial, for which I lack catalogs. However, it is relatively comprehensive and should interest the contralto's many admirers, who I believe will be willing to wait for the continuation of the biographical notes.

I also have included one solo by "Grace Nelson", whose real name was Grace Hornby, and the duet records she made with Frank C. Stanley, when she briefly succeeded Miss Morgan as Stanley's singing partner. By a fortunate circumstance, I am able to reprint probably the only photos of the rather mysterious Miss Hornby ever to appear in a talking machine publication.

These photos are copied from the February, 1913, Voice of the Victor, and show her and a man, Umberto Sorrentino, impersonating Nedda and Canio in "Pagliacci." They pantomimed the action of the opera in Wanamaker's Auditorium in New York City, while a concealed Victrola discoursed the music.

Next month I shall begin a detailed account of Corinne Morgan's recording career.

Records by Corinne Morgan

M-H after the title indicates a duet by Miss Morgan and James F. Harrison; M-Mac, a duet with Harry Macdonough; M-S, a duet with Frank C. Stanley, and M-Stc, a duet with Elise Stevenson; M-D'A denotes a solo by Miss Morgan with violin obbligato by Charles D'Almaine.

TWO-MINUTE EDISON CYLINDERS
(1902-05)

- 8223 Whisper and I Shall Hear.
- 8224 For All Eternity.
- 8256 O That We Two Were Maying (M-S).
- 8265 Oh, Tell Us Merry Birds (M-S).
- 8390 When Our Lips in Kisses Met (M-S).
- 8419 In the Starlight (M-S).
- 8435 'Deed I Do (M-S).
- 8469 It's a Lovely Day for a Walk (M-S).
- 8494 Though It Was Within This Hour We Met (M-S).
- 8499 Happy Days.
- 8543 Once in a While.
- 8577 Nobody's Looking But the Owl and the Moon (M-S).
- 8715 Listen to the Mocking Bird (M-S).
- 8727 My Kangaroo (M-S).
- 8751 Without Your Love, Ah, Let Me Die.
- 8761 Doan You Cry, My Honey (M-S).
- 8776 How Can I Leave Thee? (M-S).
- 8876 By the Old Oak Tree (M-S).
- 8916 Juanita (M-S).
- 8997 Just My Style (M-S).
- 9018 Sweet Maid Divine (M-S).

EDISON MIXED SEXTET

- 8260 Tell Me, Pretty Maiden.

MENDELSSOHN MIXED QUARTET

- 8321 Good Night, Good Night, Beloved.
- 8356 Sweet and Low.
- 8422 Refuge.
- 8427 Lord's Prayer and Gloria Patri.
- 8461 Onward, Christian Soldiers.
- 8496 Home, Sweet Home.
- 8701 Evening Chimes.
- 8834 What Shall the Harvest Be?

METROPOLITAN MIXED TRIO

- 8503 Attila—Praise Ye.

TWO-MINUTE BUSY BEE CYLINDERS
(1904-05)

- 179 What Color Eyes Do You Love (M-S).
- 272 Sweet Maid Divine (M-S).

COLUMBIA 10-INCH RECORDS
(1902-06)

(Numbers in parenthesis indicate XP cylinders of same title)

- * 816 When We Are Married (M-S).
- * 1134 (32119) Oh, That We Two Were Maying (M-S).
- * 1261 (32129) 'Deed I Do (M-S).
- ± 1461 (32209) It's a Lovely Day for a Walk (M-S).
- 1460 (31611) Reuben and Cynthia (M-S).
- 1811 (32520) Cupid Has Found My Heart.
- 1832 (32532) Nobody's Looking But the Owl and the Moon (M-S).
- 1833 (32531) Listen to the Mocking Bird (M-S).
- (32594) What Color Eyes Do You Love? (M-S).
- (32595) Has Your Mother Any More Like You? (M-S).
- 3226 (32765) Sweet Maid Divine (M-S).
- 3271 Pantana—Just My Style (M-S).
- 3359 So Long, Mary (with Chorus).
- 3379 (32973) The Umpire—Cross Your Heart (M-S).
- 3471 (32935) Mexicana—I Was Just Supposing (M-S).
- 3412 (32955) The Moon Has His Eyes On You (M-S).
- 3432 Last Night.
- 3437 (32956) The Tale of a Stroll (M-S).
- 3466 Homeward.

All Columbia records with numbers preceded by * could be had in both seven and 10-inch sizes. The one preceded by ± was available only in seven-inch. The remaining discs were made in 10-inch only.

COLUMBIA DOUBLE-FACED 10-INCH RECORDS

(Coupled, beginning in 1908, from single-faced discs)

- A270 'Deed I Do (M-S). Reverse: Ground Hog Day at Punkin Center (Cal Stewart).
- A271 Cross Your Heart (M-S). Reverse: Uncle Josh and the Fire Department (Stewart).
- A276 Moon Has His Eyes On You (M-S). Reverse: Last Day of School at Punkin Center (Stewart).
- A278 Listen to the Mocking Bird (M-S). Reverse: Address by the Late President McKinley at the Pan-American Exposition.

- A325 Last Night. Reverse: Maryland! My Maryland (George Alexander).
- A341 So Long, Mary (with Chorus). Reverse: Mona (Henry Burr).
- A393 Sweet Maid Divine (M-S). Reverse: No Wedding Bells for Me (Bob Roberts).
- A394 Nobody's Looking But the Owl and the Moon (M-S). Reverse: Hickory Bill (Len Spencer).
- A395 Just My Style (M-S). Reverse: Uncle Josh at the White House (Stewart).
- A396 When We Are Married (M-S). Reverse: Uncle Josh's Courtship (Stewart).
- A400 Tale of a Stroll (M-S). Reverse: Uncle Josh's New Year's Pledge (Stewart).
- A405 Oh, That We Two Were Maying (M-S). Reverse: Uncle Josh's Huskin' Bee Dance (Stewart).
- A417 Mexicana—I Was Just Supposing (M-S). Reverse: Uncle Josh's Experience on a Sweet Car (Stewart).
- A573 Reuben and Cynthia (M-S). Reverse: Home, Sweet Home (Alexander).
- A778 Moon Has His Eyes On You (M-S). Reverse: Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet (Arthur Clough).

ZON-O-PHONE NINE-INCH RECORDS
(1902-04)

- 6033 Bonnie, Sweet Bessie.
- 6036 Dixie.
- 6048 Oh, That We Two Were Maying (M-H).
- 6064 Home, Sweet Home.
- 6121 Bohemian Girl—Then You'll Remember Me.
- 6146 Just For Tonight (M-H).

ZON-O-PHONE 10-INCH RECORDS
(1904-05)

- 42 Home, Sweet Home.
- 50 Old Folks at Home.
- 69 In the Starlight (M-H).
- 96 For All Eternity.
- 144 Just My Style (M-H).
- 173 There's Nothing New to Say (M-H).
- 233 Life's Dream is O'er (M-H).
- 297 Oh, That We Two Were Maying (M-H).
- 318 I Will Magnify Thee, Oh Lord (M-H).
- 323 Still as the Night (M-H).

ZON-O-PHONE 10-INCH
DOUBLE-FACED RECORDS

(coupled in 1903-09 from previous single-faced discs)

- 5142 I Will Magnify Thee, O Lord (M-H). Reverse: Life's Dream is O'er. Alice C. Elise Stevenson and Frank C. Stanley.
- 5409 Just My Style (M-H). Reverse: There's Nothing New to Say (M-H).
- 5410 Oh, That We Two Were Maying (M-H). Reverse: Calm as the Night (M-H).

SINGLE-FACED 10-INCH VICTOR RECORDS (1903-08)

(A number in parentheses indicates a 12-inch version of the same disc.)

- 1360 Il Trovatore—Home to Our Mountains (M-Mac).
- 2533 Oh, That We Two Were Maying (M-S).
- 2555 'Deed I Do (M-S).
- 2569 It's a Lovely Day for a Walk (M-S).
- 2578 (31473) St. Paul—But the Lord is Mindful of His Own.
- 2655 Honey.
- 2665 Winsome Winnie—I Love Only You.
- 2721 (31203) Babes in Toyland—Toyland (with Haydn Quartet).
- 2751 (31211) In Dreamland.
- 2756 (31213) Bohemian Girl—Then You'll Remember Me.
- 2808 (31231) Old Folks at Home.
- 2831 (31237) Home, Sweet Home.
- 2845 (31232) Happy Days (M-D'A).
- 2846 Bonnie Sweet Bessie (M-D'A).
- 2909 Cupid Has Found My Heart—Yankee Consul.
- (31270) Faust—Flower Song.
- 2980 (31285) Bohemian Girl—I Dreamt That I Dwelt in Marble Halls.
- 2981 O Hush-a-Bye, Baby (M-D'A).
- 4039 Annie Laurie (M-D'A).
- 4040 (31296) My Old Kentucky Home.
- 4080 (31316) Mocking Bird (M-S).
- 4095 Love's Old Sweet Song.
- 4096 (31313) Sing Me to Sleep (M-D'A).
- 4097 Beyond (M-D'A).
- 4171 Pantana—The Farewell Waltz (M-S).
- 4284 (31338) In Sweet Killarney (M-D'A).

- 4321 (31374) Ben Bolt (M-D'A).
 (31375) Repentance (M-D'A).
 (31376) Star of Love (M-D'A).
 4322 Fantana—Just My Style (M-S).
 4396 Dearie (with Haydn Quartet).
 4397 In Dear Old Grandma's Days (with Haydn Quartet).
 4423 When You and I Were Young, Maggie (M-S).
 4493 (31398) Erminie—Lullaby.
 (31456) Messiah—He Was Despised.
 (31457) The Garden of Sleep.
 4609 What Would You Say, Dear?
 4682 In the Gloaming.
 4696 The Moon Has His Eyes On You (M-S) (8-inch).
 4708 Fantana—Just My Style (M-S) (8-inch).
 4740 By the Light of the Honeymoon (M-S) (8-inch).
 4751 Songs My Mother Used to Sing (M-Mac).
 4764 We Parted as the Sun Went Down (M-S).
 4835 Flee As a Bird.
 4964 O Promise Me (8-inch).
 4976 Forever and Forever.
 4984 The Only One.
 4985 She Wandered Down the Mountain Side.
 (31468) Irish Folk Song.
 (31472) Elijah—O Rest in the Lord.
 (31526) The Moon Has His Eyes On You (M-S).
 (31534) Songs My Mother Used to Sing (M-Mac).
 (31541) Samson—Return, O God of Hosts.
 (31554) Messiah—He Shall Feed His Flock.
 (31555) Il Trovatore—Home to Our Mountains (M-Mac).
 (31584) Lullaby (Pond).
 (31629) Maritana—Holy Mother, Guide His Footsteps (M-Ste).
 5263 Homeward.
 5328 Bohemian Girl—Bliss Forever Past.
 5357 Bid Me Goodbye (Tosti).
 5381 Tyrolean—The Nightingale's Song.
 5414 Samson and Delilah—My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice.
 5415 In Old Madrid.

VICTOR RECORDS BY LYRIC QUARTET

- 120 My Faith Looks Up to Thee.
 4796 Sweet and Low.
 5198 The Kerry Dance.
 5199 Rock of Ages.
 51524 Incline Thine Ear to Me.
 51669 Good Night, Beloved.
 51589 Gloria From Mozart's Twelfth Mass.
 51664 The Radiant Morn.

TEN-INCH DOUBLE-FACED VICTOR RECORDS

- (Coupled, 1908 through 1910, from single-faced discs)
 16119 Tyrolean—Nightingale's Song.
 Reverse: Climbing the Ladder of Love (Stevenson-Macdonough).
 16148 Erminie—Lullaby. Reverse: Dear Heart (Elise Stevenson).
 16185 Fantana—Just My Style (M-S).
 Reverse: I Was a Hero, Too (Billy Murray).
 16192 Samson and Delilah—My Heart At Thy Sweet Voice. Reverse: Laughing Song from "Manon" (Edith Helena).
 16195 My Old Kentucky Home. Reverse: Home, Sweet Home (Harry Macdonough).
 16196 Sing Me to Sleep. Reverse: Oh, Promise Me (Macdonough).
 16245 Bonnie Sweet Bessie. Reverse: All Through the Night (Macdonough).
 16388 Annie Laurie. Reverse: Ben Bolt.
 16389 Old Folks at Home. Reverse: My Old Kentucky Home (Macdonough).
 16405 In the Gloaming. Reverse: Rock Me to Sleep. Mother (Elizabeth Wheeler).
 16549 So Long, Mary (with Haydn Qt.).
 Reverse: Golden Trumpets Schottische (Victor Dance Orchestra).
 16663 Home, Sweet Home. Reverse: Come Where My Love Lies Dreaming (Peerless Qt.).
 16660 Love's Old Sweet Song. Reverse: Oh, Dry Those Tears (Arthur Pryor and Pryor's Band).

TWELVE-INCH DOUBLE-FACED VICTOR RECORDS

- (Coupled, 1908 through 1910, from single-faced discs)
 35062 My Old Kentucky Home. Reverse:

- Day Dreams (Macdonough).
 35086 Faust—Flower Song. Reverse: Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes (Macdonough).
 35089 Elijah—O Rest in the Lord.
 Reverse: Messiah—Comfort Ye My People (Macdonough).
 35117 Messiah—He Shall Feed His Flock.
 Reverse: Messiah—Every Valley Shall Be Exalted (Macdonough).
 35118 Trovatore—Home to Our Mountains (M-Mac). Reverse: Huguenots—Benediction of the Poignards (Sousa's Band).
 35136 Sing Me to Sleep. Reverse: Songs My Mother Used to Sing (M-Mac).
 35162 Ben Bolt. Reverse: The Old Brigade (Stanley and Macdonough).

TEN-INCH EMERSON DOUBLE-FACED RECORD (December, 1921)

- 10464 Just A-Wearyin' for You. Reverse: The Last Rose of Summer (Vivian Holt).

TEN-INCH DOUBLE FACED VICTOR RECORDS BY THE LYRIC QUARTET (1908)

- 16038 God is a Spirit. Reverse: Christ Receiveth Sinful Men (Haydn Quartet).
 16269 Rock of Ages (Buck). Reverse: Calvary (Stanley).

TWELVE-INCH DOUBLE-FACED VICTOR RECORD BY THE LYRIC QUARTET (1908)

- 35014 Radiant Morn—Anthem. Reverse: Glory Song (Haydn Quartet).

GRACE NELSON (Edison)

- 8858 My Little Canoe.

NELSON and STANLEY

- 8814 What Colored Eyes Do You Love?
 8831 Has Your Mother Any More Like You?
 9043 Sambo and Dinah

VICTOR

- 4653 Sambo and Dinah. ....
 4688 We'll Wander in the Bright Moonlight. ....
 4852 Bye, Bye, Ma Honey. ....
 (To Be Continued)

HISTORICAL RECORDS

(Continued from page 36)

reproduction. The bell clangs, whistles toot and the boat pulls away from the levee amid the shouts and laughter of the happy dardies.

"After the singing of 'Little Old Log Cabin in the Lane' and 'Dixie' to a banjo accompaniment, the familiar conversation between the well-known characters of the play ensues and Topsy appears upon the scene and displays her accomplishments as a singer and dancer, banjos also serving as her accompaniment.

"Everybody who has seen Uncle Tom's Cabin—and who hasn't?—will thoroughly appreciate this Record."

The following year, Edison Amberol, Record #765 offered the Edison Concert Band in "Uncle Tom's Cabin—A Dream Picture," by J. Bodewalt Lampe. This number reappeared about 1916 as by Conway's Band on #17493.

"At Uncle Tom's Cabin Door"—Trot, on #17324, was played by the Victor Military Band. The latter vied with the Edison Concert Band, who recorded "Uncle Tom's Cabin" on #3459 and a #35751.

Blue Amberols, advertised for August, 1912, mentioned #1070, "The Troupe at Pumpkin Center," in which Cal Steward said: "Uncle Josh relates his experience as Uncle Tom, when he becomes leading man with the show troupe."

About 1915, Bransby Williams enacted "The Death of Uncle Tom," #29026, for (English) Columbia.

A decade later, the Duncan Sisters, while portraying the title roles in Topsy and Eva, a Broadway success, recorded their songs for Victor.

"Topsy" (Durham-Battle), a fox trot, was conducted by Benny Goodman's orchestra for Victor #26107-A. Count Basie soon rivalled it with Decca's #1770.

From a long-run musical, Bloomer Girl, in 1944, two scenes from an Uncle Tom's Cabin sequence in the play were transcribed by Decca's #DL 8015: "Liza Crossing the Ice" and "Never Was Born," with Toni Hart and Joan McCracken in the leads.

"A Showboat Version with Music of Uncle Tom's Cabin" was recorded by Audio Drama, LP-3080. It had such stars on the disc as Bill Forrest, Joel Ashley, and Dana Kraus.

Most exciting for collectors of Stowiana, however, was the Music Center Theatre of Lincoln Center's album of The King and I, by RCA Victor (Mono LOC-1092, Stereo LSO-1092). It included, for the first time on records, the high spot of the Rodgers and Hammerstein's hit: the imaginative ballet of "The Small House of Uncle Thomas."

* We wonder if Jim Walsh's letter, page 101 of the June issue of HOBBIES, may help. Jim tells us, among other things about cylinder records, that Edison did not come out with his cylinder playing machine until 1888.

But the story of these efforts to authenticate the voice of Harriet Beecher Stowe on a wax cylinder is an example of the painstaking work spent in authenticating most antiques and collectors' items.

IN THE MAIL

Dear Madam:

I've exhausted all personal sources of information on my problem, so I turn to you in the hope that your broader awareness may help to shed some light on the matter.

I have a number of single-faced, 14 inch 60 RPM Victor records. The complete list of my holdings is attached. They are in mint condition and have never been played by me, lacking the proper equipment.

(Continued on page 48)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

CORINNE MORGAN

PART II

By JIM WALSH

I. Scant Biographical Data

Perhaps I should be ashamed to admit it, but I am resorting to a lazy man's method of typing this second installment of the series about Corinne Morgan. I am propped up in bed with my 36-year-old Underwood Noiseless portable typewriter on my knees, and an accumulation of notes beside me.

Well, after all why shouldn't I type in bed? Mark Twain did most of his writing garbed in a white nightshirt and with a pillow behind his back. But he used a pen, and I am enlisting the services of the ancient little old typewriter that has been a faithful companion to me for all these years.

Last month I gave a list of Miss Morgan's records, which it might be a good idea to keep handy for reference. I also quoted a ludicrous purported biographical sketch of her that appeared in the English edition of the Edison Phonograph Monthly. Now I think I shall tell as much more as I can concerning this singer before proceeding to a discussion of her recording career.

In rounding up my reference materials I came across a letter from Keith Moyer of Everett, Wash., which is undated but was written before I left Johnson City, Tenn., for Vinton, Va., in 1943. That places the age of the letter as 28 years or so, but it is interesting to note that Mr. Moyer, a veteran HOBBIES reader, still lives at the same address. Midway of his letter, he said:

"I am particularly interested in getting the birth year of Corinne Morgan Welsh, who married C. W. Dumont of the American Law Book Company in 1924. I assume she is Corinne Morgan of old Victor record fame, as I have seen her name listed both ways, and I know that Corinne Welsh was a leading contralto around 1906. They must be the same person."

And of course they were the same person. Most church and concert singers of the 1890's and early 1900's preferred not to make records under their legal names. Miss Welsh simply used her two given names for phonograph work.

Keith Moyer's letter made stronger a desire I already had to write about Corinne Morgan whenever I could obtain sufficient information to undertake the task. But gathering material has proved a vexingly slow process during the virtual generation that has passed since he wrote to me. I still don't know the exact date of the contralto's birth, or when, and where she died.

When I met the late Harvey Hinder-myer at John Bieling's home at Hempstead, N.Y., in September, 1947, he laughingly referred to the traditionally explosive nature of the colorful singer's temper and said she had been dead "two or three years." He expressed belief that she died somewhere in the Middle West, perhaps in Cincinnati. But I have not been able to obtain more specific information.

As to Miss Morgan's birth date, I have learned that she was born either in 1875 or 1874, so she must have been around 70 years of age at her death, if Hindermyer's statement was approximately correct. My old friend, Milford H. Fargo, of Rochester, N.Y., who is the leading authority on Ada Jones and her recordings, had a

HELP!

VOD-VIL QUARTETS:

Records & Illustrated Sheets

I'm writing a discography and short biography of the quartets that predated the Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barber Shop Quartet Singing in America—started in 1938.

Need info on the following groups in form of newspaper clippings, records, sheets, music, etc.: Apollo, American, A&P Gypsies, Amphion, Apollo, Aristocrats, Avon Comedy Four, Blue Dandies, Binghamton Kiwanis Quartet, Broadway, Brunswick, Cameo Male Quartet, Chicago Glee Club Quartet, College Four, Clover Quartet, Columbia Stellar, Criterion, Deep River Boys, Diplomats, Edison Quartet, Cities Service Quartet, Elm City Four, Empire Staters, Eton Boys, Harmonizers, Haydn, Heidelberg, Imperial, Invincible, Knickerbocker, Metropolitan, Merry-makers.

National Male Quartet, National Music Lovers Stellar Quartet, Orpheus, Peerless, Eton Boys, Premier, Quixy Four, Revelers, Shannon, Southern, Sportsmen, Sterling, Universal, Church City Four, That Quartette, Stanford Four, Electric City, The Big Four.

DON DONAHUE

65 Mountain Ave.

Cedar Knolls, N.J. 07927

aucN

RESEARCH HELPER. Keith Moyer of Everett, Wash., provided Jim Walsh with information about Corinne Morgan. This snapshot of Mr. Moyer was taken on a street in Vancouver, British Columbia.

Antique

MUSIC BOX SPECIALISTS

Complete repair service, cylinders re-planned, combs repaired and tuned. all work guaranteed.

Large stock of finest
instruments for sale.

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. 10803

Phone: 914 - PE 8-1506

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Reforeathered

Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

tfc

40

SACRED NUMBERS

NUMBER

SIZE

31770 Messiah—Hallelujah Chorus (with Sousa's Band; Victor Chorus) 12

The "Messiah" continues to endure wherever the English-speaking race has gained a foothold, and is now regarded as almost a sacred service.

Several numbers from this noble oratorio are presented, including the tremendous Hallelujah Chorus, perhaps the grandest and most sublime composition of its kind. It is splendidly given by the carefully chosen chorus which the Victor has brought together. A noble accompaniment is furnished by Sousa's Band, and the record deserves to rank with the most remarkable of the Victor's productions.

PERCY HEMUS

This Victor singer has been warmly greeted by his beautiful voice and inspired accompaniment much admired. The splendid records he has given the Victor have achieved a great artistic success.

4818 Nearer My God to Thee Richard José 10
109 Nearer My God to Thee Haydn Quartet 10

4755 Ninety and Nine, The Richard José 10
This beautiful hymn is perhaps the favorite among the hundreds of Mr. Sankey's compositions.

The number is beautifully sung by Mr. José, with a soft accompaniment by a quartet of strings.

2725 O Come All Ye Faithful—Adeste Fideles (with organ) José 10

31386 One Sweetly Solemn Thought (Ambrose) Stanley 12

2373 Onward Christian Soldiers (Sullivan) Trinity Choir 10

2724 O Paradise (J. Barnby) (with organ) Richard José 10

108 Palms, The Faure; Macdonough 10
Macdonough 12

31601 Palms, The (Faure) Macdonough 12
Splendid records of this noble sacred song; Mr. Macdonough's rendition being beyond criticism, while the accompaniment is unusually effective. Both verses are given on the twelve-inch.

4993 Pass Me Not, O Gentle Saviour (Doane) Stanley-Macdonough 10
4913 Praise Ye (Music from "Atila") (Verdi) Schubert Trio 10

4462 Rescue the Perishing (Doane) Werrenrath 10
717 Rock of Ages (Haatings) Trinity Choir 10

4782 Rock of Ages (with organ) Richard José 10
4271 Safe in the Arms of Jesus Trinity Choir 10

4470 Shall We Meet Beyond the River (Rice) Stanley-Macdonough 10

2686 Softly Now the Light of Day Richard José 10
1082 Some Time We'll Understand (McGranahan) Trinity Choir 10

723 Stand Up for Jesus Webb, Trinity Choir 10
2669 Sun of My Soul Richard José 10

5823 Teach Me to Pray (Jewett) Macdonough 10

The new sacred song just published by M. Witmark & Sons, who have been devoting much attention of late to their issues of high class songs and other serious compositions.

4654 Tell Mother I'll Be There Haydn Quartet 10
4516 Tho' Your Sins be as Scarlet (Doane) Stanley-Macdonough 10

4689 When the Roll is Called up Yonder (Black) Haydn Quartet 10
1315 Where Is My Boy To Night (Lowry) Haydn Quartet 10

MORGAN

FASHIONABLE CHAPEAU. A page from the May, 1911, Victor record catalog, with a thumbnail picture of Corinne Morgan. The contralto seems to be wearing headgear of the "Bird on Nellie's Hat" type that was so popular more than 60 years ago.

search made for me by the New York State Library at Albany.

The Library's records show that on June 1, 1915, Corinne Morgan Welsh was living in New York City at 226 Central Park West. (Many years later, when I met and talked with the great violinist, Mischa Elman, in the early 1960's, his address was 100 Central Park West.) Corinne was described as "head of family, white, female, 40 years of age, born in the United States, citizen, singer. No other persons are listed as being in her household."

Thus it follows that if the singer was 40 in June, 1915, she must have been born in 1875 or 1874.

Over the years I have made intermittent efforts to find out more about Miss Morgan, but not with a great deal of success. On August 15, 1957, I had a letter from Philip L. Miller of the Music Division of the New York Public Library in reply to one I had written to him, asking for any information he could give.

I shall quote from it, but preface the quotation with a speculation that the "Jimmy Price" he refers to is the James Price, who was mentioned as a member of the Victor Male Chorus in my article, "A Matter of Identification", published in HOBBIES for July, 1970. My friend Phil Miller wrote:

"I have held up your question on Corinne Morgan in hopes I could get more information for you. I called Elsie Baker, who said she had not known her personally, then Jimmy Price, to whom the name Corinne Morgan meant nothing.

"At this time I mentioned (what I did not know before you wrote me) that she was also known as Welsh. Of course he remembered Corinne Welsh! She used to sing in a quartet with John Young.

"John Young, it seems, is still around—over 90 and Price said he'd try to find him. What was last week and I still hope to hear . . . We have a folder of clippings, pictures, etc., but all it tells is that she was well known, sang with Damrosch, etc., and studied abroad with Mrs. Carl Alves."

Apparently Mr. Price was not able to find John Young, who was not really over 90 at the time, for he wrote me in 1950 that he was then in his 80th year. Too, I have a belief that he died before 1957, but have no positive evidence. At any rate, I heard no more from Mr. Miller on the subject.

Phil's letter reminded me, however, that, years before, John Young's duet partner, Frederick Wheeler, had written to me that although he had made records with Corinne Welsh for Zonophone, Mr. Young knew her better than he did because Mr. Young had sung regularly in church with her. I wrote to Young, but in answering my letter he omitted any reference to my questions about the contralto. It was from Mr. Wheeler that I learned her full name was Corinne Morgan Welsh.

II. Help From Keith Moyer

During recent months I have corresponded with Keith Moyer concerning other matters. In the course of our writing I recalled the letter he wrote to me in 1942 about Corinne Morgan, and asked if he had obtained any additional information.

On December 12, he replied, quoting some clippings he had saved from 1922 and 1923 issues of Musical America. A 1922 excerpt said:

"Corinne Morgan Welsh, who has appeared throughout the country in concert and as one of the principal soloists on the transcontinental tour of the New York Symphony, Walter Damrosch, conductor, is to be heard this season in concert and oratorio. She will sing under the management of Charles Pearson, who entered the managerial field last spring to direct the tour of Mme. Olive Fremstad."

The 1923 clipping dealt with the singer's marriage and incidentally revealed that it took place in 1923, rather than in 1924, as Mr. Moyer had written in his earlier letter. The clipping said:

"Corinne Welsh, church and concert contralto, was married to Charles Walter Dumont in the West Park Presbyterian Church on December 22. Mrs. Dumont, who studied singing both in this country and in Europe, was for a number of years contralto at the Collegiate Church of St. Nicholas in New York. She has toured with the New York Symphony and has appeared as soloist at the Maine Festivals and in numerous recitals. After a honeymoon in California and Hawaii, Mr. and Mrs. Dumont will make their home in New York."

A year or so ago, in one of my tries at obtaining information about Corinne Morgan, I wrote to the American Law Book Company, of which her husband had been an official, and asked if he was still living or if the Company had any information concerning the time and place of her death. To my disappointment, I received no answer.

Musical America's statement that the couple would make their home in New York appears to contradict Harvey Hindermeyer's belief that Mrs. Dumont was living in the Middle West when she died. Of course, however, it may be that her husband, in the development of his business, was transferred from New York to Ohio

A CYLINDRICAL TRIO. Jim Walsh recently came across this picture which he had forgotten existed, and decided that since Corinne Morgan was a popular maker of cylinder records it would be suitable to illustrate this article. The snapshot was taken in South Boston, Va., more than 20 years ago and shows Nat Terry and Jim Walsh, who apparently are trying to "play" their cylinders as musical instruments, and Albert Via, Jr., who seems to be using his as a sea-shell. The records belonged to Mr. Terry.

or some Western State. The New York State Library birth record indicates she was 49 or 50 at the time of her marriage.

III. Alan Grinsted's Recollections

One of the most interesting things concerning Corinne Morgan and her marriage was told me quite incidentally by a naval commander, Lt. Alan D. Grinsted, when he and his wife, Betty, and their two children stopped to see me as they were passing through Roanoke, Va., 15 years, or more, ago.

Alan, who is now retired and living in Pensacola, Fla., was the youngest son of William Stanley Grinsted, the famous basso known on records as "Frank C. Stanley". It was Frank Stanley who organized the Peerless Quartet and who was Miss Morgan's duet partner for several years.

Lt. Grinsted wasn't sure of the year, but the evidence suggests it was in 1923, that he, as a teen-aged boy, had reason to call at the office of a New York music publishing firm, or some other business house. (I've forgotten the exact details.) When he said his name was Grinsted, a vivacious, middle-aged woman of attractive appearance turned to him and asked if he were Stanley Grinsted's son.

Upon being told he was, she identified herself as Corinne Welsh, recalled her recording associations with his father, and said that she gave up making records after Frank Stanley died, "because I just didn't have the heart to go on."

Then she revealed that she was soon to be married. It looks as if she had her share of the average musician's superstitions for she said that she recently had been to a fortune teller, who told her she was to meet a wealthy, distinguished looking man with white hair, and would marry him.

Sure enough, within a few weeks after the fortune teller did her sooth-saying, Corinne met Charles Walter Dumont. They immediately were attracted to each other, and were engaged then. She showed Alan Grinsted a snapshot of her future husband. He was a distinguished looking man with white hair.

The naval commander-to-be never again saw Miss Welsh, but, as we know, she and Dumont were married in December, 1923. I am not sure, by the way, that she used Dumont's name in the conversation, but I do recall clearly that my friend told me about her showing him the photograph.

Miss Morgan was wrong in saying she gave up recording after Frank Stanley's death. Her phonograph career came to a close some two years before he died.

As far as I know, she sang for no more records until Emerson issued one solo by her late in 1921, but I admit the possibility she may have made other Emersons that have not come to my attention. And she also may have recorded for Rex, Opera-phone, and other obscure brands for which I have no catalogs. That, however, I think is hardly likely.

I just have found a note from Milford Fargo which I previously had overlooked, saying the Manhattan and Bronx City Directory for 1916 gave the home address of Corinne Welsh as 225 Central Park West, not 226, as the New York State Library had it.

The note also shows that the mysterious contralto, Mrs. A. Stewart Holt, who made so many Columbia records, and about whom I wish I knew enough to write for HOBBIES, was living in 1913 at 1962 Fulton Street, Brooklyn. She was a widow, as she had been at the start of her recording career.

The late Frank Dorian, a veteran Columbia official whom I often have quoted told me Mrs. Holt—sometimes known as Marie L. Holt—gave up phonograph work when she remarried about 1914 or soon thereafter.

And now I have found another note, written to me June 14, 1946, by Barbara F. Turner, secretary of the Brick Presbyterian Church at Park Avenue and 91st Street, New York. Mrs. J. W. Hulihan, known on Victor records as the beloved soprano, Olive Kline, had written me she believed that Corinne Morgan had sung at some time in the Brick Church, and I wrote to ask what the Church records said. Miss Turner replied:

"Corinne Welsh (Mrs. C. W. Dumont), contralto, is not a soloist at the Brick Church, and I understand never has sung in this Church.

"Mrs. Hulihan (Olive Kline), however, has sung in the Brick Church. It is possible that Mrs. Hulihan has confused the name of Corinne Welsh with that of our soprano soloist, Corleen Wells.

"I regret that I cannot give you any assistance in locating Corinne Welsh."

If Corinne Morgan died in New York, it is strange that Variety did not publish an obituary notice and that The New York Times informed me its files held nothing concerning her. Had her death occurred in some other part of the country it would have been much easier for it to have escaped the attention of metropolitan periodicals.

IV. Edison Cylinders

I have little doubt that Miss Morgan owed the start of her recording career to being associated with Frank C. Stanley in church singing. He already was established by 1898 in the phonograph world as a singer of bass and baritone solos.

The Edison record catalog for that year contained 12 cylinders by him, all patriotic songs, numbered from 5000 to 5011. In addition, he had won a contest in banjo playing and been acclaimed the best banjoist in New Jersey, with the result that, beginning in 1899, he played banjo accompaniments for eight Negro songs by Arthur Collins.

In this banjo work Stanley disguised his identity by calling himself George S. Williams, but as early as 1892-3 he had made a few banjo solos for the old North American Phonograph Company's brown wax cylinders under his real name, W. S. Grinsted. The tunes he played are forgotten now—No. 128, "Joyful Hour Schottische;" 129, "Lumber Yard Jig;" 431, "Carrie Polka," and 432, "Darkies" Banjo Club."

Ever on the alert for new ways to increase his recorded repertoire and income, Stanley must have decided there would be a demand for good contralto and bass, or baritone, duets, especially since these deeper voices recorded better in those pioneer days than tenors and sopranos. I imagine he mentioned this belief to Miss Morgan and suggested that he try to round up some work for them.

In this he was successful. I cannot be sure whether the pair did their first recording for Edison or Columbia—the problem of their first Columbia duetizing is a tricky one—but I am sure they were given a trial

OLD DROVER INN

31 Jefferson Street, P.O. Box 6
Westfield, N.Y. 14787

ANTIQUARIAN SUPPLIES

ORIGINAL "EAGLE" No. 2
All electrified brass plated and lacquered burner adapted with 6 ft. white or brown cord $1.50 ea. ($15 per doz.) With 7" or 10" tripod shade holder or with 4" ball shade holder $2.00 each.

— o —

SOLID BRIGHT BRASS ELECTRIFIED BURNERS
No. 1 or No. 2 $2.00 each
Choice of Ivory or brown cord
No. 1 with 7" tripod or No. 2 with 4" ball shade holder or 7" or 10" tripod $2.75 ea.

— o —

U DROP CRYSTAL CLEAR
Glass Prisms 18c each. $2.00 doz.

3" (3½" overall including jewel)

CRYSTAL PRISMS PLAIN SPEAR

CUT SPEAR

CUT OR PLAIN 6"
PRISMS WITH INCLUDED JEWEL.
OVERALL 7". $1 ea. or $10.00 a doz.
TRIPOLI for burnishing copper and brass one lb. bar $1.50 each.

— o —

CRYSTAL BOBECHES
Thin Candle Bobeche, 3", No Pin Holes 50c ea., $5 a doz.

— o —

ELECTRIC FIXTURES with No. 1 or No. 2 Adapters, 85 cents each.
(With 7" or 10" tripod, $1.25 ea.)
Gilded Wire. UNIVERSAL CUP AND SAUCER STAND. Demi-tasse or teacup size 30c ea. or $3 a mixed doz.

— o —

PORCELAIN FURNITURE KNOBS WITH SCREWS

(1 Brass & 1 Black Each)
¾" ..... 30c ea. 1-3/16 ..... 40c ea.
1" ..... 35c ea. 1½" ..... 45c ea.
Six or more of any size 5c less each

Add 15% for postage. Excess postage refunded. Include 20c more for insurance, if desired. All orders packed and shipped 1 hour after being received. No C.O.D.'s. 10% discount on all orders of $10 or more. New York State residents add 6% sales tax. Minimum order $1.00.

OLD FRENCH HAVILAND

Bought and Sold
CUP and SAUCER SHOP

809 So. Maguire, Warrensburg, Mo.
Send sample or Schleiger number ttc

DOUBLE SPRING PLATE HANGER

(See below for prices and sizes)

Minimum order $1

Simple in construction. Meets any requirement of a plate hanger. Sizes for plates as follows:

- #0 for 1" to 5½"
- #½ for 5" to 8½"
- #1 for 8" to 7½"
- #2 for 7½" to 9"
- #3 for 9" to 10½"
- #4 for 10½" to 11½"
- #5 for 11½" to 12½"
- #6 for 12½" to 17½"

All sizes 39c ea. Individually wrapped
$3.00 any assorted dozen
All solid brass

— o —

PLAIN COLONIAL

STAR COLONIAL

PLAIN OR STAR
COLONIAL CRYSTAL PRISMS 4"
(5" overall with included jewel)
50c each or $5.00 doz.

CRYSTAL BOBECHES
Diamond Quilt Cut 3" Diameter
Pin Holes $1.00 each or $10.00 a doz.

— o —

BRASS FIXTURE HANGER

with 6" leads. An easy way to display and sell fixtures — plus convenience to unhook and clean chandelier, etc. $1.50 ea. With large cast brass hook $2.50 ea., assembled.

— o —

ALL SOLID BRASS
Plate stands—sm. & med. 30c ea., $3.00 a doz. Lge. PLATE SIZE 50c ea., $5.00 a doz.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 41)

seems to indicate that if she really walked out after being accused of flitting there was a reconciliation a little later.

Among other activities, the two sang together on Victor records in the Lyric Quartet, whose other members were Elise Stevenson, soprano, and Harry Macdonough, tenor. Corinne and Stanley did cease to make duets, however, before the brunette contralto's recording career ended.

And now it occurs to me I have neglected to mention that Miss Morgan sang as a member of a number of Edison ensembles. She was one of the Edison Sextet, which consisted, besides herself, of Ada Jones, George Seymour Lenox, Grace Nelson (Grace Hornby), Bob Roberts, and Stanley. They sang a re-make of "The Floradora Sextet." Corinne also sang with "Miss Chappell" (Edith Chapman), George M. Stricklett and Stanley in the Mendelssohn Mixed Quartet, and was a member of the Metropolitan Mixed Trio, her associates being Lenox and Stanley.

In the autumn of 1947 I called on Stanley's daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Repelow, at her home in West Orange, N.J. She pointed out to me the old Grinstead residence, where her father lived when he was serving as a town alderman besides making records, and took me to see Mrs. Byron G. Harlan.

Mrs. Repelow also gave me a handsome poster with pictures of Victor Red Seal artists of the period around 1907, which had belonged to Frank C. Stanley. It now hangs in the downstairs hall of my home, and I still am hoping to find a companion poster with likenesses of the "popular" artists of that time.

Finally, she presented me with two or three sheets of music which had belonged to Corinne Morgan Welsh and on which the contralto had written her name. I have them put away somewhere, but don't know just where they are, or I would show you the cover of one with this article.

(To Be Continued)

— o —

MORE ABOUT VICTOR BLUE LABEL RECORDS

By a slip of the pen, I gave the impression in my "Victor Record Sales" article published in the June HOBBIES that Victor was still making Blue Label records for domestic sale in 1929.

That is incorrect. The Blue Label was discontinued within a couple of years after electric recording was introduced in 1925, and artists in that classification—such as Harry Lauder, Olive Kline and Elsie Baker—were transferred to Red Seal status. Their records, however, were sold at the former Blue Label prices and they were termed "Junior Red Seal Artists."

It would have been better if I had brought out the fact that Victor's Red Seal record sales in 1929 of a little more than 2,000,000 copies actually included what had formerly been the Blue Label series. Thus, even with the help of such a popular performer as Lauder, sales, in effect, of both the former Blue Label and Red Seal double-faced categories were less than the 1914 sales of single-faced Red Seals had been alone.

—Jim Walsh

French Haviland China

Use Schleiger's Book numbers or send sample of your china.

THE OLD TOLL GATE
Milan, Illinois Phone 787-2392
Hwy. 67 bet. Rock Island & Milan, Ill. ttc

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

CORINNE MORGAN

PART III

By JIM WALSH

I. Miss Morgan's Zonophones

Last month Corinne Morgan's comparatively short list of Edison two-minute cylinders (she made none of the four-minute type) was discussed. This time, because the Zonophone list also is short and requires little research, I shall begin with it. And we are destined to discover something surprising about her Zono duet discs.

I lack Zonophone supplements for 1903 and 1904, but I do have a numerical catalog dated July, 1904. By doing some "figuring" backwards I have decided the contralto's first record for the Victor subsidiary was issued in February of that year.

As a rule, Zonophone listed exactly 25 records a month, so by counting back from 6168, the highest number in the catalog, to 6033, Miss Morgan's earliest number, I determined that February was the month it came out.

The title of this first Morgan record was "Bonnie Sweet Bessie." Previously, the Company had been making discs in both 7-inch and 9-inch sizes. But by the beginning of 1904 no new 7-inch were being added, so all the Morgan records were 9-inch, until that size was discontinued in favor of the 10-inch in December, 1904.

Another Morgan record also was issued in February. It was "Dixie." This seems a rather unsuitable and uncharacteristic number for her to sing, although Frieda Hempel later recorded it for Edison, and Mabel Garrison and the Orpheus (Victor) Quartet sang it for Victor.

The Garrison version was one of the few records of "Dixie" ever issued by any company that proved a poor seller. It was announced in April, 1917, and was discontinued after 1922.

In March came that Morgan and Stanley duet favorite, "O That We Two Were Maying." But—and this is the surprise to which I referred—it wasn't sung by Corinne and Frank, but by Miss Morgan and Frederick Wheeler, who then was using the assumed name of James F. Harrison.

As long as the contralto made duet records for Zonophone her partner never was Frank C. Stanley. It was always Harrison—who, incidentally, a few months earlier, had recorded "O That We Two" as a solo on Zonophone 9-inch record No. 5939!

Now how are we to account for the fact that Zonophone eschewed the Morgan-Stanley combination when Frank Stanley regularly was recording solos for them? I can only surmise, but my guess, I think, is a good one.

Stanley was not under contract and was working by the date, but Harrison was being paid $1,400 a year for his exclusive services—an amount which, he told me long years later, "seemed big to a struggling young singer." By using him instead of Stanley, the Company was obliged to pay only Miss Morgan a fee for her services. Harrison's work was included in his contract.

The free-lancing Stanley Grinstead, therefore, was excluded from duet performances with the lady, although he and Byron G. Harlan were recording comic ("rube") sketches written by Stanley.

Miss Morgan also had a solo, "Home, Sweet Home," in March. She seems not to have been present in April or May, but in June she was represented by "Then You'll Remember Me." And in July she and Harrison sang "Just For Tonight."

My catalog of 9-inch records ends with the July list, so there may have been a few other Morgan solos and duets before the 10-inch records were introduced at the end of 1904.

The June, 1905 Zonophone record catalog is the only round one I have seen. It is shaped like a Zonophone record, and the front and back covers are facsimiles of the label of No. 5213, "Zonophone Waltz," played by the Zonophone Orchestra. It lists a number of Morgan solos and duets, for which I have been able to deduce the date of issue:

"Home, Sweet Home" and "Old Folks at Home" were placed on sale in January, 1905, as Morgan solos, and were followed in March by "For All Eternity"—one of the two songs she had remade for Edison after they had been recorded first by Nellie Thomas.

A Morgan-Harrison duet, "In the Starlight," came out in February; another, "Just My Style," in May; and, gives you 20 of the best known and loved operatic airs as heard on the famous Regina Music Boxes during the late 1890 and early 1900 period.

"Regina Sings Opera"

They are all from a 27" diameter disc Regina Music Box—the largest and finest made, now offered on this fine Stereo record. RCB-6, $4.98 Postpaid

Free List of other Music Box Recordings
BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave. Pelham, N.Y. 10803

Antique

MUSIC BOX SPECIALISTS

Complete repair service, cylinders re-planned, combs repaired and tuned, all work guaranteed.

Large stock of finest
instruments for sale.

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. 10803

Phone: 914 - PE 8-1506

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Re feathered

Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

tfc

76

CONTRALTO SOLOS

By Corinne Morgan with orchestra
31629 Dreams	Strelezki 12
31270 Flower Song—Faust	Gounod 12
4976 Forever and Forever	Tosti 10
5263 Homeward	Lane 10
31554 He Shall Feed His Flock
31456 He Was Despised	Messiah Handel 12
2831 Home, Sweet Home	Payne 10
31237 Home, Sweet Home	Payne 12
4493 Lullaby from Erminie	10
31338 Lullaby from Erminie	12
2880 I Dreamt I Dwelt in Marble Halls	Bohemian Girl Balfe 10
31285 I Dreamt I Dwelt in Marble Halls	Balfe 12
4632 In the Gloaming	Harrison 8-10
31584 Lullaby (Violin obbligato)	Pond 12
4635 Love's Old Sweet Song	Molloy 10
4040 My Old Kentucky Home	Foster 8-10
31296 My Old Kentucky Home	Foster 12
2808 Old Folks at Home	Swanee River Foster 8-10
31231 Old Folks at Home	Swanee River Foster 12
4964 O Promise Me	De Koven 8
31472 O Rest in the Lord	Eliah Mendelssohn 12
31541 Return, O God of Hosts	Samson Handel 12
4985 She Wandered Down the Mountain Side	Clay 10
31457 The Garden of Sleep	De Lara 12
31473 The Lord is Mindful of His Own—St. Paul	12
4984 The Only One	Herbert 10
2756 Then You'll Remember Me	Balfe 10
31213 Then You'll Remember Me	Balfe 12
By Corinne Morgan with violin obbligato
4039 Annie Laurie	Lady Scott 10
4321 Ben Bolt	Kneass 10
31374 Ben Bolt	Kneass 12
2846 Bonnie Sweet Bessie	Old Scotch 10
2845 Happy Days	Strelezki 10
31232 Happy Days	Strelezki 12
2081 O Hush-a-by Baby	J. C. Bartlett 10
4036 Sing Me to Sleep	Greene 10
31313 Sing Me to Sleep	Greene 12
31376 Star of Love	Robaudi 12
Miss Morgan and Hayda Quartet—See pages 94 to 99
By Florence Hinkle with violin obbligato
4874 Believe Me if All Those Endearing Young Charms	10
By Pearl Beahm with orchestra
5187 In Maytime	Speaks 10

TALENTED CONTRALTO. This photo of Corinne Morgan appeared in the Victor catalog for January, 1908, on a page listing her records.

"There's Nothing New to Say," in June. These were mostly numbers the contralto sang with Stanley for other companies.

There was then a gap of five months during which no solos or duets by Miss Morgan appeared. Finally, in November, she and Harrison sang "Life's Dream is O'er" and the perennial "O That We Two Were Maying." A month later they had two more duets, "I Will Magnify Thee, O Lord," and "Still as the Night."

The end of 1905 seems to have marked the conclusion of Miss Morgan's Zonophone association. I have not been able to find that she made any more Zono records after "Still as the Night."

When double-faced discs were introduced, none of her solos was taken into the catalog, but No. 5409 combined "Just My Style" and "There's Nothing New to Say," also 5410, "O That We Two Were Maying," and "Still as the Night."

The 1909 catalog contained several records by the Mendelssohn Mixed Quartet (you recall that Miss Morgan sang with a group by that name on Edison cylinders). But the Zonophones were made in 1907 and 1908, when she no longer worked for that Company, so I have not included them in the previously published list.

II. Columbia Cylinders and Discs

I do not think it necessary to discuss Corinne Morgan's Columbia records in detail. As a glance will show, it largely duplicates the discs and cylinders she and Frank Stanley made for other companies.

Nevertheless, I'm wondering whether their first duet offering, on both types of Columbia records, was "O That We Two Were Maying." These have low numbers for both the disc, 1184, and the cylinder, 32119, which indicates a probable 1903 recording date.

But! The January, 1904, catalog also lists a disc No. 816, "When We Are Married," as by "contralto and baritone" (the catalogs prior to 1907 seldom gave the artists' names) and when this song was carried over into the double-faced list it was specified that it was sung by Morgan and Stanley.

If they made the original single-faced record, which came out, apparently, in the summer of 1902, then this seems to have been the first duet they sang for any company. Their version in the double-faced form may be a re-make of the original, but I can't think of any other pre-1903 contralto and baritone who would have been suited to record it.

Also, there is the puzzle of cylinder No. 31611, "Reuben and Cynthia," the couple's only genuinely comic number. They certainly recorded it late in 1903 on disc No. 1460. Their cylinder, however, seems to have been a re-do of one previously performed by other singers, for both the 1902 and 1904 cylinder catalogs say it is by a soprano and baritone.

In 1905 the identification is changed to contralto and baritone. Who the soprano was is something of a mystery. Minnie Emmett is the only high-voiced woman I can think of. She was making Columbia records in 1902, and was capable of comedy, as she proved by her solo. "If Money Talks It Ain't On Speaking Terms With Me." The baritone may have been Stanley—or somebody else.

As with Edison, "Deed I Do" followed closely behind "O That We Two Were Maying," and from there on the Columbia Morgan-Stanley duets take on a familiar appearance.

Miss Morgan made few solos for Edison. That is also true of Columbia. In January, 1904, three cylinder solos were offered by her: 32339, "Happy Day"; 32340, "Angel's Serenade," and 32341, "Whisper and I Shall Hear," which she sang a little later for Edison.

All had violin obbligatos, presumably by Charles D'Almaine, who also played in some of her Edison and Victor records. They must have been a bit too highbrow for the average cylinder record buyer, for all were cut out from the 1906 catalog, which contained not a single contralto solo.

Either the music was too "high class," or the combination of female voice and violin sounded, as it frequently did by the recording methods of those days, too much like a harrowing cat fight.

Other solos by Miss Morgan were "Cupid Has Found My Heart" and "Toyland" (the latter with a male chorus), issued in August, 1904. "So

SINGING ASSOCIATE. We already have reprinted an early photo of Frederick Wheeler (James F. Harrison), who made Zonophone duets with Corinne Morgan. Here is one taken several years later.

Long, Mary," also with a chorus, came in May, 1906. The Columbia Record said of "Mary," "it is a faithful reproduction of the song exactly as presented by Fay Templeton and chorus in the new musical comedy, 'Forty-Five Minutes From Broadway.' Sung by Miss Corinne Morgan with chorus, making it one of our most attractive numbers."

In November, 1904, the Morgan-Stanley partnership temporarily was interrupted when the genial basso sang two numbers with another contralto, Grace Nelson, who, you remember, had taken part in the Edison "Floradora Sextet," otherwise known as "Tell Me, Pretty Maiden." The titles of both numbers asked questions: "What Color Eyes Do You Love?" "Has Your Mother Any More at Home Like You?"

Perhaps Miss Morgan was spending the summer in Europe. She often did. And Miss Nelson may have been called in to take her place, as she also did later in some Victor records.

Some time afterward, a woman named Grace Nelson was killed in an accident in Chicago. The news of her death must have been widely published, for the New Phonogram reported the Edison Company had been swamped with inquiries as to whether the deceased Miss Nelson was the contralto singer.

With a touch of impatience, the editor explained that "our Miss Nelson" was still alive and in good health and, anyway, "Grace Nelson is a nom de plume." As we know, her real name was Grace Hornby.

By October, 1906, Miss Morgan had ended her Columbia activities. In July, she had a solo of "Last Night," and her final Columbia duet with Stanley, "A Tale of a Stroll," was offered.

Her October record also was a solo, described as "a most agreeable contralto record of Gerald Lane's delightful ballad, 'Homeward,' investing the beautiful theme with wonderful depth of sentiment." She also sang "Homeward" for Victor.

(Continued on page 40)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

Corinne Morgan's departure from Columbia may have been caused by Mrs. A. Stewart Holt being engaged as the Company's staff contralto. Too, she apparently had "split" amicably with Frank Stanley, for a few months later he began to record extensively with a soprano, Elise Stevenson, as his feminine partner, in addition to making innumerable duets with the popular young tenor, Henry Burr.

There is also a possibility that Miss Morgan had signed an exclusive Victor contract, for during the two years remaining of her recording career she sang for no other company.

The Busy Bee cylinders included in the list of Morgan records were made from Columbia originals.

III. Miss Morgan's Victor Career

Now we come by way of climax to incomparably that most important of Corinne Morgan's recorded activities. Her Victor record list was much longer than any other, and Victor was the only company that allowed her to do a serious type of work in keeping with her established reputation as a concert and oratorio artist.

This is not to say that her Victor repertoire did not duplicate much of the music she and Stanley Grinstead were singing for other companies, only that, in addition, Miss Morgan was permitted to sing oratorio and operatic music that the others did not record.

I do not have Victor supplements for the first few months of 1904. My system of "back checking," however, indicates the first Morgan-Stanley record came out in, or about, that January, perhaps a month before their first Zonophone disc.

It was "O That We Two Were Maying." Its number was 2533. Twenty-two numbers later the equally ubiquitous "Deed I Do" turned up on 2555. Both were made during the period of piano accompaniments.

Following close behind was 2569, the already mentioned Harry Von Tilzer song, "It's a Lovely Day for a Walk." All three were made in both 7-inch and 10-inch sizes.

Then came Miss Morgan's first solo, "The Lord Is Mindful of His Own," from Mendelssohn's oratorio, "St. Paul." Its number, 2578, was prefixed by an M, indicating "Monarch," to show it was available only in 10-inch. However, it soon was issued on 31473, in the 12-inch size.

There seems no need of mentioning individually the remainder of Miss Morgan's 1904 Victor solos. By January, 1905, she had made 15. But the following is something that probably will surprise you as much as it did me.

Despite Frank C. Stanley's well-established reputation as a leading recording artist, he was not permitted to make any solos for Victor until his contralto partner, whom he presumably had introduced to talking machine work, had those 15 to her credit.

His first solo, No. M4079, "The Birthday of a King," was announced in December, 1904. It was not a great success and was cut out of the catalog in April, 1908. Traveling in tandem with it was another Morgan Stanley duet, 4080, the familiar "Listen to the Mocking Bird."

This ditty by Septimus Winner, which has been said to have sold more copies in sheet music than any other song ever written, had the distinction on Columbia of occupying the reverse side of double-faced disc No. A278. This disc was the purported recording of President McKinley's Address at the Pan-American Exposition, but I will prove in a succeeding article that it was not.

Another surprising thing about Corinne Morgan's early Victor recordings was the large number with violin obligatos by Charles D'Almaine. The January, 1906, catalog contained 14 of these, with the comment:

"No selections in our catalog have been more popular than Miss Morgan's records with violin accompaniment. She has one of the most beautiful contralto voices in America, and sings with exquisite taste."

Despite these eulogistic remarks, the combination of female vocalist and violinist (D'Almaine really played a Stroh viol, with a metallic amplifying horn attached), frequently sounded terrible in those days, as I already have mentioned. And the evidence indicates the Morgan-D'Almaine discs were not so popular as the catalog said.

By September, 1907, the 14 records had dropped to 11. In September, 1908, there were only nine. And just three remained in 1909—4039, "Annie Laurie"; 2846, "Bonnie Sweet Bessie," and 2845, "Happy Days."

Returning for a moment to the December, 1904, list, that month, which brought Frank Stanley's first Victor solo, also was marked by his first duets for the Company with Byron G. Harlan. They sang two favorite old Civil War songs, M4099 "The Battle Cry of Freedom," and M4100, "Dixie." They also did two of the highly popular "rube" skits written by Stanley—M4106, "Scene in a Country Blacksmith Shop," and M4107, "A Rheumatism Cure in Jayville Center."

From that time, until his lamentably early death in December, 1910, Frank Stanley was one of Victor's most popular soloists and duettists. He worked not only with Miss Morgan, but indefatigably with Harry Macdonough, Henry Burr, Harlan, and Elise Stevenson. Miss Morgan never had more than a fraction of his sustained popularity.

In discussing her Columbia records I mentioned that the Morgan-Stanley combination temporarily was interrupted in 1904 when the basso sang two duets with Grace Nelson. A similar interruption occurred in the Victor lists, but in 1906. The month of May brought two duets by the changed pair: 4652, "Would You Like to Change From Miss to Mrs.?" and 4653, "Sambo and Dinah."

The first song must have been a flop, for it was gone by May, 1907, although the dealers' monthly list had described it as "a semi-sentimental song which has been one of Eddie Foy's successes in 'The Earl and the

(Continued on page 50)

THE NEW PHONOGRAM

EDISON RECORD TALENT

HARRY ANTHONY
TENOR

WANTS HIS PHONOGRAM EARLIER

A subscriber asks to have his copy of the Phonogram mailed to him earlier each month. The Phonogram is mailed as soon as each subscriber's order is filled. The new Phonogram arrives at dealers' stores and by its descriptions of these records to assist Phonogram buyers in making selections. It cannot be mailed earlier even to individual names.

THE NEW PHONOGRAM

EDISON RECORD TALENT

FRANK C. STANLEY
BARTONE

SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHERS

During the past year I bought one of your Home Phonograms, and I cannot help writing and let you know how highly all of us are pleased with it. Quite a number of professional and business men have heard it and they, as well as everybody else say it is the finest and best they have ever heard. Before buying I went and heard different imitations of yours but it took me no time to discover that your machines are much

THE NEW PHONOGRAM

EDISON RECORD TALENT

CHARLES D'ALMAINE
VIOLINIST

one of the music solos. The smaller one was a moving picture film of him singing the solo.

I took the film or picture to a dealer, and one we put in a Phonograph, the other is a moving picture machine. Then we declared the film, and we started the machine and the Phonograph simultaneously. By doing this, the actor might have been passed personally. There he was on the screen, singing up and down the stage and controlling, and there was his voice coming from the machine and from the big Phonograph horn. I got from it an extraordinary idea of the music talent as I could have gotten it in had visited me in Washington, D.C.

ASSISTING ARTISTS. These three mustachioed gentlemen, all of whom became smooth shaven in later life, played a part in Corinne Morgan's musical career. John Young, left, never recorded with the contralto, but sang with her in a New York church. Frank C. Stanley, center, introduced her to Phonograph work and was her recording partner for four years. Charles D'Almaine, right played violin obligatos in many of her records. —These photos were reprinted from The New Phonogram.

FAMED CONDUCTOR. Walter Damrosch, shown here as a young man, conducted a symphony orchestra with which Corinne Morgan was a featured soloist. ....This photo is reprinted from a 1904 Columbia Record

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 40)

Girl.' A most catchy little number and quite a novelty."

Of "Sambo and Dinah," a "coon song" on the order of "Deed I Do," the editor said:

"One of Cole and Johnson's inimitable darky numbers, which are always interesting because they are true types of real Negro songs. This duet is very attractively arranged, and Miss Nelson's pleasant contralto and her soft darky talk as Dinah contrast agreeably with Stanley's manly voice."

In June, the Nelson-Stanley combination again was present with "We'll Wander in the Bright Moonlight." It elicited this comment:

"The two duets by Miss Nelson and Mr. Stanley which were issued last month were very much liked. Here is a charming number, rather more sentimental than the May selections, which was one of the successes of 'Babes and the Baron.'"

Rather oddly, Miss Morgan also was very much present in the June supplement. She had a solo, "In the Gloaming," and she and Stanley did 8-inch and 12-inch duets of one of their most popular numbers, Albert Von Tilzer's "The Moon Has His Eyes On You." This was described as:

"A charming sentimental duet in Von Tilzer's happiest vein. Those who are familiar with the other numbers by Miss Morgan and Mr. Stanley will know what is in store for them. The arrangement is a delightful one, particularly in the refrain, where Miss Morgan holds a sustained note while the baritone sings the melody."

August, 1906, brought the last Victor duet by Morgan and Stanley, "We Parted as the Sun Went Down." This probably is the last record the pair made together, since their final Columbia had come out in July. Thus their duet recording partnership had lasted about three and one-half years, from late in 1902 to the summer of 1906.

One more Nelson-Stanley duet was to be issued in November: 4852, "Bye, Bye, Ma Honey." It was described as:

"A little darky song with rather a pretty melody. The words are quite distinct and the record is an attractive one."

I have all the Victor records by Nelson and Stanley except this. I wonder if their version of "Bye, Bye, Ma Honey" is the same song that Billy Golden recorded so uproariously.

Meanwhile, to go back a bit, June, 1906, was an important month in Corinne Morgan's recording chronology. Besides the solos and duets already mentioned, there were two discs by the newly organized Lyric Quartet, which consisted, besides Miss Morgan, of Elise Stevenson, soprano; Harry Macdonough, tenor, and Stanley, bass. The songs were "Evening Chimes" and "Incline Thine Ear to Me."

Miss Morgan seems to have remained a member of the quartet until she stopped making records. The original ensembles last single-faced disc was No. 31664, "The Radiant Morn," issued in October, 1907. But presumably the same group sang an anthem, "God Is a Spirit," No. 16038, one of the first 12" Victor double-faced records issued in a special list October 25, 1908. I imagine, by the way, that the contralto participated in most, or all, of the Trinity Choir records made while she was singing for Victor. No more Lyric Quartet records were made until 1911, when a new group with that name was organized.

In September, 1906, Miss Morgan sang another 12-inch oratorio record, "He Shall Feed His Flock," from "The Messiah." There was a new Lyric Quartet record, "Sweet and Low," and she and Macdonough sang in English a 12-inch version of "Home to Our Mountains," from "Trovatore."

They also remade the much earlier 10-inch version, No. 1360. In it a soprano, Grace Spencer, had taken the part of Azucena, the gypsy mother, with Macdonough as her tragic son, Manrico.

This was not the contralto's only operatic effort. Toward the end of 1904 she had recorded Siebel's "Flower Song" from "Faust" on 12-inch record No. 31270.

And, apparently, she held no grudge against Elise Stevenson, the soprano who succeeded her as Stanley's duet partner. In May, 1907, Victor issued a 12-inch duet by them, "Holy Mother, Guide His Footsteps," from Wallace's "Maritana." It did not sell well, however, and was out of the catalog by 1909.

IV. Last Victor Records

Perhaps the contralto's fondness for spending her summers abroad was one reason for the wind-up of the Morgan and Stanley partnership. For instance, the Victor supplement for October, 1906, in listing her record of "Flee As a Bird," said:

"Miss Morgan, who has been in Europe during the summer, has returned in fine voice, and has given us a splendid record of Dana's well known sacred number."

Corinne Morgan's last two Victor records were issued in May, 1908,

RECORDING EXECUTIVE. Victor H. Emerson was a recording manager of the United States Phonograph Company that made New Jersey cylinders in the 1890's, and afterwards held the same position with Columbia. In 1916 he founded the Emerson Phonograph Company which is believed to have issued the last record ever made by Corinne Morgan Welsh.

and virtually brought an end to her recording career, which had begun less than six years before. One of the numbers was 5414, "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice," from "Samson et Dalila," which was described as:

"A really beautiful delivery of the famous Samson air, one of the loveliest of operatic numbers."

The other was the familiar Trottere ballad, "In Old Madrid."

But although no more new Morgan records appeared in the monthly supplements, this seems not to have been quite the last of her visits to the recording laboratory. In September, 1909, The Voice of the Victor gave a list of records which had been remade by what was termed the Company's "new improved recording process." Among these were Miss Morgan's 31456, "He Was Despised," from "The Messiah," and 2980, "I Dreamt That I Dwelt in Marble Halls."

But in the meantime some of her numbers were suffering the indignity of being remade by other artists. Victor had advertised in the Ladies' Home Journal, the Morgan-Stanley duet, No. 4428, of "When You and I were Young, Maggie" as one of the best records in the catalog. But the issue of The Voice of the Victor from which I just quoted revealed that "Maggie" had been remade by Elizabeth Wheeler and Macdonough. And all stock and all the matrices of the Morgan-Stanley version had been destroyed.

"The Mocking Bird" also was re-done by Wheeler and Macdonough. And—crowning insult—that virtual trademark, "O That We Two Were Maying," had been done over by Elise Stevenson and Macdonough. The new version, No. 5491, appeared in August, 1908.

Within the next few years too, most of the Morgan records had been made over by Elsie Baker, a contralto, who acquired a much greater following than Miss Morgan had ever had. By

(Continued on page 93)

BOOKS FOR SALE

"ARE YOU A Catholic Without Knowing It?" A challenging booklet by Father Karl Pruter. Send $1 to — Christ Catholic Church, Box 528, Zuni, N.Mex. 87327 aul24661

DOLLS FOR SALE

JOIN Doll Club! Educational! Fun! Quarterly doll newsletter on all aspects of collecting. Features quarterly doll selection to buy for $5 or less at savings. $2 yearly. — Doll Club, 2202 Adams, Saginaw, Mich. o3825

GEMS &amp; MINERALS

IVORY NUT genuine vegetable ivory approx. 2 inch, $1, ten for $7.50. — D. Kostecki, 6245 N. Fairfield, Chicago, Ill. 60645 n3633

INDIAN RELICS FOR SALE

INDIAN relics bought, sold, and appraised. Flint knife $1. Spearhead $2. Effigy face trade pipe $2. Stone tomahawks $3. Archaic stone pestle $3.50. For large Indian relic & book listing send 25c to — Redick, 35 W. Riverglens, Worthington, O. 43085 aul26942

MART WANTED

RUDOLPH Valentino material wanted, theatrical posters, lobby cards and memorabilia. — Richard Short, P.O. Box 1038, San Bernardino, Calif. 92402 n3403

WANTED: Tom Swift books, by Victor Appleton; G & D 1910-1934. Any or all of series. Must include dust jackets. — W. R. Gowen, 923 South Lake, Mundelein, Ill. 60060 n3844

WANTED: Carnival glass bowl or plate, Northwood Peacock. Napkin rings with animals. — Maxine, 44646 Cedar, Lancaster, Calif. 93534 s1821

MART FOR SALE

GENUINE old stock certificates, 3 western gold silver copper mines $1, 2 early Eastern Railroads $1, 1 Street car $1.25, 1 horesdrawn car $1.50. — Jerry Rillahan, 808 Park, Worland, Wyo. 82401 n3084

FOR SALE: Largest carving knife & fork set in the world. Fork, overall length 6-ft, 6-inches; Knife overall length 9-ft, 7½-inches. Handles solid carved ivory. Write for details. — Philip T. Champlin, Rt. 1, Little Valley, N.Y. 14755 s1023

WE HAVE 386 World War I doughboy steel helmets. Excellent condition. Collectors item. They average retail for $12.95. Will sell all or part to the highest bidder. Write — Atlas Army & Navy Surplus Sales, P.O. Box 1186, August, Ga. 30903 o1823

UNIQUE Cuff Links made from original antique police, fire and military buttons. Attractive dealer discounts available. SASE for extensive list of types and quantities. — C-J Links, Box 4587, Fairview Park, O. 44126 n3635

FOR VOODOO Cults & devil worshippers: "For sale from private museum" ancient sacrificial table; human bone necklace; ancient blood letting vessel; Judas devil doll; Ancient necklace est. 2000 years old; devil fish (human-devil in appearance). Send for brochure & prices $2.50, 8x10" photo-prints; Explained. — Pan Vu, Box 2383, Salt Lake City, Utah 84110 aul22933

MINIATURIA FOR SALE

IDEAL Petite Princess doll house furniture for sale or trade. SASE for list. — S. B. Linder, 22831 Marlboro, Dearborn, Mich. 48128 s1061

STAMPS

RARE inverted error. Inverted postal die worth $1750.00 by catalog value, $200. Mint. — Lester Cook, 19 Purdue Rd., Glen Cove, N.Y. 11542 s1651

THE CLASSICS, Issues of 1840-1940 on approval. Priced below Scott catalog plus discount. — Norstamp, Box 7284, Norfolk, Va. 23509 aul20821

PRINTING

PERSONALIZED parcel post labels. Only your name and address printed on white gummed paper, blue border, black printing. 2x2¼", 125 for $2.00. Larger size 4x3" 50 for $2, 100 for $3.50 or 500 for $14.50. Packed in plastic box. — Mrs. Pauline Vick, 817 E. Pillsbury, Lancaster, Calif. 93534 o3867

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 50)

1923 none of the Morgan-Stanley duets were left in the catalog, and only two Morgan solos remained.

Double-faced disc No. 16800 combined her rendition of "Love's Old Sweet Song," with a trombone solo, "Oh, Dry Those Tears," by Arthur Pryor. And No. 16195, her version of "My Old Kentucky Home," which originally had been coupled with "Home, Sweet Home," by Macdonough, now had the Macdonough side remade by Charles Harrison. When the 1924 catalog came out, just after Miss Morgan's marriage to Charles Walter Dumont, both these records were gone.

V. And, Finally—

Corinne Morgan's final appearance, so far as I know, in any record list came more than 13 years after her name last appeared in a Victor supplement. A few years ago I was amazed to find an old Emerson record booklet for December, 1921, which listed record No. 10464, on which she sang "Just A-Wearyin' for You," to a piano, violin, and 'cello accompaniment.

And this is the only record I ever have heard of on which she used her full name of Corinne Morgan Welsh. The other side was "The Last Rose of Summer," sung by a soprano, Vivian Holt, who was best known for her duets with Lillian Rosedale. The supplement said:

"The first number is a soprano solo of marked clearness in enunciation. The second is a perfectly modulated contralto solo by an artist new to the Emerson catalog."

But if Miss Morgan was new to the Emerson catalog she was not new to Victor Emerson, who had been Columbia's recording manager before he started the Emerson Record Company in 1916. Before that he had been head of the recording activities of the United States Company, that made New Jersey cylinders in the 1890's. "Vic" Emerson seems to have had a sentimental fondness for his one-time associates. He probably was glad to call Corinne Morgan in for a record or two, since she had worked for him at Columbia.

I wish we knew more about the talented contralto's later years, but since we don't, I'm sure we all can join in hoping that she and C. W. Dumont had a happy married life during the 20 years or so they probably were privileged to pass together. Corinne Morgan deserves to be held in grateful remembrance for the pleasure she gave, and still gives, through her many fine records.

PAINTINGS WANTED

Drawings, watercolors by American artists. Am interested in cowboy and Indian paintings, horse paintings and bronzes. Landscapes of the old West and animal paintings, by Tait and others. I am interested in anything good in American art. Please send pictures, artists name, condition and size. Also asking price. Write: — Reginald S. Courtney, 75 Rte. 208, Wyck-off, N.J. 07481 d32721

NUMISMATICS

(Continued from page 132)

signed with similar reverse, but Liberty facing left on the obverse.

Patterns of the ten-dollar gold piece were struck in gold, copper, and aluminum. The gold ones are extremely rare.

When the bill was presented to Congress, this, too, did not meet approval and the project was dropped.

In 1879, John A. Kasson, Minister of the United States, at Vienna, and formerly chairman of the Committee of Coinage, Weights, and Measures, suggested to the Secretary of State that a coin near the value of the Austrian 8-florin piece be issued.

The Florin had an exchange value at the time of $3.88 and the nearest approximation in our money would be 400 cents or four dollars. As there was considerable agitation for the adoption of a metric system for coin weights and the four-dollar piece fitted in the category, the coinage committee favored the coin.

It also was near the value of the French 20 franc, Italian 20 Lire, Spanish 20 Peseta, and Dutch 8 Florins. The committee decided the name of the coin would be the "Stella."

Charles E. Barber, designer of the Liberty Head series of coins of the 19th century, designed the "Stella." The obverse had the Head of Liberty facing left, with two varieties, one with flowing hair and another with coiled hair. Legends around were "6G. 3S, 7C.-7 Grams" (and the date). The reverse had a large star in the center with the inscription "One Stella, 400 cents" "E Pluribus Unum, Deo Est Gloria."

Though patterns were struck in copper, aluminum, and white metal, the commonest patterns and most prolific are those struck in gold. It is recorded that over 500 were struck of the 1879 issue. Sufficient, almost to take them out of the category of patterns even though they never were approved as a regular issue.

We therefore can see, that although several attempts were made to "systematize" monetary coinages, none ever succeeded. If they had, they would have been of little value today with the changes in values the moneys of the world have gone through.

JEWELRY WANTED

WE PAY CASH! Diamonds, gold, silver, platinum, watches, antique jewelry. Check by return mail. Shipment held intact pending approval. — Amco Jewelry Co., 405 Travis Street, Houston, Texas 77002. d122971

DIAMONDS, old gold coins, watches, stickpins, rings, earrings, etc., regardless of condition. Highest prices paid. Prompt replies. Send by registered mail to: Edward G. Wilson, 1802 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa. jly120291

BELLS

BELL - California Centennial. 9" antiqued metal, authentic replica of old El Camino Real guideposts, $7.95 postpaid. — Box 303, La Jolla, Calif. 92037. n120821

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

My Last Words Concerning The Controversial McKinley Record

PART I

By JIM WALSH

I. Martyred President

Seventy years ago—long enough for a child to have been born, reach the Biblical age allotment of three score and ten, and die—President William McKinley was shot fatally by an anarchist, Leon Czolgosz. The shooting occurred at 4:07 p.m., Friday, September 6, 1901, while McKinley was shaking hands with visitors to the Pan-American Exposition in Buffalo, N.Y.

The President died between 2 and 3 a.m. on Sunday, September 14. Almost his last words were: "It is God's way. His will, not ours, be done." And during his dying moments McKinley whispered the words of the hymn, "Nearer, My God, to Thee."

The day before—Thursday, September 5—116,000 persons had visited the Exposition. That afternoon 55,000 had gathered, despite intensely hot weather, in the Esplanade to hear the chief executive deliver a speech in which he advocated a broad and enlightened policy of commercial reciprocity with other nations, as well as the expansion of the merchant marine, and the construction of the Panama Canal.

I have a book in which the complete text of the speech is given, and my estimate is that it would take between 30 and 40 minutes to speak in its entirety. It frequently was delayed by enthusiastic applause and cheering, which lengthened the time of delivery.

Less than two months after McKinley's death the talking machine companies of the time—Victor, Columbia, Edison, and possibly others—began to issue records containing excerpts from the address. Edison's two-minute cylinder, No. 7982, was recorded by Frank C. Stanley, and announced in the record list for November, 1901.

It had a short life, because Edison introduced his new gold moulded process in the spring of 1902, and the McKinley cylinder was not carried over into the improved recording. It was not mentioned in the Edison record catalog dated "Fall, 1902," and is so scarce I never have seen a copy.

The 10-inch Victor Monarch listed in the Victor Catalog for February, 1902, was numbered M1070 and was called honestly "Portions of the Last Speech of President McKinley." Thus the buyer knew he was getting only some excerpts, and not the complete address. This version, by William F. Hooley, was soon remade, probably in 1903, and appeared in the August, 1904, Victor catalog, under the number of 2170.

The next record was spoken by Len Spencer. The catalog lists it as "President McKinley's Pan-American Speech," with this description: "Pithy Extracts from the last speech of our late President."

Conceivably, Zonophone also may have offered a disc containing selected segments from the Martyred President's last address, but I never have found such a record in a Zono catalog.

II. That Controversial Columbia Record

Columbia made it. Its disc was not available until a good many months after Victor's. But Columbia, for reasons best known to its officials of 70 years ago, omitted the recording artist's name from the label and left out the preliminary spoken announcement that was customary in those days.

The result has been that thousands of persons in later years have found copies of a Columbia record called "Address by the Late President McKinley at the Pan-American Exposition." Nearly all those persons have been convinced the record was spoken by the President himself and was worth a fortune. Many owners of copies of the disc still believe that and refuse to be persuaded otherwise.

If I may indulge a bit of ill temper, such a refusal to listen to reason has been a source of recurring irritation and annoyance to me in the 30 years I have written for HOBBIES. Over and over I have told collectors the so-called "McKinley record" wasn't, and couldn't have been made by the President, only to have them write indignant letters in return and say they knew better.

Such collectors, however, are not alone in their delusion. National Vocarium, a company that specialized a quarter of a century ago in issuing re-recordings of the voices of famous personalities, included this Columbia record as among its "authentic" offerings. And more than one LP record, purporting to include the voices of all American Presidents from McKinley on, has used it, simply because the artist's name was not given by Columbia, as it was by Victor and Edison.

One correspondent maintained he knew "positively" that McKinley made the Columbia record because he was acquainted with "an old gentleman who was at the Exposition and saw President McKinley talking into the mike as he did the recording."

I replied that the old gentleman was either senile, or a victim of bad memory or of delusions, because there was no electrical recording until 1925, and President McKinley would have had no mike to talk into.

If he had made a record he would have spoken into a horn gaping from the recording studio wall. There may have been some sort of amplifying device to carry McKinley's voice more distinctly to the 55,000 persons who were trying to hear him as he made his speech, but outdoor recording wasn't feasible in those days, and the orator certainly was not talking into a recording microphone.

I told the correspondent there was every reason to believe that, just as the second Victor version of portions of the McKinley address was made by Len Spencer, the Columbia was the work of Len's younger brother, Harry. But before I proceed to the purpose of this article, which is to demolish for all time the belief that William McKinley made a record of his last speech, suppose we consider the text of the address as I have copied it from the Columbia disc by Harry—or, possibly, Len Spencer.

It plays two minutes and 55 sec-

Antique

MUSIC BOX SPECIALISTS

Complete repair service, cylinders re-pinned, combs repaired and tuned, all work guaranteed.

Large stock of finest instruments for sale.

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. 10803

Phone: 914 - PE 8-1505

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Re feathered
Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

tfc

A YEAR BEFORE HIS DEATH—This remarkably fine photo of President McKinley was taken at the Council Table in the Cabinet Room of the White House in 1900. Like most of the other illustrations this month, it is from an old stereoscope view.

onds—20 seconds longer than the Victor, which omits a few words in the Columbia version and is spoken at a slightly faster pace. Some "liberal" professors who make a fetish of writing political histories defaming Presidents over the years seem to have delighted in representing McKinley to be a hidebound, reactionary troglodyte with a narrowly partisan attitude and a caveman mentality.

McKinley was nothing like what so often he has been made out to be. He started out, perhaps, as a typical conservative Mid-Western politician, but he grew in mental breadth and stature the longer he stayed in office. And his last address was an eloquent plea for cooperation and peace among the nations.

One thing some professional thinkers seem to resent is that he presided over the greatest prosperity the American nation had known up to that time. Another criticism is that the discreditable Spanish-American War, which he did his best to avoid, was fought during his administration.

But here are the words of William McKinley, as recorded by somebody else's voice on that much debated Columbia record, to speak for themselves:

III. Text of the Columbia Record

"My fellow citizens: Trade statistics indicate that this country is in a state of unexampled prosperity. The figures show that we are furnishing profitable employment to the millions of working men throughout the United States. Our capacity to produce has developed so enormously and our products have so multiplied that the problem of more markets requires our urgent and immediate attention.

"By sensible trade arrangements, which will not interrupt our home production, we shall extend the outlets for our increasing surplus. What we produce beyond our domestic consumption must have vent abroad. Extension of our trade and commerce is our pressing problem.

"Next in advantage to having a thing to sell is to have the convenience to carry it to the buyer. We must increase our merchant marine. We must have more ships. They must be under the American flag, built and manned and owned by Americans. They will not only be profitable in a commercial sense, they will also be messengers of peace wherever they go.

"Reciprocity treaties are in harmony with the spirit of the times. We must build the Isthmian Canal, which will unite the two oceans and give a straight line of water commerce with the west coast of Central and South America and Mexico. The construction of a Pacific cable cannot be longer postponed. In the furtherance of these objects of national interest and concern you are performing an important task.

"The good work will go on. It cannot be stopped. These buildings will disappear. This creation of art and beauty and industry will perish from sight, but who can tell the new thoughts that have been awakened, the ambitions fired, and the high achievements that will be wrought through this exposition!

"Gentlemen, let us ever remember that our interest is in concord rather than conflict, and that our real eminence rests on the victories of peace—not those of war."

That is the recorded speech on the Columbia record, only a small fraction of the address the President delivered to that vast audience in Buffalo 24 hours or so before he was assassinated.

Here it will be interesting, I think, to compare the Columbia with the slightly shorter Victor Monarch. Len Spencer's version begins, "Fellow Citizens," instead of "My Fellow Citizens."

The Victor moves the sentence, "Reciprocity treaties are in harmony with the spirit of the times" up to the end of the second paragraph, following "Extension of our trade and commerce is our pressing problem." In referring to the Isthmian Canal, it omits "and give a straight line of water commerce with the west coast of Central and South America and Mexico."

(I find myself wondering who decided what excerpts from the chief executive's speech should be included on records.)

The Columbia is much louder than the Victor and seems to be clearer and better recorded all the way through—something that was by no means invariably characteristic of Columbia records of the 1902 period.

Since I never have heard Frank Stanley's Edison, I don't know just what is on it, but the wax cylinders could not play more than 10 seconds or so past a two-minute limit, so it must have omitted some things that the Victor and Columbia discs contained.

Incidentally, the single-faced Columbia disc, the number of which was 833, was made in both 7-inch and 10-inch sizes. This brings up the pleasing picture of President McKinley, if he made the record—which he didn't—being called on to record a smaller snippet of his address, to play for a minute and a half to two minutes, in the 7-inch size and genially consenting. I wonder just how much of the oration they managed to crowd on to that 7-inch!

The Columbia "McKinley record" was marketed under many of the dozens of off-brand labels for which the Company furnished matrices. Standard, United, Harmony, Marconi, Climax, Aretino, Oxford, Silvertone, Lakeside, Thomas, and almost countless others.

It must have been available on them all.

(Continued on page 40)

PIANOS & ROLLS

AMPICO Rolls wanted in black boxes. Mint condition, no torn edges. Up to $10 each.—Lacy, Caltech Library, Pasadena, Calif. 91109. mvl24431

Duo-Art, Ampico, Welte Fine Music Roll Reproductions.—Harold Powell, 5652 Willowcrest Ave., No. Hollywood, Calif. 91601. d120441

FOR SALE: Rebuilt player pianos, also orchestrated pianos, playing O-roll drums and so forth.—Paul Tilson, Elwood, Nebr. Ph.: 785-2522. mh6276

(Continued from page
38)

TOP: SEVENTY YEARS AGO—The Pan-American Exposition as it appeared when President McKinley was murdered in 1901.

MIDDLE: EXPOSITION SCENE—Crowds at the Temple of Music where President McKinley was assassinated, Pan-American Exposition.

BOTTOM: PRESIDENT'S RESTING PLACE—This photo, from 1901 stereoscopic view, shows President McKinley's tomb at Canton, Ohio. (Continued on page 48)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 40)

EMINENT BASSO — "Bill"

Hooley, the famous Haydn Quartet bass, made the first Victor record of President McKinley's last address. After a few months it was succeeded by one by Len Spencer.

I have it on a Silvertone and on a Diamond, the latter of which has the title, in red ink, supplied by a rubber stamp. This is mentioned to keep anybody from writing to me to say he has a McKinley speech I haven't said any thing about, and, secure in the belief that it must be the "real McCoy," or, rather, the real McKinley, to ask how much it is worth.

I recall one man who paid $50 for a Standard record of the address and wrote to tell me glowingly what a bargain he had got. He was considerably let down when I felt it my duty to inform him the thing was not authentic and hardly worth 50c.

IV Why McKinley Couldn't Have Recorded

Over the years, I have said several times in HOBBIES that the slain President could not have made the so-called "McKinley record" before he was shot. And I have given my reasons. As long ago as 1947 the New Yorker Magazine published an article I wrote presenting the same information.

The HOBBIES references, however, are in past issues widely scattered and therefore are not easy to locate, so I continue to receive letters from readers asking the record's value. Occasionally, too, a dealer who sells by mail may offer it at an exorbitant price through lack of information.

So I have decided to assemble, once and for all, the mass of information I have bearing on the subject. After this I shall not go into detailed explanations in personal correspondence as to why the record is a humbug, though certainly a harmlessly meant one. I simply shall refer inquirers to this article.

That being said, let's proceed to a consideration of President McKinley's stay in Buffalo during the Exposition and what he did while he was there. This can be followed easily with the help of Margaret Lesch's detailed and informative book, "In the Days of McKinley," published by Harper's in 1959.

To begin with, the President's visiting schedule did not allow him time to make a record, and if it had the equipment would not have been available. Actually, neither Columbia nor any other phonograph company had any interest, before McKinley was assassinated, in making a record of his Pan-American speech.

V. Last Word About McKinley

His appearance at the Exposition was merely a courtesy affair, and the speech was not expected to be of any special importance. Nobody knew, in advance of the killing, that it was to be his last public address. It was only after the popular President had been murdered that it occurred to the recording companies there would be a demand for excerpts from his last speech.

And bear this in mind: Even if Columbia had wanted to make a record of the address and McKinley had consented, it would have been necessary for the President to visit the Company's New York studios in order to put it on a wax master. Disc recording equipment weighed hundreds of pounds, and had to be bolted to the floor to prevent jarring and vibration.

Columbia certainly would not have uprooted its equipment, if it had had it, and shipped it all the way to Buffalo in the expectation of catching less than three minutes worth of speech. But, as I shall show, Columbia didn't have the equipment to send.

As I have said already, the speech could not have been recorded in the open. In those days there were no tape recorders to catch an orator's words in their entirety, and leave the best parts to be snipped out later.

Assuming recording equipment had been set up somehow in front of the speaker, McKinley would have had to address his remarks into a horn and not to the audience of 55,000. The effort to record his voice would have been marred by cheers and other background noises—none of which can be heard on the Columbia record.

The maximum it was possible to record at one time was approximately four minutes. And the engineers could not possibly have put on one master after another and taken down all the speech.

It has been argued that McKinley might have spoken into an easily transported cylinder machine with a home recording device, and then the sound from the cylinder was transferred to the disc. I ask you if you can conceive of the President of the United States speaking into a small home-type recording horn while an audience of 55,000 people tried vainly

TOP: "GRANDFATHER OF PHONOGRAPH"—LEN SPENCER, the first internationally known recording artist, made the second Victor disc of portions of William McKinley's Pan-American address. This picture was taken January 1, 1903.

BOTTOM: LEN SPENCER'S YOUNGER BROTHER—Henry Caleb (Harry) Spencer, Jr., is believed to have made the Columbia "McKinley record," which many collectors have taken to be by the President himself.

to understand what he was talking about.

True, Columbia did issue a cylinder record (No. 31666) of "President McKinley's Last Address." But the disc could not have been taken from it, because the "platter" played for virtually three minutes and a cylinder could run for only a few seconds more than two minutes.

And it takes a wild surge of imagination to believe that McKinley could have prepared, before he spoke, a brief excerpt from his address and recorded it at some stage during or after the proceedings, especially since the excerpts issued by Columbia varied. They consisted of a cylinder playing about two minutes, a 7-inch disc of less than two minutes duration, and a 10-inch disc running two minutes and 55 seconds.

What, then, of the alleged possibility that heavy disc recording equipment somehow had been transported from New York to Buffalo, and that the President graciously spoke into it af-

(Continued on page 50)

THE APOLLO U.S.A. CAST IRON BANK

This is a commemorative bank produced as a tribute to all Apollo moon flights. Do Not confuse this bank with the Apollo 8 which is out of production — A Real Collectors Item.

Cast iron, 4 1/4" tall, tall painted gold with Apollo U.S.A. in black letters on sbp.
1-3 ..... $4.00 Ea.
4-8 ..... $3.00 Ea.

Dealers special wholesale price $23.60 per doz

F.O.B. add 10% postage on all orders

Excess refunded - more billed

Sold Exclusively by

THE TROJAN HORSE

137-H Central Paris, Illinois 61944
Phone: (217) 466-3030

dc

WANTED

Toy trains & Trolleys built before 1942
Top Prices Paid

Please identify, state price & condition

JACK WM. WINDT

1939 Golf St., Sarasota, Fla. 33577

tfc

MECHANICAL BANKS WANTED

PLEASE NOTE my mechanical bank display ad in this section, listing various wants. — F. H. Griffith, P.O. Box 10644, Pittsburgh, Pa. 15235

tfx

LEHMAN, Bing Maerkin, Corette, et al., Toy Automobiles. — David Bausch, 252 N. 7th St., Allentown, Pa. 18102

nl28801

OLD mechanical and still banks, toys, describe, state price, condition. — Scofield's, Box 457, Ridgefield, Conn.

aul2069

TOP PRICES paid for rare mechanical banks. Also have banks, toys for trade. Private collector. Ph. (202) 298-6134 or 362-9499, Cable: "Berrymax". — Max Berry, 888 17th St. N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006

jly126581

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8.

(Except for change of address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rates.

All advertisers who submit copy for the first time are definitely requested to furnish therewith banking or other satisfactory references.

BOOKS ON TOY BANKS

1. "Toy Bank Reproductions and Fakes." Robert L. McCumber. 80 Base tracings of reproduced mechanical banks ..... $5.95
2. "Old Penny Banks" Meyer & Freeman. 246 mechanical banks illus., also stills ..... $7.95

A good combination for beginner collectors & dealers. Order from:

ROBERT L. McCUMBER

201 Carriage Dr.

Glastonbury, Conn. 06033

I buy mechanical banks. Send description and price for prompt reply. nc

ANNOUNCING

"Later Toys"

An 80-page reprint of Toys from 1915 to 1936 (2/3's devoted to pre-1925).

This is an absolute MUST for collectors & dealers. No other book deals with the Gems of this era.

$3.95 PPD.

(40% discount on 6 or more)

(Pa. Residents, Please Add 24c Tax)

BILL FEENEY

Rt. 3, Box 41

Ligonier, Pa. 15658

my27c

TOYS WANTED

American Flyer Lionel, Ives trains, toy automobiles, trucks, buses, cast iron, Tootsie Toy, etc. Old toy and train catalogs wanted. — Marvin Benson, R.D. 3, Box 22, Uniontown, Pa. 15401

nl26942

IDENTIFICATION model aircraft in black, blue or grey plastic, 1/72, 1/144 or other scales. — Robert S. Thompson, Hat Shop Hill, Bridgewater, Conn. 06752

d17

OLD TOOTSIE TOYS, Dinky Toys, etc. wanted. — Donald Behrens, 4031 W. Rosedale, Ft. Worth, Tex. 76107

n3042

MECHANICAL BANKS FOR SALE

RENO Slot Machine mechanical bank. Works like real thing. Drops jackpot when three bars hit. Rugged construction. One year guarantee, $6.95. — L. C. Meredith, 2475 Dyer Way, Reno, Nev. 89502

mhl20291

FIFTY mechanical, seventy-five still in stock, hundreds of toys. Send want list. — David A. Museum, 2400F East Las Olas Blvd., Box 2152, Fort Lauderdale, Fla. 33303

je122741

TRICK PONY fine mechanical bank $145. Tammany fine mechanical bank $75. William Tell fine mechanical bank $145. Owl fine mechanical bank $80. Buster Brown & Tyge fine still bank $75. Campbell Kids fine still bank $75. — Mr. D. Schieras, Rte. 4, Box 66, Dixon, Ill. 61021

ol863

MAGICIAN BANK—original; slightly damaged. Vest of magician is separated from body. Make offer. — Robert Gaulding, 2918 Myra St., Jacksonville, Fla. 32205

ol671

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 48)

ter he had addressed his wildly cheering audience?

Turn to Miss Leech's book and you will find that the formal address contained many utterances not included in the records. McKinley reminded the audience that the telegraph and cable, swift ships, and fast trains practically had done away with distance.

He said, "We must not repose in fancied security that we can forever sell everything and buy little or nothing... Isolation is no longer possible or desirable... God and man have linked the nations together... The period of exclusiveness is past.

The conclusion of the speech asked a blessing on "all neighbors of the United States and all the peoples and powers of the earth." And, the book says, "a tempest of cheering swept the Esplanade." Those certainly were not the sentiments of an archetypal reactionary. After he made the speech, did a Columbia representative lead the President to some hastily erected recording studio and have him make a speech? No. McKinley held an impromptu public reception at the foot of the stand, then moved on to attend a military review at the Stadium.

After that he gratified the commissioners representing other countries by touring their buildings and exhibits. Then he attended a luncheon at the New York State Building, and a card reception at the Government Building.

Afterwards he sat down to sip coffee at the Porto Rican Building. Then he posed at the Agricultural Building with James Wilson, his Secretary of Agriculture, and a group of Latin American Commissioners.

Miss Leech says the President was weary when he returned, late in the afternoon, to the home of John G. Milburn, president of the Exposition, with whom he was staying. Following such an afternoon, that reads like an understatement.

After an early dinner, the President and Mrs. McKinley returned to the Fairgrounds. There they witnessed a display of fireworks and were occupied fully otherwise for several hours until their carriage rolled along the Lincoln Parkway, taking them back to the Milburn home.

Now we come to the fatal day on which President McKinley was shot. He got up early in the morning to board a special train of parlor cars that carried him, members of his party, diplomats, and other distinguished guests, on an excursion to Niagara Falls.

The time was spent at Niagara and in its vicinity, until the President and his party again boarded the special train and returned to the Exposition station. With Mr. Milburn and his

(Continued on page 93)

TOO LATE TO CLASSIFY

ANTIQUE DEALERS DIRECTORY

HAWAII
WAIKIKI. For: East Antiquities, Hilton Hawaiian Village Hotel, Orientalia, jewelry, dealer disc. s27

REFERENCE DIRECTORY

DOLL CLUB
Collectors Doll Club. Join now! Informative, educational, entertaining Quarterly Newsletter. $2 per year. SSAE will bring details. B. D. O'Keefe, 2202 Adams Blvd., Saginaw, Mich. 48602 s27

ANTIQUES FOR SALE

ANTIQUE DEALER moving, selling my personal collection of quality antiques. Have most everything including beautiful German dolls, write me your wants. SASE for reply. — G and G, P.O. Box 716 South Orange, N.J. 07079 d3675

BACK NO. MAGAZINES FOR SALE

VERMONT Life Magazines. List 15c and stamp. Boxell, Holden, Mass. 01520 my10084

MART WANTED

WANTED: Fine early English Lustware. — R. T. Powers, 914 Jamieson Rd., Lutherville, Md. 21093 d3422

AUTOGRAPH albums wanted. — Rosalea Postma, 723 Louisiana, Lawrence, Kans. 66044 n108

BOXING: Always wanted, buttons, cigarette cards, posters, broadsides, statuettes, old books, old gloves, or anything pertaining to boxing. — Bill Schutte, 18407 Dearborn, Northridge, Calif. 91324 o1291

LIQUOR BOTTLES: figural, fancy or unusual. Also books, prints, paintings & advertising matter pertaining to alcoholic beverages. Old powder cans, pocket knives, iron and tin toys, glass marbles, cap exploders, pole insulators, Wells Fargo items, Rogers groups. Old Buddy L Toys, war relics. — Franklin M. Roshon, R.D. 4, Bucher Rd., Pottstown, Pa. s122833

ADVERTISING Watch fobs wanted by collector. Top prices paid. — Yartz, 628 N. Main Extension, Meadville, Pa. 16335 s128801

BRITISH Military medals, purchased for private collection. — George Hammerschmidt, P.O. Box 3066, Tecumseh, Windsor 30, Ontario. d3082

MART FOR SALE

MINI Milk bottles, 4 for $1.25 scrapbooks each different subject, 1865 to 1945. Photos, mementos, reference items, write — Scrapbooks, 420 East Second St., Long Beach, Miss. o1612

MATERIAL ON your favorite movie star. Send name for free list. — James Kirk, 2636 Hawthorne, Orlando, Fla. 32806 d3234

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 50)

personal secretary, George B. Cortel-yon, the chief executive entered a carriage called a Victoria and they started off through the fairgrounds.

There was half an hour to spare before he was to hold a 10-minute public reception, beginning at 4 p.m. in the Temple of Music. So the President stopped for refreshments at the Mission Building.

Just before 4 o'clock William McKinley stepped from the victoria and, accompanied, of course, by guards, walked into the auditorium of the Temple of Music, where he began the scheduled reception and handshaking. He was within three minutes of the conclusion of the wearisome task when an unimpressive looking, short, slender, young man moved toward the President, who extended his hand.

The man was Czolgosz, the assassin. He struck McKinley's hand aside, produced a short-barreled, .32-caliber Iver Johnson revolver from his pocket, and fired two shots.

As horrified onlookers rushed to help McKinley to a chair, the wounded President saw that his assailant was in danger of being mobbed, and pleaded: "Don't let them hurt him."

It was 18 minutes past 4 o'clock when the President was received in the Exposition's emergency hospital. There it was found he had a comparatively trivial wound in the ribs around his chest, but a grave one in the abdomen.

An immediate operation was decided upon. As ether was administered, McKinley's lips were forming the words of the Lord's Prayer.

After the operation, the mortally injured President was returned to the Milburn home, the second floor of which was turned into a hospital. Physicians were optimistic that he would recover. But, as we know, he died on the early morning of September 14.

Having proved, I maintain, that William McKinley could not possibly have made a record at the Pan-American Exposition, I will proceed next month to consideration of evidence provided by the record itself. I plan to present other facts which should prove to the satisfaction of any reasonable person that the anonymous Columbia disc contains the voice of someone other than the President.

JEWELRY WANTED

WE PAY CASH! Diamonds, gold, silver, platinum, watches, antique jewelry. Check by return mail. Shipment held intact pending approval. — Amco Jewelry Co., Suite 1006, Houston Citizens Bank & Trust Bldg., 1801 Main St., Houston, Tex. 77002 d122971

DIAMONDS, old gold coins, watches, stickpins, rings, earrings, etc., regardless of condition. Highest prices paid. Prompt replies. Send by registered mail to: Edward G. Wilson, 1802 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa. jly120291

BELLS

BELL - California Centennial. Antiqued, metal, authentic replica of old El Camino Real guideposts, $7.95 postpaid. — Box 303, La Jolla, Calif. 92037. n120821

JEWELRY FOR SALE

ANTIQUE gold and diamond jewelry bought and sold. Inquiries solicited. — Kenneth R. Park, Rm. 512, 26 West St., Boston, Mass. 02111 (Est. 1844). t122741

Unusual Antique Gold Jewelry: Watchkeys, rings, pendants, pins, bracelets. Specific inquiries. — Florence Ackerman, Garthwoods, Scarsdale, N.Y. 10583 d3

BOTTLES WANTED

FRUIT JARS wanted. Please describe. — Harold Loyd, Billings, Mo. 65610. my27

WHAT ARE YOUR BOTTLES WORTH? "Bottle Collector's Handbook - Pricing Guide," identifies, prices over 2,500 news, old collectible bottles. Beams, Avons, Fruit Jars, Medicines, Inks, Snuffs, many, many others. All 18 bottle categories. The most complete bottle book you can buy. Illustrated new edition! Plus, free bonus directory: "Where To Sell and Buy Bottles." $3.95 postpaid. — Infobooks, Box 5001-H, San Angelo, Texas 76901 n3679

WANTED Warner's Safe bottles and old sample liquor bottles and Bitters bottles. — Harold Loyd, Billings, Missouri 65610. jcl28901

(Continued on next page)

ARE YOU INTERESTED IN MINIATURES?

If so on your trip . . . stop at Rockerville Goldtown

On the way to Mount Rushmore

SEE . . . STUART CASTLE

16th Century Castle furnished with a fabulous collection of miniatures and tiny objects of art.

SEE . . . THE VICTORIAN VILLAGE

Our newest display . . . the miniature village of a Hat Shop, General Store and Soda Parlor (both with 2nd floor apartments), Mexican Shop, and a new wing to the Victorian House.

SEE . . . in the same display: Old Toys, Old Trains, Doll Houses.

Santa's Office and the Elves' Workshop.

Always happy to greet our HOBBIES friends.

On Highway 16, South of Rapid City, S.D.

Stuart and Edna Parvin

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

My Last Words Concerning The Controversial McKinley Record

PART II

By JIM WALSH

I. First President to Record

Collectors who believe, mistakenly, that William McKinley made the controversial Columbia record of the speech which he delivered at the Pan-American Exposition in Buffalo, N. Y., on September 5, 1901—nine days before his death—argue it is worth “a lot of money because McKinley was the first American President to have his voice recorded.”

As I showed conclusively last month, McKinley didn't make a record at Buffalo. Both the time and the equipment were lacking. But even if he had he still would not have been the first President to record.

It's impossible to be sure at this late date, but the likelihood is that Rutherford B. Hayes, who was President when Thomas A. Edison invented the phonograph late in 1877, was the first chief executive to have his recorded voice played back to him. On April 18, 1878, Edison took one of his tinfoil phonographs to the White House and demonstrated it to President Hayes.

It certainly seems likely that, after talking into the machine and having it play back in a squeaky tone, Edison would have said genially: “And now, Mr. President, let's record your voice!”

I'm confident Hayes would have had sufficient curiosity as to what his recorded voice would sound like to speak into the recording tube. Of course, if the record was made, it was on a strip of tinfoil which probably was discarded after one or two playings.

I have a book containing the text of the diary Hayes kept while he was in the White House. Strangely, he makes no mention of the phonograph demonstration, although one certainly would expect him to have written something like: “Had my voice recorded tonight by Prof. Edison's wonderful new invention, the phonograph. It didn't sound a bit like me.”

Nobody hearing his recorded voice for the first time thinks it sounds like him!

Actually, the first President, whose name was mentioned commercially as having recorded, was Benjamin Harrison, who was in office from 1889 to 1893. In the late 1890s the Bettini

“Treasured Masterpieces In Sound”

Venus Recording Company Of America

Post Office Box 1451 / Beverly Hills, California 90213

FROM VENUS

*A rainbow of Treasures
Singing Gorgeous—
“The Great Waltz” Star
Miliza Korjus—*

“...always beautiful...compelling magic”

—Aida Favia-Artisay (Hobbies Magazine)

SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER—5 ALBUMS $19.95 (POST PAID IN USA)

ONE ALBUM $5.95 (POST PAID IN USA)

PRECIOUS GIFTS

*Night in Vienna (Stereo 933)
Golden Voice (Mono 963)
Divine Music (Stereo 966)
Viking Nightingale (Stereo 969)
Queen of Melody (Stereo 972)*

ORDER FORM

Please send album(s): 933 ☐; 963 ☐; 966 ☐; 969 ☐; 972 ☐

WORLDWIDE MAIL/ORDER SERVICE

Amount Enclosed $

PLEASE PRINT NAME

ADDRESS

CITY

STATE

ZIP

YOUNG INVENTOR—Thomas A. Edison is shown here with his tinfoil phonograph which he demonstrated to President Rutherford B. Hayes on April 18, 1878. Hayes may have spoken into the machine and become the first President to hear his recorded voice.

Company of New York, which made records by many celebrities, announced that former President Harrison had recorded for it, but no information was given as to the number and title of the cylinder.

Perhaps it was recorded only for Lieut. Gianni Bettini's private collection, for I never have seen it listed in a Bettini catalog. I doubt that any copy of the fragile wax Harrison cylinder has survived.

II. Fake Records

Some collectors argue naively that the Columbia record "had to be by McKinley, because they couldn't have got away with recording his speech if he hadn't made it." These collectors overlook that fact that Victor made versions by William F. Hooley and Len Spencer; also Edison's was revealed openly as by Frank Stanley.

The truth is that faked records were common throughout the early days of the phonograph. William Ewart Gladstone recorded a message of congratulations to Edison on his invention of the instrument. The original stayed in Edison's possession, but copies by other speakers were played on coin-in-the-slot machines throughout the country.

An Edison record catalog for October, 1899, contained the following cylinders, none of which were spoken by the men whose names, they bore:

No. 7611, Bryan's Speech of Acceptance; No. 7621, Bryan's Speech to Labor; No. 3906, Bryan's Crown of Thorns and Cross of Gold Speech;

(Continued on page 40)

PIANOS & ROLLS

AMPICO Rolls wanted in black boxes. Mint condition, no torn edges. Up to $10 each.—Lacy, Caltech Library, Pasadena, Calif. 91109. my124431

Duo-Art, Ampico, Welte Fine Music Roll Reproductions. — Harold Powell, 5652 Willowcrest Ave., No. Hollywood, Calif. 91601. d120441

FOR SALE: Rebuilt player pianos, also orchestrated pianos, playing O-roll drums and so forth. — Paul Tilson, Elwood, Nebr. Ph.: 785-2522. mh6276

Written especially for collectors:—

"THE CURIOUS HISTORY of MUSIC BOXES" . . .

. . . large and small ones, both cylinder and disc types (Swiss and German), and musical watches, dolls, automata, clocks, snuffboxes. 48 large, detailed, sharp pictures of them, size 8x11"; tells the type of music they produced; lists makers, inventors, U.S. Patents granted; Care and Repair instructions included by Glenn P. Heckert, certified watchmaker (by the U.S.A. Bureau of Standards); index; 242 pgs. of BASIC information a collector needs to collect these items intelligently and wisely!

Price, $6.00 postpaid, insured, autographed by Roy Mosoriak, 30 West Custer Avenue, Oshkosh, Wis. 54901. nc

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Reforeathered
Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806 tfo

Antique

MUSIC BOX SPECIALISTS

Complete repair service, cylinders re-pinned, combs repaired and tuned, all work guaranteed.

Large stock of finest instruments for sale.

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. 10803

Phone: 914 - PE 8-1506

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 40)

Left to Right:

Left: EDISON RECORDER — FRANK C. STANLEY spoke the short-lived Edison cylinder containing a fragment of President McKinley's last speech.

Right: ALBERT CAMPBELL sang with Stanley in the Columbia Quartet record of "Funeral Service over President McKinley."

No. 7612, Roosevelt's Speech to Labor; No. 3905, McKinley's Inaugural Address, No. 7620, McKinley's Speech of Acceptance.

As you see, McKinley's voice had been feigned years before Columbia recorded an imitation of it after his death.

If anyone believes Columbia would not have dared to record a speech by a person other than its original deliverer I wonder who is supposed to have made the many records of Lincoln's Gettysburg Address? For that matter, who recorded Edison cylinder No. 3829, The Sermon on the Mount? (The catalog said clearly that it was by the powerful voiced basso Bill Hooley.)

III. What Frank Dorian Said

I first learned, in my youthful record-collecting days, that William McKinley hadn't made the record associated with his name when I asked a veteran Columbia official, the late Frank Dorian, who then was assistant to the Columbia president, W. C. Fuhri, under what circumstances our President happened to record.

Mr. Dorian, always friendly and understanding with an eager youngster who must have tried his patience a great deal, replied that Columbia never recorded McKinley's voice. Dorian's recollection was that the record of a fragment of the Pan-American Speech was by Len Spencer, "who usually did that sort of thing."

Mr. Dorian added that Columbia made no claim that the record was by McKinley. The speaker's name was left off because of a belief that the record would sell better if some buyers took it to be by the late President.

And it did.

It remained in the catalog years longer than the Victor, which was credited to Spencer.

For many years I accepted Mr. Dorian's identification of Len Spencer as the artist because the voice sounded to my ears exactly like his, but then I obtained a copy of the 1907 catalog of semi-flexible Marconi records that were made from Columbia masters. And this catalog, the only one I ever have seen in which the name of the man who made that record is given, says it was done by Harry Spencer!

That very well may be. Henry Caleb Spencer, Jr., like his older brother Len, did considerable spoken record work. For instance, the Zonophone catalog for May 10, 1901, contains two records on which he speaks portions of speeches William Jennings Bryan had made in his unsuccessful campaign against McKinley in 1900.

These records are: No. 9244, Bryan on the Philippine Question, and No. 9245, Bryan on Our National Destiny. There is no reason why Henry Caleb Spencer, Jr., should not have impersonated McKinley as well as Bryan.

Nevertheless, on playing both the Victor, admittedly by Len Spencer, and the Columbia, supposedly by Harry, I found myself wondering if the Marconi catalog might mistakenly have listed the wrong Spencer brother. Allowing for the differences in the two Companies' recording techniques, the voices sound identical.

Too, they both use a pompous, pretentious manner of speaking, lavishly garnished with broad A's, that I am sure never would have been affected by an unpretentious Ohio politician like McKinley. He kept his ears "close to the grass roots" and would have had a horror of "putting on airs."

On both records, "advantage" is pronounced "advahntage"; "task" is "tahsk", and "problem" is "proBLEM". The recorded speakers obviously were trying to sound as meticulous and dignified as they believed the public would expect a President to be.

Incidentally, the voice and intonation sound exactly like Len Spencer's on "a record of pure gold" which Edison jobbers had him make to be presented to Thomas A. Edison in 1906.

Because of the extreme similarity of voice quality and diction, I should not be at all surprised to learn that the Columbia record was made by Len Spencer. The Marconi catalog, however, says Harry. Certainly, my opinion is that neither it nor any other catalog attributes the record to McKinley.

IV. Piling Up the Evidence

From this point on I shall pile up the cumulative evidence in "short takes":

1. A fact that seems to have been entirely overlooked is that no Columbia catalog ever listed the record under McKinley's name to indicate he was the speaker.

Records by identified artists always were placed beneath their names in their proper alphabetical place in the catalog.

But there was no listing of: "McKinley, William, Late President of the United States, Record By," followed by the title. The record simply was cataloged alphabetically by its name "Address of the Late President McKinley At the Pan-American Exposition," with no speaker credit.

FIRST PRESIDENT TO HEAR PHONOGRAPH — RUTHERFORD B. HAYES, to whom Thomas A. Edison demonstrated his tinfoil phonograph in 1878, 93 years ago.

2. And this is a devastating fact I withheld last month: The Columbia Company had no disc equipment that could have been taken to Buffalo to record McKinley's last speech—which nobody knew would be the last.

McKinley died on September 14, 1901. But Columbia didn't go into the disc record business until February, 1902, after he had been dead five months.

And the first Columbia disc records were not even made by the Company. They were made for it, under the Climax label, by the Globe Record Co., which Columbia had acquired from Eldridge R. Johnson, the founder of Victor.

Columbia's earliest discs, in addition to being called Climax and having a metal ring around the spindle hole, read: "Mfg'd. solely for the Columbia Phonograph Co. by G. R. Co." (Globe Record Co.). It was only later in the year, after McKinley had been in his grave for many months, that Columbia began to do disc recording of its own.

And when Columbia did issue a disc record of McKinley's address, it did not come out, as its number, 833, indicates, until late in 1902, when the martyr President had been dead something like a year!

V. McKinley Funeral Record Came Before Speech Recording

3. An odd thing, that no one except me seems to have noticed, is that Columbia disc records, having to do with McKinley's death, were issued months in advance of the unauthenticated speech recording supposed to be by him.

On No. 453 (and on cylinder No. 31654) the Columbia Male Quartet recorded "Hymns and Prayers from Funeral Service Over President McKinley." This is a studio job, in which the voices of first tenor Albert Campbell and basso Frank Stanley are unmistakable, but I suspect some people have bought the record thinking it was made during the funeral rites in the church.

(Continued on page 50)

THE APOLLO U.S.A. CAST IRON BANK

This is a commemorative bank produced as a tribute to all Apollo moon flights.
Do Not confuse this bank with the Apollo 8 which is out of production — A Real Collectors Item.

Cast iron, 4 1/2" tall, tall painted gold with Apollo U.S.A. in black letters on ship.
1-3 ..... $4.00 Ea.
4-6 ..... $3.00 Ea.

Dealers special wholesale price $23.60 per doz.

F.O.B. add 10% postage on all orders

Excess refunded - more billed

Sold Exclusively by

THE TROJAN HORSE

127-H Central Paris, Illinois 61944
Phone: (217) 465-3630

dc

WANTED

Toy trains & Trolleys built before 1942
Top Prices Paid

Please identify, state price & condition

JACK WM. WINDT

1939 Golf St., Sarasota, Fla. 33577

tfc

MECHANICAL BANKS WANTED

PLEASE NOTE my mechanical bank display ad in this section, listing various wants. — F. H. Griffith, P.O. Box 10644, Pittsburgh, Pa. 15235

tfx

LEHMAN, Bing Maerklin, Carlette, et al., Toy Automobiles. — David Bausch, 252 N. 7th St., Allentown, Pa. 18102 n128801

OLD mechanical and still banks, toys, describe, state price, condition. — Scofield's, Box 457, Ridgefield, Conn. au12069

TOP PRICES paid for rare mechanical banks. Also have banks, toys for trade. Private collector. Ph. (202) 298-6134 or 362-9499. Cable: "Berrymax". — Max Berry, 888 17th St. N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006 jly126581

SOLDIER shooting coin into a miniature South-ern Comfort bottle. Advise price and condition. — C. Markle, P.O. Box 517, Los Angeles, Calif. 90049 ja3863

Please mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements.

BOOKS ON TOY BANKS

1. "Toy Bank Reproductions and Fakes," Robert L. McCumber. 80 Base tracings of reproduced mechanical banks .....$5.95
2. "Old Penny Banks" Meyer & Freeman. 245 mechanical banks illus., also stills .....$7.95

A good combination for beginner collectors & dealers. Order from:

ROBERT L. McCUMBER

201 Carriage Dr.

Glastonbury, Conn. 06033

I buy mechanical banks. Send description and price for prompt reply. nc

ANNOUNCING

"Later Toys"

An 80-page reprint of Toys from 1915 to 1936 (2/3's devoted to pre-1925).

This is an absolute MUST for collectors & dealers. No other book deals with the Gems of this era.

$3.95 PPD.

(40% discount on 6 or more)

(Pa. Residents, Please Add 24c Tax)

BILL FEENEY

Rt. 3, Box 41

Ligonier, Pa. 15658

my27c

TOYS WANTED

American Flyer Lionel, Ives trains, toy automobiles, trucks, buses, cast iron, Tootsie Toy, etc. Old toy and train catalogs wanted. — Marvin Benson, R.D. 3, Box 22, Uniontown, Pa. 15401 n126942

IDENTIFICATION model aircraft in black, blue or grey plastic, 1/72, 1/144 or other scales. — Robert S. Thompson, Hat Shop Hill, Bridgewater, Conn. 06752 d17

OLD TOOTSIE TOYS, Dinky Toys, etc. wanted. — Donald Behrens, 4031 W. Rosedale, Ft. Worth, Tex. 76107 n3042

MECHANICAL BANKS FOR SALE

RENO Slot Machine mechanical bank. Works like real thing. Drops jackpot when three bars hit. Rugged construction. One year guarantee, $6.95. — L. C. Meredith, 2475 Dyer Way, Reno, Nev. 89502 mhl20291

FIFTY mechanical, seventy-five still in stock, hundreds of toys. Send want list. — David A. Museum, 2400 F East Las Olas Blvd., Box 2352, Fort Lauderdale, Fla. 33303 jel22741

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8.

(Except for change of address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rates.)

All advertisers who submit copy for the first time are definitely requested to furnish therewith banking or other satisfactory references.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 48)

like the then 20-year-old Henry Burr, forcing his voice to a lower pitch than usual, intones the following prayer:

"O Lord God, our Heavenly Father, a bereaved nation cometh to Thee in its deep sorrow. We thank thee, O Lord, that Thou didst give to this nation the man whose loss we mourn today. We thank Thee for the faithful and distinguished services that he was enabled to render to Thee, to our country and to the world.

"We pray Thee for that dear one who has been watching by his side through these years, sharing his triumphs and partaking of his sorrows. Help us to say with him whose loss we so deeply mourn: 'It is God's way. His will, not ours, be done.'"

This prayer, I take it, was a repetition of one of the officiating ministers at the McKinley funeral. The "dear one", of course, was McKinley's invalid wife. And the final line was taken from the President's dying words at Buffalo. The record, which was made in both 7-inch and 10-inch sizes, ends with a bit of "Nearer, My God, to Thee," the words of which McKinley murmured just before his death.

After Columbia began issuing double-faced records late in 1908 the Funeral Service representation was coupled on No. A251 with a violoncello solo of "The Evening Star" from "Tannhauser," played by Hans Kronold.

Shortly after the record just described was announced Columbia issued on disc No. 639, but apparently not on a cylinder, a production called "McKinley's Memorial." It was by the Columbia Band with some vocal assistance.

I never have heard it, but the old catalogs say it introduces "President McKinley's Last Speech" and "Lead, Kindly Light," played by the Columbia Brass Quartet. Of course only a snatch of the speech could have been included, and surely nobody will argue that the dead President was on hand to take part in a recorded memorial service to himself!

Then, a few months later, came No. 833. This probably was issued about September, 1902, or a year after McKinley's death, to become perhaps the most controversial record in history.

With the advent of double-faced records, it was coupled on No. A278 with "Listen to the Mocking Bird," sung by Corinne Morgan and Frank C. Stanley, which originally had been issued on single-faced record No. 1833 in August, 1904. It is rather a remarkable coincidence that the McKinley side, No. 833, and its mating, No. 1833, were separated by exactly 1,000 numbers!

Len Spencer's Victor record of the speech never was issued in double-face. It remained in the catalog until May, 1911. The double-faced Columbia record made its last appearance in the May, 1914, catalog, but had

(Continued on page 92)

Left to Right:

Left: FIRST COMMERCIALY RECORDED PRESIDENT — BENJAMIN HARRISON was the first American President advertised as having made a phonograph record. He recorded for the Bettini Company at some time after leaving the White House in 1893, but the title and subject of the cylinder are not known.

Right: THE "MARTYR PRESIDENT" — WILLIAM McKINLEY, who was fatally wounded while shaking hands with visitors to the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 50)

been cut out when the next, November, semi-yearly catalog was issued.

VI. Columbia's Admission

I have saved the most devastating proof, that McKinley didn't make the Pan-American Speech record, for the last. On March, 1902, Columbia issued a catalog of cylinders—this was just before it began recording its own discs—which gave a glowing account of a new type of master record that had been developed. The words, "gold moulded," are not used, but this was the type of master used for producing gold moulded cylinders. Under the heading, "A Revolution in Record Making," the catalog said:

"A permanent master record, permanent in fact as well as in name, has been invented.

"We have been making these records for over a year and have only delayed the formal announcement until the great and costly plant necessary for a record business covering the entire world should be well established.

"In addition to the catalogued records, this process will enable us to furnish at a price within the reach of all, as time goes on, the work of the greatest living speakers, singers and instrumentalists.

"Had President McKinley delivered a speech to the Graphophone during his life, perfect facsimiles could now be made without limit and at a small cost."

Here you have the final proof. In a catalog dated March, 1902, but of course prepared earlier — one issued less than six months after McKinley's death — you have a statement from the Columbia Company itself that McKinley never made a Columbia record.

It is interesting to note that this 1902 Columbia catalog contained the following records of "celebrity" interest:

No. 31666, the unauthenticated McKinley address which had not yet been issued on a disc;

No. 11105, Ex-Gov. Bob Taylor, of Tennessee, on Ingersoll (it's not clear whether "Our Bob", as Tennesseans call him, was praising Ingersoll or denouncing him for his unorthodox religious views, but of course the record wasn't made by Taylor himself);

No. 11007, Ingersoll at the Tomb of Napoleon;

No. 11040, Ingersoll on "Truth" (Bob Ingersoll had died in 1899, and there was still a great interest in his speeches);

No. 11004, Lincoln's Speech at Gettysburg (but not by Lincoln!);

No. 11088, Bryan's "Crown of Thorns and Cross of Gold" Speech;

No. 11001, "Gladstone's Message to Edison."

VII. Political Affiliations of Recording Artists

In concluding this survey, which I hope, and believe, has demolished any remaining faith in the opinion that William McKinley himself spoke the posthumous Columbia record of his Buffalo Exposition address, it occurs to me it will be both interesting and amusing to set down the political affiliations of the artists who recorded portions of that speech.

I do not know Bill Hooley's political sentiments, but he was an Irishman with such a hatred of the British government that, so the late John Bieling told me, he refused to join the other members of the Haydn Quartet in singing "God Save the King" when the Quartet went to England to make records in 1902. Virtually all American Irishmen of that type were Democrats, so I have a strong suspicion that Hooley had voted for Bryan instead of McKinley.

The Spencer family was Republican. Len and Harry's parents were especially warm friends of Senator James A. Garfield of Ohio, who, like McKinley, was murdered after he became President, and Len was named Leonard Garfield Spencer in the Senator's honor.

Frank C. Stanley was a Democrat. Under his real name of William Stanley Grinstead, he was a Democratic member of the Board of Aldermen of his home town of West Orange, New Jersey, when he died in December, 1910. How he could have found time to record for a score of companies and still have a political career is hard to understand, but he did it.

As I said last month, 70 years have passed since that good man, William McKinley, who was one of the most popular of American Presidents, was shot down by a crack-brained assassin, and records of the last McKinley speech were issued to commemorate his death.

I wish we had genuine recordings of his voice, but since we don't have, I have felt it a duty to tell the real story of the controversial Columbia record, made nearly a year after he died, as I know it to be.

And those are my last words on the subject.

Postscript: September 16, 1971. — Well, after all, those were not quite my last words. I have just found, after not having seen it for many years, a letter that Frank Dorian wrote to the late William H. Seltsam on March 23, 1931, and which Seltsam agraph that pertains to Seltsam's presented to me. I will quote the paragraph that pertains to Seltsam's inquiry as to whether President McKinley made a Columbia record:

"We cannot find that we ever had any actual records of Mr. McKinley's voice, although at one time we made records of a great many other famous men of political or other public interest. We had, at one time, records reproducing some of Mr. McKinley's speeches, but the recording was done by one of our professional artists and the records themselves were never represented as the actual voice of McKinley."

The prosecution rests!

CORRECTION

Reader, please add these lines at the beginning of the continued line on page 50.

After the quartet sings "Lead, Kindly Light," one of the hymns used at the funeral, a speaker, who sounds

"AT The SIGN Of The CREST"

(Continued from page 141)

3854 Want ances. Benjamin T. Kinnicutt, (possibly of Barrington, R. I.) father of Henry Clay Kinnicutt b. Taunton, Mass. 1832 who md. 1st Ambrosine McAlvoy of Manchester, Eng.; and 2d Julia Hyde. Corres. inv. Pauline Graham, 2675 Simas, Pinole, Calif. 94564.

3855 ROGERS. Want info. Abigail, dau. John and Ann (Churchman) Rogers, born ca. 1641; md. John Richmond. Corres. inv. See 3854.

3856 PFELL. Want ances. Clara Louise Pfeil, to Charlotte, N.C. 1855 & md. George Herrlein 1864 in Philadelphia; Bladina (Pauline) Pfeil md. C. W. Query in Charlotte, N.C.; and Adolph Pfeil of Camden, N.J. Was their

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Baseball Recordings

By JIM WALSH

(Dedicated to my fellow baseball lover, Walter Jenkins, of Cedar Crest Farm, Rose Hill, Va.)

I. A Baseball Zealot

This article is intended to give winter-time reading pleasure to that ancient and honorable group of sports addicts known as "The Hot Stove League."

My mother used to tell me that when I was an undersized little boy I was completely infatuated with baseball. Before I had learned the alphabet, I begged her to read me the newspaper accounts of the major league games, and when she had time she did, although she knew and cared nothing about "the national pastime."

Frequently, I would talk in my sleep about playing ball, she said. One night she heard me murmur "Shortstop!" then call the names of several players whom I admired.

Today, as an oversized "big boy," my love for the game continues. I am convinced that big league ball is as close to perfection as anything devised by mere humans very well can be. Unfortunately, I seldom have an opportunity to see it played, except on TV. But when I was in Chicago two years ago I went to see the White Sox play the Boston Red Sox and the Cubs take on the Atlanta Braves, even though I had undergone surgery only the month before and it was hard for me to climb up the ramps and find a seat. To make it worse, the White Sox game was played in almost freezing weather.

Because of this preoccupation with the game, I have been intending for more than 20 years to write an article listing records of songs and sketches that have to do with baseball. However, I have kept postponing it because of the dread of going through a multitude of catalogs in search of the scattered titles which have some association with the sport.

Furthermore, compiling such a list requires an extensive knowledge of old popular songs, as many numbers that may be considered to come under the baseball heading have titles which indicate no connection.

At last, however, the job is done. But I must qualify this statement by saying I do not represent my list to contain every recording that refers to baseball. Undoubtedly there must be some titles I have missed. On the other hand, I have included others that probably almost no one but me

"Treasured Masterpieces In Sound"

Venus Recording Company Of America

Post Office Box 1451 / Beverly Hills, California 90213

FROM VENUS

A rainbow of Treasures

Singing Gorgeous—

"The Great Waltz" Star

Miliza Korjus—

PRECIOUS GIFTS

Night in Vienna (Stereo 933)

Golden Voice (Mono 963)

Divine Music (Stereo 966)

Viking Nightingale (Stereo 969)

Queen of Melody (Stereo 972)

"...always beautiful...compelling magic"

—Aida Favia-Artisay (Hobbies Magazine)

SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER—5 ALBUMS $19.95 (POST PAID IN USA)

ONE ALBUM $5.95 (POST PAID IN USA)

ORDER FORM

Please send album(s): 933 ☐; 963 ☐; 966 ☐; 969 ☐; 972 ☐

WORLDWIDE MAIL/ORDER SERVICE

Amount Enclosed $

PLEASE PRINT NAME

ADDRESS

CITY

STATE

ZIP

would have recognized as having baseball significance.

Here is an example: After I had typed the list which concludes this article and thought the list complete, I lay down for a nap. I almost had gone to sleep when the words, "Bobby the Bomber," seemed to ring in my ears.

I sat upright and recalled a Columbia record made in 1918 by Byron G. Harlan of a song by that name. It told of how a baseball pitcher named Bobby went into military service and hurled bombs at the enemy with as much precision as he had tossed strikes across the plate.

Of all the songs ever written, I wonder if any are more forgotten than "Bobby the Bomber" and its companion on the record, "What Yankee Doodle Says He'll Do, He'll Do." However it was, in its way, a baseball number, so I got up, typed an insert, and added it to the list.

Again, who would consider "They're All Good American Names," which Bob Roberts, Eddie Morton, and Fred Duprez, recorded in 1911 had anything to do with baseball? Yet its second chorus consists of the names of big league managers and players of 60 years ago who were of Irish descent. I should like to point out, however, that "Walsh" really means "A native of Wales.")

I never have heard "They're All Good American Names" on a record, but that chorus is worth quoting from the New Phonogram.

"Jennings and McGann, Doyle and Callahan,

Hanlon, Scanlon, Kirk and Donlin, Devlin, Keeler, Walsh and Conlin. Joe McGinnity, Shea and Finnerty, Farrell, Carroll, Darrel and McAmes, Connie Mack and John McGraw, all together shout hurrah!
They're all good American names."

Roberts recorded for Victor, and Edward M. Favor for Edison, an amusing song, "The Umpire Is A Most Unhappy Man." It describes the baseball arbiter as "a cross between a bullfrog and a goat; he has a mouth that is flannel-lined, with brass tubes in his throat. Work like his is merely play; he doesn't even have to ask for all the things that come his way."

One of the cleverest and most amusing baseball songs had a title that would not suggest the game except to initiated fans. It was "Brother Noah Gave Out Checks for Rain," written in 1907 by Arthur Longbrake and recorded by Arthur Collins.

Couched in that deplorable "coon song" style, it told of a Negro church with a leaky roof that let rain drop on the parson's head. A deacon suggested that the church sponsor a baseball game to obtain funds with which to have the roof repaired.

When the deacon's wife remonstrated that baseball was "sinful," the deacon quoted Scripture to prove it was played in Biblical times. The chorus, interspersed with shouts of "Strike one!" "Strike two!" "Foul ball!" "You're out!" and "Slide, doggone ya, slide!" goes:

"Eve stole first and Adam second;
St. Peter umpired the game.
Rebecca went to the well with a pitcher, while Ruth in the field won fame.
Goliath was struck out by David; a base hit made on Abel by Cain.
The Prodigal Son made one home run; Brother Noah gave out checks for rain!"

Probably it could be contended that Longbrake had the gift of prophecy and that in writing, "Ruth in the field won fame," he was looking long years into the future and seeing "Babe" Ruth at the height of his achievement. Of course, however, "Babe" was more celebrated for his stick work at the plate than for his exploits in right field.

Collins' incomparably unctuous delivery of this classical composition could not be bettered.

"Der Babe" himself was called on to do a bit of recording. After he clouted 54 home runs in 1920, the Pathe' Company engaged him to make a Perfect record of "Babe Ruth's Home Run Story."

The resulting disc was mostly a piece of very obvious clowning, and one or two hearings would be enough for the average listener. It appears not to have been sold largely, but a magazine article years ago said Ruth was paid $8,000 for making it.

According to the story, he stuck the check into his inside coat pocket, went home, and changed suits. Since his memory was notoriously bad, he didn't think of the check any more until he wore the suit again months later and found the check still in the pocket.

In 1928 Perfect had Ruth and his team mate, "Lou" Gehrig, make a double-faced record, "Babe and Lou, the Home Run Kings." In it "Babe" appears self-assured and confident, but Gehrig seems nervous and his voice trembles. This also is a piece of forced comedy, and the record seldom is found. Some mail order dealers ask $30 for it, which I consider too much.

A year earlier, Billy Jones and Ernest Hare had made, for Victor and Edison, records of a song called "That's My Hap-Hap-Happiness," in which Jones says his idea of happiness is to be at a baseball game, because "When the bags are full it's great, And 'Babe' Ruth walks to the plate." Ruth's name, at least, is used on the Victor, but on the Edison he is referred to only as "the Home Run King."

II. "Casey" and "Take Me Out"

The most famous rhymed verse with a baseball theme is "Casey at the Bat," written in the 1880's by a San Francisco newspaper man, Ernest L. Thayer. By the same token, the best known popular song based on the pastime is "Take Me Out to the Ball Game," published in 1908, with words by Jack Norworth and music by Albert Von Tilzer.

My old friend Jack Norworth was a "fan." Legend says, however, that Von Tilzer never even had seen a game when he composed the irresistible waltz tune.

It was a proud moment for the young Victor Company when it announced that De Wolf Hopper, a famous stage star, had been "persuad-

(Continued on page 48)

ORGANS—MELODEONS

REED ORGANS, melodeons, bought, sold, repaired. Reeds tuned, revoiced replacements. — C. H. Gunzinger, Box 276, Williamsville, Vt. 05362 mh6675

Old Organ Grinder's Organ. 12x25x20" h., 17tunes, $1000.00.—Harry Ludwig, 1425 S.E. 34th, Portland, Ore. 97214 f3023

SHEET MUSIC

BACK POPULAR sheet music to 1850. Catalog 25c. — Fore's 3151 High, Denver, Colorado 80205. o12698

SHEET MUSIC, choose from thousands of popular, late 1800's to date. We also buy. — McNeill, 1117 South Taylor Ave., Oak Park, Ill. 60304. d3863

OLD popular sheet music, 250,000 songs in A-Z order. — Robert Greenlaw, 307 N. Rampart, Room 412, Los Angeles, Calif. 90026. d126121

OVER 5,000 different sheets of music. Era of 1895-1920. All in Mint Condition. Send $1.00 for 70 page catalogue, credited on 1st order. — L. Kopernik, 345 S. 8th Ave., LeGrange, Ill. 60525. j122112

PIANOS & ROLLS

AMPICO Rolls wanted in black boxes. Mint condition, no torn edges. Up to $10 each.—Lacy, Caltech Library, Pasadena, Calif. 91109. my124431

Duo-Art, Ampico, Welte Fine Music Roll Reproductions. — Harold Powell, 5652 Willowcrest Ave., No. Hollywood, Calif. 91601. d120441

FOR SALE: Rebuilt player pianos, also orchestrated pianos, playing O-roll drums and so forth. — Paul Tilson, Elwood, Nebr. Ph.: 785-2522. mh6276

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Re feathered
Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

Antique

MUSIC BOX SPECIALISTS

Complete repair service, cylinders repinned, combs repaired and tuned. all work guaranteed.

Large stock of finest instruments for sale.

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. 10803

Phone: 914 . PE 8-1506

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued on page 38)

ed" to record his famous recitation of "Casey at the Bat." The back cover of the September, 1906, Record Supplement was devoted to a "plug" for the Hopper disc, which was described as "the most life-like rendition that could be imagined."

Hopper had recited the Thayer poem thousands of times on the stage. It was said to have become so much a habit that sometimes he didn't even realize what he was saying. Nevertheless, he recited it "to the second," as some of his admirers proved by using stop watches.

Despite the claim about "the most lifelong rendition" Victor had Hopper remake "Casey" by a new process in 1909, and the July Voice of the Victor assured dealers the new record was so much better than the old that "you will be simply astonished." This epitomizes the history of the recording industry. At all stages of its progress, it has claimed perfection, only to maintain, a few years later, that new developments have made the old methods obsolete.

After electric recording was introduced, Victor engaged Hopper to rerecord his famous recitation by the new process on August 25, 1926. It was coupled with a football number, "O'Toole's Touchdown."

I never have heard the electric record, but, although Hopper is remembered today almost entirely for "Casey at the Bat," I consider his

"RAGTIME BOB." Bob Roberts made records of two baseball songs, "The Umpire is a most Unhappy Man" and "They're All Good American Names."

ALL-TIME GREATS. Lou Gehrig (left) and Babe Ruth (right), made a Perfect record in 1928. They joked about their home run exploits.

acoustic version to be execrable and more proof that vaudeville and musical comedy performers usually, as the phonograph companies themselves admitted, made bad records. Hopper "hams" the Thayer poem unmercifully, and indulges in wild burlesque where a reasonable amount of restraint would be more effective, I think.

For almost a decade "Casey" stayed in the Victor catalog in single-faced form. Eventually though, it was doubled with a "reply," "The Man Who Fanned Casey." This was recited by Digby Bell, another actor who was a fanatical rooter for the New York Giants.

Bell also did the same recitation for an Edison cylinder, as well as another baseball specialty, "The Tough Kid on the Right Field Fence." "The Man Who Fanned Casey" was, at first, also single-faced, but in 1909 it was coupled with an Ada Jones number, "I'm in Love With the Slide Trombone." Still later, it was paired with "Casey."

"O'Toole's Touchdown" reminds me that in the early days of recording songs and sketches about football were much less common than those concerning baseball. Football in that era was a comparatively minor sport, with its interest largely concentrated in college students and graduates, and had little or no attraction for the average man.

Times have changed. Among early football records I may mention Berliner No. 691 "Football," a comic talk made by George Graham before 1900; Columbia cylinder No. 82910, issued in April, 1906, "Football," a song by "Frank Williams," who was really Dan W. Quinn; Victor No. 5701, and Edison Amberol No. 182, "The Day of the Game," recorded in 1909 by the Peerless Quartet; and Victor No. 19468, issued late in 1924, on which Frank Crumit sang two of his own compositions, "Buckeye Battle Cry," and "Hi-Hi-O-Hi-O." This record was intended primarily for sale in Columbus, Ohio, where Ohio State University, which Crumit had attended, is situated.

III. "Take Me Out to the Ball Game"

Although "Take Me Out to the Ball Game" has been, so to speak, the "national anthem" of organized baseball virtually from the date of its publication, I do not consider it the cleverest baseball song. Norworth's words seem to me crude.

The swinging, lilting tune, however, is enough to keep it perennially popular. The chorus describes the unfailing charm of the sport, mingled with references to "peanuts and Crackerjack." (The verses are seldom sung.) For this reason, when Variety asked me in 1955 to select the 10 greatest popular songs of the past 50 years I felt justified in making the Norworth-Von Tilzer "standard" one of my list.

(Continued on page 52)

MARLENE LEUZZI

#8 So. Lane Englewood, Colo. 80110
Phone: (303) 781-3896

Orders payable in advance. Deposit will hold your dolls on layaway, balance to be paid within 3 months, with one-third down.

1. 4" t. Bisque kewpie farmer, molded hat on top of head with large brim extended. Signed O'Neill, $145.
2. 3½" t. Bisque kewpie huggers, two kewpies hugging one another. Red heart-shaped label, signed Kewpie - Ft. Germany. Original. $65.
3. 2½" t. Bisque kewpie huggers, same as above, with black & white Rose O'Neill sticker. Original. $55.
4. 3½" t. Fr. bisque happy fats, boy & girl. Mkd. Nippon. $85.
5. 3" t. Glass Kewpie candy container, Kewpie standing beside container. Sgd. Kewpie. Reg. Pat., etc. $30.
6. 2½" t. bisque Kewpie Huggers, same as #3, except sgd. Nippon. $30.
7. 3½" t. Celluloid Kewpie moveable arms, straight legs, forehead wrinkled slightly. $4. Japan.
8. 1¼" t. celluloid Kewpie, hands molded on chest, pin on back, is used as Kewpie pin. $6.
9. 7" diam. Kewpie vegetable bowl, pictures of Kewpies in action, wag, blunderboo, etc. Sgd at bottom. Copyrighted Rose O'Neill Wilson. Kewpie Germany. $55.
10. 2½" t. silver bell w/kewpie standing on top of it. Sgd. Kewpie & Rose O'Neill in back of Kewpie. $45.
11. 1¼" t. silver Kewpie charm, sgd Kewpie & Rose O'Neill on back of base. Loops to put on chain or charm bracelet. $35.
12. 22" t. Shirley Temple, mkd head & body. Composition. One eye discolored so only $42. All original.
13. 13" t. Shirley Temple, mkd head & body. Composition. In very good condition. $35.
14. 17" t. Schoenhut. Lovely condition. Blond wig, dressed. Blue painted eyes, four molded teeth. Marked Schoenhut, Pat. 17, of Foreign country. $125.
15. 17" t. Minerva the head. Mkd. on front of shoulder. Sleep blue eyes. Open mouth. Teeth. Nice, soft brown wig. Kid body, jointed at hips, bisque arms. Lovely old dress. Ex. Cond. $55.
16. 4¼" t. China head only black molded hair, braided bun, large molded bow across nape of neck. centerpart, brown painted eyes. Made in 1960. Marked Lucy Webb Hayes. Made & mkd. RMB, 1960. $30.
17. 15 inches tall Copy. Jenny Lind, blonde molded hair, extending from sides of head, bun in back. Parisian type quality, cloth body, bisque arms & legs. Incised Mann. $35.
18. 10" t. paper mache shoulder, head, brown pupilless bulge eyes, closed mouth, brown human hair wig, cloth body, stuffed comp. hands, all original and in excellent condition. Only $20. Dressed.
19. 13" t. bisque swivel head baby blue glass eyes, open mouth. She is called the breather. Nostrils are open. Composition baby body, jointed at shoulders & hips. Dressed. Brown hair. mkd. Heubach, Koppelsdorf. $65.
20. 14" t. Schoenhut wooden doll. The walker. Toddler character face, blue painted eyes and sort of a pouty type face. Brown wig. Arms and legs one piece. Hips have wooden slats inserted and connected to upper part of leg, which gives walking motion. $185. Mkd. Schoenhut.

Buy "Kewpie In Action Book, by Marlene Leuzzi. $12.50, same address. de

BABY LUTHER

Is a darling 5" colored Chubby Googli Baby who will steal your heart. Made of the finest porcelain, with glass blown eyes and curly wig. Signed and dated by maker.

$23.50 postpaid & Insured

Allow 4 to 6 weeks for delivery. Send check or money order to:

D'ART DOLLS

Box 824

Menlo Park, Calif. 94025

jap

BOB AND FRANS DOLLS

Mr. & Mrs. Robert Kershner
7730 South High Street, Littleton, Colo. 80120

- 1S) 16½" t. bisque shoulder head, blue glass sweep eyes, open mouth, brown human hair wig, kid jointed body, celluloid arms, nicely dressed, darling face. Mkd. A. M. Germany. $52.50
- 2S) 20" t. bisque socket head, blue glass sleep eyes, lashes, molded eye brows, open mouth, honey blonde human hair wig, compo. jointed body completely dressed, mkd. Floradora. $65.00
- 3S) 11" t. blonde molded china head, painted blue eyes, closed mouth, sweet face, old cloth body, china arms and legs, dressed darling. $38.00
- 4S) 14" t. 10" circ., bisque head baby, brown wig, blue glass eyes, open mouth, compo. baby body jointed at shoulders and hips. Dressed. Mkd., Heubach Koppelsdorf, Germany. $65.00
- 5S) 13" t. bisque socket head, blue glass stationary eyes, open mouth, very old body, straight arms and legs jointed at shoulders and hips, honey blonde human hair wig, nicely dressed, unusual mark. Mkd., R.A. dated 1909. $35.00
- 6S) 22" t. bisque shoulder head, brown glass stationary eyes, open mouth, blonde human hair wig, kid body, bisque arms, nicely dressed, beautiful face. $70.00
- 7S) 12" t. celluloid girl, molded hair, blue painted eyes, closed mouth, molded teeth, cloth body, straight arms and legs, jointed at shoulders and hips, original Swedish costume. Mkd. Germany. $20.00
- 8S) 12" t. celluloid boy, molded boy hairdo, painted blue eyes, closed mouth, character face, cloth body, straight arms and legs, jointed at shoulders and hips, original Swedish costume. Mkd. Germany. $20.00
- 9S) 18" t. molded black hair china shoulder head, blue painted eyes, red eyelids, closed mouth, original cloth body, china arms, dressed. $48.00
- 10S) 14" t. molded black hair china shoulder head, blue painted eyes, closed mouth, original cloth body, china arms and legs, right foot crack, undressed. $38.00
- 11S) 16" t. bisque shoulder head, brown glass stationary eyes, open mouth, blonde wig, kid body, compo. arms, undressed. Mkd. A. M. Germany. $42.00
- 12S) 20" t. bisque shoulder head, brown glass stationary eyes, open mouth, brown human hair wig, pierced ears, kid body, bisque arms, except pretty, dressed, unusual mk. Mkd. D.E.P. L&H. $65.00
- 13S) 23" t. bisque shoulder head, blue sleep eyes, open mouth, brown wig, kid body, celluloid arms, dressed, Mkd. A.M. (Marked on body, Miss Millionaire). $48.00
- 14S) 7½" circ., bisque head only, blue glass stationary eyes, open mouth, unusual mark. Marked, E.U.S.I. Germany. $14.00

Orders payable in advance. Deposit will hold your doll on lay-away, balance to be paid within three months, (¼ down). Dolls will be returned to stock if not followed by additional payment after 30 days. Postage and insurance, $2. dml

The Jemima Clothespin Doll

Handcrafted by Ruth S. Freeman (author of ENCYCLOPEDIA OF AMERICAN DOLLS, $5.50, etc.) is boxed to include a booklet telling the story of this unique Quaker lady who founded an early 19th century town here. Why was this doll created? This doll, which Ruth Freeman has named "Jeminakin" was created as a handcrafted item to sell in our Museum Shop. Something not found in any other U.S. shop, nor labeled, "Made in Japan."

Her research showed that an original 8" wooden clothespin here had once been dressed as a child to serve as a doll. This doll is made of hard rock maple as near like the original as possible, dressed in costume, and standing on squared-off feet. This one-of-a-kind will certainly be welcomed by doll collectors as not only durable but certainly a unique conversation piece.

Only 100 have been made at $5.25 ppd. Order from The American Life Foundation, Old Irelandville, Watkins Glen, N.Y. 14801 de

HAND PRINTED REPLICAS of Elizabethan Cloth Dolls. Limited edition - Historical collector's item commemorating the Sudeley Castle Exhibition 1971. Queen Elizabeth I and Queen Catherine Parr, 12", $2.75 each (inclusive of sea postage approx. 5 weeks. Air Mail additional 75c each). Cheque or money order to: The Secretary, Sudeley Castle, Winchcombe, Gloucestershire, England. 13238

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 48)

The Victor disc of "Take Me Out" was announced as a "special" for October, 1908. It was issued at that time, of course, to "tie in" with the World Series. Sung by the Haydn Quartet, it is only fair, for the Haydn's singing style was not adapted to the serio-comic type of song.

The Columbia, by Harvey Hindermyer, is dull, I think, for again the singer was not suited to the song. Someone like Billy Murray, the most rock-ribbed baseball fan of all recording artists, would have been much better. I have not heard the Edison cylinder by Edward Meeker or the Zon-o-phone by "Fred Lambert" (Frank C. Stanley), but both may be better renditions than the Victor and Columbia.

One of the best records of "Take Me Out" is an electrically recorded Columbia by Dan Hornsby's Quartet, issued in 1929 as part of the "Familiar Tunes, Old and New" series. The Decca rendition by Frank Luther, Zora Layman, and the Century Quartet is also excellent.

In 1909, Al Von Tilzer, who knew and cared so little about baseball, produced another song, "Did He Run?" In it the pastime is referred to. The words were by Junie McCree.

As sung on the Columbia record, the second verse and chorus perhaps refer to the most famous incident of baseball history, the game played near the close of the 1908 season between the New York Giants and the Chicago Cubs. In it the 20-year-old Frederick Charles Merkle neglected to touch second base when the Giants' winning run crossed the plate.

Eventually the neglect resulted in the Giants losing the pennant and gave young Mr. Merkle the nickname of "Bonehead" by which he ever afterwards was known, but I consider it unfair treatment because Merkle, who still may be alive, was an intelligent player. The song also ridiculed William Jennings Bryan's unsuccessful efforts to beat William Howard Taft for the American presidency.

After more than a generation of strained listening, I found myself unable to understand all the words of the chorus, sung in unison by the Columbia (Peerless) Quartet. But then James R. Smart, reference librarian of the Recorded Sound Section of the Library of Congress, came to my rescue. He found the sheet music and copied for me the words which I quote as sung on the record:

(See page 53)

HOBBIES Magazine reserves the right to reject any advertising.

"A ball game was played at the Polo Grounds
In Nineteen Hundred and Eight,
'Tween the Giants and the Cubs
one day,
And it sealed the Giants'
fate, fate, fate.
They had the game in their hands
all right,
With a man on first and third,
Then a hit brought in the tally to win,
But Merkle's brain was blurred!
CHORUS:
Did he run? Did he run to second,
as he should that day,
Or did Mr. Merkle semi-circle away?
Did he run? Did he run?
A playwright grabbed his ink and quill
And wrote a play called
"The Man Stood Still."

Several other companies also made records of "Did He Run?" I haven't heard them, however, except the Victor which, for no apparent reason, omits the baseball portion, the best part of the song.

Jim Smart, I should add, says it is printed as an "extra verse and chorus" and not a part of the song proper. He also said Merkle is not referred to by name in the sheet music but is called "a Giant" and "Mr. Giant," and the title of the play is given as "The Man That Stood Still." (I wonder if there really was such a play?) I think all the changes made by Frank Stanley and his quartet associates are for the better, even though they may have caused Merkle a little additional embarrassment.

At any rate, I haven't included the Victor "Did He Run?" in the list of baseball recordings. I have listed Edison Amberol cylinder No. 45, "Waltz Medley," though, because it ends with "Take Me Out to the Ball Game."

IV. Comic Monologs and Sketches

Perhaps, glancing over that list, you may wonder why two Murry K. Hill monologs are mentioned. "A Talk on Grand Opera" gets in because Hill begins: "Ladies and gentlemen, tonight I'll sing you a little grand opera — from the opera, 'William Tell.' Written by Wagner. The great Wagner, greatest shortstop that ever lived."

It's hard to see where Mr. Hill got his idea that Richard Wagner (which he didn't pronounce "Vaagner"!), rather than Gioacchini Rossini, composed "William Tell." The Wagner he referred to, however, was "Hans" Wagner of the Pittsburgh Pirates, who still is considered the greatest shortstop.

"Thro' the Hole in the Fence" compared life to a baseball game. It likewise referred to Wagner, saying "The Dutchman, I hear, gets ten thousand a year." But Hill pointed out the moral that in another 10 years, when Wagner's batting eye had died and he had slowed up, the only way he would be able to see a ball game would be by paying admission, or by peeping through "the hole in the fence."

Of all comic monologs about baseball, the one called "Uncle Josh Playing (or "Plays") a Game of FAMED MONOLOGIST. Digby Bell. Vaudeville comedian and baseball "fan" recorded "The Man Who Fanned Casey" for Victor and Edison.

Baseball," was recorded the most widely. It is likely Cal Stewart made several records of it which I have missed.

"The Baseball Girl," by the vaudeville comedienne, Ray Cox, which has been previously mentioned in HOBBIES, was one of the funniest. Miss Cox took the part of a female "rooter" who arrived during the seventh inning and vehemently expressed her displeasure with everything about the game, especially the umpire, portrayed by Ed Meeker.

The only other baseball record by a woman was "That Fascinating Baseball Slide," which Elsie Janis, of fragrant memory, composed and sang on a 1912 Victor. It told the story of a damsel named Mamie Lee who loved a pitcher, "Spitball Mike."

In "Jimmie and Maggie," Ada Jones sang part of "It's Great at a Baseball Game," and Billy Murray recorded it for Zon-o-phone.

The two-part Columbia record of "The Bully Song," has Adeleyn Hood ask Vernon Dalhart: "Papa, what's all dem out yonder with red, white and blue caps on?"

He replies: "Dem's baseball boys, gal!"

"Abe Kabibble at the Ball Game" features Harry Hershfield's cartoon character of that name. It is in Yiddish dialect. Hershfield, who still is living at this writing, was, for years, one of the comedians on the "Can You Top This?" radio program with "Senator" Ford and my late friend, Joe Laurie, Jr.

Joe once planned to have me move my record collection to New York and join him in putting on a disc jockey show. He recorded "Casey's Revenue" for Decca around 1938, with Taylor Holmes' recitation of "Casey at the Bat" for its pairing, as part of a baseball album.

CAL STEWART, FAMED MONOLOGIST. Made several records of "Uncle Josh Playing Baseball."

A very funny record is the electrically recorded Broadway, "Axel at the Ball Game," by Axel Christensen, who was known best as a pianist and had a school in Chicago for teaching ragtime and jazz styles of piano playing. Christensen impersonates a deep-voiced Swede with a thick accent who tells of playing his first baseball game.

He calls a batter a "clunker" and

(Continued on page 118)

Recitation by De Wolf Hopper
Twelve-inch size, $1.00
31559 Casey at the Bat

De Wolf Hopper is the most popular of comedians. Always funny, he is more entertaining than ever in his new opera, "Happyland," in which he is now appearing. Mr. Hopper's delightfully humorous curtain speeches are not the least part of his performances, and no audience ever lets him escape without laughing. He is so compelling that he repeats "Casey at the Bat." No one could ever recite this perfect gem but Hopper — that would be impossible. Certainly after hearing him no living man should ever attempt it.

Mr. Hopper has been persuaded to make us a twelve-inch record of this famous baseball classic, and it is the most life-like reproduction which could be imagined. Shut your eyes and you can imagine the whole scene — five thousand of Mumtaz's fans yelling for their favorite — the redoubtable and mighty Casey standing proudly at the bat — the pitcher gripping the ball — then a moment of hushed expectancy — and then . . . and then the tragedy begins!

Let us draw the veil — suffice to say that you can actually feel the breeze on your face when the great Casey fans the air as he strikes out!

Mr. Hopper is so much pleased with this record that he has willingly agreed never at any time to make this selection for any other company than the Victor.

IMMORTAL RECITATION. The back cover of the Victor Record Supplement for September 1906, was devoted to a "plug" for De Wolf Hopper's rendition of "Casey at the Bat."

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 53)

says: "And then the clunker he clunk the ball and 20 thousand people yell 'Home run!' Then the umpire say, 'Foul ball!' and 20 thousand people say 'Aw, hal!'"

Axel himself clunked a ball into the stands and stood watching it. The spectators screamed, "Run home, Axel, run home!"

But he called back: "Why in hal should I run home? I got money to pay for the ball!"

In "We're the Sunday Drivers," Billy Murray and Monroe Silver are stopped for speeding. They explain to the "cop," also portrayed by Billy, that they are on their way to the baseball game but "haven't got their tickets yet."

The officer retorts: "I'll give you a ticket right now!"

The same idea is used in "If I'm Wrong Sue Me" in which Billy again is going to a game and is given a ticket for speeding. Compton Mackenzie said in The Gramophone that "We're the Sunday Drivers" This obviously was suggested by Harry Tate's famous English music hall sketch, "Motoring." However, it wasn't as funny as the original, he said.

I never have heard "An Englishman at a Ball Game," but I should like to find a copy of this little-known record. "Flanagan and the Reilleys" is a laughable Irish sketch.

V. Odds and Ends

"Slide, Kelly, Slide" has been included on the assumption that it refers to Michael Joseph "King" Kelly, a star player for the Chicago National League team. He died in 1894, around the time the wax cylinder was made.

"Slide, Kelly, Slide," which Al Bernard and Ernest Hare recorded for Edison in 1921, is a different song. Its hero is a virtuoso trombone player. A song with a title that suggests baseball but has nothing to do with it is "Strike Out, McCracken," recorded by Collins and Harlan for several companies in 1903. It tells of McCracken, a sailor, who got into predicaments and had to strike out for the shore.

One record that never was issued deserves mention. It is "The Christy Mathewson Memorial Song," written in honor of the Giants' great pitcher, known as "Big Six," who died October 7, 1925, of tuberculosis. On August 24, 1926, the Peerless Quartet, with Frank Banta at the piano, made five attempts to record an acceptable master of the memorial tribute, but was unsuccessful. On September 9, three more attempts were made, but the record remained unavailable to the public. Early electric recording was tricky and uncertain.

A favorite song in Byron G. Harlan's recorded repertoire was "Can't You Take It Back and Change It for a Boy?" in which a tot objects to a baby sister, "'cause I'd rather have a little baby brother who could play a game of ball with me."

Another record that deserves mention for its baseball associations, is Victor No. 17093, "Remember Me to My Old Gal." It was sung by the late Walter Van Brunt and issued in July, 1912.

The supplement said:

"The first selection on this double might be called a baseball ballad, although it is a sentimental number with no reference to our national game, because it was written by George Moriarity, captain of the Detroit, and introduced by "Chief" (Charles Albert) Bender. ("Jack") Coombs and ("Cy") Morgan, who made a great hit in their vaudeville sketch during the past winter. The boys can entertain an audience almost as well as they play ball."

The record must have been a poor seller. I never have found it.

Baseball enthusiasts who would like to specialize in collecting records about the pastime, will find exceptional value in Decca Album No. A-120, "Take Me Out to the Ball Game." On three 10-inch discs Frank Luther, Zora Layman, and the Century Quartet sing the title song twice.

They also are heard in:

"It's Great at a Baseball Game,"

"Home Run Bill,"

"Take Your Girl to a Ball Game!"

"Let's Get The Umpire's Goat," written by Nora Bayes and Jack Norworth,

"I Can't Miss That Ball Game,"

"Oh, Didn't It Rain?"

"That Baseball Glide," by Andrew B. Sterling and Harry Von Tilzer,

"He's a Fan-Fan-Fan,"

"I Want to Go to the Ball Game."

Mostly these songs are forgotten now. The album likewise includes the 12-inch recitations by Holmes and Laurie.

In comparatively recent years there have been a few recordings of baseball songs. I have "Joltin' Joe DiMaggio," by Les Brown's Orchestra. Also, I have stashed away somewhere a copy of "Did You See Jackie Robinson Hit That Ball?" but can't remember the label or who recorded it. I don't have "Leave Us Go Root for the Dodgers, Rogers." I have made no effort to include 33 and 45 RPM recordings.

"THE BASEBALL GIRL." Ray Cox, vaudeville comedienne, made her famous record of "The Baseball Girl" for Edison in 1909. As this sheet music cover, reprinted by courtesy of Allen G. Debus, shows, she was also a song writer. "That's Why It's Called Honeymoon" was published in 1913.

Of course many songs have been written about baseball, but not recorded. One of these, published more than 60 years ago, is, "You've Made a Home Run With Me." The words were by Thomas J. Gray and the music by Edna Williams. Herbert Marks, president of the Edward B. Marks Music Co., sent me two copies of it. On the cover of one he wrote: "For Jim Walsh, connoisseur of songs and records and an all around good sport. Herb Marks."

I wonder if the Baseball Museum at Cooperstown, N.Y., has a collection of sheet music and records of baseball interest. If not, it would be a project worth while for somebody who combines love of record-collecting with a passion for baseball to try to put such a collection together and present it to the Museum.

I would contribute my own baseball records, but they already have been given in my will to the Library of Congress in Washington, D. C. If an effort should be made to gather records for Cooperstown I hope that what I have written will prove helpful.

Baseball Recordings

Note: The figures in parentheses, following the record number, indicate the approximate year the disc or cylinder was issued.

North American Brown Wax Cylinder

146 (1893) Slide, Kelly Slide. (George J. Gaskin.)

FABULOUS HURLER. Christy Mathewson, the legendary "Big Six" pitcher of the New York Giants, died in 1925. About a year later the Peerless Quartet recorded a "Christy Mathewson Memorial Song" for Victor, but the record never was issued.

BELOVED COMEDIENNE. Elsie Janis, one of the best loved musical comedy stars, composed "That Fascinating Baseball Slide" and recorded it for Victor in 1912.

Edison Two-Minute Wax Cylinders

- 3881 (1897) Uncle Josh Playing A Game of Baseball (Cal Stewart.)
- 9352 (1906) The Umpire is a Most Unhappy Man. (Edward M. Favor.)
- 9642 (1907) Brother Noah Gave Out Checks for Rain. (Arthur Collins.)
- 9889 (1908) Cubs on Parade March. (Edison Military Band.)
- 9926 (1908) Take Me Out to the Ball Game. (Edward Meeker.)
- 10139 (1909) Did He Run? (Edward Meeker)
- 10168 (1909) Uncle Josh at a Baseball Game. (Stewart.)
- 10172 (1909) The Fans' March. (John J. Kimmel.)

Edison Grand Concert Cylinder

- B129 (1900) Uncle Josh at a Game of Baseball. (Stewart.)

Edison Amberol

Four-Minute Cylinders

- 4 (1908) Flanagan and the Reilleys at a Baseball Game. (Steve Porter.)
- 45 (1908) Waltz Medley. (New York Military Band.)
- 156 (1909) Tough Kid on the Right Field Fence. (Digby Bell.)
- 196 (1909) Baseball Girl. (Ray Cox.)
- 430 (1910) The Man Who Fanned Casey. (Digby Bell.)
- 722 (1911) They're All Good American Names. (Bob Roberts.)

Edison Blue Amberol

Four-Minute Cylinder

- 1747 (1913) Baseball Girl. (Ray Cox.)

Columbia Two-Minute Wax Cylinder

- 14005 (1897) Uncle Josh at a Baseball Game. (Stewart.)

COLUMBIA GRAND CYLINDER

- 14041 (1899) Uncle Josh's Football and Baseball Game.

U. S. Everlasting Two-Minute Cylinder

- 372 (1911) They're All Good American Names. (Fred Duprez.)

Indestructible (Columbia)

- .... Two-Minute Cylinders
- 923 (1908) Uncle Josh at a Ball Game. (Stewart.)
- 1063 (1909) Did He Run? (Peerless Quartet.)
- 1065 (1909) Fan's March (Kimmel.)
- 1137 (1910) Blitz and Blatz at the Ball Game. (Duprez and Roberts.)
- 1433 (1911) They're All Good American Names. (Roberts.)

Victor 10-Inch Single-Faced Records

- 2348 (1903) Uncle Josh Playing Baseball. (Stewart.) (Also 8-inch.)
- 4746 (1906) The Umpire is a Most Unhappy Man. (Roberts.)
- 4865 (1906) Jimmy and Maggie at a Baseball Game. (Ada Jones and Len Spencer.)
- 5204 (1907) Brother Noah Gave Out Checks for Rain. (Collins.)
- 5510 (1908) Take Me Out to the Ball Game. (Haydn Quartet.)
- 60090 (1912) That Fascinating Baseball Slide. (Purple Label.) (Elsie Janis.)

(Continued on next page)

FAMOUS HUMORIST. Joe Laurie, Jr., star vaudeville and radio comedian, recorded "Casey's Revenge" as part of a Baseball Album for Decca. One of his partners in the "Can You Top This?" program, Harry Hershfield, made a record of "Abe Kabibble at the Ball Game" for Columbia.

Victor 12-Inch Single-Faced Records

- 31559 (1906) Casey at the Bat. (De Wolf Hopper.)
 31733 (1909) The Man Who Fanned Casey. (Bell.)

Victor 10-Inch Double-Faced Records

- 16228 (1909) Uncle Josh Playing Baseball. Reverse: Uncle Josh on a Fifth Avenue Bus. (Stewart.)
 16241 (1909) Brother Noah Gave Out Checks for Rain. (Collins.) Reverse: Dew Drops Intermezzo. Bell solo by Chris Chapman.
 16837 (1911) A Bit of Grand Opera. (Murry K. Hill) Reverse: I Love It. (American Quartet.)
 16844 (1911) Thro' the Hole in the Fence. (Hill.) Reverse: Come, Josephine, In My Flying Machine. (Ada Jones and American Quartet.)
 16938 (1909) They're All Good American Names. (Eddie Morton.) Reverse: If He Comes In I'm Goin' Out. (Morton.)
 16954 (1911) A Bit of Grand Opera. Reverse: Thro' the Hole in the Fence. (Both by Hill.)
 17377 (1913) That Baseball Rag. (Collins.) Reverse: Rolling. (Peerless Quartet.)
 19469 (1924) Oh, Didn't It Rain! Reverse: No One Knows What It's

- All About. (Both by Frank Crumit.)
 19741 (1925) The National Game March. Reverse: Black Horse Troop. (Both by John Philip Sousa's Band.)
 20500 (1927) That's My Hap-Hap-Happiness. Reverse: Cock-a-Doodle (Both by Billy Jones and Ernest Hare.)
 20517 (1927) We're the Sunday Drivers. (Billy Murray's Trio.) Reverse: Oh, How We Love Our Alma Mater! (Billy Murray and Monroe Silver.)

Victor 12-Inch Double-Faced Records

- 35139 (1909) Man Who Fanned Casey. (Bell.) Reverse: I'm in Love With the Slide Trombone. (Ada Jones.)
 35290 (1913) Casey at the Bat. (Hopper.) Reverse: Man Who Fanned Casey. (Bell.)
 35490 (1916) Boy in the Bleachers. Reverse: My Possum Hunt. (Both by Ralph Bingham.)
 35626 (1917) Home Run Bill's Defense. Reverse: Hold Up at Buck Run. (Both by Bingham.)
 35783 (1926) Casey at the Bat. Reverse: O'Toole's Touchdown. (Both by Hopper.)

9-Inch Single-Faced Zon-O-Phone Records

- 5848 (1903) Uncle Josh Playing Baseball. (Stewart.)

10-Inch Single-Faced Zon-O-Phone Records

- 493 (1906) It's Great at a Baseball Game. (Murray.)
 1699 (1908) Cubs on Parade. (Zon-o-phone Concert Band.)
 1185 (1908) Take Me Out to the Ball Game. (Fred Lambert.)

10-Inch Double-Faced Zon-O-Phone Records

- 5184 (1909) The Fan March. Reverse: Tipperary March. (Accordion solos by John J. Kimmel.)
 5371 (1909) Take Me Out to the Ball Game. Reverse: Bird on Nellie's Hat. (Both by Fred Lambert.)

Columbia 10-Inch Single-Faced Records

- 71 (1902) Uncle Josh at a Baseball Game. (Stewart.)
 3917 (1908) Take Me Out to the Ball Game. (Harvey Hindermeyer.)

Columbia 10-Inch Double-Faced Records

- A286 (1908) Uncle Josh At a Ball Game. (Stewart.) Reverse: Every Little Bit Helps. (Jones and Spencer.)
 A586 (1908) Take Me Out to the Ball Game. Reverse: Come to the Land of Bohemia. Both by Hindermeyer.)
 A664 (1909) Did He Run? (Columbia Quartet.) Reverse: The Yama Yama Man (Ada Jones and Chorus.)
 A2587 (1918) Bobby, the Bomber. (Byron G. Harlan) Reverse: What Yankee Doodle Says He'll Do. He'll Do. (Peerless Quartet.)
 A2907 (1919) Abe Kabibble At the Ball Game. Reverse: Abe Kabibble Dictates a Letter. (Both by Harry Hershfield.) The "ball game" side was recorded in abbreviated form on a Little Wonder.
 15302D (1928) The Bully Song — Part 1 and 2. (Vernon Dalhart, assisted by Adelyne Hood.)
 15440D (1929) Take Me Out to the Ball Game. Reverse: Hinky Dinky Doo. Both by Dan Hornsby Quartet.)

Edison 10-Inch Double-Faced Diamond Discs

- 51973 (1927) That's My Hap-Hap-Happiness. Reverse: I've Never Seen a Straight Banana. (Both by Billy Jones and Ernest Hare.)
 52611 (1929) If I'm Wrong Sue Me. (Billy Murray and His Merry Melody Men.) Reverse: My Old Man. (Bob Pierce.)

Okeh 10-Inch Double-Faced Records

- 40305 (1924) Oh, Didn't It Rain! and, Dear Old Lady. (Both by Ernest Hare.)
 6377 (1938?) Joltin' Joe DiMaggio, and, Nickel Serenade. (Both by Les Brown and His Orchestra.)

Gennett 10-Inch Double-Faced Record

- 5092 (1926) An Englishman at a Ball Game. Reverse: An Englishman's Idea of American Wit. (Both by Harry A. James.)

Perfect 10-Inch Double-Faced Records

- 022443 (1920) "Babe" Ruth's Home Run Story By "Babe Himself." ("Babe" Ruth.) Reverse: Abadele Fox Trot. (Duane Sawyer and His Novelty Orchestra.)
 12382 (1928) "Babe" and "Lou," the Home Run Twins. (Parts 1 and 2, by "Babe" Ruth and "Lou" Gehrig.)

(Continued on next page)

(Continued from preceding page)

Broadway 10-Inch Double-Faced Record

8079-A (1926) Axel at the Ball Game.
Reverse: Axel Receives a Letter. (Both sides by Axel Christensen.)

Decca Album of Baseball Songs and Recitations

Album A-120 (1939) Records No. 3210, 3211, and 3212. (By Frank Luther, Zora
Layman, and the Century Quartet.)

Decca 12-Inch Double-Faced Record

15048 (1939) Casey at the Bat. (Taylor
Holmes.) (Included in Album
A-120.) Reverse: Casey's
Revenge. (Joe Laurie, Jr.)

NOSTALGIA ANTIQUES

Checks payable to:

David W. Irvin, Jr.

Star Route

Smartville, Calif. 95977

Phone: (916) 273-9290

1. RARE: Admiral Dewey Tumblers, have 4 -----each $38.00
2. LENOX BELLEEK: Palette mark (CAC) Wine jug, Green w. scene of Monk on side. Elderly man other, A rare beauty! -----$65.00
3. CUSTARD: Geneva Spooner, Red & Green for Christmas. (Much other Custard, both souv. and non-souv.) -----$40.00
4. ROYAL WORCESTER: Most beautiful 13" Bread Platter, cream background with bread motto around border in turquoise and gold trim -----$55.00
5. CHOICE AMBERINA: 11" Vase-decorated with gold leaves & 2 enamelled insects (probably Moser or Webb). Swirl pattern. Bulbous bottom ruffled top. Never again this quality at -----$175.00
6. GREEN DELAWARE: Creamer & sugar w. gold metal collars & handles - never seen any like this. (Lots of Emerald green glass.) What do you need? pr. $75.00
7. STEUBEN VDS: Creamer & Sugar with lovely Hawkes engraving & Sterling pedestals: sgd Hawkes - My Pride & Joy! (Other choice Steuben) -----pr. $175.00
8. RSP Red Mark 10" bowl, molded flower edges, decoration of pink and white roses with fuschia shadings. -----$75.00
9. COLLECTION RUBY SOUV.: 34 pcs. collected by date from 1893 thru 1923 (2 dates missing). Includes tumblers, mugs, punch cups, wines, toothpicks, pitchers, etc. We scoured the hi-ways & by-ways to ferret out these consecutive dates, proudly present it for -----$450.00 (Other Ruby Flashed; both souvenir and non-souvenir)
10. OASIS CELERY: Rare piece w. fine all over etching -----$38.00
11. RIDWAYS: Coaching Ways mug w. silver band and handle. These are going up fast! -----$32.00
12. CARVED IVORY FAN: with Chantilly Lace -----$20.00
13. SANDWICH XMAS SALTS. In very rare Amethyst -----pr. $65

Friends, please write us your wants. We have fine items and only need to know what is your heart's desire. Your wish is our command. Postage extra dml

EUGENIA SNYDER

Wilson, Wis. 54027

Phone: (715) 772-4707

1. "States" open sugar, clear. 4" dia., 3" h. $9.50.
  2. Swirl and Ball creamer, spooner, cov. sugar. Minor roughness inside cover, set $40
  3. Rosette jelly compote. Open. 4 1/2" h. $14.
  4. Roseville double vase. 5 1/4" h. Brown, tan and green. Floral center attached to vases. 3 1/4" long. $14.
  5. Dresser tray. Royal Saxony. Germany. 7 1/4" x 10 1/2". Raised gr. leaf with raised grape decor. floral center, open work edge. Much gold. $24.
  6. Schwarzenhammer, Bavaria G. U. T. D. plate. 9 1/2" dia. Autumn leaf and grape decor with gold, open handles. $14.50.
  7. H. P. Nippon china shoe. 3 1/2" l., 1 1/4" h. $6.75
  8. Northwoods Diamond Point vase. 10" h., Green. Lovely Irid. $21.50.
  9. Dietz police lantern. 7 1/4" h. orig. $27.50.
- Postage and ins. extra. Excess refunded. Stamp please, Wis. res. add 4% sales tax. do

HELEN EHRENWALD

Market &amp; 14th St.

Pocomoke City, Md. 21851

Telephone: (301) 957-1111

1. 11" Royal Flemish vase, gilt griffon & dragon front & back, stained sections of maroon & raisin subdivided by gold tracings w. Clusters of stars in between. Four figures.
2. Pr. 12 1/2" cranberry Sandwich glass overlay vases, bulls eye faceting all over, one in a lifetime find.
3. 15" Victorian center piece of gondola complete w. gondolier, ruby glass liner, white metal double dolphin stem, the rest heavy brass w. elaborate ormolu trim, a true attention getter.
4. Meissen statuette of swan after J. J. Kaendler, 19th century, nestling amidst bull rushes w. high twisted neck, turned head, marked w. crossed swords in underglaze blue.
5. Jesuit Lowestoft teapot & c/s of Juno & her peacock, tea canister has couple pouring wine & angel w. flyswish.
6. Handsome 15" bronze sculpture signed Giraud, verdi-gris patina, base frieze of wild beasts in combat w. hounds.

dc

Left to Right:

Fabulous, sgd. Clark, Tray, 15".

Pair Royal Worcester Figurines "Water Carriers," purple mark Worcester shot enamels.

Rare Steuben acid cut back green on yellow jade 6 1/4" h., sgd.

Spectacularly heavy cut low bowl, 8", Postage Extra.

YVONNE THORICK

11277 60th AVE. N.

SEMINOLE, FLA. 33540

Phone: (813) 391-2106

E. RANEY

1003 E. Elm New Albany, Ind. 47150

1. Admiral George Dewey glass water pitcher. $75.
2. Grover Cleveland portrait hanging plate, has eagles, flags, dates. Back-edge flakes. $28.
3. Large print Ulysses S. Grant, "West-point to Appomattox." $85.
4. Xmas tree ornament, (no color) old staffordshire, spaniel in belted uniform, saluting. $8.
5. Frozen Charlotte dolls (2) 4 1/4" and 3 1/4", high-glaze china, black hair. Old and mint, each $25.
6. Miniature bisque figure, little girl in Empire style dress, bonnet, holding fan. 2 1/2" French. $20.
7. Cut glass tooth-pick holder, footed. stemmed. $22.50.
8. Souvenir booklet, (hard-back) "New Haven and Yale College" 1886. Ten pages, 45 scenes (from lithographs) each page worthy of framing. Binding loose. $20.
9. Art glass. Pink basket amber twisted handle, Amberina bowl, applied handles, Durand low bowl, pinched edge. Write for photos. dp

OLAND'S ANTIQUES

Rte. 1

Frederick, Md. 21701

COVERED SUGAR BOWLS: Diamond quilted $18, Barred forget-me-not, $19, Massachusetts, $13, Etched Mascotte, $23.50, Beaded Dewdrop, $22, Blue Sheraton, $35, Sunk Daisy, $14.50, Wheat & Earley, $17.50, Colossus, $14, Candlewick, $16, Art, $20, Thousand Eye, $21.50, Louisiana, $13.50.

SPOONERS: Stippled medallion (flint), $17.50, 101 - $10, Loop & Fans, $10, Beaded dewdrop, $10.50, Dakota (Plain) $12, Minerva, $16, Fleur de Lis & drape, $9, Cottage, $7.50, Tokyo (Opal), $13.50, Psyche & cupid, $21, Chandelier, $10, Swan, $14.50, Massachussets, $9.

CREAMERS: Loop & Fans, $10.50, Paneled cane, $10.50, Sunk Daisy, $9.50, Block & Fleat, $9.50, Bungalow, $10.50, Paneled Forget-me-not, $16, Minerva, $28, Bird & Strawberry, $23, Flamingo Habitat, $23, Pittsburg, $13.50, Hummingbird, $24, Hickman, $13.50.

Postage & Insurance extra. Stamp please, Lge stock of pattern glass.

WANTED: Hartley Wines & Colored pieces (no amber). Princess feather master salt. Classic, flint early paneled grape band. dp

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

The Facts About

“The Only Recording of Mr. Edison’s Voice”

PART I

By JIM WALSH

NOTE:—“Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists” is written entirely by Jim Walsh. Unsolicited contributions to this department cannot be accepted.

I. “The Rarest Record in the World”

The date has escaped me, but one Saturday afternoon, from 10 to 15 years ago, I was at work in television station WSLs, in Roanoke, Va., when an announcer strode hurriedly into the news room.

“Jim,” the announcer exclaimed, “tune in the radio network! They’ve just said that in a few minutes they are going to play the rarest phonograph record in the world! I know you will want to hear it!”

I sprang from my chair. Then I said: “Wait a minute! I can tell you what they’re going to play before it even goes on the air! Some goof has come up with a recording of ‘Let Us Not Forget—A Message to the American People,’ by Thomas A. Edison, and has told them it’s the only record of Mr. Edison’s voice. They’ve believed him.

“The fact is, there are thousands and thousands of Edison discs and cylinders of that record still kicking around, but they’ll say it’s the only one in the world! Just listen and see if I’m right!”

I switched on the network radio channel. In a few minutes came the announcement, to this effect—I don’t recall the exact words:

“And now we are proud to bring you the rarest phonograph record in the world—the only recording of Thomas A. Edison’s voice!”

Next there was a statement that the record was “an old-fashioned cylinder,” so I knew Blue Amberol No. 3756 was about to be played. Then came an explanation that since it would be reproduced with a makeshift pick-up it might not sound as clear as it would if played on the original Edison phonograph.

A few seconds later there was a bumping sound as the pick-up began traversing the cylinder’s uneven surface, and I heard the rather distorted, rasping, nasal voice of the late William Maxwell. He, at the time the record was made, was second vice

“Treasured Masterpieces In Sound”

Venus Recording Company Of America

Post Office Box 1451 / Beverly Hills, California 90213

FROM VENUS

A rainbow of Treasures

Singing Gorgeous—

“The Great Walz” Star

Miliza Korjus—

“...always beautiful...compelling magic”

—Aida Favia-Artisay (Hobbies Magazine)

SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER—5 ALBUMS $19.95 (POST PAID IN USA)

ONE ALBUM $5.95 (POST PAID IN USA)

PRECIOUS GIFTS

Night in Vienna (Stereo 933)

Golden Voice (Mono 963)

Divine Music (Stereo 966)

Viking Nightingale (Stereo 969)

Queen of Melody (Stereo 972)

ORDER FORM

Please send album(s): 933 ☐; 963 ☐; 966 ☐; 969 ☐; 972 ☐

WORLDWIDE MAIL/ORDER SERVICE

Amount Enclosed $

PLEASE PRINT NAME

ADDRESS

CITY

STATE

ZIP

READING HIS MAIL — Mr. Edison, shown here at his desk in the Edison laboratory, answered much of his correspondence with a dictating machine, the Edison. The mails brought him many requests to make a record.

Jim Walsh, author of this article, uses a roll top desk which belonged to his father and resembles Mr. Edison's.

president of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., and head of the Edison musical phonograph division. Mr. Maxwell, whose voice would never have won him acclaim as an Edison singer, solemnly intoned words with which I was already familiar:

"Thomas A. Edison, the inventor of the phonograph, has never before permitted his voice to be recorded for the public. Today, however, he has a message for you that is important enough to cause him to break his long established rule. Mr. Edison will now give you that message. I beg to introduce Mr. Thomas A. Edison."

I had read in Edison's monthly musical publication, Along Broadway, that when Maxwell heard his recorded voice played back he refused to believe it was his, and I don't blame him. He admitted that Mr. Edison's part of the record was "just like him," but refused to believe friends who told him his own share was perfectly natural.

Mr. Maxwell was a good example of the well-known fact that almost nobody recognizes his own voice when hearing it reproduced for the first time. And that virtually no one, under such circumstances, is pleased with what he hears.

There was a lapse of perhaps 10 seconds. Then an elderly voice, with which I also was familiar, was heard. It said:

"This is Edison speaking. Our boys have made good in France. The word, 'American,' has a deep meaning in Europe. Our soldiers have displayed courage, generosity, self-restraint, and modesty. We are proud of the North Americans who risked their lives for the liberty of the world.

"But we must not forget, and we must not permit demagogues to belittle, the part played by our gallant Allies. Their casualty list tells the story. However proud we may be of our own achievements, let us remember always that the War could not have been won if the Belgians, the French, the British, and the Italians had not fought like bulldogs in the face of overwhelming odds. The great War will live—live in the minds of Americans for the next hundred years. I hope that when we do reverence to the memory of our brave boys who fell in France we shall not forget their brothers-in-arms who wore the uniforms of the Allies. I believe that the national anthems of France, Great Britain, Italy, and Belgium should be as familiar to us as our own 'Star-Spangled Banner'."

The distorted reproduction then came to an end. It left me thinking that "the only record of Mr. Edison's voice" was probably the shortest in the Blue Amberol and Diamond Disc catalogs.

Most Edison records made after the wax cylinder period, played four minutes or more, but I since have timed "Let Us Not Forget." On my disc copy, from a B master, Maxwell speaks for 25 seconds. Mr. Edison's brief address takes a minute and 20 seconds, so the complete running time is less than two minutes.

After the record had been played and its owner, no doubt, was proudly beaming at having provided such an earth-shaking rarity, there was a panel discussion by persons in the network studio. They tried to decide why, as they thought, only one copy of the record had been made.

I remember a woman suggested the recording was withdrawn because Mr. Edison had mispronounced a word. He had pronounced "Italian," as "Eyetalian." It seemingly didn't occur to anyone that there could be plenty of other copies of the record extant.

The announcer who had entered the news room in such haste ever afterwards proclaimed that I was gifted with extra-sensory perception to know what a record would be before it even was played in New York. But I, of course, wasn't so gifted. I just knew a lot more about old records than anybody on the program, and I was fully aware that no other recording has had so many silly stories associated with it as the one by Thomas A. Edison.

Not even the many people who cherish that William McKinley record, which I recently discussed, in the October and November issues, believe they are the only owners with copies. But the odd thing about the Edison cylinder and disc, particularly the cylinder, is that its average possessor not only thinks it is "the only record ever made of Mr. Edison's voice," but that he has the sole copy ever made of that one recording! Few things could be farther from the truth.

If I had not been so busy putting a newscast together that Saturday afternoon I would have given the New York network headquarters a long distance call and informed the staff members that they had been misinformed. I would have said I had no doubt the person owning the record

(Continued on page 40)

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Re feathered
Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

ttc

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

THREE EDISON OFFICIALS — This picture, taken Dec. 30, 1915, outside the Edison laboratory and reprinted from the Edison Phonograph Monthly for February, 1916, shows Mr. Edison (center) conferring with two officials of Thomas A. Edison, Inc. At the left (wearing a straw hat in December!) is C. H. Wilson, vice president and general manager. William Maxwell, second vice president, is on the right. It is Maxwell who introduces Mr. Edison in the record of "Let Us Not Forget."

was sincere, but he was mistaken in believing it the only one of its kind. As I was busy, I didn't call.

The purpose of this article is to tell the facts I know about "the only record of Mr. Edison's voice." It isn't the only record. I have three others myself. But before getting down to cases it will be interesting to consider how the demand for a record by Mr. Edison developed over the years.

II. "It's Up to Thomas A. Edison to Make a Record"

Preoccupation with the thought of Thomas A. Edison's voice being recorded is nothing new. During the first 20 years of this century the one-time "Wizard of Menlo Park" probably was the best known man in the world.

Although he had little formal education and his personality perhaps was not highly polished, average Americans looked upon him as a demigod, whose invention of the phonograph, the electric light, and the motion picture had resulted from supernatural inspiration. Because of this attitude of awe and near-reverence there sprang up among owners of Edison cylinder phonographs, a craving to possess a record on which the Wizard himself spoke, preferably revealing "How I Invented the Phonograph."

It was a longing that the inventor for many years declined to gratify.

Today, however, Mr. Edison's fame, though enduring, is not so great, I fear, as it was in, say, 1906. A few years ago I met an elderly woman, now dead, who had lived for many years in West Orange, N.J., near the Edison manufacturing plants. She described how she used to see "The Old Man" leave "the place where they made the records," (by which I suppose she meant his red-brick laboratory) and start walking up the street.

"He always would be looking down at the ground," the old lady said, "but every few feet he'd stop and bow, without looking up whether or not anybody was close to him, then walk on again. He was deaf, and I guess he thought people he couldn't hear were speaking to him, so he'd bow to be polite."

It was odd, though, that the woman who lived in West Orange nearly all her life repeatedly spoke of the inventor as "old John Edison." She hadn't even bothered to get his name straight. I doubt there were many Americans in 1906 who didn't know the great man's first name was Thomas.

A more surprising thing happened about 10 years ago. I had a letter from a young man in American military service, who told of finding a disc record he believed might be the only one of its kind in existence. Several friends had assured him it was "worth its weight in gold." He described it as "three times as thick" as an ordinary record. Then he made an astonishing statement:

"There is a picture of a person named Edison on the label, but since I have never heard of this person I wonder why they put his picture on the record." The young soldier asked how much the Diamond Disc (a medley of Hawaiian airs played by Helen Louise and Frank Ferrara) was worth "to the nearest thousand dollars," and whether I thought any other copies had been made.

I replied that the picture was of Thomas A. Edison, the eminent inventor whose company issued the record; that a good many thousand copies of the Hawaiian medley were sold, and that if the disc was in good condition it should be worth about 50 cents.

I imagine he was disappointed bitterly at my statement or consoled himself with the belief that I didn't know what I was talking about. But here was a supposedly educated young American soldier who never had heard of Thomas A. Edison. Again, that wouldn't have been possible in 1906.

Sixty-five years or so ago most owners of cylinder instruments lived on farms or in villages and small towns, and the desire for a recording of Mr. Edison's voice was especially strong among those largely isolated persons.

WHAT WERE THEY HEARING? — These two young gentlemen, photographed in the very early days of the wax cylinder record, could not have been listening to Thomas A. Edison's voice, but no doubt they would have been glad to hear it through the ear tubes.

It is amusing to leaf through the files of The New Phonogram for the years 1905-10, and observe the frequently reiterated requests that Mr. Edison make a record, and the off-hand way with which the appeals were rejected. It is noteworthy, too, that most of the beseeching letters came from communities remote from large cities.

Here is an example. In August, 1905, "W. G.," of Barrow Bay, Canada, wrote:

"Why do you not get Mr. Edison himself to make the announcements on a few records? I am sure they would be good sellers."

Other correspondents at various times were certain that records containing songs played on penny whistles, or Jew's harps, or sung in the Pennsylvania Dutch dialect would "sell big."

"W.G." received this answer:

"We realize the selling possibilities of records made or announced by Mr. Edison, but he would not consider such a suggestion."

The subject of announcements came up again in January, 1908, when "J. F.," of Winterset, Ohio, inquired:

"Is it Thomas A. Edison who makes the announcements on the records?"

There was a touch of indignation in the reply:

"Certainly not. They are made by a member of our recording department."

It was revealed the following month that the announcer was Edward Meeker.

In October, 1905, "E. H. C.," of Owatonna, Minn., made a typical request:

"Can Mr. Edison be persuaded to make a record in his own voice with the title, 'How I Invented the Phonograph,' and accompanied by a few telegraphic dots

(Continued on page 53)

EDISON RECORD TALENT

BYGONE ARTISTS — These performers were headliners in 1909, when there was an insistent demand for a recording of Thomas A. Edison's voice.

TIME-HONORED SHRINE — Thomas A. Edison's laboratory and library, now maintained as a memorial to the great inventor. A woman who lived for many years in West Orange, N.J., recalled seeing Mr. Edison walking up the street from the library and stopping every few feet to bow to admirers, real or imaginary.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 40)

and dashes? I have a Standard, and when giving entertainments frequently hear expressed the wish to hear Mr. Edison's own voice. Should Mr. Edison do this, and the music and science-loving public find it out through the Phonogram, I am sure the demand would be great."

With an overtone of weariness, the editor replied:

"We realize the popularity that a record would have if made by Mr. Edison personally, but we know that Mr. Edison will not consent to making such a record."

Still the inquiries kept coming. In July, 1906, the following was published, from "T.M.," of Philadelphia, Pa.:

"I have been told by several of my friends that Edison Record No. 1 was made by Mr. Edison himself. Was this the case? I notice that No. 1 does not now appear in your catalog."

"T. M." was told;

"No, Mr. Edison did not make Edison Record No. 1 nor any other record placed on the market. Record No. 1 has the most prosaic title of 'All Coons Look Alike to Me,' and it was played in schottische tempo by the Edison Concert Band. When we began to make Edison records by the gold moulded process in 1902, No. 1 was dropped from our catalog."

The impression that Mr. Edison made the first cylinder record probably derived from the well-known story that when he produced his experimental tinfoil machine in 1877, he recited into it, "Mary Had a Little Lamb." Of course the tinfoil wore out after a few playings and was thrown away.

But a good many years ago I heard from a record collector in the Far West, who said, "I have been looking 30 years for the Edison record of 'Mary Had a Little Lamb,' recited by Thomas A. Edison, and I'll never stop till I find it."

I cynically replied that he would be a tired boy if he didn't stop looking, because the Edison Company never issued any such record, and there was no chance of finding the original tinfoil.

"P. W.," of Adelaide, New South Wales, in far away Australia, weighed in with a question, April, 1907, which showed a misunderstanding of what previously had been published about the possibility of Mr. Edison recording. "P. W." asked: "When might the promised record of Thomas A. Edison's voice be expected by his many admirers?" The reply was stiff:

"No such record has ever been promised by anyone with authority to do so, and there is no likelihood of one being put on the market."

In the same issue, "R. D. M." of Chelsea, Indian Territory (now Oklahoma), came through with a bright idea:

"Why cannot we have a record of Mr. Edison's own voice? It looks as though it would more than pay to make it."

The huffy response was:

"We do not think it compatible with a man of Mr. Edison's standing to make a record of his voice, even if he was willing to make such a record, which he is not."

But Phonogram readers never tired of asking the same old question. In August, 1907, "C. I. B.," of Alliance, Ohio, wanted to know:

"Why can we not hear a speech from Mr. Edison himself? I know that if there was a record made by him everybody would want one."

The irritated reply was:

"We cannot furnish a record made by Mr. Edison because he refuses to make a record of this character, especially one to be sold to the public."

Viewing the matter from a distance of 64 years, I cannot see why Mr. Edison considered it beneath his dignity to record something for the gratification of his innumerable humble admirers.

However that may have been, an amusing article bearing on the public's desire for a cylinder of the great inventor's voice appeared in the New Phonogram for November, 1907. I will quote some of its juicier paragraphs:

"... One oft repeated request is for a 'Message from Edison.' A man from Kansas City says briefly and compellingly, 'It's up to Thomas A. Edison to make a record.' A Vermont lady who is good enough to give her family history in full and the many and severe illnesses from which she has recovered, says, in conclusion, 'After this letter I expect Mr. Edison to make a record.' There are many similar letters and although we appreciate the interest evinced in the phonograph's inventor, we must say there is no likelihood of such a thing happening. No living American has been made the subject of so many newspaper and magazine stories as Mr. Edison, but he prefers to remain in his laboratory and keep out of the limelight. He shrinks from the idea of making a record to be distributed broadcast. He is not a professional record maker, but an inventor; and if our friends only think for a moment, every phonograph is a 'message from Edison.'"

"Another thing frequently demanded is that we make records of verses submitted, on the grounds that they would

(Continued on page 89)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 53)

'sell well.' A contributor from the Middle West wants us to make a record of a song that was sung a great deal in her younger days. She does not call to mind its title or author, but thinks the first verse opened in this spirited manner, 'O little bird, I would I were thy mate!' and there is a line whistled by the little birdie in every one of the verses. The tune has escaped her but she says we could easily find out what it was or 'compose fresh music.' Another writer says his life has been a thrilling one and a record of it would be instructive to all. He enclosed a few details of his younger days commencing thus:

"The schools that were when I was young
Did oft my heart annoy;
And so I made a strong resolve
To be a sailor boy.
Yo! ho! for the briny deep."

"The few details took seven minutes to read aloud and as they foreshadowed a life of extreme complexity there is no telling how many hundred records it would take to do his career justice."

"We can afford to put out only such records as our experts feel will be popular. Furthermore, we do not keep poets or composers for the purpose of setting words to music or writing verses to stray airs."

III. Other Questions

The curiosity about Edison as a man and a personality continued unabated. In that same November, 1907, Phonogram, "S. F. H." of Atlanta, Ga., asked: "Is it true that Mr. Edison has retired from working?" And "C.S." of Halifax, Nova Scotia, inquired: "Is it known who first spoke into the phonograph and what was first said?" I'll combine the answers to the two questions:

"Anyone with the working habit so strongly developed as Mr. Edison would find it very hard to break himself of it. You have probably read magazine stories about his giving up work but it simply means that he will attempt no other commercial inventions, preferring rather to keep on improving his existing inventions—the phonograph particularly—and experiment in scientific matters for his own amusement."

"Mr. Edison spoke the first words into it. They took the form of the classic verse commencing, 'Mary had a little lamb.'"

In January, 1909, "G. N. S." of Mount Desert, Maine, who must have been somewhat behind the times, asked, "Is Mr. Edison still living?" and received the assurance: "Mr. Edison is still living at Orange, N.J."

I wonder how "G. N. S." could imagine Mr. Edison might have died without the entire world's blazing with the news.

Finally, in November, 1909, we get back to familiar territory, with an inquiry from "T. McD." of Springston, Idaho:

"Has Mr. Edison ever made any records: if not do you think he ever will?"

I can imagine the Phonogram editor's drawing a deep breath of annoyance as he replied:

"Mr. Edison has never made a record for commercial purposes. He, of course, made several during the experimental stages of the phonograph, but none later."

During the years that followed 1909 until The New Phonogram was discontinued in 1914, little space was devoted to answering questions. In consequence inquiries about the possibility of Mr. Edison's making a record disappeared.

But the demand was still there. It was gratified in the spring of 1919 by the issuance of both Diamond Disc and Blue Amberol cylinder versions of "Let Us Not Forget."

Now, having traced thus far the never-ceasing demand for a record by Thomas A. Edison, next month I will give the history of "Let Us Not Forget" and show that this "message to the American people" is by no means "the only recording of Mr. Edison's voice."

(To be continued)

LUCKY JIM, PLUM, "TWISTY", POSSY, and JIM WALSH EXTEND SEASON'S GREETINGS TO ALL THEIR HOBBIES FRIENDS

Happy

Holidays

1. Coal black LUCKY JIM, photographed by Quentin Riggs in September, already is keeping close lookout for Santa Claus.
2. A splendid "close up" of Professor Plum Duff Walsh, Ph. D., poet, politician and philosopher. Like Lucky Jim, he is on the alert for the first sight of his old friend, Santa.
3. The handsome, orange colored, gentleman shown here (right) is Chip Jenkins III, better known as "Fwee," who makes his home with Mr. & Mrs. Walter Jenkins of Rose Hill, Va. He, too, is looking for Santa, but judging from his expression is fearful that the Man in Red may not appear. The young lady with the strongly marked face on the left of the picture is Midge Moore.

4. The Professor relaxes from his labors as adviser to diplomats and statesmen by rolling in catnip while Lucky Jim looks enviously on.
5. Christy Mathewson Walsh, always known as "Twisty," is the latest addition to the Walsh cat family. She was about 3 months old when this picture was taken last September, so this will be the frolicsome little lady's first Christmas.

6. In memory of Thomas A., beloved pet of Mr. & Mrs. Albert Via, Jr., South Boston, Va. Thomas was struck and killed by a car during the 1968 Christmas Season. With another Christmas and New Year approaching, we here at 225 N. Maple St., Vinton, Va. 24179, cherish tender memories of Roger, Gray, Little Nipper, Percy, Petey, Chip Jenkins and other dearly beloved cats who have left us. "Through Eternity We'll Never Forget." Though we have no picture of Possy, the handsome 'possum, he still lives in the Walsh basement.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

The Facts About

“The Only Recording of Mr. Edison’s Voice”

PART II

By JIM WALSH

NOTE:—“Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists” is written entirely by Jim Walsh. Unsolicited contributions to this department cannot be accepted.

1. “Only Record” One of Thomas A. Edison Myths

Last month’s introductory portion of this survey told of phonograph owners for years beseeching Thomas A. Edison to make a record. They preferred one that described how he invented the sound-reproducing device. We are told, too, of his refusal, perhaps because he thought record making would be out of keeping with his scientific status.

There was also discussion of the wide-spread belief that the record of “Let Us Not Forget—A Message to the American People,” issued in both disc and cylinder form in 1919, is not merely “the only recording of Mr. Edison’s voice”—which it isn’t—but of the delusion of most owners of the record that they have the world’s sole specimen of it.

It is amazing that anyone seriously can hold such a belief. The record was placed on the market in the spring of 1919 and stayed in both the Edison disc and cylinder catalogs for more than 10 years, until the Company quit the phonograph business on November 1, 1929. But that belief certainly exists.

Some years ago a collector from another state stopped to see me on his way home after a visit to the deep South. His eyes were bulging with excitement as he intoned:

“You know what, Jim! While I was in Florida I met a man that has the only record in the world of Thomas A. Edison’s voice!”

I groaned. Then I told him there were thousands of copies of that record still around, and that it was not much more scarce than “The Preacher and the Bear.”

“Oh, my visitor protested, “you’re bound to be wrong. This fellow showed me an Edison catalog that said it was the only recording of Mr. Edison’s voice.”

“Yes,” I wearily replied, “the catalog said that, but what it meant was that it was the only record Thomas A. made to be offered for sale. And it certainly doesn’t mean there’s only one copy in the world. How could it have been on the market for 10 years with just one copy being made?”

I don’t think I convinced him. But maybe, one of these days, he’ll find a copy for himself and change his mind.

While I am on this subject of “only recordings” I am reminded of an amusing incident that happened two or three years ago when a Western collector wrote me he believed he had the only recorded specimen of Mrs. Thomas A. Edison’s voice. This collector had picked up a copy of Edison two-minute cylinder No. 9202, containing “Daddy’s Little Girl,” a “kid song” written by Edward Madden and Teddy Merse, and issued in February, 1906.

Toward the end of the record a woman’s voice, he said, asked: “Thomas, where have you been?”

There was a reply, “Down on Grant Avenue.”

The woman then said something like, “Come on to supper before it gets cold.”

My correspondent had decided, or at least hoped, that Mrs. Thomas A. Edison had entered the studio while Byron G. Harlan was singing the song, that she had asked Mr. Edison where he had been, and had told him to come to supper.

This collector said he was planning to advertise in HOBBIES and ask for bids on “the only record of Mrs. Thomas A. Edison’s voice.”

I am not poking fun at my Western inquirer, who had a certain amount of logic in his favor, even though it had led him to a wrong conclusion. I told him no one would have been allowed to walk into the studio while a record was being made. And, further, if Mrs. Edison had come in and spoken during the performance the cylinder would not have been placed on sale.

Not only that, but the record was made at Edison’s Fifth Avenue studio in New York, where Mr. Edison seldom or never went, and where his wife certainly would not bob up to summon him to supper in West Orange. The fact that the child in the record was called “Thomas” had misled my correspondent.

Of course the talking purposely was inserted to give “kid atmosphere.” I don’t know who the woman assisting Harlan may have been. Chances are she was Daisy Boulais, who worked with Harlan and Frank G. Stanley in several descriptive sketches.

The New Phonogram’s description of the cylinder mentions nothing about a feminine participant. It merely remarks that the song “tells a pathetic little story of human interest set to a melody lingeringly attractive. That Mr. Harlan’s work in this record is in entire sympathy with the intention of the composer goes without saying.”

No, Mrs. Edison’s voice was not caught in that record, any more than STORAGE VAULTS—Contrary to a widely held belief, no master records or working moulds were destroyed in the great Edison factory fire of Dec. 9, 1914. The fire did cause the Company to build vaults for storing the records—one for storing the Edison Blue Amberol Cylinder records, and one for storing the Edison Disc records.

"A MERRY CHRISTMAS" — Shown here is the label of the record "Holiday Greeting From the Bunch at Orange" sent to Edison dealers in December, 1924, and containing brief spoken passages by Thomas A. Edison and his son, Charles. The black label of the inventor's 1919 record, "Let Us Not Forget," could not be reprinted.

it was in certain cylinders that dealers in the Far West sold in the early 1890's. They would engage a woman to sing some standard number such as "Ave Maria" or "The Last Rose of Summer" and have it announced as "soprano solo by Mrs. Thomas A. Edison." Of course this practice was done away with when the factory in West Orange began to supply records for the entire country.

The ludicrous belief among so many collectors that there is only a single record of Edison's voice in the world, "and I've got it," is just one of a number of myths associated with that illustrious inventor and his activities. For instance, it has been published repeatedly that many valuable master records were destroyed in the great fire that swept the Edison plant on the night of Wednesday, December 9, 1914.

Ellen Beach Yaw's coloratura performance of "The Skylark" most frequently is mentioned as one whose masters and moulds were destroyed. But that isn't true. "The Skylark" stayed in the Diamond Disc catalog through 1917, and then was discontinued, probably because only a small number of moulds had been made and they were no longer in good condition.

Then, either because Mme. Yaw was no longer available, or because it was believed the record would have only a future small sale, it was decided not to have her remake it. But the original recordings weren't destroyed.

The Edison Company announced repeatedly that masters and moulds escaped the flames. On Dec. 30, 1914,

C. H. Wilson, vice-president and general manager of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., said:

"All of our master records and master and working moulds were saved. Consequently, we will not have to go through the delays that their loss would have entailed. . . Our Master Recording Department, being located in New York City was not interfered with."

The late Billy Murray told me that when recording artists learned of the fire they anticipated a bonanza which would result from being engaged to remake the destroyed masters. But when the artists asked, they were informed all the originals had been saved, and their services would not be required. Billy said he was assured that all the moulds, even, of the discontinued two-minute wax cylinders, had been preserved.

One result of the fire, however, was the decision to build vaults for storing disc, and cylinder masters, and moulds. These were made fireproof, with automatic control of temperature. The cylinder vault was designed to allow space for 60,000 moulds. The one for discs accommodated 40,000.

A bad effect of the fire was that it caused Edison to decide to give up direct recording of Blue Amberol cylinders in favor of copying them from the discs. The dubbing equipment was crude and intensified the Blue Amberol's annoying tendency toward pitch waver. It resulted also in two levels of scratch—that on the disc, as well as the cylinder's own usually slight surface noise.

In 1916 and 1917, too, the Blue Amberols frequently were dubbed at a wrong speed. So, in order to make them sound fairly decent, instead of unbearably nasal, it is necessary to play them at considerably less than the standard 160 revolutions per minute.

Some of Billy Murray's records especially suffered from this defect. Among them were "Arrah, Go On, I'm Gonna Go Back to Oregon," "Here Comes the Groom," and "You Wake Up in the Morning in Chicago."

The Amberols were frequently fuzzy and mushy. English collectors gave them the name of "Damberols" to express their disgust with the dubbing system. Yet, ironically, while these inferior records were being turned out, Edison dealers were being assured, I understand, that the Company was spending large sums "to improve the Blue Amberol."

Even more ironically, there are collectors of Blue Amberols who insist, in the face of all logic and listening, that the cylinders are better than the discs from which they were copied. The surfaces usually are better, for Diamond Disc surfaces were mostly terrible from late 1916 to a round

(Continued on next page)

Antique MUSIC BOX SPECIALISTS

Complete repair service, cylinders re-pinned, combs repaired and tuned, all work guaranteed.

Large stock of finest
instruments for sale.

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave., Pelham, N. Y. 10803

Phone: 914 - PE 8-1506

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Re feathered

Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

t20

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

1923. But for realism and true recording, the dubbed Blue Amberols don't compare even remotely with the original "Re-Creations."

From the manufacturer's standpoint, however, the dubbing system had the advantage of paying artists for only one recording, instead of for separate cylinder and disc engagements.

Another myth with an Edison flavor is no longer current, but was popular 60 years and more ago. A woman named Grace Nelson had been killed in an automobile accident in Massachusetts, and newspapers published accounts told of how her faithful dog sat listening to records of her voice, played on the family phonograph, and whined for "the touch of a hand that is still."

The catch was that the dead woman was not the Grace Nelson who had made records. As I revealed in the Corinne Morgan series, "Grace Nelson," the contralto, was really Grace Hornby, who continued in good health and had no devoted dog bewailing her loss.

Then there was, of course, the purely false story that used to recur every few weeks to the effect that Ada Jones, the most popular recording comedienne, had died. Edison and the other record companies, one time after another, denied these stories, but they continued to be circulated until Miss Jones finally did die in a Rocky Mount, N. C., hospital, in May, 1922.

All in all, the recording industry has had its full share of myths.

II. Why Was Edison's Voice Finally Recorded?

Perhaps by this time you are wondering, as I have wondered, why Thomas A. Edison finally acceded to the pleas of his admirers and made a record.

If you will re-read the text of his short talk, which was published last month, you will see that William Maxwell, in making the introduction, said that Mr. Edison had a message of such importance he had broken his long-established rule against permitting his voice to be recorded for the public.

Actually, however, the record contains no "message" of vital importance. Mr. Edison simply asks his hearers to remember that World War I could not have been won if the Allied soldiers had not "fought like bulldogs." He also expresses the hope that the National anthems of France, Great Britain, Italy, and Belgium "will become as familiar to us as our own 'Star-Spangled Banner.'"

Customers who bought the cylinder version of the talk, which was dubbed from the Diamond Disc, must have found it almost completely pointless, for the national airs to which Mr. Edison referred were not included on the Blue Amberol. To obtain them it was necessary to buy another cylinder, No. 3757.

The Diamond Disc contained Mr. Edison's talk on one side, and on the other the "house band," the New York Military Band, gave a lifeless and lackadaisical performance of the Allied Airs, but ended with some heavy brass work and more pep on the concluding number, "The Star-Spangled Banner."

France's "La Marseillaise" led off. It was followed by Britain's "God Save the King," Italy's "Royal Italian March," and Belgium's "La Brabanconne."

Fred Harrington, of Traverse City, Mich., informs me that on the Blue Amberol version, the space after Mr. Edison's talk concludes is filled by a band repetitiously playing "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Since the original version of this article was written, I have received several splendid letters from Mrs. Dan Wolf, of Indianapolis, Ind. Mrs. Wolf, the former Marcia Silverstone, is a daughter of the late Mark Silverstone, who was the Edison phonograph and record jobber in St. Louis. He was widely regarded as the most progressive and alert of all Edison wholesalers. In one of her letters Mrs. Wolf sent me a copy of an article in a 1919 issue of a St. Louis newspaper, in which Mr. Silverstone revealed that he was responsible for Mr. Edison's making the record of "Let Us Not Forget." Since his statement has genuine historical value, I am glad to revise this article and include it:

"Possibly the only time Mr. Edison ever tried to make a record was in 1877, when he used the sentence, 'Mary had a little lamb,' in his first attempt to record and reproduce sound. When he heard the words repeated by the tinfoil phonograph upon which his experiment was made, he himself was astonished, although the reproduced sound was far different from the actual voice.

"For years numerous attempts have been made to have Mr. Edison record his voice, which requests were always refused by Mr. Edison. His answer was: 'The public will not be interested in my voice, and I have heretofore kept back because of the fact that the voice was not being reproduced in its natural tones. My voice is of such character, being high-pitched, that any alteration would affect it and it would therefore be unpleasant to the ear.'

"Since the advent of the New Edison there has been quite an insistent demand by Mr. Edison's admirers that a record of his voice be made, to be handed down to posterity. Last February the writer broached the subject to Mr. Edison, suggesting that 'now, since the New Edison records the overtones, bringing out the voice in a quality true to the original without alteration, you should have no hesitancy in permitting the public to hear your voice to be handed down to posterity.' He modestly asked, 'What could I speak about?' My reply was, 'Say something of a patriotic nature. Tell the people that the National Airs of The Allies should be played in conjunction with our own and that we should give credit to the Allies for their work.'

"Induced by his patriotism, he jumped at the idea and immediately prepared a speech which was taken into the phonograph. Upon hearing the reproduction

(Continued on page 52)

THE OLDEST RECORDED VOICES OF HISTORY!

HISTORY SPEAKS:

now listen to the actual voices of these famous people recorded as early as 1888 !!!

P. T. BARNUM • KING GEORGE V FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE • &
O. HENRY • ROBERT BROWNING
EDISON • AMELIA EARHART
THEODORE ROOSEVELT &
WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN • EDWIN BOOTH
SIR HENRY MORTON STANLEY • GENERAL MILLS
PRESIDENT TAFT • GARRET A. HOBART
'CHARGE OF THE LIGHT BRIGADE' BUGLER
SIR ARTHUR CONAN DOYLE • ELLEN TERRY
WILLIAM GILLETTE • SIR ARTHUR SULLIVAN
ANDREW CARNEGIE • JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY

VOL. 1

GOTHAM RECORDS
HI-FIDELITY RECORDINGS

PIONEER RECORDING SOUNDS — This long playing disc contains a reproduction of what is said to be the oldest record in the world—a wax cylinder made in 1888 on which the great composer, Sir Arthur Sullivan, congratulates Mr. Edison on inventing the phonograph. The inventor's voice also is heard in a brief talk, recorded to be played in 1908 at a convention of electrical engineers.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 40)

thereof, he gave his O.K. to the record, saying, "That is my voice." The writer has brought with him from his last trip the record, from which a number of duplicates have been made."

III. How Rare is "The Only Recording?"

I have no copy of the Edison disc and cylinder record supplements for the month in which "Let Us Not Forget" first was made available to the public. The catalog numbers, 50509 and 3756, however, do indicate a time around April, or perhaps May, 1919.

As I have said, "the only recording of Mr. Edison's voice" remained in both catalogs as long as Edison was in the record business. For years each cylinder supplement carried this inquiry at the bottom of a page:

"Does Your Collection include the only recording of Mr. Edison's Voice? 'Let Us Not Forget—A Message to the American People,' by Thomas A. Edison, 3756."

Imagine going to so much trouble to advertise a cylinder of which only one copy supposedly had been made! The truth is that dealers were under special pressure to sell both the disc and cylinder versions, just as they were instructed to push the sale of Walter Van Brunt's recording of "Mr. Edison's favorite song, 'I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen.'"

This being true, how many copies of Mr. Edison's "address" are likely to have been sold? I don't imagine even the McGraw-Edison Company, successors to Thomas A. Edison, Inc., could come up with exact sales figures now, but I think it is reasonable to guess that 100,000 copies of the cylinder were disposed of, and between 25,000 and 50,000 of the disc.

In 1919, Edison probably was selling more cylinders than discs because the rollers were considerably cheaper and there were more instruments to play them. Besides, the demand for a spoken record by the inventor was particularly strong in the more sparsely populated areas where the cylinder clung to its popularity.

One thing that may have had an unfavorable effect on the sale of the record in either disc or cylinder form was that it played for such a short time—less than two minutes. Moreover, it wasn't something one would want to play over and over. Emphatically it was the type of record that would be held mostly in reserve to impress visitors.

Next, you may ask, if thousands of copies of both styles of records were made, why do they so seldom turn up nowadays in second-hand stores and places of that sort? My answer is that the records still exist.

After all, both Edison cylinders and discs were well-nigh unbreakable. They didn't wear out if played only with their diamond reproducers. But some of the people who have them are hoarding their copies in the belief that they are worth a mint of money and will be worth more.

A few mail order dealers and a few antique shops seem to have the same idea. Most such owners set a minimum price of $10 or more for "Let Us Not Forget." This, I think, is too high, but pricing is not my line.

Oddly enough, although I have had several copies of the disc version and have passed them on to friends, I saved one for myself, but I never have owned the dubbed Blue Amberol job, even though I suspect its sales were the greater. Nor have I found a white label copy of the disc, which would mean a pressing made after 1921.

It should be remembered that three masters—A, B, and C—were made of the disc. They will vary slightly. On my B copy, Mr. Edison "fluffs" by saying "live" twice. He may not do this on the A and C versions.

Presumably only one disc master was used for the cylinder dubbing and all cylinders will sound exactly the same. But I am not sure of this. Because they were recorded separately, the disc pressings may vary a few seconds in playing time. This would depend upon which master was used.

At any rate, I think I have proved my case that no one copy is "the only recording in the world of Thomas A. Edison's voice."

IV. Address to Electrical Engineers

I have said that, besides "Let Us Not Forget," I have three other recordings of Thomas A. Edison's voice. We will consider them in the order in which they were spoken.

I feel, however, that I first should point out that Mr. Edison handled some of his correspondence by talking into the "Edison Voice Writer" or "Ediphone," as it was called later. I should say there is at least a chance that some of the dictated cylinders which contained his voice have escaped destruction.

Perhaps the first record "The Old Man" ever made for any sort of public use was one intended to be played in 1908 at a convention of electrical engineers in Boston. That was more than 10 years before "the only recording of Mr. Edison's voice" came out. The 1908 cylinder has been preserved and is re-recorded on a series of long-playing records called "History Speaks."

The long-play record, however, reproduces only one sentence of the cylinder as Edison made it. The entire brief "speech" was reproduced in the Talking Machine News for Dec. 1, 1908, as follows, with this comment: "We have it on the authority of 'the Edison Monthly' this is positively the first record for public use made by Edison."

"Those of us who began our labors at the operator's key 50 years ago have been permitted to see and assist in the whole modern development of electricity. Since the remarkable experiments of Morse in 1841 and the unsuccessful efforts of Field in 1858, there have come with incredible rapidity one electrical art after another, so that in practically every respect civilization has been revolutionized. It is still too early to stand outside these events and pronounce final judgment on their lasting value, but we may surely entertain the belief that the last half of the 19th century was as distinct in its electrical inventions and results as the first was in relation to steam. The lesson of the jubilee of the Atlantic Cable of 1858 is one of encouragement to all who would add to the resources of our race and extend our control over the forces of nature. Never was failure more complete, never was higher courage shown, never was triumph more brilliant than that which since 1866 has kept the Old World moored alongside the New by pulsating cables of steel and copper—the 'family ties' of the civilized world. When I look around at the resources of the electrical field today as shown in this exhibition, I feel that I would be glad to begin again my work as an electrician and inventor; and we veterans can only urge upon our successors, the younger followers of Franklin and of Kelvin, to realize the measure of their opportunities and to rise to the height of their responsibilities in this Day of Electricity."

V. Holiday Greetings to Edison Dealers

In 1924, because of the growth of radio, the talking machine business was in a bad way. Many merchants were giving up the sale of phonographs and records. Edison officials evidently decided their remaining dealers, several thousand of them, needed a "pepping up," so a special record of Christmas holiday greetings was made and distributed to loyal Edison men. It, of course, was not sold to the public.

As a futile gesture of defiance to radio, the record begins with an imitation of static, after which various company officials make short talks. For our purpose, the most interesting voices are those of Thomas A. Edison and his son, the late Charles Edison, who was afterwards Governor of New Jersey.

The Edisons come at the end of side two of the record, which is called "Holiday Greetings From the Bunch at Orange." Young Charles Edison speaks first:

"This is Charles Edison speaking, chairman of the board of directors. It has been almost 50 years since Mr. Edison handed John Kruesi a rough sketch and said, 'Kruesi, make this.' It was the phonograph. That night saw also the beginning of a ceaseless striving for greater perfection in product and organization, of toil and effort unbroken through the intervening years. Who knows what greater rewards are just around the corner of our science? The midnight oil still burns in the Edison laboratory. The products that have survived the commercial storms of nearly half a century can face the future with unflinching confidence—and so, a Merry Christmas and Happy New Year to you all, and here is my promise, with the best that is in me, to help you make it just that."

Despite his brave words about facing the future "with unflinching confidence," we believe Charles Edison already had begun to contend that Thomas A. Edison, Inc., should give up losing money through manufacturing phonographs and records. Five years from the time the disc was made, Edison was no longer in the recorded music business.

As was his wont, the aged inventor spoke only briefly and in a voice more quavering than he sounded in "Let Us Not Forget." Also, as in the earlier record, he begins by identify-

"MOUNTAINEER AND RURAL BALLADS"

We have had such an enormous demand and so many inquiries about this type of record sung by Vernon Dalhart with Violin, Harmonica and Guitar accompaniment that we are listing them this month for your convenience in ordering:

Wreck on the Southern Old 97 . . . . .	No. 4898
Ain't You Comin' Out Tonight? . . . . .	No. 4951
Prisoner's Song . . . . .	No. 4954
Way Out West in Kansas . . . . .	No. 4955
In the Baggage Coach Ahead . . . . .	No. 5011
Many, Many Years Ago . . . . .	No. 5013
The Time Will Come . . . . .	No. 5015
Doin' the Best I Can . . . . .	No. 5016
Rovin' Gambler . . . . .	No. 5027
The Runaway Train . . . . .	No. 5028
New River Train . . . . .	No. 5032
The Death of Floyd Collins . . . . .	No. 5049
She's Comin' Round the Mountain . . . . .	No. 5052
Jesse James . . . . .	No. 5057
The John T. Scopes Trial . . . . .	No. 5059
The Little Rosewood Casket . . . . .	No. 5062
The Wreck of the Shenandoah . . . . .	No. 5078
Stone Mountain Memorial . . . . .	No. 5080
The Convict and the Rose . . . . .	No. 5081
Dream of the Miner's Child . . . . .	No. 5085
The Letter Edged in Black . . . . .	No. 5088
Mother's Grave . . . . .	No. 5096

Does Your Collection include the only recording of Mr. Edison's Voice?

Let us not forget—A Message to the American People, by Thomas A. Edison, No. 3756

Consult your Large Catalogue for your Favorites.
If you do not have one, write us.

Tear off this Page and Add it to Your Catalogue before I began to look for records. I'm not sure, but I think I paid only 10 cents for the Edison disc.

I still remember with pleasure the extremely friendly young man with a charming personality, Mr. Rosenblatt's son, who seemed to find so much enjoyment waiting on me.

I remember his telling me that until a few months before my visit the store had had more than 5,000 cylinders still in stock. This "Holiday Greetings" record I afterwards gave to one of my best friends, Albert R. (Jack) Via, of South Boston, Va.

A few years ago I ordered a third copy from a New York mail order dealer, who asked, and received, $5 for it. Nowadays dealers generally demand, and collectors pay, sums ranging from $30 to $50 per copy for "Holiday Greetings."

There must be a good many of the records in hiding, for each Edison dealer received one. The Diamond Discs were not broken easily, and it is hard to imagine anybody callously throwing away one with Edison's voice. But no doubt most of the owners are holding them for an anticipated rise in price.

VI. Mr. Edison Recites "Mary Had a Little Lamb"

My fourth record on which Thomas A. Edison's voice is heard is another long-player. The title is "The Sound of Fame." It was issued by the Thomas Alva Edison Memorial Foundation.

At the start of side one there is a brief spoken passage by Mr. Edison, taken from a film sound track made in Llewellyn Park, N. J., in 1927, to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the invention of the phonograph. The inventor, then 77, says:

"...The first word I spoke into the original phonograph - - a little piece of poetry:

Mary had a little lamb.
Its fleece was white as snow,
And everywhere that Mary went
The lamb was sure to go."

There is a laugh in the "Old Man's" voice as he recites the verse, and his audience laughs with him. It occurs to me that if the Western collector who said he never would stop looking until he found a record of Edison reciting "Mary Had a Little Lamb" will obtain this LP, his long search will be over.

And that is the story of the various recordings of Thomas A. Edison. I hope you will bear it in mind and not be overwhelmingly impressed the next time somebody tries to awe you by saying he now will play "the only record in the world of Thomas A. Edison's voice."

—O—

Nature, in the main, vindicates her law. Skill to do comes of doing; knowledge comes by eyes always open, and working hands; and there is no knowledge that is not power.

—Emerson

REPEATED QUESTION — For years each monthly supplement of Edison Blue Amberol cylinders asked, "Does your collection contain the only recording of Mr. Edison's voice?" meaning the only record the inventor had made to be sold. Thousands of copies were sold, but many collectors believe they have the only one in the world. This page is from the supplement for February, 1926.

ing himself and stumbles by pronouncing a word more than once. He says:

"This is Thomas A. Edison speaking. I'll see that they do what they say. I would sing for you, but my wife says my voice sounds like a Klaxon horn. Merry Christmas and Happy New Year!"

So far, I have owned three copies of the "Holiday Greetings" record, which collectors generally consider among the rarest of rarities. My first I bought for 50 cents in the store of the Grubbs, Cathcart Company, former Edison dealers in Montgomery, Ala. Mr. Grubbs showed he was not a sentimentalist about Mr. Edison's voice when he set the price.

I gave the record, a few years ago, to the late Herbert A. Schmid, of Indianapolis, Ind., who had the most nearly complete collection of Diamond Discs in the world, but didn't own this specially issued greeting. Before his death poor Herbert Schmid sold his huge Edison collection to pay his hospital bills, and I suppose "Holiday Greetings" went with his other records.

My second copy was found Dec. 24, 1938, in Rosenblatt's store at Greenville, Tenn., during a trip on which my mother and my brother Edward, now both dead, and I, visited President Andrew Johnson's tailoring shop

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

MONROE ("Mike") SILVER

By JIM WALSH

I. A Brief Biography

Monroe Silver, the famous comedian who made hundreds of sung and spoken records in the Yiddish dialect, was born December 21, 1875, in New York City. After suffering an attack of coronary sclerosis on May 3, 1947, he was dead on arrival at the city's Knickerbocker Hospital. His age was 71 years, four months, and 12 days.

Like Sam Ash, whose career as a recording artist was discussed in March, 1971, the humorist's parents were born in England. His father was David Silver. His mother, before marriage, was Sarah Cowan.

Despite his Jewish background, Monroe Silver was known for much of his life by the Irish nickname of "Mike." It was bestowed upon him by Billy Murray, the most popular of pioneer recording artists, and Silver's long-time friend. During the years they toured as members of the "Eight Famous Victor Artists," the Hibernian Murray and the Hebraic Silver were roommates.

Although he grew up in New York's poverty-stricken East Side, "Mike" Silver was like innumerable other poor Jewish boys—Irving Berlin, Al Jolson, Eddie Cantor, George Jessel, and Jack Benny, to name a few—who did not feel they were victims of a heartless society and forever doomed to be "underprivileged." Instead, they were willing to work hard to make something of themselves.

Such boys were idealistic from the standpoint of meaning to grow up to be substantial, self-respecting citizens, with money to show for their efforts.

All his life Monroe Silver was clean-living, and a total abstainer from alcohol. As Billy Murray once said: "Mike deserves a lot of credit. He's been around Broadway all his life, but he's never taken a drink."

The unmarried impersonator of "Cohen" lived at 80 Riverside Drive, New York City. He told me he had "a little niece" who kept house for him. Information on his death certificate was given by his brother, Joseph Silver, of Hackensack, N.J.

II. Resume of Career

A few years before his death Mike Silver sent me a biographical sketch of himself which I shall quote, but alter his errors of spelling and grammar. Later, I will correct a number of misstatements contained in the resume:

"I was born on the East Side in New York. When I was 7 my family moved to Harlem. At that time the horsecars ran only as far as 65th Street, and to finish the trip to 106th Street, where we lived, you had to take a stagecoach.

"After leaving high school, at the age of 14, I was getting laughs always from watching Jewish storekeepers in the old neighborhood when they would use the telephone.

"I put a lot of it together and did it around at some of the affairs I worked for. I did not have a name for it, but later on it became known as 'Cohen on the Telephone.' That was about 1912.

"My dad wanted me to take a business course, but I wanted to be a comedian. He got a job for me with a printing firm, and I became a printer's devil, and, believe me, I was a devil. Every time the boss came in I was telling funny stories to a group of fellows.

"I then started rehearsing amateur shows. Between working in the daytime at the printing business and rehearsing the shows at night, I was so tired in the daytime that I was asleep most of the time. Many a time the boss found me asleep, standing up. He finally fired me. I then went into show business and began playing clubs and banquets.

"It was then I met Billy Murray, who was making records. He took me to the Victor Company, and I made two song records for them: 'Abie, Take an Example From Your Fader' and 'Becky, Stay In Your Own Backyard.'

"It was a little later I made 'Cohen On the Telephone' famous and also made a series of the 'Cohen' records, which sold in millions.

"I then went on tour with the 'Eight Famous Victor Artists.' This group included Henry Burr, Billy Murray, Rudy Wiedoeft, Frank Banta, and Albert Campbell, who, with Burr, were the Peerless Quartet. We toured the country from coast to coast for 12 seasons, playing all the principal cities in the country, also most of the big theaters.

"Before going on one of these trips I received a call from the De Forrest Phono Film Company to make a talking picture of 'Cohen on the Telephone.' It was the first picture where the voice was recorded on the film.

"I remember the day was very hot. They put make-up on me, and every minute the make-up man would come over and dab me with the powder puff. It got so hot they put an electric fan on each side of the stage, and they blew in my face.

"It took all day to make four minutes of this picture. Most of the time was taken in trying to get the noise out of the electric fan.

IN A DEALER'S STORE—The "Eight Famous Victor Artists", taken in 1919, at Akron, Ohio, in a Victrola shop. Seated—Albert Campbell, left; and Fred Van Eps, right. Standing—Monroe Silver, Frank Banta, John Meyer, Billy Murray, Henry Burr, and Frank Croxton.

FOUR OF THE FAMOUS "EIGHT"—A group photo made in the store of Block and Kuhl, Victor Dealers in Peoria, Ill., in 1920. From left to right: youthful Frank Banta, pianist; Fred Van Eps, banjoist; Monroe Silver, comedian; and John Meyer, basso.

"I made many comedy records and from then on every company wanted me. I recorded for Brunswick, Emerson, Vocalion, Pathe, Banner and His Master's Voice in Canada. I became internationally known.

"At the outbreak of the War I entertained at all the camps for the sick and wounded soldiers. A committee came up from Hampton Roads, Va., and took me down to rehearse a show for the Naval Base.

"I had 195 men in that show. Among them was Freeman Gosden, who is known as 'Amos' of 'Amos 'n' Andy,' also Brooke Johns, who later became a star with his banjo in the Ziegfeld Follies. The show was called 'The Frolicking Tars.'

"I then went to the Missouri Theater in St. Louis and was the first man to do comedy talk in the big picture house.

I played three return dates in one year. I then joined Rudy Vallee, and played all the one-night stands, also the big theaters for two seasons.

"I have been on all the big hours in radio, such as 'Rudy Vallee', 'Show Boat', the 'Alka-Seltzer National Barn Dance', the 'Gay Nineties', 'Hammerstein Hour,' and 'Bi-So-Dol Hour.' I have appeared in television and written material for most of the great artists."

Mike's summary contained some inadvertent, I am sure, mistakes. Undoubtedly, he was amused by storekeepers' efforts to master the new-fangled 'phone, but he did not originate the "Cohen on the Telephone" idea—certainly not in recorded form.

"Cohen" records first were made in England around 1910. They were unknown in this country until the spring of 1914, when Columbia imported Joe Hayman's version from its English affiliate.

Soon after that, George L. Thompson recorded it for Edison and Genett, and for Indestructible cylinders; Barney Bernard for Victor, and Lewis Piotti for Pathe. I suspect Thompson may have made it for Rex and other minor companies.

Monroe Silver made no early "Cohen on the Telephone" records and no records using the name "Cohen" until 1918. (Incidentally, I once read a statement by a noted American author—I believe it was Claude Brion Davis—that listening to cylinder records of "Cohen on the Telephone" around 1900 was one of the joys of his boyhood. He was mistaken, for there weren't any "Cohen" records then. He probably had them confused with Russell Hunting's "Casey" monologs.)

Some day I may write a history of "Cohen on the Telephone" records, beginning with the first British versions.

Billy Murray seems to have been exceptionally generous in getting fellow performers try-outs with the Victor Company. Elida Morris, Morton Harvey, Walter Van Brunt, and Ed Smalle are among those who, indirectly or directly, owed their first recording chance to "the Denver Nightingale."

Silver's first two records for Victor will be discussed in the next section. I feel sure he did not record "Becky, Stay in Your Own Backyard," or if he did it wasn't issued. Besides the "Abie" song, his other early Victor recording was "That's Yiddisha Love."

The "Eight Famous Victor Artists" ("Famous" seems to have been changed to "Popular" in 1922 or 1923) appear to have been on the road 12 seasons, from 1916 through a part of 1928. However, Mike was not with them all that time.

He did not join the group until late in 1918 or early in 1919, when Frank Croxton took the place of Arthur Collins and Silver was substituted for Byron G. Harlan. Mike does not mention that Fred Van Eps, the banjoist, was the instrumentalist when he began, and that Wiedoeft took Van Eps' place in 1923.

A considerable time before he became a member of the troupe, Silver, with his ready wit, had dubbed them "The Pallbearers," because Burr, as the manager, insisted on their appearing in formal evening attire. Delighted with this sly crack, members of the "Eight," who disliked the full dress formality, took to calling themselves the Pallbearers and other theatrical people usually referred to them by that tag.

Burr, afterwards, decided the entertainers would be more comfortable in street clothes. Their performances are said to have taken on an added zip and sparkle after that.

I don't know enough about talking movies to affirm or deny the statement that Mike's "Cohen" recording was the first to contain sound on film. Did it come before Al Jolson's "Jazz Singer?"

Some years ago I learned that the entire "Eight" made a Warner Brothers Vitaphone movie during the early days of sound recording. The film that showed the artists was said to be still in existence, but the late L. Wolfe Gilbert, the veteran song writer, who made an investigation for

(Continued on page 40)

Antique

MUSIC BOX SPECIALISTS

Complete repair service, cylinders, re-pinned, combs repaired and tuned, all work guaranteed.

Large Stock of Finest
Instruments For Sale

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave., Pelham, N.Y. 10803

Phone: (914) PE 8-1506

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Re feathered
Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

tfc

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

me, reported that the huge disc containing the sound had been lost.

Mike thought he recorded for Brunswick, but I have not been able to find his name in a Brunswick catalog, nor apparently, did he do any work for Columbia. But he did record for almost every other company of the early 1920's.

III. Recording Career

There seems no need to devote a great deal of space to an elaborate survey of Monroe Silver's phonograph activities. Most of his recorded material consisted of talking records about "Cohen," with the various titles duplicated for assorted companies.

I have not attempted in my own collection to form a comprehensive representation of Silver recordings. I do, however, have all his Victor's except "Abie, Take an Example." I also own his two Edisons.

Likewise included are "Cohen at the Movies," and "Cohen Talks About the Ladies," on Okeh No. 4145; "Cohen Talks on Prohibition," and "About the Ladies," Gennett No. 9066; "Cohen Takes His Friend to the Opera," by Silver and Steve Porter, in two parts, Vocalion B No. 14282; and a singing recording I'd forgotten I had and doubt I ever have played, "No Hot Water in the Bronx," on Cameo No. 915. The other side is "I'm Goin' South," by Maureen Englin.

I have Silver's two last records, the General Tavern Tunes No. 1708, of "Cohen on the Telephone," and "Jake the Plumber," made in 1940; and "Casey and Cohen in the Army," by Billy Murray and Silver, made late in 1941 or early in 1942 for Beacon No. 2001. This was Billy's last recorded appearance.

It seems that a sufficient review of the comedian's recording career may be obtained by quoting the supplement descriptions of his Victor records, made from 1911 to 1927.

Silver's first Victor, the already mentioned "Abie, Take an Example From Your Fader," was issued on No. 16841 in April, 1911. On the A side Arthur Collins sang "Below the Mason-Dixon Line," which he also did on the first Edison Diamond Disc, No. 50901, with "Moonlight in Jungle Land," as its companion. Beginning with the Collins side, the supplement said:

"One of the best songs Mr. (Dave) Reed has yet produced. Collins sings entertainingly about the famous Southern ragtime jubilee, being assisted by a large company of alleged darkies, who are heard in the distance. On the reverse, Mr. Silver, that famous murderer of the English language, gives us one of his celebrated Hebrew character songs."

Silver's second Victor record came out in May, 1911. It combined a humorous monolog, "Through the Hole in the Fence," by Murry K. Hill, with Silver's "That's Yiddisha Love," written by James Brockman:

"Mr. Hill gives us here one of his famous mock melodramas, in each act of which he forgets all his characters and invents new ones. It is all very funny. As a companion piece the favorite Yiddish comedian offers another of his amusing dialect songs, in which true love (the Yiddish variety) is explained at great length."

On October 28, 1911, the Silver side was recouped on No. 16945 with "My Yiddisha Colleen," by Walter Van Brunt, to get a more suitable combination, and "Through the Hole in the Fence" was doubled with Hill's "A Bit of Grand Opera," on No. 16954.

Records sung in Yiddish did not appeal to the masses of buyers and usually had a short life. "Abie" was no exception. It made its last appearance in the May, 1912, catalog. "Yiddisha Love" stayed around until November, 1914.

Monroe Silver's next appearance in a Victor supplement was not made until November, 1918, some seven and a half years after his first record had been published. The disc combined "Cohen Gets Married," and "Cohen on His Honeymoon," and proved a big seller. It was described brilliantly and humorously by that most gifted of all record writers, James Edward Richardson:

"The peculiar brand of humor so characteristic of the lower East Side of Broadway has come to have a definite place in the American world of entertainment. And Monroe Silver is a past-master in the art. In this monolog he gives a vivid picture of his wedding, and various occasions and personalities connected therewith.

"Typical of the style is the philosophy which led to marriage. The prospective bridegroom had been earning the comfortable income of $18 a week, and found that he could have a perfectly swell time on six of them, thus saving 12 each week. Being told that 'two could live as easily as one' on the same income he decided to make the experiment.

"But the high cost of living gripped him in its iron grip. Do what they

(Continued on page 48)

HAVE YOU HEARD?
this "Sportin House" album in New Orleans piano styles

Jelly Roll Morton's
New Orleans Memories

4001 Mamie's Blues (vocal) Original Rags	4003 Buddy Bolden's Blues (vocal) The Crave
4002 Michigan Water Blues (vocal) The Naked Dance	4004 Winin' Boy Blues (vocal) Mister Joe
4005 Don't You Leave Me Here (vocal) King Porter Stomp

Commentary on New Orleans music (16 page booklet) by Charles Edward Smith, co-editor of "JAZZMEN"

---

JELLY ROLL MORTON "The Crazy Dean of Music"

All-Star Seven

Henry "Red" Allen	Trumpet	1703 Sweet Substitute (vocal) Panama
Albert Nicholas	Clarinet	1704 Good Old New York (vocal) Big Lip Blues
Zutty Singleton	Drums	SEXTET
Wellman Braud	Bass	1706 Get the Bucket (vocal) Why (vocal)
Eddie Williams	Sax	1707 Shake It (vocal) If You Knew (vocal)
Joe Britton	Trombone
Morton	Piano

---

DAN CAVANAUGH
the "Ave Maria Tenor" and Choir

1705 I'll Take You Home Again
Kathleen
Macushla 10" record 75c

---

MONROE SILVER
new recording of 1708 Cohen on the Telephone
Jake the Plumber 10" record 75c
(The Face on the Bar Room Floor)

GENERAL RECORDS
1400 Broadway, New York City

ONE OF SILVER'S LAST RECORDS—A 1940 advertisement of the Comedian's General Tavern Tunes recording of "Cohen on the Telephone."

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 40)

would the moderately happy couple discovered that the old order could not continue . . . at the outside all the husband could save was $10 a week! From this to an account of the wedding is an easy stage, and the drollery of the stories is, of course, greatly enhanced by the manner of telling.

"Monroe Silver has a perfect American-Yiddish accent. His tones are the tones of the Bowery, and as he speaks one can see his dark eyes gleaming and imagine the expressive gestures so typical of this canny, humorous race of Orientals with an Occidental heritage of experience."

If Mike Silver's Yiddish accent was perfect—and it was—that was because it was the way he naturally talked. He did not have to impersonate "Cohen" at all. Mike whom I met in New York in October, 1940, while visiting Billy and Madeline Murray, spoke precisely like his character, saying "vell" for "well," "ve" for "we," etc.

Never, in his long theatrical career, did he lose his East Side dialect. I suppose he realized it was a valuable humorous asset, and made no effort to rid himself of it. And I imagine the record just described was made about the time Mike became a member of the "Eight Famous Victor Artists."

He came along with another "Cohen" record in November, 1919. This time it was No. 18608, and both sides were required to tell about "Cohen at the Picnic." It was made on a royalty basis, and Billy Murray, who played more than one minor part in it, told me his share of the first royalty "split" was $1,400. This record was a big seller for years.

It is a delight to quote anything by Jim Richardson, whom I consider one of the finest literary stylists of his time. Here is how he described it:

"Those who went to Cohen's wedding and followed the course of his honeymoon (1850!) will learn in this record that he now has a raft of children. Many of them crowd onto the 'flivver' of Abe Levy, the butcher, to go to the Buttonhole Makers' picnic. It 'busts' on the way, and they have to take the train. Cohen doesn't like to pay fare for the youngest, and he and the conductor 'hand one another a few.'"

"Tribulation continues at the picnic grounds. Mr. Levy, who lost his 'baggage' when the cork came out of it, wanders by the Cohens' spread at lunchtime, and Mrs. Cohen turns her back on him. Called upon to explain, she thought he said he was 'hungry' when he said 'angry.'"

"Cohen bears out the good old principle of thrift by some absurd bargaining with side-show and attraction-men. He is a good husband and father, protecting his flock shrewdly and with humor."

Silver's next Victor record was a singing one, "Rebecca (Came Back From Mecca)." Mr. Richardson refers to it as Mike's first song record. Apparently Mr. Richardson did not know of the two Mike had made 10 years before. "Rebecca" was coupled with a Billy Murray masterpiece, the sidesplitting "My Old New Jersey Home," which he sang in mock-operatic style. Here is the Richardson description of "Rebecca":

"'Rebecca' is Monroe Silver's first song record. The song is a 'wolf.' Rebecca stayed two years in Mecca. She came home, discarded a few conventional garments, smoked Turkish 'tebekah' in a bubble-pipe, danced the Midway dance, and otherwise scandalized the neighborhood."

"Oriental strains open the song, with grotesque but musically beautiful effect. The 'Oy, Oy, Oy, Oy's become queerly mixed with strange echoes of Stamboul and Pera, the crescent and the pentacle blend wildly. . . . Silver's style and accent are notable."

In spite of this flattering description, the record, like most Yiddish dialect songs, sold poorly and was cut out of the catalog by 1924. Probably "Rebecca" impaired the sale of the Murray side.

The Yiddish comedian's next appearance in a Victor list came in November, 1921, when he and Murray made their first duet record, "Irish Home, Sweet Home," a Harry Von Tilzer song. It was combined on No. 18794 with "Melon Time in Dixieland," by Murray and the American Quartet. The description:

"Billy Murray (you remember) sang several months ago of his 'Old New Jersey Home,' and now he rings in Monroe Silver to sing of an ancestral Irish one. Mileasian tunes are played by a Yiddish band; differences of opinion lead to an insurrection."

"Monroe sings in Yiddish dialect, Billy in Irish, and the 'Wearing of the Green' is sadly mixed up with 'Hatikvah,' and 'Mazzeltov' with 'Killarney.' This is a highly original humorous record."

"Irish Home Sweet Home" also appealed to comparatively few customers and was cut out in 1924. On February 24, 1943, Mike wrote to me and asked if I knew where he could get a copy of the song, which he apparently wanted to use in a night club act, and I was glad to have a spare copy of the record to send him.

There were no more Victor records by Monroe Silver until after the beginning of the electric recording era. In the summer of 1926 he and Murray sang "I Ate the Baloney," coupled with "Down By The Gas House," by Aileen Stanley and Murray, which was issued without description.

"I Ate the Baloney" is an amusing story, set to the tune of "Pop Goes the Weasel," of how an Irishman and an Italian, (both portrayed by Billy) and a Hebrew (impersonated by Mike) tried to get access to a piece of bologna to keep from starving. The Hebrew, of course, won.

Silver's last Victor record appearance was on No. 20517, in which he and Murray sang an amusing burlesque of a college song, "Oh, How We Love Our Alma Mater!" It was issued in May, 1927, coupled with a satire on careless motorists, "We're the Sunday Drivers," by Billy Murray's Trio—Murray, Silver, and Carl Mathieu.

The genial humorist made two Edison Diamond Discs, which were issued in the summer of 1920. One was a singing number, "Pittsburgh, Pa.," on

(Continued on page 52)

MIDDLE-AGED PHOTO—Monroe Silver autographed this photo for Jim Walsh in 1940. It was taken during the years Silver was a member of the "Eight Famous Victor Artists." He was better-looking as an elderly man than in his younger days. Jimmy Martindale told him: "Mike, your face has more character now."

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 48)

No. 50655, and the other, "Cohen On His Honeymoon," in which he was aided by Edward Meeker, No. 50667.

The first was dubbed onto Blue Amberol cylinder No. 4004, and "Cohen" onto No. 4029. "Pittsburgh" was combined with "My Friends, Morris and Max" by another Yiddish dialect comedian, Maurice Burkhart, and the "Cohen" number with the old classic, "Backyard Conversation Between Two Jealous Irish Washerwomen," by Ada Jones and Steve Porter.

The Edison description of "Pittsburgh, Pa.," was diverting:

"Another Yiddish number. This one is highly hilarious. It details the events of a golden wedding anniversary at which all the 'bergs' in the world seem to be gathered: 'Greenberg, Romberg, Blumberg, Bromberg, Danberg, Hanberg, and Goldberg, too; Timberg, Bimberg, Ginsberg, Linsberg, Weissberg, Iceberg, and Silverberg, too.'

"It wound up in a free-for-all, scrap in which the 'bergs' got mixed up and inflated.

"The affair took place in Pittsburgh, Pa."

IV. Experiences With the "Eight"

I first saw Monroe Silver when Billy Murray and I walked into Lindy's famous New York restaurant (now, alas! closed) where all the show business celebrities congregated. There we found Billy's pal, Jimmy Martindale, at a table with two men who smiled broadly at us as we entered.

One, a black-haired little chap, not much more than 5 feet tall, was Albert Campbell, who had been an outstanding pioneer recording tenor. The other, short, stocky, white-haired, and with a benevolent smile, was 65-year-old Mike Silver. He was wearing dark glasses and explained he was using them because he had got a piece of steel in one eye.

It was appropriate to find Al and Mike together, for Billy recalled that, in the days when the "Eight Famous Victor Artists" were touring the country, he saw little of Silver, his roommate. He explained that as soon as a concert had been given, Silver and Campbell, both tee-totalers, set out together, walking, to "see the town."

They would stroll for hours until they became tired, then look for what they guessed would be the worst silent movie in town. Once a choice had been made, they would go in, and one would watch while the other went to sleep.

When the watcher became sleepy he would wake the other, whisper briefly what had happened so far in the film, and then go to sleep while his companion watched. Usually, they would alternately watch and sleep through three or four showings, without taking the trouble to return to their hotel rooms and go to bed.

Most of the members of the "Eight" had special duties in addition to taking part in their stage offerings. John Meyer, for instance, made all the musical arrangements, and Billy Murray bought gifts for the backstage workers who helped put on their shows.

As for Mike, his job was to keep a scrapbook of newspaper accounts of the troupe's various performances. I often have wondered if those books are still in existence, perhaps in the custody of his "little niece." They would be worth more to me than I possibly could afford to pay, as an invaluable and unique source of information about the "Eight".

Other members of the group said that the opening act for their shows, which featured Mike Silver, was one of the funniest things they had ever seen, and audiences always seemed to agree. It was used for years. Mike would come to the front and pretend he was trying to tell an improper story. Billy would rush up to him and exclaim: "Mike, Mike! You can't tell that story here!" Mike would make a second attempt, and another performer would run up and remonstrate. All did, except the pianist, Frank Banta, who remained in position.

Eventually, almost everybody on stage had a try, culminating with the obese Burr, who waddled out, and exclaimed:

"Mike, I'm the manager of this troupe and I tell you, you can't tell that story here!"

But Mike still insisted. Finally, Billy said: "Now, Mike, I'm going to leave it to your sense of decency. You know my wife, don't you?"

HISTORICAL RECORDS

(Continued from page 36)

vero but to become once more its "umile ancella." Hampered by the effects of her prolonged absence, and the appearance of new and younger sopranos, she nevertheless soon established herself anew as a leading prima donna.

Besides her successes throughout Italy, Olivero also dazzled opera audiences in Lisbon; Cairo; Helsinki; Edinburgh; Berlin and Wiesbaden; London; Paris; Brussels; Anvers and Enghien; Vienna; Amsterdam; Malta; Bern; Madrid; Bilbao and Oviedo; Caracas; Buenos Aires; Rio de Janeiro.

For one with a truncated career, the soprano certainly managed to get around!

As for Olivero's roles, they were as numerous as they were varied. Her presence had adorned operas such as Puccini's "Bohème," "Butterfly," "Fanciulla del West," "Turan-dot," "Manon Lescaut," "Suor Angelica," "Tosca."

Mascagni's "Iris," "Cavalleria," Monteverdi's "Incoronazione di Poppea," "Ballo delle Ingrate," "Combattimento di Tancredi e Clorinda."

Alfano's "Risurrezione," "Ultimo Lord," "Cyrano de Bergerac," "Sakuntala." Wolf-Ferrari's "Amor Med-

And Mike replied: "Oh, sure, I know Madeline."

"Well, she's in the audience," Billy said. "Do you mean you would tell that story before her?"

"Heck, yeah Billy!" Mike answered. "She was the one that told it to me!"

This brought down the house and the show proper got under way. Frank Banta said he must have watched that routine 500 times, and laughed equally hard every time he saw it.

When the "Eight" broke up in 1928, Billy Murray, Walter Scanlan, and Monroe Silver united themselves in an act called "The Three Wise Fools." They planned to make records, make personal appearances in theaters and night clubs, and undertake a tour of overseas music halls.

Before long, however, sound films began closing vaudeville houses, and things became worse when the big depression came. Silver dropped out of the trio, but Murray and Scanlan remained together as a duet team. They made records and sang on radio, until 1932, when there was no record business left to speak of.

Mike Silver returned to night club work and appeared before many civic clubs. He also, as has been reported, was frequently on radio, and continued to be employed pleasantly for the remainder of his life, though he was semi-retired when he died in 1947.

It would be impossible to estimate how many wholesome laughs he gave to millions of listeners during his lifetime; and the amount of good he did as a teller of clean, wholesome stories, and a singer of amusing dialect songs.

ico," "Campiello," "Quattro Rusteghi.

Without listing composers: "Faust," "Mefistofele," "Adriani," "Traviata," "Manon," "Fedora," "Don Giovanni," "Penelope," "Rosenkavalier," "Lohen-grin," "Mazeppa."

Also "Francesca da Rimini," "Giulietta e Romeo," "Celestina," "Notturno Romantico," "Assunta Spina," "Caverna di Salamanca," "Medea," "Monacella della Fontana," "Misteri Gaudio," "Guerra," "Medium," "Mercante e l'Avvocato," "Cleopatra," "Orfeide," "Dialogo delle Carmelitane," "Voce Umana."

I am sure there were more, but these works give a fairly good idea of the soprano's versatility. Most of them, of course, are of the verismo type, and in several she created the principal female parts. But, judging from the obscurity of some titles, it appears that not all have enjoyed lasting success.

Fortunately for the United States, Olivero came to Dallas in 1967 to sing in Cherubini's "Medea." To be exact, she originally was scheduled for "La Fanciulla del West," to be staged in 1968 there. But due to a change in plans, she was invited to do Medea instead, one year earlier.

And that, in the very same Dallas where Callas had come, sung and conquered with her Medea only a few

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

VERNON ARCHIBALD

By JIM WALSH

PART I

(NOTE: "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists" is written entirely by Jim Walsh. No unsolicited contributions will be accepted.)

I. Two Quartets of Brothers

In HOBBIES for October, 1957, I told the life story of Edwin M. Whitney, a well-known elocutionist. He had been the second tenor of the once famous Whitney Brothers Quartet.

Other members were Alvin Whitney, first tenor; William, baritone; and Yale, bass. At the time I wrote Yale was a resident of California, but Alvin, William, and Edwin had died. A fifth brother, Casward Whitney, who lived in Pittsburgh, had not been a Quartet member.

Now I am in the mood to consider the career of another noted recording artist, who also had been a member of a Quartet of brothers—so far as I know, the only one other than the Whitney Brothers that made records besides appearing in concert. I am thinking of Vernon Archibald, the baritone of the Archibald Brothers Quartet.

Vernon also won fame as a soloist. Concerning his brothers, I must confess ignorance. I never have learned their given names and don't know whether they are still living.

Unlike Edwin Whitney, Vernon Archibald did not do humorous work. There is scarcely a trace of comedy in any of his records, except the quaintly amusing Edison of "Why Adam Sinned," in which the baritone is heard as a member of the American Singers.

In private life, however, Archibald seems to have had a strong sense of fun. I base this belief on a letter I received in June, 1964, from Elmer Moore, a well-known member of a Record Collectors' Society in Southern California. Writing from Santa Monica on June 12, Mr. Moore said:

"... Vernon Archibald passed away on May 24 at San Marino, California. We had a date for a taped interview with him a few days after he died. In fact, we had a date for an interview a year ago but could not get to it. Of all the recording artists I have met I think Mr. Archibald was the greatest. I had him on a program several times for a speaker and the audience could hardly stay on their chairs with his hilarity."

One thing that impresses me as I begin to write about Vernon Archibald is his unusual recording career. He began, as a soloist and a member of the Quartet, with Columbia in 1911. Late in 1912 he made just one Victor record—or at least only one was issued.

Then, in 1913, he began making Edison Blue Amberol cylinders and was soon on the Diamond Disc list. As far as I know, he never again, with one exception, sang for any company except Edison, unless he took part in the American Singers' Columbia records. He did not participate in the Quartet's Victor discs.

The exception was an 8-inch hill-and-dale Operaphone disc of "For All Eternity," which he apparently sang around 1915. Of course, there is a chance he made more Operaphone records of which I have not learned and that he also recorded for Phonocut, Keenophone, Rex, and other obscure manufacturers.

The EDISON PHONOGRAPH MONTHLY

VOL. XIV

MAY, 1916

NO. 5

VERNON ARCHIBALD, BARITONE

VERNON ARCHIBALD, baritone.

GIFTED FAMILY—The four Archibald Brothers—see bottom of page—were natives of Indiana who became well-known as a concert and record making male Quartet. This page is reprinted from a Columbia booklet of about 1912.

Antique

MUSIC BOX SPECIALISTS

Complete repair service, cylinders, re-pinned, combs repaired and tuned, all work guaranteed.

Large Stock of Finest Instruments For Sale

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave., Pelham, N.Y. 10803

Phone: (914) PE 8-1506

There were some years in which Archibald's name did not appear in an Edison supplement, but he may have been on salary throughout all that time. Perhaps, he did some singing in choruses without receiving label credit.

Edison went out of the record business November 1, 1929. It may be that Archibald's contract, if there was one, had not expired yet and he was still

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Reforeathered
Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

tfc

unable to sing for another company.

II. A Bit of Biography

By combining information contained in an Edison cylinder record catalog for April, 1914, with that in Archibald's death certificate we learn he was born June 30, 1886, on a farm near Morocco, Ind. His father was W. L. Archibald and his mother's maiden name was Matilda Maller.

The singer's vocal training was received under Professor L. A. Torrens, dean of the Cosmopolitan School of Music, Chicago. Archibald spent six years "studying the piano under some of the finest teachers in America," and was considered a brilliant pianist. He was always at the keyboard when the American Singers rehearsed.

The baritone made many concert tours of the United States and Canada. During his early career he was soloist for two years at the Union Park Congregational Church in Chicago. Later he was baritone soloist of the Madison Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church in New York City, a position he still held when the 1914 catalog was printed. His large concert repertoire consisted of more than 200 songs, besides the standard oratorios and cantatas.

I remember seeing a mention in an issue of The Billboard, published in the 1920s, of a recital he gave in New York. His accompanist was Bertha Ball Archibald. I imagine she was his wife. The death certificate lists him as a widower.

According to the certificate, Archibald had worked all his adult life as a voice teacher. He had been living at 402 East Las Tunas in San Gabriel. Although Mr. Moore said Archibald died in San Marino, the certificate gives the place of death as the Los Angeles County General Hospital, 1200 N. State St., Los Angeles. He had been living in California 14 years.

Cause of death was said to be a carcinoma of the tongue, complicated by an arteriosclerotic heart condition. The body was cremated May 29, 1964, five days after his death.

III. Archibald's Columbia Records

We now need to go back a long way to October, 1910, when the name of the Archibald Brothers Quartet first appeared in a monthly Columbia supplement. The boys were given an effusive sendoff.

Their first record combined unaccompanied versions of "Juanita" and "The Two Roses." It sold for 75 cents, whereas most other 10-inch double-faced Columbians were only 65 cents. This additional price may mean that the Quartet was getting royalties in addition to a recording fee.

Said the supplement:

"It will take you less than one hearing to discover that this is the greatest quartet record ever issued. In it is set an entirely new standard in quartet recording, such as only Columbia records by these same singers to be issued in the future can equal. In these recordings are to be found effects of harmony and blending that transcend anything of like nature presented in the past, and which attain to the supreme height of musical expression."

(Continued on page 40)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

"The Archibald Brothers Quartet is an organization that is almost unique in the character of its formation, and altogether so in respect to artistic excellence. It is composed of four brothers, each of whom is a soloist and a vocalist of the highest rank. It is as a quartet, however, that they are best known to concert audiences throughout the country, and it is in male part-song work that they have attained the wonderful proficiency which distinguishes their performance as being unequalled by that of any other organization. The most remarkable features of their work are the absolutely perfect balance and blending of the four voices, and the rich, organ-like harmonic effects that throughout all of their interpretations charm and delight the musical ears . . . The Archibald Brothers Quartet sings exclusively for the Columbia."

I suspect Columbia was moved to issue Archibald Brothers records because Victor and Edison already were recording the Whitney Brothers. Both groups specialized in an old-fashioned type of unaccompanied singing, and the Archibalds may be regarded as forerunners of the Columbia Stellar Quartet, which the Company's artist and repertoire manager, George Clarence Jell, formed in 1914.

The styles of singing were much the same. And when Charles Harrison organized the American Singers in the late 1920s, with Vernon Archibald as the baritone, the group's style was much like that of the Stellar Quartet, of which Harrison had been first tenor. Other Archibald Quartet records were issued a few months following the initial "release," and the last appeared in March, 1912.

Meanwhile, the Quartet's baritone made his Columbia debut as a soloist in February, 1911, with a coupling of "The Heart Bowed Down" from "The Bohemian Girl" and "In Happy Moments" from "Maritana," a half-forgotten opera with which Archibald was to be peculiarly associated during his recording career.

In March there was another double, "In Old Madrid" and "Mother o' Mine," and in May appeared the last of Archibald's Columbia solo offerings, a 12-inch combination of "The Lord Is My Shepherd," and "Beyond the Gates of Paradise." The supplement said: "Both (songs) are rendered by Mr. Archibald with the smooth and beautiful intonation and tone quality that has distinguished his work in former records."

Just why Vernon Archibald ceased to sing as a Columbia soloist, and the brothers' Quartet made no more records is a matter for speculation, but it is unlikely that the unaccompanied ensemble had much appeal for 1911 record buyers. They were much more likely to call for "Alexander's Ragtime Band," "Casey Jones," or the perennially popular "Preacher and the Bear."

I wonder, but don't know, how much longer the brothers sang together. Probably not long, for Vernon seems to have decided to make a reputation for himself as a soloist rather than as a member of a group.

IV. Just One Victor

Vernon Archibald made his next appearance in a record list when the Victor supplement for October, 1912, was issued. He sang a setting of the verses, "Thou'rt Like Unto a Lovely Flower" (Du bist wie eine Blume), by the German poet, Henrich Heine. The beloved Olive Kline's rendition of George H. Cluttsam's "Creole Cradle Song" was its companion. After discussing Miss Kline's soprano solo, the new supplement said:

"On the opposite side Mr. Archibald, a new baritone, makes his first appearance in the Victor catalog with a splendid rendition of Wilson G. Smith's lovely setting of Heine's poetic gem."

Smith was, for many years, music critic of the Cleveland Press. I have a reprint of an article he wrote for the Press October 12, 1916, issue, in which he reviewed an Edison "direct comparison" recital and admitted he had been amazed to find he could not distinguish Marie Rappold's recorded voice from her living tones.

The Victor record obviously was a poor seller—probably a bit "above the head" of the average buyer of black label discs—for it was discontinued in November, 1914. The Columbians had a longer life. All by the Quartet and by Vernon Archibald were still in the June, 1915, catalog.

In September, 1917, two double-faced Columbians by the soloist and three by the brothers still could be had, but by September, 1919, all the solos were gone. Only one Archibald Brothers Record, "I Love to Tell the Story" and "I Need Thee Every Hour," remained. Even it disappeared in 1921.

It is rather odd that no more Victor records were issued by Archibald. Perhaps the small sale of No. 17157 discouraged further attempts. The supplement contains a small picture of him, in which he looks to me rather like a young Franklin D. Roosevelt. It depicts a thin, "hatchet-faced" man, with dark hair parted in the middle, and somehow gives me an impression of not being very strong.

Yet, the singer lived to be almost 78. Photographs of him at various stages of his life, however, always made me feel he was not physically robust. In most of the later "shots" he is shown wearing nose glasses. When he doesn't have on glasses his eyes, I think, look weak.

V. Blue Amberol Cylinders

The most important part of Archibald's recording career began in September, 1913, when he started singing for Edison's new indestructible cylinders. He came along just too late to make any old-style wax "rollers." However, he soon was contributing liberally to the Blue Amberol output, and when the Diamond Discs were introduced he became a disc standby.

Actually, the baritone already was doing disc work before his first cylinder was announced. I just have come across a note sent to me many years ago by the late Fred Rabenstein. He was the "paymaster" for Edison artists.

In his note he mentions that Diamond Disc No. 80169, "Pinafore" Airs, was recorded July 3, 1913. The artists were Elizabeth Spencer, Helen Clark, Harvey Hindermeyer, Emory B. Randolph, William F. Hooley, Thomas Chalmers, and Archibald.

Since I plan to publish what I hope is a complete list of Archibald's recordings at the end of this article, I do not intend to review all of his Edison cylinders and discs individually. But I shall mention some of the more outstanding. The list does not contain mentions of his concerted work, such as the singing he did with the New York Light Opera Company, which made the "Pinafore" record, because accurate information could not be obtained without minutely inspecting the Edison books of recording dates.

Archibald's first Blue Amberol was No. 1829, "Down By The Old Mill Stream." It now is recognized as an evergreen barber-shop Quartet and community-sing classic.

(Continued on page 48)

THE WHITNEY BROTHERS (shown here) preceded the Archibalds as a popular male Quartet. From left to right they were: Alvin, first tenor; Edwin M., second tenor; William, baritone; and Yale, bass. All were dead in 1957 except Yale, who was living in California.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 40)

The Edison Phonograph Monthly for September, 1913, referred to the singer as having "an especially pleasing baritone voice of wonderful compass, sweetness and quality. He has done much oratorio work, and also shown marked ability as an interpreter of popular songs. His enunciation is clear and distinct."

The monthly supplement gave this description of the record:

"Tell Taylor, who wrote both the words and music of 'Down By the Old Mill Stream,' is better known as a publisher of popular music than as a composer. He has, however, written several of these sentimental ballads and has been successful with them. 'Down By the Old Mill Stream' was originally sung in vaudeville by Don Heath. The baritone of Vernon Archibald is well suited to this selection as a change from the tenors who usually choose this sentimental style of melody to sing. The soprano voice of Marie Kaiser is heard in the refrains."

The supplement writer seemed to intimate that the public was tired of hearing tenors sing the song. However, when a Diamond Disc was made of it the assignment went to a light opera tenor, Arthur Clough, although Archibald was being employed steadily by Edison.

Archibald's next Blue Amberol was another old standby, "In the Shadow of the Pines," a type of rather mawkish sentimental song said to be beloved by Mr. Edison and perhaps recorded at his demand. The record was a duet between Archibald and the tenor, Royal Pish, with the baritone leading throughout and the high voice harmonizing. One amusing fact is brought out in the last sentence of the supplement description, which I have shortened:

"In the Shadow of the Pines' is one of the 'big hits' of the Middle West and probably more copies of it have been sold than of any other song published west of the Mississippi River, with the possible exception of 'Answer,' by Robyn. The lyric of this song was incidental to a story published in Godey's (Lady) Book about 1880."

Although the description gives the impression that the song was a current "big hit," it was published in 1895.

In February, 1914, Archibald was represented by what then was regarded as "the unofficial state song" of his native Indiana, Paul Dresser's "On the Banks of the Wabash." Originally published in 1898, the song had another surge of popularity in 1913, and a Blue Amberol recording was in order.

I cannot determine from a small map whether or not the Wabash River flows through Morocco, Ind., near which Archibald was born. However, he probably felt some emotion as he sang the beautiful refrain:

"Oh, the moonlight's fair tonight along the Wabash.

From the fields there comes the breath of new-mown hay.

Through the sycamores the candle lights are gleaming,

On the banks of the Wabash, far away."

The record was described as being sung with the assistance of a chorus, but the only other voice I can detect is that of a soprano. Perhaps Marie Kaiser was once more helping him out.

Again, when a Diamond Disc of the "Wabash" song was wanted (in 1924), a tenor, James Doherty, was called on to sing it, even though Archibald still was available. But, as will be shown later, one of the last pieces of recording work the baritone did for Edison involved Archibald taking part in a disc version of "The Banks of the Wabash."

Most of Archibald's Blue Amberols after December, 1914, were dubbings from Diamond Discs, although in some instances the disc itself was not issued. And not all the discs were transferred to cylinders.

Before the dubbing system began, an interesting Blue Amberol was announced in September, 1914. It was "The Rose of the Mountain Trail," in which Archibald was assisted by Clementine de Vere, a soprano who had been popular in opera, oratorio, and concert work, but whose career then seemed in eclipse. The supplement said:

"This selection marks rather a new departure in record making, for seldom, if ever before, has a vocal obbligato been made the feature of a record. It is especially pretty and gives very novel effects of harmony. Clementine de Vere was, a few years ago, a very well-known concert and oratorio singer in the United States. On this record her voice blends with that of Vernon Archibald beautifully."

Oddly, this attractive record was not made available on the discs.

Archibald's duet version of "Somewhere a Voice is Calling," with Elizabeth Spencer, was one of the most popular Diamond Discs. It was correspondingly popular on cylinders.

One Blue Amberol that induces head-scratching was No. 4761, "Sound Now the Trumpet Fearlessly," a duet from "Puritani" which Archibald sang as a duet with Harvey Hindermeyer. It was not issued until September, 1923, when the cylinder record business was virtually dead except in some rural areas. In a desperation move to stimulate sales, the price of the records had been dropped from 60 to 35 cents, and Edison was arranging to sell them by mail to individual users who had no local dealers.

I wonder just what attraction an excerpt from a little known Italian production was supposed to have for country listeners who never had been inside an opera house. True, the duet was sung in English and had a lively tune that made it sound almost as catchy as a good popular song.

To add to the confusion, the supposedly more sophisticated purchasers of Diamond Discs never had a chance to buy "Sound Now the Trumpet." I have a copy of the "Puritani" cylinder, though I can't remember when or how I obtained it, but my guess is that, even at 35 cents, its sale was less than negligible and there are only a few copies around. Even so, it's a good record.

Another oddity was the issuing, a few months later, of an excerpt from "Maritana," which must have been one of Mr. Edison's favorite operas in English. This excerpt was "In Turn What Say You?" In it Archibald again was assisted by Marie Kaiser who had changed her name during World War I to Marie de Kyzer. The cylinder was a dubbing from Diamond Disc No. 80124, which had been announced in January, 1914.

Finally, in 1915, Archibald made a Diamond Disc of an English patriotic song, "Fall In!" This was dubbed on to Blue Amberol No. 23365, primarily for British sale.

Next month we'll consider Archibald's Diamond Discs and his activities with the American Singers.

(To be Continued)

ANTIQUES by WALLACE, INC.

4912 Cordell Ave.

Bethesda, Md. 20034

Phone: (301) 652-6613

1. BOEHM PLATES, 1970-1971. Write.
2. LASZLO ISPAK, "Great Spirit." Limited edition of 200. Write.
3. DAUM NANCY "Pate de Verre" four seasons. Limited edition, $375.
4. GALLE VASE. Green fernery & white, light orange bkgd., 17" t., $350.
5. IVORY MUSICIANS STREET BAND. 6 pieces, 9 1/2" t. For set, $500.
6. SULKY WEATHER VANE. Complete, $390.00.
7. PLEEK-A-JOUR VASE w/flowers, 7" t., $210.00.
8. PLEEK-A-JOUR BOWL with flowers, 4 1/2" dia., $130.
9. CLUTHA VASE. Violet color, $45.
10. MENE BRONZE, sg'd. "Setter," 5 1/2"x3", $190.00.
11. GALLE VASE. Acid cut back, orange fernery on white bkgd., 2 1/2" t., $135.
12. LEGRAS VASE. Crimped top, violet lvs. with frosted bkgd., 6" t., $95.
13. MONT JOYE VASE. Frosted green bkgd. with gold leaves & ferns, 7 1/2" t., $105.
14. PIE-CRUST TABLES, pr. Chippendale, c. 1760. Mahogany. Pair, $1,750.
15. QUEEN ANN TEA TABLE, walnut, c. 1800, $450.
16. VIENNA ANIMAL BRONZES. Assorted collection, assorted sizes, $10-$35. Color photos, $1 each. SASE. Shipping extra. app

SAMPSON'S ANTIQUES

- 148 Main St. Orono, Me. 04473
- Azalea, Mustard, $6.
  - Covered Syrup Tray, $8.50.
  - Lay Down Spooner, $8.50.
  - Scuttle Floral Mugs, $12.50.
  - Miniature Punch, 4 cups, $25.
  - Carnival 8" Bowls: Dark, fancy rims, Holly-stipple-Ray (unusual) Comet, $35. app

D. PRITCHARD

5 Burgett Dr. Homer, N.Y. 13077

- S/P Souvenir Spoon, Buffalo Hotel Brozel $4.00
- Sterling Teaspoon, Puget Sound, Everett, Wash., Indian $7.50
- S/P Slipper Pincushion, Souvenir, Wash., D.C. Lacks cushion $5.00
- S/P Toothpick, Cherub on side, Cute $16.00
- Igloo, green glass Ink Bottle, J&EM $15.00
- Pewter, round Inkwell, hinged lid, 3 1/2" diam., 2 1/2" h. $45.00
- Cloisonne Bowl, Black & green, pink flowers 4 1/2" diam., 2 1/2" h. $10.00
- Stippled, Grape & Festoon Sauce, Tiny flecks $3.50

Touraine:

- Plate, 6 1/2" diam. Tiny under rim chip $5.00
- Plate, 7 1/2" diam. Professional repair $6.00
- Soups (2), Each $7.00
- Soup, under rim chip $5.00
- Fry, 8", opalescent, 3-footed Trivet $15.00

Books:

- P.T. Barnum, Struggles & Triumphs, 1871 $4.00
- Rose of Sharon, religious. Souvenir, Sawyer, 1832 $4.00
- Samantha at Coney Island, 1911 $3.00
- Life & Death of James Garfield - Ogilvie $3.00

SASE. Postage extra. app

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

VERNON ARCHIBALD

By JIM WALSH

PART II

(Note: "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists" is written entirely by Jim Walsh. No unsolicited contributions will be accepted.)

I. Archibald's Edison Discs

THERE is something exceptional about this article. Some two years ago I compiled a list of Vernon Archibald's records and wrote the first installment of this biographical sketch, which was published last month.

I put it temporarily aside and then other subjects, which seemed of more timely interest, occupied my attention. But a few days ago I came across the abandoned manuscript and became possessed of a desire to complete it.

So, here I am. And here it is.

Never before, however, have I submitted an article to HOBBIES with its two installments spaced so far apart in the writing.

I do not think it necessary to undertake an elaborate discussion of Archibald's Edison Diamond Discs. As I read down the list, it is easy to see that Thomas A. Edison's influence was strong in the selection of the numbers the baritone recorded.

Solos from obsolescent light operas, and old-fashioned ballads that had been popular when Mr. Edison was a child or when his parents were children, predominated. There was also a smattering of gospel hymns (I imagine Archibald sang in New York churches throughout his recording career). But there were not many popular songs.

Almost certainly Archibald's most popular Diamond Disc was his duet with lovely-voiced soprano, Elizabeth Spencer, of the beautiful English ballad, "Somewhere a Voice is Calling." This was coupled with "A Perfect Day," by the Metropolitan Quartet.

The same two titles were combined on a higher-priced record by Anna Case. But, to me, the less pretentious offerings have more attractive singing.

In the Edison booklet, "Music That Lives," this description was given of the Spencer-Archibald version:

"Arthur F. Tate is best known in England; he is a composer of songs and instrumental numbers that are generally simple and unpretentious in character, and yet of exceptional merit. 'Somewhere a Voice is Calling' is one of Tate's best duets, and has been popular with the London public for some time. It is a quiet melody, almost religious in character, with beautiful harmony in the blending of the voices. This record shows both these artists at their best. Miss Spencer's voice, a soprano, is so flexible and of so great a range that in this rendition it sounds almost like a true contralto—a characteristic that makes it especially suitable for this quiet, beautiful melody."

ORIGINAL QUARTET—This newspaper picture probably appeared originally in the New York Times in 1927 or 1928. It shows the American Singers before Lambert Murphy replaced Redferne Hollinshead as second tenor. From left to right the newspaper says: "Charles Harrison, first tenor; Redferne Hollinshead, second tenor; Vernon Archibald, baritone; and Frank Croxton, basso—will sing from WEAJ tomorrow night at 9:15 o'clock."

The booklet's author might have added that the words of the song were credited to a lady named Eileen Newton, and that the construction of "Somewhere a Voice is Calling" is unusual for a popular ballad. There is no refrain, but the verses are repeated, with minor changes in the melody.

It happens that "Somewhere" was the first Edison disc I ever heard "close-up." I had heard a few others as I walked past homes in which there were Edison instruments. And I didn't hear it played on a New Edison, but on a Brunswick.

I was a small boy when I heard that Edison disc but, although the loud scratch of a bad pressing distressed me, I had to admit to myself that I never before had heard two reproduced voices blend so beautifully, yet with each syllable coming from the throat of the individual singer clearly distinct from the notes of the other.

I prided myself in those long-ago days on being a "strong Victrola man". Nothing could have made me admit publicly that the Edison recording was so superior to the Victor, as I think it certainly was, but I detected the difference just the same.

In fact, Edison well might have said of the perfect blending of voices in "Somewhere a Voice is Calling" what it did say concerning another Spencer-Archibald duet, "The Land of Golden Dreams";

"Neither Elizabeth Spencer nor Vernon Archibald need introduction to Edison owners, for both are favorite artists that have a large following among concertgoers and in the phonograph field.

"It is in duets like this one that the excellence of the Edison recording is displayed. You do not hear the confused nasal tones of two singers, but the actual blended voices of Miss Spencer and Mr. Archibald exactly as they sounded in the recording room."

Both Miss Spencer and Archibald, incidentally, did a great deal of Edison tone test work.

The testimony of my own ears eventually made me as strong an enthusiast for the Edison as I had been for the Victrola, but for the time being then I "stood pat". The first Edison disc I ever heard as I was standing beside a New Edison was "All By Myself," sung by Helen Clark. That record, and others I listened to that morning, made a permanent Edison zealot of me.

Other big-selling Archibald records were "When It's Apple Blossom Time in Normandy," that he sang with a mixed chorus; "In the Valley of the Moon," and "When the Twilight Comes to Kiss the Rose Goodnight," duets with Miss Clark; also "Leaf By Leaf the Roses Fall," and "Shall We Meet Beyond the River?" in which he and Lewis James sang together. Nor should we overlook his "Song of Love," from "Blossom Time," a duet with Betsy Lane Shepherd.

SECOND EDITION—The American Singers after Murphy took the place of Hollinshead. Standing are Charles Harrison, first tenor, and Frank Croxton, bass. Murphy is seated near Archibald, who is at the piano.

Two of the baritone's popular Edisons were remakes of numbers previously sung by other artists. One was "Ever of Thee I'm Fondly Dreaming," a tearful slab of, to me, vapid sentimentality, said to have been beloved by Mr. Edison, that went back to 1852.

Writing in 1865, Bret Harte irritably referred to it as "that maddening ballad," which his neighbors in San Francisco sang and played almost without ceasing. This Edison record probably was aided from a sales standpoint by having "Darling Nellie Gray" on the other side.

Until the 1922 Edison catalog appeared "Ever of Thee" was listed as by Miss Spencer and Thomas Chalmers, but in the remake Archibald took Chalmers' place. Why, it is hard to say, as Chalmers, whom Mr. Edison considered one of the half dozen best baritones he ever had heard, was still one of the leading Edison artists.

Perhaps Chalmers was on tour and not available when the necessity arose for replacing the worn moulds. "Sweet Genevieve," until 1918, was a tenor solo by Charles Hackett, the Metropolitan Opera singer. On the remake however, Archibald sang it with a mixed chorus.

The familiar Christmas hymn, "Silent Night," had the most checkered career of any record with which Archibald was associated. Originally, it was sung by Miss Spencer, Royal Fish, and Chalmers and was combined with "Bird on the Wing," by the Metropolitan Quartet. "Nazareth," by Thomas Chalmers and Chorus, occupied the other side.

But, in the 1922 catalog the record was by Spencer, Archibald, and John Young. In 1925, Charles Hart took Young's place. "Silent Night," was a popular record, to go through so many transitions.

In 1928 a few electrically recorded numbers by Archibald were listed. These included "Memories of the Past," a duet with Charles Harrison, lead tenor of the American Singers; "Lord, I'm Coming Home," a hymn by Archibald and the Calvary Choir, and a duet, "What Must It Be to Be There?" with the American Singers' first tenor, Redferne Hollinshead.

You will observe I have listed Archibald's Edison discs by categories according to the year in which they made their first appearance in the catalog.

II. The American Singers

I don't know just how the American Singers Quartet, of which Archibald was baritone, came to be organized around 1927. My old friend, Charles Harrison, appears to have taken the initiative in bringing it together.

Charlie Harrison died in New Providence, N.J., February 2, 1965. His wife, Beulah Gaylord Young, died later in Silver Springs, Md., where she lived at 2722 Dawson Avenue with Gaylord Young, her son, by her first marriage.

The first record I can discover by the American Singers, "Why Adam Sinned," and "When the Little Ones Say 'Good-Night,'" was an Edison Diamond Disc issued in December, 1927. After that, there were no more Edisons by the ensemble until three others were announced during the Company's last days, in 1929.

Some puzzling questions occur to me concerning the American Singers.

(Continued on page 40)

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Re feathered
Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

trc

Antique

MUSIC BOX SPECIALISTS

Complete repair service, cylinders, repinned, combs repaired and tuned, all work guaranteed.

Large Stock of Finest Instruments For Sale

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave., Pelham, N.Y. 10803
Phone: (914) PE 8-1505

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Continued from page 38)

One is, when did the late Lambert Murphy succeed Percy Redferne Hollinshead as lead tenor?

Hollinshead, a native of England, came to Canada as a child. He made Edison records as far back as 1912. Said to have been a pleasant, genial fellow, he was so fat, some old associates say, he was rather unattractive in appearance, they thought, so the change may have been largely for esthetic reasons.

Murphy was certainly a member of the Quartet by early 1930, but was he included when the 1929 Diamond Discs were made? Moreover, did he take part in the somewhat earlier Columbias? I doubt it.

From 1911 Murphy had been an exclusive Victor artist, and his contract probably was still in effect in the late 1920's. He continued, in fact, to make Red Seal records during the first few years of the 1930's. It appears likely, then, that Hollinshead was the lead tenor in the Columbia and Edison dates.

Another question: Did Archibald sing in the Quartet on the Columbia dates? Again, it appears doubtful. As I speculated last month, he may have been contracted to Edison, and a substitute would have had to be found when the ensemble recorded for other companies.

He certainly did not take part in the Victor records by the American Singers made in 1930. The Company's Master Book shows the Quartet was composed of Harrison, Murphy, Croxton, and Walter Preston, a baritone who still is living.

On March 13, 1930, the American Singers made Victor No. 22387, "On the Banks of the Wabash," and "Dear Old Girl." This obviously was an electrical remake of No. 17397, by The American Quartet and Harry Macdonough and the Hayden Quartet, respectively, which had been issued in October, 1913. It had stayed in the catalog through 1925.

According to Brian Rust's Victor Master Book, the National Cavaliers had sung the same songs on November 8, 1929. Their versions also were listed on No. 22387. However, there is no mention of the Cavaliers' recording in any Victor catalog.

Amazingly, considering the established popularity of the songs and the previous acoustic recording, the American Singers' offering was no longer available when the 1933 record catalog was issued. But records almost had stopped selling by that time.

Harrison, Murphy, Preston, and Croxton also took part in record No. 22487, "Quand Madelon," and "It's a Long, Long Way to Tipperary," by the International Novelty Band, made July 22, 1930. The vocals on both sides were sung by a male octet which consisted of the American Singers plus James Price, Judson House, Jackson Kinsey, and Stanley Baughman.

On December 23, 1930, the Quar-

OCCASIONAL MEMBER—Walter Preston, baritone, took Vernon Archibald's place when the American Singers made records for Victor in 1930.

ter helped record "To the Legion," and "Songs of the Navy," by Rudy Vallee and his Orchestra. Vallee and the American Singers do the choruses on both sides of this record, No. 24075.

III. Other Activities

During their active period, which extended into the 1930's, The American Singers did much more radio and concert work than recording. This applied both to the earlier period when Hollinshead was lead, and to the Murphy era.

I have an undated clipping, apparently from the New York Times, which tells of a concert the original foursome was to give from WEAf, New York. It includes a group photo. I believe the foursome was being sponsored by Atwater Kent, at that time (probably 1928) the largest manufacturer of radios.

An obviously later, but still undated clipping, said the Quartet, which then included Murphy, was broadcasting every Sunday, with Dr. Sigmund Spaeth, "The Tune Detective," at 7 p.m. over WEAf and associated stations. Brief descriptions were given of the four singers. Archibald was described as:

"... The perfect disciple of Izaak Walton. He went two weeks without a bite and never gave vent to profanity."

In a letter written in 1948, Charles Harrison recalled:

"We serviced the Columbia Broadcasting System the first year of its life, contracting for ten hours of broadcasting per week at a very handsome salary for each one of us, and then two women to make a sextet. We then free-lanced and then did a four-year stretch for Lehigh or Old Company Coal and various other spot commercials. The war ended all that, and it ended me for radio, too, as I would not hang around the offices looking for a job. I took to business, as did Lambert Murphy."

Harrison didn't give the names of the two women who were used to help form a sextet. I will guess they were Beulah Gaylord Young, soprano, and Rose Bryant, contralto.

IV. Archibald's Last Days

In 1951, Fred Rabenstein, the veteran Edison worker who was so helpful in my research, wrote me that Vernon Archibald recently had visited the Edison laboratory. I can't find Fred's letter now, but I remember he said Archibald didn't look well and told his Edison friends he had been suffering from an ailment resembling amnesia, or loss of identity.

It seems Archibald said something about having a son in naval service, who was to "be in next week," and would look after him. Perhaps he was living with this son when he died in California.

However that may have been, the baritone seems to have recovered his health and his memory and to have preserved his sense of humor—as witness Elmer Moore's remarks about Archibald being a hilarious speaker on some of Moore's programs in California.

I had hoped to obtain more personal information concerning Archibald for this article, but Quentin Riggs reported that Archibald's death appeared to have gone unrecorded in California newspapers and I was unable to communicate with his immediate survivors. A letter to Emily J. Wood, who gave the information in his death certificate, brought no reply.

Nevertheless, Vernon Archibald was an excellent baritone of concert caliber. His name, especially among collectors of Edison records, remains an esteemed one in the history of recorded music.

The End

RECORDS BY VERNON ARCHIBALD

COLUMBIA DOUBLE-FACED DISCS (February through May, 1911)

- A962 In Old Madrid. Reverse: Mother of Mine.
- A5240 Bohemian Girl—The Heart Bowed Down. Reverse: Maritana—In Happy Moments.
- A5278 Beyond the Gates of Paradise. Reverse: The Lord is my Shepherd.

COLUMBIA DOUBLE-FACED DISCS BY ARCHIBALD QUARTET

(October, 1910, through March, 1912)

All unaccompanied and both sides by the Quartet unless otherwise noted.

- A903 Juanita. Reverse: The Two Roses.
- A914 I Love to Tell the Story. Reverse: I Need Thee Every Hour.
- A916 Hunter's Farewell. Reverse: Soldier's Farewell.
- A942 Shepherds' Chorus and Hear Dem Bells. Reverse: May, Dearest May.
- A1115 Love Divine, All Love Excelling. Reverse: My God and Father, While I Stray (Mrs. A. Stewart Holt, contralto.)

- A5232 That Beautiful Land. Reverse: Work for the Night is Coming.

VICTOR DOUBLE-FACED DISC BY VERNON ARCHIBALD (October, 1912)

- 17157 Thou'rt Like Unto a Lovely Flower. Reverse: Creole Cradle Song (Olive Kline, soprano).

EDISON BLUE AMBEROL CYLINDERS BY VERNON ARCHIBALD (1913-1928)

- 1829 Down By the Old Mill Stream (soprano obbligato by Marie Kaiser).
- 2073 In the Shadow of the Pines (with Royal Fish, tenor).
- 2086 Miss Caprice—Look In Her Eyes.
- 2147 On the Banks of the Wabash (with mixed chorus).
- 2193 Battle Eve (with Royal Fish).
- 2257 Ring Out, Sweet Bells (with Fish).

(Continued on page 48)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 40)

- 2300 In the Valley of the Moon (with Elizabeth Spencer, soprano).
2330 Love's Hesitation (with Spencer).
2388 Rose of the Mountain Trail (soprano obbligato by Clementine de Vere).
2453 Somewhere a Voice is Calling (with Elizabeth Spencer).
2472 Come to Me (with Helen Clark, contralto).
2485 Boat With My True Love's Name (with Clark).
2516 For You (with Clark).
2551 Let Bygones Be Bygones (with Clark).

- 2572 Someone (with Elizabeth Spencer).
2916 Love's Adieu (with Lewis James, tenor).
3948 Shall We Meet Beyond the River? (with James).
3956 Leaf By Leaf the Roses Fall (with James).
4761 I Puritana—Sound Now the Trumpet Fearlessly (with Harvey Hindermeyer, tenor).
4765 Silent Night (with Elizabeth Spencer, soprano, and John Young, tenor).
4818 Maritana—In Turn What Say You? (with Marie de Kyzer, soprano).
5588 Lord, I'm Coming Home (with Calvary Choir).
23365 Fall In! (British patriotic song).

EDISON DIAMOND DISCS BY VERNON ARCHIBALD (1914 catalog)

- 50103 Maritana—Hear Me, Gentle Maritana. Reverse: Pretty Girl Milking Her Cow (Marie Narelle, soprano, and chorus).
50114 When It's Apple Blossom Time in Normandy. Reverse: We Have Much to Be Thankful For (Walter Van Brunt, tenor, and chorus).
80109 Bendemeer's Stream (with chorus). Reverse: Just Plain Folks (Archibald and Spencer).
80124 Maritana—In Turn What Say You? (with Marie Kaiser). Reverse: Harp That Once Thro' Tara's Halls (Marie Narelle and chorus).
82044 Heart and Hand—Your Pardon, Darling, Forgive Me (with Marie Kaiser). Reverse: Lurline—Sweet Form That In My Dreamy Gaze (Albert Quesnel, tenor).

June, 1915, catalog

- 80125 Somewhere a Voice is Calling (with Spencer). Reverse: A Perfect Day (Metropolitan Quartet).
80133 Land of Golden Dreams (with Spencer). Reverse: Macushla (Emory B. Randolph, tenor).
80134 Boat With My True Love's Name (with Helen Clark). Reverse: When the Roses Bloom (Spencer, Randolph and Chorus).
80137 Drifting (with Clark). Reverse: Charge of the Light Brigade (Knickerbocker Quartet).
80138 Summer Days (with Clark). Reverse: I Love You, California (Spencer and Knickerbocker Quartet).

- 80147 Miss Caprice—Look In Her Eyes. Reverse: Oh! Oh! Delphine—Can We Forget? (Spencer and Hindermeyer).

- 80162 In the Valley of the Moon (with Clark). Reverse: When the Angelus is Ringing (Hindermeyer and Chorus).

- 80165 I Love You (with Clark). Reverse: There's a Warm Spot in My Heart for Tennessee (Young & Wheeler).

- 80174 Ring On, Sweet Bells (with Royal Fish, tenor). Reverse: Song of Steel (Donald Chalmers, bass).

- 80191 You Are the Rose of My Heart. Reverse: One Wonderful Night (Kaiser and Randolph).

- 80196 I'm Longing for My Home, Sweet Home (with Chorus). Reverse: Tell Mother I'll be There (Frederick J. Wheeler and Chorus).

April, 1916, catalog

- 80145 When the Twilight Comes to Kiss the Rose Goodnight (with Clark). Reverse: In the Gloaming (Randolph and Chorus).

- 80148 For You (with Clark). Reverse: The Bugler (Thomas Chalmers, baritone).

- 80155 Beautiful Isle of the Sea (with Clark). Reverse: Nancy Lee (Chalmers and Chorus).

- 80157 Iolanthe—Faint Heart Never Won Fair Lady (with Royal Fish and Donald Chalmers). Reverse: Pirates of Penzance—Stay, Frederic, Stay (Kaiser and Fish).

- 80163 Let Bygones Be Bygones (with Clark). Reverse: In Dreams, My Own (Van Brunt).

- 80166 Come to Me (with Clark). Reverse: Someone (with Spencer).

- 80231 Fall In! Reverse: John Bull's Catechism (Arthur Crane, baritone, and Male Chorus).

1918 catalog

- 80069 Sweet Genevieve (with Mixed Chorus). Reverse: Alice, Where Art Thou? (John Young and Frederick Wheeler).

1920 catalog

- 80500 Love's Adieu (with Lewis James, tenor). Reverse: There's Not a Song That Trembles (Betsy Lane Shepherd, Helen Clark and Mixed Chorus).

- 80521 Leaf By Leaf the Roses Fall (with James). Reverse: Dixie Lullaby (Homestead Trio).

- 80522 Shall We Meet Beyond the River? (with James). Reverse: Heaven Is My Home (Thomas Chalmers and Male Chorus).

1922 catalog

- 80010 Ever of Thee I'm Fondly Dreaming (with Spencer). Reverse: Darling Nellie Gray (Metropolitan Quartet).

- 80643 Silent Night (with Spencer and Young). Reverse: Nazareth (T. Chalmers and Chorus).

1923 catalog

- 50873 Blossom Time—Song of Love (with Shepherd). Reverse: Love Letter—I'll Return for You (with Shepherd).

- 80699 Leonore. Reverse: Pilot Brave. Reverse: Charles Hart and Fred East).

1925 catalog

- 80643 Silent Night (with Spencer and Hart). Reverse: Nazareth (Thomas Chalmers and Chorus).

Issued in 1928

- 52235 Memories of the Past (with Harrison). Reverse: Sweet Elaine (Arthur Hall and Chorus).

- 52308 Lord, I'm Coming Home (Archibald and Calvary Choir). Reverse: What Must It Be to Be There? (Archibald & Redferne Hollinshead).

EDISON DIAMOND DISCS BY THE AMERICAN SINGERS (1927-29)

- 52179 Why Adam Sinned. Reverse: When the Little Ones Say Good-Night.

- 52512 When Song is Sweet. Reverse: Vale. 52615 Carry Me Back to Old Virginia. Reverse: My Old Kentucky Home.

- 52636 On the Banks of the Wabash Far Away. Reverse: Darling Nellie Gray.

EDISON LATERAL-CUT RECORD BY THE AMERICAN SINGERS

- 11036 Vale. Reverse: When Song is Sweet.

COLUMBIA DOUBLE-DISC RECORDS BY THE AMERICAN SINGERS (1928-29)

- 1128D First Nowell. Reverse: It Came Upon the Midnight Clear.

- 1163D I Need Thee Every Hour. Reverse: Rescue the Perishing.

- 1417D Auld Lang Syne. Reverse: My Old Kentucky Home.

VICTOR RECORDS BY THE AMERICAN SINGERS (1930)

- 22387 On the Banks of the Wabash.

- Reverse: Dear Old Girl.

- 24075 To the Legion. Reverse: Song of the Navy. Both sides by Rudy Vallee's Orchestra, with Choruses by Vallee & the American Singers.

EDISON BLUE AMBEROL CYLINDER BY THE AMERICAN SINGERS

- 5509 Why Adam Sinned.

8-INCH OPERAPHONE RECORD BY VERNON ARCHIBALD (1915)

- 1806 For All Eternity. Reverse: The Rosary (Marie Brook).

////////////////////////////////////

CAROL & REX MILLER

913 Salem Rd. Mt. Vernon, Ill. 62864

(618) 242-2165

Miscellaneous For Sale

An exquisite sgd. porcelain depicting an European cavalry officer on charging steed. Magnificent color & one of the most beautiful porcelains we've handled. Porc. is 6 1/2 x 7 1/2" in a 10 1/2 x 11" frame, excellent cond. Worth much more than our price of $225.

The complete & excessively rare set of 30 hand colored R. Ackermann Persian engravings from 1822. All 30 are dated & in mint cond. Framed this set would bring double our price of $250.

This set of choice pewter ice cream molds have been in our family since their orig. use in the late 19th century. These were the orig. molds in use by Western Dairies ca. 1895. 20 diff., excellent quality molds such as bird, cream barrel, foot, shock of wheat, watering can, etc. Total price including shipping $190!

Sgd. O'Neill Kewpie plate & matching cup with green lustre border. 2 Kewpies on plate & 3 on cup. Mint. $60 for both.

Dated 1845 brass spring-type paper clip, 3 1/2" x 7", wheat sheaves w. sickles design, brass good cond. $15.

Adorable Sunbonnet girl valentine w. case! 3x5" for $7.50.

Very old amber bottle w. tooled-lip neck, 3 1/2 x 9 1/2", no harm chip on base, $15.

Amos & Andy score card & tally card dated 1930. Marvelous illus. & color $10.

Tiny cup & saucer, cup has parrot for a handle, $5.

6 place wall hanging valentine, gorgeous! Precious cupids, flowers, etc., all hung together w. pink satin ribbon, approx. 15x24" for $10.

Postage & ins. extra. SASE please. myp

////////////////////////////////////

B. K. FRANK

Kearsarge, Mich. 49043

Phone: (906) 337-1318

IRISH BELLEEK

- 1st Mk., Cup & Saucer. Horseshoe pattern, $35.00.
- 2d Mk., Ribbon pattern Sugar. Lease $17, $25.00.
- 2d Mk., Flower Pot. Applied flowers. Slight damage to 4 of the points. Lease $38, $43.
- 2d Mk., Individual Salt. New Shell & Coral, $15.
- 6", pink trim, Leaf Dish. Lease 249. 2d Mk., $20.
- Individual size Tea Pot, MacIntyre, Burslem, Underglaze, green & gold decor, $20.
- 12" h., MacIntyre Vase. Underglaze blue, over glaze red & gold, $45.
- 11", Blue Mk., Royal Bayreuth Bowl. Pink roses, green trim, $55.
- Old, Blue Mk., Mason's Ironstone Pitcher, 3 1/2". Chinese pagoda, boat, bridge & birds, $15.00.
- Gouda Vase, 8" h. Multi-color, floral trim, $27.
- Glass Paperweight-type Door Stop, 4 1/2" h. 3, 3-tier flowers, $25.
- Hinged, cov'd. China Box, 3" h., 2 1/2" d. Classic scene. Sgd. Angelica Kauffman.

Postage & Insurance Extra. 5-Day Return. myp

////////////////////////////////////

HERITAGE HOUSE

RTD 2, Box 116 Springfield, Vt. 05156

Call (802) 885-4838

A gathering up of the fragments of the past. Let nothing be lost.

STONEWARE: Tester Inkwell; used to test kiln temp. Barret's pl. 153, pg. 110, $35.

Brown slip cov'd., BENNINGTON FLOWER POT. Earliest type. Barret's fig. VII, pg. 12, 3 1/2" h., 4 3/4" dia., $22.

Rockingham SOAP DISH. Round, 1 pc. construction. Rich, warm color, $17.

Unusual, tin SKEWER HOLDER w/5 graduated wire skewers, $55.

LOG CABIN BANK. Replica of Lincoln's birthplace. Brown & cream mottled glaze, some crazing. Advertising item for Van Dyke Teas. Made in Austria, $25.

KEELER, similar to pl. 112, Goulds WW. Single lap to right. 5 1/2" h., 1 1/2" diam. Refinished, $40.

Games of the 20's & 30's: The Nebbs, Milton Bradley, $3.50; Santa Ring Game, Schacht Mfg. Co. Box worn, $3; Roulette, Milton Bradley, $4. We have others.

White, ceramic Mold, asparagus. Small flask $12.00.

Shipping extra. SASE. Polaroid $1. Prices net. Satisfaction assured. myc

////////////////////////////////////

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

ADA JONES SINGS IN MARION, VIRGINIA

By JIM WALSH

(NOTE - Biographical details and other information concerning Ada Jones and her husband, Hughie Flaherty, may be found in HOBBIES for June, 1946, through January, 1947; June and July, 1954; July and August, 1958, and November, 1961.)

I. Ada Jones Comes to Town

When Marion, Va.'s, weekly papers the News (Republican), and the Democrat (which lived up to its name), published paid announcements that "Ada Jones, the world-famous phonograph star and her concert company" soon would appear in person at the Court Square Theater there was no wild excitement but a considerable amount of public interest.

Perhaps the most "carried away" of all the town's residents was a boy whose name was Ulysses Walsh, but who usually was known to his friends as "E". He had not acquired yet the nickname of "Jim", by which he is known today much better.

Switching to the first person writing style, Marion is a town beautifully surrounded by the often-sung about "Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia," and it's a place I dearly love. Frequently, I find myself wishing I could have spent my life there. At that time, when the acoustic, hand-cranked phonograph was still the dominant means of home entertainment, Marion, county seat of Smyth County, had less than 4,000 population (today it is about twice as large), and its people were not accustomed to receiving visitors as famous as the legendary Ada Jones.

Since nearly everybody had heard her records the chances were good, although her popularity had been declining for half a dozen years, that the theater—really a large auditorium in the center of the second floor of the county court-house—would be packed. Not only was Ada Jones herself to sing, "auspices of the American Legion," but her supporting company included Beth Hamilton, violinist; Mabel H. Loomis, soprano and pianist; and "Armstrong, the Man of Mystery."

A day or two before the evening of the concert, circulars and sepia photographs of the famous comedienne were distributed throughout the town, and the City Drug Store, operated by Dr. James A. Thompson, which handled Victrolas and Sonoras, and Victor, Okeh, and Emerson records, had a run on the Victor disc of "When Francis Dances With Me." It was sung by Miss Jones with her veteran partner, Billy Murray, and had been issued the month before.

This was the first record, aside from "Uncle Josh and Aunt Nancy Put Up the Kitchen Stove," which Miss Jones had made with Cal Stewart, that Victor had announced by her in almost four years. Visitors to J. K. Fisher's jewelry store heard her Edison Re-Creation of the "Francis" song and "On a Little Side Street." Both were duets with Billy Jones and both were on the same record.

Meanwhile, large posters had appeared quoting The New York Times as saying: "Ada Jones is without question the most popular entertainer in the record field." This undated "without question" statement certainly was questionable. If the comedienne ever was the most popular recording artist it was in the first few years, say from 1905 to 1910, when she made discs and cylinders, and even then she probably was second to Billy Murray.

Certainly, her solo records as a rule did not have the huge sale of such Murray masterpieces, as "The Yankee Doodle Boy," "The Grand Old Flag," "Everybody Works But Father," and "Cheyenne." In 1911 Edison proclaimed Murray "by long odds, the most versatile and popular of all Edison artists," and a year later Victor catalogs began making the statement that he entertained a larger audience than any other singer who ever had lived.

When the concert was given, with her fame in decline, Ada's following was only a shadow of that of Murray or Henry Burr. Burr, by that time, perhaps, had passed "The Denver Nightingale" in record sales.

Nevertheless, I was all keyed up over the prospect of seeing and hearing the great Ada Jones, and I was to see her sooner than I expected. Early in the afternoon before the concert, I found Hubert Wolfe behind the City Drug counter. Standing a few feet farther back, toward the rear of the store, were three women whom I at once recognized as Ada Jones and her associates.

Ada was a stout, rather short woman, whom I took to be in her 40s, who was chewing gum rhythmically. She was wearing a hat, but my recollection is that her companions were bareheaded.

One was a rather short, pretty, brown-haired girl who looked to be not more than 25. I learned at the concert that she was the violinist, Beth Hamilton. The other "girl" was taller, slender, and pleasant-faced. I guessed her to be "around 28 or 30." She was Mabel Loomis.

I don't know where "Armstrong," the magician, was keeping himself. Presumably the ladies had arrived in town early, found time hanging heavy on their hands at the Marion Hotel where I suppose they stayed, and had come down to watch ticket sales, pass the time, and get an idea of how things were likely to go that evening.

Hubert Wolfe spoke.

"Hello, Walsh," he said. "What'll you have, kid?"

I replied: "Give me a ticket to that concert tonight."

I heard the younger girl whisper: "Listen!"

SCENE OF CONCERT. Ada Jones and her company gave their concert in the Smyth County courthouse, shown here. The "Court Square Theatre" was on the upper floor in the center of the structure. —Photo by Greear Studio, Marion, Va.

ADA JONES in the stage costume she wore at her Marion concert.

Hubert handed me the ticket, which cost 75 cents, and, before going out, I turned and faced the three women, all of whom were looking at me with friendly smiles, but in Miss Hamilton's glance I thought I detected a lurking, quizzical amusement. I noticed especially how white and even Ada Jones' teeth were as she appeared to be thinking of saying something friendly to the young ticket buyer.

Here was where I missed the opportunity of a lifetime. I had no idea that Ada Jones in less than three months would be dead of uremic poisoning and that this was the only chance I ever would have to speak to her.

However, I was anything but a self-assertive boy. It didn't occur to me to walk up to the obviously gracious lady, tell her how much I had enjoyed her records since I was an infant, and how I already had founded, in a pencil tablet, the imaginary Walsh Talking Machine Company for which she was one of the principal stars.

I also could have told her I knew the Victor catalog by heart and could have proved it if she had questioned me concerning any of her records. All this I could have done, and I imagine it would have been welcome news, but I didn't. I carefully placed the ticket in my inside coat pocket and walked out of Ada Jones' life.

II. The Concert Begins

This thought just has occurred to me: Who, knowing Ada Jones as a child in Oldham, England, where she was born and where her father, James Jones, operated a public house called "The British Flag," could have looked into the future and foreseen her more than 40 years later filling a small-time concert engagement in a Virginia mountain town over 3,000 miles from Lancashire?

I don't recall much about the remainder of the afternoon preceding the entertainment. I do remember I told my mother I had seen Ada Jones in the drug store and, with unfailing, feminine curiosity, she asked, "How old did she look?"

I gave Ada a break by saying "About 40." I really thought, however, that she looked nearer 50 than 40. She was actually 48.

It was only a few years ago that I learned the maiden name of Ada Jones' mother was Ann Jane Walsh. Had I been aware of it the idea might have occurred to me, as I walked in the evening to the Court Square "concert hall," that the portly comedienne smiled at me so warmly because she had heard Hubert Wolfe call me "Walsh," and had thought perhaps I was a distant relation of hers.

When I reached the court-house, which had been built in 1905, considerable time remained before the concert was to begin, but I climbed the broad flight of steps in front of the building, went upstairs, and reached the entrance to the "theater." A man whom I didn't recognize as a resident of Marion was seated at a table, taking tickets and dispensing programs.

He had a young-looking face, although, I never have seen any one more completely bald. The man asked me in a tenor voice if I would like a program and I said I would. After the performance I brought it home, and it still is preserved carefully. I imagine it is the only one of the lot printed by the Marion Publishing Company that has survived.

Beside the man stood a woman whom I took to be Ada Jones but who looked more juvenile than the drug store lady. If it was Ada, she still was chewing gum, but she had an extremely fair, unlined complexion, and appeared young. In after years I speculated that the fair one might have been Ada Jones' daughter, Sheelah, but that could not have been.

Sheelah was barely 16 at that time, and this woman was certainly more than that. The foremost authority on the life of Ada Jones—Milford Fargo of the faculty of the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, N.Y.—has told me that while her mother was traveling Sheelah remained in their home at Huntington Station, Long Island, with their faithful housekeeper, Rosina Burns Mackie, who still was living in 1958.

No, the lady wasn't Sheelah. Neither was it Miss Loomis nor Miss Hamilton. It must have been Ada Jones "got up" for the occasion.

The Court Square Theater led a double life. When it wasn't in use as a place of entertainment it served as the assembly hall in which the Smyth County public schools held their declamation contests and spelling matches. With a large balcony overhead, it could accommodate an audience of considerable size. But after a new theater, The Lincoln, was built a few years later, the Court Square ceased to be a place of public entertainment.

I took my seat about midway of the lower floor and looked around to see whom I could recognize. I saw Mrs. Nannie Pruner, the intellectual looking principal of the Marion Grammar School, accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. Florence Lorenzen.

There was the postmaster, James Blaine Richardson. Somewhat nearer the front, and to my left, I saw J. K. Fisher, the Edison dealer, and his assistant, Neal Wright. They evidently had come to check up on how Ada Jones' actual voice sounded in comparison with her Edison Re-Creations. The year before, by the way, a dealer in Illinois had engaged Miss Jones to attempt an Edison-type "tone test" with a Columbia Grafonola, but the result was a failure.

It occurred to me, as I looked around, that the town's phonograph dealers were missing a bet by not having their instruments displayed on the stage. There were, however, only two dealers whose business amounted to anything. Whenever any of the townspeople decided to buy a machine that cost not more than $75, the would-be purchaser went to the City Drug Store and invested in a Victrola.

If somebody from the country wanted a record player in the same price range he called at Fisher's and got an Edison cylinder Amberola. The person with $100 or more to "put into" a phonograph almost invariably bought an Edison Diamond Disc.

At that time I never had heard an Edison, except at a distance. The town still buzzed, however, with talk of how Fisher had sold 14 instru-

(Continued on page 52)

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Re feathered
Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

tfc

Antique

MUSIC BOX SPECIALISTS

Complete repair service, cylinders, repinned, combs repaired and tuned, all work guaranteed.

Large Stock of Finest Instruments For Sale

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave., Pelham, N.Y. 10803

Phone: (914) PE 8-1506

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

ments, most of them the $295 Official Laboratory Model, in one day by placing samples in a car and going from house to house, giving brief demonstrations.

Families who esteemed themselves as among Marion's social leaders nearly always felt it to be due their "prestige" to buy an Edison. Even those who were not society leaders sometimes took the same attitude.

I remember an obviously uneducated man remarking to me, as we stood in front of the drug store, listening to a record being played inside: "Ain't gonna buy me a graphophone untwell I kin git money enough for one of them there new Edisons. They're the onliest kind wuth havin'."

Dr. Onyx C. Sprinkle's Marion Drug Company had carried the Pathé line briefly, but soon had given it up. Similarly, the D. M. Smyth Drug Company had tried selling the Aeolian-Vocalion and Columbia, but had been unable to make headway.

When the Ada Jones concert was given Victor and Edison were the town's only lines of any consequence. And, although no phonographs, were on display, Dr. Thompson had inserted a Victrola advertisement in the program.

Seated a row or two in front of me was a chubby boy whom I knew as David Buchanan. David's father, the handsome, courtly, and intellectual B. F. Buchanan, was probably Marion's most highly regarded resident. He was a leading lawyer and had been state senator and lieutenant governor of Virginia.

With David was a girl who wore glasses and whom I couldn't remember ever seeing before and never saw again, so I suppose she was from "out-of-town." David himself was the youthful uncle of a golden-haired little lady who, a decade later, was to become my "best girl" and to retain that status after I left Marion.

Her name was Eleanor Buchanan, and after she was in her teens she told me that a Columbia advertising display of the popular tenor, Oscar Grogan, looked so much like me that if I were wearing a hat she would believe it was intended for my picture. That led to my having my likeness taken beside the cardboard man, to ascertain if there really was so much resemblance.

I have sent the picture to be reproduced with this article, so you may decide for yourself. Eleanor eventually became Mrs. George Crounse and now lives in Paducah, Ky. We haven't seen each other in more than 30 years, but are still warm friends by correspondence. And she is an enthusiastic reader of HOBBIES!

As the time dragged on while we waited for the concert to begin I developed a severe headache and began to feel abnormally depressed. I remember I kept debating inwardly how the word, "lyceum," should be pronounced and couldn't decide between "lie-SEE-um" and "LIE-seum."

Then, suddenly, a stir ran through the audience. Turning, I saw three women—Ada Jones and the Misses Hamilton and Loomis—walking down an aisle near me. It was cold weather, and they were wearing heavy wraps. Since there was no stage door entrance at the rear of the court-house, performers had to enter at the same door as the audience, walk down an aisle, then ascend a flight of steps that led to backstage.

SMILING LIKENESS. Ada Jones here shows the same warming smile she gave the boy, Jim Walsh, as she saw him buy a ticket to her concert. Copies of this photo were distributed before the performance.

This, the ladies did. A few minutes later the curtain went up and a slightly built young man with a small mustache, which I suspected to be artificial, appeared on the stage and extended a welcome. He was "Armstrong, the Man of Magic and Mystery."

He told us the first selection would be a violin solo by Miss Hamilton, with piano accompaniment by Miss Loomis. In a moment the smiling Miss Hamilton appeared, tucked her instrument beneath her chin, and the concert was under way!

III. Miss Hamilton, Miss Loomis, and Mr. Armstrong

It soon became evident that the young women of the supporting cast played and sang a more serious type of music than their famous star. Miss Hamilton's first number was "Fantasia Appassionata," by Vieuxtemp. I wonder how the Marion Publishing Company made out to spell that name correctly.

Through an error, the second number was omitted from the printed program, but I remember it as St. Saens' "Le Cygne" ("The Swan.") Miss Hamilton smiled in a faintly amused manner all the time she played. She received respectful, but not enthusiastic, applause, for her ELEANOR BUCHANAN (left) was a small girl in Marion, Va., when her uncle David Buchanan took an incidental part in the Ada Jones production. A decade later, as a high school girl, at about the time this picture was taken, she told Jim Walsh he resembled the popular Columbia recording tenor, Oscar Grogan.

To check on the resemblance, Jim had a picture made (right), posed beside a cardboard advertising display of Grogan's records and trying to imitate the singer's expression.

Miss Buchanan became Mrs. George Crounse and now lives in Paducah, Ky. Her mother, ANNABEL MORRIS BUCHANAN (Mrs. John P. Buchanan) is a noted composer and an authority on folk music.

(Continued on page 110)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 52)

type of music was over the heads of most of her listeners.

Ceasing to caress her violin, Beth Hamilton moved to the piano bench and Miss Loomis came forward to sing. The old program says she was heard in the popular Scotch ballad, "My Laddie," but I have no recollection of it or of whatever she used for an encore.

My head was aching and I was impatient to hear Ada Jones. My impression, I do recall, was that Miss Loomis had a sweet, clear, but not powerful voice. Of course, she had not chosen a Wagnerian aria "to split the ears of the groundlings."

The lady artists retired, and W. J. Armstrong, the magician, took over. He performed several card tricks that baffled me, although a friend who was an amateur magician told David, who was obviously a pre-arranged "plant," arose and, chuckling with embarrassment, asked: "Does my lady friend love me and will she marry me?" Whereupon his glasses-wearing companion looked pleasurably self-conscious.

The sealed slate was opened. Armstrong held it up for the audience to see. The "unassisted" crayon had written in bold letters: "I'll say she do, but you'll have to use speed!"

I believe there were several other questions and "miraculous" answers, but this is the only one I recall. David Buchanan, some years later, entered military service and remained in the United States Army all his life. He was a retired Major General when he died last New Year's Day in his home at Washington, D.C.

Finally, after more "merry moments of magic and mirth," Armstrong said: "And now, my friends, the one and only Ada Jones!"

IV. An Ada Jones "Recital"

From the wings strode the buxom lady whom I had seen that afternoon in the drug store. She was wearing an elaborate gown, the same as, or similar to, one shown in a photo submitted with this article. I may be remembering wrong, but I have the impression it was dark blue or perhaps some shade of purple, but it's possible the color was black. Somehow I had a belief she was very tired and didn't much feel like performing.

The world-famous singer gave the audience the briefest possible bow, then, with no preliminaries, she began singing "Just Plain Folks," an old-fashioned "sob song" that had been one of her popular cylinder records. But to put it without exaggeration, it was more designed for farm dwellers than for sophisticated tastes.

Her Edison Standard cylinder of the tear-jerker had been issued more than 16 years before, in September, 1905, and had proved so popular she had sung it later for a four-minute Amberol. In turn it was taken into the Blue Amberol catalog.

She also had recorded "Just Plain Folks" in 1911 for a Columbia disc, coupled with another of her offerings, "You'll Have to Sing an Irish Song." This, likewise, had appeared by her on U.S. Everlasting and Indestructible cylinders.

The ballad told of an old couple from the country who had come to visit their citified son. The son was a cad, because "but coldly did he greet them, for his friends were by his side, who often heard him boast of home so grand."

Heartbroken at this callous reception, "the old man sadly looked at him and said in modest pride, as he gently took his dear wife by the hand":

"We are just plain folks, your mother and me,
Just plain folks, like our own folks used to be.
As our presence seems to grieve you
We will go away and leave you,
For we're sadly out of place here
'cause we're just plain folks."

ASSISTING ARTISTS. After seeing this photo reproduced in an Edison record catalog, Jim Walsh identified Rosalind Davis (left) and Blanche Dann, center, as "Beth Hamilton" and "Mabel Loomis," who participated in the Ada Jones concert at Marion.

—Photo, courtesy of Edison National

Most likely that song caused innumerable tears to be shed in isolated farmhouses and many lectures against ingratitude to be preached to growing rustic boys and girls. I found myself trying to decide on Ada Jones' voice quality.

The record companies disagreed. On Edison cylinders she was termed a contralto, but Columbia called her a soprano. Victor compromised with "comédienne," but Sam Rous, the catalog editor, once said she had "an almost boyish voice." When I later saw my first Edison disc catalog, I found it evaded the question by giving no description of her voice. My own opinion is that she was more nearly a contralto than a soprano.

If I ever remembered what Ada's second song was, I now have forgotten, but I think it may have been a Negro ditty song going back to the 1890's, "I Don't Like No Cheap Man." I do recall clearly that the third was unmistakably a Negro song, which I had not heard previously. It was written by two black men—Henry Creamer and Turner Layton—and called "Oh Lawdy! Something's Done Got Between Ebecaneezer and Me!" It was Ada's hit of the evening.

The not overly refined lyric told of how Ebecaneezer Darktown Jones, was on his way to be married, "when he butted into a razor fight" and "died right on his wedding day." The song dealt with the unhappiness of his intended bride.

She lamented that "he might have waited till I got the insurance in my name. And they say he fought so nice—that's why he's now on ice!"

The biggest laugh came at the end of the final chorus, when Ada sang:

"GAY NINETIES" PICTURE. Ada Jones as she appeared in 1899.

—Photo courtesy Milford Fargo

me later they were "just elementary." Something the young man said in his patter gave me the impression he was only 16 years old but I probably misunderstood.

Then Armstrong produced a slate and had it passed around the audience for inspection. Its surface appeared perfectly clean with no writing upon it. I'm not sure, but I believe a "committee" was called to the front to seal the slate after the magician first had placed a crayon (which he called a "cray-ON") inside it. He then said he would ask for questions from the audience, and the cray-ON inside the slate would write a reply.

Looking toward David Buchanan, Armstrong pointed his finger and said: "You, sir, do you have a question?"

"Cause somethin's done got (here she placed one hand to her mouth and half-whispered: "Twas a razor!") between Ebcaneezer and me!" The audience roared and the singer, after bowing her thanks, exclaimed: "I'll be back!" and hurried off the stage. She had "been on" from 10 to 15 minutes.

After an intermission Miss Hamilton returned to play three standard violin numbers, "Serenade Espagnole," "Forsaken," and Rehfield's "Spanish Dance." Then Miss Loomis was heard in "The Low Backed Car" and "Smilin' Thro'."

I don't remember anything about her singing of the first number, composed by Victor Herbert's grandfather, Samuel Lover. I do recall, however, the expression which she imparted to "Smilin' Thro'," especially the lines, "There's a lock or two of gray in the AUTHORITY. Milford Fargo, the foremost student of Ada Jones' life and recordings, discovered the identity of the members of the Dann Trio.

brown of the hair; there's some silver in mine, too, I see."

I felt that, although Miss Loomis lacked Ada Jones' ebullient personality and ability to do dialect work, she had a better voice, a more comprehensive musical education, and was a more artistic singer.

Then came Armstrong in more magic, none of which I remember, and Ada returned to end the rather brief program with "character songs." She used the Hibernian number, "You'll Have to Sing an Irish Song." It appears on the back of her Columbia record of "Just Plain Folks" which she also recorded for Victor and Edison.

This dialect ditty, written by Jack Norworth and Albert Von Tilzer, was used in "The Follies of 1908." The singer tells of how she rebukes a "Dootchman" who serenades her with "Die Wacht am Rhein" when she wants to hear "The Wearin' o' the Green."

Following "You'll Have to Sing an Irish Song," Ada resurrected one of the first numbers she recorded for Edison cylinders: another Negro dialect composition, "You Ain't Half the Man I Thought You Was," which had been issued in May, 1905. The comedy in this song, with such lines as "take back your cheap beef stew," was rather crude, but it brought a laugh. Then the curtain came down and the concert was over!

That curtain, however, may have been lowered prematurely, because in a few moments it came up again, and Miss Loomis was seen on the stage with some music in her hand and peering with what seemed a near-sighted gaze, at the audience. But by this time everybody was leaving.

I remember hearing the postmaster ask the grammar school principal: "Well, what did you think of Ada's last song?" Mrs. Pruner laughed, but I didn't catch her comment. I still had my headache and still felt depressed.

On the outside I ran into another boy who was a recorded music enthusiast. He began lamenting that he had to get up early the next morning to go to school, but when I asked him what he thought of "the show," he said: "Oh, it was pretty good, I guess! But, and here his face brightened, oh boy! how good it would have been if they had just brought Billy Murray along!"

V. A Startling Discovery

Looking back, it seems to me that Ada Jones' part of the concert was too short and poorly chosen. Probably none of the five songs she used was well-known to a majority of the hearers. Three never had any real popularity and were forgotten almost entirely. "Just Plain Folks" was known mostly to users of Edison cylinder machines, and "Oh Lawdy!" to Edison disc and cylinder record buyers.

Why didn't she use a solo version of her latest recording "When Francis Dances With Me?" It was then a very popular song. And why did she not include some of the real hits, such as "Be My Little Baby Bumble Bee," which she had sung with Billy Murray? Why not "Waiting at the Church?" This had been one of her most popular solos. But perhaps its theme was considered too similar to that of "Oh Lawdy!" which had the line, "His bride was waiting at the church."

For two or three weeks I was haunted by Ada Jones' version of "Oh Lawdy!" and dreamed one night of hearing an Edison disc machine play it. (I had found it listed in an Edison cylinder catalog, so assumed it was also on the disc.) I even heard, in my sleep, a click as the reproducer passed over the line "and lay him on his bier."

Then, one morning I met Neal Wright, who lived near me, as he was going to work. I told him I had read so much about Edison tone tests that I had a great desire to hear a New Edison Diamond Disc phonograph. "But," I admitted, "I haven't got the money to buy one."

Neal laughed good-naturedly. "Well, some day," he said, "you will be able to buy one and we'd like to sell it to you. Come along with me. I'll show you how to run the machine and you can play all you like."

As we were walking along, he said: "I saw you at the Ada Jones' concert. Did you remember that 'Ebcaneezer' piece she sang when she put her hand up before her face? Mr. Fisher's got a record of that and I want you to hear it so you can judge for yourself how much it sounds like Ada."

That really excited me.

In the jewelry store Neal put on a record. It was "All By Myself," sung by Helen Clark, and I realized I never before had heard a phonograph with such a completely natural, human tone. He played "Anything is Nice If It Comes From Dixieland," by the Premier (American) Quartet, and I was amazed to find I could understand every word with no trouble.

I had a Victor record of that song by the same Quartet, but although I had played it hundreds of times there were parts I never had been able to make out. One part that had puzzled me turned out to be: "Just thank old Carolina—that's where Bull Durham grows."

I was disappointed, however, because of the bad surfaces of some of the records. I had imagined the Edison had no "scratch" at all. "Mr. Fisher," I said, "how can they give those tone tests with so much scratching noise?"

"J. K." laughed. "All the sound but the music drops out before it reaches the audience," he said. "Walk up toward the front of the store and you'll find you can't hear any scratch."

I did as he suggested and found it was true. The scratch soon ceased to be audible. Standing near the machine the "scratch" might be severe, but, unlike the surface noise of lateral cut records, it had little carrying power.

We found the record of "Oh Lawdy!" and I realized as soon as it began that I was hearing the unadulterated living voice of Ada Jones. "Walk around the corner," Neal said, "and see if you possibly could tell without first knowing, that Ada Jones herself is not singing."

I went around the corner and, out of sight of the phonograph. My ears wouldn't have known I wasn't listening to the woman herself, even when she did the bit of placing her hand before her mouth and half-whispering, "'Twas a razor!"

That morning changed me from the Victrola zealot, which I had been previously, into an even more ardent New Edison advocate. About a year later I earned enough money at part time jobs to buy a second-hand Chalet table model and felt I now belonged to the musical aristocracy.

But the most memorable thing about that long-ago morning was my picking up an Edison record catalog and making a breath taking discovery. A section at the back contained photos of artists, and while I was turning casually through I came upon a picture of three young women who were called The Dann Trio.

COLLINS BROTHERS DEPARTMENT STORE. Our NEW SPRING HATS are now on DISPLAY.		ADA JONES WILL SING on the VICTROLA for you every day at the CITY DRUG STORE. Agents for Victrolas and Records.
J. M. BRISCO, Dry Goods, Notions, Ladies' and Misses' Cloaks and Suits.	See STALEY HARDWARE CO. FOR HARDWARE.	ADA JONES AND HER OWN COMPANY EXCLUSIVE BETH HAMILTON MABEL H. LOOMIS ARISTON, The Man of Mystery Violator Soprano Enthusiast
PROGRAM 1—ARMSTRONG—The Man of Mystery 2—ADA JONES Your Directed by Paramount National Bureau, 1100 Broadway, N. Y. Program subject to change		AUSPICES AMERICAN LEGION Phone 231 MARION TAXI COMPANY. RELIABLE SERVICE CLEAN CARS, CAREFUL DRIVERS Operated by MARION AUTO &amp; SUPPLY COMPANY.
HAWKINS-TAYLOR CO. Gents Furnishings, Hats, Clothes and Shoes.	Eat - Well - Restaurant. QUICK LUNCH. Where they serve them Hot	MAX WEILER COMPANY. dealers in CLOTHING, SHOES, HATS, CAPS, TRUNKS, BAGS and FURNISHINGS. Opposite Court House, MARION, VA.
M. C. MORRIS, MASCOT RANGES. The Heat Goes all around the Oven. SPECIAL PRICES FOR A SHORT TIME. $106.36 Range for $70.00; $126.00 for $97.50. Full Line Ranges, Linoleums, Etc. MARION, VIRGINIA.	BUY Genuine Raven Red Ash and No. 3 Vein Pocahontas Washed Nat. CHEAPER IN THE END COALS. MARION COAL COMPANY.	Call F. M. GREER for GROCERIES, FRESH MEATS, FISH OYSTERS, PORK, SAUSAGE. Phone No. 7.
SERVICE ELECTRIC AND SUPPLY CO. (Next to Theatre) The Home of the Electric Range, Western Electric Clocks and Dish Washers Your Washing Machines Dishwasher Fixtures Hot Water and Universal Heating and Cooling Appliances.		PROGRAM 1—MISS BETH HAMILTON— Fantasia Accompanied Miss Loomis at Piano Violator Three 2—"My Lady" Miss Hamilton at Piano 3—ARMSTRONG— "Three Moments of Magic and Mirth." 4—ADA JONES (Soprano) in a Selection of her most popular hits. 5—MISS MABEL H. LOOMIS— (a) "Soprano," "Soprano," "Soprano" (b) "Soprano," "Soprano," "Soprano" (c) "Soprano," "Soprano," "Soprano" (d) "Soprano," "Soprano," "Soprano" (e) "Soprano," "Soprano," "Soprano" (f) "Soprano," "Soprano," "Soprano" (g) "Soprano," "Soprano," "Soprano" (h) "Soprano," "Soprano," "Soprano" (i) "Soprano," "Soprano," "Soprano" (j) "Soprano," "Soprano," "Soprano" (k) "Soprano," "Soprano," "Soprano" (l) "Soprano," "Soprano," "Soprano" (m) "Soprano," "Soprano," "Soprano" (n) "Soprano," "Soprano," "Soprano" (o) "Soprano," "Soprano," "Soprano" (p) "Soprano," "Soprano," "Soprano" (q) "Soprano," "Soprano," "Soprano" (r) "Soprano," "Soprano," "Soprano" (s) "Soprano," "Soprano," "Soprano" (t) "Soprano," "Soprano," "Soprano" (u) "Soprano," "Soprano," "Soprano" (v) "Soprano," "Soprano," "Soprano" (w) "Soprano," "Soprano," "Soprano" (x) "Soprano," "Soprano," "Soprano" (y) "Soprano," "Soprano," "Soprano" (z) "Soprano," "Soprano," "Soprano" Miss Hamilton Accompanying
PAY CASH and get your Groceries CHEAPER at MARION CASH GROCERY. Main Street.		WE LEAD—OTHERS FOLLOW. QUALITY COAL—Our Motto. MARION COAL COMPANY.
PICKLE and REPASS GROCERIES—and—FRUITS.		CONTAINS NO CAFFEINE, COCAINE          OR OTHER HARMFUL DRUGS          AT POINTS OF OR IN BOTTLES. "Coca-Cola" DRINK

CONCERT PROGRAM. (Top) A reproduction of the front and back pages of the program distributed at the Ada Jones concert. (Bottom) The two inside pages. This program, owned by Jim Walsh, was printed by the Marion Publishing Co., and is perhaps the only surviving copy.

One held a cornet, but it was the other two who riveted my attention. For there, smilingly clutching her violin, stood Beth Hamilton, and in the center was the soprano-pianist, Mabel Loomis! There was no possible mistaking those girls, whom I had seen less than a month before. The veritable Miss Hamilton and Miss Loomis stood revealed!

Only one record by the Dann Trio was listed in the catalog, and I wondered for many, many years how it happened that the violinist and pianist detached themselves from the cornet player and went "small-timing" with Ada Jones. Then, in 1958, Milford Fargo wrote me he had come upon a picture of the trio in the Edison laboratory, and the name of the cornet player was given as M. Felice Dann.

But what stumped me was his further statement that the pianist was Blanche L. Dann and the violinist was Rosalind J. Davis! How could this be when I knew by the evidence of my eyes that they were the women who had been with Ada Jones as Mabel Loomis and Beth Hamilton?

The only solution seemed, and seems, to be that the ladies wished to safeguard their reputation in the field of serious music and did not want to be associated under their own names with the popular type of composition in which Ada Jones specialized.

Perhaps, I thought, since Blanche Dann's middle initial was L., her middle name might be Loomis. Could her mother, I wondered, have been Mabel Loomis before marriage, and had Ada's Mabel Loomis "borrowed" the mother's maiden name? Under the assumed name, if it was assumed, Ada's Mabel Loomis "borrowed" the Loomis. Could that H stand for Hamilton and indicate a kinship between her and Rosalind Davis? Was Rosalind's mother a Hamilton? Miss Davis, by the way, made an Edison disc of "The Swan," the number she had used for an encore in Marion. I have it and can hear her playing as she did that night so many years ago.

These are questions to which I still don't have the answers, but when I began making notes for this article I wrote to the Edison National Historic Site, formerly the Edison Laboratory, asked for any information the Edison files contained on the Dann Trio, and requested that I be supplied with a copy of their picture. It is reproduced with this article. The assistant archivist, Mrs. Leah S. Burt replied:

"... We have only one copy of an approximately 5x7 sepia print of the Dann Trio, labelled: in memory of an Edison Tone-Test Recital, Blanche L. Dann, M. Felice Dann, and Rosalind J. Davis."

Mrs. Burt quoted an entry in the Edison talent card file dated November 26, 1919, which said: "Dann Trio, The—Cornet, Violin, Piano. With mellow tones, plaintive, these sound very good." On December 5, 1919, the trio recorded "Extase—Reverie" and "Ballet Egyptian No. 3." Both sides soon were approved by Mr. Edison and issued on Diamond Disc 80525, which came out sometime in 1921.

On the next day, Felice Dann played "The Lost Chord" and "O Dry Those Tears," which was assigned to number 80526. I have a copy, but this record never appeared in an Edison catalog and must have been reserved for tone-test use. Seemingly, the trio, of which Blanche Dann/Mabel Loomis, appears to have been manager, must have done considerable "tone testing."

Rosalind Davis, on December 8, played "Le Cygne" and "Melodie," by Rudolf Friml. This was passed, given the number 80527, and issued in 1921. December 5, 1919, was a Friday; 6, Saturday, and 8, Monday, so the trio's recording engagement was spread over a period of four days.

On April 18, 1921, the trio recorded two more numbers—Ethelbert Nevin's "Venetian Love Song" and "Love Song," by A. Flegier. The disc received the number 80660, but was given no catalog listing. It also must have been meant only for tone-test use, but there probably are a few pressings still to be found.

And that is all I have been able to find out about the ladies who constituted the Dann Trio. I hope they are all living and happy, but there is no way to stay the inexorable pace of time and if they have survived they must be well into their 70s just as there probably are only a handful of persons still living who heard the Ada Jones concert as "grown-ups." I probably am the only member of the audience still retaining a clear recollection of that night's proceedings, and I was a long way from being old enough to vote.

A few weeks after my introduction to J. K. Fisher's New Edison, "Gene" White, a young fellow, now dead, who had a local reputation as a skilled violinist, invited me to call at his home and hear the Hepplewhite New Edison he had bought recently. My brother Chad went along, for his initial hearing of an Edison, and was entranced by the first record Gene played.

Naturally, it was the biggest selling Edison disc—Mr. Edison's favorite song, "I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen," sung by Walter Van Brunt and chorus. Drawing a deep breath at its conclusion, little Chad said: "I never heard a phonograph sound natural like that before!"

During the course of the impromptu "concert," Gene remarked to me: "I saw you the night Ada Jones was in town. And, by the way, Mr. Fisher got a telegram today from the Edison headquarters in New Jersey. It said Ada Jones had died, yesterday or today, in a hospital in North Carolina."

I was shocked at the news, which proved to be true. Milford Fargo has quoted Rosina Mackie, the housekeeper, as saying Ada was reluctant to begin the concert tour.

Ada had remarked wistfully: "Everything looks so pretty here I hate to go." No doubt though, she pictured herself returning home to Huntington Station after a few months and didn't suspect that her life story, which had begun in Oldham, England, was about to end in Rocky Mount, N.C.

I wish she could have known that the boy at whom she directed a warm, blue-eyed smile when she saw him buying a ticket to that night's entertainment would live to write, so many years later, this eye-witness account of what was said, sung, and done when she, "Beth Hamilton," "Mabel Loomis," and W. J. Armstrong, appeared before the residents of Marion, Va., in the historic old Court Square Theatre!

— o —

HISTORICAL RECORDS

(Continued from page 46)

well. In 1960 she began to grow weaker and had to give up rehearsing "Lakmé" for the Opéra-Comique. The inexorable killer was claiming its victim, and on December 10, 1960, a bright star of the French opera drew her last breath. Mado Robin was then only 41 years old.

Robin recorded excerpts from "La Traviata" for Pathé-Marconi on DTX 30189. It was her fond dream to sing Violetta on the stage. Alas, this never was to be realized.

██
MATHIEW NOWAJEWSKI

P.O. Box 1354      Stuart, Fla. 33491
Six sterling silver (hallmarked) fish knives and forks. Fancy scrolling on silver. Ivory handles (heat cracks). Looks like fancy "M" on handles, $65.
Men's Masonic ring 14 kt. gold, old, diamond. About size 10½. $37.
Ladies Waltham watch, 14 kt. gold filled with expandable band, stainless back. $40.
12" tall, very old, attractive brass candlesticks, 3 branch. $65 pair.
6" tall Wedgwood, England blue pitcher, white classical figures. Very attractive. 1½" hair-line crack from top, small amount of lacing missing, so $35.
8 Toby jugs, 2" - 2½" tall. Royal Doulton, England, $12 each.
Light green with medium green wavy lines enamelled tea pot, over 75 yrs. old. 8½" tall, 9" wide from end spout. Few small wear chips, otherwise very good cond. $25.
10 cups and saucers. Royal Dover Bone China, made in England. Each different floral design, gold trim. Perfect. Not antique. $4.75 each set.
Postage extra. SASE please.      jep

WHIRLIGIG ANTIQUES

P.O. Box 834

Austin, Tex. 78767

Mail Order Only

SILVER

1. Sterling and mother-of-pearl rattle and teether, 4" long. Sterling bear with outstretched arms holds the two sterling bells. Mother-of-pearl engraved "Del" in black, which could easily be removed. $32.50.
2. Another mother-of-pearl and silver teether, 2½". This one has silver whistle engraved "Charlie." $12.50.
3. Southern coin silver fiddle-shaped teaspoon w. turned down handle, engraved "A.H." Mint. S. Wheritt, Richmond, Ca., c. 1860. $11.
4. Pair 5" stemmed goblets marked "Sterling," A. C. with crude engraved designs but beautifully monogrammed, one "MS," other "J.S." $28 pr.
5. Am. coin silver goblet (7" h., 3¼" d.), marked "Pure Coin" only. Grapes and leaves decor. Engraved "M. W. Tiffany." $175.
6. Round sterl. dessert basket (no liner) 8½" d., 10" t. w. hdl. raised. The sides pierced in a lattice design w. raised flowers. Swags of leaves at top frame beautifully embossed cherubs, birds, and flowers. Openwork swing handle & on 4 heavy foliate supports w. scroll terminals. French import mark on base for 1893. A magnificent piece! $125.

ROOKWOOD

7. A. 6¼" ovoid vase w. 1¼" straight rim, 1944. Light mustard color w. linear flowers and raised leaves around side, $36. B. 6½" vase, 1928, straight sides w. flared foot. Matte glaze shading from pink at bottom to dusky rose at top, $36. C. 4" tall, squat 5" d., 1931. Beautifully mottled dark blue-green matte glaze, $30.

PRIMITIVES

8. A. Tin butter skimmer w. holes in diamond shape. Slight unimp. tear on one side, $3.50 B. Small (9" d., 5" h.) wire egg basket w. handle; fine cond., $7.50. C. 3-pc. round tin box sifter 7" diam., 4" h. w. lift out sifter in center. Close box, turn upside down, clean, etc.; an ingenious and practical item, fine cond., $17.50. D. Early, heavy tin easel grater (8" w., 8½" h.) w. iron arm. Hand-punched. Unusual piece for fine collection, $32.50. E. Art nouveau cut tin table newspaper stand w. swing-out support. Silhouette of boy w. paper aloft, lightning flash cut in paper. Word "Paper" cut out near bottom w. 2 stars, $22.50.
9. A. Heavy cast iron lady's hightop shoe (6¾", 6" h.) w. green paint, worn in spots. Counter or window display piece w. impressed company's name partly hidden by paint, $32.50. B. Cast iron match holder 2" w., 6½" l.) in shape of lady's slipper. $9.95.
10. Late 19th century wooden advertising box (13¼"x9"x3") w. pull out drawer for Mitchell's Kidney Plasters, Lowen, Mass. Orig. paper labels on top, back and inside. Box and drawer dovetailed. Small piece missing from one side., $27.50.

MISCELLANEOUS

11. A truly outstanding example of Mason's Patent Ironstone. Large (16" w, 22" l.) platter w. deep blue dragons and other oriental designs front and back. Deep well. Rim support ¼" high on base. Mint condition. $97.50.
12. Beautiful 9¼" unmarked Chamberlain Worcester mythical beast plate. Red beast in center circle, remainder of plate heavily decorated in green, red, and blue. $75.
13. Unmkd. Staffordshire mug 6" h., 4¼" d. grayed-blue w. cream handle, bottom, & inside. Narrow black and cream checkered bands around top and bottom. Worn red, gold, and black overglaze decor. Monogram "GEB" and dated 1791. No importance spider web line inside only. $175.
14. Most unusual brass and iron cylindrical spice grinder w. folding removable crank on top; 12" h., 2" d. Beautifully punched oriental design over all. $36.

Return privileges within 5 days if not satisfied. Trans. and ins. extra; excess refunded. SASE for replies or check return. Photos $1, refunded with purchase only.

Send for the books that show you how to:

- SPOT ANTIQUE BARGAINS IN SECOND-HAND SHOPS
- BUILD COLLECTIONS
- FIND "NEW" ANTIQUES
- SELL AT A PROFIT

1. HOW TO INVEST IN BEAUTIFUL THINGS WITHOUT BEING A MILLIONAIRE
ELAINE CANNEL $6.95
2. LOOKING IN JUNK SHOPS
JOHN BEDFORD
Illustrated $3.95
3. RESTORING JUNK
SUZANNE BEEDELL
Illustrated $3.95
4. STILL LOOKING FOR JUNK
JOHN BEDFORD
Illustrated $3.95
5. MORE LOOKING IN JUNK SHOPS
JOHN BEDFORD
Illustrated $3.95
6. THE COLLECTING MAN
JOHN BEDFORD
Illustrated $5.95
7. HOW TO COLLECT THE "NEW" ANTIQUES
ANN KILBORN COLE
Illustrated $5.95
8. HOW TO SELL YOUR ANTIQUES AT A PROFIT
ANN KILBORN COLE
Illustrated $4.50
9. ANTIQUES: How to Identify, Buy, Sell, Refinish, and Care for Them
ANN KILBORN COLE
Illustrated $5.95
10. THE BEGINNING ANTIQUE COLLECTOR'S HANDBOOK
ANN KILBORN COLE
Illustrated $5.95

—MONEY-BACK COUPON—

DAVID McKAY COMPANY, INC.
750 Third Ave., New York, N.Y. 10017
Please send me at once, postpaid, the books whose numbers I have circled below. If not completely satisfied I may return any book or books, within 10 days for a complete refund.

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10

I enclose $.....

☐ check ☐ money order

Name .....

Address .....

City .....

State ..... Zip .....

jep

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

MORE ABOUT BASEBALL RECORDINGS AND THE NATIONAL BASEBALL MUSEUM

By JIM WALSH

This article, like its forerunner in December, is dedicated to Walter Jenkins, of Rose Hill, Va.

I. An Unexpected Sequel

When I wrote an article about baseball recordings for the December, 1971, HOBBIES, I had no idea that a few months later I would be preparing a sequel to appear as near as possible to the opening of the major league's new season. The original survey, however, received such an enthusiastic response and brought so many reminders of songs I had overlooked or hadn't known about, that a follow-up seems necessary.

But the most important factor in persuading me to write a supplementary article was the acclaim with which the first was greeted at the National Baseball Hall of Fame and Museum in Cooperstown, N.Y. Also I received a request by Ken Smith, the Museum director, for me to issue an appeal to record collectors either to contribute original recordings about baseball to the Institution or to supply taped copies. Mr. Smith says the Museum will be glad to pay transportation charges and taping costs for any one obliging enough to supply recorded material.

Ken Smith has provided the photographs of the combined Museum and Hall of Fame, shown with this article. Farther along, I shall quote extensively from his initial letter to me. First, however, I want to comment on some of the baseball "fan mail" from record collectors.

Before I begin to quote, it will be well to mention that shortly after my intended exhaustive survey was published I discovered I had overlooked Zonophone double-faced record No. 5644, "Hurrah for Our Baseball Team!" This record was made in 1910, a few months prior to his death, by "Fred Lambert," who was Frank C. Stanley. I have never heard this disc. The other side, by the same artist, was "Mary, You're a Big Girl Now."

Then, at around 2 o'clock one morning, I roused from near-sleep to sit up in bed and say to myself: "I believe there's something about baseball in that worn-out old Edison Amberol cylinder of 'Summer Days.'" I stayed awake a long time, itching to get up and play the record and see if my trance-like impression was correct, but that would mean going to another room and disturbing my cats, "Twisty" and Lucky Jim, who were sleeping near by.

By a great effort I postponed hearing the record until the next morning, but when I did, I was rewarded. The song was sung by Billy Murray and a male quartet in which the basso voice of Bill Hooley was unmistakable. By straining hard I could detect that the second chorus of the battered wax cylinder, made in 1911, dealt with "the national pastime."

The chorus begins, "Summer days, those good old summer days—time for baseball weather—see them get together!" The chorus ends: "Gee, I'm always itching to see Matty pitching, in those summer days."

"Matty," of course, was Christy Mathewson, the fabled New York Giant hurler, whose photo was printed in the December HOBBIES. Anyway, just as Billy, or the song writers, had itched to see Matty pitching, so I had itched to play the record and confirm my suspicions.

Murray and the American Quartet also recorded "Summer Days" on Victor No. 16979, but that is one of the two Victor records by the Quartet which I never have found—No. 16787, "Stop That Rag!—Keep on Playing, Honey!" A 1910 Irving Berlin song, is the other.

I don't know whether or not the Victor version contains the baseball reference, though I imagine it does. Billy also sang it as a solo on Zonophone No. 5759, coupled with "I Tell Off The Water Wagon!" But the baseball chorus is not included.

I was surprised to find I had a Columbia record, No. A1033, of "Summer Days" sung by the sweet-voiced soprano Edith Chapman and the even sweeter-voiced tenor Henry Burr, and combined with "Any Girl Looks Good in Summer," by the Columbia Quartet. I imagined that in a male and female duet the baseball part would be omitted, but was wrong.

In fact, to fill out the record, Miss Chapman and Mr. Burr sing it twice. It is amusing to hear Burr's cultivated voice proclaiming that "gee, 'he's' always itching to see Mat-tee pitching!" The record is attractive, but lacks some of the zip of the Edison by "Murray and Chorus"—otherwise the Premier Quartet.

II. Letters from Readers

One of the first letters I received was from Frank Johnson of Chicago. He reminded me I should have included the records of "Eleven More Months and Ten More Days," which Vernon Dalhart made for Columbia and other companies. The Columbia was under the name of Al Craver.

I have been familiar with that song, written by the noted recording artists—Arthur Fields and Fred Hall, ever since it came out in 1929. My overlooking it was inexcusable since I had included another Columbia Dalhart record, "The Bully Song," in which the baseball reference was much less obvious.

Anyway, one stanza of Columbia, No. 15572-D purportedly sung by a prison inmate, goes:

SHRINE TO IMMORTALS. Exterior of the National Baseball Museum and Hall of Fame, Cooperstown, N.Y.

BALL AND BAT ENTHUSIASTS. Members of the Eight Famous Victor Artists used to engage in impromptu baseball games when they were traveling between concert dates. In this picture, reproduced from the January, 1919, Voice of the Victor, some of the troupe are shown enjoying a day's outing as guests of T. B. Windsor, Victor dealer at Tarentum, Pa.

The first man to the left, standing, is Albert Campbell. Beside him, Henry Burr holds a bat. The large man, with the catcher's mitt, at the extreme right, is probably Arthur Collins. The first seated man is Fred Van Eps and next to him is John H. Meyer. The other men are probably Windsor and his employees.

"Now, we play baseball once a week
And you should see the score.

Ev'ry player steals a base—

They've stolen things before.

There's lots of folks would like to come

And see us when we play,

But they've built a wall around the place

To keep the crowd away!"

I am grateful to Frank Johnson for recalling the song to my attention. But when an article is written largely from memory it's impossible to keep from overlooking some things the writer knows well enough.

From a historical point of view, perhaps it is worth recalling that in 1929 it was permissible to write comedy songs about prisons and prisoners. Today, if this were done, the writers might feel disapproval of some "liberals" in the country.

I received an informative letter from an old friend of HOBBIES readers, Allen G. Debus, of Deerfield, Ill. He wrote:

"I thoroughly enjoyed the baseball excursion this month—and it was nice also to see Ray Cox smiling at me in the back pages. I had a feeling that you would reproduce that picture some time.

"Let me add one oddball piece of baseballiana to your list. In 1952 Golden Records released a 7-inch children's record (78RPM) (No. SR107), sung by the baseball stars of the day. On one side is 'Take Me Out to the Ball Game' and the other is the less well known 'The Umpire,' by Loeb. The Quartet is made up of Phil Rizzuto, Tommy Heinrich, Ralph Branca, and Roy Campanella. It is a rather interesting item and it came in a very colorful special envelope at the rather high price (for this type of record) of 35 cents.

"I have the electric De Wolf Hopper (of 'Casey at the Bat.') I doubt whether you would like it. Personally, I rather enjoy the way he hams it up."

The statement in the December article that I had never heard Hopper's electric recording of "Casey" brought an appreciated letter from Irving Rotman of Elkins Park, Pa. Mr. Rotman said:

"Dear Mr. Walsh: Please accept the enclosed record as a gift . . . You mentioned that you had never heard the electrical version of 'Casey at the Bat,' and I recalled having it stored away in the accumulations that I occasionally come by in hunting out my own interest, opera. I hope it will be an addition to your collection."

I am sorry to say this story has a sad ending. Although Mr. Rotman did some of the most careful packing I ever have seen, when I removed the beautifully clean, virtually unplayed disc it had been broken into two approximately equal parts.

Since then, though, I have come across a Victor long-play record, No. 1112, called "The Old Curiosity Shop"—a title probably taken from Charles Dickens' novel. At the end of one side Hopper's "Casey" is reproduced, but the LP does not contain the other side of the 78 rpm, "O'Toole's Touch-down," which I believe is in the same rhyming scheme as "Casey."

Perhaps Hopper "hams" the electrical version a little less unmercifully than he did the acoustic. But there is not much difference. It still is exaggerated so wildly I think that, as Allen Debus guessed, I don't like it.

I felt like kicking myself when I received the following letter from Charles A. Riddell, Jr., of Redwood City, Calif.:

"Dear Mr. Walsh: I have just finished reading your latest article in HOBBIES magazine, about Baseball Recordings. Although I enjoyed it very much, I was surprised to find my favorite baseball recording had been omitted. It is acoustical Columbia record No. A2092, titled 'The Baseball Game,' recorded by Joe Weber and Lew Fields. I believe that this double-sided record must have been recorded around 1912 when Weber and Fields were reunited in a show called 'Hokey Pokey.' This was their first time together (and last, except for a film in 1932) since their separation in 1903. Anyway, I was wondering if you had any knowledge of this recording. The other side . . . is titled 'The Marriage Market Scene,' also by Weber and Fields.

I wrote to Mr. Riddell that while I was making notes for the article I had a bothersome feeling that Weber and Fields had recorded something about baseball, but I also was thinking that all the Columbias by this pair of dialecticians were issued around 1912-13. When I found no title about baseball in the 1913 and 1914 Columbia catalogs I decided my memory had tricked me.

But I should have kept looking until I came to the record supplement for December, 1916. In this "The Baseball Game" is listed, accompanied by a picture showing Weber and Fields talking into a recording horn.

Like Mr. Riddell, I suspected the

(Continued on page 48)

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Re feathered
Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

MUSICAL ANTIQUE BOOKS

INTERESTING stories, pictures and research about restored musical antiques, in 52-page book. $1.25 postpaid from — The Musical Museum, Deansboro, N.Y. d6407

Antique

MUSIC BOX SPECIALISTS

Complete repair service, cylinders, re-pinned, combs repaired and tuned, all work guaranteed.

Large Stock of Finest
Instruments For Sale

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave., Pelham, N.Y. 10803

Phone: (914) PE 8-1506

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

disc was made about 1912, but was held over for later issue. A check of the serial numbers of Columbia masters, however, does not confirm this supposition. The serial numbers of A2092 were 46879 and 46834, respectively.

During 1912, Columbia used numbers in the 19000's for a while, then inexplicably jumped to the 38000's. (Probably the numbers in between had been reserved for foreign recordings.) On the other hand, by the time 1916 was reached the domestic serial numbers were in the 46000's, just as the two Weber and Fields offerings are. This makes it appear that the legendary pair was persuaded to get together and make a special recording in 1916 even if the two no longer were appearing publicly together.

III. "Old Pete" Gets Mentioned

Fred Harrington of Traverse City, Mich., sent me a taped copy of Edward Meeker's 1908 Edison cylinder, "Take Me Out To The Ball Game." However, a repairman has been trying, without success, to get my recorder back to working order for more than a year, so I have not yet heard the tape. Though I haven't, I asked Mr. Harrington to copy this and any other baseball records he has for Ken Smith, and I am sure he will be glad to oblige.

One of the most interesting baseball records I knew about, but forgot to mention, was brought to my memory by David Kemp, of Shinglehouse, Pa. Dave, who is an old friend of mine, wrote:

"... There is a good specialty put together by Robert Hood Bowers, and the Columbia Band is directed by him to perform it on both sides of Columbia A2936. One side is titled, 'Fourth of July, 1880' and the other is 'Fourth of July, 1920.' (The first side) is full of patriotic music, and a speaker comes on to give us part of the Gettysburg Address, after he says, 'Fellow citizens, on this anniversary of that glorious day when our forefathers proclaimed freedom for this beloved United States, what is more fitting than a quotation from the words of the immortal Lincoln?' Then there is a three-gun salute and the band plays 'America,' ending in another gun shot. The other side is full of jazz and ragtime, even in the playing of 'Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean,' and a rather croaking voice of an announcer says: 'Ladies and gentlemen, batteries for today's game, for New York: Bonds and McCarty; for Chicago, Alexander and Killefer.' Then there is a march during which the spectators cheer as the game is played, then the sound of a train, and 'Columbia' jazzed up."

Dave admitted he wasn't sure how the players' names were spelled, so I'm sure he won't mind my pointing out that the Giant pitcher was Barnes, not Bonds. His full name was Jesse Lawrence Barnes, and the New York catcher was George Lewis (Lew) McCarty.

Neither of these players is remembered especially well today, but that is not true of the Chicago battery of Grover Cleveland Alexander and William Lavier (Reindeer) Killefer. The record surprised me by being historically accurate. If I had been asked I should have said that "Old Pete" Alexander, whose picture is shown with this article, and "Reindeer Bill"

Killefer both were playing for the Philadelphia Phillies in 1920, but, actually, as the record has it, they had travelled to the Chicago Cubs.

(While I was writing this article it occurred to me that I had a two-volume set of records of historical interest, issued by Columbia under the number, MM88-, and called "I Can Hear It Now," with Edward R. Murrow as narrator. I suspected a baseball item or two might be included).

I was right. There are the sounds, taken from radio broadcasts, of Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig saying farewell to the sport in which they had starred. I believe these 78 rpm albums later were issued in long-play form.

Burns Kattenberg, of Boston, whom I never have met, but who became a friend of mine by correspondence in the long-gone days when I still was living in Marion, Va., wrote to tell me he has Actuelle needle-cut record No. 022443, in which "Babe" Ruth gives his "Home Run Story." The other side, as Burns points out, is "a nondescript fox trot, 'Abadele,' by Duane Sawyer's Novelty Orchestra."

Strangely, my Boston friend overlooked the fact that the December article discussed this record in considerable detail, but mentioned it as issued under Pathé's Perfect label. I don't think it appeared on a Pathé sapphire ball disc.

Burns says too that in 1961 he presented the Baseball Hall of Fame with two RCA Victor records, "How to Play Baseball," by Joe E. Brown. Burns mentioned also some fairly modern records with which I am unfamiliar, PV-800 through 803.

In these Ralph Kiner describes effective ways of hitting; Phil Rizzuto tells how to bunt; "Yogi" Berra talks on catching, and Bob Feller on pitching. This series appears in a catalog dated July, 1952.

C. A. Ackart of Philadelphia offered to send me a 45rpm record of "Did You See Jackie Robinson Hit That Ball?" by Count Basie's Orchestra. However, I have a 78 of this number somewhere, so I asked him to mail his copy to Ken Smith at Cooperstown, and he graciously has done so.

One correspondent said he believed the famous Abbott and Costello comedy sketch, "Who's On Second?" appeared on a long-play, but I was not attempting to cover that era in my article. Finally, A. J. Franck, who now lives in Media, Pa., but who used to operate the International Records Agency at Richmond Hill, N.Y., wrote to offer me a copy of "A Brooklyn Baseball Fan," by Phil Foster. I gratefully accepted and asked Mr. Franck to send a tape of the number to Ken Smith.

Al Franck is the first record collector with whom I ever corresponded. In his days of record importing he used to give me slightly imperfect discs he received from all parts of the world. Now he has sent me a record made in Iceland along with the Dodgers fan "platter!"

"A Brooklyn Baseball Fan" is a 7-inch Coral 45rpm record, No. 9-61200.

(Continued on page 52)

GRAND SLAM PITCHER. Dave McNally, Baltimore Orioles hurler (center) hit a home run with bases full into the left field bleachers, seen in the Memorial Stadium background, on October 13, 1970. The next day McNally presented the ball to the Baseball Hall of Fame. He is shown here with Ed Stack, Hall of Fame secretary, and Ken Smith, its director.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 48)

"OLD PETE". Grover Cleveland Alexander, one of baseball's greatest pitchers, gets prominent mention in a record made in 1920.

Phil Foster, who is called "Brooklyn's Ambassador to the U.S.A.," gives a highly laughable impersonation of a typical Dodger addict of the days when there still was a National League team in Brooklyn, and a chorus of supposed "bleacherbums" howls its way through part of "Take Me Out to the Ball Game," which is heard in instrumental form throughout the disc.

Pitcher Carl Erskine also receives considerable publicity. The other side, "Kids On the Corner," is by Foster and introduces the same weird chorus singing "That Old Gang of Mine."

IV. Praise from the Baseball Hall of Fame

The crowning moment in my baseball correspondence came when I received a three-page letter from Ken Smith, who, as I have mentioned, is director of the National Baseball Hall of Fame and Museum, at Cooperstown, 70 miles west of Albany. Smith's attention had been called to the article.

He wrote to say the Museum would be delighted to have HOBBIES readers and other collectors present gifts of original recordings or taped dubbings, as well as sheet music and any other items of baseball interest. With Mr. Smith's permission, I am quoting the greater part of his letter:

"... HOBBIES is an absorbing publication, replete with information and attractive writing, advertisements and pictures. . . . Indeed you must be the world champion authority in the recording field. The magazine and your biography are being placed in the National Baseball Library here, part of the Baseball Hall of Fame.

"The Museum does have a collection of sheet music and recordings, but limited. I would be delighted if it could be worked out for recordings to be sent to the Baseball Hall of Fame. Of course they would be protected and catalogued with immaculate care. I would like to work with somebody in taping old records, in cases in which the owner is reluctant to part with the records he saved so long. I am intrigued by the paragraph in your article reading in part: 'it would be a project worth while for somebody who combines love of record-collecting with a passion for baseball to try to put such a collection together and present it to the museum.' I hope this idea will blossom into action.

"Your article is breath-taking in its extent. A list of the music you mention, alone, is worth while to have in the Museum, to start with. Later as the collection is accumulated it will be broken down into departments. For instance, parodies. The New York Baseball Writer's show, annual since 1923, has presented hundreds of verses cleverly written by Bill Slocum, Bill Matthias, Arthur Mann and Leonard Koppett, who first come to mind. Some were recorded when presented on the stage of the Waldorf Hotel.

"There is the category of march music given a baseball title such as 'Home Run Polka,' written by a Mrs. Bodell in 1867. Harry Dichter of Philadelphia sent several pieces of that ilk and they were displayed at the Hall of Fame. There is an exhibit, presently on view, of sheet music contributed by Tommy Ferris, a Chicago entertainer. Seen in the case are colorful covers such as ladies with their big feathered hats and this music: 'Where the Shy Little Violets Grow,' sung by Waite Hoyt at the Palace in New York. 'Come Out to the Baseball Game,' by Lou Silvers. 'Remember Me to My Old Gal,' by George Moriarity, Detroit third baseman. 'Babe Ruth He is a Home Run Guy,' by A. Atkins and Harry W. Trout. 'I Want to Go to the Ball Game,' by Al W. Brown. 'It's a Grand Old Game,' by Harry S. Faunce, 'Cubs on Parade,' two step by H. R. Hempel. 'That Baseball Rag,' 1913, by Dave Wolff and Clarence Gray.

"Elsewhere framed is 'Take Your Girl to the Ball Game,' by George M. Cohan. And of course 'Take Me Out to the Ball Game,' original copy by Jack Norworth. In the 'Rube' Marquard exhibit is the sheet music of 'The Marquard Glide'."

"There has been so much baseball music that when it is all catalogued some time it will be a formidable undertaking.

"As for non-musical recordings, in the first place there are thousands of taped interviews with ball players. I have made nearly 500 myself. Russ Hodges' radio description of Bobby Thomson's home run in 1951 is a classic. No doubt you are familiar with the Columbia record, 'Greatest Moment in Sports,' Edward E. Murrow's 'I Can Hear It Now,' Joe E. Brown on 'How to Play Baseball,' Lawrence Ritter's 'Glory of Their Times' interview, Lou Gehrig with Charley McCarthy; seven long 78RPM records, both sides of Ty Cobb talking informally; Gehrig and Ruth's farewells, Babe Ruth making a boys' club recording for his manager Christy Walsh.*** I remember him (Ruth) making a record, a line in it going: 'When the psychological mind meets the psychological moment, the psychological wallop follows.'

"I have a recording of Giants manager Charley Fox singing 'I Left My Heart in San Francisco.' Twenty-five years ago I wrote a piece on music for Baseball Magazine, so you can know that the museum director is minded in that direction. The best baseball quartet I ever heard was Al Mamaux, Pittsburgh and Brooklyn, first tenor; Jack Conlan, White Sox, second tenor; Bill Terry, New York Giants, baritone; Jack Bentley, New York Giants, bass. There are several baseball musicians and they used to be great on harmony singing. Ring W. Lardner wrote a story about how a quartet of players contrived to break up a deal by a manager to trade off their second tenor.

BASEBALL ENTHUSIAST. Until he was past 50, playing ball was Billy Murray's favorite recreation. The great recording comedian usually played right field, but in this picture he appears to be holding down an infield post. Billy was a member of the "Lights" club at Freeport, L.I., where he lived. The team, composed of theatrical personalities, was sponsored by the Long Island Good Hearted Thespians Society, from whose initials it took its name.

"It has taken me all these paragraphs to say thanks. I enjoyed your article so much and the museum would be pleased to acquire a recording collection. Sincerely, Ken Smith, Director."

I hope this article will result in many HOBBIES readers making contributions to Mr. Smith at the National Baseball Hall of Fame and Museum, Cooperstown, N.Y., 13326, as well as in their visiting the "shrine" itself. If my broken-down tape recorder ever returns to active service, I shall copy all the material I have in recorded form concerning the game and send it in.

I am sure the Institution would welcome not only recordings and sheet music, but any thing of baseball interest, such as cards with pictures of ball players that used to come with packages of cigarettes and wrapped candy bars and were so popular during the early years of this century. When I was a boy I had more than a thousand cards, given to me by a man who collected them when he was half-grown, but years later they were all lost in moving, except one of Frederick Alfred Parent, long-ago infielder for the Boston Red Sox and Chicago White Sox. It probably survived because it was used as a book-mark.

V. Final Wind-Up

I just have recalled that one song, the recordings of which should have been mentioned, is "Tessie (You Are the Only, Only)," a hit of some 70 years ago. The words had nothing to do with baseball, but it was the "official song" of the Boston Red Sox's "Royal Rooters" of that period, who sang it before and during each game.

I have seen a picture of this old-

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

JOHN H. MEYER

By JIM WALSH

(NOTE: The Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists department is written entirely by Jim Walsh. No unsolicited contributions will be accepted).

I. The Colorful "Old Rogue"

The Eight Famous (or Popular) Victor Artists concert company reached the peak of its success in the first five years of the 1920's. Four of the members then were natives of the metropolitan New York area. They had been born within the environs of Greater New York and were to live there all their lives.

Henry Burr, Billy Murray, Frank Croxton, and Rudy Wiedoeft were not among the "native sons." Burr had been born in St. Stephen, New Brunswick, Canada. Murray was born in Philadelphia, but his parents moved to Denver when he was a baby, and he remained there until he was 16 when he ran away from home to join Harry Leavitt's "High Rollers" show troupe.

Croxton came from Paris, Ky., and Wiedoeft from Detroit, Mich. Fred Van Eps, who preceded Wiedoeft as the group's star instrumentalist, was born in Somerville, N.J., virtually a suburb of New York.

Of the other four, Albert Campbell originated in Brooklyn, which for many years has been a part of New York, and Monroe Silver, John H.

Meyer, and Frank Banta all were born in New York. These four Gothamites were a colorful group.

Perhaps the average observer would select Silver as more "colorful" than any of the others. But John Meyer, "the Old Rogue," as Frank Croxton affectionately called him, would be a close second.

In after years Meyer's former associates delighted to tell stories of some of his antics and escapades while he was touring as a member of the "Eight." Meyer, who was tall and slender, had lost most of his hair, which helped to give him a noticeably high forehead, and he never entirely lost the German accent picked up from his parents. He was a constant source of amusement to his fellow artists, who considered him lovable but a bit eccentric.

THE IMMORTAL "EIGHT"—This unusual picture is reprinted from a cardboard poster that was part of a window display sent to Victor record dealers in the autumn of 1925. It shows the members of the Eight Famous (or Popular) Victor Artists. From left to right, they are Billy Murray, comedian and master of ceremonies; JOHN H. MEYER, baritone; Rudy Wiedoeft, saxophone; Frank Croxton, bass; Henry Burr, tenor and manager; Frank Banta, pianist; Albert Campbell, tenor, and Monroe Silver, comedian. This group made the first electrically recorded Victor disc, No. 35753, "A Miniature Concert," issued in June, 1925.

HENRY MOELLER, tenor, made duet records with John Meyer in 1926, under the assumed name of Henry Fairbank.

There was the time, for example, that the "Eight" was traveling in Texas, and John managed to have words with a Mexican cabman. The Mexican was so incensed he swore to "get" the thunderous-voiced basso.

A day or two later Meyer entered a room where the remaining performers were gathered, with something red trickling down the front of his shirt. Billy Murray told me the troupers said among themselves: "Oh, oh! That Mexican has got John! Look at that blood! He's been stabbed!"

Then John inquired, in an angry roar: "Say, how in the so-and-so can a man open a bottle of tomato ketchup without spilling it all over his white shirt?" He escaped any attentions from the affronted Mexican.

On another occasion, unwise indulgence in his favorite beverage had caused the basso to suffer an upset stomach, and he decided to take something for it. He bought a bottle of pills, one tablet of which was supposed to deal efficiently with his problem, but when he looked at the tiny pellet he snorted with disgust.

"Heck!" John boomed. "One of these little things couldn't do a man any good!" So he dumped the entire contents of the box into a bottle of beer and drank it down.

"After that," Billy Murray said, "we agreed John couldn't be human, to take a dose like that and live without suffering any uncomfortable effects!"

And so it went. Life was never dull with John Meyer around.

II. Biographical Details

The man who succeeded Frank C. Stanley as the bass of the Peerless Quartet was born in New York, July 12, 1877. He was nearly 72 when he died, May 3, 1949, in his home, 160-03 Sanford Ave., Flushing, L.I.

Albert Campbell also lived in Flushing, and Rudy Wiedoeft was living there when he died in 1940. Meyer was about six weeks younger than Billy Murray, who was born May 25, 1877.

Meyer's death certificate describes him as a "vocalist," gives the first name of his father as John, and his mother's maiden name as Barbara Willburger. Unfortunately, the certificate does not tell what the H. in the middle of the singer's name stood for. I imagine it was for Henry, since John Henry is a common arrangement, but it might have meant Herman, Harold, or any number of other names.

Edward Ward, the physician who filled out the medical part of the certificate, did not give the cause of death except to indicate that it was due to natural reasons. He said he had been treating Meyer from October 1, 1947, to the time of his death. The funeral was held at Fresh Pond Crematory, Queens County, May 6, 1949.

A puzzling question occurs to me. On the one occasion that I met John Meyer he told me he made his first records under the name of John Wilbur, in memory of his uncle by that name, who had left him the florist shop on Third Avenue, New York, which he operated all through his singing career. Yet how can the uncle's last name have been Wilbur, since Meyer's mother's name was Willburger and his father's, of course, was Meyer?

But now the obvious solution occurs to me, as I type, and I wonder why I have not thought of it before. "John Wilbur" simply must have been a shortened, Anglicized form of "John Willburger." Of course! And it makes me marvel at how dumb I can be at times!

When Meyer died, a biographical sketch in the New York Herald Trib- une said he left home when he was 16 (the same age at which Billy Murray absconded from Denver) to become pianist and arranger of a 72-man band that toured the country. On his return to New York, he became bass soloist for the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Incarnation at 209 Madison Ave., and remained there 15 years.

JOHN MEYER peeps roguishly around a door in this picture reprinted from the June, 1920, Aeolian-Vocalion record supplement.

Presumably, he gave up his church work at some time after he joined the Peerless Quartet and became "up to his ears" in recording work. He also appeared with Henry Burr's Record Makers (later, the Eight Famous Victor Artists) troupe. Besides his wife, Mrs. Minnie Meyer, he was survived by a daughter, Mrs. Adelaide Steinkamp, a granddaughter, and a great-grandson.

III. First Recordings

Until recently, I have taken it for granted that John Meyer did no recording until he was engaged to sing in the Peerless Quartet after Frank Stanley's death in December, 1910. Burr took Stanley's place as the Quartet's manager.

I believe he and Meyer had done

(Continued on page 48)

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Re feathered
Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

lfo

MUSICAL ANTIQUE BOOKS

INTERESTING stories, pictures and research about restored musical antiques, in 52-page book. $1.25 postpaid from — The Musical Museum, Deansboro, N.Y. d6407

Antique

MUSIC BOX SPECIALISTS

Complete repair service, cylinders, repinned, combs repaired and tuned, all work guaranteed.

Large Stock of Finest Instruments For Sale

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave., Pelham, N.Y. 10803
Phone: (914) PE 8-1506

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Continued from page 38)

church work together, and this led him to select Meyer as the successor to the great bass singer who had died at the age of 41. At any rate, I had thought it well established that Meyer did his first recording as a member of the Quartet.

But it seems I was wrong. In looking through the late Dr. Duane D. Deakins' compilation of U. S. Everlasting indestructible cylinders, I was surprised to find Meyer apparently made records in 1908 and 1909, two or three years before he became associated with the Peerless.

A two-minute duet with Burr, No. 217, of the gospel hymn, "Why Do You Wait?" goes back, judging by its number, to 1908. So do two solos, No. 232, "Beulah Land," and 233, "Abide With Me," by Meyer. These, like all the other U.S. Everlasting records the basso made, were issued under the name of John Wilbur.

It seems likely that 1909 was the year in which his two four-minute cylinders were announced. They were 1010, "There'll Come a Day," another duet with Burr, and 1013, "It's Hard to Kiss Your Sweetheart When the Last Kiss Means Goodbye," which Wilbur sang with the soprano, Elise Stevenson.

Meyer's working with Miss Stevenson and with Burr at this time provides another puzzle. Both these artists were duet partners of Frank C. Stanley, who still was living. Why, then, was Meyer selected over Stanley to take part in these duets?

The fact that he was chosen at least indicates that Burr had his eyes on Meyer, so to speak, even before Stanley's untimely and unfortunate death. But, so far as my research indicates, these cylinders were the only records made by Meyer before he joined the Peerless Quartet.

IV. First Peerless Quartet Records

Just when did John Meyer's association with the Quartet begin? It could not have been later than March, 1911, and probably was as early as February, because the first Victor record by the Peerless Quartet went on sale April 28.

Since it took from six weeks to two months to press a record and include it in the monthly supplement after the master was made, this seems to indicate the recording probably was done at some time in February. That first Victor was No. 16852, "Emmaline Lee" and Catalog Editor, Sam Rous, gave away Meyer's efforts to disguise himself as John Wilbur by writing:

"The first record by the reorganized Peerless, Mr. Meyer having taken the place made vacant by the late Frank Stanley."

You will notice Meyer's full name was not given and in several of the ensuing semi-annual record catalogs he was referred to only as "Mr.

INSCRIBED PHOTO—John H. Meyer presented this autographed picture to a Victor dealer, "Bill" Nolan, when the Eight Victor Artists appeared Oct. 3, 1922, in a concert at Appleton, Wis.

Meyer." "Emmaline Lee" proved popular, but apparently Victor believed its sale was somewhat reduced by having a xylophone solo, M. Gillet's "Entre Acte Gavotte," played by William H. Reitz on the other side.

After a few months, the Peerless side was recoupled on 16956, with the American Quartet's version of "Somebody Else," and "Entre Acte" received a new partner on 16933—P. Frosini's accordion grand interpretation of "Naila Intermezzo."

May also brought the first Columbia record by the Peerless, which, however, was still known only as the Columbia Quartet on that firm's records. With bad proofreading, the Columbia supplement gave the title as "Emmalina Lee." No mention was made that Meyer had taken Stanley's place. The reverse side was "It's Got to be Someone I Love," sung by Ada Jones and Walter Van Brunt.

My guess is that the first Edison cylinder in which Meyer sang was "The Harp That Once Thro' Tara's Halls," issued in July, 1911. This was a solo by "Irving Gillette" (Burr) with male chorus, and the bass voice supporting Burr sounds more like Meyer's than that of Stanley, although, of course, the record could have been held over a few months before being placed on the market.

Edison's first mention of the Peerless Quartet came in March, 1912, when record No. 947, of "In the Golden Afterwhile," a song composed by Stanley, was announced. In the quotation which follows from The New Phonogram, Stanley's name is wrongly given as Frank Stanley Grinstead. His first name should be William.

"The many friends of the late Frank Stanley Grinstead (Frank C. Stanley) will perhaps be surprised to learn that he was a song writer of no little talent. In the Golden Afterwhile is from his pen and has always been one of the great favorites of the Peerless Quartet, singing in concert. By special arrangement 'the boys' of the quartet have turned over the money earned in making the record to Mr. Grinstead's widow and four children. We have also arranged that full royalty for every record sold shall be sent them through the courtesy of M. Witmark & Sons, New York, Mr. Grinstead's publishers. The purchase of the record will give added satisfaction to the buyer through knowledge that the act is contributing to a very worthy cause."

The Columbia version also appeared on No. A1111 in March, 1912, but with no mention of a royalty payment. Three months earlier, in December, 1911, Victor had announced the song on record No. 16991, coupled with "Don't Blame Me for Loving You," also by the Peerless.

The Victor announcement, through an error, said royalties would be paid to Stanley's "widow and two children." Edison was right in saying there were four. Two of the children still are living—Mrs. Elizabeth A. Repelow in West Orange, N.J., and Lt. Alan D. Grinstead, a retired naval commander, in Pensacola, Fla. William Stanley Grinstead, Jr., died many years ago, and the singer's youngest child, Elaine, died in 1970 at Pensacola.

Not long after Meyer joined the Peerless, his assumed name of Wilbur faded into virtual disuse. It is heard, however, in Victor record No. 35274, "Military Minstrels," issued in March, 1913. A roll of the "troops" is called and the members are introduced as Corporal Burr, Lieutenant Wilbur, Sergeant Campbell, and Private Collins. It then is explained that Collins is not present, and he takes the part of the bullying unnamed colonel. As the feature of the record, Burr, a Canadian, sings "Bunker Hill," an American patriotic song nowadays beloved of Tiny Tim.

The name of Wilbur reappeared for the last time in December, 1915. Victor then presented record No. 17889, "When You Sit Beside the Fireside in Winter," a duet by George Wilton Ballard and Meyer.

V. Recording Career

Few recording artists who became as well-known as Meyer did so little solo work, although John Bieling, the first tenor of the Hayden and American Quartets, would fall into the same class. Aside from the Indestructible cylinders, I am not absolutely sure that Meyer made any other solo records, though, as I shall show, he probably sang at least one for the Paroket brand, which Henry Burr issued from 1916 to 1918.

This being true, it is not necessary to trace Meyer's career in detail from the time he joined the Peerless in the winter of 1911 until he left it in the autumn of 1925. As a member of the Peerless Quartet and the Sterling Trio, which came into being in 1916, he sang in thousands of records, and also made many duets with Burr. During this period he frequently saw his name misspelled on record labels and in catalogs as Meyers or Myers, just as Harvey Hindermeyer's last name usually appeared as Hinder-meyer.

(Continued on page 52)

P R O G R A M		P R O G R A M
PART ONE		PART TWO
Opening Chorus	Entire Company (Words and Music by Ray Perkins)	1. PIANO SOLO	Frank Banta
1. BARTONE AND BASS DUET	John Meyer and Frank Croxton "Not in a Thousand Years"	"Cubist" (A Futuristic Rag) "In Babylon" (New Broadway Novelty)	Duet with John Meyer
2. COLEN STORIES AND SONGS	Monroe Silver "Selected"	2. TENOR DUET	Campbell and Burr
3. STEERING TRIO	Campbell, Burr and Meyer "Oh My Lady"	"Feather Your Nest"
4. BASSO SOLO	Fred Van Eps "Down South"	3. COLEN STORIES AND SONGS	Monroe Silver
5. TENOR SOLO	Henry Burr "Blue Diamonds"	"Selected"
6. TENOR SOLO	Billy Murray "My Little Bunko Down on the Bamboo File"	4. BASS SOLO	Frank Croxton
		"Dah! Gwinter Be a Lan'lide"
		5. BASSO SOLO	Fred Van Eps
		"So Long! Go-Long"
		6. PEERLESS QUARTET	Campbell, Burr, Meyer, Croxton
		"Swanee"
		7. TENOR SOLO	Billy Murray
		"A-B-C-D Blues"
		Closing Chorus	Entire Company
		FRANK BANTA, Accompanist

INFINITE VARIETY—A reprint of a program of concerts given by the Eight Famous Victor Artists in New Masonic Hall, Cleveland, O., November 16 and 17, 1920. Observe that John Meyer sang a duet with Frank Croxton and assisted Frank Banta in playing the piano. The artists of course gave encores besides singing and playing the numbers on the program.

JOHN H. MEYER

(Continued from page 48)

Although Frank Stanley, as the organizer and manager of the Peerless Quartet nearly always sang the lead in its records, Meyer almost never was given that opportunity. Burr became the manager and reserved lead-singing for himself. I know of just one Quartet record on which Meyer does the solo—Columbia A2336, a song of World War I, "Somewhere in France is Daddy."

It is odd, too, that Victor and Columbia never issued any Burr-Meyer duets, although most other companies, including Aeolian Vocalion, Pathé, Okeh, Gennett, and many more did. By contrast, every company that used Burr as a soloist—as virtually all but Edison and Brunswick did, until he signed exclusively with Victor in the summer of 1920—recorded his duets with Albert Campbell.

But Meyer was a man of versatility and varied accomplishments. From 1911 through 1918 he sang bass in the Peerless Quartet, but when Arthur Collins dropped out Meyer took the baritone part and left Frank Croxton to sing bass. And, just as Meyer made arrangements for the 72-man band he had conducted in his youth, he also did the arranging for the Quartet and Trio records. He kept a piano in his florist shop, and it was there that the ensemble met to do its rehearsing.

A skilled pianist, he sometimes played duets with Frank Banta during concerts by the Eight Famous Victor Artists—which seems to have changed its name to the Eight Popular Victor Artists in 1922. Sometimes Meyer and Croxton added an unusual touch to the Eight's programs by singing baritone and bass duets. Meyer's favorite solo for a long time was "Keep the Home Fires Burning."

The five years from 1915 to 1920, when the Quartet was free-lancing, probably were the busiest of Meyer's life. The group's services were wanted by so many companies, it usually worked three shifts a day—making records, say, for Victor in the morning, for Columbia in the afternoon, and for Pathé or some other company at night. There was a welcome let-down of course, after the group's members became exclusive Victor artists, an arrangement which also left them with more time to travel and give concerts.

Like Frank Stanley, Meyer had some ability as a composer. In March, 1923, Victor issued a Peerless Quartet record, No. 18999, of "Sunset Valley," the words of which were by Ray Sherwood, (Can Sherwood have been an assumed name for Ray Perkins, who was associated with Burr for a time in the music publishing business?). The music was by Meyer, described in the supplement as "first bass of the Peerless Quartet."

Then, early in 1924, Edison issued a Diamond Disc, No. 51276, on which Ernest L. Stevens' Trio played a fox trot, "Along the Rainbow Trail," composed, the label said, by "John Meyer." The Edison dealers' numerical catalog, however, listed the writer as "Meyer, of the Peerless Quartet and Sterling Trio."

Meyer hadn't made Edison records since 1915, when Burr quit the Company because he considered its payment rates too low. The officials, however, seemingly retained a friendly feeling for John and went out of their way to give his song a boost with dealers.

VI. "John E. Meyer" & "John Myers"

Old-time phonograph companies frequently did baffling things. Until recently I had felt certain that three Columbia records issued in 1912 and containing solos by a baritone listed as John E. Meyer actually were by John H. Meyer, the Peerless Quartet bass, and that the Columbia company had merely got his middle initial wrong, just as Edison had placed an H. midway of Albert Campbell's name when his middle name really was Charles.

I had not heard the records, but since John H. Meyer had become the Peerless basso only a short time before they came out it certainly seemed reasonable to assume the records were his. The titles were "Bonnie, My Highland Lassie," issued in March, 1912; "The Song That Reaches Irish Hearts," which came out in August, and "I'd Like to be in Peachland With a Peach Like You" (an obvious borrowing from "I'd Love to Live in Loveland With a Girl Like You"), October.

But then Quentin Riggs found a copy of "Bonnie" and wrote me that the singer was not the Peerless Quartet bass, but John W. Myers, the baritone native of Wales whose recording career had begun in the early 1890's. I wondered if he could be right, but within the past couple of days I also have got a copy of that record, and there is no doubt that "John E. Meyer" was John W. Myers.

Yet I can't understand what possessed Columbia to change the name of a well-established singer and give him one almost exactly like that of a newcomer. It seems silly but the change was only temporary. The name of John W. Myers returned to Columbia lists in 1914-15, but in the latter years the false one of John E. Meyer popped up in English Columbia's catalog of Regal records, when the Charles K. Harris song, "Break the News to Mother," was issued. Apparently the old tear-jerker had been revived in England because World War I had begun.

The record was not issued in the States, and that leads me to believe the English affiliate had saved matrices of the single-faced Columbia No. 689 by Myers, which had been issued many years before, and reissued it. When first made in 1902 the disc of "Break the News" was announced as by J. W. Myers, but the name was changed to John E. Meyer when Regal "resurrected" it.

I mentioned that John H. Meyer may have made solo Paroket records for Henry Burr. I have Paroket No. A100 on which a deep-toned singer is heard in a popular song of 1917, "Tho' I'm Not the First to Call You Sweetheart Please Let Me Be the Last."

The other side is one of Albert Campbell's last solo records, a Chauncy Olcott "Sweet Girl of My Dreams."

To me it seems likely the "Sweet-heart" song was sung by John Meyer, but alas! the label says "John Myers." Obviously, since nearly all the vocal Paroket records were made by Burr and members of his concert troupe, the chances seem strong that he would have called on the Peerless Quartet basso rather than the almost forgotten J. W. Myers, whose recording career was virtually over.

My copy of the record is not in good condition and the recording is poor, but the voice sounds heavier than Myers' and the intonation does not seem the same, except that "last" at the close of the chorus is pronounced exactly as the older artist would have enunciated it. Yet the label says "Myers," and one would think that Burr would have made sure the name of his basso was spelled correctly!

Nevertheless, I am inclined to the belief that John H. Meyer made the record, and perhaps he sang others for Paroket. If so, they were, to the best of my knowledge, his only solo discs. And, come to think of it, when he sang on an Edison record in 1926, his name came out on the label as John Myers!

VII. Personal Characteristics

Despite his versatility, his skill at arranging, and other valuable characteristics, John Meyer was something of a "problem child" for the Eight Victor Artists. During the time he was the Peerless Quartet bass, Billy Murray jokingly would introduce him to audiences as "the only member of our troupe who has ever been able to go a week without taking a drink," and Meyer would smile broadly. This was an "inside joke" that could be fully understood and appreciated only by the members of the company, for John, though certainly not an alcoholic, was neither an advocate nor observer of total abstinence. This sometimes was shown by the manner in which he "came in too loud" on the Quartet and Trio recordings.

After Croxton joined the group, they were the two members, so a Victor "advance man" told me, who asked, "Where can we get some liquor?" as soon as they reached a new community on their trips. Wiedoeft also gave Burr some trouble by drinking, but the remainder of the Eight were virtually tee-totalers throughout their active years.

As Billy Murray told me: "One of the things we used to watch for was for John to show up looking a little glassy-eyed. Burr would look at him reproachfully, and John would boom: 'It's a d----- lie, Harry! I haven't had a drop—not a drop!'"

Perhaps it was because of this problem and the complaints of dealers that Meyer sang too loud in some records, that Burr decided, in late 1925, to make a complete change in Peerless Quartet personnel. He let Campbell, Meyer, and Croxton all go, and replaced them with lesser known Carl Mathieu, Stanley Baughman, and James Stanley. Whatever justification Burr may have felt for dismissing Meyer and Croxton, this treatment seemed unjust to Campbell, who didn't drink and had been intimately associated with Burr for nearly a quarter of a century.

VIII. Last Recordings

No longer a member of the Peerless Quartet (there was no Sterling Trio after the shake-up), Meyer continued to do recording work for another year or so by forming a duet partnership with Henry Moeller, best known as the featured tenor soloist on Gennett records. For duet purposes Moeller called himself Henry Fairbank. The pair made one double-faced Edison record that contained two of the best "popular" duets the Company ever issued: "There's a Blue Ridge In My Heart, Virginia" and "I'm Leaving You" (No. 51774). Meyer told me they also sang "Bye Bye, Blackbird" for Edison, but if they did it was not issued. "Anyway," he said, "we got paid for it!"

Meyer and Fairbank also made Grey Gull records and Gennett. On at least one disc of Gennett origin they were called "Meyers and Nelson," and on another "Harlan and Roberts." This sounds like an effort to make customers think the old-time favorites, Byron G. Harlan and Bob Roberts, had resumed recording and were working together.

There was so much competition in free lance recording, however, that apparently the duet team gave up within a year, and Meyer returned to managing his florist shop. It must have been well operated by someone, to be still in business, after all the years Meyer had spent in recording and concert work.

Sometime later he closed the shop and went to work at Thorley's, "The House of Flowers," where he was employed when I met him. He was regarded as one of the most skillful floral designers in New York City.

IX. My Meeting With John Meyer

My one meeting with the genial and colorful basso occurred on an afternoon in October, 1940, when Al Campbell took me first to the offices of Billy Jones (who dropped dead on Broadway three weeks later from a heart attack) and Aileen Stanley (she was out), then to Thorley's.

When Al said to a couple of gentlemen sitting near the entrance, "May we speak with John Meyer, please?" they replied, "Yes," and called "John!" "John!"

A few moments later John Meyer stuck his head around the door and smiled impishly in a manner that reminded me of a picture of him in a 1920 Aeolian-Vocalion record supplement. When Al told him who I was, he turned to me and said: "I heard you were in town."

I wondered how on earth he could have learned anything about the presence in that huge city of a newspaperman from Johnson City, Tenn., but decided Billy Murray might have called

(Continued on page 125)

PAINSTAKING REHEARSAL—These pictures, reprinted from 1920 and 1919 Victor record supplements, but obviously taken on the same day, show the Sterling Trio performing a song for recording purposes. The scene probably is John Meyer's florist shop on Third Avenue, N.Y., and the artists are Henry Burr, standing; Albert Campbell, atop the piano, and Meyer, at the keyboard. The song, "I Think I'll Wait Until They All Come Back," apparently was never recorded by the Trio for Victor or any other company. "The Invincible Four" (Peerless Quartet), sang it, however, for Pathe.

Mission Inn Tower Clock.

tation (Proverbs 29-18) is the theme of Walter A. Dyer's quaint story "The Vision of Anton, the Clock Maker," and was a favorite motto with the Master of Mission Inn.

Curious to see the movement created for this fascinating clock, we obtained permission to inspect it. The building maintenance man arrived with ladder and keys, and the door in the tower that housed the clock was opened.

My first glimpse of the movement was a shock. I had expected to see an ancient clock mechanism. My eyes beheld an old Seth Thomas tower clock movement which had been electrified, coupled with equipment to trip motors which operated the figures.

To say the least, I was disappointed. But the exterior was beautiful and no doubt cost more than an original ancient clock. It was completed in 1951.

American GRANDFATHER CLOCK

R. Whiting—Winchester: circa 1814: 7'6" tall: good cond.: beautiful face: wooden works: collectors item: individual selling: $1,150.00 not delivered:

WILMOT D. TAYLOR
5301 West 68th St.
Shawnee Mission, Kans. 66208

aup

HAGAN'S CLOCK MANOR Horological Collection Catalogue

Limited Edition autographed and numbered, 8½" x 11½", 72 pages, over 150 photos of clocks identified and dated. A valuable reference book for all collectors and dealers.

Paper Bound - $5

HAGAN'S CLOCK MANOR

3574 So. Ivanhoe
Denver, Colo. 80237

tfx

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 53)

ed him and mentioned that I was visiting. Or perhaps the smiling Al Campbell had seen him and said something about it, since both John and Al lived in Flushing.

I told John I thought he looked exactly like the pictures of him that had been published 20 years before, and he seemed pleased, but expressed disgust at the crumpled condition of a photo of himself which Billy had given me so I could have him autograph it. He signed it, anyway, and then went on to ask if I knew he did his first recording under the name of John Wilbur. Of course he explained that he took the name from his uncle who left him the florist shop.

"You were in the florist business, weren't you, before you began to make records?" I asked.

He drew a laugh by the emphatic manner in which he replied: "Yes, thank God!" and added he had been looking through an old Victor catalog a few nights before and had come upon the mention of his succeeding Stanley as the Peerless Quartet basso.

John Meyer was the last recording artist I met on that trip, for I boarded a homeward-bound train a few hours later. I didn't see him on my next trip in 1946, and a year later Harvey Hindermeyer told me that within the past year or so John had begun "to look awfully bad. He walks almost bent double."

Hearing this, it did not come as a surprise when I read of his death a year and a half later.

I hope no one will take too much to heart what I have said about John Meyer's personal failings. We all have our faults. As for myself, I have a long-standing admiration for him as an accomplished singer and musician, a "good fellow," and a colorful character whose personality added much to what must have been the fun of being a member of the Eight Famous Victor Artists.

Thanks to his recordings, John Meyer's memory is certain to remain green for generations to come.

CLOCK PARTS

SPRINGS, Escape Wheels, & Clock Dials of finest quality silk screen on gloss or off-white stock. Self-addressed stamped envelope for list. Custom made clock springs to order. — The Antique Nook, Inc., Box 338, Atwater, O. 44201 d122342

FOR SALE: Antique American clock parts. Finials, hardware, pendulums, cupids, scarce items. Authentic & excellent reproductions. New catalog offering 125 items. Send 16c in stamps to — Stevens Clock Supplies, P.O. Box 1253, Elizabethtown, N.C. 28337 au3055

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

THEO KARLE

By JIM WALSH

I. Top Brunswick Tenor

After some experience at building cabinets for New Edison phonographs, the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company, of Chicago, decided, in 1916, to construct its own brand of talking machines. The new Brunswick had excellent tone quality and most students of recorded sound rank it second only to the Edison. That realism, Brunswick frankly admitted in early advertising, it was striving to equal, or, in Brunswick phraseology, to "duplicate the absolute Edison tone."

Brunswick didn't succeed, so far as Edison recordings were concerned, but its rendition of Pathé sapphire ball discs was splendid and its reproduction of lateral-cut records above the average. Also the Brunswick's U-tona reproducer, introduced at the beginning of 1918, was the most convenient ever devised. It included three diaphragms: one equipped with a sapphire ball for Pathé records; one with a diamond for Edison's, and a third with a steel needle-socket for records like those of Victor and Columbia.

To play needle-cut hill-and-dale discs you took out the sapphire ball and inserted a needle in the Pathé position. The Edison diamond point could not be removed.

For the first three years of Brunswick's phonograph activities, its dealers in the United States stocked Pathé records, but in Canada vertical cut Rex discs were marketed with a Brunswick label. Then, toward the end of 1919, Brunswick decided to manufacture its own brand of lateral cut records, since Victor's original patents apparently had expired.

Maintaining that the patents were still in effect, Victor sued Gennett, Brunswick, and perhaps other companies that had begun making "needle-cuts." The suits, however, came to nothing.

There was then a stampede by companies that made hill-and-dale records to switch to the lateral type, which was inferior in tone quality but could be played on a much larger number of machines. Aeolian-Vocalion, Okeh, Paramount, and Lyric were among others that joined the "zig-zag" procession.

Pathé began making lateral cuts late in 1920 and in 1922 discontinued issuing sapphire discs in the States. That left Edison as the only American company still making vertical-cut records.

Brunswick phonographs and records were splendid productions for their period of recorded history. During the early 1920's the Company gained a reputation as the most progressive talking-machine manufacturer.

By 1923 Brunswick had succeeded Edison as the third largest record manufacturer. Victor and Columbia, of course, had been first and second. And Brunswick probably went ahead of Columbia when that pioneer Company began to have grave financial troubles.

Brunswick had a reputation among recording artists as a good Company to work for. A 1924 issue of the Billboard said: "It is surprising how many big names are angling for Brunswick contracts."

One of the "big names" who got a Brunswick contract, whether he "angled" for it or not, was Al Jolson.

After 10 years with Columbia, during which his records never were especially good sellers, Jolson went to Brunswick at a contract reported in the newspapers to call for $30,000 a month for the next four years—a total of $1,440,000.

According to the Billboard, however, Brunswick found it had made a losing deal. Jolson's first record, "California, Here I Come," and "I'm Goin' South," had been counted on to sell 200,000 copies in its first pressing. But, again, according to Billboard, the record reached only 90,000.

Not until Jolson's success in the talkies and the issuance of his record combining "Sonny Boy" and "There's a Rainbow Round My Shoulder," did Brunswick begin to recoup something of its expensive investment. However, without any proof to the contrary, I frankly, don't believe that "$30,000 a month" story.

When the progressive Chicago manufacturer decided to enter the record business a young tenor whose real name was Theo Karle Johnston, but who was known professionally as Theo Karle, was one of the first artists to be engaged. Not only that, but during the period from 1920 to 1925, he made a larger number of Brunswick records than any other artist. He was one of the Company's most highly praised "New Hall of Fame" performers.

Then, all at once, after he had made scores of records, his Brunswick career ended just before electric recording came into use. This tenor, who stood 6 feet 2 inches and was said to be a descendant of "Old Hickory,"

CONCERT ARTIST—THEO KARLE as he appeared at the height of his career.

OPERATIC ROLE—THEO KARLE is shown here taking the tenor part of des Grieux in Massenet's opera, "Manon."

This picture was taken in 1916 in the Victrola Department of Rorabaugh-Wiley Dry Goods Company, Hutchinson, Kan. From left to right are ROYAL DADMUN, baritone; MAXIMILIAN PILZER, violinist; THEO KARLE, tenor; H. H. Paterson, manager Victrola department; Le Roy Plank, Victor representative for Kansas, and Mrs. A. A. Rickert, Hutchinson soprano.

Andrew Jackson, never again had an important recording role.

When Theo Karle died Sunday, May 7, 1972, in his Seattle, Wash., home, he was almost 79. His death received little national attention, for he had been in contented retirement for many years and had made no effort to keep before the public. But in his day he had been one of America's leading concert singers as well as a prominent recording artist.

II. Theo Karle, the Man

Theo Karle was born in Perry, Iowa, July 30, 1893. After receiving his general education in public schools and with private tutors he studied for many years with Edmund J. Myer, both in Seattle and New York. Before he went East, the tenor appeared in concert on the Pacific Coast and also took leading tenor roles in operas produced by one of the Pacific Coast companies.

Karle's first New York appearances were made with the Rubenstein Club in January, 1916, under the leadership of William H. Chapman. A few months later Karle signed a Victor recording contract which resulted in his making two double-faced discs.

His recital debut was made in October, 1916, when he sang in Aeolian Hall. The same season he toured as soloist with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra and appeared with Geraldine Farrar at the Maine Festival, also with Alma Gluck at the Worcester Festival.

During the years that followed, Karle was heard as soloist with leading symphony orchestras and sang before many leading clubs in coast-to-coast appearances. In 1919, just before his Brunswick career began, he appeared as leading tenor in "The Wayfarer," given in New York's Madison Square Garden. He estimated that in his first six years of concert work he sang before more than one million persons.

In 1936 a Seattle newspaper published an interesting feature article about Theo Karle, from which I shall quote for the sake of its "background color:"

"It was back in 1910 that a boy named Theo Karle Johnston came to Seattle from Olympia to see if his dreams of fame could come true. He was only 16 years old, and, though he had sung in a church choir for a dollar a week, he knew nothing of music. But he thought, with the optimism of youth, that somewhere, some day, audiences might applaud him.

"He was introduced to a man named

Edmund J. Myer, when he came to Seattle. Mr. Myer, a retired singer, told him that he was not dreaming in vain. But he told him, also, that years of study lay ahead.

"The boy studied, and found fame. A manager shortened his name to Theo Karle, and as Theo Karle he became known as a great tenor. He was back in Seattle today—back for a much different reason than when he came here to study in 1910. When his season ended several weeks ago, he felt an urge to see the green hills and the lakes and salt water of the Northwest again . . .

"I guess this country gets into your blood," he said today. "I've seen Italy and Monte Carlo, and I've sung in a lot of places all over the world, but I still want to come back. I'm going to stay until September and loaf—as much as a singer can let himself.

"I'll have to sing two or three days a week, and I'll probably have a lot of new repertoire to learn, but except for that I'll just be seeing the country."

"Theo Karle went east with his teacher in 1916, and made his debut at the Rubenstein Club in New York City. The war interrupted his work. He joined the Army and was at Camp Lewis when the Armistice was signed.

"Since then he has sung in the Opera Comique in Paris, with the Monte Carlo Opera Company, and has appeared in most of the capitals of the world. He has sung also for the radio, and on Broadway in Earl Carroll's Vanities."

A program distributed at a Karle recital in his "home town" of Olympia on Friday evening, September 18, 1936, amplifies some details of the newspaper account:

"... Theo Karle is that rara avis, a tenor with a man's voice and a man's

(Continued on page 48)

Antique MUSIC BOX SPECIALISTS

Complete repair service, cylinders, re-pinned, combs repaired and tuned, all work guaranteed.

Large Stock of Finest
Instruments For Sale

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave., Pelham, N.Y. 10803

Phone: (914) PE 8-1506

COLLECTORS NOSTALGIA BUFFS DEALERS

THE MOST WANTED POSTER OF OUR TIME

(Size 18" x 30"

full color)

We are building a mailing list for the liquidation of one of the world's largest collections of popular culture (books, autographs, records, railroad memorabilia, bookplates, sheet music, film items, postcards, etc.). 50 pp. catalog out Sept. 15. Low prices, over 3000 items listed. Send $2.00 for catalog. We will send immediately a copy of Jesus Christ, Superstar (as above) free to all subscribers to the sale catalog. Only 4000 catalogs will be available; each will be numbered.

Extra copies $2.00 each, M.O. or checks only. Mail to:

SWAP 'N' SHOP, INC.

P.O. Box 630

Edgewater Station

Cleveland, Ohio 44107

sp

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Re feathered
Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

ttg

RECORDING ARTISTS FAVORITE PIONEER

(Continued from page 38)

NEPHEW AND UNCLE—This photo, reproduced from the February, 1917, Voice of the Victor, shows Theo Karle and his Uncle O. S. Johnston of Cedar Rapids, Ia., listening to a Victrola in the George A. Mullen Company's Cedar Rapids store.

ways. His straight-forward style of delivery, that neither shouts nor sentimentalizes, reflects the high standard of the art. Through a sonorous vocal gift that breathes freshness and fervor into his interpretations, Karle makes every aria an adventure in song.

"This genial artist, who leapt into fame when barely out of his 'teens' and who is now in the prime of his powers, has appeared with virtually every concert course, oratorio society, festival and symphony orchestra in America. Following triumph after triumph in this country, Theo Karle went to Europe in 1926 where, after a period of study with several of the leading coaches on the continent, he made his debut at the Opera Comique in Paris. There followed three years of operatic engagements culminating in a series of appearances with the Royal Opera at Monte Carlo.

"Returning to America in 1930, Karle was retained by the Columbia Broadcasting System and, during a period of four years, was featured in some 600 programs, more than half of them being with symphony orchestra. For the past year, however, he has been making only guest appearances on the air, for he has decided the time has come to resume concertizing.

"Today, Theo Karle's voice is richer and sweeter than it ever has been, investing his repertoire, which ranges from Italian classic through German lieder to modern songs, with a memorable melodiousness."

The program quoted some critical appraisals of Karle's art, including the following from the veteran W. J. Henderson of the New York Sun. Henderson was never "easy" on singers. He did not hesitate to say that when Enrico Caruso sang as well as he could he sang extremely well. But, Henderson added that, more often than not, Caruso's singing was "extremely bad."

"He (Karle) is a singer of merit and of power to hold the interest of an audience. The best features of his art (are) a finely spun legato, admirably sustained phrases, tenderness of feeling, clear pronunciation and a style appropriate and finished. On the whole . . . a singer of worth, who has the uncommon ability to get his songs effectively over the footlights and to an audience."

Of interest also is the following from the Washington Post:

"The great natural beauty of Karle's voice, the poignancy of its appeal, its flawless cantilena, his good taste in phrasing, artistic discretion in the use of light and shade—in fact, his splendid singing, received an ovation."

I learned of Theo Karle's death from my long-time friend, Keith Moyer, of Everett, Wash., who also had been a friend of the tenor's for many years. Mr. Moyer sent me a copy of this death notice in the Seattle Times of Monday, May 8:

"THEO KARLE, RETIRED TEACHER, SINGER DIES. Memorial services for Theo Karle, retired voice teacher and former opera singer, will be at 1 p.m. tomorrow at the Butterworth Mortuary. He died of a sudden illness Sunday afternoon at his Olympic Peninsula retreat . . .

"Mr. Karle made his singing debut in New York City in 1916. His first concert appearance was with the Seattle Philharmonic Orchestra just before World War I. Service with the Army interrupted his career. After the war Mr. Karle spent eight years with the Columbia Broadcasting Company. Then he and his wife, Nora, a pianist, turned to the international concert circuit, traveling as much as 30,000 miles a year. Mr. Karle returned to Seattle in 1941 to teach voice. He has been in semi-retirement since 1952."

Keith Moyer provides this additional information:

"Mr. Karle . . . sang in the leading tenor roles with the Standard Opera Company on the coast when only 19 years old . . . He made records for the Ginn Company for educational purposes under his Seattle friend, Henry Hadley, who conducted the orchestra of some 30 men. He left Brunswick after canceling his contract so that he could sing at the Paris Opera Comique for a number of years and at Monte Carlo. He was offered opera contracts in Germany and Scandinavia, but due to the trouble of re-learning his roles in German and Swedish he turned them down and on returning to America became a staff artist for the Columbia Broadcasting System for eight years. He mentioned he made the first experimental television show from the Columbia studios with Barbara Maurel."

The educational records to which Mr. Moyer refers must be three made for Gennett, about the time Karle left Brunswick, and which are listed along with his Victor and Brunswicks at the end of this article. All were 10-inch, sold for $1.50 each, and were accompanied by "members of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Henry Hadley." Their description in a 1926 Gennett catalog corresponds to what Mr. Moyer says about the educational records made for Ginn.

Quoting further from Moyer's letter:

"He (Karle) had a contract with Victor, but recorded only four selections, under his friend, Walter Rogers (1865-1939) who induced Karle to go over to the newly formed Brunswick Company in 1920. He did this at a yearly salary. He told me that he made the first experimental electric records for Brunswick with some British equipment, but it was a failure. Strangely, he never made any commercial electrics for Brunswick, but made a few electrics on the Linden label, a Seattle radio station that had them pressed in California. I have only one of his Linden records. It is No. 08, 'Mother Machree.'"

III. Brief Victor Sojourn

In November, 1912, Victor issued a Red Seal record by its young tenor star, John McCormack, of a song that has been a favorite of mine almost as long as I can remember. It was "I Know of Two Bright Eyes," with words reputed to be by a mysterious Abd-ul Mejid and the music by an English composer, George H. Clutsam.

My fondness for this lovely number was not based on the McCormack record, No. 64255, but on Columbia, No. A769, by Henry Burr, which was poorly recorded but beautifully sung. The Victor supplement description of the song as "a pretty little trifle" is rather condescendingly annoying, at least to me:

"A pretty little trifle by a well-known song writer, which Mr. McCormack sings charmingly. The number is from a set of Clutsam songs entitled 'Songs From the Turkish Hills,' which has been much in vogue in England. The delicate pianissimo note in the second verse is an exquisite ending to a highly pleasing rendition by this favorite tenor."

Almost three years earlier, in February, 1910, Columbia had announced a double-faced disc, No. F130, of the same song by McCormack, coupled with Liddle's setting of Charles Kingsley's poem, "A Farewell." Columbia was then American sales agent for the Fonotipia Company of Italy, whose English branch for a time had McCormack under contract, and which made this recording. The Columbia supplement description is more interesting than the Victor:

"One of a group of six 'Songs From the Turkish Hills,' collected and arranged by the distinguished English composer, George H. Clutsam. Though each of the songs in this collection is remarkable for its beauty and individuality, this one has been chosen from the first by critics and singers alike as the gem of them all. The charm exercised by this song is so subtle and intangible that it is difficult to say wherein its chief beauty lies, though the simplicity and dignity of its exquisite air may be held largely responsible. In both words and melody is found a suggestion of the mysticism of the East."

I never have heard McCormack's Columbia record. I have his Victor, but prefer Burr's rendition. A noteworthy thing about the Victor, however, is its amazingly short life, for a McCormack recording. It stayed in the catalog just a year. Its last appearance was in November, 1913. By May, 1914, it was cut out. What caused it to sell so poorly?

This reference to the McCormack recording points up the fact that, notwithstanding a first disappointing experience with the song, "I Know of Two Bright Eyes" was selected as one of the selections with which Theo Karle made his Victor debut in June, 1916. It was coupled with Leoncavallo's "Mattinata," also known as "Tis the Day."

I will quote the supplement description, although it largely, and inaccurately repeats information already given:

"This young tenor, who is making a success on the concert platform, was born in Seattle, and received much of his musical training in the West. Edmund J. Meyer, the New York teacher, heard him, and being much impressed by the young man's voice, urged him to come to New York for further instruction. Upon entering the concert field he was at once pronounced an acquisition, and is now in much demand, some of this season's engagements being at the Worcester Festival, joint appearance with Alma Gluck; with Mme. Farrar at the Maine Festival; soloist on the New York Philharmonic Orchestra tour, and many recitals.

(Continued on page 52)

THEO KARLE

(Continued from page 48)

"Mr. Karle's voice, as will be noticed in these two fine records, is a pure robust tenor of even register and much color and flexibility. He will make Victor records exclusively."

This write-up has its share of errors. Karle was not born in Seattle; "Meyer's" name was Myer, and he did not have the tenor "come" to New York, but taught him in Seattle, then accompanied him East.

Karle's second and last appearance in a Victor list was in April, 1917, when he sang the Siciliana from "Cavalleria Rusticana" and, a rather odd coupling, an obscure song called "Her Heart." Soon afterward he went into military service, and that may be the reason why no more of his records appeared.

There were occasional references to Karle, both during and after his Victor recording period, in the Voice of the Victor. For instance, a photograph in the August, 1916, issue (reproduced with this article) was taken in the Victrola department of the Rorabaugh-Wiley Dry Goods Company of Hutchinson, Kans.

This photograph showed Karle, Royal Dadmun (a baritone born 1886 and died 1964, who was to become a Victor artist six years later, but who at that time had made only one Columbia record and some indestructible cylinders), and Maximilian Pilzer (1890-1958), the violinist, with three other persons. A couple of years ago I sent Mr. Karle a copy of the picture, and he seemed delighted to get it.

In February, the Voice used a photo of Karle with his uncle, O. S. Johnston, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, listening to a Victrola in the Victor parlors of the George A. Mullen Company, of that city. The caption said:

"Both Mr. Karle and Mr. Johnston are enthusiastic Victor boosters. Mr. Johnston having purchased a new XVI for his nephew's use while in this city."

The December, 1917, number carried this brief note:

"Felicitations to Theo Karle, who sang in his home town of Seattle, Wash., September 5, and got married the same day."

Miss Nora Christof, the lady who became Karle's wife is reported to have been his "childhood sweetheart." It sometimes is said they were married "while they were still children," but the tenor actually had passed his 24th birthday when he wed, so was not exactly a "teenager."

In June, 1919, the Voice revealed:

"Theo Karle, the tenor who has made some excellent Victor records, having completed his military service, is planning to return to music. He will be heard in recital during the coming season."

Karle's two Victor discs came to be singled out for special treatment. In the December, 1917, record supplement, under the heading of "Some Interesting Records," appeared a description of "I Know of Two Bright Eyes."

A shortage of popular Victor records was beginning to develop, and such listings were intended to help dealers sell numbers they already had in stock but "which may have been overlooked in the pages of our monumental Victor record catalog. Our selections may not always be new to all our readers, but they will always be good—according to our view."

"Just who exactly is Abd-ul Mejid? His poem, 'I Know of Two Bright Eyes,' should bring him a greater fame, now that it has been set to music by George H. Clutsam. For tenderness and purity of sentiment his simple little poem might be written by an Irishman such as Tom Moore. Clutsam has caught the spirit of it nicely. Without straining for Oriental effects he gives us a feeling of wide sandy deserts mystically glowing under the moonlight and the starry sky. And Theo Karle sings—well, like an Oriental lover."

I disagree with that last statement. Karle's interpretation sounds to me so restrained that he seems more like a Scandinavian than an Oriental.

In the Voice of the Victor for June, 1919, these notes were given to aid dealers in selling the other Karle record.

"'Siciliana,' one of the favorite airs from 'Cavalleria.' 'Her Heart,' a tender love song. Fine tone quality."

"In Mascagni's opera Turiddu sings the 'Siciliana,' a delightful Sicilian serenade, before the curtain goes up, his voice gradually dying away as he retires into the distance. It is sung to his beloved, Lola, who has married Alfio, during his absence at the war. 'Her Heart' is a tender song telling simply and directly a lover's reverence for his sweetheart—a theme as old as the hills and as fresh as a spring flower."

IV. Karle's Brunswick Career

Walter B. Rogers was Victor recording director during the 1916 period in which Karle's records were made, but left shortly afterward to become associated with Henry Burr's short-lived Paroquette Record Company. In 1918 he seems to have been working for Paramount, for I have a 1918 hill-and-dale Paramount disc by Walter B. Rogers and His Band. But by 1920 he was with Brunswick, and it probably was he who persuaded Theo Karle to become a featured soloist for the new company. Karle himself said Brunswick "bought" his contract from Victor, but as he had made no records since 1916 it seems rather doubtful that a contract was still in effect. Moreover, Victor had sued Brunswick, alleging patent infringement. Would it be likely to "sell" the newcomer one of its artists?

Without laboring that point, I can say that Karle's long list of Brunswick records calls for no extended analysis and comment. The program I have quoted said his repertoire ranged from "Italian classic through German lieder to modern songs," but he was not given much opportunity for recording classics.

Instead, Brunswick used him almost entirely in ballads of the type that McCormack sang prolifically for Victor; Colin O'More for Aeolian-Vocalion; Charles Harrison and Henry Burr for Columbia; Henry Moeller for Gennett, and Walter Van Brunt for Edison. There were old Irish songs; semi-Irish, recently composed numbers; sentimental compositions of almost every description, and just a touch of oratorio, "Bohemian Girl," and Gilbert and Sullivan.

One of his most interesting recordings combined the "Good Night Quartet" from "Martha" with the "Madrigal" from "The Mikado," and was sung by the Music Arts Singers, a mixed quartet consisting of Karle, Richard Bonelli, Marie Tiffany and Elizabeth Lennox. Both ladies had been Edison "tone test" artists. Miss Tiffany had married a Brunswick official and switched her recording affiliation from Edison.

The attached list of Karle records speaks for itself, but I will point out some of the oddities of his catalog listings. He had only eight double-faced records in the 1921 catalog. By 1922 the list had grown so long it began on page 87, continued to the lower half of page 89, jumped from there to 90, and ended on page 94. I have never seen any other catalog with such a hop, skip, and jump arrangement.

In the 1924 list, most of Karle's 13000 series records were renumbered, apparently because some had been selling for $1 and some for $1.25. It was decided to bring them all into the $1.25 price range.

But the most baffling treatment occurred in 1925, when Karle and all his records were expunged from the catalog as if they had never existed. His only mention is in a pronunciation guide at the back, where it is said that "Karle" is pronounced like "Karl." But why did all Karle's waxings vanish at the beginning of the electric recording era?

Then comes another question. Why, after they seemingly had been cut out, did they reappear in 1927 with a few new titles, including three duets with Miss Tiffany?

Karle's waxings continued to be listed through the January, 1929 catalog, but in a special section of "mechanically recorded" discs, with the statement that they would not be available after December, 31, 1930. And none were. By that time the depression had hit and there was little demand for records, new or old.

Another oddity about Brunswick catalogs was the way biographical sketches of artists were changed annually. Victor catalogs, for example, carried the same write-ups year after year, with, perhaps, an occasional shortening or change of phrase, but Brunswick's were rewritten each year. I'll quote examples but, first I should mention that Brunswick used the assumed name of "John Congdon" for a couple of Karle's early numbers.

In the 1921 catalog Brunswick patrons were told that:

"Theo Karle, who won such exceptional praise from the press and public through his singing of the chief tenor role in the New York presentation of 'The Wayfarer,' is one of America's greatest artists. He is a tenor whose voice and interpretative gifts reflect musicalness, mentality and manhood—a combination rarely to be found and one which, in this instance, has brought honor and praise to his professional work.

LISTENING TO HIMSELF—THEO KARLE hearing one of his own records in the Everett Department Store, Everett, Wash. (Reproduced from the January, 1918, Voice of the Victor.)

"Still in his early twenties, the future holds fame for this young, upstanding American. The range, power and quality of his voice has (sic) already been compared with that of the world's greatest tenors."

In 1922 this was altered to:

"America has come to be and, indeed, is proud of her son, Theo Karle. No tenor before the people has received such consistent praise and honor. Karle's voice and interpretative endowments come under the highest classification; they reflect musicalness, mentality and manhood. (The supplement writer must have been proud of that alliterative phrase . . . J.W.) Karle is still in the 20's and has more engagements to sing, both before the public and in the recording laboratory, than he can—even with his joyous health—ever fill. He is an exclusive Brunswick artist and daily his audiences are increasing, a fact which is demonstrated vividly whenever a Karle recording is released."

An enthusiastic description was published in the Gold Label Artists section of the 1923 catalog:

"The beautiful lyric tenor of this popular and talented American concert singer is known and loved wherever real music lovers foregather. In his six surprising seasons on the concert stage Karle has won for himself a unique place in the hearts of his audiences. It is no wonder that he is popular—this engaging young man with the voice that thrills you by its very artistic sincerity. As a singer of heart songs he is pre-eminent in his particular field. His voice, of extraordinary power, yet capable of the tenderest delicacy of feeling, is a splendid natural instrument such as one hears but once in a generation. But over and above his technique (technical?) accomplishments of voice is the magnetism of his pleasing and gracious personality. Karle is youth, exultant, over-riding obstacles, looking for more worlds to conquer. His abundant and youthful enthusiasm compels you to his mood, drawing you up and away from sordid care by the sheer power of his artistic vitality."

"Theo Karle records exclusively for Brunswick Gold Label Records. Hear him sing 'Macushla,' 'Mavis' and 'Little Mother of Mine' and his reason for selecting Brunswick becomes apparent. Only Brunswick recording methods could reproduce for him the high standards of tone, the niceties of shading and phrasing, which have made him so famous on the concert stage."

But, of course, he had made Victor records!

The 1924 write-up was based largely on the information given in the already quoted program, so I shall not copy it. However, it mentions that Karle had been "tenor soloist at the famous Brick Church on Fifth Avenue" and had made "about twenty concert tours from coast to coast—a remarkable record for so young an artist."

Then came 1925 with no records listed and virtually no mention of Karle. In the 1927 catalog his records were back but demoted from the "celebrity section" and there was no biographical description.

In 1928, however, he was once more among the Gold Label luminaries, with the same description that had been used in 1924. Considerably shortened, this appeared again in 1929, but in 1930 all "mechanical" records had been sentenced to death and his name was no longer mentioned.

V. I Hear From Theo Karle

After learning from Keith Moyer of his friendship with Theo Karle, I decided that the eminent retired tenor would be a good subject for a HOBBIES article, so wrote to him, enclosing a copy of the Karle-Dadmum-Pilzer photo. On October 19, 1970, I was delighted to receive the following letter, which he had written four days earlier:

"Dear Mr. Walsh: Thank you so much for your very kind letter. It was good of you to take time to drop me a line."

"You really reached into the past with your picture of Royal Dadmun and Max Pilzer. I am highly flattered and great(ly) pleased. The picture was taken on my first tour with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra during which we did 69 concerts in five weeks. At that time I had made only two Victor records, and shortly after that Brunswick bought my contract from Victor and after that I had over 100 records in the Brunswick listing."

"As I wrote a friend in California recently, I haven't any current photographs and I am not sitting for any new ones as I do not like what I see. However, I will be glad to send what I have if you want it."

"As you can see, I am the poorest typist in the world and can only hope you will overlook the mistakes. You see, my machine makes the mistakes. I punch the right key and the wrong comes up. Thank you again for your nice letter. I really appreciated it. Sincerely, Theo Karle."

On November 5, 1970, Mr. Karle wrote to me again and sent me two photographs, one in operatic costume. Both are reproduced with this article. He said:

"Under separate cover, I am sending a couple of photographs of earlier days which I hope may interest you. At the time when I was very active I had stacks of current pictures, but in the recent days they would have to get a team of mules to get me in front of a camera. However, I know you will understand. I am in excellent health and, strange enough, I feel as well as ever vocally. I guess that is the way all 'old timers' feel."

"We are as busy as we wish to be, teach a little and sing in church each Sunday. The rest of the time we spend at a house we have on the Olympic Peninsula, walking on our beach and gazing, when it is clear, at the mountains from our front window. Our winters are very mild and we spend most of our time outside. There always seems to be plenty of yard work, etc., to keep me occupied. Mrs. K. works with me as she has done these many years we have been married. We were married when we were almost children and I am most grateful. Well, I won't bore you with details, but it has been a great life."

FAMED CONDUCTOR—HENRY HADLEY (1871-1937) conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, directed members of the Philharmonic in accompanying some Gennett records made by Theo Karle.

"Please overlook the mistakes in typing. As I told you in a former note, I am the world's worst. With kindest regards, Theo K."

There, apparently, our correspondence ended, probably through my fault, for I have always more letters on hand than, with my limited strength, I can take care of. But I did intend to write a HOBBIES article "one of these days" about Theo Karle.

At last I have done so. I am grieved to reflect that my genial, distinguished friend did not live to read this tribute to an accomplished artist and a fine man.

THEO KARLE RECORDINGS

(Both sides by Karle unless otherwise noted)

VICTOR RECORDS (1916-17)

- 18021 I Know of Two Bright Eyes.
Reverse: 'Tis the Day.
- 18061 Cavalleria Rusticana—Siciliana.
Reverse: Her Heart.

BRUNSWICK RECORDS

(1921 Catalog)

- 5005 Dear Little Shamrock. Reverse: Where the River Shannon Flows (with male trio.) (Both under the name of John Congdon.)
- 13001 I'll Sing Thee Songs of Araby. Reverse: Little Mother of Mine.
- 13002 Christ in Flanders. Reverse: The Lord is My Light.
- 13006 Macushla. Reverse: Mavis.
- 13007 Bells of St. Mary's. Reverse: Evening Song.
- 13010 My Wild Irish Rose. Reverse: That Tumble Down Shack in Athlone.
- 13011 From the Land of the Sky-Blue Water. Reverse: Venetian Song.
- 13013 Bring Back the Golden Days. Reverse: When You and I Were Young, Maggie.

(Continued on page 118)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 53)

BRUNSWICK (1922 Catalog Additions)

- 35001 Ah! Moon of My Delight. Reverse: When My Ships Come Sailing Home.
13016 Kathleen Mavourneen. Reverse: Killarney.
13018 Come Back to Erin. Reverse: Mother Machree.
13021 I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen (with Crescent Male Trio). Reverse: Lass O' Killeen.
13024 A Dream. Reverse: Until.
13025 Hard Trials. Reverse: Nobody Knows de Trouble I've Seen.
13026 Minstrel Boy. Reverse: When Irish Eyes Are Smiling (with Crescent Male Trio).
13028 Come Where My Love Lies Dreaming (with Criterion Male Trio). Reverse: I Hear a Thrush At Eve.
13029 Love's Garden of Roses. Reverse: Bohemian Girl—Then You'll Remember Me.
13030 Sing! Sing! Birds on the Wing. Reverse: 'Tis an Irish Girl I Love (with male trio).

MUSIC ARTS SINGERS

(1923 catalog addition)
(Marie Tiffany, Elizabeth Lennox, Theo Karle, and Richard Bonelli)

- 13051 Martha—Good Night Quartet. Reverse: The Mikado—Madrigal.
BRUNSWICK (1923 Catalog Additions)
5082 Because. Reverse: The Great Awakening.
5123 In the Moonlight. Reverse: Mother, My Dear.
5127 It Is Only a Tiny Garden. Reverse: Roses in June.
5134 If You Would Love Me. Reverse: Just That One Hour.
13031 I'll Forget You. Reverse: The World is Waiting for the Sunrise.
13033 Lassie O' Mine. Reverse: Little Town in the Old County Down.
13050 Nonever ('Tis Not True). Reverse: Within the Garden of My Heart.
13052 Bonnie Wee Thing. Reverse: Good Night, Little Girl, Good Night.
13054 Oft in the Stilly Night. Reverse: The Snowy Breasted Pearl.
13055 Elijah—If With All Your Hearts. Reverse: Elijah—Then Shall the Righteous Shine Forth.
35002 Requiem Mass in C Minor—Ingesimo. Reverse: Stabat Mater—Cujas Anlmam. (Both in Latin.)

BRUNSWICK (1924 Catalog Additions)

- (NOTE.—This 1924 list consists mostly of previously issued Karle records that had been renumbered, apparently to bring all in the 10-inch size within the $1.25 price range. Some had been $1.00.)
13058 Heaven at the End of the Road. Reverse: A Little Bit of Heaven.
13060 I'll Sing Three Songs of Araby. Reverse: Little Mother of Mine.
13061 Christ in Flanders. Reverse: The Lord Is My Light.
13062 Macushla. Reverse: Mavis.
13063 Bells of St. Mary's. Reverse: Evening Song.
13064 My Wild Irish Rose. Reverse: That Tumble Down Shack In Athlone.
13065 From the Land of the Sky-Blue Water. Reverse: Venetian Song.
13066 Bring Back the Golden Days. Reverse: When You and I Were Young, Maggie.
13067 Kathleen Mavourneen. Reverse: Killarney.
13068 Come Back to Erin. Reverse: Mother Machree.
13069 I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen. Reverse: Lass O' Killeen.
13070 A Dream. Reverse: Until.
13071 Hard Trials. Reverse: Nobody Knows de Trouble I've Seen.
13072 Minstrel Boy. Reverse: When Irish Eyes Are Smiling.
13073 Come Where My Love Lies Dreaming. Reverse: I Hear A Thrush at Eve.

- 13074 Bohemian Girl—Then You'll Remember Me. Reverse: Love's Garden of Roses.
13075 Sing! Sing! Birds on the Wing. Reverse: 'Tis an Irish Girl I Love.
13076 I'll Forget You. Reverse: The World is Waiting for the Sunrise.
13077 Lassie O' Mine. Reverse: Little Town in the Old County Down.
13078 Because. Reverse: The Great Awakening.
13089 If You Would Love Me. Reverse: Just That One Hour.
13095 All Through the Night (with Male Quartet). Reverse: At Dawning.
13096 Fallen Leaf. Reverse: Smile Through Your Tears.
35003 Onaway! Awake, Beloved! Reverse: Spirit Flower.

BRUNSWICK (1927 Catalog Additions)

- 13089 Alice, Where Art Thou? Reverse: O That We Two Were Maying. (Both duets with Marie Tiffany, soprano.)
13099 I Need Thee Every Hour (with Marie Tiffany). Reverse: Where Is My Boy Tonight? (Tiffany and Chorus.)
13100 Kingdom Within Your Eyes. Reverse: Some Time You'll Remember.
13102 Deen in My Heart. Reverse: Somewhere in the World.
GEMNETT (About 1925)
2624 Meistersingers—Prize Song. Reverse: Samson et Dalila—My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice (Nevada Van Der Veer).
2800 Elijah—If With All Your Hearts. Reverse: Hansel et Gretel—Sleep Music (Members of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra).
2901 Sing Not, O Fair Circassian Maid. Reverse: The Mikado—The Sun Whose Rays Are All Ablaze (Inez Barbour).

PICTURE CAPTIONS REVERSED In June Ada Jones Article

Through a mechanical mix-up, cut lines of two photos in the June article, "Ada Jones Sings in Marion, Virginia," were reversed.

The picture on page 38 is identified as showing the singer in her stage costume, but should have said it was a photo taken in 1899.

On page 110 Miss Jones appears in stage attire, but the picture is termed one made in 1899. —Jim Walsh

THE END

HISTORICAL RECORDS

(Continued from page 36)

speaker was enclosed in a cabinet, and it was then that the term "Victrola" came into use.

Barraud's inspiration survived. Added, however, was the slogan, "Will There Be a Victrola in Your Home This Christmas?"

The artist lived out his last years at Hamilton Gardens, St. John's Wood N.W. His diversion, besides billiards, was walking. He was a familiar sight on the road: The head bent forward, massive eyebrows and granite beard, that seemed over-sized for his frail body.

He remained a bachelor, with a long-standing attachment to an invalid, Dorothy Dalziel, who came from a family of engravers. She survived him by several years.

Francis Barraud died on August 29, 1924, aged 68, at the Dalziel house which he had visited daily. The Gramophone Company sent a floral cushion patterned after his master-piece to Hampstead Cemetery, London, where he was buried. In his will Barraud left the gross value of 701 pounds.

What became of Barraud's original work? It bore, under the over-painting of the glistening gramophone, a phantom phonograph and the faint outlines of the old wax cylinder. Brush marks had obliterated almost completely the Edison name.

The original hung in a recess over the fireplace of the oak-paneled room in the head office at Hayes. An alarm system controlled by photo-electric cells protected it. In case of fire it had priority in being saved.

The Gramophone Company honored the site of "Nipper's" grave with a plaque in 1949.

When R.C.A.-Victor set July 1st, 1952 as the inauguration day for releasing long-playing records in the United States, "His Master's Voice," insured at $15,000, was brought from England by J. David Bicknell in a cultural exchange.

Mr. Bicknell described to reporters how a group of Gramophone men paid a pilgrimage to Kingston-on-Thames to adorn the grave of "Nipper" with a new bronze plaque. To their mingled pride and dismay they discovered that a bank had been erected on the site where "Nip" had been interred.

The bank director paled when informed of the desecration. He agreed that the plaque be affixed on the façade of the edifice. And there it remains on display to this day.

LAURA B. COOK Star Rt. Box 14B

Liberty, Tex. 77575

Phone: (713) 336-6893 after 5 p.m.

1. Lady's sm open face 14K Waltham watch w. fleur de lis design on back. Design is outlined w. rose diamonds. $125.
2. Victoria glass novelty, amber fire cut vase-line, $25.
3. Flower pot design p.g. pitcher, $45.
4. Cut glass juice glass. Brilliant period, $25.
5. Old g.f. band bracelet. Engraved, circa early 1900's, $35.
6. Old toy iron stove w. iron utensils, and implements, complete $75.
7. Higbee p.b. footed round bowl. Cane variant patl. Mkd. W. Lee, $35.
8. Big pink mustache cup & saucer, painted flower on side of cup, pr. $35.
9. Brass school bell w. wooden handle $27.50.
10. Old gold top brooch w. 3 perfectly matched blue opals, $65.
11. Very small size Victorian gold ring with small opals, rubies & pearls, $125.
12. Royal Worcester figure of boy. Sgd. HADLEY. One professional mend on collar $125.
13. Child's small iron w. trivet, complete $12.50.
14. Gold stickpin w. intaglio in amethyst, $35.
15. Toy soldiers, prior to World War II: A. rifleman, $7.50; B. Pair stretcher bearers w. stretcher, $15.
16. 35-year old 10K opal ring, oval stone, surrounded by spirals(?) $75. sc

POMAR'S ANTIQUES

10 ml. S. of St. Augustine, Fla. Hwy. A1A.
RED 1, Box 74 St. Augustine, Fla. 32084
Phone: (904) 824-2341

Brown agate snuff bottle, one side rust yellow skin, carved in long life symbols pine tree, deer, crane, circa 1821-1850, $245.
Hain crystal snuff bottle dragons one side gold-threads of reptile, circa 1880-1920, $180.
Vignette Geo. III Birmingham 1817 Joseph Willmore rectangular with bright cut herringbone motif, grill depicting a vase with foliage have others, write.
Dozen fruit spoons Vermeil bowls Alvin's Lilly circa 1900 beautiful cond. Set $98.

Stamp please. sc

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

JOSEPH A. PHILLIPS

PART I

By JIM WALSH

I. Man Without A Following

Many singers achieved successful careers as pioneer recording artists without developing an individual personal following.

In the acoustic era thousands of "fans" would go to their dealers each month and ask for the latest record by, say, Billy Murray, Henry Burr, Ada Jones, Collins and Harlan, Harry Lauder, Alma Gluck, John McCormack or Enrico Caruso. These fans would buy the record, probably without bothering to listen. There was more interest in the singer than the song.

Later, innumerable buyers, mostly romantically inclined young women, would ask for and take "Gene Austin's new one." Or they chose Jack Smith's, Art Gillham's, Bing Crosby's, or Frank Sinatra's. And dance band fanciers wanted almost anything by Paul Whiteman, Ted Lewis, Guy Lombardo, and many others.

I doubt, however, that anybody ever approached the sales counter and said, "Let me have Joseph Phillips' new record, please."

The reason? Well, Joe Phillips was a capable, even an accomplished baritone, with a pleasing voice. But many other equally well-trained singers had voice quality similar to his, and there was nothing sufficiently outstanding about his style to win him record buyers' fanatical devotion.

Besides, listeners who went "hog-wild" about an artist were more likely to choose tenors than the middle-of-the-road baritones.

Nevertheless, most of Phillips' Edison records were good sellers, according to Diamond Disc and Blue Amberol standards, and his Okeh and other needle-cuts did reasonably well. He had a few mannerisms in singing some types of "popular" music that jar upon me, but, even so, I think most hearers would agree that he was a good, if not a great, baritone.

II. Recording Debut

Joseph Phillips had had considerable stage experience and was in his early thirties when he made what appears to have been his first record. It was a single-faced Victor, No. 5806, of a popular ballad, "All That I Ask is Love." It was announced in the January, 1911, Victor supplement. The write-up, accompanied by a small photo of the singer, said:

"This new Selden-Ingraham song is one of the best of the year and bids fair to equal the success of Mr. Ingraham's 'Roses Bring Dreams of You' and 'You are the Ideal of My Dreams.' The number has been selected as a means of introducing a baritone who is new to Victor audiences. Mr. Phillips is likely to create a favorable impression with his agreeable voice, his manly delivery and good diction."

That, we must agree, although favorable, is not a "rave notice." A month later, Phillips' second — and last — Victor record appeared, No. 16702. The A side contained "The Moonlight, the Rose and You," by Frank C. Stanley, who had died a little more than a month earlier, and Henry Burr.

On the B side Phillips was heard in "Afar From Thee, My Love," by Linne, whoever he was. The description was brief:

"... Mr. Phillips presents his second selection, which will deepen the impression already made by his fine rendition of 'All That I Ask is Love.'"

Again, the praise was restrained. That was the last time Joseph Phillips' name appeared in a Victor supplement.

III. Beginning of His Edison Career

The baritone's next bid for the favor of record buyers was more successful. He began in the February, 1912, Edison cylinder record supplement, an association with the great inventor's Company that extended through 1925, with the exception of a puzzling three-year gap from September, 1916, to December, 1919, when nothing by him was issued.

On wax Amberol four-minute record No. 907 Phillips sang, with the assistance of a mixed chorus, "Come

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST
November 8, 1921

From actual photograph

CHAMBERS IN SURROGATE'S COURT
BRONXVILLE, N. Y.
June 2nd 1921

Mr. Thomas A. Edison,
Orange, New Jersey.
Dear Mr. Edison:

I want to tell you how highly impressed I was by the realism which the New Edison showed in the comparison test which was given before the Barville Hall of the American Legion.

The quality, tone, and homogeneity of Miss Clark's recorded voice were the same as the quality, tone and homogeneity of Miss Clark's living voice. With my eyes shut, I could not tell one from the other. The same is also true when Mr. Young played in comparison with a Re-Creation of his own piano-playing, — and when Mr. Phillips sang in comparison with the Re-Creation of his own voice.

Very truly yours,
Simp. Albert Wingate

General Wingate

GENERAL WINGATE commended the New Edison during the Great War. He is Chairman of the Metropolitan Picture Committee of the American Legion. At Judge Wingate, he is now Surrogate of Brooklyn.

The test which General Wingate heard was made May 25th, 1921, in the 2nd Field Artillery Armory, Brooklyn—before Judge Fort St. 127, American Legion, and 1000 people. The photograph shows part of the audience at the moment when Miss Helen Clark and Mr. Joseph Phillips were singing a duet in comparison with the Re-Creation of their duet by the New Edison.

The NEW EDISON

DIRECT COMPARISON. A November, 1921, Saturday Evening Post advertisement showing HELEN CLARK and JOSEPH PHILLIPS giving a New Edison tone test.

"FIRST TIME OFFERED!"
"SOHMER" PIANO.

Rosewood square grand. Excellent condition, needs tuning. Dated 1836. $7,200.00. Delivery available anywhere in the continental U.S.A.

WINIFRED WINCH
Route #3 Box 38
Delta, Ohio 43315

op

The Sale of a Major Collection

The estate of the late Prospect Mastrangelo, (M. J. Prospect), announces the sale of the Prospect collection. This will be implemented through the issuance of a series of periodic auction lists. In this way the records can be offered to the greatest number of collectors and provide the fairest opportunity for purchase internationally.

The collection consists of over 30,000 discs and cylinders. Among these number international rarities; records from before the turn of the century and into the electrical era. Included are major artists on such labels as Berliner, G & T, Zonophone, Fonotipia, Odeon, Pathe, etc. and also important discs in the categories of Personality, Instrumental, Music Hall and Jazz.

All collectors interested in receiving lists are invited to send their names and addresses to the following:

PERRY MASTRANGELO
c/o Prospect 467 Second Avenue
New York, N.Y. 10016

oml

to the Ball" from "The Quaker Girl." The supplement said:

"Mr. Phillips, a baritone who makes his debut on Edison records this month, spent much time to perfect himself in the rendition of this song as it is given in the show, and a superior record is the natural result. . . ."

A brief biographical sketch was printed in the back of the supplement:

"Mr. Phillips is a native of Buffalo, N.Y., and studied singing under Thomas Karl, Gustarvars Hall, Francis Drake and Pasquale (sic) Amato of the Metropolitan Opera House.

"At various times in the past few years he has appeared with De Wolf Hopper in 'Happyland,' with James T. Powers in 'Havana,' and at one time sang 'In the Shade of the Palm.' in Florodora, where he took the part of Lord Abercoed. At present he is soloist in St. Michael's Episcopal Church, New York. His voice is of true tone and robust quality, and adapts itself admirably well to the making of records."

The statement that Phillips studied singing with Pasquale Amato perplexes me, for, as we shall see, Amato was the younger man of the two. Reference books say the great Italian baritone made his Metropolitan Opera debut November 20, 1908, when he was 30, and he presumably never before had been in this country.

Phillips was, by the end of 1908, a supposedly mature singer of 32. It seems rather unusual that Amato,

Phillips

BEGINNING OF RECORDING CAREER.

This photo of JOSEPH PHILLIPS, in his early thirties, has been enlarged from a small photo in the Victor record supplement for January, 1911.

who was enjoying a successful career at the Metropolitan, would have taken time to give instruction to a lesser known artist in a different sphere of music. There appears no doubt, however, that Phillips, at some time prior to 1912, did receive lessons from him.

As to Phillips' singing in "Florodora," that long-lived musical comedy first was produced in this country in 1900. I do not imagine Phillips was a member of the original cast, but he probably sang the baritone role in one of the touring companies that presented the Leslie Stuart extravaganza in the early 1900's.

Also, in the February, 1912, supplement, on record No. 901, Phillips sang a number that I dislike and can't bear to play, "The Chase." This is a hunting song whose narrator expresses bloodthirsty pleasure at the prospect of slaying a noble stag and iterates and reiterates, "He shall die!" One playing of that song was enough for my animal-loving self.

There was then a jump to May, 1912, when, on cylinder 988, Phillips sang the well-remembered "Mary Was My Mother's Name," and the charming rural ballad, "When I Was Twenty-One and You Were Sweet 16." In this he had the assistance of Elizabeth Spencer, John Bieling, Billy Murray, Steve Porter, and William F. Hooley.

The record was so successful it was issued in July in two-minute form as a solo without the chorus. One oddity about "When I Was 21" is that as long as the Victor version by Harry Macdonough and the American Quartet stayed in the catalog, the name of the composer was given as Harry

(Continued on page 126)

Limited Edition

EDISON DIAMOND DISCS

Volume 1: 50,001-52,651

A numerical listing of every Edison Diamond Disc issued in 50,000's series from 1912-1929—130 pages of useful information, including 5200 titles, the performing artists, composers, and lyricists .....$12.95 ppd.

BONA FIDE PUBLISHING CO.

406 Adelaide Dr.

Santa Monica, Cal. 90402

dc

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Re feathered
Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

vfo

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

Von Tilzer. The melody however, was really the work of Egbert Van Alstyne. Edison credited it to the right man.

IV. Blue Amberols

Phillips' records continued to appear after Edison introduced the indestructible Blue Amberol cylinder in November, 1912. His first of the new "unbreakable" type was 1575, "Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet," which, in the three or four years since it was published, had become a popular song classic.

Here we have another puzzle. There was already an Amberol of the song by the tenor, Frederic H. Potter, and male chorus. Why was it not reissued on the Blue Amberol instead of having a new version made by Phillips and a "chorus?" The chorus consisted of a woman's voice, presumably Helen Clark's.

This was probably Phillips' best selling cylinder. The Edison Phonograph Monthly for July, 1915, had an interesting story of the "watery grave" experience of one copy:

"Theodore O'Hara, a Nova Scotia lobster-trapper, sends us the following, through Babson Bros., of Winnipeg, Canada:

"I wish to tell you about the wonderful toughness of the Edison Blue Amberol record, and the experience I have had with one. I am a lighthouse keeper and do some lobster fishing. About the 15th of November last a ship sank three miles from (the) lighthouse station. This ship had an Edison phonograph aboard, and on the 20th of April, after a heavy storm, while hauling my lobster traps, I was surprised to find a Blue Amberol record in one of my traps. It had been in the water five months, beating and rolling over the rocky bottom of the Atlantic during the winter storms.

"I brought it home and put it on the Edison cylinder machine, and was surprised to hear it bring out distinctly the words of 'Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet.'

"I consider this wonderful. I could not help telling you about it. Of course, it is scratched up a lot, but one can understand the words and music perfectly."

Probably Phillips never made a record that had a more unusual experience than this sea-tossed cylinder.

Early in 1920 Edison issued a Diamond Disc, No. 50606, of "Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet," sung as a duet by Phillips and the late Helen Clark and combined with "Daisies Won't Tell," by the same artists. Both sides had been recorded in 1915.

My question is: Why hold two numbers of permanent, steady appeal for five years before placing them on sale? But such actions were characteristic of Edison's unique selling tactics. This most likely was Phillips' best selling Edison disc.

There is no need of reviewing the baritone's Blue Amberol records in detail. They were typical, popular song solos adapted to his voice.

Some, however, such as "Gray Bon-

Helen Clark

Joseph Phillips

DUET TEAM. These pictures of HELEN CLARK and JOSEPH PHILLIPS are reproduced from the Edison record supplement of June, 1925, the last in which PHILLIPS' name appeared. He was then 48.

net," "Soldiers of the King," "Tip Top Tipperary Mary" (in which Phillips is completely overshadowed by Billy Murray in the vocal choruses), "Wake Up, America!" "There's a Quaker Down in Quaker Town," and "Sweet Cider Time, When You Were Mine," were better than ordinary sellers.

In 1914 Phillips' first duets with Miss Clark appeared—at least the first with credit to both artists. They continued to work together, both on records and on the concert stage, for the next 11 years. They were among the most popular of Edison "tone test" performers.

Miss Clark wrote me a few years before her death that she had known Joe Phillips a long time. She said they first met when she was a little girl and he was a grown man—at a guess, when she was about 12 and he was around 24 or 25.

The contralto added that there was an amusing story connected with their initial meeting which she would like to tell me if I should visit New York and come to see her. Alas, that meeting never took place!

I had asked her if she knew anything of Joe's latter-day whereabouts. She replied she hadn't the least idea whether he was still alive or where he was. I since have found he had been dead a few years when she wrote.

One of the oddities of the Diamond Disc catalog is that it lists No. 50365, "Sweet Cider Time," as a solo by Phillips, both alphabetically and under his name. Helen Clark's name does not appear on the record label, either, notwithstanding, she sings in the refrains, and if you look it up in the catalog under "Clark, Helen," you will find it described as a duet by her and Phillips!

The record was discontinued in 1924. After that year it no longer occupies its alphabetical place nor is it found under Phillips' name, but the 1925 catalog still carries it under the name of Helen Clark.

One of Phillips' Blue Amberol solos, 23395, "Nothing at All," was made in 1915, primarily for sale in the British Isles.

A couple of interesting statements were made in 1922 cylinder supplements. In July, Blue Amberol No. 4551, "Goodbye, Dear Old Bachelor Days," was issued. This had been a rather popular song when Phillips and a chorus recorded it in 1916, but its vogue had faded when the record finally was made available. Anyway, the supplement remarked:

"We haven't had many solo numbers by Joseph Phillips, strange to say, for he is a remarkable (sic) good baritone. Usually he is heard in combination with Helen Clark in those splendid duets which have endeared both artists to all Edison owners. This, however, will be equally acceptable, we predict."

In December, Phillips' offering was "That Old-Fashioned Mother of Mine," a mawkishly sentimental ballad sung to Robert Gayder's piano accompaniment and dubbed from a Diamond Disc. The supplement said:

"This is the first time that popular Joseph Phillips has been heard in this type of song. He is known primarily for his ability to put over popular and musical comedy songs. Your opinion of Phillips' artistry will be enhanced when you hear him in this favorite concert song."

V. Diamond Discs

To a considerable extent, the titles of Joe Phillips' Edison Diamond Discs and Blue Amberols overlapped. Some of the discs, however, were not issued on cylinders, and a number of the cylinders were not available on discs.

All Phillips' cylinders, made after the disastrous Edison factory fire of December, 1914, of course, were copied from discs, because Edison gave up separate cylinder recording after the holocaust.

The Buffalo baritone's first Edison disc was issued late in 1914. It combined the popular British marching song, "Soldiers of the King," with the reigning hit of that year, "It's a Long, Long Way to Tipperary," sung by another baritone, Albert Farrington, an Englishman. A second Phillips song with a war-time flavor, "Tip-Top Tipperary Mary," was issued in the spring of 1915.

That year also brought one of his most popular records, "My Lady of the Telephone," in which he had the assistance of an all-star chorus of Helen Clark, John Young, Harvey Hindermeyer, Steve Porter and Donald Chalmers. The popularity of the record, however, probably was chiefly due to the tuneful number on its other side, "Goodbye, Girls, I'm Through," sung by Owen J. McCormack and a chorus.

The McCormack side was used until 1921, when the supply of moulds became exhausted, and Phillips was called on to remake it. His is probably the best recorded version of the song. It is certainly far better than the dull, heavy-sounding Victor by "Raymond Dixon" (Lambert Murphy). This version just goes to show that operatic and concert singers seldom know how to sing the lighter types of popular music.

With Miss Clark, Phillips recorded one of the first songs protesting World War I, "Don't Take My Darling Boy Away." In their earlier period, however, as a duet team, he and she were used largely to sing hit tunes from current musical comedies. One of these, "Teenie, Eenie, Weenie," was a number they liked to use in their tone tests. I have read a description somewhere of how Phillips pantomimed a kiss to his contralto partner as they sang it on the stage.

The pair essayed a good many "conversational duets" of the types in which Ada Jones and Billy Murray were unequalled. They never were able to master the down-to-earth, colloquial touch achieved by Ada and Billy, who had never had the serious musical training of Clark and Phillips, but knew exactly how to sound like an ordinary middle class, or sometimes, "tough" couple.

Helen and Joe usually were stilted and unnatural in this sort of song. Billy Murray recalled to me that he never could tone down Miss Clark's tendency to be over-dramatic in singing popular music. He said that the lady, whom he called "Clarkie," was extremely tense while recording and that as they sang he would pat her back in an effort to calm her down. "But she was always too emotional for my sort of song. Her opera training got in the way," Billy said.

He told me, too, that he had trouble with Gladys Rice's tendency to be too dramatic, but she improved considerably, from his point of view, as they became more accustomed to working together. Ada Jones and Aileen Stanley, on the other hand, always could sound colloquial and of the earth, earthy.

One charming Clark and Phillips duet in which they do sound considerably like ordinary people and even laugh naturally is "A Little Love, A Little Kiss, Would Go A Long, Long Way." This is not the familiar ballad the refrain of which begins "just a little love, a little kiss," but a different song only Edison seems to have recorded.

It begins with a flirtation between the singers. In the second verse they have been married for many years, and Phillips calls the roll of their children: "Willie, John and Ray, Mabel, Grace and May." Then he adds: "You can blame them all on me!" at which they laugh.

Their colloquial work is very good, too, in "How Sorry You'll Be," one of their tone test numbers. Mrs. Charles M. Loftis, Sr., of South Boston, Va., told me of hearing them sing this song in comparison with their Edison recording, and said: "They were just alike. You couldn't tell any difference."

A frequently affected, stilted sound was, I think, Phillips' greatest shortcoming as a popular recording artist. His spoken Edison record on which he tells the story of Little Red Riding Hood for children, is almost unbearably, unpleasantly artificial and mannered. He seems to be ill at ease and "talking down" to the youngsters all the way through like a "bachelor uncle."

Phillips had an excellent voice and sound musical training. It was hard for him, however, to strike the right style in singing serio-comic popular music.

I already have mentioned a period of three years during which Phillips did no Edison recordings, and I find his absence puzzling. For a time I thought perhaps he was in military service, but he was 41 when the first World War began, so that seemed unlikely.

He had not given up recording for he did considerable work during 1917 under his own name and the assumed name of "Justice Lewis" for Pathe. He also was singing for Rex.

When the Rex Company in late 1917 or early 1918 went out of business and his old friend, Fred Hager, changed from it to become recording manager for the new General Phonograph Company, which made Okeh records, Phillips also began singing for Okeh.

Perhaps he signed an exclusive Okeh contract that did not expire until late in 1919, and then he returned to Edison. But that is only speculation.

Phillips' return to Edison appears to have been with an understanding that he and Miss Clark would tour the country giving highly paid comparisons of their voices with the New Edison. It, as Edison advertising emphasized, was "the only phonograph able to sustain the test of direct comparison with the living artist."

All others gave what Edison called "only approximate reproductions—mere mechanical mimicry." Beginning toward the end of 1919 or early in 1920, they made frequent personal appearances, singing with the Official Laboratory Model Edison.

I do not mean to review Phillips'

Edison discs in minute detail, but, looking down the list, I observe some interesting things. One is record No. 51000, a recreation of which probably no collector owns a copy.

This Diamond Disc never appeared in a catalog. It was scheduled for sale and assigned a number, but, like several others, was never issued—possibly because of flaws detected at the last minute. One side was "I Know Why," by Clark and Phillips; and the other, "Just Like the Rose You Gave," by Elizabeth Spencer and Emory B. Randolph.

Both probably were recorded several years before the decision to issue them was made, then withdrawn, in 1922. Randolph had done no singing for Edison since 1917.

Perhaps it would be interesting to devote a few lines to other Edison Diamond Discs that were given numbers but which no one ever had a chance to buy. They were: 51025, "Beautiful May," and "Namyslowski's Dance," by the Warsaw Polish Orchestra; 51185, "Mighty Lak' a Rose," and "Last Rose of Summer," piano solos by Ray Perkins.

The Discs also included 51675, "Show Me the Way to Go Home," "Who?" and "D'ye Love Me?" also by Perkins; 51932, "A Tree in the Park," and "Sweeter Than You," Ray Nichols' Four Towers Orchestra; 52265, "Flower Song" from "Carmen," and "On With the Play," from "Pagliacci," Charles Hart, tenor; and 52360, Dance of the Hours—Gioconda, parts 1 and 2, American Concert Orchestra.

In 1924 Edison introduced a novel type of record—one on which a dance orchestra first played a number in fox trot or waltz time, and a singer, or singers, followed by a rendering of the same thing, also in dance tempo. Phillips, as a soloist, took part in a number of these. In others he was joined by Miss Clark.

They sing a vocal refrain in No. 51323, "Cuddle Me Up," but are not given label credit. In No. 51499, "My Mother's Humming Lullaby," they do not sing but hum harmoniously and are given credit. The label says, "humming by Helen Clark and Joseph Phillips." This is the only record I can recall of any brand that gives artists label credit for humming.

The pair's last record together, and Phillips' final appearance in the Edison catalog, was 51540, "Moonlight and Roses," issued in June, 1925, as a fox trot by Polla's Clover Gardens Orchestra, followed by a Clark-Phillips duet. By this time the Edison record business had declined so drastically that many formerly favorite artists were being let go, and Phillips was one of them.

Besides making the Diamond Discs I have mentioned, Phillips also sang in the chorus of many records and took part in ensemble recordings by the Metropolitan Mixed Chorus and the New York Light Opera Company. He sang "Just as the Sun Went Down" in "Songs of Other Days," No. 80344.

An interesting record in which the

FRED SENDRA
117 Broadway Trumbull, Conn. 06611
Phone: (203) 268-9605

Clear gl. sulphide 2" dia. marble w/bear, $28.
Hall's Excelsior mech. bank, head missing from monkey, $38.
Purple carn. bowl scarce wishbone patt. Northwood, $52.
Rare blown spangled glass hat, varied colors,
old & mint, $36.
Frosted pastel green N carn. vase 10" h. $21.
Early Davenport 9½x12" platter pheasant & flower border decor. $24.
Old mech. windup tole goose, orig. paint, perfect. $32.
Copper lustre pitcher, 3½" h., blue band with raised girl & cat decor on 2 sides, $44.
Green Mary Gregory creamer, girl reaching for butterfly in white enamel decor. $48.
Mary Gregory style green glass pitcher with applied clear handle 7" h., winter scene with beautiful standing stag in white enam. decor.
$65.00.
Charging tusked bronze elephant on pedestal 6½" l., 5¼" h., beautiful patina not sgd.,
can be used as book ends, pr. $75.
Polaroid on request.
Brilliant Period cut glass bowl, 8" dia., 4" h.
Strawberry hobstars w. beaut. vesicas cut,
$52.00.
Frosted lion (Head) patt. butter dish, $34.
Gothic patt. creamer, $48.
Daisy & Button patt. 8x11" tray in blue, $30.
Vict. hi-boot bouquet holder (Lee's Victorian plate 193) $21.

All requests from collectors will be promptly answered. Please include for postage & ins.
oml

THE GLASS ELEPHANT
5518 N. Drexel
Indianapolis, Ind. 46220
Ph. 255-8020 After 6 p.m.

1. Sunderland lustre, splotchy pink,
Mint. c/s $45; Plate $35. Set $75.
2. Haviland 12½" plate, h.p., artist sgd.
Red poppies, much gold. Mint, $40.
9" plate, $20. 7½" plate $15. c/s, rim chip $12. Set $35.
3. Cambridge mld. Peachblow ice bucket. Bennett pg. 52. Mint. $24.
4. Wedgwood only, 9" pl., yellow basket-weave edge, green fruit. 3 small hunt scenes. Two tiny hairlines on back do not go thru. Faint scratches. $38.
5. Rookwood pitcher, 1900, sgd. F. Rothenbush. Brown to orange, gr. leaves.
6". Sl. repair so only $50.
6. Glass elephant bank, 7½" t. $7.50;
Elephant list, 25c.

Post. & Ins. extra. Overage promptly ref. S.A. stamped envelope. op baritone took part was "Naughty Marietta Airs," recorded by the New York Light Opera Company on February 14, 1924. Phillips was one of the soloists on side one. The artists seem to have been paid according to the length of the number they sang.

Billy Jones received $50; Gladys Rice,
$40; Phillips, Amy Ellerman and Esther Nelson, $30 each; and the four members of the Criterion Quartet—
John Young, Frank Mellor, George W.
Reardon, and Donald Chalmers, $25
each.

Ernest Hare sang on side two, but his payment was not recorded. Elizabeth Spencer and Charles Hart got $30 each; Helen Clark, $25; Ellerman and Nelson, $20; and the Quartet,
$25 each.

TO BE CONTINUED)

ANTIQUE ANTIQUES
Joseph Szabat

228 Plummer
Oil City, Pa. 16301
1-814-646-6351

1. Leather covered, Hepplewhite Work Table,
$1,200.00.
  2. Gorgeous, 10", blue Tiffany Bowl, $875.
  3. Large Oil Painting by George Hetzel. Canvas 30x50" plus massive frame, $1,500.
  4. Large, oval Portrait in oil of John Kirkpatrick. Early Pittsburgh judge, $750.
  5. Very rare, Intarsia Vase. Cintra top.
Phoenix birds, $4500.
  6. Barber Bottle - End of Day. Old, mint,
$98.50.
  7. Deldare Cup & Saucer - "Ye Olden Times," $155.00.
  8. Rose Bowl - End of Day, with flower grill, $125.
  9. Lithophane Stein. Successful duck hunt,
$135.00.
  10. Dixon & Sons. "Sheffield." Small Serving Stein about 1 Lt., has dent. Old, desirable, $135.
  11. Beautiful, old, cobalt Bell, 10" t., $135.
  12. Tiffany, never-wind, Clock, $95.
  13. Massive, 32nd degree, hinged, gold Fob.
A beauty, $165.
  14. Man's, gold & platinum Chain, matching fob with diamond, $160.
- Stamp, postage, Insurance extra.
Pennsylvania residents add tax.

WANTED: E. Howard Watches, movements.
Also Howard Clocks, any style or cond., parts.
op

FARMSTEAD ANTIQUES
Marian K. Peduzzi
Kinderhook, N.Y. 12106
Phone: (518) 684-6266

CHOICE OLD GLASS
BANDED DIAMOND POINT Creamer (LV 49), $11.
BULLSEYE & SPEARHEAD, cov'd, Mustard on attached plate (LV 47, Matz 208), $9.
8 hvy., ringing, 3½" FLINT HONEY DISHES,
Sunburst base, Sandwich or Hairpin, loop rim. Few minute flakes, $7 ea., or $50 takes all.
4. CAMPHOR Juice Glasses, Dec. all around with rooster in tall grass, molded in relief, Set, $15.
Pr., heavy, crystal ovoid ATOMIZERS, cut in diag. miters. 4½" h., 2x3" base tapering
1" round neck. Metal top mld. Brumerie Marcel Franck, Made in France, plus Pat. numbers. Ea., $10.
Azure-blue SATIN VASE (LV 231, #5), 10" h. stemmed with cut petal effect at top, gilt bands, $50. Another matching with gilt somewhat worn, so, $45.
COLLECTIBLES OF INTEREST
ADVERTISING CARDS, 12 ass't. good ones from the 90's, $10.
2 PORCELAIN PIPES, brought from Germany in WW2, 8" l. Pewter lids, HP deer on bowls. Ea., $8.
IRON DOORSTOPS - 6" Flower Basket, $6;
8½" Cornucopias with fruit, $12.
Primitive, 2½x16" WOODEN COOKIE MOLD.
Hand-carved with 3 bears (I think), $14.
HAND-WOVEN COVERLET, 76 x 84". All white, slight wear on fringes. Sgd. 1811
MF, $45.
MAJOLICA Teapot, 6" h. Bamboo with raised green bowknot & bunches of leaves around middle, blue spatter on top, $23.
SASE, postage & insurance extra, please. oe

CEIL NASH

255-18 57th Ave. Little Neck, N.Y. 11362

- Phone (212) 224-6135 after 6 p.m.
1. ROYAL DOULTON Gibson Girl Plates a.
Some Think she has remained in Retirement too long, etc., $45; b. And Winning
New Friends $45.00
  2. ATTENTION MONK COLLECTORS!
a. TOBACCO Jar, Jovial monk w. 1 front tooth missing, incised #8052 at bottom $40;
b. ROYAL Doulton 10" plate sgd. "Noke".
Tomorrow will be Friday" shows Monk fishing ..... $30.00
  3. IRISH BELLEEK black mark Cup & Sauc.,
Neptune patt. dainty green shell footed cup
..... $32.50
  4. DECANTER, Harvard Cut (clear buttons)
7½" h., very sharply cut, closely rayed bottom-stopper completely harvard cut, applied thumbrest handle, truly beaut. $27.50
  5. STERLING SILVER Match Safe, beautifully hand chased OWL sitting on branch of tree, smoking pipe & reading book $35.
  6. PR. EGG CUPS, Commemorative, 2¾" h.,
one King George V, 1 Queen Mary Pr. $25.
  7. BELL-WEDGWOOD 4½" h., light blue, decor. w. white cherubs in many poses,
Mkd. Wedgwood England ..... $30.00
  8. CALENDAR PLATES:
a. 1915, 7½" w., map of Panama Canal encircled by months of year & American Flag $15; b. 1910, 8" months in form of book, surrounded by ivy leaves, gold border
..... $12.50

All items mint condition. Postage & Insur.
extra.

ELVIRA RICKMERS

309 Academy Ave. Wentzville, Mo. 63385
Phone: (314) 327-4275

Postage, & Ins. Extra. SASE for reply, please.

1. ROSE TAPESTRY (bm. RB). 3 - color roses, 10½" dia. Bowl, $350.
2. DELDARE Cup & Saucer, "Fallowfield
Hunt," artist sgd. (no-harm chip), $140.
3. SMITH BROS. Muffineer (Rampant Lion Mk.). Pansies on cream-colored, narrow ribbed bkgd. Original top, $297.50.
4. Mkd. OTT & BREWER, Helmet Creamer, 3¼" h. Dainty florals, gold handles & scrolling, $137.50.
5. SATSUMA Wisteria pattern Vase, 6¼" h.
Excellent mtd., $87.50.
6. 10" h., PICKARD (mtd.) Vase, RC Bavaria blank. Many colored flowers on brown bkgd. Artist H. Reury, $120.
7. Parian Ware, unglazed, SHAKESPEARE
Statue, 6" h., 2¼" dia. base, $22.50.
8. HEISEY, dark amber, Victoria or Cube
Block (mtd.) Goblet, $22.50. oc

Savings on Collectors' Books Including
THE GLASS GAFFERS OF NEW JERSEY
by Adeline Pepper

This important new book gives a complete history of glassmaking in New Jersey from 1739 to the present. The variety of collectible wares discussed ranges from early flasks to the famous Millville rose paper-weight. Anyone interested in glass will be fascinated by the thoroughness of the text which sheds much new light on the industry everywhere by its exhaustive treatment of glassmaking in New Jersey.

Over 200 illustrations; 19 pages in color; 332 pages

Published at $17.50 — Now available for $14.87 — A 15% discount

(All orders postpaid. Check or money order with order.
Pennsylvania residents: add 6% sales tax.)

Satisfaction guaranteed or full purchase price refunded.

SPECIALISTS IN BOOKS ON ART AND ANTIQUES

Radnor Book Company Box 2365, Phila., Pa. 19103

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

JOSEPH A. PHILLIPS

PART II

By JIM WALSH

VI. Other Records

Last month I discussed Joseph Phillips' Victor and Edison records. His work for other companies may be disposed of more briefly.

I lack Rex catalogs, but imagine he made more Rex records than the one I have listed. I learned of it from David Kemp of Shinglehouse, Pa. When Rex "folded," Phillips began recording for Okeh. Sometimes he used his own name, and sometimes he called himself Franklyn Kent.

I have one of his Okeh records, with the Kent name, issued under the Rishell label. He was one of four recording artists I can think of who used the first name of Franklyn.

The others were Franklyn Wallace, a tenor who made Edison cylinders that were issued from June, 1902, to February, 1904, and who was a music publisher in Newark, N.J.; Franklyn Baur, another tenor, of the 1920's, and Franklyn Ferris, a pipe organ player of the same period.

You will observe that during the time he was making Pathe records, most of them as "Justice Lewis," Phillips did not sing duets with Miss Clark. She had become an exclusive Edison artist in 1914 and did not resume free-lancing until 1918.

Phillips' Okeh records in 1918-19 were the hill-and-dale type played with a steel needle. In 1920, however, the Company began issuing the better selling, but technically inferior, lateral cuts. About half of these were duets with Miss Clark. In turning through old Okeh catalogs in search of Phillips records, I was surprised to find the number of other artists with whom he sang.

One was an obscure tenor, Carroll Shannon, probably was some well-known singer in disguise; another, Marion Evelyn Cox, contralto, was best known for her Edison's; and another artist was the mysterious Virginia Burt, who sounds like a soprano on some records and a contralto on others.

I suspect this Miss Burt that sang with Phillips was Helen Clark, who also used the name of Ruth Lenox. On the other hand, Elliott Shaw, who did a duet or two with Virginia Burt, says he has a vague recollection of her being a fat woman, who was married to a Hawaiian guitar player.

That certainly wouldn't be Helen Clark. The Burt name may have been used for more than one singer.

And, just as Phillips recorded "Little Red Riding Hood" for Edison, he also made a couple of children's records which I haven't heard, for Okeh.

VII. Later Years

After his last Edison record was issued, Joseph Phillips appeared to drop completely from sight, and other artists whom I asked had no idea what had become of him. I remember Billy Murray, in turning through a book of Edison artists' portraits, came to one of Phillips (which is shown with this article thanks to Quentin Riggs' marvelous copying camera), and said: "Here's a fellow I haven't seen in a long time—Joe Phillips!" Last month I quoted Helen Clark (Mrs. Evan Cameron). She said she didn't have the least idea where he was or whether he still was living.

For many years I wondered about Phillips and wished I could find out enough about him to write an article, but it seemed hopeless. One thing I did discover when I obtained a copy of Brian Rust's book of Victor master recordings for the years 1925 through 1936 was that the baritone may have taken part in two unissued records made in Camden, N.J., February 2, 1927.

Henry Burr, who was always full of recording ideas, had formed an eight-

PIONEER TENOR—FRANKLYN WALLACE who made Edison cylinders from 1902 to 1904. I consider him one of at least four recording artists who used the first name of Franklyn. Joseph Phillips was called Franklyn Kent on Okeh records.

man singing group, the Henry Burr Octet, which made four "takes" of "Swing Along" and "Lass O' Mine," but apparently did not turn out an acceptable one. The eight men were the members of the Peerless Quartet, Burr, Carl Mathieu, Stanley Baughman, James Stanley, and four others listed as J. E. Phillips, T. C. Muir, W. C. Pitts, and George H. Miller.

Joseph Phillips' middle initial, as we know, was A., but Victor easily could have put down E. in its place. If that Octet member really was the Buffalo baritone, this was probably his first visit to a Victor studio since he began recording in 1910, and, as far as I know, his last to any recording place. It also would have been the only time he took part in electrical recording.

A few months ago it occurred to me that Joe Phillips very well might have decided to return to his "home town" of Buffalo at the end of his recording career, there, perhaps, to sing in church and give voice instruction.

Acting on this "hunch" I wrote to the Buffalo—Erie County Public Library, and received two extremely nice letters from Miss Norma Jean Lamb, librarian in charge of the Music Department. She had had a search made of the files of the Buffalo Courier-Express, and found two articles concerning him, of which she sent me copies. I had been correct in my belief that Phillips had returned to Buffalo.

ESTABLISHED ARTIST—This picture of JOSEPH PHILLIPS is reproduced from a 1920 book of photographs of Edison performers.

One of the articles was an interesting "feature story" interview with Phillips, written by Isabelle W. Evans and published in the Courier-Express for August 11, 1940. This story revealed that the singer had had a more interesting and colorful career than I had thought:

"One of the most enjoyable and interesting personalities in the music world of Buffalo is that of the well known baritone, Joseph Phillips. Mr. Phillips appears frequently in recital and his art is so well known that many take the merit of his career for granted without knowing of the many fascinating experiences he has enjoyed.

"While still a very young man, Joseph Phillips was heard by the great Pasquale Amato at a musicale in New York. Amato was so impressed by the beauty of the young man's voice that he immediately accepted him as a pupil under the most flattering circumstances. After comprehensive study with Mr. Amato, the young vocalist continued his work in Berlin and Paris with Frank King Clark.

"After having spent several seasons in light opera in New York, Mr. Phillips made one of the most interesting contacts of his career—he was heard and immediately engaged as an artist of the Edison Phonograph Company by no less person than the famous Thomas A. Edison, pioneer in the art of sound recording.

"I never ceased to enjoy the fascination of touring the country and singing to unspoiled but discriminating audiences who were interested in the best in music and who were anxious to judge the merit of the early recordings," Mr. Phillips said. "It was great fun to begin a beautiful number and when the lights were darkened leave the platform and hear the amazed exclamations of the listeners when the brightened lights disclosed a recording providing the conclusion to the number. Of course that was the novelty angle of the program—the audience insisted that at least half of the program should be conducted as formal concerts.

"Mr. Phillips, now a member of the quartet of the Richmond Avenue Methodist Church of Buffalo, formerly was soloist at St. Michael's Episcopal Church in New York.

"Another experience the artist enjoyed several years ago took place in Eastbourne, England. Mr. Phillips happened to be at the Cavendish Hotel, where the royal family of Greece was also stopping. Upon hearing Mr. Phillips rehearsing the princess sent an urgent invitation, asking him to sing for her and the crown prince. After the program, the princess thanked him charmingly with enthusiastic praise for the beauty of his voice.

"Buffalo may well be proud of listing among her musicians a vocalist of the attainments of Joseph Phillips."

When this article appeared, Joe Phillips was 63, so he had continued singing until a pretty advanced age. I observe he had nothing to say of his recording work except that for Edison.

The "dark scene" he described was one in which the artist would begin singing, the lights suddenly were turned off, and the singer left the stage. The new Edison would carry on the music and the audience never detected, until the lights were restored, that it had been listening to a phonograph rather than to the artist himself.

VIII. And, Finally

Death came to Joseph Phillips at his home in Buffalo, July 25, 1958. It found him single—apparently he had never married—and living alone. On the following day the Courier-Express published an article headed: "J. A. Phillips, Singer, Found Dead in Home." It said:

"Joseph A. Phillips, 81, renowned baritone and musical comedy star, was found dead yesterday afternoon in his home, 110 College St.

"His body was discovered by friends who became concerned when they were unable to contact him by phone. He lived alone.

"Mr. Phillips, a native of Buffalo, was a leading man in a number of New York musicals for nearly 30 years.

"His appearances included the lead in 'Two Little Brides,' 'Happyland,' and 'Wang.' In the last two he starred with famed comedian DeWolf Hopper.

Made European Tours

"He made a number of concert tours to Europe and performed before the King and Queen of Greece, who gave him a pair of black pearls.

"He studied in England under King Clark and in New York under Metropolitan Opera star Pasquale Amato.

"He was 20 when he left Buffalo for New York and was immediately signed by Jake and Lee Shubert who booked him for touring musicals.

"Many of the tours brought him back to Buffalo and the old Tack Theater which was owned by the Shuberts.

Gave Vocal Lessons

"He left New York and the stage 32 years ago and returned to Buffalo to give private singing lessons which he continued until two weeks before his death.

(Continued on page 126)

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Re feathered
Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

tfo

Limited Edition EDISON DIAMOND DISCS Volume 1: 50,001-52,651

A numerical listing of every Edison Diamond Disc issued in 50,000's series from 1912-1929—130 pages of useful information, including 5200 titles, the performing artists, composers, and lyricists .....$12.95 ppd.

BONA FIDE PUBLISHING CO.

406 Adelaide Dr.

Santa Monica, Cal. 90402

dc

EDISON DIAMOND DISCS—COLLECTOR'S LIST

ANSELM (83004) Cielo e mar	$10.00
ANSELM (83008) Vesti la giubba (Pagliacci)	$10.00
ANSELM (83015) Ah! non credevi tu (Mignon)	$10.00
ANSELM (83018) Tu che a Dio spiegasti l' ali (Lucia)	$10.00
DE CISNEROS (82176) Mon couers, ouvre a ta voix—T. Parvis	$ 5.00
DORRIAN (80195) Mi par d'Udire ancora/Notte sul Mare	$ 7.50
FERRARI-FONTANA (82555) Inno di Garibaldi/P. V. Lazzari	$10.00
FERRARI-FONTANA (83047) E Lucevan le stelle (Tosca)	$10.00
GUANERI (80724) Di Provenza il mar/Torn' a Surriento	$ 7.50
HAMLIN (80701) Love's Sorrow/Salley in Our Alley	$ 5.00
HEMPPEL (82229) Casta diva/Non mi dir	$ 7.50
MATZENAUER (83082) Les triangles des sistres tintaient/Cu jus animan (Jacques Urlus)	$ 7.50
MUZIO (82216) Mia picciarella/In mezzo al mare (Laurenti)	$ 6.00
MUZIO (82223) D' amor sull' ali rosee/Tacea la notte	$ 7.50
MUZIO (82224) La mamma morta/Sei forse l' angelo fedele?	$ 7.50
MUZIO (82324) Je dis, que rien ne m' epouvants/Elle a fui, la tourterelle!	$ 6.00
OLITZKA (80726) Faites-Lui mex aveux/Voce di donna	$15.00
TEYTE (82163) Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms/ My Ain Folk	$10.00
ZENATELLO (82201) D'! tu se fedele/Fuggiam gli ardori	$10.00
ZENATELLO (82214) Ingemisco/A quoi bon l' economie (Bezazian)	$10.00
ZENATELLO (82571) Morite d' Otello/Pur ti riveggo mia dolce Aida	$10.00

All records are in mint condition and in original jackets.

FRED KARLIN, 406 Adelaide Dr., Santa Monica, Calif. 90402 nm1

Antique

MUSIC BOX SPECIALISTS

Complete repair service, cylinders, repinned, combs repaired and tuned, all work guaranteed.

Large Stock of Finest Instruments For Sale

BORNAND MUSIC BOX CO.

139 4th Ave., Pelham, N.Y. 10803
Phone: (914) PE 8-1506

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

PHILLIPS' SINGING TEACHER—JOSEPH

PHILLIPS took vocal instruction from Pasquale Amato, the great Italian baritone, although Amato was younger than Phillips.

"Ill health in recent years, however, had forced him to limit his lessons and concert appearances.

"Mr. Phillips was single and the last survivor in his immediate family.

"Funeral services will be held at 8:30 Tuesday morning at the John J. Ray and Sons Funeral Home, 615 Elmwood Ave., and at 9 at Immaculate Conception Church.

"Burial will be in the German-French Cemetery, Pine Hill."

Perhaps you, like me, have observed discrepancies in the newspaper stories. In the earlier he sang for the crown prince and princess of Greece and was thanked with "enthusiastic praise." In the second, it was the King and Queen and he received a pair of black pearls.

Similarly, in the first, he studied in Paris and Berlin with Frank King Clark, but in the second it was England. He could not have been a "very young man" when he studied with Amato, for Amato was 30 when he came to this country in 1908, and Phillips was then almost 32. Also I question that he was a "leading man in a number of New York musicals for nearly 30 years."

At Miss Lamb's suggestion I sent to the Buffalo Department of Vital Statistics for a copy of Mr. Phillips' death certificate. As he died without surviving relatives, I doubted that the document would contain his date of birth.

VICTOR SINGLE & DOUBLE-FACED (1911)

- 5806 All That I Ask Is Love.
16702 Afar From Thee, My Love. Reverse: The Moonlight, the Rose and You (Frank C. Stanley & Henry Burr).

EDISON FOUR-MINUTE AMBEROL CYLINDERS (1912)

- 901 The Chase—Hunting Song.
907 Come to the Ball—From "The Quaker Girl" (with mixed chorus).
988 Mary Was My Mother's Name.
998 When I Was 21 and You Were Sweet 16 (with mixed chorus).

EDISON TWO-MINUTE STANDARD CYLINDER

- 10564 When I Was 21 and You Were Sweet 16.

EDISON BLUE AMBEROL CYLINDER SOLOS (1912-1923)

- 1575 Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet (with chorus).
1613 At the Gate of the Palace of Dreams.
2461 Soldiers of the King (with chorus).
2526 My Lady of the Telephone (with chorus).
2555 Tip-Top Tipperary Mary (with chorus).
2588 I'm a Millionaire—from "Tonight's the Night" (with chorus).
2919 Wake Up, America!
2953 There's a Quaker Down in Quaker Town.
2962 Sweet Cider Time, When You Were Mine (with Helen Clark in the refrain).
4551 Goodbye, Dear Old Bachelor Days (with chorus).
4633 That Old-Fashioned Mother of Mine.
4652 Smile Through Your Tears.
4696 Pal of All Pals.
4729 Sweet Roses.
23395 Nothing at All.

EDISON BLUE AMBEROL DUETS WITH HELEN CLARK (1914-1925)

- 2540 Suzi.
2575 After the Roses Have Faded Away.
2585 It's Written in the Book of Destiny.
2622 Don't Take My Darling Boy Away.
2661 Goodbye, Everybody—from "A Modern Eve".
2719 Daisies Won't Tell.
2841 A Little Love, A Little Kiss (Would Go a Long, Long Way).
2940 So Long, Letty.
2974 You're a Dangerous Girl.
3878 What Could Be Sweeter?
3885 I've Made Up My Mind to Mind a Maid Made Up Like You.
3960 Linger Longer, Letty.
3994 How Sorry You'll Be.
4015 Underneath the Moon.
4062 That Naughty Waltz.
4073 Sunshine and Clouds.
4089 I Know Why.
4143 I'd Like to Take You Away.
4273 Playmates.
4367 The Isle of Love.
4544 Just Suppose.
4590 In Our Bungalow.
4858 I'll Say She Is.

- 5018 Moonlight and Roses (with Polla's Clover Gardens Orchestra).

EDISON DIAMOND DISC DUETS WITH HELEN CLARK (1914-1925)

- 50247 Don't Take My Darling Boy Away. Reverse: Humoresque Song (Walter Van Brunt).
50370 You're a Dangerous Girl—from "Robinson Crusoe, Jr." Reverse: Dublin Mary Brown (Irving Kaufman and chorus).
50390 So Long, Letty. Reverse: On the South Sea Isle (Helen Clark).
50592 What Could Be Sweeter? Reverse: Everybody's Crazy Over Dixie (Vernon Dalhart).
50606 Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet. Reverse: Daisies Won't Tell.
50611 I've Made Up My Mind to Mind a Maid Made Up Like You. Reverse: My Desert Love (Lewis James).
50646 How Sorry You'll Be. Reverse: Was There Ever a Pal Like You? (Ballard).
50664 Underneath the Moon. Reverse: Pickaninny Blues (Crescent Trio).
50680 I'd Like to Take You Away—from "Betty, Be Good." Reverse: Keep the Love Lamp Burning—from "Betty, Be Good" (Gladys Rice).
50682 That Naughty Waltz. Reverse: So Long, Oo Long! (Clark).

- 50752 Playmates. Reverse: Bright Eyes (Ballard).

- 50903 Isle of Love. Reverse: The Little Good for Nothing's Good for Something, After All (Harmony Four).

- 50948 In Our Bungalow—from "The Rose of China." Reverse: Mountain Maid (Ballard).

- *51000 I Know Why. Reverse: Just Like the Rose You Gave (Elizabeth Spencer and Emory B. Randolph). (unissued.)

- 51296 Thrill of Love—from "I'll Say She Is." Reverse: Tho' Shadows Fall (Clark and James).

- 51323 Cuddle Me Up—Fox Trot (Kaplan's Melodists with refrain by Clark and Phillips). Reverse: The Raindrop and the Rose—Fox Trot (Kaplan's Melodists).

- 51451 Tomorrow's Another Day—Fox Trot—from "Artists and Models." with Jack Stillman's Orchestra. Reverse: That's My Girl—Fox Trot (Arthur Hall and Stillman's Orchestra).

- 51499 My Mother's Humming Lullaby — Waltz Played by the Top Notchers, with humming by Clark and Phillips). Reverse: Take Me Back to Your Heart—Waltz (The Top Notchers, with singing by Charles Hart).

- 51540 Moonlight and Roses—Fox Trot and Song, with Polla's Clover Gardens Orchestra. Reverse: When You and I Were Seventeen—Waltz (Charles Hart and Polla's orchestra).

- 80213 Teenie, Eenie, Weenie—from "Suzi." Reverse: In My Dreams of You—from "The Crinoline Girl" (Spencer and Van Brunt).

- 80218 After the Roses Have Faded Away. Reverse: When You Wore a Tulip and I Wore a Big Red Rose (Van Brunt and chorus).

- 80219 Who Cares?—from "Papa's Darling." Reverse: When You're Away—from "The Only Girl" (Marie Kaiser).

- 80244 Goodbye, Everybody—from "A Modern Eve." Reverse: Quiet Little Evenings at Home—from "A Modern Eve" (Van Brunt).

- 80248 Mister Love Will Catch You Yet—from "The Lady in Red." Reverse: Where's the Girl for Me?—from "The Lady in Red" (Frederick Wheeler).

- 80279 A Little Love, A Little Kiss (Would Go a Long, Long Way. Reverse: They Didn't Believe Me (Gladys Rice and Van Brunt).

- 80308 Ratchet Cool—from "Katinka." Reverse: I Want All the World to Know—from "Katinka" (Spencer and Van Brunt).

- 80690 Sunshine and Cloud. Reverse: Could I See My Boy Again (Elizabeth Lennox and Chorus).

EDISON DIAMOND DISC DUET

- WITH ELIZABETH SPENCER (1915)
80285 The Temptation Waltz—from "The Girl Who Smiles" (with chorus). Reverse: Love's Garden of Roses (Reed Miller).

EDISON DIAMOND DISC SOLOS (1914-1925)

- 50184 Soldiers of the King (with chorus). Reverse: It's a Long, Long Way to Tipperary (Albert Farrington and male chorus).

- 50227 Tip-Top Tipperary Mary (with chorus). Reverse: The Little Ford Rambled Right Along (Billy Murray).

- 50347 Wake Up, America! Reverse: Played By a Military Band (Murray).

- 50356 There's a Quaker Down in Quaker Town. Reverse: Where Did Robinson Crusoe Go With Friday on Saturday Night? (Murray and Chorus).

- 50365 Sweet Cider Time When You Were Mine (Helen Clark in the refrain). Reverse: My Grandfather's Girl (George Wilton Ballard).

- 51051 Pal of All Pals. Reverse: While the Years Roll By (Spencer and James).

- 51329 Little Red Riding Hood. Reverse: Songs of the Birds (James).

- 51366 Won't You Dream of Me?—Vocal waltz with Harry Raderman's

- Dance Orchestra. Reverse: The First is the Last (Atlantic Dance Orchestra).
- 51372 Ev'rything You Do—Fox Trot and song, with Raderman's Orchestra. Reverse: Radio—Fox trot and song (Arthur Hall and Atlantic Dance Orchestra).
- 51433 All Alone—Waltz and song, with Raderman's Orchestra. Reverse: Let Me Call You Sweetheart (Raderman's Orchestra).
- 80214 Goodbye, Girls, I'm Through (with chorus of girls). Reverse: My Lady of the Telephone (with chorus).
- 80229 I'm a Millionaire—from "Tonight's the Night." Reverse: The Same Sort of Girl—from "The Girl From Utah" (Elizabeth Spencer—Walter Van Brunt).
- 80736 Smile Through Your Tears. Reverse: That Old Fashioned Mother of Mine.

REX RECORD (1917)

- 5425 Jerusalem. Reverse: The Palms.

PATHE RECORDS BY*JOSEPH PHILLIPS (1917)

- 20115 Samoa. Reverse. Hawaiian Sunshine (Sam Ash).
- 20138 Inari—Japanese Song. Reverse: The Trail to Sunset Valley (Albert Campbell and Henry Burr).

PATHE RECORDS BY*"JUSTICE LEWIS" (1916-17)

- 20007 You're a Doggone Dangerous Girl. Reverse: Soldier Boy (Burr).
- 20010 Meet Me in Havana, Anna. Reverse: Never Let the Same Bee Sting You Twice (Arthur Collins).
- 20100 My Skating Girl. Reverse: There's a Little Bit of Bad in Every Good Little Girl.
- 20156 I've Got the Sweetest Girl in Maryland. Reverse: Where the Black-Pyed Susans Grow.
- 20204 My Sweet Hawaiian Rose. Reverse: Hawaii, I'm Lonesome for you. Both accompanied by Helen Louise and Frank Ferrara's Waikiki Orchestra.
- 20205 Somewhere in Ireland. Reverse: The World Began When I Met You (Gordon MacHughes).
- 20221 From Me to Mandy Lee. Reverse: The Ragtime Volunteers Are Off to War (Leonard T. Chick).
- 29178 They Can All Hit the Trail With Holiday. Reverse: You'll Always Be the Same Sweet Baby.

HILL-AND-DALE OKEH RECORDS*BY JOSEPH PHILLIPS (1918-19)

- 1009 Keep The Home Fires Burning. Reverse: There's A Long, Long Trail (Harry McCluskey).
- 1019 The Holy City. Reverse: Attila—Praise Ye (Croxtan Trio).
- 1020 Crucifix (Duet with Charles Hart). Reverse: O Morning Land (John Meyer and Irving Gillette).
- 1047 Asthore. Reverse: O Promise Me (Marie Morrissey).
- 1086 Smiles (Clark and Phillips as "Ruth Lennox" and "Franklyn Kent"). Reverse: Since I Met Wonderful You (Ash).
- 1123 Have a Smile For Everyone You Meet (as "Franklyn Kent"). Reverse: Sometime (Ash).
- 1154 The Americans Come (as "Joe Phillips"). Reverse: The Statue of Liberty is Smiling (Sterling Trio).

LATERAL CUT OKEH RECORDS (1920-23)

- 4008 For All Eternity. Reverse: Sweet and Low (Shannon Four).
- 4011 Forgotten. Reverse: Old Black Joe (Shannon Four).
- 4013 In Flanders Fields. Reverse: Goodbye (Lewis James).
- 4053 I Am Climbing Mountains (duet with Carroll Shannon). Reverse: Let the Rest of the World Go By (Campbell and Burr).
- 4067 When Two Hearts Discover That They're One (duet with Marion Evelyn Cox). Reverse: Pickaninny Blues (Crescent Trio).

(Continued on page 129)

GEMS and MINERALS

Conducted by H. DOUGLAS BROWN

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION OF 1872 MINING LAWS

By H. DOUGLAS BROWN

In June, 1872, the United States Congress passed a mining law which enabled this nation to become the richest and the most advanced in technology on this earth.

The reason this law produced such fantastic results was that it offered true incentives to the American individual with strength and initiative. These incentives were simple and direct.

The potential mineral developer, call him miner or prospector, as you will, was invited by the 1872 mining act to "go thou into the wilderness and search for minerals and if you find them you may locate a claim embracing them, and mine, and market them."

The act continued by advising there was no limit to the number of claims that might be filed, but that the locator was required to do $100 worth of work each year, on each claim, or it reverted to the public domain and was open to location by others.

A brief review of the circumstances in 1872 may serve to indicate how, just following the Civil War, the country was largely a wilderness west of the Mississippi. Magnesium and beryllium were unknown in trade and industrial use.

Miners were active in the gold fields, especially in California. Many a townsite is built on old mining claims.

The gold claims, of course, became the basis of the tremendous rapid growth of California and the establishment of San Francisco as a world trade center. For those who would enjoy the romance of the California Gold Rush and the history from Sutters Mill to 1920, the Bureau of Mines for the State of California has a number of fine books.

But to get back to the results of the 1872 mining laws, we must realize they provided the incentive, which, in turn, stimulated the production of metals to supplant the "Iron Horse." In 1872 there were no automobiles, no pneumatic tires, no storage batteries as we know them, no portable radios, no electric irons, and the list goes on and on and on.

The 1872 mining laws stimulated the tremendous copper discoveries and industry of Michigan, Montana, Arizona, and other states and produced the great lead and zinc industry of

(Continued on page 129)

GEMS & MINERALS FOR SALE

FANTASTIC OFFER: Genuine faceted Emerald, 10 pieces, emerald matrix, emerald crystal, assorted gemstones, Vile opal chips and a carved onyx figure from Mexico. A $23 value only $7.95. Exotic's, Box 1264, Boston, Mass. d3825

ROCKHOUNDS SPECIAL: 30 different large polished gemstones, $3.00. Includes jade, opal, amethyst, bloodstone, moonstone, tigereye, Amazonite, etc. All named. — Jim's Rock Shop, 5822 Sunland, Louisville, Ohio 44641 d3234

FROM INDIA, rough and cut gems. Rough gems in star rubies, black and purple star sapphires, blue sapphires, rubies, moonstones in assorted colors, aquamarines, opals, purple and red garnets, blue iolite, orange colored sun stones, enstatite, bloodstones, pink & green moss agates, aventurines, carnelian agate, black onyx, ass't'd. colors, spinels, lapis lazuli, jaspers, amethysts, citrine topazes, can be supplied in orders of $25 or over. Cut gem stones: star sapphires, star rubies, chrysoberyls, cat's eyes, rubies, emeralds, blue sapphires, gold sapphires, deep blue aquamarines, faceted chrysoberyls, peridots, assorted colors pinels, yellow-green beryls, garnets, zircons, big size moonstones in assorted colors, opals, sunstones, blue iolites, black star sapphires, amethysts, golden citrine topaz, etc., can be supplied in order of $25 or over. State preference. Satisfaction guaranteed. Firm established in gem business for over 60 years. — Pitamberdass Mohanlal & Sons, 4 Mandik Rd., Fort, Bombay 1, India. mhl20829

AZURITE. Finest azure blue in the world or your money back, 2 rare nodules, pp. $1. Azurmalachite 1" 50c, 2" $1, 3" $1.50. Rich silver ore, same as Az-mal, above, 1 each all three; pp. $2.50. Minimum order $25. Lists free.—Consolidated Mines, Star Rte., Wilbur, Wash. tfx

600 GEMS IN gorgeous color. Get 200 page catalog gems, minerals and equipment. Sent postpaid $2. — Western Minerals, 1030 Mignonette St., Los Angeles, Calif. 90012 tfx

FOR SALE: Petrified Wood, from the Cretaceous age which ended 63 million years ago. Also black quartz crystals from same area. Many other minerals; rocks; shells from the foothills of the Appalachian Mountains, nice two-pound selection, one kind or mixed, $4. — Winston Nettles, Camden, Ala. 36726 d60841

HOLIDAY GIFT ASSORTMENTS: 1. Rough gem-rock (state saw size); 2. Slabs; 3. Cabochons. Fancy agates, Jasper varieties, obsidians, rhodonite, opalized wood, coconuts, etc. Our selection. Satisfaction guaranteed. $10 each, postpaid. Master Charge. Free lists. — Aide, 1465C Neptune, Leucadia, Calif. 92024. Mail only. ja3276

FOR SALE

All kinds of Ivory animal netsukes, polychrome netsukes of native folks, all kinds of Ivory snuff bottles, lady on buffalo, also fully carved ones, also horn and turtle ones. Amber with flies $5.50 to $25 each, also very rare types. Pretty amber pendants having colorful parts of flower blossoms. All kinds of 18th century jade pendants. 2" plants saints, animals, etc. Rare mutton fat jades, 2½" Buddhas and butterfly pendants. Moonstone necklace, bracelet from Ceylon $16. Also turquoise and garnet necklaces. Cultured black pearl necklaces $12. Also pretty freshwater pearl necklaces. All kinds of nice cut gems. Blue and hyacinth zircons, pretty cinnamon garnets, rare sea-green aquamarines, nice tourmalines, sapphires, spinels, etc. Rough star rubies and tourmalines. Will send on approval to reliable people.

ERNEST MEIER

P.O. Box 302, Church St. Annex
New York, N.Y. 10008 tfc

Please mention HOBBIES when
replying to advertisements.

Germany. It is, (I think) a lithographic adaptation of a photograph; its soft colors and decorative quality give unusual charm and distinction to its subject.

All the buttons shown are "Goofies." Circus buttons may be found among 19th century Picture buttons, but they are not plentiful, and I do not own any. They include Clown buttons, and buttons, which show horses and other animals in what could be thought of as "circus circumstances."*

At least two "Circus sets" (of five or six buttons each) were made of Modern Plastic, about 1940-50. They were made in several colors, and are superior in design to many buttons of their time and type.

No. 1 - The Cowboy or Rodeo Rider is found in the usual range of "Goofy" colors.

Nos. 2 and 3 - The two clowns—one in profile and the other facing front—are earlier than the sets, as is the Circus Horse (No. 10). They were made in all-white, decorated white and some solid colors.

No. 4 - The elephant, c. 1936, is made of pink china, embellished with silver lustre. (Jumbo, "Barnum's famous elephant, appears on an Over-all button).

Nos. 5 thru 9 - A Circus set in white and brown. No. 5 - Clown; No. 6 - Performing Lion; No. 7 - Bareback Rider; No. 8 - Caged Lion; No. 9 - Performing Elephant.

The automobile, television and other forms of mass entertainment have hurt the circus, as they have hurt the theatre. A few years ago, too, its "image" was further damaged by a disastrous fire, where numerous lives were lost and many people were injured. (Strange, that deaths caused by a circus fire should have such far-reaching effect when loss of life due to the automobile is taken for granted as a necessary evil!

But the circus survives, after a fashion, although performances are now comparatively few and far between. Often, they are reduced to the offerings presented by State and County Fairs, traveling Carnivals or local shows, held for the benefit of some Charity. I am glad that I attended one of the last performances given by "The Greatest Show on Earth:" it was an experience I wouldn't willingly have missed.

For years, the government of ancient Rome kept a majority of its citizens contented by providing them with "bread and circuses." Present-day Welfare States substitute more up-to-date amusements for the circuses. The system works—for a while.

But we all know what happened to ancient Rome!

—Dorothy Foster Brown

*See the author's BUTTON PARADE, pp. 26 and 154. "Goofy the Clown," a fancy mounting with a circus background, appeared in HOBBIES for July, 1959.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 127)

- 4068 Climbing the Ladder of Love. Reverse: Linger Longer, Letty (duet with Helen Clark).
- 4083 Venetian Moon. Reverse: An Old-Fashioned Garden (Ash).
- 4097 Irene (duet with Clark). Reverse: Alice Blue Gown (Clark).
- 4127 Tripoli (duet with Clark). Reverse: I'd Love to Fall Asleep and Wake Up In My Mammy's Arms (Peerless Quartet).
- 4151 Close to Your Heart (duet with Clark). Reverse: Down the Trail to Home, Sweet Home (Burr).
- 4185 When I Found You (duet with Clark). Reverse: Feather Your Nest (Campbell-Burr).
- 4189 Rock of Ages (duet with Clark). Reverse: I Need Thee Every Hour (Charles Henry and James Jordan).
- 4200 The Holy City. Reverse: The Voice of the Chimes (Shannon Four).
- 4344 God Be With You Till We Meet Again. Reverse: Let the Lower Lights Be Burning (duets with Clark).
- 4454 Just Suppose (duet with Clark). Reverse: Sweet Lady (Vaughn de Leath and Billy Jones).
- 4603 Flee As a Bird. Reverse: Abide With Me (duet with Clark).
- 4604 Mr. and Mrs. (duet with Virginia Burr). Reverse: Mo-Na-Lu (Burt and Elliott Shaw).
- 4957 Cinderella. Reverse: The Pied Piper.
- 4958 Hansel and Gretel. Reverse: The Three Bears A-Singing Go.

THE END

GEMS & MINERALS

(Continued from page 127)

the tri-state area. The developing iron industry in turn, resulting from the 1872 mining law, produced six-foot saw blades which would saw up 30 inch diameter logs.

The light metal industry, in turn, was set in motion by the 1872 mining laws and became the main factor in the aeroplane and aerospace industry. In Pennsylvania, the 1872 mining laws stimulated the discovery of coal and iron, which made possible the greatest industrial development of that and several adjoining states.

The 1872 mining laws produced the incentive that induced miners to go into the far, untracked regions of Montana and Idaho and made the latter state the greatest silver producer of the Nation. It is also worthy of note here that Alaska, in 1872, was an almost totally unknown territory, but the 1872 mining laws provided the incentive for discovery of gold, copper, and other minerals.

The aggregate of these minerals has run in billions of dollars and stimulated the building of the Nation's largest state, as well as a civilization which started with the ice igloo, and now, in 1972, has 14 story modern buildings and the urban civilization that goes with them.

This is one of three articles on the Centennial Celebration of the 1872 mining laws.

THE PICTURE POST CARD

THE AMERICAN CARD CATALOG

The only reliable value guide on all types of collected cards—Post, Playing, Cigarette, Gums, Advertising, and other paper Americana.

240 pages reprint, fully illustrated.

$6.25 postpaid.

CHARLES BRAY

East Bangor, Pa. 18013

tfc

IF YOU COLLECT OR SELL POSTCARDS You need "Standard Postcard Catalog"

Enables collectors & dealers to price any picture postcards they have to sell or trade. Over 120 illustrations and interesting history. Compiled by James L. Lowe, editor of DELTIOL 1967, leading postcard journal. From your dealer or:

DELTIOLOGY
318 ROOSEVELT AVE., FOLSOM, PA. 19033

$3.95

tfc

POST CARDS WANTED

NEGRO post cards, photos, music, advertising, any era. — Richard Horlick, Box 34633, Los Angeles, Calif. 90034 jcl2059

PAYING up to 50c ea., mint, pre-1920, 4th July, Memorial, Decoration Day, Lincoln, Washington, campaign, presidents, Clapsaddle children, Brundage. 15c Winsch, HBG, Halloween, Klein. Any amount. — Jack Custer, 22547 Edison, Dearborn, Mich. 48124 ja3445

POSTCARDS FOR SALE

..GERMAN post cards for sale knight cross winner emperors princes navy Zeppelin nazi propaganda SS ships planes. Willi Bernhard, Hamburg 73 Wiesenredder 2 Western Germany. n126351

NEW CHROME POSTCARDS: Capitols, covered bridges, lighthouses, Courthouses, etc. 10 cards, all different 50c. 25-$1.10, 100-$4.25 postpaid. Free Rubber Stamp Catalog.—Columbia Views, Box 398-88, Ocean Park, Wash. 98640 jcl20291

10 QUANT chrome mint Museum Doll cards including one O'Neill Kewpie $1.50; Kewpie only 25c, postpaid. Many others, older cards. Stamp for list. query. — Muchmore, Box 1228, Rt. 2, Grass Valley, Calif. 95945 n3825

EXCHANGE, BUY, SELL—old post cards! Pre-World War I only. Want: Greater N.Y. City, its boroughs, same years only, used or unused; send reply postage. — Jos. H. Nardone, 436 E. 9th St., N.Y.C. 10009 mb64811

MONTHLY ANTIQUE POSTCARD AUCTION. — beginning October. 5% discount to successful bidders on two or more lots. Send SASE for list. — Sally Carver, 179 South Street, Brookline, Mass. 02167 d3042

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8.

(Except for change of address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rates.

All advertisers who submit copy for the first time are definitely requested to furnish therewith banking or other satisfactory references.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Arthur Hall, John Ryan and The Manhattan Quartet

By JIM WALSH

I. After All These Years

This is an article that I wanted to write for something like a quarter of a century—ever since I met the late Arthur Hall at the "John Bieling Day" parties that were given in the Long Island area of New York to honor pioneer recording artists.

Writing it was something I postponed, however, because I lacked information concerning my friend Arthur's last years and didn't know just when and where he died. E. Bryant Burke, of Hempstead, who is now also dead, wrote me in the late 1950's or early 1960's that Arthur had been gone for some time, and Mrs. Hall had moved to Florida. That was the most specific information I was able to obtain, and I have nothing more definite today as I set about writing this long delayed tribute.

newspaper, the Floral Park Gateway, Recently I asked a Long Island if its files contained an account of Arthur Hall's death. The publisher, Robert Rennie, did his friendly best for me. He replied that there was no obituary notice and that he had called a community funeral home, only to be informed that it had not conducted the singer's burial service. Mr. Rennie suggested that I communicate with the Town Clerk's office at Hempstead and request any information it might have. I have done so, but it was unable to help me except to suggest that I write to the State Health Department.

I wrote to the Gateway because on Aug. 19, 1948, it published an article about Arthur Hall's having accepted an invitation to attend the John Bieling Day observance in the Garden City Hotel. The article was illustrated with a photograph of the tenor as a young man, and quoted part of a letter to him. Since I had not read the "story" since pasting it in my huge "press book," I found it interesting and, inasmuch as it contains some information concerning the singer who began life as Adolph J. Hahl, I believe it is a good idea to quote part of what Mr. Rennie's paper said:

"Arthur J. Hall of 244-39 90th Avenue, Bellerose Manor, will talk over the old days with other surviving performers of the recording industry's pioneer days, at an all-day party, September 10. The party will give record collectors an opportunity to meet early recording stars, including Mr. Hall, Billy Murray, Will Oakland, Frank Banta, Grace Spencer and many others. The occasion will be called John Bieling Day, in honor of John H. Bieling, first tenor of the old-time American, Edison and Hayden Quartets, who gave similar, but smaller, parties for some of his friends at his home in Hempstead in 1946 and 1947. Mr. Bieling died last March 30, at the age of 79.

ARTHUR HALL gave Jim Walsh this autographed photo at the 1948 "John Bieling Day".

"Mr. Hall, an early Edison artist, was second tenor of the old Manhattan Quartet and member of the Metropolitan Mixed Sextet. He also sang with the Cliquot Club Eskimos, and made nine trips to Europe on singing engagements. Currently he is doing special singing engagements in local and Manhattan churches.

"The letter addressed to Mr. Hall by Jim Walsh, of Vinton, Va., veteran record collector, inviting Mr. Hall to be an honor guest at the party, said in part:

"You have been for many years one of my favorites. Some of the records you made for Edison were among the best Diamond Discs ever issued. I'm thinking not only of your solo work, but those fine duets with Johnny Ryan—"I Wanna Go Where You Go," and many others. Then there was the remarkable record of 'Sweet Adeline' by the Metropolitan Mixed Sextet, in which you sang the lead, as well as 'Sweet Elaine,' in which the late Don Chalmers shares honors with you by doing a remarkable bass solo . . . I mention your Edison records especially, because to me they do you much more justice than the acoustic recordings you made for other companies. But I have many of your records on other brands, and recently obtained your 1918 Columbia of 'The Beast of Berlin.'"

"Harry F. Selinger, of Clark Avenue, Oceanside, said this week he already had requests for reservations from many record collectors from all parts of the country."

The Gateway article then listed some of the artists who were expected to be present, including besides those already mentioned, Eugene C. Rose, Joe Belmont, Fred Hager, Walter Van Brunt (Scanlan), Reinald Werrenrath, Al Bernard and Aileen Stanley. All came, as did Olive Kline, Elsie Baker, Lucy Isabelle Marsh, Edith Helena and others, but the 24 years that have since passed, have taken a great toll, and, as I write, on March 24, 1972, only Miss Kline, Miss Stanley and Mr. Kaufman remain.

In the late afternoon of the day before the party, Harry Selinger took me to the moderate sized house in which Arthur Hall lived with his wife, their son and daughter-in-law. Arthur was employed by a New York City bank and had not come home, but Mrs. Hall, a friendly, brown-haired woman of middle age, made us welcome. She told me that my letter "has meant so much to Arthur and me. We've read it over and over and talked and talked about it, and it makes him feel so good to know that he's not forgotten and a lot of people still enjoy his records."

I met Arthur Hall himself the next day. But now I think a good way to pick up the beginning of his career would be to quote an article from the May, 1917, Edison Amberola Monthly in which his first Blue Amberol cylinder was announced. In those days, he was still calling himself by his true name of Adolph J. Hahl, but, because of its German sound, he switched to the Anglicized form of Arthur Hall shortly after the United States entered World War I. Here is the Monthly article, which was illustrated with a fine smiling photograph of the young tenor:

"Adolph J. Hahl, who makes his first appearance as a Blue Amberol soloist on the June list . . . is a tenor widely known in American musical and vaudeville circles. He was born in New York City in 1888 and inherited his ability as a vocalist from his mother who at one time was a favorite soloist of Baden, Germany. Mr. Hahl attended the public schools in New York and secured the greater part of his musical instruction under the direction of New York instructors. Before he left the public schools he had gained a reputation as a concert and vaudeville artist and was engaged in professional work.

"For a number of years Mr. Hahl has been on the stage, appearing in vaudeville, concert and lyceum work. His work has been heard before by Amberola owners, for he is a member of the Manhattan Male Quartet, an organization that has made a number of popular Blue Amberol records. As second tenor of this quartet, Mr. Hahl has toured the United States and Europe. During two concert trips through Europe Mr. Hahl appeared as soloist of the organization, singing in both German and English."

Rather a remarkable career, isn't it, for a young man who was then only 28 or 29 years of age? His first Blue Amberol was No. 3192, "Where the Black-Eyed Susans Grow." It is strange, in view of the song's popularity, that it was not also issued on an Edison disc. Neither were the tenor's next two—No. 3201, in which he showed his patriotism by pleading "Let's All be Americans Now," which was announced in July, and the hauntingly catchy, 3210, "Hello, I've Been Looking for You," which seems to have come out about the same time but didn't receive the usual supplement listing.

Adolph's willingness to record songs which denounced his parents' German fatherland is the more noteworthy, since one of the Manhattan Quartet's two Blue Amberol records, No. 2469, was sung in German and contained "Die Wacht Am Rhein" and "Deutschland Über Alles." The other, 2399, was an English version of the inescapable "Kentucky Babe."

"Kentucky Babe" had a clever banjo imitation that probably was sung by Hall. Both these quartet records also were issued as discs, but, as was to be expected, the one of German patriotic numbers disappeared from the catalog in 1918.

Meanwhile, young Adolph Hahl had changed his professional name to Arthur Hall, and in 1918 he sang for Columbia two of the "patriotic" war songs that were being ground out by the thousands. One was "That Grand Old Gentleman, Uncle Sam." The other, apparently suggested by a crude propaganda movie, "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," was called "The Beast of Berlin," and was full of the personal attacks that were levied against Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany. Probably more good songs were written during World War I than in any other in which the United States was engaged. There were also more bad ones, and "The Beast of Berlin" was among them. It referred to crossing the Rhine and, speaking of the German emperor, said: "We'll herd him with the swine. We'll trample on his dirty rag and cause him to salute our flag." Actually, Wilhelm, if not the best of men, was not the worst, and in spite of such boastful threats, he died in peaceful retirement in Holland.

Amusingly, Arthur sang the Kaiser denunciation with a strong German accent. In the decade of recording that followed, his German enunciation became much less apparent, but he never lost it entirely, in singing or in conversation. For one thing, he always pronounced "all" as if it were "oil."

And now that we have brought Arthur Hall's career up to the wartime period when he "Americanized"

GERMAN-AMERICAN SINGERS —
The photo of the Manhattan Quartet shown here is from a 1928 Catalog of Edison cylinder records. Arthur Hall is at the left. The second man is unidentified. Others are Nick Lat-tner and Frank Schwarz.

his name, let's consider the activities of the Manhattan Quartet, with whom he made his first records and with whom he was so long associated.

II. The Manhattan Quartet

I have not been able to ascertain when the quartet began recording, since most of its work was done for special foreign language lists not included in catalogs intended for ordinary American use. Incidentally, I have often wondered how it could have been commercially worthwhile for companies to compile long lists of vocal records in almost every foreign language, including Chinese, Russian and Japanese as well as French, Spanish, German, Italian, etc., when hardly one dealer in a hundred stocked such offerings and their sale was restricted almost entirely to people of alien birth. It doesn't seem that enough could possibly have been sold to return a profit. Yet during the 1920's, as radio began to cut sharply into sales, The Voice of the Victor constantly urged dealers to go after foreign record business. This apparently was on the theory that radio didn't give first and second generation Americans the music they wanted, but records could. In most small communities, with little or no foreign population, such things of course were unsalable.

The Victor numerical catalog for May, 1912, which included the "foreign" records as well as those for domestic use, mentioned three by the Manhattan Quartet—No. 63266, 63431 and 68290. That, however, doesn't tell when they were made, so the actual recording might have been done a few years earlier. And that brings up the question of whether Arthur Hall sang in them. If he did, he became a member of the group at an early age, for he was only 24 in 1912. You will remember, though, that the Edison announcement of his first solo Blue Amberols said he was already established as a concert and vaudeville singer while still in school, so it is quite possible that he took part in these early discs. Judging from pictures of the quartet, he was much younger than his associates.

In May, 1924, when the Voice of the Victor was carrying on its crusade to induce more dealers to stock foreign language records, it published a

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Re feathered
Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

ttc

Limited Edition EDISON DIAMOND DISCS Volume 1: 50,001-52,651

A numerical listing of every Edison Diamond Disc issued in 50,000's series from 1912-1929—130 pages of useful information, including 5200 titles, the performing artists, composers, and lyricists .....$12.95 ppd.

BONA FIDE PUBLISHING CO.

406 Adelaide Dr.

Santa Monica, Cal. 90402

dc

(Continued on page 118)

RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

photo of the ensemble with the following comment:

"The Manhattan Quartet is one of the best-known German male quartets in the country. The organization has been before the public for many years, having appeared at four of the great expositions in the United States, and having twice made successful European concert tours. The quartet not only specializes in German songs, but has an English repertoire as well, which has been used during the present year in a tour of the leading picture and vaudeville houses. The personnel . . . is as follows: Henry Weiman, Arthur Hall, Nick Latterner, Frank Schwarz."

Presumably, the gentlemen were listed in the order of first tenor, second tenor, baritone and bass. The basso's last name, incidentally, appears originally to have been Schwartzkopf, but had been shortened.

This of course was the group that was making personal appearances and singing for records in 1924. One change had been made. Edison publications of the period from 1916 to 1920 show one of the members as a man with a heavy mustache. In the 1924 group he has been succeeded by a clean-shaven singer, but the others remain the same. I, of course, recognize Arthur Hall, but am not sure of the identification of the remainder. Nor do I know the name of the man who flaunted the mustache, but I imagine he was a first tenor.

Another puzzle results from the statement that the quartet had sung at four major expositions. What were they? The Philadelphia Sesqui-Centennial and the New York World's Fair were still in the future, and surely this same group could not have appeared at the 1892-93 Chicago World's Fair. Perhaps there had been a Manhattan Quartet going that far back, but if so its membership must have changed over the years. No doubt the four, probably including Arthur Hall, appeared at the 1914-15 Panama-Pacific Exposition, and perhaps the older members also had sung at the Buffalo, Portland, and St. Louis fairs. Just possibly, Hall could have taken part at St. Louis, but it is unlikely, since he would have been only 16.

The quartet's German recordings seem to have been made chiefly for Victor and Edison, but they may have been employed by other companies whose foreign language catalogs I don't have. Judging by its number, the Diamond Disc containing the two "Hoch der Kaiser!" songs was made in 1914, but the June, 1915, catalog is the first in which I find it.

An interesting record in which the quartet sang was Diamond Disc 82103. They assisted Otto Goritz, the Metropolitan Opera Wagnerian baritone. The selection, to use an English title, was "Like an Infant at the Mother's Breast," from Nicolai's "Merry Wives of Windsor." On the reverse side Goritz sang in German, of course—"The Bird Catcher Am I" from Mozart's "Magic Flute." Goritz also sang on the reverse side of the Manhattan's Germanic rendition of "Silent Night" on 80266.

Herr Goritz had made himself enormously unpopular with Americans in 1915 when he assertedly gave a dinner party to celebrate the sinking of the Lusitania, in which hundreds of lives were lost. He had been a Victor artist, but Victor never made any more records by him, and it is rather surprising that Edison engaged him. But it did and he even gave "tone tests." (Years before he had made two-minute cylinders.) Goritz was born June 8, 1873, in Berlin and died April 11, 1929, in Hamburg.

When the 1918 Victor catalog came out, all Goritz records had been discontinued. They were never reinstated. Half a dozen years later Victor issued a "special pressings" catalog, which purported to contain all discontinued Red Seal records, but Goritz still wasn't forgiven and his discs were not included. Probably the masters had been destroyed. Another missing name was that of the Italian tenor, Nicola Zerola, and I wonder why.

I think it a reasonable assumption that the period from America's entrance into the War in April, 1917, though its duration and for a year or so later, meant trying times for the Manhattan Quartet. Anti-German feeling was high, and in many cities orchestras were stupidly forbidden to play the music of the classical German composers, so obviously there was no demand for a German language quartet. We have seen that Arthur Hall met the crisis successfully by changing his name and singing the current patriotic tunes, but just what the other quartet members did is a question. They must have been good Americans, but probably they were nevertheless under suspicion of not being entirely loyal.

III. Made-to-Order "Red Asterisks"

The fighting over, Edison in 1919 began to build up repertoires of foreign language records, which were assigned special numerical blocks, but were not listed, either alphabetically or under the names of the artists, in the main body of the catalog.

Something of this sort must have been contemplated before our entrance into the war put a stop to German language recording, for two of the special 57000 series selling for $1.00 each, were listed as by Adolph J. Hahl and their master numbers indicate they were made about the time in 1917 that his three Blue Amberol cylinders were announced. They were 57006, "Autolieben—Das haben die Madchen so gerne," coupled with "Die Lorelei" ("The Lorelei"), by the Manhattan Quartet, and 57009, "Puppchen," which had a comic number by a German comedian, Ernest Balle, for its reverse. The Balle side's German title is translated as "The Widow and Her Seven Husbands." Both Hahl songs were by a composer named Gilbert.

Another German record, issued in June, 1925, offered a solo, by Arthur Hall, this time, of a song called "Bedinklichkeiten," a title I am unable to translate. The number was 57019. Harvey Hindermeyer, not usually thought of as a German language singer, held down the other side with "Tief im Bohmerwald."

The 57000 series comprised both vocal and instrumental numbers, but there was also a 73000 group in the $1.50 classification, containing nothing but vocals. Manhattan Quartet records were all in the lower price range. They began making them in 1920. But—and this should especially interest collectors who specialize in Edison discs by noted operatic and concert artists—the 73000 compilation included records by famous singers that were never listed in the catalog beneath their names. These artists included Goritz, Karl Jorn, Arthur Middleton (under the assumed name of Eduard Middlestadt), Marie Rappold, Paul Reimers, Elizabeth Schumann and Jacques Urlus.

Many of the German discs were described as being "made to order," and were identified as "custom-made" by red asterisks stamped on their white labels. This was a clever bit of flummery devised to help ease the storage problems of dealers who complained that large stocks of the thick Diamond Discs took up a lot of space.

Dealers were instructed to tell customers that certain records in the monthly supplements — mostly old standard numbers, instrumental novelties and foreign issues—were not kept in stock, "but we'll be glad to have a copy especially made for you at the factory." If the customer said, "O.K., get me one," the dealer ordered it from his jobber and a week or so later the customer would be handed a Red Asterisk copy that he was told had been pressed at West Orange for him alone. The truth was, the jobbers stocked these records just as they did the regular "releases," and, more than that, most dealers preferred to carry them as part of their regular supply rather than to have the bother of sending for "made to order" copies. This amiable chicanery began in 1922 and was discontinued three years later.

While this was going on, the Quartet was not entirely unknown to the domestic section of the Edison catalog. In October, 1923, it was represented on record No. 51214, "Pickaninny's Lullaby," coupled with "Ten Thousand Years from Now," by Lewis James. The quartet side was dull and probably impaired the sale of its mating, a beautiful Ernest R. Ball ballad. However, James' interpretation lacked the sweetness of voice and expressiveness of Henry Burr's Victor. The record stayed in the catalog only through 1926.

Obviously, not all the Manhattan's German Diamond Discs can be mentioned in detail, but I'll select a few of the more interesting. Record No. 57015 coupled two numbers "mit Yodeler Adolf Schrein." There was also a German version of "When the Swallows Homeward Fly" and one of that doleful dirge, "Ritters Abscheid," known to most of us as "The Soldier's Farewell."

The quartet helped Arthur Middleton sing "Bummel-Petrus" (Jolly Peter") and it recorded the old nonsense song, "Die Schnitzelbank." In 1927, the boys sang a comic song, "Where Is My Meyer?" in German and about the same time Arthur Hall was singing it in broken English as the refrain of a Victor dance record.

RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 118)

For the most amusing title of all, they made in 1927 Record No. 57023, which contained on one side "Studentenlieder," a medley of German student songs, and on the other, "Volkslieder," a folk song medley, both sung in fox trot time. Just for meanness, I shall quote the titles, but this is not likely to endear me to the linotype operator who has to follow the copy.

"Studentenlieder" was composed of "Bier her, Bier her," "Was kommt dort von der Hohl," "Am Brunnen von dem Tore," "Krambambuli," "Madel Ruck, Ruck, Ruck," "O Alte Bur-schenherrlichkeit," "Ein freis Leben fuhren wir," "Es ist ein Wirtshaus an der Lahn," and "Ca, Ca, geschmauset."

The "Volkslieder" included "Stimmt an mit hohen Klang," "Guter Mond du gehst so stille," "Nun ade du mein lieb Heimatland," "Leise zieht durch mein Gemut," "Ein Jager aus Kurpfalz," "Das Wandern ist des Mullers Lust," "Steh ich in finst'r Mitternacht," and "Ach wie ist's moglich dann."

Mr. Linotyper, I apologize!

For a final laugh, Edison listed as one of its German records, No. 51909, containing a hill-billy tune, "My Little German Home Across the Sea," sung (in Appalachian area English) by a Southwestern Virginia mountaineer, Ernest V. Stoneman.

The Mannhattans, who had made Victor acoustics records over a long period, continued to do foreign language work for that company after the electrical process was introduced. Several of their numbers are included in the 1931 Victor numerical catalog. One, issued May 10, 1929, on 12-inch record No. 56017, combines a vocal march in honor of President von Hindenburg of Germany (these, remember, were pre-Hitler days!) with a "Konig Karl Marsch."

I was amused to find, in Brian Rust's Master Book of Victor Records from 1925 to 1936, evidence that the Quartet ran into difficulties in trying to record for Victor's English repertoire. On Jan. 25, 1927, they made three "takes" with pipe organ accompaniment, of "The Holy City" and "The Palms." On March 3, they sang "The Holy City" three times more. Came March 16, and they had another three tries at "The Palms." None was accepted, and Victor apparently gave up. In those early days of electric recording, the process involved so much distortion that artists had to come back and sing repeatedly before they could get a passable record.

The Quartet, however, was less harassed than Henry Burr, who, on May 8, 1925, sang four unacceptable versions of "Heaven Is My Home." On four other occasions, ranging from VETERAN RECORDERS. Eugene Rose (left) and Arthur Hall, making a cylinder record in 1949.

May 12 to June 11, he recorded three more takes each time until finally No. 16 made the grade and Burr, who probably had used some unheavenly language during the process, at last went to Heaven—at least on the record. But even his torments were exceeded by those of Frank Banta, who had to make 25 masters of his piano version of "Nola" before one was obtained that could be used.

I imagine the Manhattan Quartet's recording career, ended, like Arthur Hall's, when the depression hit the record business a terrific wallop. And now let's return to Second Tenor Hall.

IV. Soloist and Dance Band "Plugger"

Arthur Hall seems to me a more than ordinarily interesting recording artist, because he is the only one I can think of who sang hundreds of popular ballads and comic songs while living a "double life" as a recorder of foreign language material. I find myself wondering how he managed at the peak of his activities, say from 1923 to 1927, to do so much "popular" singing in English while at the same time functioning as a member of the German language Manhattan Quartet and going on concert tours. And the Manhattan was not the only ensemble in which he sang.

There was not much recording for him to do in the war days of 1918, but a year later he was busier. For a brief period in 1919-20, he was a duet partner with Jack Kaufman, brother of the better known Irving Kaufman. A 1923, Gennett catalog lists three duets by them—4593, "That Wonderful Kid From Madrid"; 9016, "They're All Sweeties," and 1503, "We Must Have a Song to Remember." (I can't make any sense of the record numbering system, since they were all turned out about the same time.) Gennett did little national advertising, but "We Must Have a Song to Remember" was featured by a display in the Saturday Evening Post, with an assertion that in it "the voices of Kaufman and Hall blend serenely pure." This was a classic example of backing the wrong horse, for the chosen song achieved no popularity, while the other side, ignored in the advertising, was Charles Hart and Elliott Shaw's rendition of the classic Ballad, "Let the Rest of the World Go By."

That Gennett catalog also contained a dozen Hall solos. Another Kaufman and Hall duet record was Okeh 4062. They occupied both sides with "Floatin' Down to Cotton Town" and "Lucy Dancing Around the Cabin Door." Since Irving and Jack Kaufman and Arthur Fields had signed exclusive Emerson contracts in 1919, I am puzzled as to how these records were made after that contract apparently had become effective. Perhaps it did not restrain Jack from making duets for other companies with artists other than his brother and Fields.

Because most of Hall's recordings were of songs of a short-lived type I will not attempt a detailed analysis of his recorded repertoire. Most of his acoustic discs were poorly recorded, and he himself remarked at one of our meetings: "My Edisons are the only horn-records by me worth collecting. As a general thing, the others don't sound much like my voice, but the Edisons caught me exactly as I was." As an example of bad recording, the Columbia of "The Beast of Berlin" has a distorted voice quality.

One amusing Hall record is his Globe of "Feather Your Nest," which seems to show a condition of near-illiteracy on the part of the lyric writer. As Arthur recorded the song it contained these lines: "Hear the lovebirds cry in the branches high, and, sweetheart, they bring messages just for you and I."

When Albert Campbell and Henry Burr recorded the song for Victor and other companies, the ungrammatical portion was changed to: "Lovebirds there must be high up in each tree, and, sweetheart, they bring messages just for you and me." Probably the well educated Burr demanded the change, insisting that he wasn't going to sing such ungrammatical stuff as "for you and I."

As the 1920's advanced, more and more dance records were made with vocal refrains (they had been almost unknown before 1919), and the majority of Arthur Hall's records from 1920 to 1930 were those in which he did not sing the entire song, but merely a refrain to an orchestra's accompaniment. He was one of several artists who were called on hundreds of times to be dance band "pluggers." Irving Kaufman almost certainly did more of this work than anyone else, followed, probably, by Arthur Fields in second place and Hall in third. Jack Kaufman may have been No. 4. After the electrical era began, a young singer known as Harold ("Scrappy") Lambert became one of the most popular pluggers, but his career lasted only three or four years, and did not bring him up to a numerical par with the others. He faded out when the record business went to pieces after 1929.

RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 119)

One intriguing Arthur Hall record is a Black Swan, on which he sings "Yes, We Have No Bananas," with his name given as Howard Lewis. Black Swan was a Negro-owned company, and supposedly employed only black artists. The record, however, is the same as the Olympic issued as by Arthur Hall and the Original Georgia Five (probably the Original Memphis Five), and both labels probably leased it from the original manufacturer.

Going hurriedly through the Arthur Hall section of my own records, I find that I have him singing solos or dance refrains on the following labels, and very likely there are others I missed: Banner, Bell, Black Swan, Clarion, Columbia, Domino (under the name of Cliff Stewart), Edison, Gennett, Globe, Grey Gull, Hy-Tone, Madison, Olympic, Perfect, Playtime (a seven-inch record for children), Supreme and Victor. Then I have duets by him and John Ryan, who became his recording partner in 1925, on Bell, Domino, Edison, Everybody's, Grey Gull, Pathe needle cut and Radiex. They also did some singing for Columbia and other brands missing from my collection.

It is rather strange that Victor never permitted Hall to sing a complete record by himself, but, aside from the Manhattan Quartet, used him only in dance numbers. Two of his Victor vocal refrains called for a German accent and he may have been selected for that reason—No. 19586, "O Katharina!" and 21025, "Where Is My Meyer?"

An interesting Victor in which he participated is 19901, "Song of the Vagabonds," by the International Novelty Orchestra conducted by Nat Shilkret, in which the incidental singing is done by Hall, Wilfred Glenn, Theo Alban and Clifford Cairns, who afterwards became manager of the Victor Artist and Repertoire Department.

V. Edison Solos

Arthur's Edison discs (only a few of which were dubbed onto Blue Amberol cylinders) deserve a bit more attention. In 1919 he appeared in the Edison catalog for the first time as Arthur Hall when, on No. 50537, he sang "Have a Smile for Everyone You Meet," in which he was assisted by a male chorus. After that he was missing from the English language section until July, 1924, when No. 51351 was issued, with Harry Raderman's Dance Orchestra playing a fox trot version of "Paradise Alley," after which Hall sang the same song. During the next year a good many of these "two in one" records followed. The titles included "Radio," a satire on the static-producing qualities of early wireless sets, with the fox trot portion played by the Atlantic Dance Orchestra (Dave Kaplan's Melodists) and Teddy Morse's last song, "Monkey Doodle," with the orchestral part by the Merry Sparklers, whoever they were. Then came the partnership with John Ryan, which also rates a separate section.

VI. Hall and Ryan Duets

I know as little concerning John Ryan as I do about almost any other popular recording artist of his era. As far as I have learned, he first appeared in the recording picture in 1924. After that, he made hundreds of discs, but his career was over four years later.

Johnny may still be living. In 1948 I mentioned to Arthur Hall that a man using the name of John Ryan had been making some risqué records for Victor. "But," I said, "he doesn't sound like your old partner."

Arthur seemed shocked at the idea. "No, no," he said. "Johnny was a good Catholic boy. He wouldn't sing anything like that."

"Is he still living?" I asked, and Arthur replied, "Yes, he's somewhere down in New Jersey."

DUET PARTNER. Gerald Underhill Macy (above) did some Edison duet recording with Arthur Hall's principal singing associate, John Ryan. Macy and Ed Smalle also sang together as "The Radio Aces" and "The Radio Imps".

Ryan had a pleasant tenor voice, a bit higher than Hall's, but so closely resembling it in texture it is hard to tell them apart in solo lines except for their different accents. He appears to have made his recording start as a partner of Jack Kaufman—yes, the same Jack Kaufman with whom Arthur had sung briefly five years before.

Kaufman and Hall made three 1924 Okeh duet records that I can trace:

40013, "Happy-Go-Lucky In My Old Kentucky Home," coupled with "I'm Goin' South," by Earl Rickard (I have often wondered who this baritone was. Could he have been better known under some other name?); 40117, "Somebody Stole My Gal," doubled with "A Man Never Knows When a Woman's Gonna Change Her Mind," by Ernest Hare and Harry Reser; and 40164, "The Grass is Always Greener in the Other Fellow's Yard," with "Skin-a-Ma-Rink-a-Rink-a-Ree," by Billy Jones and Ernest Hare.

They also made at least three for Emerson, of which I have copies: 10681, "Roaming to Wyoming," coupled with "I Love You," by Jack Boyle (who was he?); 10710, "When Mother Sings Sweet and Low," with "Me No Speak-a Good English," a solo by Kaufman; and 10756, "Any Old Time At All," with "Jimmiey Gee," by Fields.

There may have been more, for I have never seen any Emerson catalogs of those days when the company had gone bankrupt and was limping along under court supervision.

The Kaufman-Ryan partnership did not last long, and in 1925 Ryan teamed up with Arthur Hall. Their first Edison duet coupling appeared in March, No. 51473, "Hawaiian Nightingale" and "I'm Someone Who's No One to You." The duo's work immediately became so popular that for the next couple of years they were strong features of the monthly supplements.

There were good reasons for this. Their voices blended beautifully; they sang sentimental ballads expressively, and when they did comedy numbers their interpretations had a "snap" and "pep" that would have been worthy of Jones and Hare. No higher praise could be given than that! In fact, a number of the songs they sang are the sort that most recording managers would have assigned automatically to the unbeatable Billy and Ernie. Among these splendid humorous records are "There Ain't No Flies on Auntie," a title which English record companies always changed to "There Are No Flies on Auntie," "I'm Gonna Let the Bumble Bee Be," "I Don't Want to Get Married (I'm Having Too Much Fun)," "Out in the New Mown Hay," "Ukelele Lady" and "Clap Hands, Here Comes Charley." For real pep and personality their Diamond Disc of "I Wanna Go Where You Go . . . Then I'll Be Happy" was miles above any competing record, and especially made Jack Smith's whispered version on Victor sound dull.

Some of Hall and Ryan's more serious duets, such as "I Wish You Were Jealous of Me" and "Truly I Do," would make an unfailing appeal to any lover of well-sung, melodious sentimental ballads, and they even revived the beautiful 1912 hit, "A Garland of Old-Fashioned Roses"—probably at Thomas A. Edison's "suggestion."

Not only did both Arthur and John record solos as well as duets, but, with Ed Smalle, they called themselves The Frolickers and made four

RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 120)

Edison Discs: "Dinah," "I Love My Baby," "I Wonder What's Become of Joe," and "Talkin' to the Moon." They took part in the records—many of them humorous—by the National Male Quartet, whose other members were Harry Jockin, baritone, and Harry Donaghy, bass. One of their amusing quartet offerings—"Meet Me in Old Philly, Billy," a "blurb" for the 1926 Philadelphia Sesqui-Centennial celebration, was on the back of their duet of "Out in the New Mown Hay." They also were members of "That Singing Four," whose record of "That Certain Party"—an Americanized imitation of the German "Die Schnitzelbank," which the Manhattan Quartet had recorded years before—is a sidesplitter.

Mrs. Leah S. Baird, assistant archivist of the Edison National Historic Site, says "That Singing Four" consisted of Hall and Ryan, tenors; Steve Porter, baritone, and Donald Chalmers, bass. This gave its personnel a strong resemblance to the Premier-American Quartet of an earlier period, in which Porter and Chalmers had sung with John Young and Billy Murray. And that brings up something that has puzzled me. Brian Rust's "Victor Master Book" lists two unissued recordings by the American Quartet, both made Nov. 11, 1925. The titles are "Tomorrow Morning" and "That Certain Party," and the artists are given as Ryan, Murray, Porter and Chalmers. I had considered this probably a mistake because there is no other mention of John Ryan singing for Victor, and John Young had been the quartet's first tenor.

In view, however, of the fact that the "Singing Four" group, with Ryan, Porter and Chalmers in its membership, did "That Certain Party" for Edison on Nov. 18, 1925—a week after the Victor was made—I am now inclined to think that Ryan instead of Young was in the Victor version, and that Porter and Chalmers suggested to Billy Murray, the quartet leader, that he be used. Even so, in our many conversations Billy never mentioned Johnny Ryan to me.

The first "That Singing Four" record "Sweet Romona"—was sung July 30, 1925, and for that occasion the quartet consisted of Hall, who was its manager, Ryan, Nick Latterner, and Chalmers. All its succeeding records had Porter as baritone. "That Certain Party" was the last. It's obvious that the boys didn't get rich working as a quartet, for they were paid only $30 each per song. The same rate prevailed when "That Singing Four" gave way to the National Male Quartet, whose first selections, "Bye, Bye, Blackbird," and "Honey Bunch," were recorded May 10, 1926. Hall, Ryan, Jockin and Donaghy each got $60 for singing in the two sides. Dave Kaplan, who played the piano on the first side, and John F. Burckhardt, the pianist on the second, had yearly contracts and were not paid by the job. In later records, such pianists as Ray Brown, Milton J. Rettenberg and Bill Werges got $15 for playing the accompaniment on one side or $25 for two. The 1925-26 Edison quartet rate was not much above that prevailing in the early days of gold moulded records when each singer was paid $20 a cylinder.

Incidentally, there was an earlier National Male Quartet, which made four sides, two of them unissued, in September and October, 1924. Jockin and Donaghy were the baritone and bass, and the tenors were Clarence daSilva and Lloyd Willey.

With their Edison solos and duets being issued regularly (Ryan played his own piano accompaniment in some of his individual efforts), their appearances in the Quartet and their work for other companies, Hall and Ryan seemed to have an increasingly successful partnership. But, toward the end of 1926 something—I don't know what—appears to have happened to impair their popularity. The last record to bear their names as duettists, No. 51801, was issued in September, 1926. It was "Out in the New Mown Hay." In October, Ryan (who, by the way was called Jack Rhan on Madison records), sang the refrains of "How Many Times," and "Adorable," by the Golden Gate Orchestra (the California Ramblers). In December, Hall and Ryan reappeared, to sing in "My Pal Jerry," by Duke Yellman's Orchestra; in January, Hall alone did the refrains of "Mother Dear" and "My Mother's Lullaby," by Jack Stillman's Orchestra, but in January, 1927, Johnny Ryan surprisingly turned up with a new partner, whose name was given only as Sherman. I wonder if he was Al. Sherman, the song writer. The new duo sang both sides of 51892, "Sandy McPherson (The Meanest Man in Town)" and "I Must Have an Italian Girl," with Johnny at the piano. The singers' voices are so much alike it is hard to tell one from the other. Ryan also sings in "That Saxophone Waltz" and "Love Me All the Time," by Jack Stillman's Orchestra (No. 51940), but without label credit and I am uncertain as to whether his partner is Hall or Sherman. On No. 51984, he has the famous Helen Clark as a "song plugging" partner in "You Only Want Me When You're Lonesome," another waltz by the Stillman Orchestra.

In April, 1927, Sherman and Ryan were back again with a duet version, on 51961, of that Irish comic song classic, "Bridget O'Flynn (Where've You Been?)," with Ryan again serving as pianist. The other side is a fine "Down in the Old Neighborhood," by the National Quartet. I had forgotten how good this interpretation of "Bridget O'Flynn" is until I played it while writing this article. If not quite so good as the Victor Masterpiece by Aileen Stanley and Billy Murray, and perhaps not entirely so amusing as the Columbia by Jones and Hare, it is still superb.

Meanwhile, in March, Edison had revived, on No. 51922, the immortal "Sweet Adeline" and the almost equally popular "Maggie Murphy's Home," sung by the Metropolitan Mixed Chorus, with Arthur Hall taking the tenor lead in both. The supplement comment was amusing:

"Barber Shops are no longer exclusive retreats for men desiring whisker bobs or 'home runs,' so, in recording 'Sweet Adeline' with modern 'barber shop' harmony, we, of course, had to use the ladies' voices also. We are sure you will like the arrangement. The rehearsal was held at Maggie Murphy's Home."

"Yankee Rose," issued in April, was the final National Quartet record, and Johnny Ryan appears to have made his last appearances in Edison lists in June. He and still another new partner, Gerald Macy, sang the refrain of "My Regular Gal," by Duke Yellman's Orchestra; did a duet of "Sa-Lu Ta!" and Ryan had a solo refrain in "Beedle Um Bo," a fox trot by the Golden Gate Orchestra.

After a long silence, Arthur Hall was back in December, 1927, on No. 52131, an electrically recorded medley, "Christmas Songs for Children." For its companion, Vaughn deLeath, recited "The Night Before Christmas" to a piano accompaniment. In January, 1925, Arthur had cultivated the "kiddie trade" with double-faced record No. 51465, "Songs for Little Boys," and in February, 1926, he proved he played no sexual favorites by singing "Songs for Little Girls" on 51626.

Following the Christmas disc, Arthur Hall appeared on one more Edison record. In May, 1928, he was heard in a charming ballad, "Sweet Elaine," which he sang with the help of Fred Vittel, first tenor; Arthur Ballard, baritone, and Don Chalmers, bass. This record was mentioned in my letter quoted in the Gateway article. "Sweet Elaine" was written by Richard Gerard and Harry Armstrong, author and composer of "Sweet Adeline," to commemorate the 25th anniversary of the publication of that greatest of barber shop quartet favorites. They hoped the new song would do equally well, but it was only a moderate success.

After that, Edison issued no more Arthur Hall records, and his recording career was virtually over, except for a few German selections with the Manhattan Quartet.

VII. I Meet Arthur Hall

As Harry Selinger and I were on the way to Arthur Hall's home the afternoon before the 1948 John Biebling Day, I asked him if the singer appeared comparatively young.

"No," Harry replied. "He's gray, and he looks his 60 years, but he gets a lot of fun out of life."

The next day, when I met Arthur, he handed me an autographed photo of himself taken many years before. I found the man before me to be rather small. He was short, gray, quiet and unassumingly friendly. I liked him very much.

I asked if he recalled the Arto Company of Orange, N.J., that made lateral-cut records in the early 1920's. He seemed to have a vague recollection, and mentioned a man, whose name I have forgotten, whom he believed to have been at the head of it.

(Continued on page 129)

not too difficult to come by, either, if one makes a serious effort to collect them.

But jails and prisons, apparently, are not considered suitable subjects for post cards. Unlike Capitols, Post Offices, and Churches, post cards do not pleasantly publicize the cities and states where the jails and prisons are located. Chambers of Commerce are not proud of them; and makers or sellers of souvenirs are not anxious to advertise their attractions, if any.

I looked through thousands of post cards—it seemed like thousands anyway—before I found the card reproduced here. It shows the Old Prison House at Fortress Monroe, Va., where Jefferson Davis was confined at the close of the Civil War.

Perhaps this "Old Prison" was thought worth showing because the president of the Confederate States of America once was imprisoned there. The card is one of the "Local Views" published by Louis Kaufmann & Sons, Baltimore, c. 1905?

Like post cards, stamps seldom commemorate places of detention, and the stamp shown may seem a little "far-fetched." But it does depict a prison—probably the largest prison ever used to keep one man in captivity: the Island of St. Helena, where Napoleon I was imprisoned from 1815 until his death in 1821.

The stamp is one of a set issued in 1934 to celebrate the Island's centenary as a Crown Colony. ("Longwood House," where Napoleon actually lived, is shown on a 10-shilling stamp of 1953).

I could not find anything that faintly resembled a prison on a playing card. But a notable prison is pictured on a cigarette card, the Tower of London. It was built by William the Conqueror in 1078, and many famous people were imprisoned there over the centuries. The card is No. 38 of a "Coronation" set of 50, published c. 1937 by Godfrey Phillips Ltd., and Associated Companies.

The buttons and badges pictured here, are gilt unless otherwise noted.

No. 1, I was told, came from H. M. Prison at Exeter. The design features a cheval-de-frise and fetters, in addition to the Royal Arms of Great Britain. Convex, silvered, with raised design, and flexible shank.

Nos. 2 and 5 were in use at the Worcester County Jail many years ago. They display the Seal of the County: a deer, surrounded by the legend, "Sig. Com. Worces. N. Ang." ("Seal of Worcester County, New England") and the date, "1731" (the year the county was organized). The buttons are convex with designs in relief. No. 2 is marked on the back "F. M. Batchelder - B. & C.," but No. 5 was made by "D. Evans & Co. - Attleboro, Mass."

No. 3, which displays the State Seal of Massachusetts, was worn by an attendant at the Lyman School, a reform school for boys, at Westboro, Mass.* The friend who gave it to me was, for many years, head farmer at the School.

He enjoyed telling about the many "Old Boys" who came back to see him from time to time, to tell him

"Superior Quality."

how they were getting along, and how grateful they were for the good treatment they had received. Convex, silvered, with raised design. Reverse: "Oak Hall Clothing Co. - Boston."

No. 4, United States Penitentiary, Leavenworth, Kans. Flat with letters in low relief against a lined field. Reverse: "Superior Quality."

No. 6, a rampant lion is depicted on this collar badge of Kenya Prisons.**

No. 7, Kansas State Penitentiary, Leavenworth, Kans. This button is similar in type to No. 4, but the letters are in higher relief. Reverse:

No. 8, an elephant and a palm tree are displayed on this cap badge of H. M. Prisons, Gold Coast.** Silvered finish.

No. 9, a cap badge of Uganda Prison Service.** (The bird is a Kavirondo Crane).

No. 10, New York State Prison. There are several State Prisons in New York, and I have no way of knowing from which one this button came. Convex with lined field, raised design. Reverse: "Scoville Mfg. Co. - Waterbury."

No. 11, Great Britain: a cap badge of the Military Prisons Staff Corps. This monogram of Queen Victoria was in use for a short time in 1901-02. It became obsolete soon after the Queen's death.

No. 12, Pennsylvania Industrial Reform School, Huntingdon, Pa. A staff-type button, convex, with design raised against a lined field. Reverse: "Waterbury Button Co."

There is a famous quotation which assures us that:

"Stone walls do not a prison make, nor iron bars a cage."

The author, Richard Lovelace, was a political prisoner, and a poet; a man of high ideals, courage, and imagination. For such prisoners, there is truth in the assertion, for they are able to ignore the bars and to look beyond the walls.

But most prisons are cages. They generally are considered necessary for the protection of Society.

* The Lyman School was closed early in 1972.

** These badges became obsolete in 1953.

BUTTONS WANTED

WANTED: Old buttons, badges, jewelry. — Earl Romey, Box 291, Bluffton, Ind. ja12407

BUTTONS FOR SALE

ANTIQUÉ BUTTONS for sale: S.A.S.E. for lists, or write wants. — Mrs. Helen M. Gray, 31 Hanwell Village, Corning, N.Y. 14830 d3023

Antique Glass Button molds from the factories of Leo Popper & Sons, Burlich Bros. and Heidts, 1870-1917. Prices from $2 to $10. Suggestions for making glass buttons by hand. 50c. Send stamp for price list.—Allen, f38001

BUTTONHOOK BOOK, loaded with information, $1.50, includes free buttonhook, 104 Spoon Patents: information on Medicine spoons, measuring, mustache, juvenile, kitchen, etc. $2.—Bertha Belensley, Rt. 1, Westville, Ind. 46391 ap6698

SPECIAL $10.00

WHILE THEY LAST BUTTON HERITAGE

By Chamberlin & Miner
240 Pages 10 in Color

Order From:

FAULKNER PRINTING
HERITAGE PRESS

Box v Sherburne, New York ttc

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 121)

When I spoke of the long-gone Grey Gull Company, which made a low-priced, not very durable record from about 1920 to 1931, he termed it "a cheap outfit. They still owe me some money," he said.

That afternoon, when he was introduced at the recording artists' party, Arthur sang one of Ernest Ball's 1912 successes, "Here's Love and Success to You," and dedicated it to John Bieling's widow, Mrs. Meta Bieling. He repeated the song and the dedication at the next party, two years later. There was no official John Bieling Day program in 1949, but a number of old-time recording artists gathered at the Bieling home, and Hall and Eugene Rose, who had made flute solos for Edison in 1889, enjoyed talking and singing into a cylinder home recording outfit.

The time I was able to spend with Arthur Hall was too brief, for I recognized him not only as a gifted artist but a true gentleman.

VIII. In Conclusion

This article was begun weeks ago, and I have withheld its conclusion, hoping to obtain specific information about the time and place of Arthur Hall's death.

Up to now the effort has been futile. At the suggestion of the Hempstead Town Clerk, I wrote to the New York State Department of Health at Albany, explaining that I needed to know when and where the singer died and should like to obtain a copy of his death certificate, to get this information. My letter was returned with no reply other than a printed form saying that if I would inform the Department of the time and place of death, give the "deceased's" social security number and some other information, the application for a death certificate would be taken under consideration. That is, in order to obtain the certificate and the information I needed I would have to furnish the information to begin with! This maddening example of bureaucratic inefficiency reminded me of the Circumlocution Department in Dickens' "Little Dorrit."

For the present, I am stymied. But if the information should become available through other sources I promise to share it, HOBBIES readers, with you.

THE END

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

"That Girl" Quartet and other Women's Groups

By JIM WALSH

I. How It Started

If HOBBIES had not published, in October and November, 1971, my article proving that President William McKinley did not make the controversial Columbia record associated with his name, this survey of women's recording groups probably would have remained unwritten.

Shortly after the first McKinley installment appeared I obtained from Lillian and Dulcina McNeill, Oak Park, Ill., sheet music dealers who advertise in HOBBIES, a copy of the music of "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere," which the Euterpean Quartet sang at the President's funeral. The women of the Quartet lived in Canton, Ohio, where McKinley also made his home, and because of "home town" associations they were selected to sing at the memorial service. Since the funeral took place more than 71 years ago, I suppose they all are dead now.

Few people can still be alive who remember anything about that sad occasion. The average American of today has no conception of how popular McKinley was when an assassin's bullet cut him down. He probably was the best loved, at the time of his death, of all American Presidents who have been murdered.

Abraham Lincoln had presided over a bitterly divided country and much of the population hated him. James A. Garfield had not been in office long enough to stir strong emotions. John F. Kennedy was only moderately popular, I think, and very likely as many people disliked as admired him when his death came with dramatic swiftness.

McKinley, too, had his detractors, but the overwhelming majority of citizens felt a deep affection for him, and his passing brought nation-wide grief. When Victor issued a record of "Nearer, My God, To Thee," sung by Richard J. Jose, in October, 1906, the supplement said that the song:

"Of late years . . . has been much associated with the memory of our late President McKinley, whose favorite hymn it was. It is said that with his last breath he tried once more to sing the beautiful words. The day of his funeral at Canton, all trains, trolleys, and machinery in the United States were stopped for five minutes, and 'Nearer, My God, to Thee' was sung in nearly every church in the land."

McKinley was a truly beloved man who was to become, in later years, the victim of slander by "historians" who were not even alive when he was killed.

"THAT GIRL" QUARTET. This photo of the singing group is made from the cover of the sheet music of "Peggy Gray," a song recorded on a United States Everlasting cylinder. It also was published in Victor and Columbia record supplements and catalogs.

Photos of the Euterpean Quartet members were copied with a picture of McKinley, on the sheet music cover of "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere" and made me wish I had owned it in time to use it with my article. Then the thought occurred that I could write about women's singing groups and use that cover as an illustration. True, the Euterpean ladies didn't make records; however HOBBIES readers probably would like to see what those four long inactive singers looked like. And I also could use pictures of "That Girl Quartet" and other singing groups.

Hence, this article. But if I hadn't wanted to share my picture of the Euterpeans with other collectors it most likely would not have occurred to me to write about feminine singing ensembles.

II. Some Minor Groups

So far as I know, no commercial records had been made by women's quartets at the time the Euterpean singers won brief acclaim. In those days, even recorded solos by women, particularly sopranos, usually came out as a screech or a squawk.

Some time around 1896 Berliner made some seven-inch discs by the Alice Nielsen Double Quartet, but I assume the octet was composed of both male and female vocalists. A copy of one of the records, "The Bridge," has a note signed by Miss Nielsen pasted on its back. The Nashville, Tenn., girl, who began as a light opera star and went on to win grand opera laurels, said:

"I regret that I neglected to sign the records recently made by me for the Gram-o-phone, and hasten to send this line of assurance, for the benefit of those who may be interested, that the records purporting to be mine were made by me personally. Very respectfully, Alice Nielsen."

One owner of this record said it was so bad that when playing it he could never make up his mind whether to laugh or to cry.

Possibly the first records by an all-female ensemble were three issued by Victor in February, 1903, which must have been recorded more than 70 years ago. They were sung by the Paloma Quartet, an organization about whose personnel I know nothing. They were announced thus:

"Although the record of a quartet of women's voices has long been regarded

AS SANG AT THE FUNERAL OF OUR MARTYRED PRESIDENT WILLIAM MCKINLEY
BY THE EUTERPEAN QUARTETTE

BEAUTIFUL ISLE OF SOMEWHERE

A SOPRANO SOLO WITH ORGAN OR PIANO ACCOMPANIMENT

A QUARTETTE FOR MEN'S VOICES

A QUARTETTE FOR WOMEN'S VOICES

ALL THREE ARRANGEMENTS
IN ONE COPY

Music by
J. S. FEARIS

Words by
JESSIE BROWN POUNDS

Price 50¢

EUTERPEAN
QUARTETTE

Published by
E. O. EXCELL
FINE ARTS BUILDING CHICAGO MICHIGAN AVENUE.

Morgan's
MUSIC STORE

SANG AT PRESIDENT'S FUNERAL. The Euterpean Women's Quartet sang at the funeral service for President William McKinley in September, 1901. Their pictures, and that of the President, are copied from the cover of a 1901 sheet music edition of "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere."

E. O. Excell, its publisher, was a well-known gospel hymn singer and composer. He made a few records for Homer Rodeheaver's Rainbow discs.

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Reforeathered
Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

Please mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements

as an impossibility, we have succeeded in producing some pleasing records—not loud but very good quality."

The discs were No 1887, "La Paloma" (the Spanish song from which the Quartet must have taken its name); 1889, "Medley of Popular Songs," the most interesting sounding title of the three; and 1890, "German Song — 'The Waterfall.'" (Wonder what No. 1888 was? and what songs were in that medley?).

A few years ago an Ohio reader of HOBBIES saw a statement by me that I had never heard any of these records and doubted that any copies had survived, and kindly sent me one of "The Waterfall." It has a spoken announcement at the beginning by a deep-voiced gentleman whose tones sound much like those of S. H. Dudley, but the enunciation is perhaps, more like William F. Hooley's.

The record is not exactly a thing of beauty. There is a suspicion of pitch waver, the words are rather silly, and the tune is nothing to brag about, but the recording is still surprisingly good for 1902. Prominent in the harmonizing is a contralto who sounds like a masculine bass.

After this I was not able to trace a women's quartet record until Edison in February, 1907, issued a two-minute cylinder, No. 9460, of that perennial standby, "Kentucky Babe." The artists were the Vassar Girls Quartet, who were identified later as Katherine Armstrong and Lovira Taft, sopranos, and Florence Fiske and E. Eleanor Patterson, contraltos. The New Phonogram write-up said:

"A selection by a quartet of women is a new feature in Edison Records, this being the first ever put out by this company. This quartet is well known on the vaudeville stage. Its members have been brought together with special reference to the harmonizing qualities of their voices. The artists have been fortunate in selecting 'Kentucky Babe' for their initial presentation, for it fits their voices finely and they could hardly fail of success in any good selection. They sing without accompaniment. Adam Geibel wrote the music and Richard Henry Buck the words."

Geibel was a blind musician. Buck penned the lyrics for several popular songs that have become classics, including Theodore Morse's "Dear Old Girl" and "Where the Southern Roses Grow." E. Eleanor Patterson later was to become an Edison staff artist, although the Vassar Girls Quartet made no more records.

There is a photograph at the Edison National Historic Site in West Orange, N.J., of a group called "We Girls" Quartet, in which Miss Patterson and Margaret Keyes are identified, but the other women were not. Afterwards Edison issued two records by a "We Girls" Quartet, but, as will be shown, this was a different ensemble.

Moving up now to 1912, in March of that year, Edison issued a cylinder by another women's group. This was a four-minute Amberol No. 941, "Pussy's in the Well," and the singers called themselves the Manhattan Ladies' Quartet. This was the New Phonogram's comment:

(Continued on page 118)

RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

"The old familiar nursery rhyme in an unique musical garb. A quartet of female voices is always a novelty. This organization, composed of Irene Cummings, first soprano; Mabel Meade Davis, second soprano; Annie Laurie McCorkle, first alto, and Anna Winkoop, second alto, is a favorite one in the East. The first Edison Record by these artists is highly enjoyable, and is greatly enhanced by orchestral accompaniment. Music, George B. Nevin."

This is the type of record that one ordinarily would consider of only limited interest and likely to be a "dud." It was successful enough, however, to be reissued in 1913 on Blue Amberol No. 1905.

III. "That Girl" Quartet's Victor Records

Now we come to the most successful women's recording ensemble, the oddly named "That Girl" Quartet. Just how the ladies happened to choose this designation is not authentically known, at least by me, but one story says that when they were to report for their first concert engagement, they had not yet decided on a name. They were a few minutes late, and somebody remarked, "I wonder what's happened to that girl quartet?" The singers overheard the comment just as they were entering and immediately decided to call themselves "That Girl" Quartet. The story may, or may not, be true.

Nomenclature aside, they were a success, and late in 1910 Victor signed them to a contract. They were Harriet Keyes, soprano; Allie Thomas soprano; Presis Thompson, contralto, and Helen Summers, contralto. The first "That Girl" Quartet record was issued in January, 1911. That month's Victor supplement contained a photograph of the "girls," like the larger one shown with this article. The description of their recording, a raging "Indian Song" hit, "Silver Bell," which was coupled with "Honey Love Me All The Time," by a vaudeville comedienne, Lois Fox, read:

"For some unknown reason a successful women's quartet is one of the rarest of novelties. (Some mere man has said it is because they can never agree who shall be the star!) The Victor, however, has discovered an organization which has achieved a well deserved success, and now offers the first of a series of records of popular and standard quartets."

"Silver Bell" is one of the big successes of 1910 and this fine record will doubtless be as popular as the Peerless reproduction, especially as it is accompanied by a pretty little dinky song, cleverly given by Miss Fox, whose work as an entertainer is well known."

The first paragraph of this description was printed in the complete Victor catalog for the next half dozen years or so. "That Girl's" record of "Silver Bell" was popular—any recording of Percy Wenrich's Indian song classic would have been—but it was handicapped by competing with an already issued male voiced version by the Peerless Quartet, which was more to the taste of the average record buyer.

EDISON VERSION. This picture of "That Girl" Quartet is taken from the Edison publication, The New Phonogram, for June, 1911. It is much the same as the larger one shown elsewhere in this issue except that the two women in the center have changed places.

The Peerless' interpretation remained in the catalog under two couplings through 1919, and then in one until after electrical recording was introduced in 1925, but the one by "That Girl" Quartet was dropped in 1920. Probably the weak side by Lois Fox, who made no more records, impaired its popularity.

As for the Peerless offering, until 1920 you could take your choice of No. 16646, on which it was coupled with "In the Gloaming," by Will Oakland and the American Quartet, or of 16927, combined with "Winter," by the Haydn Quartet. After 1920 you could get it only with the latter coupling.

Speaking of the statement that women's quartets never could agree who was to be the star, if "That Girl" had a star, Harriet Keyes (I don't know whether she pronounced her name as Keys or Kize) was it. For a time she was a member of the Victor Light Opera Company. She also made a few solo records for Zonophone, and perhaps some of the other smaller recording firms. Almost a decade after the Quartet's first Victor records were announced, she was given an Edison "voice trial." I often have wondered if she were related to Margaret Keyes, the contralto.

The Victor catalog did not say who the Quartet members were. I obtained that information a comparatively few years ago from a copy of The New Phonogram. As a child I used to study the photo that appeared in the Victor catalog and try to identify the singers.

The first woman (clad, like all the ladies, in a white frock and white hat and with a white parasol) puzzled me. I couldn't make her look like my conception of Oliver Kline, but thought she might be Lucy Isabelle Marsh. The second I took to be Elsie Baker, or perhaps Marguerite Dunlap, but I had no doubt as to the third and fourth being Elizabeth Wheeler and Helen Clark, because there seemed to be a strong resemblance to them in other pictures.

Of course I couldn't have been more wrong! The singer on the extreme left, I can tell now, by comparing the picture with one of the Light Opera Company, was Miss Keyes. But I can't be sure which of the remaining three, who seem never to have tried to make solo records, is Miss Thomas, which Miss Thompson, and which Miss Summers. One reason for my uncertainty will be explained later.

In February, 1911, the Quartet was represented, on No. 16703, with another favorite number in their repertoire, "Honeymooning, Honey, in Bombay." It was coupled with a typical Collins and Harlan "coon" duet, "Slip On Your Gingham Gown."

In March, on single-faced record No. 5827, the Quartet sang one of the great hits of the day, "Put Your Arms Around Me, Honey." This was also rendered, in Negro dialect, by Collins and Harlan. The supplement said:

"This tuneful number, which is one of the new additions to 'Madame Sherry,' is growing in popularity so rapidly that it bids fair to become the hit of the year. To supply the inevitable demand for records of this charming song, it is offered this month in both single and double styles—the women's quartet furnishing a thoroughly musical version which makes an unusually attractive record; while those who prefer a comedy version are referred to the double-faced reproduction by Collins and Harlan."

As it later turned out, "Alexander's Ragtime Band" was "the hit" of 1911.

The comedy interpretation proved more popular than the Quartet's. The latter sold well, however, and was coupled in 1913 with "Cuddle Up A Little Closer, Lovey Mine." sung by Edna Brown (Elsie Baker) and James F. Harrison (Frederick Wheeler).

I do not mean to comment individually on each "That Girl" record. The Quartet's Victor recording covered a span of exactly three years, from January, 1911, through January, 1914. Many of their discs were good sellers, some sold moderately well, and others didn't "get off the ground."

A complete list appears at the end of this article. Probably the best sellers were "Silver Bell," "Put Your Arms Around Me," "On San Francisco Bay," "Kentucky Babe" (handicapped, however, by its more expensive 12-inch size and a weak coupling); "Answer," also handicapped by its 12-inch size; "Down at Mammy Jinny's," "My Little Persian Rose," "We Have Much To Be Thankful For," and "When It's Springtime in Virginia."

RECORDING ARTISTS

The sales of "Mammy Jinny's," "Persian Rose," "We Have Much," and "Springtime in Virginia," were aided materially by being doubled with equally or more popular songs such as "When Uncle Joe Plays a Rag," "Sympathy," "If I Said Please," and "I Love You, California."

"Weak sisters," according to my reckoning, were "Nightingale," "Night Time's the Right Time," "Haying Time," "Make Me Love You," and "I Want to be Somebody's Baby Girl," which was probably the poorest seller of the lot. The remainder fit into the "fair to good seller" classification.

It appears probable that the Quartet had a three-year Victor contract, which was not renewed when most of their later records fell into the "fair" or "poor" sales class. As perhaps was to be expected, "Kentucky Babe" proved the most consistent seller over the years and remained in the catalog until 1924 when the name of "That Girl" Quartet disappeared.

IV. Other "That Girl" Records

The Quartet's contract apparently was not an exclusive one, for in May, 1911, Edison issued a two-minute Standard cylinder by the ladies of "Honeymooning, Honey, in Bombay," which they already had sung for Victor. Following is the New Phonogram's description:

"... The first Edison Record made by 'That Girl' Quartet, a well-known organization, very successful in vaudeville and in high class concert work. Their repertoire includes both standard and popular numbers, of which latter this song with its pretty, lilting melody is a prime favorite. The voices of the singers—first and second sopranos, contralto and alto—are finely balanced, and the quality of their work can safely be judged from this initial Record, which we feel sure will be appreciated as much for its musical qualities as for the novelty of owning a Record made by an entirely female quartet. . . ."

In June, the Phonogram published a picture of the Quartet, which is virtually the same as the one Victor used except that the two women in the center have changed places. This makes it difficult to identify the singers by their positions.

Going by the Victor photo, which is the same as the larger one shown with this article, I would take it that they are in order, with the high voices to the left and the deeper ones to the right: Harriet Keyes, Allie Thomas, Presis Thompson, and Helen Summers. But if the person who identified them in a later issue of the Phonogram was looking at the photo Edison used the order may be Keyes, Thompson, Thomas, and Summers.

Also in June, Columbia issued double-faced record No. A1001, both sides of which were sung by the Savoy Girl Quartet. I have no way of knowing positively, but I suspect this was really "That Girl" Quartet, and Victor consented to their singing for Columbia only in "disguise." Here is the Columbia supplement description:

"DOUBLE QUARTET" LEADER. This picture of Alice Nielsen is from a Columbia record poster of about 1911. Miss Nielsen, who later became a noted grand opera singer, had a "double quartet" that made Berliner records in the 1890's.

"It is so seldom that a thoroughly acceptable women's quartet can be found for recording purposes that this new Columbia Double-Disc is certain to attract much attention for its fine balance of voices, its unusually musical blending and the fine organization work displayed. No one who has heard Leslie Stuart's charming new musical comedy, 'The Slim Princess' . . . can fail to be interested in the selection, 'Let Me Live and Stay in Dixieland,' which has been given clamorous applause at every performance, forming indeed the most spectacular part of the production. It is assuredly one of the cleverest songs of the kind ever written. The selection coupled with this, 'Don't Wake Me Up, I Am Dreaming,' bids fair to be the great sentimental ballad success of the present season. . . ."

The names of the composers of "Let Me Live and Stay" are given erroneously as Price and King. The song was written, actually, by the musical comedy stars, Elizabeth Brice and Charles King, who recorded it and a few other numbers for Victor.

Somewhere about this time, "That Girl" recorded "Peggy Gray" on United States Everlasting cylinder No. 1274. As their photo appeared on the sheet music of this song, it is strange they didn't record it for Victor or Edison. Perhaps they wanted to, but the Victor and Edison artist and repertoire departments thought the ballad wouldn't "go." It was not a hit.

In May, 1911, the Quartet made another appearance in the Edison cylinder list. They sang on four-minute Amberol record No. 831 a very pretty song, "The Owl in the Old Oak Tree," which Walter Van Brunt (who died, aged 78, April 11, 1971) and John Bieling recorded as a duet for Victor. Said the New Phonogram:

"The first Amberol Record by this favorite organization of female singers . . . 'The Owl in the Old Oak Tree' is a dainty little number, particularly as arranged for this record, and is sung with excellent taste and harmony. The repetition of the refrain by the orchestra with the introduction of a dance effect furnishes a pleasing variation."

The "Owl" song was quite successful, so much so that Edison decided to relist it in 1913 as Blue Amberol cylinder No. 2113.

In April, 1912, Columbia issued its only "That Girl" Quartet record which appeared under the ensemble's name. It coupled "Honey Love," which the Quartet had sung for Victor almost a year before, with one of the prettiest popular songs ever written, Percy Wenrich's "Moonlight Bay." Since the "Bay" side was sung by Dolly Connolly, who in private life was Mrs. Wenrich, the record should have had a big sale. Here is the description of the Quartet side:

"The work of 'That Girl' Quartet has of late attracted such attention by its excellence as to warrant the favorable consideration of Columbia recording experts, whose standard of criticism in musical affairs is perhaps the most rigorous in the world. The ensemble of this quartet is really remarkable and the popular little plantation serenade which they have sung for us is a selection which shows the fine blending of their concerted work to perfection."

This was high praise but there were no more appearances by "That Girl" Quartet in Columbia lists. The supplement showed a picture of the "girls" which was the same as the one used by Victor and that was on the sheet music cover.

V. The Quartet's Last Records

After Victor issued "When It's Spring Time in Virginia" in January, 1914—the month that brought a distinctive change in the design of Victor labels—the name of "That Girl" Quartet disappeared from record supplements for almost a decade. Then, at some time in 1923, after the price of Blue Amberol cylinders had dropped from 60 to 35 cents, the Quartet surprisingly popped up in an Edison supplement and sang an obscure song, "I'm Yours With Love and Kisses."

For many years that record—I have a copy, and the one on the Blue Amberol is indistinct and squeaky—puzzled me. When was it made? Because it contained two levels of surface noise I could tell it was dubbed from a Diamond Disc. This meant it originally was sung some time after the process of dubbing cylinders from discs began, early in 1915, but still that didn't indicate the year.

The song was so little known I couldn't date the record approximately by the time the music was published. However, I guessed it was made somewhere between 1916 and 1919 and, like hundreds of other Edison recordings, was held back until any chance of its becoming a popular seller was past.

Finally, when I began to make notes for this article, I wrote to Mrs. Leah S. Burt, the assistant archivist of the Edison National Historic Site (formerly the Edison laboratory) at West Orange, N.J., and asked what she could tell me about any Edison records by "That Girl" Quartet. Always cooperative and courteous, Mrs. Burt wrote me on March 3, 1972:

"Dear Mr. Walsh: . . . On the cards made at the recording studio, the following information is available:

(Continued on next page)

RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from preceding page)

"THAT GIRL QUARTET"

"Title, 'My Flower Girl'; Serial No., 5998; Date, Feb. 5, 1918; Passed: Hold; Blue — Comments, Hold. Edison.

"Title, 'I'm Yours With Love and Kisses'; Serial No., 6002; Date, Feb. 6, 1918; Passed: Hold; Blue, 4730; Comments, Passed, Edison.

"On the title cards for the various songs, only the following can be found:

"My Flower Girl," Pierce-Basketette-Little, published by Leo Feist, New York; passed by R. D. Disc; "That Girl" Quartet, serial No. 5998.

"I'm Yours With Love and Kisses," Herbert Spencer, published by Jerome H. Remick & Co., passed by Recording Department. Disc, "That Girl" Quartet, serial No. 6002; Blue Amberol, serial No. 4730.

"Miss Harriet Keyes, soprano, was the only one of the group that made a voice trial for Edison. Her voice trial was on Jan. 3, 1918, with these comments by Mr. Edison: 'Pretty good voice.'

"There was one disc record made by 'That Girl' Quartet, but never issued, (ED-643): serial No. 6002, 'I'm Yours With Love and Kisses,' paired with serial No. 6946-B, 'Up Above the Clouds,' Yvette Rugel, recording artist.

"We have no record as to the members of the Quartet: Helen Summers, Presis Thompson, Allie Thomas are mentioned nowhere in our files . . .

"Among our photographs of recording artists, there is one photograph of an all-female quartet, labeled as follows: 'We Girls' Quartet, or 'The Girl Quartet,' Eleanor Patterson and ? Keyes, the other two members unidentified.

"I sincerely hope that this meager information will help you in your forthcoming article. With best wishes, I remain, Sincerely yours, Leah S. Burt."

I suspect it may be in order to clarify the chart given in Mrs. Burt's letter. The serial number, 5998, for "My Flower Girl," is the number of the Diamond Disc master record.

It was recorded on Tuesday, February 5, 1918, but never was issued on either the disc or a Blue Amberol. Mr. Edison had ordered it "held," so there must have been something unsatisfactory about it to him. "R.D." stood for the Recording Department, which had approved it.

"I'm Yours With Love and Kisses" had Diamond Disc serial No. 6002. This means that three master records were made by other artists between it and "My Flower Girl." It was sung on Wednesday, February 6, 1918.

After first being ordered held, Mr. Edison eventually passed it and, some five years later, it made its debut on a Blue Amberol. Farther down in Mrs. Burt's letter, we learn that the intention also was to issue it as a disc, paired with a number sung in 1919 by a vaudeville artist, Yvette Rugel, but this was never done.

"Pierce, Basketette and Little" were the writers of that completely unsuccessful song, "My Flower Girl," and Herbert Spencer composed the equally unknown "I'm Yours." The words probably were by his wife, Fleta Jan Brown, who wrote most of his lyrics.

Spencer was a composer of considerable distinction and was known among his fellow practitioners as a "clean writer" — that is, one who always wrote his own original tunes and didn't steal them from some older song. However, around 1925, he produced a successful number called "Me Neenyah" described as "a Spanish serenade," with the title meaning "My Little One."

He was chagrined to find, after it was published, however, that its melody was, note for note, the same as that of a song which had been issued in Germany a considerable time earlier, but which he had never heard. The identical melodies were purely coincidental, but Spencer's publishers had to settle a damage claim from the German Music Company.

The "all-female" quartet, with E. Eleanor Patterson and Margaret (not Harriet) Keyes, which Mrs. Burt mentions, seems to have been an early version of another group that afterwards made Edison records under the "We Girls" name. Miss Patterson, you may remember, was also a contralto in the Vassar Girls Quartet.

The ladies appear to have made their final recordings of sentimental ballads at a singularly unpropitious time. In February, 1918, the American people had plunged wholeheartedly into participation in World War I, and the successful musical numbers were nearly all war songs. They included "Over There," "Goodbye, Broadway, Hello, France," "Where Do We Go From Here?" "Keep the Home Fires Burning," and innumerable others. In those stirring times there was little sale for "sugary" love tunes. And, so far as I know, after 1918, there were never any more records by "That Girl" Quartet.

VI. Jimmy Martindale's
Reminiscences

My dear friend of 35 years standing, "Jimmy" Martindale, spends most of his time nowadays at Daytona Beach, Fla., where he is in retirement with his wife, Ruth. For many years he lived in Brooklyn and operated the Martindale-Hubbell law directory business which came to him as a family inheritance, but in his early 20's he had theatrical ambitions and appeared in several stage productions. In one of them he met "That Girl" Quartet!

I recently asked Jimmy to refresh my memory as to how this came about, and he did so to such good effect that I quote from his letter:

"Dear Old Buddy: It was in March, 1919, at the Orpheum Theater in Newark, N.J., where I was making my maiden appearance as a professional actor with the Corse Payton Stock Company. I was enacting the role of 'Sam' in the famous rural drama, 'Way Down East.'

"Besides doing the above mentioned 'bit' in the first act, I also filled in as assistant stage manager, which kept me busy, among other things, ringing the curtain up and down.

"As to the girls in the quartet, I didn't actually become aware of them until the last rehearsal of 'Way Down East.' They did not appear in the play proper, but had been engaged by Corse to sing between the acts as sort of an 'added attraction.'

"I had the opportunity of talking with them during the week they were performing and found them most charming and friendly. I remember telling them I was a bit surprised to see them appearing with what was, to say the least, a second run attraction, and one of them remarked, 'Well, we must eat.'

"I do not intend to use 'second run' in a derogatory sense at all. Let us just say that the company wasn't of Broadway caliber. But, then, the Payton companies never strove to be, anyway.

"The ladies were 'thrilled' that I had so many of their records (in fact, all they made for Victor) and said they would love to autograph one for me, but I never got a record to them.

"Incidentally, the 'girls' looked, as the British would say, a bit 'long in the tooth,' even in 1919, so I would assume if they are still extant they would be by this time, as Arthur Collins said, (in 'Bake Dat Chicken Pie'), 'very old ladies.'

"Weren't their recording days about over at that time (1919)? . . . I vividly recall that their vocalizing was just as sweet and harmonious as it was on their records, and I stood in rapt attention in the wings as they performed. . . ."

It is possible, but not probable, that some of the Quartet members are still "extant." The odds, however, are against it. Consider. It now has been 62 years since their first records were made, and in order to have achieved a reputation they must have started singing together a considerable time before that.

Say they began in 1907—that would be 65 years ago. And, since probably none of the members were under 25 when their association began, they must now be 90 or more, if still alive. It would be interesting to know what happened in their later years.

Were any of them married during their singing era, or did they take husbands afterwards? I wish I knew, but I don't. I at least hope that if they are no longer with us their last years were happy.

In a subsequent article, we will consider the Homestead Trio, which made many Edison records, beginning in 1917. I also will give incidental mention to some other women's singing groups.

THE END

VICTOR RECORDS BY
"THAT GIRL" QUARTET

- (January, 1911, through January, 1914)
- 16695 Silver Bell. Reverse: Honey, Love Me All the Time (Lois Fox).
  - 16703 Honeymooning, Honey, in Bombay. Reverse: Slip on Your Gingham Gown (Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan).
  - 5827 Put Your Arms Around Me, Honey.
  - 5833 Nightingale.
  - 16848 Honey Love. Reverse: On San Francisco Bay.
  - 35188 Kentucky Babe. Reverse: Knee-Deep in June (Henry Allan Price).
  - 16880 Hold Me Just a Little Closer. Reverse: Don't Wake Me Up, I Am Dreaming (Walter Van Brunt).
  - 35192 Answer. Reverse: The Fencing Master—Ah, Yes I Love You (Elizabeth and William Wheeler).
  - 16886 Night Time's the Right Time. Reverse: Peek-a-boo, Mister Moon, Peek-a-boo.
  - 16906 Haying Time. Reverse: I'm Just Pining for You (Van Brunt).
  - 16990 Make Me Love You Like I Never Loved Before. Reverse: I Want a Regular Pal for a Gal (Van Brunt).
  - 17032 Senorita—A Cuban Romance. Reverse: In Dixie Land With Dixie Lou.
  - 17118 Down At Mammy Jinny's. Reverse: When Uncle Joe Plays a Rag On His Old Banjo (Collins).
  - 17146 My Bombay Maid. Reverse: Way Down South (Heidelberg Quintet).
  - 17219 Rosalie. Reverse: Under Many Flags—Temple Bells (Lyric Quartet).
  - 17267 Put Your Arms Around Me, Honey.

RECORDING ARTISTS

- Reverse: The Three Twins—Cuddle Up a Little Closer, Lovey Mine (Edna Brown & James F. Harrison).
- 17270 My Little Persian Rose. Reverse: The Firefly—Sympathy (Helen Clark & Van Brunt).
- 17409 We Have Much to be Thankful For. Reverse: If I Said Please (Ada Jones—Billy Murray).
- 17421 I Want to be Somebody's Baby Girl. Reverse: Love Me While the Lovin' is Good (Peerless Quartet).
- 17437 When It's Springtime in Virginia. Reverse: I Love You, California (Elsie Baker).
- COLUMBIA RECORD (1912)
- A1128 Honey Love. Reverse: Moonlight Bay (Dolly Connolly).
- EDISON STANDARD TWO-MINUTE CYLINDER (May, 1911)
- 10494 Honeymooning, Honey. in Bombay. EDISON AMBEROL FOUR-MINUTE CYLINDER (November, 1911)
- 831 Owl in the Old Oak Tree.
- EDISON BLUE AMBEROL CYLINDERS (1913-1923)
- 2113 Owl in the Old Oak Tree.
- 1730 I'm Yours With Love and Kisses. U.S. EVERLASTING CYLINDER
- 1274 Peggy Gray.

"Tops"

VIRGINIA—Thanks a million for informing me my subscription is expiring. I just can't have that happen, so I'm enclosing my check for $6.00. This entitles me to another year of information and educational material. I must say HOBBIES is tops on every subject. I highly recommend it to my customers. Yes, I have an antique shop and specialize in dolls. So you see I can't do without it. Keep up the good work—you are helping me and many others who are eager to learn more about our past.

—Margaret L. Smith

HOBBIES—Number 1

PENNSYLVANIA—We enclose photos for our January ad. Our results have been terrific. We have tried others but you are Number 1.

—Richard Wright

Weekend Relaxation

ILLINOIS—I would like to tell you at this time how Very Much I enjoy your magazine. You cannot imagine how nice it is to come home from work on Saturday and relax by reading about—Just About Anything! Please accept my five year renewal.

—Wm. Piech

Satisfied New Reader

CALIFORNIA—I have been a reader of your fine magazine for about four months. now.

—Robert S. Haines

Improving

TEXAS—Thank you for the reminder. I enclose check for another year of your wonderful magazine. It gets better as the years roll by and I've learned so many things from the fine articles and your advertising.

—Ms Pagett

HE KNEW QUARTET. Jimmy Martindale (right), shown here with Billy Murray (left) and Jim Walsh, appeared with "That Girl" Quartet in a Corse Payton production of "Way Down East."

He was Billy Murray's closest friend during the great comedian's last years. This picture is unjust to Murray, because, from some quirk of lighting or the angle at which it was taken, it makes him appear bald and years older than he actually looked.

"LUCKY JIM, CHRISTY, THE PROFESSOR, POSSY AND JIM WALSH AGAIN WISH THE GREAT HOBBIES FAMILY
A MERRY CHRISTMAS AND A HAPPY NEW YEAR"

1. Just to make sure we don't miss the deadline, the residents of "Plummy's Palace" (also known as "Twisty's Towers") are preparing our annual Christmas & New Year Greetings on August 23, 1972, while our home town of Vinton, Va., is undergoing a sweltering heat wave, to which we may look back longingly in December and January. The first picture shows LUCKY JIM, also known as "Black Power," the patriarch of the Walsh feline family. Apparently he is sniffing for tracks of Santa Claus. Or perhaps he's trying to qualify for a job with the Professor's detective agency.
2. CHRISTY, who always prefers to be called "Twisty," is turning a somersault in glee at the thought that Santa Claus soon will visit her. This picture was taken by Quentin Eggs in September, 1971, but Twisty insists on remaining a kitten and apparently hasn't gained on ounce or grown an inch since she posed for this picture.
3. Shown here are two newcomers to these greetings, Hugh W. Sigmon, a Roanoke, Va., architect, and his venerable cat "Mac." Mr. Sigmon and his wife, "Jackie," are devoted cat lovers. So are their children.
4. PROFESSOR PLUM DUFF WALSH, Ph. D., the intellectual "feline Einstein," is shown at peace in the lap of his "Papa" Jim Walsh. Rumor has it that the Professor, who is famed for his "grouch poems," accompanied President Nixon to China and Russian as his highest-ranking top secret adviser, and also was active in the Democratic and Republican national conventions. He recently sent some of his poems to Mrs. Tricia Nixon Cox and received a charming letter of thanks, saying she and the President had enjoyed them together.

5. This young gentleman is one of the cats' (and POSSY'S) favorite personalities. His name is Ishmeal Foster Wright, but he usually is known as "Ish." He is shown slicing beef liver into cat-sized bites in the Mick-or-Mack meat department where he is employed. After the liver is sliced, LUCKY JIM, TWISTY, THE PROFESSOR, AND POSSY will eat it.
6. Last but anything but least, in their own estimation, are TOP (white) and "FWEE" (orange colored), who live with Mr. and Mrs. Walter Jenkins at Cedar Crest Farm, Rose Hill, Va. They are displaying a sign advocating Professor Walsh for President. But, although he appreciated the compliment, The Professor declined to run as an independent. Finally, in extending good wishes for a Happy New Year, we looked back into the past and are filled with tender memories of cats and dogs that we, and our friends have loved and lost. Through Eternity we will Never Forget!

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

The Homestead Trio and "No Girl" Quartet

By JIM WALSH

I. "Indiana" And Other Hits

Early in 1917 Thomas A. Edison's recording experts decided they needed a trio of women's voices to sing old-fashioned, sentimental "heart songs." Such musical offerings were loved by a large proportion of Edison record buyers and were especial favorites of Mr. Edison himself.

The ensemble was to be called the Homestead trio. For its members the experts chose three young women with harmoniously blending voices, none of whom had been making records for much more than a year.

All, however, had established themselves as valuable staff artists, contracted to record only for Edison. All made solo records as well as duets with other singers, and all not only had good voices but attractive personalities.

The three were Gladys Rice, first soprano, who was then only 20 or 21 and who is still theatrically active today; the slightly older Betsy Lane Shepherd, second soprano; and Amy Ellerman, contralto. It also was decided that a woman's quartet occasionally would be needed, and this could be managed by adding to the trio a second contralto, Marion Evelyn Cox. The larger group would be called "We Girls" Quartet, a title probably copied from the name of "That Girl" Quartet, whose recording career previously has been discussed.

Before the singers became staff members, they had to make trial recordings approved by Mr. Edison. On July 17, 1915, he wrote, after hearing Miss Rice's test: "Fair voice. Thin. Little scrapey at points. Possibly you could use her." I emphatically do not think the inventor's deafened ears were fair to Gladys Rice.

His remarks about Mrs. Shepherd (the Edison Company often called her Miss, but Shepherd was her married name) were more favorable. On June 1, 1916, Mr. Edison commented: "She has a very good coloratura voice and is very promising." He added a warning, however, that her trial records were not loud enough and must not be issued.

Of these ladies, Miss Rice, as already said, still is living and is in good health. Mrs. Shepherd and Miss Ellerman are dead. I have no information concerning the latter years of Miss Cox. Brief biographical sketches will be given of them later, as well as of Elizabeth Spencer who took Miss Rice's place as the trio's higher voiced soprano in 1921. But first their records must be considered.

"SECOND EDITION." This picture, reproduced from a 1921 Edison Amberola Monthly, was taken after ELIZABETH SPENCER (left) succeeded GLADYS RICE as a member. AMY ELLERMAN is in the center and BETSY LANE SHEPHERD at the right.

The trio's recording career had an auspicious start. Their first Re-Creations were listed in the 80,000 series, roughly equivalent to Victor's Blue Label, and sold at first for $1.50. When prices advanced after our entrance into World War I the cost became $1.70, then was increased to $1.85, but dropped back to $1.50 at the beginning of 1922.

One disc went into the most expensive category, 82,000, which corresponded to the Victor Red Seal, sold at first for $2, later increased to $2.25, and still later returned to the $2 level. And their first four records all were among the Edison "best sellers," though in at least two instances this remarkable showing, I think, was caused by their offerings having extremely popular numbers on the reverse sides.

Homestead "Girls," in Edison publicity is in Diamond Points for June, 1917, when Diamond Disc dealers were told: "The Homestead Trio of female voices is one of the finest organizations of its kind in the country. Their first Re-Creation - 'Indiana' - is scheduled for the 72nd supplement.

(Edison in those days had the annoying habit of numbering, but not dating, record supplements, so it's hard to tell exactly when this disc was made public, but it probably was in July.)

That month's Diamond Points said:

"The Homestead Trio is a new name to you. Who are they?" asks a dealer in

FIRST—
Miss Shepherd sang "In the Gloaming." The New Edison stood on the stage by her side

185 times —

ONE hundred and eighty-five times, Miss Betsy Lane Shepherd has stood on a public concert platform, and sung the old heart-songs with all the exquisite fervor of her art. One hundred and eighty-five times, a New Edison has stood by her side, and brought her RE-CREATED voice into direct comparison with her living voice. One hundred and eighty-five times, her audience has found no difference between the two voices, either in quality, or in feeling, or in emotional influence.

AT Dallas, Texas, on April 26, 1920, Miss Shepherd, who is a famous concert soprano, stood before her 185th audience. She started to sing:

"In the gloaming, oh! my darling—"

With a soft, rounded loveliness, the beloved melody filled the auditorium. Pulsing through its theme was the soul of a great artist. Its message reached the hearts of the hushed listeners, and sped their imaginations back to cherished memories.

It was the magic of music!

Suddenly Miss Shepherd's lips went absolutely still. But her lovely voice went smoothly on—

"—it was best to leave you thus—"

The audience was puzzled. Then it awoke. Miss Shepherd's voice was now coming from the New Edison. For the 185th time, an audience had heard the Betsy Lane Shepherd test—and had been unable to tell the difference between her living voice and her RE-CREATED voice.

More than 4000 other audiences have heard more than fifty other vocalists and instrumentalists make this same test of

The NEW EDISON
"The Phonograph with a Soul"

"TONE TEST" ARTIST. Shown here is the first half of a two-page 1920 Edison ad depicting BETSY LANE SHEPHERD singing in direct comparison with one of her records.

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Reforeathered
Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

tfo

Please mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements

Arkansas. Who do you think? Betsy Lane Shepherd, Amy Ellerman, and Gladys Rice. If you have ever heard anything sweeter than their "Indiana," please notify the editor. "Indiana" is another "On the Banks of the Wabash." Take our tip and get your order in promptly."

The statement that "Indiana" was another "Banks of the Wabash" contained more than a grain of truth. In fact, it was an open and undisguised imitation of the older song.

Ballard Macdonald wrote the words and James F. Hanley the music. They evidently had in mind the popular song writer's adage that the best way to write a hit is to turn out something that is not a slavish copy of an old tune, but that, nevertheless, will remind the hearer pleasantly of an earlier success.

Almost 20 years before, Paul Dresser had written "On the Banks of the Wabash," which had become an enduring classic. Macdonald and Hanley evidently decided the time had come for another ballad in praise of Indiana. Four years earlier, Macdonald had represented himself, in writing the words of "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," as longing for the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia. Now he quite as easily became nostalgic for the flat lands of Indiana.

As Dresser had mentioned the moonlight on the wabash, the fragrance of new-mown hay, and candle-lights gleaming through the sycamores; so did Macdonald; and Hanley even "lifted" a few bars of the "Wabash" music for the refrain of his song. Compare the refrains of the two ballads and you will see how they resemble in sentiment.

First, consider "On the Banks of the Wabash":

"Oh, the moonlight's fair tonight along the Wabash.
From the fields there comes the breath of new-mown hay.
Through the sycamores the candlelights are gleaming,
On the banks of the Wabash far away."

Now check "Indiana":

"Back home again in Indiana, and it seems that I can see
The gleaming candlelight still shining bright through the sycamores for me.
The new-mown hay sends all its fragrance from the fields I used to roam.
When I dream about the moonlight on the Wabash then I long for my Indiana home."

Despite the frank resemblance, "Indiana" was not a "steal," and many hearers considered its melody even lovelier than that of the earlier song. An immediate hit, today it is enshrined, like "On the Banks of the Wabash," as an American classic.

It did so well that seven years later Macdonald and Hanley reworked the theme by writing "At the End of the Road," which speaks of "going back to Indiana." This, too, was a success and was recorded by all the companies, but fell short of equalling the acclaim of "Indiana."

The Homestead Trio's record was one of the 300 best selling Edison discs. Its popularity, however, probably was caused to a large extent by its being coupled with the first record

(Continued on page 118)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

Edison issued by Vernon Dalhart, William H. Gardner, and Caro Roma's "Can't Yo' Heah Me Callin' Caroline?"

Dalhart had made voice tests and had been announced as an Edison artist in 1915, but this 1917 record was first to reach the market. He had been recording for Columbia and Emerson, but himself said that "Caroline" was the first record on which the true quality of his voice was caught.

In my opinion his interpretation is the best ever recorded by anybody of this charming song. It shows Dalhart is shown, not in his later role as the greatest singer of country music, mostly of a pseudo-commercial type, but as a beautiful voiced tenor interpreting a Negro dialect to the life.

There is no vaudeville or minstrel imitation of the Negro accent in his work, but his pronunciation is precisely like that of the black friends he had known in Texas. The record is a masterpiece.

The envelope in which "Indiana" was sold contained the following description:

"The Homestead Trio is composed of three artists who are each popular as soloists. This organization aims to present the old-fashioned 'homey' sort of pieces—real heart-songs of which the present selection is a fine example. In this rendition, notice how the strains of 'On the Banks of the Wabash' are introduced. Also listen for the harp that has several beautiful passages. This whole presentation is in sharp contrast to the garish tunes that are generally in vogue."

The trio's version of "Indiana" is delightful, but although "women's lib" advocates probably will call me a "male, chauvinist pig" for this, I prefer the male voiced rendition by the Sterling Trio (Campbell, Burr, and Meyer) on Victor and Pathé records. But then I personally don't think any women's group generates as fine harmony as does a splendid male trio or quartet.

Blue Amberol cylinders could be turned out more rapidly and were made with less care than the Re-Creations, so they usually were on the market before the disc version of the same selection was available, but that appears not to have been true of "Indiana." It was not listed as a cylinder until September, 1917.

Even though "Indiana" was a resounding success, the Homestead Trio was not heard from again on the discs until almost a year later, when "Just a Baby's Prayer at Twilight," one of the big war-time song hits, was offered. The Blue Amberol version came out in June.

In November, 1917, however, the cylinder of "Old Virginny Days," had appeared. The disc of the tear-jerker "Baby's Prayer" had another Dalhart number, "Lorraine (My Beautiful Al-sace Lorraine)" for its "other-side" companion. It is splendidly sung, but

LEADING COMEDIAN. This picture of BILLY MURRAY, duet partner for GLADYS RICE on Edison, Victor, and other records, appeared in Edison Amberola Monthly for March, 1920. "The Denver Nightingale," as Murray was called, was then the biggest selling recording artist and was considered the world's most popular comedian.

purists will find amusement in the fact that Dalhart mispronounces "legions" as "legends." He sings, "Come, you legends to command."

The disc of "Old Virginny Days" was issued in the summer of 1918, and became one of the 300 best Edison sellers, I think, chiefly because a more popular song, "When I'm Gone You'll Soon Forget," was sung by Helen Clark and Walter Van Brunt on its reverse. This mournful ballad was so successful on Edison that it compelled all other companies to issue "cover" versions, and the Victor became one of the best sellers the Peerless Quartet ever had. After electrical recording came in they had to remake it.

Theodore Morse, who composed the music of "Old Virginny Days," visited Virginia as a member of the Peerless Record Makers in the spring of 1917, and, as a Virginian, I should like to believe that the visit inspired the song. The words, however, were written by William H. Gardner, who had done those of "Caroline." I can't think of any of the hundreds of songs by Teddy Morse for which he wrote his own words.

The fourth disc by the Homestead Trio had their singing on both sides. This disc was issued in the 82000 series and was the one that cost $2.25. It coupled Ivor Novello's war-time classic, "Keep the Home Fires Burning," with a less successful Novello song, "The Laddie in Khaki." The record envelope said:

"The Homestead Trio, composed of Gladys Rice, Betsy Lane Shepherd and Amy Ellerman, makes a specialty of singing a certain type of songs in just a certain style—real heart-songs sung in a heartfelt way that is tremendously appealing. All three of these artists are well known to Edison owners. They are all equally popular, and to have them sing on one record has already proven a great treat for their many admirers. They made the selection, 'Just a Baby's Prayer at Twilight,' one of the most popular numbers ever listed. Have you heard it?"

(Again I stick in my personal "two-cents worth" and say that although the ladies' interpretation of the ditty about the baby's praying at twilight "for her daddy Over There" is good, Henry Burr's solo versions on Victor and other records is better. Nobody could beat our Hank at extracting the last ounce of sentiment from a "tear-jerker!"

Most of the Homestead Trio records that followed their first "big four" showed a declining trend in popularity. They will be discussed in the next section.

II. Elizabeth Spencer Returns

Among the remaining trio records made by the combination of Rice, Shepherd, and Ellerman, only one calls for special mention. That is "Dusky Lullaby," issued in Blue Amberol form in or about February, 1919.

The disc is interesting because its coupling is "The Glow Worm," Paul Lincke's famous intermezzo set to words. This was the first record by the "We Girls" Quartet.

To anticipate a little, the only other "We Girls" record was a Charles Wakefield Cadman song, "Goodbye, My Baby," issued on a Blue Amberol in August, 1922, and on Diamond Disc No. 50944 at some time that year, it had "Huckleberry Finn," by the Premier Quartet, for its mating.

This, I think, was a characteristic example of Edison's withholding records until their sales value was lost. "Huckleberry Finn" was recorded in 1917, when it came close to being a hit, but who wanted it in 1922 after it almost was forgotten?

In 1920, Gladys Rice, who must have had an exclusive four or five-year contract with Edison, began to sing for other companies. So the issuing of Homestead Trio records came temporarily to an end, perhaps because Miss Rice was so busy with free-lance she no longer had time to participate.

About the middle of 1921, however, Elizabeth Spencer, who had been one of the most popular Edison artists but had left early in 1917 to become exclusive to Victor, returned to her original affiliation and soon was booked for an entire season of tone-testing about the country. Apparently, Elizabeth, who in private life was Mrs. E. B. Southworth and lived in Montclair, N.J., had repented of leaving Edison, since Victor did almost nothing to promote her records and she never gained a Victor following comparable to the one she had on Edison.

Admirers of her Edison records said her Victors were so inferior that if they had not seen her name on the label they would not have known it for the same voice. Regardless of whether this was true, Miss Spencer seemed glad to be back with Edison and Edison was glad to have her back. She was named immediately as first soprano of the revived Homestead Trio.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

One of the new group's discs, issued toward the end of 1921, about the time Edison changed from black record labels to white, was a revival of an old "sob song," "There's a Mother Always Waiting You at Home, Sweet Home," which James L. Thornton had written in 1903. It probably was recorded under Mr. Edison's orders, and first appeared with a black label, but a white label edition came out almost immediately afterward.

And that brings up a question I often have puzzled about. What became of the huge numbers of black label records the Edison factory and jobbers must have had in stock at the time the switch to white labels was made?

From the beginning of 1922 retail dealers' orders were not filled with anything but white label discs, yet the dealers' orders were not filled with anything but white labels, yet the black labels still must have been around. It has been suggested that the white labels were pasted over old stock with black centers, but, as every Edison collector knows, the white labels peeled off very easily—too easily—yet I never have found a "peeler" with a black label beneath it. And what a job it must have been to print new white labels and make fresh pressings for the thousands of records in the catalog!

It is hard, I think, to see how "There's a Mother Always Waiting" could have any appeal for record buyers other than the most unsophisticated, as the words are crude, only semi-literate, and the tune nothing to brag about. But something made it sell.

For years, as sung by Will Oakland, it had been one of the most popular Edison four-minute cylinders, and in 1924—perhaps inspired by the Edison example—Victor issued it by Lewis James and the Shannon Four. The lyrics told of a country mother who predicted all sorts of dire things if her bumpkin son, "Jim," left the farm—calamities that all came true. But she assured him that: "When friends you haven't any, in your pocket not a penny, there's a mother always waiting you at home, sweet home."

The Prodigal Son returned in rags, laughed at by children and snapped at by dogs and found that Mother had kept her word. She still was waiting. Jim Thornton could do better than this doleful dinge. He did with "My Sweetheart's the Man in the Moon," and "When You Were Sweet Sixteen." But the old song was a good seller on both the cylinder and disc.

Also interesting is the fact that the revised trio assisted Thomas Chal-

*To Jim Walsh
All the best from Plum
P. G. Wodehouse - Oct 19*

FAMOUS HUMORIST. P. G. WODEHOUSE, generally considered the world's foremost author of humorous stories, wrote the words of several duets recorded by Gladys Rice and Billy Murray. These included "I'm So Busy," "Nesting Time in Flatbush," "You Said Something," and the hilarious "Bungalow in Quogue."

Mr. Wodehouse is a regular reader of HOBBIES.

mers, the Metropolitan Opera baritone, to sing another of Thomas A. Edison's favorite old-time tear-jerkers, "Do They Think of Me at Home?" It became one of those 300 best-selling Edison discs.

I often have regretted I never had the opportunity to meet Chalmers. The closest I came was on a visit to New York, when Billy Murray and I were taking a walk, and Billy said: "Look over there, going through that door into Radio City, Jim. That's Tom Chalmers."

I looked and, as I remember, saw a rather short, gray-haired man. But I had no chance to speak with him, as I wished I could.

In 1923, the trio helped a musical comedy star, J. Harold Murray (no relation to Billy), to record "Faded Love Letters of Mine." And, in their last record, made in 1925, they were assisting artists to Walter Scanlan (Van Brunt) in a mawkish ballad that had some popularity, "Pal of My Cradle Days." After that Miss Spencer's health began to fail, and there were no more Homestead Trio records.

III. An "Amberola Monthly" Write-Up

The time has come now to give biographical sketches of the five ladies who sang in the Homestead Trio and "We Girls" Quartet. I think a good way of starting is to quote most of an article that appeared in the Edison Amberola Monthly for September, 1921:

"Elizabeth Spencer was born in St. Louis, Mo., a daughter of William Gilpin, at one time Governor of Colorado. (Gilpin was Colorado's territorial Governor in 1861-62, and she was his stepdaughter. —J. W.)

"Though born in St. Louis, most of her young life was spent in Denver. Miss Spencer studied in Paris, under (Jacques) Bouhy, an eminent teacher. Her experiences ranged all the way from vaudeville to musical comedy and concert work. Always she has been a most versatile artist and her voice possesses the unusual quality which enables her to sing equally well in soprano, mezzo soprano and contralto regions. Thomas A. Edison once declared that he thought Elizabeth Spencer had the finest soprano voice in the country."

(Here I stop quoting long enough to say that since Elizabeth Spencer's life and recording career were detailed in HOBBIES for August and September, 1951, I shall not repeat information already given. Although she was Mrs. Southworth during most of her recording career, when she began singing professionally she was married to Otis B. Spencer, whom she divorced in 1912, and always afterwards used the Spencer name. She died April 22, 1930.

"Betsy Lane Shepherd is of New England ancestry, although born in Pennsylvania. All her musical training was American. Both Frank La Forge and Sergei Klubansky taught her. For a time she was the soprano soloist in the Calvary Methodist Church of New York. Betsy Lane Shepherd is positive that if the opportunity were created Americans would prove to have as much natural genius for music as any other people. She insists genius (is) largely a matter of hard work and perseverance, anyway.

"Other countries," she declares, "provide the best teaching possible for children who show any musical talent. America neglects this. Many poor children who might become great artists never have the slightest encouragement from anybody. There is a child in almost every community who has every quality to make a great artist, but lacks the opportunity for education. There is only one way to give that child a chance—to provide a thorough training in music for all school children."

"Miss Shepherd began singing when she was 17. Of her work, she said: 'My first church position paid for my lessons; my next more than paid for the lessons. My voice has always, I might say, paid its own way. I'm not only happy, therefore, to have been given it, but, if possible, more so in that it has taken care of itself and now takes care of me.'

"Amy Ellerman was born, like Elizabeth Spencer, in the West, but, unlike her, she was raised on a ranch. She could drive a horse when she was three years old, and could rope and brand cattle, shoot ducks, and hunt deer and husk corn before most kids are out of the kindergarten. From these facts you would rightly infer that she was the daughter of pioneer settlers. Indeed, South Dakota was their choice.

"Amy Ellerman evinced musical talent in early childhood, and began the study of the piano when a mere child. Her first musical work was in instructing piano pupils. Later she discovered that she had a promising contralto voice. She studied voice under Holmes Cooper, of Chicago, and later was graduated from the American Conservatory of Music, where, under the instruction of Ragna Linne, she was twice chosen for appearances with the Philharmonic Orchestra under Adolph Weidig. Also, she was the youngest member of the Musical Arts Society, of Chicago. Miss Ellerman supplemented her studies with three years work in Berlin, and, after returning to America, she studied with William Wade Hinshaw and Herbert Witherspoon (a famous bass soloist on Victor records, husband of the soprano, Florence Hinkle, and later manager of the Metropolitan Opera. —J. W.) Critics have agreed that Miss Ellerman possesses one of the finest contraltos

(Continued on next page)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from preceding page)

18671 {Who'll Take the Place of Mary?
10in. list
price 85c {Marion (You'll Soon Be Marryin' Me

This double-faced vocal record serves to introduce a new Victor artist, Miss Rachel Grant. She appears in the second song with our old friend Billy Murray. These are two admirably contrasted numbers. The first is a man's lament for a lost sweetheart. The Crescent Trio sings it in tender and affecting style.

Rachel Grant

ASSUMED NAME. GLADYS RICE'S first Victor record, issued in July, 1920, was made under the assumed name of RACHEL GRANT, which she had been using for three years in her Edison duets with Billy Murray.

voices among American singers.

"The picture on the back cover of the present number of the Amberola Monthly shows the Homestead Trio during a summer day's outing. (The picture is reproduced with this article.—J.W.) One of the trio—we suspect it was Amy Ellerman—wrote the following verses to accompany the picture:

"There were three crows sat on a wall.
They could not sing at all, at all.
The Homestead Trio sat on a fence—
And some folks think they sing Immense.
They love to sing, they love to chaff,
But most of all they love to laugh."

Another bit of doggerel by Miss Ellerman paid tribute to Miss Spencer's coffee-making abilities:

"You think we mind prohibition?
Not so, say we,
When Elizabeth makes such coffee
As she served us three."

Amy Ellerman was born in Yankton, S.D. She died in New York, June 4, 1960, aged 71.

IV. Mostly About Gladys Rice

Marion Evelyn Cox, the second contralto of "We Girls" Quartet, is an artist about whom I have virtually no information. Although her photograph twice was published on the cover of the Edison Amberola Monthly, no biographical details accompanied it.

The nearest thing to a personal account I have found comes from the jacket in which her duet version, with Gladys Rice, of "Alabama Lullaby" was issued in 1919. Ray Cummings' comment, as usual, tells little about the record he is supposed to be describing:

"Gladys Rice and Marion Evelyn Cox are two of the littlest girls who ever sang a duet. Both of them together hardly weigh 200 pounds. But when it comes to music they're there! . . ."

As far as I can judge by the catalog, Miss Cox's Edison career ended in 1921 or 1922. She seems, as far as a hasty search reveals, not to have made records under her own name for any other company, but I think she almost surely was Marion Crawford, a contralto who recorded for Pathe'. Probably she did Edison tone test work, but I have seen no advertisements of such public appearances.

Betsy Lane Shepherd and Amy Ellerman, on the other hand, were tone test standbys, and Mrs. Shepherd also was one of the first women to give radio recitals. Along Broadway for February, 1922, showed a picture of her and one of the Shannon Four, broadcasting from a New-ark radio station—probably WOR.

Betsy Lane Shepherd has been dead, I believe, for 30 years or more.

FAVORITE EDISON SINGER. BETSY LANE SHEPHERD was a popular Edison Soprano. She also made some Aeolian-Vocalion records. This picture was taken from a book of photographs of Edison singers and musicians.

I think it was in the early 1940's that Charles M. Sniffin of White Plains, N.Y., wrote me he had learned from a nephew of Mrs. Shepherd's that she had died some years before, but Mr. Sniffin did not know just when or where. Miss Cox still may be living.

An already quoted Edison's record jacket said that all the members of the original Homestead Trio were equally popular, but, judging by the amount of work they were given to do, Gladys Rice was easily first, with Mrs. Shepherd second, and Miss Ellerman third. Miss Rice certainly was the most versatile of the three, and could sing well anything from down-to-earth comedy to serious music. Her comedy singing was mostly under the assumed name of Rachel Grant.

She was personally one of the most popular recording artists. I can't recall ever hearing any Edison singer discuss having worked with Shepherd, Ellerman, or Cox, but several have mentioned Gladys Rice and have spoken warmly of her charming personality and infectious, youthful sense of humor.

Incidentally, when she began recording, in the summer of 1915, she took away Walter Van Brunt's distinction of being the youngest Edison artist. Gladys, who appears to have been born in 1896, is said to have been only 19 when she started making records. Walter was only 16 when he began, but he started in 1908.

Miss Rice first had her name on a record label when "My Hula Maid," which she sang as a duet with Irving Kaufman, was issued as a Blue Amberol in November, 1915, and about the same time as a Diamond Disc. Her first record appearance, however, probably was in "She Lives Down in Our Alley," which was labeled as being by "Irving Kaufman and Chorus."

(The chorus seems to have been Miss Rice and the Premier Quartet).

In this record she takes the somewhat difficult part of a Jewish girl (herself) impersonating an Irish girl, impersonating a French girl. Something about her impersonation, or perhaps her facial gestures, seems to have got the best of my old friend, Irving, for he is unable to repress a laugh toward the end of the record. She also takes a French part in the 1918 duet with Billy Murray, "Oui, Oui, Maria."

Within a short time Gladys Rice was one of the most frequently used

NOTED CONTRALTO. MARION EVELYN COX was "second alto" of "We Girls" Quartet, which consisted of the Homestead Trio with Miss Cox as a fourth member.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from preceding page)

and best selling Edison artists. In October, 1916, the Edison Phonograph Monthly said:

"Gladys Rice, whose splendid soprano has created a strong demand for her records, is a Philadelphian. She was educated at 'Ivy Hall,' Bridgeton, N.J. While very young she displayed a natural aptitude for music and she was given the best advantages that New York could afford. Among her teachers was Karl Breneman, a pupil of the renowned Sibulga. Her professional debut was made at the Palace Theatre in New York, and it was marked by great success. Her dramatic ability inclined her toward the stage and she has appeared in both dramatic and musical stock. Her voice is a clear and sweet soprano, and her numbers are rendered with the expression and sentiment that only may be found in the renditions of singers who have had stage experience."

This "write-up" did not mention that Miss Rice was the daughter of the famous vaudeville pair, John Rice and Sally Cohen, who took their infant with them as they traveled. I recall seeing an interview with Miss Rice years ago in which she said: "A theatre trunk was my cradle."

Her father was also one of the first stage personalities to experiment with movie making, and a film in which he and May Irwin kissed each other was something of a sensation, almost a scandal, in 1896. Who says "The Gay Nineties" were so gay!

According to the book, "Monarchs of Minstrelsy," written by another Rice, Edwin LeRoy Rice, and published in 1911, John C. Rice's real family name was Hildeberg. This book says he was born in Beaver Kills, N.Y., and he and another comedian, James H. Griffin, became a black-face song-and-dance team in 1873.

They later appeared with famous minstrel troupes, but in 1883 Rice switched to playing a German comedy role in "Over the Garden Wall." Subsequently he became a member of May Irwin's Company.

Edwin LeRoy Rice remarked, "Mr. Rice excels as a neat dancer and as a light comedian leaves nothing to be desired." He married Miss Cohen in the early 1890's.

Gladys Rice's first duet records were with Irving Kaufman, Walter Van Brunt, and Burton Lenihan. (Lenihan was a native of Saginaw, Mich., and Ms Elaine Frueh of that city recently informed me he still was living when she wrote, but in a nursing home.)

In 1917, Miss Rice virtually superseded Ada Jones as Billy Murray's Edison duet partner, possibly because both she and Billy were under contract and worked on a salary basis, but Miss Jones was paid separately by the "date." All the Rice and Murray duets were issued under her assumed name of Rachel Grant except for one Diamond Disc, "That's You, Baby," which was pressed, but never sold appreciably, just before the Edison Company quit record making in the fall of 1929.

I am one of the few collectors lucky enough to have a copy of this Rice-Murray duet, No. 52642. The pair specialized in recording duets from musical comedies. One of their most amusing songs was "The Bungalow in Quogue," from "The Riviera Girl," which they did in 1917.

The music was by Jerome Kern and the words by P. G. ("Plum") Wodehouse, who used the utmost ingenuity in finding rhymes for Quogue. Mr. Wodehouse, the greatest living writer of humorous novels and creator of the immortal Jeeves, still is writing, and as funny as ever, although past 90. And he reads HOBBIES each month!

Miss Rice also made comedy solos as Rachel Grant—"Jazz Baby" is one—but on Edison records she never used the Grant name in duets except those with Murray and one Diamond Disc she made in 1923 with Billy Jones, who called himself "Eugene Harold" for that occasion. The song was "My Old Girl," which had been fairly popular in 1910, and probably was one of the old-timers Mr. Edison wanted in his catalog.

Here is a list of Edison artists with whom Miss Rice sang duets, in addition to those already mentioned: George Wilton Ballard, Helen Clark, Marion Evelyn Cox, Vernon Dalhart, Lewis James, Elizabeth Lennox, J. Harold Murray, Betsy Lane Shepherd, and Frederick Wheeler. She made one duet with Ballard on which she was called Bettina Bergere.

She and Misses Clark and Cox, sang a trio version of a World War I song, "Knit! Knit! Knit!". She also was the soprano of the Harmony Four, whose other members were John Young, George Ballard, and Donald Chalmers; and of Moonlight Trio, which was the same as the Harmony Four with Young omitted.

She sang soprano as well in many Metropolitan Quartet records. The Metropolitan personnel varied, but probably those who sang most often with her were Ballard, Miss Cox, and Chalmers.

When Miss Rice began to freelance she used the Rachel Grant name for duets with Billy Murray on Victor, Aeolian-Vocalion, and probably some minor brands. Its last appearance seems to have been in 1923 on the Victor duet by Grant and Murray of "I Gave You Up Just Before You Threw Me Down." In later years she always called herself Gladys Rice when singing for Victor.

For some reason, Miss Rice seems not to have worked for Edison from early 1924 until the Company was on the verge of going out of the record business. Meanwhile, she had become extremely popular on radio as a member of Roxy's Gang, broadcasting from the Capitol Theatre in New York City, and her duets with Frank Munn were among the most popular features of that weekly program.

She returned to Edison just as that Company began its short-lived experiment of making lateral cut discs, and the September, 1929, supplement of "the new Edison needle records" said:

"One of the earliest, and still one of the most popular of radio features is 'Roxy's Gang'—a pleasantly informal weekly program of music, song and laughter. One of the best known and best loved members of Roxy's Gang is our own Gladys Rice, whose low laughter and soft, mischievous replies to Roxy's banter are no less pleasing than her lovely singing. On this record you hear Miss Rice at her entrancing best, singing 'To Be in Love'—her voice all a-thrill with delicious excitement . . ."

Another needle-cut Edison by Miss Rice was "I Faw Down and Go Boom." The soprano, incidentally, never married. One of the Edison publications reported during World War I that she was engaged to a young soldier and they were planning on marriage as soon as he returned from military duty, but the wedding did not take place.

Within the past few days, while turning through old Columbia catalogs, I was surprised to discover something I never had noticed before—that in 1921 Miss Rice and the Harmonizers Quartet remade No. A1297, Shelton Brooks' 1912 hit, "All Night Long," which originally had been recorded by Ada Jones and the Peerless Quartet.

(Miss Jones was still singing, so why wasn't she called upon for the remake?)

In 1924, Miss Rice also made a new version of A1076, "Star of the East," which Roma Devonne had recorded in 1911.

Otherwise, the soprano, Miss Rice, did little Columbia work. In 1919, she and Charles Harrison sang a duet of a song called "Sweethearts"—their only duet I can recall. And in 1927, on No. 998D, she and Franklyn Baur joined forces in "Hallelujah!" and "Sometimes I'm Happy," from "Hit the Deck."

From 1920, through the early 1930's, Miss Rice sang for most of the major and minor record companies. They ranged from Victor to National Music Lovers.

* * *

I regret to say I never have met Gladys Rice, but in 1950, when I was in the now demolished old Pennsylvania station in New York, on my way to the John Bieling Day party at Hempstead, I dialed her telephone number and soon was hearing the lovely voice I remembered so well from her records.

Miss Rice expressed her regret that previously made engagements would keep her from attending the party and being reunited with "my old pal, Billy Murray, and my other recording artist friends." She surprised me, however, saying she never had met Aileen Stanley, Murray's other feminine duet partner of the 1920's.

Miss Rice said she had returned to her first love, acting, and was appearing regularly in stage performances. She also told me she had mailed me an autographed photograph of herself, and I found it waiting when I returned to my home in Vinton.

(Continued on next page)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from preceding page)

We talked until a noise came on the line which Miss Rice laughingly told me meant I needed to drop in another nickel. I couldn't find one, so had to hang up, but was left with the impression of talking with a vivacious, very charming lady.

The picture she sent we was framed and it hung on one of my music room walls for years, but then it disappeared and I never have been able to find it. I can't understand what happened. Surely, I never was visited and victimized by a Gladys Rice admirer so ardent that he filched that photo while my back was turned!

However that may be, I hope Miss Rice happily will be with us for a long time yet, and if I can obtain her present address I'm going to write and ask for another signed photo to replace the one that so mysteriously vanished!

THE END

EDISON DIAMOND DISCS BY THE HOMESTEAD TRIO (1917-1920)

(Gladys Rice, Betsy Lane Shepherd and Amy Ellerman)

- 80334 Indiana. Reverse: Can't Yo' Heah Me Callin', Caroline? (Vernon Dalhart).
- 80406 Just a Baby's Prayer at Twilight. Reverse: Lorraine (Dalhart).
- 80411 Old Virginny Days. Reverse: When I'm Gone You'll Soon Forget (Helen Clark and Walter Van Brunt).
- 82149 Keep the Home Fires Burning. Reverse: Laddie in Khaki.
- 80469 Dusky Lullaby. Reverse: The Glow Worm ("We Girls" Quartet).
- 80514 Aloha Sunset Land. Reverse: When the Corn in Waving, Annie Dear (Criterion Quartet).
- 80521 Dixie Lullaby. Reverse: Leaf by Leaf the Roses Fall (Vernon Archibald and Lewis James).
- 80512 Hearts. Reverse: Bye-Lo (Dalhart).
- 80699 Moonlight in Mandalay. Reverse: Tripoli (Clark and George Wilton Ballard).

(Elizabeth Spencer, Betsy Lane Shepherd and Amy Ellerman) (1921-1925)

- 50770 Little Tin Soldier and the Little Rag Doll. Reverse: Little Crumbs of Happiness (James).
- 50773 Wandering Home. Reverse: Somebody's Mother (Crescent Trio).
- 50788 Thinking of You. Reverse: Love Me (James and Mixed Chorus).
- 50796 Carolina Lullaby. Reverse: In a Little Front Parlor (Clark).
- 50860 There's a Mother Always Waiting You at Home, Sweet Home. Reverse: When Honey Sings an Old-Time Song (Ballard).
- 50915 Granny. Reverse: Mammy Lou (Criterion Quartet).
- 80677 Do They Think of Me at Home? (with Thomas Chalmers). Reverse: Dreaming of Home and Mother (Thomas Chalmers & Mixed Chorus).
- 51110 Faded Love Letters (with J. Harold Murray). Reverse: I'll Take You Home Again, Pal O' Mine (Walter Scanlan & Helen Clark).
- 51119 Just an Old Love Song. Reverse: We're Nearing the Day (Scanlan and Spencer).
- 51121 Amazon. Reverse: Sands of Sandy Hook (Billy Jones and Male Chorus).
- 80755 Hush-A-Bye-Bay. Reverse: King Love (Betsy Lane Shepherd and Chorus).
- 51272 Memory Isle. Reverse: Mammy's Little Silver Lining (Dalhart).
- 80754 Two Little Eyes (with Elizabeth Spencer). Reverse: Honey, Dat's All (Spencer & Criterion Quartet).

80839 Pal of My Cradle Days (with Scanlan). Reverse: Rose Dreams (Scanlan and Mixed Chorus).

EDISON BLUE AMBEROL CYLINDERS BY HOMESTEAD TRIO (1917-1923)

- 3249 Indiana
- 3355 Old Virginny Days
- 3504 Just a Baby's Prayer at Twilight
- 3962 Dixie Lullaby
- 3643 Keep the Home Fires Burning
- 3684 Dusky Lullaby
- 3984 Aloha Sunset Land
- 4313 Wandering Home
- 4361 Carolina Lullaby
- 4488 Granny
- 4504 Thinking of You
- 4567 Little Tin Soldier
- 4831 Memory Isle

SILVER FOR SALE

STERLING silver flatware and hollow pieces of active and inactive patterns. Reasonable prices.—Anton Hardt, The Golden Cockerel, 335 Bleeker St., New York, N.Y. mh6069

FLATWARE: For active, inactive and obsolete sterling patterns. Write us your needs. Prompt replies.—Edward G. Wilson, 1802 Chestnut St., Philadelphia 3, Pa. ie128041

SILVERPLATE, sterling. New and old. Most patterns, brands matched. Stamped envelope for list of your pattern.—Fuller, Box 4325-H, San Francisco, Calif. 94101 fi28041

HARD-TO-FIND, sterling flatware: Hundreds of pieces in obsolete, inactive patterns, many sets.—McCarthy, 1104 Bigelow North, Seattle, Wash. 98109 f3633

FOR SALE in original case 12 Pearl Handled knives and forks engraved blades and lovely, $225.00.—L. W. Martin, 8215 Wilcox Ave., Cudahy, Calif. 90201 fi002

SPOONS FOR SALE

STERLING SOUVENIR and unusual spoons, $1.50 up. Approved selection upon request and reference. Souvenir and unusual spoon lists available $1 for four issues over a 12-month period.—Edward G. Wilson, 1802 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa. 19103. ie124033

STERLING silver flatware and hollow pieces of active and inactive patterns. Reasonable prices.—Anton Hardt, The Golden Cockerel, 335 Bleeker St., New York, N.Y. ie60690

SOUVENIR SPOONS, all sizes, enamels, gold washed, etc., mostly sterling. Send 50c for large descriptive and price list of over 200 spoons. Include large SASE.—Dorothy Wilkison, P.O. Box 251, Bradenton, Fla. 33505 ap3065

SILVER WANTED

MATCHING SERVICES for new & old patterns, in plated and sterling. Buy and sell. S.A.S.E.—Vy. Biel, Burton, Wash. 98013 mhl20821

OLD STERLING souvenir spoons of Brattleboro, Vermont.—Michelman, Greenhill Pkwy., Brattleboro, Vt. 05301 mh3802

NEW sterling flatware, constantly changing stock of active & inactive patterns, ½ retail or less.—Robert Freedman, Rm. 403, 333 Washington St., Boston, Mass. 02108 au120061

STERLING silver—variety of patterns available. Want list kept. Please send SASE for free list.—The Sterling Shop, Box 595, Silverton, Ore. 97381 oi22741

DOMINIC AND HAFF'S Renaissance pattern.—Leavengood, 1000 Park St. North, St. Petersburg, Fla. 33710 fi211

SPOONS WANTED

OLD STERLING souvenir spoons of Wisconsin cities. Describe and price.—William Parks, 2549 Hoard St., Madison, Wis. 53704 f3882

Please mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements.

EDWARD G. WILSON

1802 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, 3, Pa.

LOcust 3-7369

SEE OUR BIG ILLUSTRATED
AD ON THE BACK COVER
OF THIS ISSUE

We are accepting reservations for our Unusual and Souvenir Spoon Lists for which we are charging $1 for 4 copies over a 12 month period. Dealers and collectors inquiries invited. Freight additional. Money refunded if not satisfied. Federal Excise Tax included where applicable. tfx

THE LAMP POST ANTIQUES

(Toni Garrett)

8312 E. 11th St.

Tulsa, Okla. 74112

Specializing in complete line of 1847 Rogers Bros. flatware.

We also carry active, inactive, and obsolete sterling flatware.

If your pattern's name is unknown to you send us a tracing, drawing or photo along with maker's name (copy it off back of any piece) and we'll do the rest.

We also carry a general line of fine antiques.

No reproductions. Satisfaction guaranteed.

Stamped envelope for reply, please. tfe

Nothing Says It Quite Like Silver

PRICE'S ANTIQUES

11108 North Dixon Ave.

Tampa, Fla. 33612

(813) 836-2034

—STERLING FLATWARE

MATCHING SERVICE—

Over 1,000 Patterns

ACTIVE, INACTIVE & OBSOLETE patterns. Register your pattern wants with us (specifica appreciated). FREE notification, FREE lists.

LAYAWAYS invited. FREE BRIDAL Registry. Satisfaction guaranteed or your money refunded. Postage and insurance extra.

NOTE: We buy silver. Highest price paid.

Write, phone or ship day or night:

Florida residents add 4% sales tax. All silver in like-new condition, in plastic wraps. All knives with stainless blades unless noted otherwise.

NOTE: We also buy & sell jewelry, diamonds & small antique items. Write. tfo

PEWTER WANTED

EARLY PEWTER wanted: All items of pewter, molds, books pertaining to pewter and makers. Highest prices paid.—Almar Antiques, Box 74, Newtown, Conn. 06470 ie126351

HIGHEST PRICES for Eggleston, Johnson, Nott, Martine, Sumner, also moulds, measures, candlesticks, and any Southern pieces. Q. J. Scarborough, P.O. Box 67, Fayetteville, N.C. 28302. 919-483-2507 Collect. ap3614

RUBIE KOHL ANTIQUES

2424 N.E. 22nd St.

Pompano Beach, Fla. 33062

STERLING SILVER FLATWARE—

MATCHING SERVICE

Hard-to-find — obsolete, inactive & active patterns of all American Silversmiths. Over 400 patterns to select from. List your wants with us; if we do not have it, we will try to get it for you. If pattern is unknown, make a pencil sketch of the pattern and the maker's mark.

We buy sterling—Write or ship. If you accept our price we mail you a check immediately. If not, we ship at our expense. Stamped envelope for reply. tfe

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Joe White, "The Silver-Masked Tenor"

By JIM WALSH

PART I

I. A Meeting With Joe White

Over the years I have had frequent occasion to mention the two weeks I spent in October, 1940, as Billy Murray's guest at his home in Freeport, N.Y. The object of my visit was to obtain enough first-hand material to write a book about Billy. "The Denver Nightingale," however, displayed an odd shrinking from personal publicity and preferred to talk about any subject other than Billy Murray. From the book standpoint my visit was a failure.

Billy, however, introduced me to a large number of other recording artists, and I often have mentioned my first New York sojourn, in writing about many performers I met during that trip. One of those newly-made friends was Joseph M. White, who had been famed as "The Silver-Masked Tenor."

My 1940 diary reveals that Tuesday, October 15, was an interest-filled day. Billy and I talked by phone with the famous tenor, Albert Campbell, and agreed to meet him next day at Lindy's restaurant, where so many theatrical notables ate.

Then Billy, Jimmy Martindale, and I went to Victor's New York recording studios. Billy made a Bluebird record of "The Irish Were Egyptians Long Ago," and "When Paddy McGinty Plays the Harp." Jimmy and I helped to shout: "Too roo loo! Too roo li!" in the chorus of the latter.

At Billy's request I also slightly had edited the words of the "Egyptian" song. In one place I changed "And all the Hooligans and all the Dooligans" to "and all the Donovans and all the Monohans must have been Egyptians long ago."

I was amused to see that Billy Murray already had become such a tradition of the recorded music history that, when it was learned he was about to have a recording session, virtually every studio employee came to watch him in action.

It took him less than 30 minutes to make three "takes" of each song. He told me afterwards though that he had been uncomfortable while singing, because the music had been orchestrated in too low a key.

After leaving RCA Victor the three

I STILL GET A THRILL (THINKING OF YOU)

Words by Benry Davis
Music by
J. Fred Coots

DAVIS COOTS & ENGELING

MUSIC PUBLISHERS

799 Seventh Ave.

NEW YORK, N.Y.

New York

ORDER CODE
"THRILL"

FEATURED SINGER—Joe White still was known as "The Silver Masked Tenor" when his photo appeared in 1930 on the cover of this sheet music.

of us went—I don't remember why—to the National Broadcasting Company Studios where we met two men who had been popular recording artists from 10 to 15 years before.

One was Jack Smith, widely known as the "Whispering Baritone." His popularity had begun with microphonic recording. The other was Joe White, whom I already have mentioned as the "Silver-Masked Tenor."

I remember Joe White as a stocky, short, rather florid man with a friendly manner. He was the most casually dressed notable I met. I don't remember what he was wearing, but I do remember that Jimmy, Billy, and I commented on his informal attire after he left us. We agreed that Joe must feel so sure of himself he didn't have to worry about what he wore.

Another thing I remember is that when he learned I lived in Johnson

City, Tenn., he jokingly asked me if I had brought "any good Tennessee moonshine corn liquor."

He seemed to be a bit skeptical when I replied that I was, as I still am, "one of those Southern prohibitionists and total abstainers, who neither drinks nor transports liquor." He good-naturedly chided me for not living up to my responsibility as "a Southern gentleman" who in duty bound was obligated to supply illicit liquid refreshment for Yankee friends.

(I encountered two problems on that first visit to New York. One was difficulty in convincing my Northern friends that I was not an Irish Catholic and did not obey any Friday dietary regulations. And the other was making some understand that I didn't, under any circumstances, drink.)

I remember being taken by my dear

(Continued on next page)

BOWBITE

This was taken when he was 10 years old. 1947.

Selected with 100 best U.S. Navy pictures over ABC

Played part of "CONRAD" in "Hillbilly House" CBS weekly series.

Bobby White, boy singing-actor of Radio—Television—Transcriptions—Recording—Stage & Concert—Vaudeville—Featured as boy actor on Helen Hayes Radio program.

Heard on Fred Allen Radio Program, NBC and Television; Lanny Ross Mutual "WOR" Broadcasting System; American Broadcasting Co., Radio and Television, ABC; Columbia Broadcasting System, Radio and Television, CBS; Dumont Television. Featured with Bing Crosby & Charley Booth on Fred Allen Radio Program, NBC.

Bobby White, age 13, from 3 to 15 years and he also characterizes the Average American Boy, Young Cowboy, Hillbilly Comedy Singer and Actor, Scotch Boy, Irish Boy, English Boy, and on Catholic & Air America Hour.

For Information, Phone, or Radio Station

"Uncle Sam" Harrison, William Morris Agency
1276 Sixth Avenue . . . New York City
Circle 7-2160 . . . or . . . FLushing 3-6732

GIFTED SON—Joe White's son, Bobby, began singing as a child of five and majored in music after making many radio and television appearances. The notes reprinted here are in his father's writing.

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Re feathered
Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

Please mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements friend, Al Franck, who operated the International Records Agency, to an (I think) Italian restaurant. There the waiter asked if I would like a cocktail.

When I replied that I wouldn't, the man looked at me half incredulously and asked: "Why, what's the matter? You on the wagon?"

I replied I had been "on the wagon" all my life and didn't intend to fall off.

Then Al Franck very emphatically said: "The gentleman does not drink!"

I wonder what I did imbibe in New York restaurants. The only two things I drank were milk and Pepsi-Cola, and I doubt that the soft drink was available. Probably I ordered a glass of milk.

Joe and I talked of his recording activities. He was amused to learn that S. E. Levy of Shanghai, China, who had been considered the foremost authority on old recordings and pioneer recording artists, had given me an unqualified assurance that the mysterious "Silver-Masked Tenor" was the old-time singer, George J. Gaskin, "who is making a comeback." I had questioned Frank Dorian of the Columbia Company about this assertion.

Mr. Dorian had replied that although he didn't know who the masked tenor was, he could say positively, after looking at the singer's photograph in a Victor supplement, that it couldn't be George Gaskin. There was no resemblance between Gaskin and the masked man, Frank Dorian said.

Joe also recalled having made some Edison records "around 1915" under the name of Joseph M. White. (His full name was Joseph Malachy White.)

Three days after that morning, on Friday, October 18, I went with Billy, Jimmy, and Walter P. MacDonald to a room at a street address I have forgotten. In this spacious chamber a group of recording artists rehearsed for a series of minstrel programs they hoped to give on radio.

Mr. MacDonald was an ardent record collector who made his living posing for advertisements in which pictures of cowboys and Southern colonels were required. His professional name was "Buffalo Scott."

When I got off the train and headed for the Pennsylvania station waiting-room upon my arrival in New York, Mr. MacDonald was in the station and recognized me from my picture which the Saturday Evening Post had published the year before. After asking me if my name wasn't Walsh, he took me to his home for supper and a meeting with his wife, Elizabeth; his charming daughter, Dorothy, who was a gifted amateur writer; and his son, Walter, Jr. Afterwards I met his other daughter, Katherine.

The MacDonalds disliked New York life and were hoping to settle on a farm in Missouri, but seven years later they were still in the same apartment, which I believe was at 312

(Continued on page 118)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

West 20th Street. I wonder if Walter still is living there. He was in ecstasies at seeing so many famous recording artists for the first time.

Probably the names of some who were present have escaped my memory, but there was Billy Murray, of course, and I well remember the delight Mr. MacDonald and I felt at hearing him sing "Bill Bailey," a number that had been a favorite in his Al. G. Field minstrel days.

Also present and taking part in the singing were Gus Van, who, a few years before, had been interlocutor of the radio Sinclair Minstrels; Charles Harrison; Everett Clarke, who was best known from having made some duet recordings with Harrison; Frank Croxton; Harry Donahy (The Harmonizers Quartet bass, who was at the piano), and Joe White.

Albert Campbell and Monroe Silver also may have been there, but I am not sure. On the preceding Monday, by the way, Walter Scanlan had gone with me to the NBC Studios, where I had seen a rehearsal of a radio program, "Harlem Quiz." It was somewhat similar to the minstrel show, and in it Irving Kaufman and Al Bernard were featured.

I had an opportunity to talk with the various artists, including Joe White, who at once recognized me, and said, "Hello, Jim! Got me any moonshine yet?" I also met Charles Harrison, with whom our meeting established a friendship that lasted as long as he lived.

Frank Croxton autographed a photo of himself which Billy had given me to bring along. Harry Donahy told me that the first record in which he participated was the Edison of "Oh By Jingo!" by the Harmonizers, disguised under their Edison name of the Premier Quartet.

Although I lost contact with Joe White after my return to Tennessee, I carried away a lasting impression of a friendly, down-to-earth fellow with a complete absence of swank, who was, in the words of the time-tattered cliché, "as plain as an old shoe." But I was to resume communication with him years later after I moved to Virginia.

II. Biographical Data

Having, so to speak, given this "in person" introduction to Joe White, I think I can tell much about the man and his career by using information contained in the 1952 edition of the ASCAP Biographical Dictionary of Authors, Composers and Publishers. It was published while "the Silver-Masked Tenor" was still alive.

The book reveals that "Joseph M. White, composer, author, singer, radio and recording artist, "was born October 14, 1891, in New York City. This means he now would be 81 if living.

YOUNG TENOR—JOE WHITE sent Jim Walsh this autographed photo in August, 1953. It had been taken about 30 years earlier when he was touring with a Chautauqua company.

He became a member of ASCAP in 1939.

The sketch says he came from a musical family, was educated in New York public schools, and was a boy soprano in New York churches. (Since he was a Catholic, I suppose his singing was in churches of that faith.) At 10 he sang as a "village urchin" in a play called "Checkers."

After two years of a commercial life he gave up business to "pursue a musical career." At 19 he was a member of Denman Thompson's "Old Homestead" Quartet. (Does this mean the Double Quartet?)

In 1917 Joe White enlisted in the 102nd Engineers, 27th Division. When he returned to the States in 1919, he became a soloist with Neil O'Brien's Minstrels.

In 1922 he took up activity in radio, and from 1925 to 1930 was the Silver-Masked Tenor with the Goodrich Silvertown Cord Orchestra. He was credited with having a hand in the writing of the following songs:

"In Flanders," "Mammy's Little Kinky Headed Boy," "Bells of Killarney," "Jes' a Lonesome Little Pickaninny Baby," "Maureen Mavourneen," "Say That You Care for Me," "Hold Me In Your Arms," "Rose in the Moonlight," "Drifting in the Moonlight," "McGuire's Musketeers," "Old Prairie Wagon," "Our Graduation Waltz," "St. Patrick's Bells Are Ringing," and "Ireland, Your Homeland."

The 1966 edition gives a shortened account of White's career and mentions fewer songs, but reveals that he died in New York, February 28, 1959, at 68.

A Variety death notice gave the additional information that White "was one of the first radio performers to use a promotional gimmick, namely the donning of a silver mask during his appearance as soloist with the Goodrich Silvertown Or., over WEA, N.Y., now WRCA. This program was sponsored by the B. F. Goodrich Rubber Company. Masked Routine was continued long after he signed off with the show.

"On July 4, 1922, White was the first singer before a mike in the United States to be heard in England with the program originating from the old WJZ (now WABC) studio in Newark.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

"White retired from radio after suffering serious injuries in an auto accident. He continued, however, as a vocal coach until last year. He wrote many ballads, several of them among the songs he recorded for Victor.

"Survivors are wife, two daughters and three sons."

Later, when I quote from Joe White's letters, it will be seen that during his last years he was plagued by bad luck but kept his courage instead of giving in to the buffetings of fate.

III. Recording Career Begins

Joe White, the Irish tenor seems to have had his first recording experience when he was a young fellow of 23. On January 19, 1915—some five weeks after the disastrous Edison factory fire of Wednesday, December 9, 1914—Thomas A. Edison scribbled some comments on a test recording White had made. Apparently he had sung a fast tempo song in Irish dialect, as Mr. Edison, with a touch of sarcasm, remarked:

"Can't judge from a dialect song. He seems fair for songs of (Walter) Van Brunt type—I can't understand a word he says. Let him sing a pathetic song that's not all talking and in dialect. How can anyone judge a man's voice from such a song? I'm no mind reader like you people in New York."

Probably, in view of the date of the inventor's criticism, the test had been made just before the big fire or it may have been done shortly afterward. At any rate, it took place in the New York recording laboratory, which had not been affected by the fire.

No issued records were forthcoming from this try-out, but the tenor must have tried again early in 1916. This time "The Old Man" gave a more favorable report. On March 13, 1916, he wrote:

"Has tremolo. Think you might do business with him. His interpretation of this is good, and has fine mellow (tone?) on highs and generally."

Of all vocal flaws, as he considered them, Mr. Edison most disliked "tremolo" or vibrato. Otherwise, however, this criticism was distinctly favorable.

Not so, however, was one of April 21, 1924, when the one-time "Wizard of Menlo Park" progressively had grown more deaf and was 77 years of age. No admirer of Joe White, therefore, need be upset by his brief remark: "Awful singer—oh, no!"

By that time, Mr. Edison, regardless of his own opinion of his critical abilities, was considered by many as not capable of judging recorded music and Victor showed a year and a half later that it had a different opinion of White.

The first Joe White recording to appear in an Edison list was an Irish song, "Molly Brannigan," which was on a Diamond Disc, serial No. 5662, a. IN UNIFORM—JOSEPH M. WHITE served in the American Armed forces, and was wounded during World War I.

—Photo from March, 1918, Columbia record supplement.

b. YOUNG TENOR—This photograph of the youthful "J. Malachy White" (Joe White), appeared in the Columbia record supplement for November, 1917.

January 4, 1917. It was not issued on the disc, but was announced in August as Blue Amberol cylinder No. 3253.

On February 17, 1917, White sang "The Harp That Once Thro' Tara's Halls," which probably was intended as a coupling for the rejected disc of "Molly Brannigan." However, the well-loved old Thomas Moore song was not issued until April, 1927—more than 10 years after the recording date—when it made one side of Diamond Disc 51942.

Its back-up was a recently made recording of "The Birth of the Shamrock," by Charles Harrison. It was not made available on a Blue Amberol.

Joe told me he made "one or two Edison discs in 1923 or 1924," and his recollection was correct. On December 4, 1923, he sang "Ireland is Ireland to Me," which was transcribed on Diamond Disc master No. 9277, but never placed on sale.

It probably was a test of this recording that caused "The Old Man" to jot his "awful singer" condemnation. And that seems to have been the end of Joe White's association with Thomas A. Edison, Inc.

The Variety obituary said he signed a Columbia contract in 1915, but 1917 probably is the right date. His first Columbia double-faced disc appeared in November that year as No. A2348, and coupled "The Harp That Once," which he had already sung for Edison, with another Thomas Moore Irish song, "The Minstrel Boy."

The supplement published the photo of "J. Malachy White" as a very young looking, black-haired fellow and gave the following description:

"In the words of his own 'Minstrel Boy,' (it) is certainly true Thomas Moore's songs were 'made for the pure and free, they shall never sound in slavery.' The deep unfathomed love of the Irish for Ireland is tragically sung in the song of the Minstrel Boy who tears the strings from his harp as he falls on the battlefield to keep his beloved instrument from coming into the hands of his enemies. "Through Tara's Halls," however, set to the plaintive air, "Grannmachree," is Moore's most famous ballad. It refers back to 900 B.C. when King Ollav Fola held his conclaves of chieftains and bards at Tara where the "Psalter of Tara" was written and sung."

In February, 1918, on Columbia record A2445, J. Malachy sang another Irish song, "Over in Erin," coupled with M. J. O'Connell's version of "I Want to Go to the County Mayo." O'Connell had been a very busy recording artist during two years in which he sang for virtually all companies, but this may have been his last recording.

The supplement said:

"J. Malachy White, be it known, sings the good old Irish songs in the good old American uniform."

This statement was accompanied by a not very clear picture of White, holding a rolled-up paper, presumably sheet music.

The last J. Malachy White record, No. A2453, which came out in March, was one on which he sang a completely forgotten song that never "did anything"—"That's Why I Love You And Call You Machree." Its companion also was a "dog"—"There's Another Angel Now in Old Killarney," sung by Sam Ash.

Concerning the White side the supplement said:

"The melody sung by J. Malachy White has in it the tang of the auld sod, and is one in which the soldier-tenor has delighted his comrades in the Spartanburg Camp where he is serving his country."

The photo of White in uniform

(Continued on next page)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from preceding page)

again was reproduced, and on the second try, was good and clear. But by this time the tenor probably had gone overseas. At any rate, there were no more "J. Malachy White" Columbia records, although he told me he made 10.

IV. Victor Recording Career

Joe White's longest and most important recording period was the one he spent, beginning in late 1925, with Victor. During that time he not only sang the vocal refrains in many records made by Joseph Knecht's Goodrich Silvertown Cord Orchestra, but also did a number of solos without the dance band.

The orchestra's first Victor, No. 19793, combined "Brown Eyes, Why Are You Blue?" and "A Kiss in the Moonlight." It was recorded September 22, 1925, and was announced in the December supplement. There were two photos, one of Knecht and the other of the "Silver-Masked Tenor" wearing his facial disguise.

Supplement Editor James E. Richardson's comment was characteristically felicitous:

"Practically all of the East has heard the Goodrich Silvertown Cord Orchestra over the radio; here is its first Victor record—two fox trots; and, by way of added surprise, the mysterious 'Silver-Masked Tenor' is singing the vocal refrain in both records. The Masked Tenor (who, unmasked, is the most agreeable company you'd meet in a day's travel), puts sentiment into his part of them. Here at last, for you, are the organization, and the singer, you have been demanding on Victor records."

On the same supplement page were two more numbers by the Goodrich Orchestra and the Masked Tenor. They had been recorded on September 29. Coupled on No. 19798, were "I Wonder Where We've Met Before," and "Carolina Sweetheart."

Mr. Richardson's remarks again were flattering:

"The orchestra presenting these numbers is fortunate in including dance musicians of very unusual skill; that is why its records will dance so well. Both numbers have refrains by the tenor voice whose fine quality you will be certain to remark—as we did when we first heard it. There is no need to tell you that here is an artist-organization—which can play dance music for you in musicianly style."

After its initial recording dates in September, the Goodrich Orchestra seems not to have had another Victor engagement until April 6, 1926. Then it played a waltz, "A Night of Love," and a fox trot, "Reaching for the Moon," both with Joe White vocal interludes.

They appeared, No. 20016, in the June supplement, but, beginning in January, 1926, Victor had ceased to issue monthly lists that gave detailed information about all the new records, so as a rule from now on there will be little comment to quote. It may be understood, however, that all the records to be mentioned had "Silver-Masked Tenor" refrains.

BOOKING AGENT—"Uncle Jim" Harkins, former vaudeville performer who did some recording, was booking agent for Joe White's son, Bobby, "Uncle Joe" also was for many years the "right hand man" to Fred Allen, radio comedian, in arranging Allen's programs.

On May 26, 1926, the Orchestra recorded "Burgundy," which was combined, on No. 20074, with "Cherie I Love You," by Waring's Pennsylvanians. I can't seem to find it in a supplement, but it must have been placed on sale in July or August.

On the same day the boys made five "takes" of "I'm Lonely Without You," but the tricky new electric recording didn't do a satisfactory job. They came back on June 21 and made four more, one of which was issued on No. 20095, with "Do You Believe In Dreams?" by Irving Aaronson's Commanders, as its coupling.

The next date was September 14, and the selections were "Petrushka" and "Mary Lou." They appeared in November on No. 20204. On September 23 the Goodrich/White combination recorded two waltzes, "Falling in Love With You" and "Trail of Dreams." These were listed in December as No. 20238.

Early in the New Year, on January 6, 1927, the Orchestra played "Moonbeam, Kiss Her for Me" and "So Will I." "Moonbeam" was issued in March as No. 20419, combined with "Sweeter Than You," by Nat Shilkret and the Victor Orchestra. Franklyn Baur sang the refrain.

"So Will I" also came out in March, on No. 20436. Its coupling was "High, High Up in the Hills," by the Shilkret ensemble with the singing by Charles Harrison.

A date on January 27 resulted in a fox-trot, "Silver Song Bird," and a waltz, "Love Me All the Time," issued in June as 20591. The next session, on February 11, brought No. 20491, "If All the Stars Were Pretty Babies," a fox trot placed on sale in May and combined with "A Lane in Spain," by Jean Goldkette's Orchestra.

The Goodrich players also made four "takes" of "Au Revoir (But Not Goodbye)." None was issued.

Then a five-month interlude ensued. On July 11 the Orchestra and tenor made three "takes" of "Lenora," but they were unsatisfactory. Three more were done, August 4, and this time the selection was approved as No. 20911, but I can't find it in any supplement, nor is it in the 1928 Victor catalog.

Perhaps for some reason it was withdrawn immediately after publication. The reverse side was "Springtime," by Ben Black and His Orchestra, with singing by Lewis James. Judging by its number, it was intended for issue in November or December.

Also on July 11, the group made three takes of "Charmaine!" but they were rejected. Another effort, on August 4, was more successful, and was issued on No. 20892, coupled with "Roam On, My Little Gypsy Sweetheart," by Ted Weems and His Orchestra. August 4 also saw an effort to record a catchy tune called "Nothin'," but it remained unissued.

We are now nearing the end of the Goodrich Silvertown Cord Orchestra's recordings. On December 7, they, and Joseph M. White, recorded "He Loves and She Loves," which went unissued, and "Is There Someone for Me?" This was combined with another waltz, "Tomorrow" by "Johnny Hamp and His Kentucky Serenaders," and issued in March as No. 21167.

The final session for the orchestra was January 31, 1928, when it played "Ya Gotta Be Good to Me" and "The Church Bells Are Ringing for Mary." The former was combined on 21439 with "Tell Me You Love Me," by Waring Pennsylvanians, and received belated issue in August, as did "Church Bells," with coupling "It Was the Dawn of Love," by Paul Whiteman's Orchestra, and a chorus by Bing Crosby, Jack Fulton, Charles Gaylord, and Al Rinker.

Meanwhile, Joe White sang the refrains in a couple of numbers by Nat Shilkret and the Victor Orchestra, both recorded February 2, 1928. One, "Moments With You," was combined, on No. 21327, with "I Can't Do Without You," by Waring's Pennsylvanians, and issued in June.

The other, "The Bells of St. Mary's," appeared on No. 21371, with "Ah! Sweet Mystery of Life," also by the Shilkrets, but with a refrain by Lewis James as its coupling, and also had a June issue.

It is possible that Joe sang in some other dance records that I have overlooked.

V. Victor Solo Records

My guess is that most HOBBIES readers like me, will be more interested in "the Silver-Masked Tenor's" solo records than in his incidental singing with a dance band.

On December 7, 1925, Joe White had three "takes" of "Kathleen Mavourneen" and four of his old standby, "The Harp That Once Thro' Tara's Hall," but they were rejected. He tried again on December 23, and this time produced satisfactory versions that were issued in March, 1926, with this terse description:

IN DISGUISE—JOE WHITE'S photo as "the Silver-Masked Tenor" is from the Victor supplement for December, 1925.

"Agreeable tenor numbers. A delicious touch of brogue when needed."

October, 1926, brought two favorite Ernest R. Ball ballads, "Mother Macchree" and "A Little Bit of Heaven" (No. 20134.) They had been recorded June 29.

Joe White's next solo recording was January 5, 1927, when he sang his own song, "Mammy's Little Kinky-Headed Boy" and "Dear Heart, What Might Have Been." They were paired on No. 20438 and must have been issued in May, although the disc does not appear in the monthly list.

On June 21, 1927, the tenor made unsuccessful efforts to record a new Ernest Ball song, "Watching the World Go By," and his own composition, "The Bells of Killarney." A second trial on July 7 brought approval and the record was issued in October.

On December 2, 1927, the "Silver-Masked Tenor" sang "My Stormy Weather Pal." This was issued on 21144, coupled with "Mother of Mine, I Still Have You," which he had recorded on November 28.

On February 2, Joe White observed "Groundhog Day" by singing "You'd Rather Forget Than Forgive." He was brought back on February 14 and obliged with "Dream Kisses." These two numbers were combined on record 21257 and were placed on sale in May.

Joe White's final efforts as a Victor soloist took place in the summer of 1929. On June 24 he made four "takes" of "My Sin" and on July 1 turned out three more, but all were rejected.

He made three of "Wonderful You" on June 28 and two more on July 1. But again neither he nor the recording equipment could achieve anything acceptable.

That was almost, but not quite, the end of "The Silver-Masked Tenor's" recording career. Sometime later, probably toward the end of 1930, he sang the refrain in a Romeo (Cameo) record of "The Waltz You Saved For Me," by the Society Night Club Orchestra (No. 1578.)

The other side was "Would You Like to Take a Walk?" by Jack Berger's Hotel Astor Orchestra, with chorus by Chick Bullock. And on Romeo No. 1590, Joe did two solos—an Irving Berlin song, "Reaching for the Moon," and "When Your Hair Has Turned to Silver."

It is not unlikely that he made other electrically recorded "off-brands." However they have not come to my attention.

The Romeo records used the shortened form of Joe White for the singer's name. On Victor he was always "The Silver-Masked Tenor," with no clue to his identity.

VI. Joe White's Letters

After I returned home from New York I had no further direct contact with Joe White. I did learn, probably from a mention in Variety, that he had suffered a fall in the offices of the Shapiro, Bernstein & Company music publishing firm that caused ARTISTS' MODEL—WALTER P. MacDonald, who impersonated Southern colonels and Western cowboys in national advertising, was a record collector who enjoyed being a guest at a radio minstrel show rehearsal, in which JOE WHITE and other recording artists took part.

one of his legs to be amputated.

Then I was surprised to receive a letter from him dated July 10, 1953. My surprise was the greater because he wrote as if he were addressing a stranger instead of someone whom he had known.

By ill luck, a part of the left hand corner of the letter is missing, but I shall quote it and fill in what I take the missing words to be:

"Dear Mr. Walsh: My good friend Dan McNamara of ASCAP told me about the fine article you have written (in HOBBIES—J.W.) about my dear old pal, Arthur Fields, God rest him. I am enclosing a letter he wrote me a month before his sad and untimely passing. Please accept it with my compliments.

"I used to sing on radio and was known as the Silver-Masked Tenor—soloist with B. F. Goodrich Silvertown Cord Orchestra over NBC, 1925 to 1931. I made many Victor records during that period of time. I went out on the RKO vaudeville circuits for two years and was a headline attraction. I played all over America and Canada.

"I am trying to locate any Victor recording of 'Kathleen Mavourneen' which I recorded with the Victor Salon Orchestra directed by Joseph Pasternack and am also looking for all these recordings I made with the B. F. Goodrich Orchestra. I collect John McCormack records and have about 100. I lost my left leg above the knee in 1943, the aftermath of a wound I received in W. W. #1 (World War I), where I saw active service with 27th N.Y. Div., A.E.F. With good wishes, cordially yours, Joseph M. White, ASCAP.

"P.S. Where can I obtain HOBBIES magazine?"

I wonder if I sent Joe a record of "Kathleen Mavourneen." Although I have a copy now I am not sure whether I owned one in 1953.

I did give him an immediate reply, which began: "Dear Joe: I was glad to get your letter . . . but how come you didn't realize that you were writing to an old friend?" I then recalled our New York meetings and his kidding me about bringing "a suitcase full of 'white lightning' " the next time I came to New York.

(Continued on next page)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from preceding page)

Then I said: "I had a long article about Arthur in Variety (for which I write regularly) a week or so after his death. I am wondering if you ever see any of my Variety articles."

Joe replied on August 4, and I'll quote parts of what he wrote:

"Dear Jim: Of course I remember you and meeting you with Billy Murray—at those minstrel rehearsals I got all the old-time singers together for at that time. I just didn't associate the name Jim Walsh as being the one—whom I had the pleasure of meeting.

"Thanks for the 'Music Views' magazine you sent me, autographed. It's an interesting little book and 'chuck full' of informative items of great interest to folks like you and me. I don't get 'Variety' at the news stands in my neighborhood. It's strictly a 'local yokel' district and unless I get downtown, which is very seldom, since my siege of bronchial-virus-flu in February, followed later by shingles, which put me in the Veterans Hospital from June 13 to the 30th. I still am bothered, but they are disappearing.

"By the way, how is the 'corn likker' down your way? I like a drink of it, if it's at least five years old and 'ripened' in an oak charred keg—'medicinally,' of course.

"Dan McNamara of ASCAP sent me a copy of the July issue of HOBBIES, but your articles on Arthur Fields had been torn out for his files. I must try and get another copy to read about our dear old friend Arthur. Enclosed is an old Victrola catalog of 1922 for your collection. Gosh, what prices they charged for these machines back in those days when a 'buck' was a 'buck'.

"Do you know where I can pick up an old Edison Home cylinder phonograph with reproducer and recorder in good working condition? I had one, which I haven't seen about the house for the past three years. It needed a reproducer and strap for cylinder—perhaps my kids, who don't seem to like old things, I collect, threw it out.

"It's disappointing to me that my three sons and two daughters are not interested in their father's hobbies. The only son I had who was 'sympatico' was killed in a C-47 U.S.A. Force plane that crashed in Oklahoma on November 11, 1948, as he and 11 other brave American service men were en route home for a four days furlough. God rest them all. Graham McNamee White was his name. His godfather was my old radio pal, Graham McNamee. He was only 18, a handsome 6 feet 1, curly haired, happy, blue eyed lad, who sang like an angel and loved people. Mother and I miss him so. Write soon, Jim. God bless you. Your friend, Joe White."

Joe's stationery described him as a member of ASCAP and as a dealer in books, music, and Americana at 281 Alexander Ave., New York City.

Along with this letter Joe sent an autographed photo of himself, accompanied by the following explanatory note:

"Dear Jim: This is the only photo I could find at present. I'll send you another one with Silver-Mask on it as soon as I can find one. This was taken for my tour on the White and Brown Chautauqua Circuit—through the South and Middle West, May 15 to September 9, 1924. My company at that time consisted of Hon. Granville Jones, former State Senator of Arkansas, a retired minister who was our lecturer; Miss Meekie Ruth Smith, soprano, of a Kansas City radio station; Agnes Knocklikova, a Czechoslovakian violinist of a Chicago radio station, (and) Norman Goodbrod, pianist of a Lincoln, Neb., radio station. He also drove the eight-cylinder Oldsmobile touring car we traveled in. We did four months of one-nighters under canvas, two shows daily. We were the first radio artists to make a Chautauqua tour. It was a lot of fun."

The photo is reproduced with this article.

I'm ashamed to say I didn't get around to writing to Joe again until February 14, 1954. I was working on a very busy schedule then at TV-radio station WSLs in Roanoke, Va., getting only one Sunday off each two weeks, and, as always, was so swamped with correspondence that it kept piling up.

I explained this to Joe and contritely said:

"I am thoroughly ashamed of what must appear to be the bad treatment I have given you, and I do hope you will forgive me. One of these days, to make amends, I should like to do an article about you for my 'Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists' department in HOBBIES. Since your recording career goes back at least to 1917 and you were so popular as the Silver-Masked Tenor I'm sure a lot of my fans would like to read about you."

Joe replied on February 17 and seemed more interested in having me write about his son, Bobby, who was beginning to make a career for himself as a singer than about himself, but of course, Bobby, who was only 17, was out of the scope of my HOBBIES department, since he was a boy and not a pioneer recording artist.

Joe's stationery had been changed and now described him as a singing teacher and a dealer in music and antiques. Here are parts of his letter:

"Could (you) mention my son, Bobby, who has been in college since he was 16; he is now 17 and will be 18 October 27? He is six feet tall and very handsome, and his voice, which I have brought safely through its difficult period of transition, is now a lovely lyric tenor. He is majoring in music at Hunter College here in New York. My 13-year-old daughter, Eileen Anne Frances White, won a scholarship at Our Lady of the Blessed Sacrament High School at Goshen, N.Y., where she has room and board and education for four years for free. It costs at least two grand a year to send a girl to this wonderful Catholic school. She is very happy there and a very brilliant student. She is a very lovely, tall, beautiful, young lady with a grand sense of humor, and I guess she'll have a lot of beaux by the time she decides to get married.

"You sure have a very busy schedule and I do wonder how you are able to accomplish all the things you have assigned yourself. If you have any old HOBBIES magazines, send me a couple. They are splendid things to have around. I expected a two-year subscription from one of my relations, who wanted to give me a Christmas present, so I'm still waiting to hear from him about it. That's why I've delayed in subscribing. Yes, Jim, I recorded for Columbia, 1917-18, as J. Malachy White. I made 10 records for them, with Robert Hood Bowers conducting the orchestra most of the time. I have 'The Harp That Once Thro' Tara's Hall,' backed up with 'The Minstrel Boy.' Gosh, I didn't know much about the fine art of 'bel canto' at that time—just a good, natural, tenor voice.

"I trouped for three seasons as tenor soloist with Neil O'Brien's Super Minstrels on the Klaw & Erlanger Circuit, 1921-22,23, all over America, eight months each season. Dear old Neil was like a father to all of us young lads on his show. I called him up on New Year's Eve last and talked with him and sang a couple of his favorite old songs over the telephone. He said at the time that he felt all right, only arthritis kept him more or less bedridden. Then he passed on to his heavenly reward 13 days later. God rest his wonderful and kindly soul. He was 85 years old.

"I've been in the 'Vets' Hospital again since I last wrote you. I had septicemia or blood poisoning. I got a dizzy spell and they sent an ambulance and took me to the hospital on November 17, for 10 days. If I had gone there when I fell and broke my leg in April, 1943, the fine orthopedic doctors there would have saved my leg, as there was no evidence of cancer in the bone. A 'big shot' surgeon at Roosevelt Hospital, New York, cut the leg off."

With this letter Joe sent a photo of Bobby, which I am submitting to be reproduced. Writing accompanying the picture says it was taken in 1947 when Bobby was 10. On the reverse side Joe wrote that Bobby had been in radio and TV since he was six, "appearing first on Madge Tucker's famous Kiddy radio program over WJZ, 'The Lady Next Door,' and 'Coast to Coast on a Bus,' with Milton J. Cross as M.C. and announcer." Joe continued:

"He was on Arthur Godfrey's TV and radio CBS shows for 10 appearances after he won first prize for professional children on the Godfrey TV show, December, 1949. He is attending summer classes now in music at Columbia University. I have taught him voice culture since he was five."

I suppose Bobby is still in "show business," but I do not keep up with present-day professional activities and have lost track of him. You will notice that the printed matter accompanying the photo lists "Uncle Jim" Harkins as Bobby's agent.

During my memorable trip to New York, the late "Uncle Jim" was assistant to Fred Allen, the famous radio comedian. He held that position for many years. Billy Murray introduced me to him and "Uncle Jim" booked me to appear with Allen as a guest artist. Unfortunately, however, when the program arrived, President Franklin D. Roosevelt, who was running for his third term, chose to make a campaign speech that preempted all radio network time. The Fred Allen show wasn't given and Jim Walsh lost his opportunity to impress radio listeners throughout the country with his knowledge of old records.

The last letter I am able to find from Joe will make present-day collectors of cylinder phonographs and records gnash their teeth. On August 7, 1954, Joe wrote:

"Dear Jim: I picked up 450 old Edison wax and Amberol cylinder records and an Edison Home cylinder phonograph, with a large brass horn and stand to hold it, all for $9. The reproducer is no good, so I need a Model C. Edison wax record reproducer and an Amberola reproducer to play four-minute records. Can you help me? I have some good radio program ideas concerning these old records.

"Had a strange dream one night last week about our dear old pal, Arthur Fields. I guess he needs our prayers, so I remembered him in my prayers last Sunday at mass. Bobby is now a sophomore at Hunter College. His voice is a warm, rich, lyric tenor, reminiscent of our immortal John McCormack. I also got an old golden oak Edison cylinder record cabinet that holds about 200 records for the $9.00."

Bargains like that Joe described are not likely to turn up now-a-days in cylinder phonographs and records!

I am sorry that I didn't get around to writing about The Silver-Masked Tenor during his lifetime, but I'm sure this article will interest his present-day admirers. They will join me in affectionate remembrance of the Irish singer with the warm personality and we will hope that things are going well for the surviving members of his family.

THE END

OLD METALS

SILVER FOR SALE

STERLING silver flatware and hollow pieces of active and inactive patterns. Reasonable prices.—Anton Hardt, The Golden Cockerel, 335 Bleeker St., New York, N.Y. mh6069

FLATWARE: For active, inactive and obsolete sterling patterns. Write us your needs. Prompt replies.—Edward G. Wilson, 1802 Chestnut St., Philadelphia 3, Pa. je128041

SILVERPLATE, sterling, New and old. Most patterns, brands matched. Stamped envelope for list of your pattern.—Fuller, Box 4325-H, San Francisco, Calif. 94101 f128041

HARD-TO-FIND, sterling flatware; Hundreds of pieces in obsolete, inactive patterns, many sets.—McCarthy, 1104 Bigelow North, Seattle, Wash. 98109 my3633

FOR SALE in original case 12 Pearl Handled knives and forks engraved blades and lovely, $225.00.—L. W. Martin, 8215 Wilcox Ave., Cudahy, Calif. 90201 f1002

SPOONS FOR SALE

STERLING SOUVENIR and unusual spoons, $1.50 up. Approved selection upon request and reference. Souvenir and unusual spoon lists available $1 for four issues over a 12-month period.—Edward G. Wilson, 1802 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa. 19103. je124033

STERLING silver flatware and hollow pieces of active and inactive patterns. Reasonable prices.—Anton Hardt, The Golden Cockerel, 335 Bleeker St., New York, N.Y. je60690

SOUVENIR SPOONS, all sizes, enamels, gold washed, etc., mostly sterling. Send 50c for large descriptive and price list of over 200 spoons. Include large SASE.—Dorothy Wilkison, P.O. Box 251, Bradenton, Fla. 33505 ap3065

SILVER WANTED

MATCHING SERVICES for new & old patterns, in plated and sterling. Buy and sell. S.A.S.E.—Vy. Biel, Burton, Wash. 98013 mh120821

OLD STERLING souvenir spoons of Brattleboro, Vermont.—Michelman, Greenhill Pkwy., Brattleboro, Vt. 05301 mh3802

NEW sterling flatware, constantly changing stock of active & inactive patterns, ½ retail or less.—Robert Freedman, Rm. 403, 333 Washington St., Boston, Mass. 02108 au120061

STERLING silver—variety of patterns available. Want list kept. Please send SASE for free list.—The Sterling Shop, Box 595, Silverton, Ore. 97381 o122741

DOMINIC AND HAFF'S Renaissance pattern.—Leavengood, 1000 Park St. North, St. Petersburg, Fla. 33710 f1211

Please mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements.

THE LAMP POST ANTIQUES

(Toni Garrett)

8312 E. 11th St.

Tulsa, Okla. 74112

Specializing in complete line of 1847 Rogers Bros. flatware.

We also carry active, inactive, and obsolete sterling flatware.

If your pattern's name is unknown to you send us a tracing, drawing or photo along with maker's name (copy it off back of any piece) and we'll do the rest.

We also carry a general line of fine antiques.

No reproductions. Satisfaction guaranteed.

Stamped envelope for reply, please. tfe

Nothing Says It Quite Like Silver

PRICE'S ANTIQUES

11108 North Dixon Ave.

Tampa, Fla. 33612

(813) 935-2034

—STERLING FLATWARE

MATCHING SERVICE—

Over 1,000 Patterns

ACTIVE, INACTIVE & OBSOLETE patterns. Register your pattern wants with us (specifies appreciated). FREE notification. FREE lists. LAYAWAYS invited. FREE BRIDAL Registry. Satisfaction guaranteed or your money refunded. Postage and Insurance extra.

NOTICE: We buy silver. Highest price paid.

Write, phone or ship day or night: Florida residents add 4% sales tax. All silver in like-new condition. In plastic wraps. All knives with stainless blades unless noted otherwise.

NOTE: We also buy & sell jewelry, diamonds & small antique items. Write. tfe

EDWARD G. WILSON

1802 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, 3, Pa.

LOcust 3-7369

SEE OUR BIG ILLUSTRATED

AD ON THE BACK COVER

OF THIS ISSUE

We are accepting reservations for our Unusual and Souvenir Spoon Lists for which we are charging $1 for 4 copies over a 12 month period. Dealers and collectors inquiries invited. Freight additional. Money refunded if not satisfied. Federal Excise Tax included where applicable. tfx

WANTED

WANTED: Any pieces of this "Orchids" Towle pattern in good condition.

Please quote price first letter

REYNOLDS OF ROCK CLIFF

Keene's Mill Road

Cottdale, Ala. 35453

mhml

RUBIE KOHL ANTIQUES

2424 N.E. 22nd St.

Pompano Beach, Fla. 33062

STERLING SILVER FLATWARE—

MATCHING SERVICE

Hard-to-find — obsolete, inactive & active patterns of all American Silversmiths. Over 400 patterns to select from. List your wants with us; if we do not have it, we will try to get it for you. If pattern is unknown, make a pencil sketch of the pattern and the maker's mark.

We buy sterling—Write or ship. If you accept our price we mail you a check immediately. If not, we ship at our expense. Stamped envelope for reply. tfe

PEWTER WANTED

EARLY PEWTER wanted: All items of pewter, molds, books pertaining to pewter and makers. Highest prices paid.—Almar Antiques, Box 74, Newtown, Conn. 06470. je126351

HIGHEST PRICES for Eggleston, Johnson, Nott, Martine, Sumner, also moulds, measures, candlesticks, and any Southern pieces. Q. J. Scarborough, P.O. Box 67, Fayetteville, N.C. 28302. 919-483-2507 Collect. ap3614

HIGHEST PRICES for Eggleston Johnson, Nott, Martine, Sumner, also moulds, measures, candlesticks, and any Southern pieces.—Q. J. Scarborough, P.O. Box 67, Fayetteville, N.C. 28302. 919-483-2507 Collect. je3694

SPOONS WANTED

OLD STERLING souvenir spoons of Wisconsin cities. Describe and price.—William Parks, 2549 Hoard St., Madison, Wis. 53704 my3882

Get to Know Antiques Fast

Comprehensive, Brief

Read as you Run

THE WORLD OF ANTIQUE ARTS

By Orille B. Rhoades

50 Fields of Antiques

See the pictures for characteristics so you can recognize, study, and feel the originals at antique shops and shows. Learn history, dates, shapes, designs, materials.

Order YOUR book now. Send $7.50 to:

HOBBIES Magazine

1006 So. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill. 60605

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Theodore Morse a Centenary Tribute

By JIM WALSH

PART I

I. The Dying Composer

Almost half a century ago, on the afternoon of Sunday, May 25, 1924, Theodore Morse, one of the greatest American composers of popular songs, lay dying.

"Teddy's" strength was ebbing and his mind was clouded with the shadows of death, but he clung feebly to his weakening grasp on life. Half-consciously, he prayed to live just a few hours longer so that he could hear a radio program which would be broadcast to lighten his suffering.

But his efforts were unavailing. Five hours before the program, featuring song hits he had written, went on the air, Teddy Morse died.

On June 3, The Roanoke Times, for which I became a staff writer more than a generation later, published a news story under the heading, "Morse's Old Songs Radioed Too Late . . . Composer Died Just Before Concert to Cheer Him Was Given." It read:

"New York, June 2—When Broadway learned that Theodore Morse was ill with pneumonia, it thought up the best ways of cheering him in his illness. The idea of Samuel Rothafel, of the Capitol Theater, was finally voted the best. It was to have the ballet at the Capitol sing Morse's songs, some of the best known ballads the country has ever known, and broadcast them over the radio.

"The songs they were to sing, and did sing, were 'Blue Bell,' 'Goodbye, Dolly Gray,' 'M-O-T-H-E-R,' 'Jungletown' and 'Dear Old Girl.' A radio set had been put at the bedside of Mr. Morse in his home, 8 Fort Washington Place. The family had hoped he might enjoy the concert, and although physicians feared he was sinking the song writer prayed that he would live until the evening for the radio serenade.

"The concert was scheduled for Sunday evening at 8 o'clock and it was given at that hour. But Mr. Morse had passed away at 3 o'clock.

"Mr. Morse was vice president of the Association of Song Writers, and a member of the committee that went to Washington recently to take up with Congress the matter of royalties and radio use of songs and artists."

II. A Centenary Tribute

So Teddy Morse died without hearing the radio tribute intended expressly for his dulling ears. But—this thought recently occurred to me—suppose he had not died. Suppose he had heard and been stimulated by the broadcast and overcome the pneumonia. Suppose he was living now. He would be an almost incredibly ancient man, who would observe his 100th birthday on April 13, 1973. This year, in fact, marks the centenary of his birth. It is also the centennial year of the great comedienne, Ada Jones, who was born June 1, 1873, seven weeks after Morse.

"THE DENVER NIGHTINGALE." As this damaged copy shows, the sheet music of Teddy Morse's first song hit, "A Little Boy in Blue," bore the likeness of a gentleman known as William Murray, but who, a year later, became famous as Billy Murray, the star recording comedian.

Then, I thought, since he could not hear the program which was designed to lift his spirits as he lay dying, would it not be appropriate to pay him a centenary tribute this year in HOBBIES? If Teddy's personality and consciousness have survived beyond the grave and he should learn that admirers whom he never knew were keeping his memory green 49 years after his death, would he not feel a gleam of happiness in his "spirit world?" But if he knows nothing of earthly affairs, his memory still deserves to be cherished for the sake of the pleasure his music gave, and still gives, to millions of his fellow humans.

Reasoning thus, I decided to write this centenary tribute to the memory of Theodore Morse and to schedule it to appear as closely as possible to the anniversary of his death. I wish that his devoted wife, "Dolly," who was my good friend during the last year or two of her life, were still living and knew of how I hope to honor her Teddy. Since she has gone to join him as a member of the vast "silent majority," I wish I knew that her daughter, Annette, whose age was only five when her father died, is still with us and will learn of what HOBBIES and I have done.

III. Comments and Corrections

Meanwhile, the article I have quoted requires a few comments and corrections:

First: I wonder why it was sent out under a June 2 deadline when Morse's death occurred on May 25, (Continued on next page)

"TUNEFUL THEODORE". THEODORE MORSE, great popular song writer, who was born 100 years ago, on April 13, 1873.

more than a week earlier. Surely the death of such a well known man would have been reported within a few hours after it occurred.

Second: Teddy Morse was not the composer of "Goodbye, Dolly Gray," which was written by the noted lyricist, Will D. Cobb, and a vaudeville performer, Paul Barnes. It was, however, published in 1900 by Teddy's firm, the Morse Music Co., which he sold at a good profit that same year.

Third: The correct title of "Jungle town" is "Down in Jungle Town."

Fourth: When the news story says Morse was vice president of "the Association of Song Writers," "the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers" (ASCAP) probably is meant. In 1914 "the tuneful Theodore," as Sigmund Spaeth called him, helped his close friend, Victor Herbert to found ASCAP, and both he and Mrs. Morse, of whom we shall hear more, were charter members.

And, by a pathetic coincidence, Victor Herbert died on Monday, May 26, 1924, one day after Teddy Morse's passing. He succumbed to acute indigestion a few hours after having learned of his fellow song writer's death.

IV. At the Funeral

The funeral of Theodore Morse was a somber, emotion-choked occasion. The Eight Famous Victor Artists, whose pianist he had been for two years, from 1916 to 1918, attended in a body and as they left the church the tension and grief were almost unbearable. Then it occurred to the impish Monroe Silver that something should be done, as he told me years later, "to clear the air." So he fell into step beside Billy Murray and said, in a subdued voice that nevertheless was clearly audible to the remainder of the Eight:

"Bill, wouldn't you like to make a phone call?"

This brought a laugh and the tension snapped. Billy's fellow artists said that his favorite pastime, aside from watching and playing baseball, was to leave his beautiful two-story, white home at Freeport early in the morning, ride into New York on the Long Island train, get a five-dollar bill changed into nickels and spend the remainder of the day in a Pennsylvania station phone booth, calling everybody he could think of. They said, too, it was odd that while he didn't have a particularly good memory for most things, he never forgot a phone number that he had dialed once. A year later, if he had occasion to call that number, he would confidently ring it without consulting the directory.

Billy, by the way, bought his home from Albert Von Tilzer, the famous song writer and brother of Harry Von Tilzer, who also lived in Freeport. And his first car he obtained, second-hand, in 1908, from Theodore Morse, who wanted to replace it with a new one.

It is worth mentioning, too, that the Victor record of Morse's last song, "Monkey Doodle"—one of the many he had written with a simian cast of characters—was issued on May 23, 1924, just two days before his death. Its words were by Leo Wood and Teddy's wife, "Dolly." The number, described "as a jingly, jungly dancing song," was sung on the Victor disc by the American Quartet, with Billy Murray taking the lead. Murray and Morse had been intimately associated ever since Billy "came east" in 1902, and were always warm friends.

V. Some Biographical Notes

The life that ebbed away that Sunday afternoon had begun a little more than 51 years previously in Washington, D. C., where Theodore Morse was born April 13, 1873. It probably would be impossible to start out now and find out for sure where he was on each of his succeeding birthdays, but there is no doubt of his whereabouts on one. By referring to HOBBIES for April and May, 1957, you will see that on April 12, 1917, the group that later was called the Eight Famous Victor Artists gave a concert in the Elks Theatre at Pulaski, Va., and Morse was the pianist. There was no way for the troupe to leave town by train until the next morning, so at least a few hours of Teddy's 44th natal day were spent in Pulaski.

The remaining time probably was passed enroute to New York, for it was understood that the performers had consented to appear in Pulaski only to break a long "jump" from Atlanta to New York. They all—Murray, especially—wanted to get back for the opening of the big leagues' baseball season.

Teddy Morse and John Philip Sousa had two things in common. They were born in the Nation's capitol and both were skilled violinists while in their early teens. The undersized Morse youngster seems to have been a "problem child," however, in spite of his musical accomplishments, and his parents sent him to Maryland Military Academy. He loathed wearing a uniform and being under strict discipline, so at the age of 14, just about the time that Thomas Edison was introducing his improved wax cylinder phonograph, he ran away to New York City, just as Billy Murray deserted his home in Denver when he was 16. A Mr. and Mrs. Rucker, who were friends of his parents, let him work in their music store on 125th Street. He received no salary, but the Ruckers gave him room and board. A year later he became a clerk for the Charles W. Ditson Company, the New York branch of the Oliver Ditson music publishing company of Boston. According to Jack Burton, author of "The Blue Book of Tin Pan Alley," he composed several instrumental numbers that Ditson published, and headed a trio of piano, violin and cello that played at weddings, dinners and other social functions. It is not clear whether he played the violin in the trio or chose the piano on which he had become accomplished. Teddy may also have had some talent as a singer. Abel Green and Joe Laurie, Jr., say in their book, "Vaude," that in his early song writing years he sang his own composi-

(Continued on page 118)

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Reforeathered

Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

Please mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

tions on the Variety stage.

In 1898 he founded a music company of his own, and two years later published "Dolly Gray," which is said to have sold about a million copies. He then sold out and accepted a position with Howley, Haviland and Dresser. The firm's star composer was huge Paul Dresser, brother of Theodore Dreiser, who became a famous novelist of the seamy side of American life.

The first recorded song by Teddy Morse that I have been able to trace was "In the Moonlight with the Girl You Love," which was published in 1902, and sung on an Edison cylinder by William H. Thompson. It was not a strong success, but his next, "A Little Boy in Blue," one of the pathetic "war ballads" popular in those days, was a hit. A surprising thing is that on the cover of the sheet music there appeared the likeness of a gentleman called "Wm. Murray," who was to win world-wide fame a little later as Billy Murray, most popular of early recording artists. At that time he was still with Al G. Field's Minstrels and hadn't taken Field's good advice to get rid of the stiff sounding "William" and change to Billy, thus giving an informal quality to his name. It seems rather startling to find Billy Murray singing an old-fashioned "sob song," but he did the same thing in 1904 when he recorded for Victor Morse's pathetic "child ballad," "Please Come and Play in My Yard." Both Murray and Morse were short, stocky men whose faces wore broad smiles when the occasion called for them, but in most of his photographs bespectacled Teddy looks downright morose. Bill, I estimate, was about five feet six, and Morse probably around five feet three or four.

The words of both "A Little Boy in Blue" and "Please Come and Play" were written by Morse's first lyricist, Raymond A. Browne. So far as I know, Teddy never wrote the words for any of his songs. In that respect he differed from Irving Berlin, Charles K. Harris, Paul Dresser and some of the other great "tunesmiths."

VI. The Most Recorded Song Writer

My narrative having reached this stage of Theodore Morse's professional development, I pause to say that any relatively detailed account of his song writing activities must wait until later when some of the recordings of his works will be discussed. I think it interesting, however, that a photograph of Richard J. José, the famous counter-tenor, not only was reproduced on the music of "Dear Old Girl," but that José sang the ballad for both 10-inch and 12-inch Victor records. It was also recorded for Victor by Harry Macdonough (who sang many Morse numbers) and the Haydn Quartet, and they revived it ten years later, on double-faced record No. 17397. On the other side of the 1913 version was Dresser's "On the Banks of the Wabash," sung by what was represented to be the American Quartet, but with Macdonough, instead of Murray, taking the lead.

EARLY VICTORS. These records, by Bert Williams and his partner, George Walker, show what Victor record labels were like before the dog trademark was adopted, at the time Theodore Morse was beginning to be known as a song writer. These white labels, with handwritten information, were either factory test pressings or salesmen's samples.

One thing I wish to point out here is that Morse's remarkably successful career began at a time when the phonograph and record industry was undergoing changes. Late in 1901 Victor 7-inch and Monarch 10-inch records began to bear the name of the Victor Talking Machine Company instead of Eldridge R. Johnson, and the famous dog trademark appeared. Early in 1902 both Columbia and Edison started making gold moulded cylinders and Columbia began to record its own discs instead of selling the Globe Record Company's Climax brand.

An idea of what Victor labels looked like before the fox terrier, "Nipper," began to listen to his Master's Voice coming from the primitive "gramophone," may be obtained from the accompanying illustrations, provided by Ed Foster, a California collector, of records which Bert Williams and George Walker made in 1901.

Harry Von Tilzer is usually considered the most successful popular song writer of the first 10 years of this century (Irving Berlin took over the title after "Alexander's Ragtime Band" appeared in 1911 and was followed by an epidemic of other Berlin hits), but my research indicates that Teddy Morse wrote more songs that were recorded from 1902 to 1910 than Von Tilzer or anyone else. Perhaps he had fewer raging hits than Von Tilzer but his energy was boundless and he turned out an amazingly large number that were considered worthy of being recorded.

Not only was "Dear Old Girl" Morse's greatest 1903 success, but it probably remains his most durable composition—a classic in the repertoire of all "barber shop" quartets. The words were by a cultured, blind poet, Richard Henry Buck, who wrote the lyric of Adam Geibel's "Kentucky Babe" and also did the words of at least one other successful Morse song,

"Where the Southern Roses Grow." Years later, when Morse would play a medley of his old songs for the Record Makers' concert audiences, Billy Murray would facetiously remark: "He had to rehearse this one a week before he could play it," but it wasn't clear whether Billy meant Teddy had trouble mastering technical difficulties or was overcome by the pathetic sentiment of the number—one of those old-fashioned "sob ballads" whose heroine died in the second verse. There is a Tin Pan Alley tradition that Paul Dresser died of a broken heart in 1906, before his last great hit, "My Gal Sal" was published, because the vogue of "Dear Old Girl" and other Morse songs indicated that the young composer was outshining him as the Howley, Dresser Company's star writer.

Another 1903 song, "Up in a Coconut Tree," is interesting because of its being the first of the almost innumerable "jungle" or "monkey" songs that Morse composed. It was also one of Billy Murray's first three Victor records, issued in December, 1903. The Edison cylinder of the song came out a month earlier, after Murray's Edison career had begun the preceding August.

And here I think it well to say that the Morse songs were not only popular in his native United States and, of course, Canada, but also were widely sold and sung wherever English was spoken. In 1906, for example, the Russell Hunting Record Company of England issued Sterling cylinders within a couple of months of three Morse songs: No. 409, "Daddy's Little Girl," sung by Florrie Forde; 424, "Starlight," by Hamilton Hill, and 434, "Just a Little Rocking Chair and You," by Ella Retford, whose real name was Nellie Flanagan. Judging by her records, she had one of the sweetest voices any woman ever possessed. A few months later, a Sterling record of one of Morse's greatest hits, "Arrah Wanna," was made by a popular comedian, Fred Vernon.

VII. "The Woodchuck Song"

The chances are that, unless you are "a real old-timer," you have never

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

heard that cheerful composition, "The Woodchuck Song" but in 1904, nearly 70 years ago, a lot of people were singing its nonsensical refrain:

"How much wood would a woodchuck chuck if a woodchuck would chuck wood?
And how much wood would a woodchuck chuck if a woodchuck only could?"

Now, a woodchuck could make good, and would,
But there ain't no reason why he should—
So how much wood would a woodchuck chuck if a woodchuck would chuck wood?"

(Soaring to the realms of pure poetry, I think one line could be improved by changing it to "but there's no good reason why he should," thus obtaining the euphonious effect of a double rhyme.)

Teddy Morse wrote the tune of "The Woodchuck Song," but the words were the inspiration of no less a personage than Robert Hobart Davis, for many years editor-in-chief of Frank A. Munsey's magazines—Munsey's, All-Story, Argosy, Top Notch, etc. In a book called "The Amazing Bob Davis," by Fred S. Mathias, Davis told of a call he and Morse paid upon Fay Templeton, the musical comedy star, which induced her to use the number in "The Runaways," a production in which she was to be starred. Morse gets rather cavalier treatment in Davis' account as reported by Mathias, because he is not mentioned by name, but is referred to only as "the fellow who wrote the music." As far as I know, Miss Templeton never made any records, and all the discs and cylinders of "The Woodchuck Song" that I have learned about were by "Ragtime Bob" Roberts. In other words, for recording purposes Roberts "owned" the song. His Indestructible cylinder of it also contained another comic ditty, "Henry Hudson Was a Bold Jack Tar."

Mathias quotes Davis as saying he made $20,000 from the sale of "The Woodchuck Song" (this must have been from sheet music, for royalties were not paid on record sales in those days) after he and Morse called at Fay Templeton's home and found her in bed, behind a screen. She told them to "go to it" and Davis began singing the song while Teddy accompanied. After the rendition she agreed to "plug" it, and a scene was introduced in the "Runaways," with half a dozen Negroes standing on an elevated platform and vociferating the ditty. Everything went well until the platform crashed and some of the black performers were hurt and sued for damages. After that the chorus was brought down to the stage level, and there was no more trouble. Bob Davis, incidentally, maintained the words of a popular song are more important than the music, but, except for comic and topical songs, I wholeheartedly disagree. There are few more depressing occupations than reading the lyrics of one sentimental tune after another. Without the music they nearly all seem banal, trite, unimaginative, with only a limited range of emotions and, more often than not, hardly literate. The only reading that is even more depressing is that of the words of operatic arias translated into English. But, as the writers of "Long Ago in Alcala" remarked:

THEY SANG MORSE SONGS. William H. Thompson (left) made one of the first records of a Theodore Morse song, a 1902 Edison cylinder of "In the Moonlight with the Girl You Love." Bob Roberts (right) made several records in 1904 of "The Woodchuck Song."

"So long as a tune has a right good swing
It doesn't much matter what words you sing."

And now, if you will forgive a purely personal reminiscence, I'll devote a separate section to telling of the time I unexpectedly met Bob Davis.

VIII. Meeting the Amazing Bob

Before I started working as a newspaper, radio and television news writer, I was employed for two years as a clerk-carrier in the Marion, Va., post office—an occupation that caused the late Christopher Stone, assistant editor of "The Gramophone," to dub me "the literary postman." One morning I was on duty at the money order and registered mail window when a stocky, rather florid-faced man of about average height asked to have a thick envelope sent by registered mail. He wore a cap and I seem to recall that his face was somewhat freckled.

I observed that the envelope was addressed to a department of the "New York Sun" and that the name of the sender in the upper left hand corner was Robert H. Davis, so I casually remarked: "That's the name of the man who used to edit the Munsey magazines."

My customer appeared startled. He stammered slightly as he replied: "Eh. What's that? What did you say?"

"I said your name is the same as that of the man who used to edit the Munsey magazines."

"Oh," he answered. "I—I'm—the man!" Then, looking at me curiously, he inquired:

"Are you an author?"

"Well," I replied, "I can't exactly say that, but I have sold a few things."

"Did you ever send me anything?"

"Yes," I said, "and I apologize. I was just a teen-age kid and I had no business bothering a busy man like you, but I sent you perhaps a dozen short stories, and you kept some of them long enough to make me think maybe you were going to buy them. Sometimes they were gone a month, but I know now they were all hopeless."

He shook his head. "No," he said, "I never kept a story more than a week before giving a decision." (But, in my case, I knew he had.)

I told him I was a collector of old phonograph records and had a 1904 Victor of Bob Roberts singing his "Woodchuck Song."

He looked amazed. "Great Scott!" he said. "I wouldn't have thought there was a copy left in the world!" He added: "I'd sure like to hear it." Then he told me that since leaving the Munsey publications he had been acting as a "roving reporter" for the "Sun", going wherever he liked and writing accounts of what he saw and did on his way "from nowhere to nowhere." (I have wondered sometimes if he mentioned the post office encounter in one of his articles.)

Another man came up to Davis and I deduced they were travelling companions.

"Well, Mr. _____," "The Amazing Bob" said complacently, "the gentleman here recognized me."

The other man seemed rather cynical. "Oh, yeah!" he said, and that was all his comment. As Davis accepted his receipt and turned to go, he remarked to me: "I'm glad to have met you." And I was glad to have met him.

On another occasion, while on post office duty, I waited upon the Russian-born composer, Louis Gruenberg, who had become famous because of his opera, "The Emperor Jones." He was visiting Sherwood Anderson, the novelist, who, with his son, Robert L. Anderson, at that time published the Marion weekly papers. Gruenberg was outlandishly attired, by Southwestern Virginia standards, and looked to me more like a Swiss mountain climber than anything else. When I mentioned the opera to him, he gave a shout of laughter and said:

"Here it is again! He knows me! Everybody knows me!"

Apparently his fame didn't displease him a bit.

And, on an earlier occasion, while I was in the music department of a furniture store, I sold a Ruth Etting record to a young man who, I later learned, was Roger Wolfe Kahn, a famous dance band leader of the 1920's, and son of Otto Kahn, the multi-millionaire banker. Although I had no idea who the customer was, I was impressed by his quiet courtesy and by his asking for "Miss Etting's new record." He was visiting Bob Anderson. A little later I created a bit of sensation in Marion of my own when T. S. Stripling of Clifton, Tenn., the famous novelist and Pulitzer prize winner, came to see me.

IX. Teddy Morse's Reminiscences

In 1908 Edward Madden and Theodore Morse wrote a comic song with an unforgettable title, "I'd Rather

(Continued on next page)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from preceding page)

Be a Lobster Than a Wise Guy," which was the only successful number in a musical comedy called "Playing the Ponies." It was recorded by Billy Murray on Victor double-faced record No. 16036 and was a consistent seller for years. The song maintained that, in the long run, the simple, unpretentious human is likely to come out better than the sophisticate who thinks he knows it all, and the last part of the refrain went:

"Don't worry about the man who gets the lemon;
He's bound to get the peaches when they fall—

And the more of life I see it really seems to me
That the lobster is the wise guy, after all."

I mention this song because the August, 1920, issue of the Edison publication, "Along Broadway," contained an interview with Teddy Morse, who at that time was chief manuscript reader for the Leo Feist Music Company. His duty was to select songs that he thought had the elements of popularity and improve them when necessary. He was still composing, but not so actively as he had done in the early 1900's. The writer of the interview said Morse called his tiny office "the lemon and peach room," because it was there that "peaches" were accepted for publication and "lemons" were rejected. And I wonder if he got that title from the words I have just quoted in the "lobster" and "wise guy" song.

The article is worth reprinting, but, like Morse's death notice, it calls for some comments and corrections:

"You probably are well acquainted with the name of the song publishing house of Leo Feist. Its motto, an internationally known one, is 'You Can't Go Wrong With Any Feist Song.' Its song successes have been many.

"In the rear of the Feist headquarters, on West 40th Street, New York City, there is a little office which its occupant has chosen to designate as 'the lemon and peach room,' for there the many lemon products of would-be composers are rejected and the few peaches for Feist's song garden are picked.

"Theodore Morse, 'Ted,' as his friends call him, presides over 'the lemon and peach room.' There he picked or whipped into shape many of the songs you know best — songs, like 'K-K-Katy,' that brought $20,000 to Jeff O'Hara, its composer; 'Over There,' 'Jazzola,' the quartet hit, and 'When You Look in the Heart of a Rose.'

"Mr. Morse is himself the composer of those good old-time numbers, 'M-O-T-H-E-R,' 'Blue Bell,' 'Arrah Wanna,' 'Up in a Coconut Tree,' 'He's a College Boy,' 'Keep a Cozy Little Corner in Your Heart for Me,' (Sic!) 'Bobbin' Up and Down,' 'Uncle Joe and His Old Banjo,' and many others.

"It is easy for me to write songs," said Mr. Morse recently. "I can sit down any time and compose something. All I need is a title and words and a sense of the rhythm."

"Most of the popular song composers do not work enough. They only compose when the fancy strikes them or they need the money. A good song writer should make at least $10,000 a year. We are always seeking new song writers. When we find the right kind we do not contract for their services for a certain period of time, but instead give them a drawing account of $75 a week. They have no regular office hours and can work as they please."

"Song composers do not have to be known or live in New York for us to consider their compositions. 'Alabama Lullaby,' one of our biggest hits, came to our office via the mail route and from an unknown composer."

"A song composer to be successful must watch the market, the trend of the popular fancy, and then write for that. Ed. Madden and I wrote the first monkey song, 'Down in Jungle Town,' because we believed the public wanted a song of that character. The market was then flooded with that type of song."

"Madden and myself composed 'Blue Bell,' our biggest hit, because we knew a girl by that name. And here's the way 'Arrah Wanna' got its name. Jack Driscoll (Sic!) and myself were writing an Indian song. Jack was sitting in a hammock at his home, trying to think of a name for it."

"He must have thought too hard, or in some way lost his balance, and the hammock turned over. On the bottom of the hammock he saw its name, 'Arrah Wanna,' and that's where the title of that song came from."

"How did I get my start in this business? Well, I was first an errand boy for C. H. Ditson, the music publisher. My connection there made a retail song salesman of me. I studied the piano and found, as they say, that I had 'an ear' for music. One day I composed my first song, 'Up in a Coconut Tree,' and that started me on my way."

This article is dotted with factual errors, which perhaps could be attributed to Morse's having a faulty memory, but more likely were caused by the writer's inaccurate note taking. After all, only 18 years had elapsed in 1920 since the beginning of Morse's career, and he should have been able to remember clearly for such a short period.

To start the comments and corrections I'll say that I never heard any of the composer's old friends speak of him as "Ted." They invariably called him "Teddy."

"Jeff" O'Hara should have been "Geoff," or "Geoffrey." The correct title of one song is "Keep a Little Cozy Corner in Your Heart for Me" and of another, "When Uncle Joe Plays a Rag On His Old Banjo." Perhaps in Morse's time song publishers welcomed manuscripts from unknown writers, but in a little later era they had suffered so many suits from amateur composers who alleged their compositions had been "stolen" that a policy was adopted of returning, unopened, all unsolicited manuscripts.

"Down in Jungle Town" was Madden's and Morse's most successful "monkey song," but not their first. It came out in 1908, after—as will be seen by the recordings list at the end of this article—the pair had written numerous others on the same theme. The first appears to have been "Up in a Coconut Tree" which Teddy is quoted as saying was the first song he wrote. Of course, it wasn't. It came out about the same time as 'Dear Old Girl,' and after Morse had already written several successful numbers, including 'A Little Boy in Blue.'

The man who wrote the words of GREAT 1903 SONG HIT. "Dear Old Girl" is probably the most enduringly popular of Theodore Morse's songs. Richard J. Jose, the famous counter-tenor, made records of it in both the 10-inch and 12-inch size.

"Arrah Wanna" was Jack Drislane—not Driscoll—and the account Morse is quoted as giving of his beginning as an employe of the Oliver Ditson Company seems somewhat shortened.

X. Morse's Composing Methods

Teddy's statement that he could compose at any time, and without the help of a piano, receives confirmation from an account in the Edison Blue Amberol record list for January, 1914, of the way one of his numbers, "In the Land of Plinkity Plank," was written:

"Mr. and Mrs. Morse made a trip down the Mississippi River recently, through the region they have so often put into song. They were steaming slowly along past the levees of the lower river, one bright moonlight night, and the sounds of the banjos came to them from the many little cabins nearby. Mrs. Morse was inspired by the plinkity plank, plank of the music to pen the lyric of this song, and Mr. Morse had the music written before they even got back home to New York. It has made a great success, especially in quartet form, to which it is best adapted. The Premier Quartet, always a favorite with Edison owners, has never given a better performance than this one."

An even more intriguing account of Morse's composing methods was contained in a letter written to me on November 10, 1952, by "Dolly," his widow. It deals with the way that great hit, "Down In Jungle Town," which surely must have one of the most irresistible melodies ever written, came into being:

"Yes, my Teddy did write a lot of jungle songs. 'Down in Jungle Town' was written without a piano in a camp in New Hampshire. Ted had the lyric Eddie Madden had sent. He tapped out the melody on a table, wrote a lead sheet, sent the lyric and lead sheet to Haviland, and before we returned to New York City in the early fall it was on its way to be a hit."

Those of us who are not trained musicians must marvel at the way a man could read a set of words and then, with no musical accompaniment, tap-tap an undying melody on the top of a table. And now that I have introduced Teddy Morse's brilliant helpmeet, there will be an intermission until next month when her contribution to his career, and her other achievements, may be discussed at greater length.

(TO BE CONTINUED)

THE GLAMOROUS CHICAGO ANTIQUÉ SHOW and COLLECTORS' FAIR

Meet your old friends and make new ones at this twice yearly event. The next one is

APRIL 27 - MAY 1
at the CONRAD HILTON
Exhibition Hall

HISTORICAL TAPE RECORDINGS RADIO AND TV

By LOU DUMONT

Welcome to the club!

When you turned the page to this department, you joined the club. A club which started with a handful of engineers, announcers and broadcast production people several years ago. It has grown to the point that it now includes a number of radio and television "buffs," production people, home-makers, students, educators, and the list goes on and on. Both in this country and abroad.

I like to think of myself as a charter member of this "club." I began collecting radio programs in 1943 when I was signed as a staff announcer at a small radio station in New Hampshire.

In those days tape recorders were few and far between. Most of the national radio networks had been recording—on acetate, 16-inch discs—programs for later broadcast. The consumer might have used a "Wilcox-Gay Recordio" or a "Motorola Discorder" and, with a microphone placed in front of the radio loudspeaker, the home-recording specialist "cut" his own discs. Often, there was a "rumble" to the turntable which was picked up by the recording stylus and preserved for posterity.

The Motorola I used was a combination record/playback unit, with the "playing-back" done through the radio. There was a small transmitter inside the unit which beamed the sound signal to your radio. It might travel as far up the street as two or three houses. I remember being reprimanded once for "broadcasting" my home recordings over the frequency of a Boston radio station, blotting out "One Man's Family."

I never realized, during those early radio years of my career, that the fun of recording off-the-air would become a hobby which consumes many hours weekly and many dollars annually.

This hobby has introduced me to a number of people, both inside and outside the profession who share a common interest.

Membership in this so-called club is not sophisticated. There are no dues. We have no boards of directors. We correspond with one another, either by letter or tape-recording. Some of my colleagues even save the tape-recorded letters for their factual content. (I wonder how much the tape-recorded letters of Lou Dumont might bring at auction in the year 2024?)

Call me a historian, if you wish. Most of us whose collections begin with those early radio shows feel we are documenting interesting years in American entertainment history. Many of our tapes should be used in education. All of us agree that our hobby takes more time than we can spare, but who wants to stop?

By 1960 I had collected some 500 reels of tapes. These included home-made discs, transcriptions of radio programs, quarter-track, half-track, full-track, "air checks" of shows I did. Many of these tapes contain 6 hours of information per tape.

At about this time, "the nostalgia wave" hit America!

Some young people called it "camp," others referred to this magic as "trivia." We more-serious, dedicated, collectors cared not what it was called. We—like Old Man River—just kept rolling along, trading tapes, meeting friends, spending many pleasant hours in front of the hi-fi.

The idea of this hobby is to continue the flow of information about the radio/tv pioneers.

I was on the staff of WBZ in Boston at about the time the radio-nostalgia took hold. I appeared on a program hosted by Bob Kennedy, now in Chicago, and played excerpts from some of the old programs from my collection as well as from the collections of colleagues. Interest was high... the audience responded... and the station has since repeated the series, a number of times, with results!

Since this is the first of a series of columns, I have attempted to give the reader a background on the writer and his hobby.

In future columns, as space permits, we'll turn back the hands of time to memorable radio broadcasts. We'll include historic television shows and much behind-the-scenes information. One of the more interesting of the latter was the Dave Garraway show called "Tempo/Boston." (And would you believe our cat was named "Tempo"?). A number of historical audio tapes of Garraway's series from Boston will be discussed in future articles in this column.

I have been corresponding with the widow of one of radio's pioneer performers and she will offer interesting notes about her late husband.

Those of you who were connected with the industry in radio's golden years are most welcome to correspond with your writer. Your memories are really the foundation of this hobby and it would be pleasant to share them with the legion of collectors around the world.

I offer thanks to Pearl Ann Reeder, editor of HOBBIES, for seeing the possibility of interest in our hobby. If reader response indicates high interest, we'll be encouraged to continue on.

Letters to me, from our readers will be acknowledged, if at all possible, and, while the secretarial staff is small, somehow, some way, we hope to manage to keep you posted.

Next installment: radio's first singing troubadours.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Theodore Morse a Centenary Tribute

By JIM WALSH

PART 2

I. The Girl From Brooklyn

Picking up this centennial tribute to the song writing genius, Theodore Morse, where we left off last month:

I have never heard any of Teddy's former associates speak of him except affectionally and with warm liking.

Neither have I read any unfavorable remarks about him other than some statements made by Eddie Cantor in a Saturday Evening Post article years ago. The comedian told of how, as a small boy with show business ambitions, he was trying out some songs in the Howley, Haviland and Dresser audition rooms when Morse yelled at him to shut up. According to Cantor, the fat, soft-hearted Paul Dresser replied to Morse's outburst with some such words as: "Oh, let the kid sing, Teddie! He's not doing any harm!" Morse then put on his coat and hat and, glaring balefully at the boy, stormed out of the office. Possibly the tuneful Theodore couldn't stand Eddie's juvenile singing style or maybe something else had gone wrong with him.

This incident probably occurred in 1904, when Cantor had not much more than reached his twelfth birthday. Dresser died in 1905 after a long illness, so the alleged unpleasantness probably antedated his death by a good many months. Aside from it, accounts of Teddy Morse agree in describing him as a genial, warm-hearted, diminutive dynamo of energy.

As far as I know, Morse went well into his thirties without marrying. Then one day in 1905 a 15-year-old Brooklyn girl named Theodora Teris, who was born July 11, 1890, and who had song writing ambitions, asked his opinion of a lyric she had penned called "Girlie, I Love You."

Her reception was more friendly than that Eddie Cantor had received. Teddy was favorably impressed by the verses, and "carried away" by the vivacious girl. He agreed to set music to the song, whose words were no worse than those of the usual popular ballad. In fact, they were better.

True, the opening stanza does give the impression that the hero, who is ardently addressing the heroine, may not be quite a gentleman, for we are told, "Her cheeks are red at things he's said." The refrain, however, makes it clear that his intentions are honorable:

"RECORD MAKERS" TROUPE.—THEODORE MORSE is the short, stocky man at the extreme right of the front row. Others in front are Billy Murray, two unidentified men and Henry Burr. Vess L. Ossman is just behind Burr, and John H. Meyer behind Morse. In the rear row are Byron G. Harlan (only partially shown), Arthur Collins and Albert Campbell. It is not known where the picture was taken.

"Little girlie, I love you!
Tell me truly what to do!
Shall I buy the wedding ring?
Shall we marry in the spring?
Let me buy a home for you.
There'll be lots of room for two.
Bye and bye we'll buy the cradle—Girlie, I love you!"

The teen-ager's maiden effort not only was published, but Billy Murray made a Victor record of it which sold very well. The year of publication was 1906, and in that year the 33-year-old composer and the 16-year-old girl were married. However, they did not need to buy a cradle until 1918 or 1919, after 13 years of wedded life, when their only child—their daughter, Annette—was born. Perhaps Teddy fell for Theodora partly because their names were so nearly alike. However that may have been, they became the first husband and wife song writing team in Tin Pan Alley's history.

Not, however, for a few years. Howley, Haviland and Dresser was going down hill before Dresser's death, although the success of such Morse songs as "A Little Boy in Blue," "Dear Old Girl" and "Blue Bell" kept it in business for a while. But after Dresser's death the company collapsed, and Morse went to F. A. (Kerry) Mills, composer of "Red Wing," "At a Georgia Camp Meeting," "Happy Days in Dixie" and many other hits, as the highest paid song demonstrating pianist in the music business. A year later F. B. Haviland revived the firm for which Morse had previously written, and Teddy was made a full partner in the business and its head composer. Its success during the next few years was attributed largely to Morse's energy and creative ability.

Despite her teen-age song writing ambitions and her one successful ballad, Theodora Morse seems to have done little or no lyric writing for the first four or five years of her marriage. From 1904 to 1911 her husband worked mostly with Edward Madden, a graduate of Columbia University, whose father was the house detective at the Marlborough Hotel; Jack Drislane, who, with Bert Fitzgibbons appeared with Morse in vaudeville, and Jack Mahoney. Madden, Drislane, Mahoney and Mrs. Morse, were the most important of Teddy's collaborators, but from 1902 until 1924 he was associated with a good many others, including the already mentioned Browne, Buck and Davis, and Dick Richards, William Cahill (who made some comic "Dinny Donahue" monologs years later for Edison records), Orr O'Connor, Howard Johnson, Arthur Fields, Earl Carroll, John O'Brien, Al M. Kendall, J. Russel Robinson and Leo Wood.

(Continued on next page)

HE SANG MORSE BALLADS.—Harry Macdonough, shown here at his desk, recorded many Theodore Morse songs, as solos or with the help of the Haydn Quartet.

Teddy Morse and his associates, like all other craftsmen who wrote popular songs for a living, were students of market trends. Madden and Morse gave monkey songs their first popularity, but had a horde of imitators, and they probably were the foremost writers of popular tunes in march time. In fact, when Victor issued a record of Frank C. Stanley singing "Dream On, Dear Heart, Dream On," which Morse had written in 1908, the supplement said:

"Theodore Morse, although he once wrote a march ballad and had to keep on writing other songs of the kind because the public demanded them, is at his best in ballads of a higher class, such as this beautiful number, one of the most striking of the year."

The "beautiful ballad," however, was not a good seller compared to Morse's many songs in march tempo.

But, if Teddy and associates could be originators, they also didn't mind being imitators. When Harry Von Tilzer produced the first highly successful "cheer up, sweetheart, the sun will soon be shining" type of song in "Wait Till the Sun Shines, Nellie," Drislane and Morse came through a few months later with "Keep On The Sunny Side." Two Mahoney and Morse "Indian songs" - "Blue Feather" and "Red Clover" - obviously owe a lot, including their titles, to "Red Wing." But the granddaddy of all Indian songs was Neil Moret's "Hiawatha," which came out in 1903 and was followed by hundreds of imitations.

Ballads about "Mother" were always a sure bet among the more sentimental types of popular music buyers, so Howard Johnson, lyricist, and Teddy Morse, composer, had a hit in 1915 with "M-O-T-H-E-R, A Word that Means the World to Me," which probably has been one of the most parodied songs ever written. The words are unabashedly crude and pathetic - a fact which is explained by the statement that the narrator has "been around the world a lot, but never went to school." However, there is one word he has learned to spell and that "dear word" is "Mother."

II. The Theodore Morse Music Company

As we said last month, Teddy Morse founded the Morse Music Company in 1898, published one hit, "Goodbye, Dolly Gray," and sold out two years later to become associated with Howley, Haviland and Dresser. Around 1909 or 1910 he decided to return to the music publishing business. Perhaps one reason was that Congress had just enacted a copyright law, providing that phonograph record manufacturers must pay royalties to publishers and composers of songs which they issued on discs and cylinders. It may be that Teddy thought it would be nice to have all the royalties of his new songs for himself. However that may be, he set up the Theodore Morse Music Company at 143-145 West 40th St., New York, with himself as president and Herman Snyder, secretary-treasurer. And within a year or so, Mrs. Morse, under the assumed name of D. A. Esrom, was writing the words for nearly all the company's songs. Madden, Drislane and Mahoney all transferred to working with other composers, notably Percy Wenrich, who for most of the ten years from 1910 to 1920 was an even more consistently successful hit writer than Morse.

Teddy was not the only song writer with ambitions to be his own publisher. Wenrich had a fling at it, but soon returned to J. H. Remick. Morse's old associate, Raymond Browne, was a publisher in 1913. Seymour Furth was another "write 'em and publish 'em" man, and so was Tell Taylor, who composed "Down By the Old Mill Stream" and "When the Maple Leaves Were Falling." And of course there was Irving Berlin, who broke away from Waterson, Berlin and Snyder to have his own firm.

When I began doing research for this article, I thumbed through an assortment of old sheet music and

(Continued on page 118)

MUSICAL COMEDY STAR—FAY TEMPLETON introduced "The Woodchuck song" in "The Runaways". Words of the song were by Robert H. Davis, editor-in-chief of the Munsey magazines, and music by Theodore Morse.

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Re feathered

Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

tfo

ROSES IN HISTORY & ART

(Continued from preceding page)

interest." The Saturday Review wrote of Rose Recipes: "For the most part uncomplicated basic recipes with the addition of roses. Information about rose products and where to buy them is given. Rose lore entwines the recipes, bearing out the books subtitle 'Customs - Facts - Fancies.'"

These three books, so closely tied in with Jean Gordon's collection, will some day be collector's items. Red Rose Publications, Woodstock, Vt., who sells the editions, have discovered that the rose is a popular subject.

Each book is proof positive of . . . The Subject is Roses, and tributes to the rose.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 30)

found some publications of the Theodore Morse Music Co., which I didn't know I had. On the covers of all are the photos of two smiling persons—"D. A. Esrom" and Theodore Morse. It is well known that "Esrom" is "Morse" spelled backward, but I don't know just where Mrs. Morse got the initials, "D. A.," and what they represented. Since her mother's name was Dorothy Terriss, and Theodore afterwards wrote songs under that name, perhaps D. A. were the initials of her mother's Christian names, or perhaps the A. stood for her father.

Like all prominent publishers of popular music, the firm issued many successful songs and probably a greater number that didn't do well. I was especially intrigued by the title of one of which I had never before heard, "The Teddymorse Tango," which was described as "New York's latest Craze. A positive sensation." However, it was never recorded. Another now forgotten number was "Texico," declared to be "the finest of all Turkey Trots." The Peerless Quartet made a Columbia record of "Texico," but it proved to be a "lemon" instead of a "peach."

Morse songs bearing the name of D. A. Esrom as collaborator were numerous. Beginning in 1911 they included "Another Rag (A Raggy Rag)," "Lizbeth Ann," "When Uncle Joe Plays a Rag On His Old Banjo," "In the Land of Plinkity Plank," "Bobbin' Up and Down," "Salvation Nell," "Luella Lee," "Whistling Jim," and "Way Back Home." One of their most successful and enduringly popular collaborations was an openly acknowledged "Steal"—"Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here," published in 1917 after Teddy had closed his publishing business and joined Leo Feist as composer and manuscript editor. This number, highly popular during World War I, set new words to a slightly modified version of the Pirates' Chorus from Gilbert and Sullivan's "Pirates of Penzance"—which itself is a parody of Verdi's "Anvil Chorus" in "Travatore." "Hail, Hail" was published "with apologies to Sir Arthur Sullivan." It was one of the last numbers on which the name of D. A. Esrom appeared, for the still very young Theodore had already begun writing as Dorothy Terriss. Incidentally, it's amusing to observe that in his "History of American Popular Music," the late Sigmund Spaeth did not realize that "Esrom" was Mrs. Morse, but thought it just another name for Teddy himself.

The Theodore Morse Music Publishing Co. was in operation until sometime in 1914 or perhaps early 1915, when Morse joined Feist and transferred publication rights of his songs to that firm, which issued his 1915 productions such as "Auntie Skinner's Chicken Dinner," "Doodle-Dee Means 'Won't You Marry Me?'" (another "monkey song") and "M-O-T-H-E-R."

BRITISH COMEDIENNE.—Charming Ella Retford made a Sterling cylinder in 1906 of a Teddy Morse song, "Just a Little Rocking Chair and You".

III. With the Record Makers Troupe

If Teddy Morse had retained control of his publishing company he probably could not have managed to go on three-month concert tours, beginning in 1916, with Henry Burr's Record Makers Troupe—afterwards the Eight Famous (or Popular) Victor artists. He found it worth his while, however, to accept Burr's offer and his congenial disposition made him popular with his associates.

As a member of the concert he at first remained at the piano, wearing a fixed smile as he accompanied the vocalists or the banjoists, Vess L. Ossman or Fred Van Eps. In 1918 a reviewer for a Uniontown, Pa. newspaper referred to him as "Teddy Morse, composer, piano virtuoso and accompanist extraordinary . . . the smiling man at the piano, whose proud and pleased grins were a sure tip that something new was being pulled off."

Somewhat later, the programs included "A Few Words From Theodore Morse." This seems to indicate that besides playing a medley of his songs, Teddy also spoke to the audience, but I don't know whether he came to the center of the stage or remained at the piano. Perhaps his discussion was of the "and then I wrote—" kind.

Despite his popularity, Teddy was dropped as a member of the troupe in 1918, in favor of young Frank E. Banta, whose father, Frank P. Banta, had played more than half the piano accompaniments on Edison cylinders before his death in 1903. The late Fred Van Eps told me he was responsible for Burr's engaging Banta, who was a member of the Van Eps Trio. "Teddy Morse," Fred said, "was a swell fellow, but he just couldn't play the piano that Frank could, so I told Burr I thought he ought to hire the kid, with whom I was used to working." Thus young Frank, who died a few years ago, was engaged, and passed his 21st birthday in 1918 on tour with the Eight in Texas. The change, however, seemed to make no difference in Morse's friendship with Burr, Murray and the other members of the troupe.

Strictly speaking, Teddy Morse may not qualify as a recording artist, but in 1918 he made one record that I know of. It was a Pathé sapphire ball disc, No. 20430, of "Jazzin' Around," on which he played a piano duet with another song writer, Abe Frankl. There was also an unidentified drummer. On the reverse side was "The Jazz Dance," by Eubie Blake's Jazzzone Orchestra. (Eubie Blake is still living and playing ragtime and jazz, at this writing, although he was born February 7, 1883, so is now 90.)

Also in 1918 Teddy wrote part or all of two "realistic" war sketches for recording—"A Submarine Attack" and "A Battle in the Air." The former was recorded for Edison by the Premier (American) Quartet, on disc 50490 and cylinder 3497, with the assistance of a woman who sounds like Helen Clark. "A Battle in the Air" was also recorded by the quartet and issued on Blue Amberol cylinder 3618, but did not appear on the Diamond Disc. Columbia issued both titles on double-faced record No. A2626, but credited the authorship of "A Submarine Attack" to the Peerless Quartet, which made both sides. The "Battle in the Air" was said to be the work of "(Albert) Campbell, (Arthur) Collins and Morse." Edison credits Morse alone. It may be that Morse composed the music of the introduced songs, while Campbell and Collins, who of course were members of the troupe, wrote the dialogue.

What was perhaps Teddy Morse's most successful so-called "high class concert song" was published during the 1916-17 period when he was traveling with the Eight. It was "Sing Me Love's Lullaby," which had "Dorothy Terriss" words set to a charming melody. Frances Alda liked the song so well she sang it on a Victor Red Seal record, and another Metropolitan Opera soprano, Marie Rappold, recorded it for Edison. These are the only examples I can recall of Morse's compositions gaining "celebrity" recognition.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Mrs. Morse did not restrict the Dorothy Terriss name to songs written with Teddy. She also worked with other composers, and in 1922 wrote the English language words of one of the greatest of all popular song hits, "Three O'Clock in the Morning," to the music of Juan Robledo. The late Paul Whiteman told me a few years ago that his Victor record of "Three O'Clock" sold close to four million copies, but I am skeptical of those sales figures. Another hit of which "Dorothy Terriss" provided the words was "Wonderful One," with music by Whiteman and Ferdie Grofé, who died April 3, 1972. Victor issued a Red Seal record of it by John McCormack November, 1923, and in May, 1924, after McCormack supposedly had "skimmed off the cream," announced a Black Label version by Burr, with a Rudy Wiedoeft saxophone obbligato and Frank Banta's piano accompaniment. Billy Murray quoted Victor recording officials as saying the Burr record sold twice as many copies in its first month as McCormack's had in the six months preceding. Mrs. Morse mentioned to me that she had the Burr record.

After Teddy's death, Theodora relinquished the Dorothy Terriss disguise, as Dolly Morse, wrote the words of many of the hits of the 1920's.

Record companies liked to issue medleys of Theodora Morse compositions. An example is Victor 17394, "Morse's Medley," played by Conway's Band late in 1913. It included "The Village Band," "Dear Old Girl," "When Uncle Joe Plays A Rag," "Luella Lee," "That's Why the Violets Live," and "Bobbin' Up and Down." At about the same time Columbia issued A1417, "Morse Medley," a banjo solo by Fred Van Eps. Fred plays "Salvation Nell," another number I can't identify, and "Bobbin' Up and Down," which is certainly an attractive "raggy" piece. Even earlier, in 1911, U.S. Everlasting had made a cylinder, No. 1329, "Medley of Theodore Morse Songs," by U.S. Military Band. And in May, 1924, the month Teddy died, Victor came along with 19287, "Ted Morse Medley Fox Trot," played by the Manhattan Merry-makers, and including "Way Down in My Heart," "Arrah Wanna," "Blue Bell," "Down in Jungle Town" and "Dear Old Girl." The choice of selections, you will notice is almost identical to that of the Capitol Theater chorus in the program broadcast five hours after Morse's death. The reverse side, by Ted Weems and His Orchestra, is Paul Dresser's posthumous hit, "My Gal Sal."

"BANJO-EYED" COMIC—EDDIE CANTOR as a boy of 12 or so, annoyed Teddy Morse by his singing of popular songs.

Teddy, himself, on occasion used the medley idea. His 1905 song, "What the Brass Band Played," included snatches of "I've Got a Feeling for You," "A Little Boy in Blue" and "Blue Bell." Other composers have resorted to the same idea to make use of their old tunes—for instance, Harry Von Tilzer in "The Songs of the Ragtime Boy"; Charles K. Harris with "Songs of Yesterday," and Irving Berlin with "They've Got Me Doin' It Now," also known as "the Berlin Medley."

IV. My Friend, "Dolly" Morse

Toward the end of October, 1952, more than 28 years after the death of Teddy Morse, I was greatly surprised and even more delighted to receive a letter from "Dolly," his widow. I have mislaid the letter and can't remember why she wrote, but I learn from my diary that she made this amazing statement: "I feel like a fool writing to a smart man like Jim Walsh." I remember she told me that she and her sister had taken HOBBIES for years and always looked forward to my articles. And she almost took my breath away by sending me a photograph of the Record Makers which had belonged to Teddy and was taken when he was with the troupe. By a remarkable coincidence, I received in the same mail a brief note and an autographed photo from Eddie Cantor, whose boyish singing had angered Teddy Morse nearly 50 years before. I suppose I must have written something about the Record Makers which included a reference to Teddy, to cause Theodora, or "Dolly," as she was always known in her later years, to send me the group snapshot.

COMPOSER'S WIFE.—This photo of Theodora Morse was made in 1941. Note that she autographed it for Jim Walsh under her three song-writing names—D. A. Esrom, Dorothy Terriss and Dolly Morse.

I have found a later letter from the brilliant lady, who had too modest a conception of her own merits, and shall copy the portions that are still of general interest. Last month I quoted a part in which she told of how Teddy composed the music of "Down in Jungle Town":

"Lucky you to have seen and heard Cornelia Otis Skinner in 'Paris: 90', even though you did have to ride 175 miles and back (to and from Richmond, Va.), and then to say 'Hello' to Nat Shilkret. There is one fine chap. We did see a lot of both him and his charming wife when he was in charge of recording at Victor. I don't see much of my old friends in the music business since I retired and moved to White Plains. Have a bad heart, and now the eyes are going bad, too. Haven't been into New York City in over seven years or to an ASCAP meeting, which hurts more than I can tell.

"... I had forgotten a picture I had taken in 1941. I don't care for it too much. My family says it looks like someone punched me in the jaw, but it's the best of the lot, so am sending it on. Sorry I can't send one to your young friend (Quentin Riggs), but really haven't any more. Others are 30 to 40 years old, and I am not sending them out.

"Yes, I do have a daughter. Too bad Ted couldn't have lived to enjoy her as much as my sister and I have, and do. She was only five years old when our Teddy left us. Her name is Annette (we call her Ann); she is named for my sister. She has a daughter, Theodora (Teddy) Ann, 10 years old, and it looks now like she is going to follow in her grandma's steps, only with a better education.

"I have a lot of William W. Delaney song books (he was at 117 Park Row, N.Y.C.). Have No. 1 to 89 (No. 14 is missing, as it was out of print when Mr. Delaney said he was going to close up shop.) That was in 1922, I think. Maybe they would be of some use to our friend, Dan McNamara (public relations director of ASCAP), when he wants to find some old songs.

"I've sold our little house on Beech Street and expect to move into a garden apartment, first floor. Doctor's orders: Can't climb stairs any more, so must start to get rid of a lot of things as we are taking a small apartment, 3½ rooms. Sincerely yours, Dolly Morse."

In my reply, I told Dolly that I should like very much to have that set of song books, which "Willie Wild-wave" Delaney issued at four month intervals from about 1891 through 1921, if she had not already arranged to give them to our friend, Dan. On December 30, she wrote:

(Continued on next page)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from preceding page)

"I haven't said a word to Dan M. about Delaney Song Books, so they are on the way to Jim Walsh, and do hope they arrive in good condition and he gets a kick out of them. Here's hoping 1953 will bring you and yours all the good things and thoughts you are wishing everybody else."

1915 HIT.—Theodore Morse's ballad, "M-O-T-H-E-R, A Word That Means the World To Me" was a big success 58 years ago. It is probably one of the most parodied songs ever written. Gene Greene, "The Ragtime King," whose photo is shown, was a vaudeville favorite who made many records.

If I remember correctly, that was the last letter I received from Dolly, whose heart ailment grew progressively worse. Less than a year later I received a letter from her sister, telling me Dolly had died November 10, 1953. After 29 years of separation she had gone to join Teddy.

It pains me to report the sad fate of the Delaney Song Books. The paper-backed pamphlets were printed on the cheapest grade of paper and were so brittle with age they were ready to fall apart, but I was proud of having a virtually complete set that had belonged to Theodore and Theodora Morse, and took good care of them. They remained safe for five or six years, packed in a cardboard box which I kept on a top closet shelf. Then one night, without my knowledge, my athletic kitten, "Nipper," climbed to the top shelf and decided to make himself a sleeping place in that box. Using his sharp claws, he had shredded about a score of the song books into ragged slivers before I discovered his villainy. I was broken-hearted, but didn't punish "Nips," because he had no idea he had done anything wrong. On another occasion I received from the late Rev. Harlan B. Kishpaugh a newspaper clipping which he emphasized I should return promptly, as it was vitally important to him. I read it, heard the door bell, and laid the clipping down on a sofa while I went to the door. When I returned "Nipper" had torn the printed matter into small pieces and was swallowing the last bit—a feat of devilment that got him into the minister's bad graces! However, I still have most of the song books put away, and should like to replace the ones "Nipper" destroyed.

V. The Morse Recordings

When the thought of writing this centenary tribute to Theodore Morse occurred to me so forcefully that for a time I could think of nothing else, I at first intended to publish a list of recordings of his songs, from the beginning to the close of his career. But I soon discovered this would be impractical. Even using small six-point type for the listing would take all my departmental space for several months.

So I finally hit upon a compromise. I would write a biographical sketch and tribute, but give details of the recordings of Morse songs for only about the first half dozen years of his activity—say, from 1902 to the time in 1908 when Edison brought out four-minute cylinders and Victor, Columbia and Zonophone started issuing double-faced discs. Just possibly, I thought, I might later be able to provide a supplementary listing of his recorded productions from 1909 to 1924. Meanwhile, a tabulation of earlier recordings would be useful to collectors who decided it would be unusual and fascinating to put together a representative assortment of the songs of Theodore Morse.

TYPICAL MORSE BALLAD. — This now forgotten song was published in 1913 by the Theodore Morse Music Co. The music was by Teddy Morse and the words by Mrs. Morse, writing under the assumed name of "D. A. Esrom".

In effect, that is the system I have followed. Records in the accompanying list are arranged, roughly, in the order they were issued, beginning with the Edison cylinder of "In the Moonlight With the Girl You Love," which came out in 1902. Companies are arranged in alphabetical order, with their names abbreviated. As a rule Columbia comes first, with cylinders preceding discs. Columbia numbers of 30000 or higher are cylinders. Comparatively low ones, like 1562, are discs. Then come Edison two-minute cylinders; then Indestructible and U.S. Everlasting cylinders, if any; and, finally, Victor and Zonophones.

I made one slight exception to the rule of ending at the close of 1908. Many single-faced Victor and some single-sided Columbia records were taken into double-faced lists, and, in the case of Victor especially, this "picking up" continued well into 1910. Thinking I should include those double-faced versions. I also listed any double-sided records containing Morse compositions that came out about the same time as the re-issues.

Obviously, since Theodora Morse began working with her husband only in 1911 (with the exception of the 1906 "Girlie, I Love You") songs with her lyrics are missing from the accompanying list, but those of Browne, Buck, Davis, Madden, Drislane, Mahoney and others are well represented. I have not, however, thought it necessary to include names of the writers of the words of the songs in the accompanying list. It is published in the hope that it will cause lovers of good American music to realize they owe a deep debt of gratitude to Theodore (and Theodora) Morse, on the centenary of his birth and the approaching 83rd anniversary of hers.

THE END

RECORDINGS OF
THEODORE MORSE'S SONGS
"In the Moonlight with the Girl You Love" (1902)
Edi. 8044 William H. Thompson
"A Little Boy in Blue" (1902)
Col. 31701 Tenor. (Probably Harry Macdonough.)
Col. 1562 J. W. Myers
Edi. 8040 Byron G. Harlan
Vic. 1299 Joseph Natus
Vic. 1394 Macdonough (piano accompaniment)

MORSE'S FRIEND. — VICTOR HERBERT, famous composer of light operas, was an intimate friend of Theodore Morse, who helped him found the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers. Morse and Herbert died within one day of each other.

- Vic. 1407 Macdonough (orchestra acc.)
Vic. 1435 Walter B. Rogers (cornet) and Sousa's Band
"Hurrah for Baffin's Bay" (1903)
Col. 32173 Baritone (probably Myers)
Col. 32217 Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan
Col. 1491 Collins and Harlan
Edi. 8447 Collins and Harlan
Vic. 2442 Dan W. Quinn
Vic. 31074 Collins and Harlan
Zon. 5598 Collins and Harlan
"Dear Old Girl" (1903)
Col. 32282 Myers
Col. 32948 Columbia Quartet
Col. 1573 Myers
Edi. 8613 Macdonough
Vic. 2643 Macdonough & Haydn Qt.
Vic. 4226 Richard Jose
Vic. 31172 Jose
Zon. 5925 Natus
"Lizard and the Frog" (1902)
Edi. 8049 Edison Military Band
"It's the Man Behind the Gun" (1902)
Edi. 7802 Frank C. Stanley
"Up In A Coconut Tree" (1903)
Col. 32284 Myers
Col. 1574 Myers
Edi. 8564 Billy Murray
Vic. 2453 Murray
"Isn't It Nice To Have Someone Love You?" (1903)
Col. 32478 Tally
"Woodchuck Song" (1904)
Col. 32666 Bob Roberts
Col. 1858 Roberts
Edi. 8617 Roberts
Ind. 3046 Roberts (with "Henry Hudson Was a Bold Jack Tar")
Vic. 2624 Roberts
Zon. 5795 Roberts
"Marriage Is Sublime" (1903)
Col. 32185 Baritone (probably Roberts)
Col. 1420 Roberts
Edi. 8429 Collins and Harlan
Zon. 3037 Roberts
Ind. 5599 Collins and Harlan
"It's the Man In the Soldier Suit" (1903)
Edi. 8384 William H. Thompson and Albert Campbell
"Great Big Kickapoo Chief" (1904)
Edi. 8763 Collins
"It Takes the Irish to Beat the Dutch" (1904)
Col. 32355 Murray
Col. 1647 Murray
Vic. 2493 Murray
Vic. 16247 Murray, Reverse: Under the Anheuser Bush
"Blue Bell" (1904)
Col. 32515 Macdonough
Col. 1813 Henry Burr
Col. A323 Burr, Reverse: "I've Got My Fingers Crossed, You Can't Touch Me." (Harlan and Chorus of Children.)
Edi. 8655 Harlan and Stanley
Edi. 8736 Harlan and Stanley—"Two Rubes at the Vaudeville" (Daisy Boulals sings refrain of "Blue Bell.")
Edi. 8829 Albert Benzler and James Hager (xylophone and bells)
Vic. 2750 Macdonough & Haydn Qt.
Vic. 16179 Macdonough & Haydn Qt. Reverse: Teasing (Murray & Haydn Qt.)
Vic. 2791 Blue Bell Medley, Haydn Quartet
Vic. 4142 Pryor's Band
Vic. 31328 Pryor's Band
Vic. 4326 Blue Bell—Humoresque. Sousa's Band
Vic. 4309 Blue Bell Medley No. 2 Haydn Quartet
Vic. 31377 Blue Bell Medley No. 2 Haydn Quartet
Zon. 5808 Burr
Zon. 6127 Bohumir Kryl (cornet)
"I've Got A Feeling For You" (1904)
Col. 32540 Roberts
Col. 1872 Roberts
Edi. 8561 Collins
Edi. 8841 Ossman Banjo Trio
Vic. 2956 Harry Tally
"Why Hello, Bill, Who's Your Friend?" (1904)
Col. 32542 Collins
"Oysters And Clams" (1904)
Col. 32541 Collins
Col. 1871 Roberts
Edi. 8730 Collins
Vic. 2915 Roberts
"Make A Fuss Over Me" (1904)
Col. 32565 Collins
Edi. 8833 Collins
Edi. 8859 Ossman Banjo Trio
Vic. 4104 Dan W. Quinn
Zon. 6094 Roberts
Zon. 48 Roberts
"She Was A Good Old Soul" (1904)
Edi. 8821 Stanley
"Brotherhood of Man" (1904)
Vic. 2631 Jose
"Come Down From the Big Fig Tree" (1904)
Edi. 8666 Collins and Harlan
Vic. 2679 Collins and Harlan
Vic. 2735 Arthur Pryor (trombone) and Sousa's Band
Zon. 5914 Collins and Harlan
"A Little Boy Called 'Taps'" (1904)
Col. 32586 Harlan
Col. 1876 Harlan
Col. 3225 Medley (Columbia Qt.)
Col. A458 Medley, Reverse: "Scots Wha"
- Hae Wl' Wallace Bled" (Burr)
Edi. 8846 Harlan
Vic. 4135 Harlan
Zon. 6045 Murray
Zon. 99 Harlan
"What the Brass Band Played" (1904)
Col. 32614 Myers
Col. 3030 Myers
Vic. 4151 Murray
Zon. 6083 Murray
Zon. 6104 Murray
"Goodbye, Sis" (1905)
Col. 32686 Murray
Col. 32690 Columbia Quartet
Col. 3064 Murray
Edi. 8908 Macdonough
"Rare Old Bird" (1905)
Edi. 8925 Roberts
"Can't You See My Heart Beats All for You?" (1905)
Col. 3102 Murray and Roberts
Edi. 8942 Murray and Roberts
Vic. 1152 Len Spencer and Murray
"Longing for You" (1905)
Col. 32719 Harlan
Col. 3187 Harlan
Edi. 8961 Harlan
"Where the Southern Roses Grow" (1905)
Edi. 8976 Edison Male Quartet
Vic. 4277 Macdonough and Haydn Quartet
Vic. 16167 Macdonough and Haydn Quartet, Reverse: Sweetheart Days (Macdonough)
"She Waits By the Deep Blue Sea" (1905)
Edi. 9023 Irving Gillette
Vic. 4341 Myers
"Please Come and Play In My Yard" (1904)
Col. 32781 Ada Jones
Col. 3236 Jones
Edi. 8778 Harlan
Vic. 2987 Murray
Zon. 21 Burr
"Keep A Little Cozy Corner in Your Heart for Me" (1905)
Col. 32798 Murray
Col. 3261 Murray
Col. A317 Murray, Reverse: "Ben Bolt" (Burr)
Edi. 9080 Jones
Edi. 9097 Medley, Edison Military Band
Vic. 4390 Macdonough and Haydn Qt.
Zon. 245 Murray
Zon. 279 Hager's Orchestra
Zon. 5293 Zonophone Orchestra, Reverse: Parisian Model (Zono. Orch.)
"My Yankee Irish Girl" (1903)
Zon. 284 Murray
Zon. 336 Medley March Two-Step, Hager's Orchestra
"Leader of the German Band" (1905)
Edi. 9115 Collins & Harlan
Vic. 4555 Collins & Harlan
Zon. 292 Roberts
"In Timbuctoo" (1905)
Edi. 9127 Murray
Zon. 291 Collins & Harlan
"Starlight" (1905)
Col. 32813 Harlan
Col. 3266 Harlan
Col. A347 Harlan, Reverse: "Moon Dear" (Stanley)
Edi. 9166 Harlan
Vic. 4523 Haydn Quartet
Zon. 287 Myers
"Paddle Your Own Canoe" (1906)
Edi. 9184 Collins & Harlan
Vic. 4602 Collins & Harlan
"Daddy's Little Girl" (1906)
Edi. 9202 Harlan
Vic. 4604 Harlan
Vim X2088 Harlan
"Just A Little Rocking Chair and You" (1906)
Britannic 1253 Murray, Reverse: After They Gather the Hay (Baritone)
Col. 32860 Murray
Edi. 9222 Jones
Vic. 31501 Murray & Haydn Qt.
Zon. 346 Murray
"When Mose With His Nose Leads the Band"
Col. 32934 Collins & Harlan
Col. 3384 Collins & Harlan
Edi. 9280 Collins & Harlan
Vic. 4626 Collins & Harlan
Zon. 424 Collins & Harlan
"Girle, I Love You" (1906)
Vic. 4792 Murray
"Keep On the Sunny Side" (1906)
Col. 32942 Harlan
Col. 3398 Harlan
Col. A324 Reverse: "Message of the Violet" (Myers)
Edi. 9271 Harlan
Vic. 31507 Murray
Vic. 35034 Murray, Reverse: "Scene in a Country Blacksmith Shop" (Harlan and Stanley)
"Crocodile Isle" (1906)
Vic. 4817 Murray
"One Called 'Mother' and the Other 'Home, Sweet Home'" (1906)
Col. 32969 Harlan
Col. 3428 Harlan
Col. A451 Reverse: "Barnyard Serenade" (Spencer and Alf Holt)
Edi. 9360 Edison Male Quartet
"Good Old U.S.A." (1906)
Col. 32997 Harlan
Col. 3463 Harlan
Col. A346 Harlan, Reverse: "Soldier's Farewell" (Columbia Qt.)
Edi. 9350 Harlan
- Vic. 4761 Myers
"I'll Fold Up My Tent and I'll Steal Away" (1906)
Zon. 590 Murray
"You Never Can Tell By the Label"
Zon. 599 Murray
"Yimminy Yee, I Yumped My Yob for You" (1906)
Zon. 625 Collins & Harlan
"Arrah Wanna" (1907)
Col. 33050 Collins & Harlan
Col. 3534 Collins & Harlan
Col. A771 Collins & Harlan, Reverse: "Mike's the Boy" (Collins)
Edi. 9447 Collins & Harlan
Edi. 9481 "Arrah Wanna Medley," Edison Military Band
Edi. 9615 "Street Piano Medley," (Includes "Arrah Wanna.") August Molinari, with talking by Murray)
Vic. 4907 Murray and Haydn Qt.
Vic. 4960 Collins & Harlan (8-inch)
Vic. 16223 Murray & Haydn Qt. Reverse: "Since Arrah Wanna Married Barney Carney" (Collins & Harlan)
Vic. 31613 Medley Two-Step, Victor Dance Orchestra
Vic. 35058 Medley Two-Step, Victor Dance Orchestra, Reverse: Barcarolle Waltz
Zon. 616 Collins & Harlan
Zon. 734 Hager's Orchestra
Zon. 5296 Zonophone Orchestra, Reverse: Winona Two-Step
"Take A Little Ride with Me" (1907)
Col. BC 85105 Ellise Stevenson & Stanley
Edi. 9989 Dorothy Kingsley & Edward Meeker
Vic. 4994 Stevenson & Stanley
Zon. 7023 Stevenson & Stanley (12-inch)
Zon. 4042 Stevenson & Stanley, Reverse: "Shine On, Oh Stars" (Burr)
"Lovin' Time" (1907)
Col. 33120 Collins & Harlan
Ind. 826 Harlan
Zon. 775 Collins & Harlan
"Don't Be So Mean" (1907)
Col. BC 85018 Roberts
"Nobody's Little Girl" (1907)
Col. BC 85123 Harlan
Edi. 9539 Harlan
Vic. 5147 Harlan
"Dream On, Dear Heart" (1907)
Col. 3699 Stanley
Col. A481 Stanley, Reverse: "Southern Girl" (Columbia Qt.)
Vic. 5323 Stanley
"When Her Beauty Begins To Fade" (1907)
Vic. 4966 Haydn Quartet
"It's Great To Be A Soldier Man" (1907)
Edi. 9600 Harlan
Vic. 5161 Murray
Zon. 739 Murray
Zon. 5087 Murray, Reverse: "Lanky Yankee Boys in Blue"
Zon. 5295 Zonophone Orchestra, Reverse: "Uncle Sammy", (Probably also made in single-face)
"Since Arrah Wanna Married Barney Carney" (1907)
Vic. 5148 Collins & Harlan
Vic. 16223 Collins & Harlan, Reverse: "Arrah Wanna" (Murray & Haydn Qt.)
"Take Me Where There's A Big Brass Band" (1907)
Vic. 5216 Murray & Haydn Quartet
"No One Knows How Much I Miss You" (1907)
Zon. 694 Harlan
"In Monkey Land" (1907)
Edi. 9700 Collins & Harlan
Edi. 9745 Medley, Edison Military Band
Vic. 5270 Collins & Harlan
Vic. 18517 Collins & Harlan, Reverse: "When We Are M-A-R-R-I-E-D" (Jones & Murray)
Zon. 5397 Jones & Murray, Reverse: "Wouldn't You Like to Have Me for a Sweetheart?"
Ind. 671 Collins & Harlan
"Two Blue Eyes" (1907)
Col. 33205 Murray
Col. 3733 Murray
Col. A354 Murray, Reverse: "I Can't Find Another Girl Like You" (Columbia Minstrels)
Edi. 9716 Werrenrath
Ind. 626 Harkab
Vic. 5310 Harlan
Zon. 5382 Harlan, Reverse: "School Days" (Mako Bellevue) (1908)
Col. 33210 Stevenson & Stanley
Vic. 5308 Jones & Murray
"I've Got A Tiddling Sensation Round My Heart"
Col. 33212 Roberts
"She's the Fairest Little Flower Dear Old Dixie Ever Grew" (1908)
Col. 3785 Stanley & Burr
Col. A414 Stanley & Burr, Reverse: "Under Any Old Flag At All" (Murray)
Zon. 5414 Stanley & Burr, Reverse: "When Summer Tells Autumn Goodbye"
"Two Little Baby Shoes" (1908)
Edi. 9766 Harlan
Vic. 5349 Harlan
Vic. 16095 Harlan, Reverse: "Why Don't They Play With Me?"

(Continued on next page)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from preceding page)

- "Stupid Mr. Cupid" (1908)
Edi. 5516 Jones
Zon. 1109 Jones
- "Lanky Yankee Boys In Blue" (1908)
Edi. 9860 Meeker
Vic. 5472 Murray
Zon. 1074 Murray
Zon. 5087 Murray. Reverse: "It's Great To Be A Soldier Man."
- "The Family Tree" (1908)
Ind. 700 Collins & Harlan
Vic. 5361 Collins & Harlan
Vic. 16221 Collins & Harlan. Reverse: "A Friend of Mine Told a Fried of Mine" (Tally)
- "I've Taken Quite A Fancy To You"
Col. A589 Stevenson & Stanley. Reverse: "Angel's Serenade" (Francesco Daddi)
Edi. 9933 Jones & Murray
Ind. 801 Jones & Murray
Vic. 5515 Jones & Murray
Vic. 16788 Jones & Murray. Reverse: "Put On Your Slippers, You're In for the Night" (Jones)
Zon. 1130 Jones & Murray
Zon. 5106 Jones & Murray. Reverse: "Wouldn't You Like to Flirt With Me?"
- "I Want To Be A Merry, Merry Widow" (1908)
Ind. 707 Jones
Vic. 5473 Jones
Zon. 5378 Jones. Reverse: "Waiting at the Church"
- "When You Were A Pinafore"
Ind. 832 Stanley & Burr
Vic. 5508 Stanley & Macdonough
- "Down In Jungle Town" (1908)
Col. A5072 "Down in Jungle Town" and "We Won't Go Home Till Morning, Bill" (Peerless Minstrels). Reverse: "Down in Georgia On Camp Meeting Day". (Collins & Harlan)
Edi. 9941 Collins & Harlan
Ind. 816 Collins & Harlan
Vic. 5484 Collins & Harlan
Vic. 16805 Collins & Harlan. Reverse: "Uncle Josh and the Lightning Rod Agent" (Cal Stewart)
Vic. 5695 "Jungle Town" Parody. Nat M. Willis
Zon. 1143 Collins & Harlan
- "Little Black Lamb" (1908)
Col. 4327 Carroll C. Clark
Col. A805 Carroll C. Clark. Reverse: "As the Ivy Loves the Oak" (John Dunsmure)
Ind. 733 Jones
Vic. 16040 Jones. Reverse: "If the Man in the Moon Were a Coon"
- "I Love You As the Roses Love the Dew" (1908)
Col. A642 Stanley & Burr. Reverse: "The Heart Bowed Down" (Alan Turner)
Vic. 16078 Macdonough & Haydn Qt. Reverse: "Little Annie Rooney" (Haydn Qt.)
- "Won't You Be My Honey?" (1908)
Col. 3682 Jones & Murray
Col. A463 Jones & Murray. Reverse: "I'm Wearing My Heart Away for You" (Burr)
Vic. 16041 Jones & Murray. Reverse: "It's the Same Old Girl" (Stanley)
Vic. 5624 Murray & Haydn Qt.
- "I'd Rather Be A Lobster Than A Wise Guy" (1908)
Ind. 728 Murray
Vic. 16036 Murray
- "Old-Time Rag" (1908)
Edi. 9956 Meeker
Vic. 16011 Murray. Reverse: "Music Makes Me Sentimental" (Eddie Morton)
Zon. 1183 Murray
Zon. 5375 Murray. Reverse: "Gee, Ain't It Tough to be Poor?"
- "I'll Be There With Bells On" (1909)
Vic. 16285 Stevenson & Stanley. Reverse: "Flanagan at the Vocal Teacher's" (Steve Porter)
- "Cupid's Wedding Bells" (1908)
Ind. 752 Jones & Murray
Zon. 1047 Jones & Murray
Zon. 5398 Jones & Murray. Reverse: "Don't You Think It's Time to Marry?"
- "When the Meadow Larks Are Calling, Annie Laurie" (1909)
Vic. 16301 Arthur Clough. Reverse: "Whistle and I'll Wait for You" (Jones)
- "Good Old Dollar Bill" (1909)
Vic. 16311 Murray. Reverse: "Victor Minstrels No. 16"
- "Wise Old Indian" (1909)
Vic. 16319 Murray. Reverse: "Isn't Love A Grand Thing?" (Jones & Murray)
- "Keep A Little Feeling In Your Heart for Me" (1909)
Vic. 16327 Stevenson & Stanley. Reverse: "My Cousin Caruso" (Murray)

- "Blue Feather" (1909)
Vic. 16370 Jones & Murray. Reverse: "Run, Brudder 'Possum Run" (Collins & Harlan)
- "On A Monkey Honey-moon" (1910)
Vic. 16426 Collins & Harlan. Reverse: "I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now?"

- (Murray)
"Molly Leo" (1910)
Vic. 16437 Murray & Haydn Qt. Reverse: "Little Miss Golden Curly" (Harlan)
- "He's A College Boy" (1910)
Vic. 16492 Murray & American Qt. Reverse: "Coleville Coon Cadets" (Collins)

HISTORICAL TAPE RECORDINGS RADIO AND TV

By LOU DUMONT

Radio's first singing "troubadours" are—for the most part—forgotten today. The great voice of the Saturday afternoon Metropolitan Opera broadcasts, for instance, Milton Cross, actually began his career as a tenor soloist for WJZ, then in New York City, in 1921.

And, if you wish, to call them troubadours, pioneering prima donnas brought grand opera to radio in 1922. It is very possible that Mr. Sokol conductor of the Department of "Historical Records" in HOBBIES—may include some of the early radio recordings of opera in his collection.

A number of favorite early radio performers qualify for the title of "troubadours." And in subsequent issues of HOBBIES, I hope to offer a closer look at the life style of these lyric poets and poet musicians.

A very warm letter in early September, 1972, from Mrs. Helen ("Smiles") Frankel, wife of the late Harry (Singin' Sam) Frankel, included a transcript of a talk given by Mrs. Frankel at Richmond, Ind., recently. The occasion was the 50th anniversary of the Richmond Women's Club.

She captioned her talk: "The Biography of a Troubadour." With her permission I would like to quote a few passages so that you, too, may know more about the man whose voice was heard by thousands of radio listeners in this country from the late 1920s through the late 1940s.

Mrs. Frankel said Singin' Sam's voice was "a solace to the old and lonely, a pleasure to the young and happy, a voice children wanted to hear at bedtime."

"This is the story of a man who achieved world fame and recognition and to whom it was a constant source of surprise. He excelled at many things besides singing. His photography won many prizes. Numerous homes in his hometown of Danville, Ky., contain furniture he made in his workshop."

Actually, based on information supplied by Mrs. Frankel, Harry Frankel was born in Hillsborough, O., January 27, 1888. But his earliest memories were of Danville, Ky., where his family moved when he was 3. She writes:

"The South got into his soul and remained there all his life. Harry had happy memories, always, of his Old Kentucky Home. It colored his thinking. It framed his language and his way of talking."

"When Harry was 9, his father moved the family and his men's clothing business to Richmond, Ind.

Harry's early training—as with so many pioneer radio performers—came via vaudeville, burlesque, minstrel shows and singing with silent films.

In minstrel shows, "Sam sang his way around the country year after year, but always sang the songs everyone loved. These were the old tunes which were to become his trade-mark."

For example, here's the format of an historical radio tape from my collection:

Theme: "Refreshment Time." (Estab., fade under for:)

Sharbutt: Opening and intro. Singin' Sam.

Sam: Opening remarks, intro. song.

Music: "Avalon." Sam and Orchestra.

Sam: Commercial (Coca-Cola).

Music: "Hawaii Sang Me To Sleep." Sam and Orchestra.

Sam: Intro. to song.

Music: "After The Ball." Sam and Orchestra.

Sam & Del Sharbutt: Commercial for Coca-Cola, introducing the new handy 6-pack.

Music: "Out Of The Dusk To You." Sam and Orchestra.

Theme: "Refreshment Time." (Estab., fade under for:)

Sam: Closing Remarks.

Theme: Up to time.

I'm sorry that I don't have the date of this tape. "Smiles" Frankel wrote me that the theme was written by the president of the Company (Coca-Cola) and to her knowledge, it never had a title.

I do know, however, that the "Refreshment Time" programs were not the first Coast-to-Coast broadcasts for Singin' Sam. "Smiles" figures the Barbasol Program, over CBS from New York City, began either late in 1931 or early 1932.

This series continued on for 7 years and for a long time, Sam was number one on radio along with Amos 'n Andy."

In 1936, Singin' Sam began a pleasant association with Coca-Cola. He would fly to New York every other week, record programs for three days, then return to his Richmond farm.

In 1945 he formed "Transcription Sales Company" with headquarters in Springfield, O., and produced more than 250 quarter-hour shows which he called "Reminisce" with Singin' Sam.

He sold his farm, "Trouper Hill" in Richmond and moved to Florida a

(Continued on next page)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Dolly Connolly and Percy Wenrich

PART I

By JIM WALSH

(Gratefully dedicated to Mrs. Helen Noteboom, of Richland, Mich., and Louis Cohn, New York City attorney. Without their help this article would still be unwritten.)

I. A Human Interest Story

Teachers of "creative writing" instruct students that a good method of beginning the usual type of article is with a "human interest" anecdote that will grip the reader's interest and keep his senses alert to find out what's coming next.

In view of this theory, perhaps the best way of starting to tell the stories of Dolly Connolly, vaudeville singer and recording artist, and her husband, Percy Wenrich, who wrote some of the greatest popular song hits this country has known, is to begin with a clipping that I came across in an old scrapbook. From the style of type I can tell that it originally appeared, 50 years or more ago, in the Washington Post's theatrical section. It is undated, but must go back to somewhere between 1920 and 1924. Its homey, heartwarming quality will be more effective by contrast with the sorrows that later darkened the lives of Mr. and Mrs. Wenrich.

"A Record Letter Home. Vaudeville audiences—always fond of good music—will be interested in the announcement that Dolly Connolly, the popular contralto, with Percy Wenrich, celebrated as a song writer, will come this week to the Belasco Theater.

"Miss Connolly is from Chicago, where, early in life, the remarkable quality of her voice was recognized. It is a rich contralto and has been immortalized in phonograph records as well as enjoyed in the theatrical world.

"Only a few years ago Miss Connolly conceived the happy idea of registering on a record a letter to her mother, insisting there was a personal touch not obtainable in the mere writing of messages of love to the dear ones back home.

"The letter, beginning with 'Dear Mother,' and proceeding just as the daughter would talk to her mother if the opportunity came, concludes with the singing of one of her mother's favorite songs. And now, when mother feels lonely and letters do not arrive often enough, she gets out the priceless record and again enjoys her daughter's conversation and song.

"Mr. Wenrich hails from Joplin, Mo. Wenrich is a household word out in that locality, where the composer's parents were not only prominent musicians, but where 'Father' Wenrich had his own glee club and was known as the poet laureate of Jasper county."

To me there is special interest in the fact that this clipping has been occupying a spot in a scrapbook for half a century or so, mutely waiting for the time to come when it would be quoted and do its humble part toward making a bit more real the characters of Dolly Connolly and Percy Wenrich. Certainly, it causes one to have a liking for the famous young woman who made that record in the hope of removing some of her mother's loneliness and longing to be with her daughter.

I have compiled a list of Dolly Connolly's records to be published as part of this article, but the disc she made for her mother is not included. I wonder if more than one copy was made—it probably was a Columbia "Personal" recording — and whether the one her mother treasured still exists.

II. How It Came About

I never cease to marvel at the way in which time takes care of the problems that confront me when I long to write certain artists, but lack sufficient information to go ahead with the job. For years I wanted to put something on paper about Dolly Connolly and Percy Wenrich, and a number of my readers asked me to tell their life stories, but I didn't know enough about the subject to undertake that project. And if I hadn't written a sketch about "That Girl" Quartet, which appeared in HOBBIES for January, 1973, I still would be handicapped by insufficient knowledge.

UNRECORDED VERSION. DOLLY CONNOLLY made a great hit in vaudeville during 1914-15 with her husband's song, "When You Were a Tulip." However, since she made no records that year, her version went unrecorded.

But I wrote that article and casually mentioned that a Columbia record by the quartet had a song by Dolly Connolly on its reverse side. This reference caught the eye of Mrs. Paul Noteboom, of Richland, Mich., and that lady, to whom I shall always be indebted, wrote to me.

The things Mrs. Noteboom told me in her letter were of great interest. She said—but perhaps the fair thing would be to quote what she wrote instead of trying to summarize it. So here goes for Mrs. Noteboom's initial letter to me:

"January 8, 1973. Dear Mr. Walsh: For some time I have enjoyed your articles in HOBBIES although I have no musical training or ability. Perhaps it is because the names bring back forgotten memories.

"In the January issue of HOBBIES you mentioned the name of Percy Wenrich and his wife, Dolly. For many years I was a close friend of Percy's sister, Nell Snyder of Battle Creek, Mich., who is no longer living. At the time of her husband's death in 1950, she lived with us for a while. I never met Mr. Wenrich, but had talked with him on the phone. Nell used to travel with them when they were in vaudeville. She helped Dolly change between songs. This was before she married Mr. Snyder.

"Nell left some of her things with us. Later she said she did not want them. In going through the box I found some things about Mr. Wenrich. Here is a list:

"Two songs, 'Missouri, My State' and 'Keep Your Eye on the U.S. Waves.'

"Two portraits of Mr. Wenrich.

"Handwritten lyrics, and signed, of 'The Great Fisherman.' This was written for his brother-in-law, Leon Snyder, who loved to fish.)

"A gray and blue paper bonnet put out by the Joplin, Mo., Chamber of Commerce.

"Four clippings: The Billboard, Sept. 17, 1949, his life story; New York World Telegram and Sun, January 25, 1950, his birthday; and two about his writing 'Missouri, My State.'

"As I have no use for these things, I would be most happy to mail them to you. I remain, sincerely yours, Helen Noteboom."

If you have guessed that I lost no time in writing to Mrs. Noteboom and gratefully accepting her generous offer, you have guessed right. I also asked her for any information she could give me about Dolly Connolly's last years. Even before Percy Wenrich died in 1952, the late Daniel I. McNamara, public relations director of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, had written me that Dolly had lost her mind years before and Percy had been obliged to have her committed to a mental institution. He had also told Mr. Winrich of my lifelong admiration of him as one of the greatest American popular song writers, and Percy had sent me a broadly smiling photo, in which he looked a great deal like the conventional depiction of Dickens' Mr. Pickwick. It was autographed, "To Ulysses Walsh, from a friend and admirer, Percy Wenrich." (The photo is reproduced with this article, but the writing is not clear against a dark background and may not be visible in the reprint.)

UNTIRING HELPER, LOUIS COHN, retired New York city attorney, who was Dolly Connolly's guardian in her later years, has been of invaluable assistance to Jim Walsh in preparing this article. Mr. Cohn was admitted to the bar in 1905. Shortly afterward he became assistant to John Vernon Bouvier, Jr., a trial counsel for the Travelers Insurance Company. Mr. Bouvier was grandfather of Mrs. Jacqueline Bouvier Kennedy, now Mrs. Aristotle Onassis.

"Do you," I asked Mrs. Noteboom, "know what happened to her (Dolly) to cause her mind to fail, and just when she died? Or anything else that would be helpful in writing an article . . . I remember," I continued, "writing an appreciative article about Mr. Wenrich for Variety shortly after his death . . . Perhaps you will be pleased to know, and perhaps Mrs. Snyder would have been, that the articles you have offered to send will be preserved in the Library of Congress as part of the Jim Walsh Collection. If you can suggest any way in which I might find out more about Dolly—date of birth and death, parentage, what caused her illness, etc.—I would be very glad to write an article about her and her highly gifted husband."

On January 22, Mrs. Noteboom replied:

"Dear Mr. Walsh: First I am going to give you a brief lesson in the Dutch language. 'Note' means 'nut', and 'boom' means a small bush or shrub. I retired this year from 22½ years of teaching fourth grade.

"As to Dolly's mental trouble, she mistrusted people and thought they cheated her in making change, and created scenes. So Percy kept her from shopping for a while. But she became so much worse that he reluctantly had her committed to some New York sanatorium. I believe she was forbidden to have visitors because they upset her. I am almost certain that she outlived Percy, because I remember asking Nell, Percy's sister, what would become of Dolly after Percy's death, and Nell said ASCAP would provide for her, but at her death the money would quit.

"I was talking to a friend who also knew Nell, and she reminded me of what Nell said after taking Percy to Joplin for his funeral. Quote: 'I know you will be shocked at what I will tell you, but I never had such a good time in my life as when I got to Joplin. The mayor met me and the casket and gave me an orchid. He made a speech about how Percy had come home at last and how proud Joplin was of their boy who made good. And I was royally entertained until I finally left for home (Battle Creek, where she had remarried to Dr. H. R. MacNary.)"

IIa. Contents of the Package

A day or two before Mrs. Noteboom's second letter arrived, I received the package and was pleased even beyond my anticipations. There were two photos of Percy Wenrich, taken, apparently, near the end of his life, for his hair was white. Judging by the drawn expression of his face in both, they were made after he suffered a stroke. Also included was the manuscript of "Missouri, My State," which he had written in his declining years, hoping that it might become the official Missouri state song. Another "find" were some humorous verses about fishing, which, as Mrs. Noteboom had said, were written to "kid" his brother-in-law. On reading the lyrics one must concede that Percy's strong point was composing lively or lovely melodies. He was not an artist in the use of words.

I was especially glad to receive the replica of a bonnet, issued by the Joplin Chamber of Commerce to advertise the fact that the composer

(Continued on page 98F)

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

GIBSON MANDOLIN WANTED, any style, condition. State price. 212 981-1808. — Musician, Box 85, Staten Island, N.Y. 10304 au3652

MUSICAL ANTIQUE BOOKS

INTERESTING stories, pictures and research about restored musical antiques, in 52-page book. $1.25 postpaid from — The Musical Museum, Deansboro, N.Y. d128041

MELODEONS

WANTED: Melodeon pedals, or, information where I can purchase them. — Florence Dahlberg, 900 Gaskill Dr., Ames, Iowa 50010 au3213

PHONOGRAPHS

PHONOGRAPHS repaired: New spare parts for Edison phonographs. Send stamp for list. Phone: (201) 748-8046. — Gerichten, 23 Waldo, Ave., Bloomfield, N.J. 07003 jly124431

ANTIQUE PHONOGRAPH Books, Instruction Manuals, Catalogs for sale. Send 2 stamps for free list.—Allen Koenigsberg, 250 East 45th St., Brooklyn, N.Y. 11203 s6867

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

BANJOS and Gibson Mandolins Wanted. Collector will pay cash for Gibsons in any condition. Also old C. F. Martin guitars. — Mr. Jay, Box 65, Staten Island, New York, 10304, or call (212)-981-1808. jly3215

Please mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

of "Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet" was a Joplin native. This probably was distributed at some time from 1909 to 1911, when Percy's simple "rustic ballad" was a big hit throughout the English-speaking world.

One item that delighted me, but which Mrs. Noteboom had not mentioned, was a photograph of two women seated in a horse-drawn vehicle, with "old Dobbin" hitched to what we may, for the sake of the song, call "the shay" (chaise). Written on the back were the words, "Mrs. Wenrich driving in Joplin." I gazed long at the picture, trying to find any resemblance to Dolly Connolly in the woman holding the reins, but was able to detect none. I also could not understand Dolly's looking so middle-aged at the time the picture was taken, which presumably was when "Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet" was popular. Nevertheless, I did not doubt that Dolly had posed for a photo intended to publicize her husband's song.

I wrote to Mrs. Noteboom to express my joy at having this unexpected specimen of "Wenrichiana" and saying I surely would reproduce it in HOBBIES. Within a few days I had a card in reply saying:

"Dear Mr. Walsh: Sorry to disappoint you, but the lady with 'Old Dobbin' is Percy's mother—Mrs. Wenrich, Sr., who I understand was quite prominent in Joplin society. Best ever, Helen Noteboom."

So that was it! It seems strange now I had never suspected that "Mrs. Wenrich" was Percy's mother.

Receiving the package stimulated my longing to write about Percy Wenrich and his wife and made me recall that some time ago Quentin Riggs had told me he had learned—I have forgotten how, but perhaps through ASCAP—that a New York lawyer had been Dolly's guardian and the administrator of her estate. After some searching I found the information that the attorney was Louis Cohn, whose office was at 291 Broadway.

The same day the package came I wrote to Mr. Cohn, explaining my desire to write an article—this article about Dolly Connolly and Percy Wenrich, and asking for any information he could give me about Dolly's birth and death dates, when she and Percy were married, the cause of her reported confinement in a sanatorium—"anything that would help give the needed information for my article." "I am thoroughly familiar," I said, "with Mrs. Wenrich's recording activities, but need to know more about the lady herself. I especially should like to know just when her death occurred."

III. Mr. Cohn's Information

I wrote on Saturday, January 20.

Percy Wenrich (above) composed his undying hit tune "Put on Your Old Gray Bonnet," in 1909. Dolly Connolly did not make a record of it. She was only 22 when it was published, and probably had not then married Wenrich. The inscription on this picture says: "To Ulysses Walsh, from a friend and admirer, Percy Wenrich."

On January 29, Mr. Cohn took the trouble to write me two pages in longhand, explaining that he had closed his office after undergoing a serious operation, but my letter had been forwarded. He also revealed that his age was 88 and he had practiced law 66 years before retiring. I was almost overcome at his having gone to so much trouble, when he was not in good health, to give me all the information he could, and one sentence in his letter determined me to try to get the Connolly-Wenrich article written as soon as possible and rush it into print. I already had enough articles prepared for HOBBIES to go through the first half of 1974 but decided I would ask the editor to use this one sometime this year—preferably just after the one dealing with another song writer, Teddy Morse, who also had a wife called Dolly, appeared. I wanted Mr. Cohn to be able to read it without having to wait until the latter part of next year.

Here is what this remarkable gentleman of the legal profession wrote:

"Dear Mr. Walsh: Sorry I cannot be of much service to you in reply to your letter, which was forwarded to me. Little over a year ago I underwent a serious operation and while recuperating I came to the conclusion to retire, after 66 years of active practice.

"Dolly's estate was wound up several years ago and the file was disposed of with the other terminated matters. I can tell you it did not have any record of the date and place of birth, only the date of her death. I believe you can receive this information from Variety, the theatrical weekly, or from the Lambs, who are now receiving all the royalties collected from Percy's songs, in accordance with the latter's will.

"I was the attorney for Mae, her sister, who lived in this hotel (Mr. Cohn lives in the Hotel Beacon, 75th Street and Broadway, New York—J.W.), and was Dolly's guardian. Mae was Mrs. Mae Brewick. Eventually, Mae, Dolly, and her other sister, whose name I don't remember, moved into the Manhattan Hotel, Broadway and 76th Street.

"That is where I met Dolly. Mae I knew for years. After Mae died I became her executor and also Dolly's guardian. After that I saw her regularly and, in my opinion, she was far from an insane person; she was alert and keen, and a stranger who never knew the story would never (have) suspected any mental disturbance. From hearsay I learned that something happened and that as a result of that they had her committed as insane. This was only hearsay, and I don't know the persons involved.

"Dolly and the surviving sister led a quiet life at the hotel until her death and, as far as I know, everything seemed normal, and I saw her once a week. I cannot help you as far as her life and doings before I met her.

"Hope you will be able to read what I have written, but this is the best an 88-year-old (I) can do. I wish you success in your quest and plenty of good luck, and if you do write as you intend to, would appreciate a copy of the story. "Very best wishes to you. Sincerely, Louis Cohn."

In the same mail I received a card from Mr. Cohn saying:

"Dear Mr. Walsh: Mrs. Wenrich died November 30, 1965. Her date of birth is unavailable, but she was 78 years old. You will not be able to receive the birth date from the people I mentioned."

I already knew that Variety (for which I served as "diskologist" and "musicologist," writing about phonograph and popular music history for some 20 years) could not supply Dolly Connolly's birth date. Her death apparently did not come to the attention of "The Bible of Show Biz," because it published nothing concerning her passing. I have written ASCAP, of which Percy was a charter member, asking what information its files contain about Dolly, and if I learn anything from that source it will be included somewhere in this survey. Meanwhile, it is obvious that if she was 78 when she died at the end of November, 1965, she must have been born in 1887, or, if her birth occurred in December, in 1886. Possibly, since the Washington Post article said she was a native of Chicago, the Cook County Clerk's office might have an exact record of her birth date, but 1887 was so long ago that I don't think it worth the trouble, time and expense to have a search made.

DOLLY CONNOLLY wears a pensive expression in this photo, dated 1921.

DRIVING "OLD DOBBIN." PERCY WENRICH'S mother, accompanied by an unidentified friend, and driving a horse that presumably represents the one in her son's classic "Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet." The photo was taken in Wenrich's home town, Joplin, Mo., probably as part of a parade.

Let's turn now to a discussion of Dolly's records. But before engaging in recorded research I want to say that I'll get a copy of the HOBBIES issues that contain the Connolly-Wenrich survey to Mr. Cohn as fast as they can be sent. I hope he will realize that I have done my best in the absence of a more abundant supply of first-hand information concerning the lively little comedienne.

IV. Dolly Connolly's

Columbia Recordings

Since Miss Connolly's first Columbia record appeared in 1911 and her last in 1916, it would seem logical to assume she had a five-year contract that was not renewed. However, there is this oddity about her recorded work: It was concentrated in 1911-12, with only two records issued in 1913, none in 1914 and 1915, and finally the two that came out in 1916. If she had a five-year contract, why were there no records by her for three years? During her recording era, the Columbia catalogs said:

"The talented wife of Percy Wenrich, well known all over the American continent as the writer of some of the most successful of American popular songs, makes records exclusively for the Columbia. Mrs. Wenrich's art in the singing of the cleverest rag-time hits of the day is altogether unequalled."

Even a casual study of Dolly Connolly's Columbia repertoire reveals that she preferred to record songs written by her husband. That was particularly true of her earlier discs. But, after all, why shouldn't she have? Percy was one of the most gifted popular song writers of his day, and she had a natural desire to keep the composer's royalties in the family!

Dolly's first Columbia record, combining two Wenrich songs, "My Hula Hula Love" and "The Red Rose Rag," was issued in September 1911. Unluckily, that month's supplement is missing from my collection, but I imagine the record was given an effusive description and Mrs. Wenrich a cordial welcome as the latest Columbia star.

If I can't quote the supplement description, I can say that there are more oddities associated with recordings of Percy Wenrich's songs than with any other "cleffer" (as Variety calls song writers) that I can think of. For instance, Ada Jones and Billy Murray recorded the "Hula Hula" song for Victor, and when the last chorus was sung, Ada caroled away about the beautiful Hawaiian dancer while Billy, somewhat in the background, sang in perfect time the chorus of Charles L. Johnson's 1907 Indian song hit, "Iola." (In the late 1930's Saxie Dowell "penned" a song called "Playmates," whose tune was identical with "Iola," and its publishers were compelled to pay the profits to the owners of the Johnson song.)

Similarly, Ada and Billy recorded

Wenrich's great Indian song hit, "Silver Bell," for Edison on an Amberol cylinder that afterwards was taken into the Blue Amberol list, and while Ada sang the chorus — refrain, I should say—Billy harmonized with a modified version of "Home, Sweet Home." I wonder how it happened that two Wenrich songs were selected for this stunt—one by Victor and one by Edison—and who detected that an older song could be melodiously blended with them. For a long time the Jones-Murray "Silver Bell" was the biggest selling record in the Edison catalog. The peak of its popularity had been passed, however, before Dolly began singing for Columbia, so she had no chance to record it. Frank Stanley and Henry Burr took care of the Columbia version. Victor made it two ways—by the Peerless Quartet and "That Girl" Quartet. (This is the kind of incidental information I like to scatter through my articles. Where else would you find out about such things?)

The Victor arrangement of "My Hula Hula Love" is more interesting than Dolly's Columbia, and the Edison cylinder by the Metropolitan Quartet (Edith Chapman, Mary Jordan, John Young and Frederick Wheeler) is superior musically. The description of the Edison version is interesting:

"'My Hula Hula Love,' an American ragtime idea of native Hawaiian melody, was composed by Percy Wenrich, writer of 'Silver Bell' and numerous other pieces of similar character and popularity. The song was introduced to metropolitan audiences by Toots Paka, a native Hawaiian dancer, who has made quite a success in vaudeville in this country. The last chorus is sung in subdued tones with the air alternately sung and then played by zither and guitar."

A few years after this Toots Paka's Hawaiians were a popular recording group for Victor, Columbia and Edison. I believe "My Hula Hula Love" was the first American song hit based on a Hawaiian theme. It anticipated the musical epidemic that swept the country for 10 years or so after 1914 and resulted in hundreds of pseudo-Hawaiian songs, as well as much genuine native music, being recorded.

Edward Madden, who had previously been a lyricist for Theodore Morse, wrote the words of "Hula Love." Madden also did the lyrics of "The Red Rose Rag," which Dolly recorded on the reverse side of her first Columbia disc. The words of this infectious ragtime composition are senseless and no doubt were meant to be. The refrain is a study in alliteration:

(Continued on page 98X)

The highest reward for man's toil is not what he gets for it but what he becomes by it.

—John Ruskin

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 98G)

"Pick a pinky petal for your papa's pride.
Beg a burning blossom for your budding bride—
Woe me with that wonderful wiggle wag—"

Dolly's Columbia record is good, but Billy Murray's Victor is better, I think. I have never heard the Edison two-minute cylinder (No. 10535) by the Premier Quartet. It is worth noting that another Wenrich composition, "The Skeleton Rag" (No. 10575), also by the Premier Quartet, was the last two-minute cylinder Edison issued. An unusual feature of the Columbia "Red Rose" is that after Dolly finishes singing the orchestra plays the entire refrain.

The second record by the comedienne whom Columbia called a contralto, but who sounds to me more like a mezzo-soprano, was announced in December, 1911. It contained two Wenrich songs that can truthfully be described as failures. They did not sell well and hardly anybody remembers them now. The titles were both about eyes—"Spanish Eyes" and "Open Your Eyes." They remind me that when I was a small boy I knew a youngster named Roy Stafford, who constantly sang the last two or three lines of another forgotten Wenrich song featuring eyes—"Naughty Eyes." Over and over Roy would declare that "Father Adam was wise, but he was hypnotized by Mother Eve and her naughty eyes." I wonder where he heard the song, because his warbling was done years after its publication, and I know of only two records of it, both on small-selling brands. Zonophone coupled it on No. 5478 with "Gee! But You Look Awfully Good to Me," both by Billy Murray, and Walter Van Brunt sang it on Indestructible cylinder No. 1079. It seems unlikely that Roy, whose family had a Columbia Graphonola, had heard either recorded version.

Here is the supplement description of Dolly's second record:

"Two New Wenrich Numbers by Dolly Connolly. Miss Connolly, the latest vaudeville headliner to be introduced by the Columbia, undoubtedly made the one biggest hit of the popular section of our September supplement with her 'Red Rose Rag' and 'My Hula Hula Love,' both new compositions of her husband, Mr. Percy Wenrich, as are also the two songs Miss Connolly sings for us this month. Miss Connolly is a vaudeville singer who can really sing, whose style is inimitably attractive, who knows what she is singing about and has the faculty of making others appreciate it. 'Spanish Eyes' is Percy Wenrich's very latest song—a thoroughly up-to-date ragtime number now being sung with immense success by Miss Connolly throughout the Eastern circuit. 'Open Your Eyes' is written rather more in the ballad style, is most effectively melodious and charmingly sentimental."

In January, 1912, Dolly was back with another unsuccessful Wenrich song, "I've Got Feathers On My Head," which the supplement writer most inaccurately predicted would be more popular than "I've Got Rings On My Fingers." This again proved her preference for recording Percy's compositions. A few days ago, incidentally, I was glad to find that I had the sheet music of Wenrich's smash hit of 1914, "When You Wore a Tulip and I Wore a Big Red Rose," with Dolly's photo on the cover. It is surprising that Columbia did not have her record it, but assigned the job to the Columbia Stellar Quartet. (The Victor record was by the American Quartet and the Edison by Walter Van Brunt and Chorus.) It struck me that the "Tulip" photo would be ideal for beautifying the first page of the initial installment of this article, and I am submitting it in the hope and belief that it will turn up on time-honored page 37.

Quentin Riggs, to whom I am indebted for the photographs of Dolly Connolly reproduced with this article, reminds me that the Columbia Stellar disc of "When You Wore a Tulip" was remade by the Peerless Quartet under serial No. 78811. Other records with serial numbers within a few digits of this were announced in the April, 1920, supplement, which makes it seem likely that the Peerless re-make was done in January or February of that year. The Stellar Quartet of course made the original in 1914. I agree with Quentin that the Peerless did much the better job. Labels of the remade records carried the Peerless identification but the disc, No. A1685, stayed in the Columbia catalog through 1925 and was always listed under the Stellar Quartet name.

The reverse side of "Feathers On My Head" was a somewhat more successful composition by James V. Monaco—"Oh, Mr. Dream Man, Please Let Me Dream Some More". The description read:

"Mrs. Wenrich contributes to our list this month two current successes to which all who like the best in up-to-date songs will give a ready welcome. The fresh and buoyant style of this young artist has captivated everybody who has heard her Columbia records so far, while her voice, diction and technique are more than adequate for an artistic rendition of the style of songs she essays. 'I've Got Feathers On My Head' is Mr. Wenrich's latest composition and its success will recall that of 'I've Got Rings On My Fingers,' though undoubtedly this new number will be more popular. As distinguished from 'I've Got Rings On My Fingers,' this song tells a story of a young Irishwoman who went out to sing and pray for the heathen in Timbuctoo, but finds that she cannot get along without her 'gosssoon,' whom she left away back in Ireland. There is a jingle to the music that will surely catch on everywhere. 'O Mr. Dream Man' is a quaint little ragtime conceit just published by Harry Von Tilzer and very popular at present in high class vaudeville."

In February, Dolly occupied both sides of a disc that contained Harry Williams and Egbert Van Alstyne's "Oh, That Navajo Rag," written as a successor to their big hit, "Navajo" of eight years before, and coupled with "Honey Man," a product of the genius of Joe McCarthy and Al Piantadosi. Both songs were done for Victor by the American Quartet, who achieved some "barber shop chords" that were beyond the power of one little woman, although Dolly's Columbia interpretations were excellent. Hers was a big-selling record. Dolly came back in March with another hit, "If You Talk In Your Sleep Don't Mention My Name." The music of this number was written by Nat D. Ayer, who also composed the immortal "Oh, You Beautiful Doll" (an excellent specimen of a song with a beautiful melody handicapped by trashy words), "You're My Baby" (for which he borrowed part of the tune from "Frankie and Johnny"), and "If You Were the Only Girl in the World And I Were the Only Boy." Ayer soon went to England and remained there, starring in musical productions. The coupling of "If You Talk In Your Sleep" was an unsuccessful Harry Von Tilzer number, "Counterfeit Bill." The idea of calling a man named Bill a "counterfeit" seems to have had an attraction for Tin Pan Alley tunesmiths. In 1923, Billy Jones recorded for Edison another got-nowhere song, "Counterfeit Bill (From Louisville)," the work of Ray Henderson. Concerning the Connolly record, the supplement said:

"With her peculiarly attractive art, Mrs. Wenrich has recorded for us this month two hits representative of two of the largest New York publishers, Von Tilzer and Remick. In the first we have a genuine present-day coon song, presenting the vociferous argument of a dusky dame, who, although she is well aware that her William is spurious coin, declares in heart-rending accents that she 'will never change her Bill.' The music is the most syncopated kind of ragtime, well adapted to the capabilities of this clever young artist. The Remick number tells a tale of a flirtatious husband, who finally learns with a shock that his wife is quite human enough to play the same game."

This, by the way, was the first record by Dolly that did not have a Wenrich song on either side.

A month later, in April, a song by Dolly was part of another novel coupling. On the reverse side of the disc was a band rendition of no less an immortal hit than "Alexander's Ragtime Band"—certainly one of the greatest popular songs ever written. Its composer, of course, was Irving Berlin, and he also wrote the number that Dolly sang, "The Ragtime Mocking Bird." This coupling was destined to stay in the Columbia catalog through 1925—longer than any other Dolly Connolly record—but its long life was the result of Prince's Band's rendition of "Alexander." "The Ragtime Mocking Bird" was one of Berlin's less successful numbers. The supplement said of "Alexander's Ragtime Band":

"Though we recorded this extraordinary hit as a vocal number several months ago, demands for it in instrumental form have been so urgent that we have made up a splendid band record, issued herewith. It is unnecessary to say anything further about 'Alexander's Ragtime Band'—the greatest ragtime success of the century. As a band march it will be equally as popular as in the vocal arrangement."

"The Ragtime Mocking Bird" was described as:

"A new light and amusing ragtime number in which a girl's desire to be given a mocking bird which she hears on the street furnishes opportunities for some novel and diverting effects from both the orchestra and the singer. This is a characteristic Irving Berlin selection and is sung with all of her customary art by Mrs. Wenrich."

In that same April supplement Dolly sang one of the best numbers Percy Wenrich ever wrote, one which is probably familiar to most Americans of this generation "Moonlight Bay." (In 1916 he tried to follow up its success with another "moonlight" song, "In the Glory of the Moonlight," which has a beautiful melody and was brilliantly sung by the Sterling Trio on a Victor record, but, like most follow-ups, it did not attain the success of the original. In 1917 Percy used the same theme with another lovely song which was called "Silver Bay," but it too lacked something of the appeal of "Moonlight Bay.")

Victor issued "Moonlight Bay" by the American Quartet and Edison, on a cylinder, by the same group, using, of course, the Premier Quartet name. Pathe, which invaded the American market in 1914, offered a sapphire ball version by Jack Charman, the English music hall singer, and in 1915 Edison had the Premier Quartet sing it for a Diamond Disc, which became one of the most popular records in the catalog and is, I believe, the best version ever recorded—one of the finest of all old-style male quartet records.

Miss Connolly's Columbia rendition was coupled with "Honey Love," by "That Girl" Quartet. Here is the description of "Moonlight Bay":

"A new song by Percy Wenrich is more or less of an event in the popular music world as is shown by the way in which this latest number has been received. The song has all the virtues of fluent, graceful, singable melody which has distinguished all of Mr. Wenrich's popular compositions, and the words are altogether of a much higher class than those usually found—romantically—reminiscent and sentimental in character. With Mrs. Wenrich to sing the song, an unusually attractive record is the result."

That April, 1912, Columbia supplement shows how Irving Berlin had begun to dominate popular music throughout the English-speaking world. Besides the numbers already mentioned, there was a record of "That Mysterious Rag" (for which Berlin wrote the words and Ted Snyder the music) by Prince's Band; a vocal version of another smash-hit, "Everybody's Doing It," by the Columbia (Peerless) Quartet, and "You've Got Me Hypnotized"—not a big success—by Collins and Harlan. Oddly enough, both the quartet and the duet were coupled with marches played by Prince's Band. Columbia must have figured that a vocal record of any Berlin song was likely to sell so well that it didn't much matter what kept it company. But I wonder why they didn't couple Prince's performances of "Alexander's Ragtime Band" and "That Mysterious Rag."

This same feat of combining a singing number with a band piece occurred again in May when Dolly's record of Albert Von Tilzer's weird composition, "That Hypnotizing Man"—one of the "spooky" numbers that were popular in 1912—was combined with Prince's Band's rendition of "The Black Diamond Rag." The Connolly records, by the way, were blue label rather than black, and sold for 75 cents instead of the standard 65 cent price. This suggests that the artist was paid a royalty.

July brought a new record by Mrs. Wenrich of one of her husband's songs—a number which is forgotten now. It was called "Ragtime Chimes," and was coupled with "That Raggedy Rag," by the Peerless Quartet. (Another oddity is that Victor did not issue its record of this song by the Peerless until May, 1913.) The disc has a touch of historical importance, for I believe it was the first Columbia to carry the Peerless Quartet name. Prior to that time the group was called the Columbia Quartet on Columbia labels. The Columbia Quartet name still was used occasionally afterwards, but most of the time "Peerless" took over. This was the description of "Ragtime Chimes":

"In looking for new ideas for ragtime composition, Mr. Wenrich has produced a song that has unusual features of novelty. A characteristic chimes melody with bell effect, cleverly fashioned in rag tempo with Mr. Wenrich's customary skill, furnishes more than ordinary light entertainment. This song will be one of the hits of the year." (It wasn't!)

Three years later Ivan Caryll used much the same idea in "Ragtime Temple Bells," which was introduced in "Chin Chin" and recorded for Victor by Billy Murray.

Dolly was permitted to "wax" a sock-dolager of a hit in October—one as sure of musical immortality as "Alexander's Ragtime Band." It was "Waiting for the Robert E. Lee." Back in 1955, when Variety asked me to select the 10 greatest songs of the past 50 years, I included both of these. "Robert E. Lee" was coupled with "That Aeroplane Glide," by the Peerless Quartet. The supplement description shows its writer's peculiar fondness for the word "nervous" to describe popular music. It was a term he used over and over:

"Among the thousands of new songs constantly being published there appears every little while one which, by reason of some peculiar combination of causes, becomes a country-wide hit over night. Such is the history of this new and extraordinary popular song, of which Mrs. Wenrich has made an excellent record this month. 'Waiting for the Robert E. Lee' is more than a popular song—it is genuine music. It combines a plantation atmosphere with the nervous ragtime swing and energy of the North and its melody is altogether irresistible. This is, without doubt, one of the biggest hits of the year."

Alas! Why don't we have geniuses who can write such songs now?

On that same page there was a listing of a Wenrich song, "Buddy Boy," combined with another Irving Berlin success, "The Ragtime Soldier Man," and both sung by Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan.

There were no more Dolly Connolly records until June, 1913, because of a reason that the supplement explained. For the last time a double-faced coupling was issued of which she sang both sides — "I Miss My Mississippi Man," a Wenrich song that flopped, and "My Raggyadore," by Jean Schwartz, which also was not a success. I quote:

"A new double by Mrs. Wenrich, whose continuous vaudeville engagements have kept her for some time out of the Columbia list. Her first number is a new ragtime song by her husband, Percy Wenrich, and written in Wenrich's very best style of sentimental ragtime. The song is scarcely published and is already a tremendous seller. (Try to find a copy of it now!—J.W.) Opposite this is the novelty song, 'My Raggyadore,' from the latest Winter Garden production, 'The Honeymoon Express,' in the singing of which Fanny Brice has created a sensation. It is a clever travesty on the Spanish type of music, as found in 'Carmen,' several themes from which are adapted to its ragtime measures."

In August appeared the last Dolly Connolly record Columbia was to issue in almost three years. Could her vaudeville engagements have been so taxing that she could not spare time throughout 1914 and 1915 to make records? On one side of this August record Dolly sang another Jean Schwartz song, "The Flower Garden Ball." The coupling was something genuinely unusual—Manuel Romain (whom Columbia called a counter-tenor, although he wasn't) singing, with the help of the Peerless Quartet, "There's One in a Million Like You," which also was composed by Schwartz. This is the only record I can recall on which the Peerless Quartet worked with Manuel Romain:

"That most popular team of song writers, Jerome (William B. Jerome) and Schwartz, have seldom written anything more attractive and more effective than the new song featured by Blanche Ring in 'When Claudia Smiles.' It is a clever conceit in light and fanciful style, treating of an imaginary ball given by Springtime, to which all the flowers are invited and dance together. It is entirely a song in Mrs. Wenrich's best style and she makes a wonderfully effective record of it."

A sad thought has suddenly occurred to me. How long ago all this was! The song writers, the artist, the supplement annotator, even nearly all the grown-ups who read the description of the record when it first appeared, a year before World War I began, now are dead. Even a child who heard the record in 1913 at the age of 10 is now 70 or verging on it. Verily, we deal in ancient history!

Also in that August supplement was a record by Albert Campbell and Henry Burr of another Wenrich smash-hit—his latest Indian song sensation, "Snow Deer."

The next Dolly Wenrich record was in the Columbia supplement for May, 1916. It was another of her husband's genuine ballad hits, "Sweet Cider Time When You Were Mine," in the same style as "When You Were a Tulip." Its coupling was "Give a Little Credit to Your Dad," by "Burr and Campbell." There was no description of the record, but a new photo of Mrs. Wenrich was reproduced.

(Continued on page 98FF)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 98Y)

And now we come to the last Columbia record by Dolly Connolly. It was issued in November, 1916, and mated her rendition of a catchy Percy Wenrich song, "Way Out Yonder in the Golden West," with "For Dixie and Uncle Sam," by the Peerless Quartet. After that, a long and unbroken Connolly silence as far as Columbia was concerned. Why?

V. Dolly's Emerson Records

At some time late in 1915 or early 1916, Victor H. Emerson, who had been Columbia's chief recording expert since the late 1890's, decided to go in business for himself. Emerson had an idea that the average 10-inch record, playing less than three minutes, was too long for the taste of most buyers, and that there would be a vast demand for a double-faced, seven-inch disc playing about two minutes each and selling for 25 or 35 cents.

True, Victor and Columbia had a stranglehold, which ended about three years later, on patents for making lateral-cut records, but Emerson got around that by designing a "universal" cut, which was supposed to sound equally well in either lateral or vertical positions, but really didn't sound very well in either. This grooving change didn't keep his old employer, Columbia, from suing him in 1918, but apparently without success.

Emerson, who was rumored to have taken some Columbia master records with him when he left, at first issued mainly double-faced, seven-inch records, but also offered some single-faced 5½-inch, presumably meant to compete with the same size Little Wonders and sell for 10 cents each. By 1918, however, his business had switched mostly to nine-inch double-faced, and these in turn gave way to 10-inch, with a smattering of 12-inch.

When the recording expert began issuing his own Emerson discs, some artists who had sung for Columbia during his long stay there, left and began recording for Emerson. Manuel Romain and Eddie Morton were among these. I would think that Emerson's departure also caused Dolly Connolly to give up her Columbia association, except for one fact that seems to refute this theory—as far as I know, she didn't make any Emerson records until 1920 when that company had become well established, although it went into the hands of a receiver toward the end of the year. If Dolly, who was still starring in vaudeville, made any Emerson discs of less than 10-inch size, and earlier than 1920, they have not come to my attention.

My Emerson lists are incomplete, but, so far as I know, her contributions numbered only two. If there were more I should be glad to learn of them. On one, she sang Fred Fisher's tear-jerker, "Daddy, You've Been a Mother to Me," coupled with the Sterling Trio's rendition of "The Pickaninny Blues," and on the other a Wenrich song, "One Loving Caress," whose pairing was "I Found that I Can't Live Without You," sung by "Wee Willie" Robyn, then a singer of popular songs, but, at this writing, a cantor restricting himself to Jewish religious music. ("Robyn," by the way, is pronounced "Roe-Byne.") He is now the Rev. William R. Rubin, of 20 West 72nd St., New York City. After recording those two sides, Dolly, to the best of my knowledge, did no more phonograph work. Edison recorded "One Loving Caress" by Gladys Rice and Marion Evelyn Cox, but with characteristic tardiness did not issue it until 1922, when it was coupled, on No. 50947, with "Dear Old-Fashioned Irish Songs," which George McFadden had sung in 1917. (While I think of it, there will be no need for anyone to write to me saying he has Dolly Connolly records with Standard, United, Harmony, etc., labels and asking why I didn't mention them. They were all made from Columbia masters. Similarly, her Emersons probably appeared with such labels as Medallion, Regal, Symphonia, Arto and Meteor, and her name may have been changed on some, especially Regal, which nearly always gave an Emerson artist a new designation. I have her "Honey Man" and Navajo Rag" with both Columbia and Harmony labels, and "Way Out Yonder in the Golden West" as a Standard.)

VI. In Conclusion

For some years more—I don't know just how many—Dolly continued her successful career on the stage, while Percy was still writing songs, but producing fewer hits than formerly. Then came whatever trouble it was that caused her no longer to make public appearances, and the long twilight period that ended in her death.

I have had to give primary attention to Dolly Connolly's recording activities, because of my comparative lack of trustworthy information concerning the woman herself. I'm sure we'd all like to know how she and Percy Wenrich happened to meet, and whether she was already singing in vaudeville or began her career after marrying him. And when were they married? She was already Mrs. Wenrich in 1911, when she was 24. It doesn't seem likely that she was married before 1909 at the earliest, to a man who was seven years her senior, but that is speculative. If any more information is received after this installment has gone to press, I will include it in next month's section.

Meanwhile, there is more to be said about Percy Wenrich as a person than I have been able to tell concerning his wife. The July installment will be devoted largely to the story of the great song writer's life, but with considerable discussion of recordings of his songs. Until next month, then, here ends the present discussion of the careers and achievements of Dolly Connolly and Percy Wenrich.

Postscript. After this article was rushed to Hobbies, Mr. Cohn learned, from his lovely wife, that Dolly Connolly was born December 16, 1888, which means that she was a little less than 77 years of age when she died. He also ascertained that her father was Thomas Connolly and her mother's maiden name was Elizabeth Meehan.

COLUMBIA DOUBLE-FACED (1911-1916)
(NOTE:—Both sides by Dolly Connolly unless otherwise indicated.)

- A1028 My Hula Hula Love. Reverse: Red Rose Rag.
- A1061 Open Your Eyes. Reverse: Spanish Eyes.
- A1083 I've Got Feathers On My Head. Reverse: Oh, Mr. Dream Man, Please Let Me Dream Some More.
- A1102 Honey Man (My Little Lovin' Honey Man). Reverse: Navajo Rag.
- A1116 If You Talk In Your Sleep Don't Mention My Name. Reverse: My Counterfeit Bill.
- A1126 Ragtime Mocking Bird. Reverse: Alexander's Ragtime Band (Prince's Band).
- A1128 Moonlight Bay. Reverse: Honey Love ("That Girl" Quartet).
- A1140 That Hypnotizing Man. Reverse: Black Diamond Rag (Prince's Band).
- A1177 Ragtime Chimes. Reverse: That Raggedy Rag (Peerless Quartet).
- A1197 Waiting for the Robert E. Lee. Reverse: That Aeroplane Glide (Peerless Quartet).
- A1312 I Miss My Mississippi Man. Reverse: My Raggyadore.
- A1346 Flower Garden Ball. Reverse: There's One in a Million Like You. (Manuel Romain and Peerless Quartet).
- A1963 Sweet Cider Time, When You Were Mine. (Reverse: Give a Little Credit to Your Dad (Henry Burr and Albert Campbell)).
- A2084 Way Out Yonder in the Golden West. Reverse: For Dixie and Uncle Sam (Peerless Quartet).

EMERSON (1920)

- 10159 Daddy, You've Been a Mother to Me. Reverse: Pickaninny Blues (Sterling Trio).
- 10180 One Loving Caress. Reverse: I Found That I Can't Live Without You (William Robyn).

To Be Continued)

WATCH FOR THE CONCLUSION OF
THIS ARTICLE IN THE JUNE ISSUE OF HOBBIES

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Dolly Connolly and Percy Wenrich

PART 2

By JIM WALSH

I. Enduring Melodies

Percy Wenrich was not only the husband of Dolly Connolly, singing comedienne, whose life story was told last month, he was a notable in his own right as one of the greatest popular song composers of the early 1900's. His contributions to American musical history, in fact, were much more permanent and important than his wife. Incidentally, Quentin Riggs has reminded me that the Edison publication, Along Broadway, for June, 1921, contains a picture of Dolly appearing in a musical comedy, "The Right Time Girl." It is not clear enough to reproduce.)

Wenrich may not rank with Beethoven, Bach and Schubert, nor even with Verdi and Puccini, but the man who coaxed from a piano keyboard the melodies of "Rainbow," "Silver Bell," "Snow Deer," "Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet," "Moonlight Bay," and "When You Wore a Tulip" left a history of genuine achievement. These songs, like those of Stephen Foster, virtually have become folk music, and are likely to be sung in secluded nooks of the Appalachian mountains long after opera lovers have discarded the "Recondita Armonia." Wenrich's music gave easily grasped enjoyment to millions of hearers for whom classical composers will never be more than foreign-sounding names.

When I attended the Southwest Virginia White Top folk music festivals in the early 1930's and heard mountaineers playing "Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet" with such instruments as fiddle, banjo, and guitar, I overheard citified observers talking about "how Elizabethan" the music was. Of course, genuine folk music authorities, like my friends, the late John Powell and Annabel Morris Buchanan, who founded the White Top festival, knew when they were hearing age-old melodies and when they were listening to passé popular tunes, but the faddists who were present didn't.

There have been occasions, however, when even students have been fooled. A good many years ago I read an article by a Frenchman, name now forgotten, who told of having visited the Southern mountains of the United States in search of folk music and of the thrill he felt when he heard two or three barefoot girls singing a song about "you pick'd me time." It undoubtedly, he said, went back to the days of Queen Elizabeth. Well, it went back to the 1918 days of Woodrow Wilson, and the music came from the improvising fingers of Percy Wenrich, who had no thought of the song being anything but a follow-up to the success of his other "rustic ballads," like "Gray Bonnet," "Kentucky Days," "Sweet Cider Time" and "When You Wore a Tulip." "Berry Pickin' Time" was not a hit, and few records were made of it, but I have it sung by Louis J. Winsch on one of Pathé origin.

and I picked you, in berry pickin'

II. Biographical Notes

Percy Wenrich was born in an environment that should have influenced him to write not only ballads with a suggestion of "folksiness," but livelier compositions of the ragtime type. After he grew up he did produce ballads and rags impartially, and probably the surroundings of his early life had an irresistible impact upon his music.

Joplin, Mo., where Percy was born January 23, 1880, was no effete Eastern metropolis. It was wholly and overwhelmingly Middle Western and authentically American.

ELDERLY LIKENESS. Another photo of Percy Wenrich apparently taken after he was confined most of the time to a wheel chair. It is inscribed to his sister and brother-in-law, Nell and Leon Snyder. (Photo courtesy of Mrs. Helen Noteboom)

Toward the end of Wenrich's life, after he suffered a stroke and was confined to a wheel chair, he did some reminiscing which Rudi Blesch and Harriet Janis published in their book, "They All Played Ragtime."

The enfeebled composer, who then had only two years to live, recalled that he left Joplin at the age of 21. He said it seemed he had always played the piano and practiced syncopation. His mother, who called herself "the Berry County pianist," taught him. His father, Daniel K. Wenrich, sang tenor, and was a down-the-line Republican who wrote campaign songs. The elder Wenrich was postmaster of Joplin from the beginning of William McKinley's first term in 1897 through the administration, ending in 1909, of Theodore Roosevelt. Percy, his older brother and his little sister, who presumably was Mrs. Nell Snyder, were all pianists.

Wenrich described the Joplin of his boyhood as "a Western gambling and mining town," and said, "The North end of Main Street was as wide open as a barn door." At the age of 17, after hearing Negro ragtime pianists play in joints that a boy his age shouldn't have known existed, Percy decided he could do some composing of his own. He wrote a two-step called "L'Inconnu" and paid Sol Bloom, a Chicago music composer, to print one thousand copies. Mr. and Mrs. Wenrich's enterprising boy then sold the sheet music from door to door.

When Percy was 21 he enrolled in the Chicago Musical College operated by the father of Florenz Ziegfeld, who years later, annually produced the "Ziegfeld Follies." After going broke and returning to Joplin, he soon went back to Chicago and got a job playing piano in a winery, but, he said, "I was too good for the place—I could read music." He afterwards played at Charlie Smith's Utopia Cafe and Bar and at Jack Crawford's elegant establishment on Wabash Avenue. In 1902 he was the pianist in Freddie Train's place at 2008 Wabash, where all patrons were compelled to be on good behavior and no bad language was tolerated. At Train's he never made less than $100 a week. During this period he probably knew Axel Christensen, who managed a Chicago school for teaching ragtime piano playing.

It was while at Train's palace of law and order that Wenrich wrote his first song with words. He knew James O'Dea, who had written the lyrics for the first of the great Indian song hits, Neil Moret's "Hiawatha," and insisted that O'Dea produce verses that he could set to music. O'Dea finally handed him a "poem" called "Wabash Avenue After Dark," in which some of the famous or notorious refreshment places of that part of Chicago were mentioned. Wenrich wrote music for it, and he and O'Dea made a hit singing it in Train's, although it was never published.

Local Boy Makes Good: Shortly after "Put on your Old Gray Bonnet" became one of the greatest American popular song hits, the Joplin, Mo., Chamber of Commerce distributed this replica of a gray bonnet with blue ribbons to advertise that Percy Wenrich, composer of the song, was born in Joplin.

After that, Wenrich said, he wrote "hundreds of little pieces" for the McKinley Music Company, whose headquarters was in Chicago, and was paid five dollars apiece. McKinley published mostly cheap music intended to be sold in five-and-ten stores, and Percy ground out the sort of stuff the firm wanted.

Then followed a period of working for the Walker Company, a Chicago "song shark" that advertised it would set music to your song lyrics at a cost of $10. Percy was paid $1.50 for each song to which he "wrote" music, and turned out 15 completely unoriginal tunes a day. None of these "sucker songs" of course, was ever published by a reputable firm.

In 1903, "the Kid from Joplin" wrote "Ashy Africa," which was published by Buck and Carney and was somewhat on the order of the jungle songs that Theodore Morse made famous. As far as I can find, nobody recorded it. What he termed his "first real rag," a composition called "Noodles," came out in 1906, and also went unrecorded, although by that time one or two of his songs, as will be seen later, had made their way onto cylinders or discs.

The still well remembered "Smiler Rag," a favorite display composition for such banjoists as Vess Ossman and Fred Van Eps, appeared in 1907. When the Forster Music Company, of Chicago, published "The Smiler," it was given a sub-title, "A Joplin Rag." This referred to the fact that Wenrich was a product of Joplin, Mo., but if the prospective buyer took it to mean it was a number written by Scott Joplin, the famous Negro composer of ragtime, that was all right with Forster!

In 1908 young Percy Wenrich went to New York and before that year was over millions of persons throughout the English-speaking world were singing and playing his Indian song classic, "Rainbow," which is as sure of immortality as anything in popular music. He never went back to Chicago to stay and never again lived in Joplin. Years later, Wenrich admitted he made the tune of "Rainbow" as much like that of its enormously successful forerunner, "Hiawatha," as he

(Continued on page 98F)

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

GIBSON MANDOLIN WANTED, any style, condition. State price. 212 981-1808. — Musician, Box 85, Staten Island, N.Y. 10304 au3652

MUSICAL ANTIQUE BOOKS

INTERESTING stories, pictures and research about restored musical antiques, in 52-page book. $1.25 postpaid from — The Musical Museum, Deansboro, N.Y. d128041

MELODEONS

WANTED: Melodeon pedals, or, information where I can purchase them. — Florence Dahlberg, 900 Gaskill Dr., Ames, Iowa 50010 au3213

PHONOGRAPHS

PHONOGRAPHS repaired: New spare parts for Edison phonographs. Send stamp for list. Phone: (201) 748-8046. — Gerichten, 23 Waldo Ave., Bloomfield, N.J. 07003 jly124431

ANTIQUE PHONOGRAPH Books, Instruction Manuals, Catalogs for sale. Send 2 stamps for free list.—Allen Koenigsberg, 250 East 45th St., Brooklyn, N.Y. 11203 s6867

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

BANJOS and Gibson Mandolins Wanted. Collector will pay cash for Gibsons in any condition. Also old C F Martin guitars. — Mr. Jay, Box 85, Staten Island, New York, 10304, or call (212) 981-1808. jly3215

EDISON "Idolia" phonograph wanted. Offer- ing $650.00 if in excellent condition. — E. Mathewson, 141 Fourth St., Toronto 14, Ont., Canada. s3403

MUSIC BOXES

MUSIC BOXES, horn phonographs (talking machines) grind organs, coin operated & game machines, etc. Sold & bought. Send $2, refundable, for large illustrated list. Phone: (212) 389-4144. — S. Leonard, Apt. 6E, 60 E. 12 St., New York, N.Y. 10003 jly128402 could without perpetrating an outright "steal." It is one of the many oddities associated with Wenrich's compositions that there was already a successful song called "Rainbow," which had been published and recorded in England, and when the British record companies found it necessary to issue the American tune, they called it "Come Be My Rainbow," to distinguish it from the English number with the same shorter title. There had also been a successful English song called "Put On Your Old Green Bonnet" before Percy introduced a certain "old gray bonnet" to worldwide fame.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

III. More Biographical Data

A good example of how hard it is for one doing this type of research to pin down the exact facts may be found by comparing the information just taken from "They Played Ragtime," with statements made by Jack Burton, who was writing a series of biographies of popular song writers in The Billboard during 1949 and '50. These articles were published later in a volume called "The Blue Book of Tin Pan Alley." Wenrich was the 37th "clefver" to be written about, and I have the page from The Billboard that had belonged to his sister and perhaps originally to Percy himself. It is another of the appreciated Wenrich items sent to me, as I mentioned last month, by Mrs. Paul C. Noteboom, of Richland, Mich.

Burton begins by saying Wenrich was born January 23, 1887, when the year really was 1880. He says that the composer's father was the postmaster in Joplin, but describes him as a Democrat who wrote songs that "eulogized such Democratic stalwarts as Grover Cleveland and William Jennings Bryan." Wenrich, however, told of his father being an ardent Republican, and certainly only a Republican would have been postmaster through the McKinley-Roosevelt presidential terms.

The Burton biographical sketch says that Percy's mother, an accomplished musician, taught the boy to play both the organ and piano while he was still in his early teens, and that he went to Chicago when he was 21, ostensibly to study the pipe organ at the Chicago Musical College. He was more interested, however, according to Burton, in composing and selling popular songs.

Still following the Burton version, Wenrich's first two compositions, "Ashy Africa," and "Just Because I'm From Missouri," of which more will be heard later, were named by Frank Buck, the senior member of Buck & Carney. Wenrich never understood why the adjective "Ashy" was applied to Africa, but the "Dark Continent" was one part of the world that fascinated Frank Buck, and he later won worldwide fame by his

RAGTIME PROFESSIONALS: Two musicians who studied, taught and composed ragtime are shown here. Top—Percy Wenrich, as he appeared about the time he left Joplin, Mo., to study music in Chicago. Bottom—Axel W. Christensen, who had a school of ragtime piano instruction in Chicago. In the 1920's, Christensen made a number of records, the most popular of which was a "piano specialty" called "The Girl I Kissed on the Stairs." He also recorded "Axel at the Ball Game" and other comic monologs in a thick Scandinavian accent.

African jungle explorations that gained him the nickname of "Bring 'Em Back Alive" Buck.

Although writing songs, Percy had not yet turned out anything that ranked as a hit, so when he met Fred Belcher, the general manager of the Jerome Remick music publishing house, he talked Belcher into getting him a job as a song plugger at Gimbel Brothers' music department in Milwaukee. While there he wrote "Under a Tropical Moon," which met with some local success, but was not nationally popular. Wenrich then decided to go to New York and make connections with the leading song publishers.

The going was rough at first, but when he wrote the music of "Rainbow" to the words by Alfred Bryan, which begin, "While the rain was softly falling in a forest glade beyond the prairie far away," he achieved one of the most resounding song successes of the first decade of the Twentieth Century. The next year, 1909, was to bring another equally great hit in which he had the help of Stanley Murphy.

Murphy, a professional lyricist who, during his short life of 44 years, wrote words for the music of such well known composers as Henry Marshall, Harry and Albert Von Tilzer, Benjamin Hapgood Burt, Harry Carroll, Lewis F. Muir and, of course, Wenrich. Murphy was born in Dublin, Ireland, November 29, 1875, and died in New York City, January 10, 1919. The one song I know for which he is credited with writing both words and music, was a 1915 hit, "I'm On My Way to Dublin Bay"—an Irish fighting man's tribute to Murphy's birthplace.

It was Murphy who handed Wenrich, according to Burton, the words of a song that he called "Put On Your Old Sunbonnet." Wenrich, the story goes—and, frankly, I doubt it, for it sounds incredible—liked the words and wanted to write a melody to go with them, but couldn't get access to a piano to work out the tune. The man who had composed perhaps the biggest song hit of the day unable to get the use of a piano!

Continuing this improbable story, Wenrich made the rounds of the Tin Pan Alley music publishers, beseeching them to lend him an upright piano, but without success. Finally, at Remick's, the publisher of "Rainbow"—and why didn't he try Remick's first?—he persuaded the manager to allow him the use of a professional room and a piano for just half an hour. At the end of that time, Percy wasn't satisfied with the melody he had contrived and pleaded for more time, but the hard-hearted manager told him to get out!

Now really! Doesn't it stand to reason that the manager, knowing Wenrich had composed the biggest hit in the Remick catalog, would have replied: "Sure, Percy boy! Take all the time you want!" But—again according to this highly unlikely story—Wenrich and the manager got into such a heated argument that Jerome H. Remick himself stopped and asked what the racket was about. He graciously permitted the composer of his top hit to use the instrument for 30 minutes more. At the end of the half hour, Percy had a tune that pleased him and handed it to Remick, who was about to leave for a weekend in Atlantic City. The publisher said he would take the manuscript with him and give his verdict Monday afternoon.

When Monday came, Remick expressed belief the number would be a hit. He said he'd never been able to carry a tune, "But here's a song even I can sing." When he sang his way through the ballad, he changed the first line of the chorus from "put on your old sunbonnet" to "put on your old gray bonnet," saying the latter version sounded better—and it

"Yes, sah." does. Probably Mr. Remick didn't know, or care, that, across the Atlantic, English residents had already been singing that ditty about "put on your old green bonnet."

As I have perhaps too abundantly indicated, when it comes to believing the story about Wenrich having difficulty in obtaining the use of a piano to compose a hit. I am, like Percy himself, "from Missouri" and I'd like to be shown the proof. I also question the statement attributed to him in "They All Played Ragtime" that he always had to "beg" his publishers to accept songs of simple, homey sentiment, such as "Gray Bonnet," "Moonlight Bay," "When You Wore a Tulip," "Sweet Cider Time," and the like, because they always doubted that such songs would sell. Successful publishers like Jerome Remick would certainly have better judgment than that.

But from this point, Percy Wenrich was well on his way to becoming one of the top Tin Pan Alley writers and to marrying Dolly Connolly somewhere in the process. Burton lists many of Wenrich's song hits, but omits some of the big ones and includes one or two, such as "Under a Tropical Moon" and "If It's Good Enough for Washington It's Good Enough for Me," which today are virtually unknown.

Also mentioned are four stage productions for which Wenrich wrote the score—"The Crinoline Girl," produced in 1914; "The Right Girl"—the one in which Dolly Connolly appeared—1921; "Castles in the Air," 1926, and "Who Cares?" 1930. Songs used in these musicals are detailed, but I can't remember ever hearing any of them. Seemingly, Percy lacked ability to write memorable melodies when he was composing for the stage.

For musical history's sake, it may be noted that "Rainbow" came along just too early for the publisher and composer to share in royalties from the sales of many hundreds of thousands of phonograph records. "Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet," however, being published in 1909, came under the royalty provisions of the new copyright act that went into effect that year. So, obviously, did every later Wenrich song.

Now, having brought Percy Wenrich thus far along in his successful song writing career, let's consider the earliest records of his compositions.

IV. Early Wenrich Records

From time to time I have given you faithful HOBBIES readers examples of the almost miraculous way in which my subconscious mind concentrates on Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists even when I seem to be thinking of something else. Here is another specimen.

When I began this article I thought, as I had believed for years, that the first recording of a Percy Wenrich tune was Arthur Collins' rendition of a so-called "coon song," "What's the Matter With the Mail?" on Edison two-minute cylinder No. 9015, issued in June, 1905. The second, I thought, was Bob Roberts' rendition of "Just Because I'm From Missouri," No. 9088, in the following September.

Then, on the morning of February 24, 1973, after I had worked my way through the first five triple-spaced pages of this installment, I was at the Drum and Fife Restaurant in Vinton, Va., reading my mail. And, without advance warning, my subconscious personality spoke up.

"Hey, listen!" it said, out of nowhere. "Didn't Percy Wenrich write a song called 'Down In Blossom Row' and didn't the Edison cylinder of it come out before 'What's the Matter With the Mail'?"

Taken aback, I couldn't reply. But I borrower Lena Ryman's, the waitress' ball-point pen, picked up a paper napkin and wrote "Down In Blossom Row" on it, then stuffed it into my pocket as a reminder to look up that waltz song when I returned home.

Upon investigation I found that the Edison cylinder of "Down in Blossom Row," sung by Byron G. Harlan and "a chorus of children," came out in the same month, June, 1905, as "What's the Matter With the Mail?" but its number, 9004, was slightly lower, so that seemed to give it top ranking as the first Wenrich song to be recorded. I laid a note of that fact beside my typewriter, to be incorporated into my next writing.

But late that afternoon my subconscious again made itself heard. "Chum," it said, "you've checked Victor, Columbia and Edison catalogs for records of Percy's early songs, but you've forgotten Zon-o-phone. Better see what they did!"

Groaningly, I got up, consulted the 1905 Zono catalogs and supplements—and discovered that Collins also recorded "What's the Matter With the Mail?" on single-faced, 10-inch Zon-o-phone record No. 147—and it came out in May, 1905, one month before the Edison cylinder of "Down in Blossom Row" was made available.

So I had been right, it now appears, about the "mail" song being the earliest Wenrich composition to be impressed upon a disc or cylinder, but had been wrong in thinking the Edison was first. As far as I can tell now, that Zono "platter" led the procession. The supplement description said briefly:

"Poor Mr. Tagg is without a cent and is waiting for Liza's salary day, but Liza is late in sending him money."

A month later, discussing its cylinder version, Edison said:

"A coon song by Percy Wenrich (music) and Fred J. Hamill (words.) Long after Liza's salary day, Mr. William Jackson Tagg is anxiously waiting the mail that should bring him part of her salary. Bill spies the postman coming. Stocks are now up with Bill. "Are you Mr. William Jackson Tagg?" "Well, Mr. Tagg, will you kindly deliver this letter to the family on the top floor?"

Collins also recorded the budding writer's "coon" ditty on Columbia cylinder No. 32745, which came out in July, a month later than the Edison, but was not issued on a disc. You perhaps have observed that Zonophone and Edison disagreed on whether the "hero's" last name should be spelled "Tag" or "Tagg." Columbia evaded the issue. It described its record as:

"An amusing reverie of a colored individual who has been patiently awaiting the postman. As the latter approaches, you hear his familiar whistle, then follows a dialog on the order of that contained in Collins' famous 'Any Rags' . . ."

Apparently, "Old Joe, the Pirate," as his fellow recording artists used to call Collins because he was tall, heavy and swarthy, couldn't talk Victor into recording the song. I have never heard any of the versions, but should like to. Arthur Collins never made a poor job of the difficult art of singing a "coon song" and I am sure he was good in this.

Getting back to "Down in Blossom Row," which only Edison seems to have recorded, The New Phonogram describes it as:

"A new descriptive summer song, the music of which was written by Percy Wenrich and the words by F. J. Hamill. It is written in waltz time and its publishers predict for it wide popularity in the coming season. The song introduces a chorus of boys and girls, giving a fine coloring to as pretty and catchy a little song as has been turned out in recent years."

Just who was Fred J. Hamill? He soon passed entirely out of the Wenrich picture.

Edison thought highly enough of "Down in Blossom Row" to have Albert Benzler make a xylophone recording of it (No. 9044), which was issued in July. The medley also included "Susan Van Doozen" and "On a Summer Night," but "Blossom Row" was the featured number. My eagle eye detected the fact that Percy Wenrich was the only popular song writer with two of his numbers in the Edison supplement for June, 1905. Since only 25 cylinders were issued each month, scoring two out of 25 was something of a distinction. Better known men, such as Charles K. Harris, Theodore Morse, Harry Armstrong and Egbert Van Alstyne, had to be satisfied with one each.

The next record of a Wenrich song that I have been able to find was Bob Roberts' Edison cylinder of "Just Because I'm From Missouri," which came out in September, on Edison cylinder 9088. The supplement said:

"A new coon song descriptive of a colored gentleman's woes just because he was born in Missouri. It is rendered in Mr. Roberts' inimitable style, with the same clear articulation that has been so much admired. Percy Wenrich wrote the words and music of this song."

I was amused at the review of Percy's "Missouri" song in the English record collectors' publication, The Talking Machine News, for October, 1905:

(Continued on page 98X)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued on page 98G)

"In 'Just Because I'm from Missouri' Bob Roberts sets forth the woes of a native of that State, and the record is a good one, but perhaps some of our American friends will enlighten us as to exactly what stigma it is which attaches to natives of Missouri, and why."

Earlier, the T.M.N. had dismissed Collins' "What's the Matter With the Mail?" as "a very fair coon song with orchestra accompaniment."

In September the English periodical said:

"Quite a novelty is the waltz song, 'Down in Blossom Row,' for a chorus of boys and girls is effectively introduced."

Who, I wonder, were those "boys and girls" singing by Byron G. Harlan, and are any still alive? At about the same time that he recorded "Down in Blossom Row," Harlan made, for most of the prominent companies, records of Joe Maxwell's song, "I've Got My Fingers Crossed (You Can't Touch Me)" in which he was assisted by a similar group. Maxwell, himself a tenor singer, made Edison cylinders for a year or so beginning in May, 1910.

Another thing I wonder is whether Arthur Collins, Byron G. Harlan and Bob Roberts (Bob was about Wenrich's age) had met or knew anything concerning the young song writer whose composition they had begun to introduce on records. Collins, especially, must have formed a high opinion of "What's the Matter With the Mail?" to have "adopted" it and recorded it for three companies we know of, and possibly to have sung it also for Leeds and some of the other minor brands.

V. That "Old Gray Bonnet"

Manifestly, it will be impossible to discuss, in a survey of this limited scope, all the hundreds or thousands of musical compositions Percy Wenrich produced in his career of virtually a half century. It is out of the question even to mention all his songs that found their way onto records, or even every version of the more popular ones. In some instances, as in Collins' monopoly of the not particularly popular "What's the Matter With the Mail?" the various companies used identical artists to record the same number.

There are some intriguing and, sometimes, amusing facts to be brought out, however, about the different recorded editions of the Wenrich repertoire. For instance, when Columbia issued "Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet," sung by Arthur Clough, on double-faced disc No. 773, the recording officials must have been as confident that the song would be a hit as Jerome H. Remick had been. Columbia showed its confidence in the "Bonnet's" selling qualities by combining it, not with another new composition, but with "The Moon Has His Eyes On You," a duet by Corinne Morgan and Frank C. Stanley that had been in the catalog for several years. Possibly the idea was to put a non-royalty old song on the back of a new one for which a royalty must be paid.

Not a great while after the "Bonnet" song, which may perhaps be Wenrich's most durable hit, swept the country, the Chamber of Commerce of his "home town" of Joplin, decided it was proud of its local boy who had "made good." For community advertising purposes it distributed a replica of an "old gray bonnet, with the blue ribbons on it," such as is mentioned in Stanley Murphy's words, and like the one reproduced in an accompanying photograph.

But here is something ironical. Although Victor had begun years earlier to list the names of song writers on the labels of its discs, for some reason there was no mention of Wenrich (or Murphy) on the label of Victor No. 16377, coupling "Gray Bonnet," sung by the Haydn Quartet, with a relatively obscure ballad, "It's Hard to Kiss Your Sweetheart When the Last Kiss Means Good-bye," by Walter Van Brunt, whose brilliant recording career was just getting under way. Here is the description of the coupling in the December, 1909, Victor supplement:

"Unusual value will be found in this attractive double, consisting of the new Remick hit, 'The Old Gray Bonnet,' a sort of Darby and Joan ballad with a swinging march refrain, clearly given by the quartet; and a sentimental ballad written by those popular writers, Roden and Mills, and sung by Mr. Van Brunt, whose sweet tenor and remarkably clear diction are winning him friends very rapidly."

What Mr. Roden's first name was, I don't know, but "Mills" was Frederick Allen (Kerry) Mills, composer of "Red Wing," "At a Georgia Camp Meeting," "Kerry Mills' Barn Dance" and other one-time popular favorites. (Since writing the foregoing, my subconscious has told me that Mills' lyric writer was Robert F. Roden.) At any rate, Roden and Mills got their names into this supplement write-up, and so did the Remick music publishing firm, but Murphy and Wenrich, the men who originated the "Old Gray Bonnet," were left out. Neither did their names appear as writer and composer in the complete Victor catalogs issued once or twice a year and, apparently, as I have said, label credit was never given. I have copies of "Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet" with the type of label Victor used both before and after 1914, and on neither are Murphy and Wenrich mentioned. It seems strange treatment.

Edison issued a four-minute Amberol cylinder of the great hit, but not a two-minute Standard. The issue was rather belated, since the record was not announced until March, 1910. It was sung by Fred-eric H. Potter, a tenor, who also made some Zon-o-phone records, and a chorus. As a rule, so popular a record as this would have been taken into the Blue Amberol catalog, when the "unbreakable" cylinders were introduced late in 1912, but Edison decided to have the song re-recorded by Joseph A. Phillips, a baritone who, like Steve Porter, was a native of Buffalo, N.Y. (Buffalo is a city that has special significance for me nowadays because of being the abiding place of my fellow old records enthusiast, and "brother by adoption," Merritt F. Malvern.) Helen Clark assisted Phillips in the refrain, but wasn't given credit. Later, when Edison found a persistent demand for "The Old Gray Bonnet" in disc form, Miss Clark and Mr. Phillips were engaged to record it. Readers of last year's article about Joe Phillips probably will recall that one of the Blue Amberols of his "Gray Bonnet" rendition was lost at sea, but turned up in good playing condition in a lobster net, after bouncing around for months on the bottom of the Atlantic Ocean.

There have been innumerable hill-billy recordings of the song, including a 1929 Columbia by a gentleman called James Johnson, who sings a woeful ballad, "Papa, Please Buy Me an Air Ship," for its coupling.

VI. Those Indian Songs

Beginning in 1901 with "Hiawatha," at first an instrumental piece to which words were later added, the American popular song scene for the first ten years of this century was deluged with ditties about the American Indian, many of which proved to have permanent appeal and are still frequently sung. It has already been said that when Percy Wenrich composed "Rainbow" he used "Hiawatha" as his model. The composer of "Hiawatha," Charles N. Daniels, who wrote under the pseudonym of "Neil Moret," said he conceived the melody of his hit song by listening to the clicking of the rails as he was riding on a train in the Far West to a town called Hiawatha, but some critics have contended that the Moret melody has a resemblance to Siebel's "Flower Song" in "Faust." Whatever the truth of that is, by 1904, with James O'Dea's words added, "Hiawatha" had become so popular as to be a national nuisance, and Len Spencer and Parke Hunter satirized it in their Victor record of "An Auction Sale of a Music Store." Every time an instrument is offered for sale, "Will-yam" plays a tune upon it and the tune invariably is "Hiawatha." This leads to a riot at the end of the record.

"Hiawatha" was followed by innumerable others, among them the well remembered "Anona," "Tammany," "Silver Heels" (also by Moret) and "Red Wing," the big hit of late 1907. (By this time the country was also being swamped by cowboy songs, the great pioneer of which was "Cheyenne," in 1906. They were almost as popular as the Indian tunes.) And then came Alfred Bryan, one of the most prolific of all writers of popular song lyrics, and Wenrich, with their "Rainbow." For the record, Bryan was born in Brantford, Ontario, Canada, September 15, 1871, and died in Gladstone, N.J., April 1, 1958.

The Victor supplement for December, 1908, listed four single-faced discs of songs that were so popular the records had been specially pressed and rushed to dealers in October. They were: 5570, "Take Me Out to the Ball Game," by the Haydn Quartet; 5571, "Rainbow," Billy Murray and the Haydn Quartet; 5573, "You'll Have to Sing an Irish Song," Ada Jones (she used this number in her recital appearances until her death in 1922), and 5592, "Taffy," by Jones, Murray and the Quartet. The supplement said:

"These four records were put out as a special addition to the October list, but were not issued in time to be included in the printed supplement. Although all four have had large sales, at the present counting 'Rainbow' is in the lead with 'Taffy' a close second."

"Taffy" today, however, is forgotten, while "Take Me Out to the Ball Game," of which the quartet record was rather poor, ranks as the unofficial "national anthem" of baseball.

"Rainbow" not only sold big when first issued, it continued to be in so much demand that in 1913 Victor coupled it with the equally popular "Red Wing," by S. H. Dudley, Harry Macdonough and the Haydn Quartet, which had been issued, as single-faced 5368, in March 1908, and proved to be that year's biggest seller. The double-faced record was No. 17233, and "Red Wing" and "Rainbow" probably were among the most popular Victors ever made during the acoustic recording era. Apparently, the original working masters became damaged from constant use, for in 1925, both sides were remade by the Shannon Four and coupled under that same number. This was at the tag-end of the acoustic period. A year later they were re-done electrically by the Shannon group and numbered 20173. As far as I know, "Rainbow" was the only Billy Murray record ever to be remade by someone else.

Not much was lost, however, when the Murray-Haydn "Rainbow" was done over. Despite its popularity, this version of the Wenrich song is one of the worst records Billy Murray ever made. He was not in the habit of making bad ones, but something about the recording makes his voice seem insufferably nasal unless the speed is run far back, and the tempo sounds wrong all the way through. It actually appears as though the artists are ridiculing the tuneful number, especially at the end when they speed up the final chorus unmercifully. Despite the bad rendition and recording, however, this must have been one of "The Denver Nightingale's" most popular records.

The Edison two-minute cylinder of "Rainbow," No. 10049, was announced in January, 1909. It was sung by Ada Jones and Billy Murray, who did a better job than Billy and the quartet.

Oddly, the box in which the cylinder was packed described the artists as "contralto and baritone." Ada did sound like a contralto on Edison cylinders, but Columbia called her a soprano; Victor skirted the question by terming her a comedienne, and the Edison disc catalogs gave no description of her voice. Billy Murray, however, certainly was not a baritone. The New Phonogram said of the "Rainbow" cylinder:

"This composition is sweeping the country from coast to coast and is destined to be as popular as 'Hiawatha,' which it resembles, being sung in Indian style and much the same tempo. It is a bright and dashing two-step and a fascinating ballad. It is sung by Miss Jones and Mr. Murray in the conversational style."

In February, "Rainbow" was played on No. 10066 as an intermezzo by the New York Military Band. The supplement mentioned the popularity of the Jones-Murray rendition, but said that the melody "is such an attractive composition that it will bear repetition as a band number. 'Rainbow' is similar in style to the famous 'Hiawatha,' and its popularity ought to be none the less enduring."

The first four-minute Amberol cylinders had been brought out in October, 1908, but Edison patrons who wanted a longer version of "Rainbow" had to wait until June, 1911, when it was sung again by Ada and Billy. The longer record, in effect, was a combination of singing and the band effects that had been featured in the intermezzo. The Amberol became Blue Amberol No. 1884 in July, 1913. Continued demand from Diamond Disc users caused Edison to have the Jones-Murray combination record "Rainbow" again in 1919, but the disc, No. 50746, was not issued under October, 1921. It was coupled with Miss Jones' "Put On Your Slippers, You're In for the Night," a comic success of 10 years earlier. The supplement said:

"Requests have come to us for a Re-Creation of 'Rainbow' from many parts of the country. Everybody will be glad to hear the two good old standbys, Ada Jones and Billy Murray, in this one-time favorite number with the public."

The same day that they recorded "Rainbow" in disc form, Ada and Billy also sang "Snow Deer," Wenrich's fourth Indian song. It is obvious to an attentive listener that Billy had a cold when the two Indian songs were waxed. "Snow Deer," which had originally come out in 1913, was coupled (on No. 50516) with perhaps the most successful of all Wenrich's Indian song hits, "Silver Bell," but the singers were Gladys Rice and Vernon Dalhart, who had recorded their version in 1918. The coupling was issued in 1919, and became one of the 300 best selling Edison discs. I have a peculiarly personal interest in Record No. 50516, because, a good many years after it was issued, it was the first Edison record I ever bought. I didn't yet have an Edison instrument on which to play it, but, boy-like, I wanted to be able to say I owned at least one Diamond Disc.

The Columbia record of "Rainbow," was issued, on No. A600, in December, 1908, as a duet by Frank C. Stanley and Henry Burr, with Burr's rendition of "Honor Bright, I Loves Yer Right, Old Pal" as its companion. In January, 1909, it was announced in the Columbia supplement as an Indestructible cylinder, No. 960, with the comment:

"The extraordinary popularity of our Double-Disc record of this beautiful number has led to our issuing it in Indestructible cylinder form by the same singers. 'Rainbow' has fairly captured the country—the greatest success since 'Red Wing,' and generally conceded to be in every way superior to the latter."

That closing statement probably did not please Messrs. Thurland Chat-taway and "Kerry" Mills, author and composer of "Red Wing," if it came to their attention. "Red Wing," also by Stanley and Burr, had been issued in single-faced form as Columbia record No. 3681, in September, 1907, but was soon afterwards coupled on No. A468 with "The Virginia Song," by J. W. Myers. It stayed in the catalog through 1926, after the electric recording era had begun.

But here are a couple of the many oddities I have discovered in studying the recordings of Wenrich's songs. Although "Red Wing" was listed in the catalog as sung by Stanley and Burr during all the years in which it was available, it was re-made in 1917 by Burr and Andrea Sarto, calling himself Edgar Stoddard. Names of the artists were changed on the labels of discs pressed after the new versions were recorded, but no catalog mention was ever made of the alteration.

"Rainbow" underwent the same treatment. Probably because of damaged working masters, Stanley and Burr's 1908 version was remade early in 1913 by Sarto—this time using his real name—and Burr. Their names appeared on records of "Rainbow" until it was cut out in September, 1919, but no indication ever was given in the catalog that Stanley and Burr had been succeeded by Sarto and Burr.

I have copies of both the original Stanley and Burr and the later Sarto and Burr pressings of "Rainbow." On the former, Wenrich's name is misspelled, in capital letters as Wendrick, but on the latter the spelling is correct. This is a peculiar thing about the early black and gold Columbia disc labels; The composer's name was printed, in large capitals, immediately beneath the title of the song, but the name of the artist was given in small type near the bottom. This must have been poor policy, for the average buyer of a record was certainly more interested in who sang or played it than he was in who wrote the words and music.

After the Jones-Murray Amberol cylinder No. 576 of "Silver Bell" had made a phenomenal success, Edison issued a Standard two-minute version, No. 10492, in May, 1911. The supplement description is long, but interesting, and worth quoting:

"The popularity of this bewitchingly tuneful Indian love song is unprecedented

(Continued on page 98EE)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 98V)

among selections of its kind. Today, six months after its appearance, it is in greater demand than any record in the Amberol catalog. It is here sung by the same artists and with exactly the same arrangement as on the Amberol, the only difference between the two records being that the Amberol presents the entire song, while the Standard is necessarily restricted to one verse and two choruses—a difference in amount of entertainment that is an unanswerable argument for the Amberol record. The same pretty violin and bell effect and the same novel singing of the refrain are here given as on the Amberol."

Wenrich's third Indian song, "Golden Deer," which came between "Silver Bell" and "Snow Deer," was not a great success. Off-hand, I believe Edison was the only company that recorded it. In June, 1912, it was issued, sung by the Metropolitan Quartet, on Amberol cylinder No. 1027, with words by Harry Williams, who had written the lyrics of many of Egbert Van Alstyne's big hits. The New Phonogram said:

"Percy Wenrich won undying fame with his great 'Silver Bell,' which has never lost its hold upon the public. This new Indian love of his is similar in style to his earlier triumph, and is easily its equal in popular favor."

Despite that closing statement, "Golden Deer" did not win the favor of the public as "Rainbow" and "Silver Bell" had done, and as "Snow Deer" was to do a year later, and did not sell well enough to be taken into the Blue Amberol catalog.

VII. "Missouri, My State"

Probably I should not have undertaken to confine a survey of Percy Wenrich's compositions to one-half of this two-part series. Space limitations make a comprehensive study out of the question. I now must hasten to the closing portion of Wenrich's life.

Before briefly considering the composer's elderly years, however, I must pause long enough to say that I consider "Moonlight Bay" one of the most beautiful of his songs, and believe the Edison disc of it made by the Premier Quartet in 1915, three years after the song was published, is perhaps the finest of all old-style quartet recordings. In 1917 Percy tried the same theme with "Silver Bay"—the title seems a combination of "Silver Bell" and "Moonlight Bay"—but although a pretty number it somehow lacked the appeal of its forerunner.

A few words need to be said, too, about Wenrich's "rustic ballads" which got off to that smashingly successful start with "Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet." In 1912 he composed "Kentucky Days," which had a resemblance to "Dixie Gray," a march song Teddy Morse had produced two years before. One line of the first verse of "Kentucky Days" was even the same as a line in the Morse song: "Old Kentucky borrowed all its sunshine from you!"

But before anybody is accused of plagiarism, it should be brought out that the lyrics of both songs were written by Jack Mahoney—like Steve Porter and Joe Phillips, a native of Merritt Malvern's Buffalo, N.Y.—and he obviously had the right to go back and pick up a line from one of his former efforts. "Kentucky Days" was a try-out for the 1914 smash hit, "When You Wore a Tulip," and, as has already been indicated, still others in similar vein followed—"Sweet Cider Time" and "In Berry Pickin' Time," for example. In 1915 Percy wrote a pseudo Irish ballad in the style Ernest R. Ball had made popular. It was called "When It's Moonlight in Mayo," and was one of Will Oakland's favorite numbers. When this country entered World War I, Wenrich did the music for "Where Do We Go From Here?" and "A Rainbow from the U.S.A.," and he greeted the advent of national prohibition with "How Are You Goin' to Wet Your Whistle (When the Whole Darn World Goes Dry)?" Twenty-seven years later, when his career was long past its peak, he and a new lyric writer, T. Cowgill, produced a novelty number, "Let's Wear Our Whiskers Long." Apparently they looked far into the future and foresaw present-day American streets thronged with bearded young males.

Another nugget of knowledge that should be preserved for our posterity's posterity: The Premier Quartet's rendition of Edward Madden and Percy Wenrich's "eccentric" number, "That Skeleton Rag," was Edison's last two-minute wax cylinder. It was issued in September, 1912, on Standard No. 10575. "Sail Along, Silvery Moon," with words by Harry Tobias, seems to be the last Wenrich song that attracted measurable attention. It came out in 1939.

And now that unsleeping subconscious self has just reminded me of something else. Last month, in discussing Dolly Connolly's Emerson record of the Wenrich ballad, "One Loving Caress," I mentioned that Edison recorded it by Gladys Rice and Marion Evelyn Cox, but didn't issue it until two years after the song was published. I forgot, however, that Edison also had the song sung by a soprano, Mabelle Wagner-Shank, and coupled it with "I'll Be With You In

IN PRAISE OF "The Show Me" State. This is the first part of the manuscript of a march song, "Missouri, My State," which Percy Wenrich wrote in 1947, hoping it would be adopted as the State song.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 98EE)

march time and called it "Missouri, My State." My friend, Mrs. Helen Noteboom, to whom I repeat, I am so much indebted for helping me obtain pictures of, and information, about Wenrich and his wife, Dolly Connolly, sent me a copy of the manuscript. I have submitted its first page for reproduction. Mrs. Noteboom also sent me clippings from two Missouri newspapers, concerning Wenrich's state song efforts, and I shall quote parts of them. The longer article, dated March 23, 1947, was written by Vaun Benjamin, and appeared in the Joplin Newspress. Under the heading of "Percy Wenrich Composes a Tribute to His Home State," it says:

"For the last 35 years in the state legislature the subject of a state song has come up at different times. Now, the nationally famous Missouri song writer, Percy Wenrich, has written a song about his home state entitled 'Missouri, My State.' It is 32 bars of one of the oldest and greatest of lively tempos. The mood is indicative that Mr. Wenrich, long a New York resident because of his profession, is a bit homesick.

"When he first decided to write a Missouri song, it was simple, along the type of 'America,' Mr. Wenrich told the News-Press. It was a song that he thought the school children would sing and remember. About that time Ella Herbert Bartlett, daughter of Victor Herbert, conducted a poll of school children on the type of song they liked best. Best of all, the children liked a song that had spirit in it. Wenrich tossed his first Missouri song aside and came up with a march. One that was good for schools, marching feet, parades, and football games. The words go:

"Missouri, My State! Missouri my State!
Where ev'ry rock and rill is dear to me,
And every heart is filled with loyalty,
Missouri, My State! Missouri, grand and great,
And you will always be
The pride of the Middle West to me,
Missouri, My State!"

"Mr. Wenrich is in no hurry to have his song made official. 'I think all songs considered for state songs should be played and sung over a period of time and let the people choose the one they like best.' He also thinks the song should be written by a Missourian for Missourians.

"Wenrich's song, 'Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet,' was the favorite of President Woodrow Wilson. After his success in song writing he entered vaudeville with his wife, Dolly Connolly. For 15 years they toured the leading vaudeville circuits.

"Music was a part of the Wenrich family life. Although his father was a postmaster of Joplin, the latter wrote the words and music to the old ballad, 'Sing to Me Those Good Old Songs.' Percy was assistant postmaster for his father in 1899. The state legislature is considering the song 'Missouri, the Show Me State,' which was written by Idele Hillbrand of Vandalia. The House has approved the song. In the last legislature a bill favoring 'The Missouri Waltz' was passed by the house, but died in the Senate."

An article in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch obviously was based on the same press release as the one used in the News-Press, so there would be no point to quoting it. I'm sorry that I don't know whether the legislature finally chose a state song, and whether it was Wenrich's or some other.

VIII. Seventieth Birthday

On January 25, 1950, the New York World-Telegram and Sun published a feature story by a staff writer, Edmund Leahy, telling of Percy Wenrich's seventieth birthday. (He died on March 17, 1952, a little more than two years later.) The rather misleading heading was "Forgotten, His Melodies Linger On," and there was a sadly quiet air of resignation about the article:

"Times have changed. There was a day when Percy Wenrich could go to any music publisher, hand him a song, and the song was sold. Today things are different.

"Celebrating his 70th birthday in his room at the Park Sheraton Hotel day before yesterday, Mr. Wenrich gazed out the window and explained, 'Today I am not known to the publishers.' His voice was low and gentle and there was no rancor in it. He smiled pleasantly.

"I'll give you an example. One day I was in Hollywood talking to a friend in the music business. He called in a stenographer. 'This is Percy Wenrich,' he said. 'Know who he is?'

"She shook her head. 'Ever hear the song, 'Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet?'' The girl's face lighted up. 'Sure, she said happily. 'Of course I know that.'

"Well, Mr. Wenrich wrote it."

"She was very sweet about not knowing me. But she is only one. People remember songs of mine. But they don't know me."

"Getting a new song accepted today isn't easy," Mr. Wenrich said. 'People love the old style songs, and kids love them, but today there's a new style, a new trend. The younger element want bebop and ragtime.' (Rock 'n' roll was unknown then.—J.W.) He's always been a great guy for melody."

"He feels that if he could get around he could still sell some songs he has written recently. 'It's no use just sending them in,' he smiled gently. 'You've got to sit down and play them for a publisher; make him like them.'

"But he can't get around as he would wish. Fate has been cracking down pretty heavily on Percy Wenrich, vaudevillian and song writer, since 10 years ago when he had to leave Hollywood to go to Saranac.

"He licked TB. But a year and a half ago he had a stroke. On the road to recovery he fell and broke his hip. His hip is healed now, and he is regaining the use of a paralyzed hand. He gets about with a crutch and a wheel chair, but ventures no farther than the sidewalk in front of his hotel. However, he'll be up and around soon. He's sure of that.

"The belief helped brighten his birthday, spent quietly in his room. He was not alone. Many people phoned and dropped in with good wishes. For though the world may have forgotten Percy Wenrich he has many friends."

Among the many great popular song writers of the early Twentieth Century there are a few for whose memory I have an especially warm affection, even though I never met any of them. When I was a small boy I worshipped Harry Von Tilzer, and when my father bought me a small portable typewriter, "Harry Von Tilzer" was the first name I wrote with it.

In recent years, however, Von Tilzer's songs for the most part do not appeal so strongly to me as do those of a number of his contemporaries. My favorites today are: Theodore Morse, whose life story was told here in April and May; Egbert Van Alstyne, who wrote my all-time sentimental ballad favorite, "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," and two of my other prime favorites, "Cheyenne" and "Memories," and Percy Wenrich, whom we have just been discussing. I would include Ernest R. Ball in this group, but "the Silent Swede's" songs usually came out with black-and-white covers and seemed a cut above the usual Tin Pan Alley standard. To use a recorded music comparison, he was more like a Blue Label than a Black Label artist. And there is no other old-time composer whose songs reduce me to such sniffling nostalgia as those of George M. Cohan.

But Percy Wenrich ranks right up there among my favorite three. I have already expressed the conviction that his songs came about as close to being genuine folk music as anything that has been composed in this country, and I cannot imagine a time when "Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet," "Moonlight Bay," "When You Wore a Tulip," "Rainbow," "Silver Bell," "Snow Deer" and many others will be forgotten.

Joplin's "favorite son" was a public benefactor. I only wish happier endings could have been written to the life stories of Percy Wenrich and Dolly Connolly.

THE END

WANTED

In recently discontinued Peony pattern, Castleton china:

Dinner plates, salads, tea c/s
Describe condition pieces offered and price each.

E. B. HUMPHREY

1012-A Poplar Blvd., Jackson, Miss. 39202
aup

HELEN P. ROCKETT

1044 Davis Grove Rd. Ambler, Pa. 19002
Phone: 1-215-643-4684

R. LALIQUE, sgd., 11", blue opalescent Platter. Feather pattern. Mint. $65.
BACCARAT, embossed signature, 13", clear, diamond-point Cake Plate on low standard. Flint, $75.

POMONA, lovely little, 3-footed Rose Bowl. 2nd grnd. Stain faded, $65.
LALIQUE, etched, "Osmunda," 8", crystal Vase. Engraved ferns with 4 fern-frond feet. Mint. Elegant, $100.

TAPPIO WIRKKALA, sgd., Finland. Mini flower-form, heavy crystal Bowl. Cut vertical stripes. A treasure, $45.
ORREFORS (fuga) emb. sig. Finger Bowl. Deep cherry-red to clear, $20.
ORREFORS, sgd., blue/clear cluthra spittoon (pardon!), 9" dia. Quite heavy, $45. Last 4 items contemporary collectibles. Signed & mint.

Cartage extra, please. New accounts must clear. (Guess why?). 5-day return. Thank you. jlyc

BARRY M. CURCIO

Gloria J. Curcio
56 Prospect St. Wakefield, Mass. 01880
Phone: (617) 246-0499

EARLY FLINT GLASS

Lacy Sandwich 9 1/4" Octagonal Beehive dish. McK., pl. 149. #3 .....$70.00
Lacy Sandwich 6" Acorn plate (Washington variant), McK., pl. 151. #9 .....$24.00
Lacy Gothic Arch rectangular salt, GA2 $29.00
R80 Cup Plate. Early, cloudy & rare $28.00
R162 Cup Plate. Midwestern .....$11.00
R465-S, 13 hearts, stippled serrations $15.00
R680. Midwestern Eagle .....$12.00
Bigler Goblet. Polished pontil .....$29.00
Glass List for large SASE (16c)

SILVER

Dozen heavy Sterling Oyster Forks. Mono. "A.B.B." Front, "1906" back. Bailey Banks & Biddle Co. ....$72.00
Postage & Insurance extra. SASE, please. jlyc

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Edison's Obscure Cylinder Makers

By JIM WALSH

PART I

I. Gone and Nearly Forgotten

Is anyone now alive who made Edison two-minute cylinders from 1896 to 1912? I doubt it.

When the company stopped issuing Standard cylinders more than 60 years ago Walter Van Brunt was Edison's youngest artist. He was then only 20, but was almost 79 when he died April 13, 1971. (In 1914 a Greek mandolin player, Demetrius C. Dounis, who was born in 1895, succeeded him as the youngest record maker.) Since Walter Van Brunt has not survived, what chance is there that any of the other performers, all older than he, are still here?

I have been looking at a list of the men and women who sang, talked or played into a recording instrument during that 16-year period, and have not found a name of anyone whom I know to be alive. However, Grace Cameron, the vaudeville comedienne whose real name was Grace Kerr, just possibly may be. She was said to be living in retirement in California about ten years ago, and I have never read of her death. She was one of Variety's first advertisers when "The Bible of Show Biz" was founded by Sime Silverman in 1905, and I am sure Editor Abel Green would record her death—if it came to the trade paper's notice.

Then there is Elizabeth Wheeler. My old friend Elizabeth was still here half a dozen years ago, when she wrote, in a firm, legible hand, to tell me of the death of her beloved husband, Will, but I have heard nothing from this wonderful lady in recent years. "Bess," however, was born July 20, 1875, so if she has survived she is around 98.

Aside from Miss Cameron, Mrs. Wheeler, and Arthur Clough, I can think of no other makers of Edison two-minute cylinders who may still be living, but the names of many others occur to me who are not only dead but virtually forgotten. While many of the more popular makers of two-minute cylinders, such as Cal Stewart, Ada Jones, Billy Murray, Harry Macdonough, Arthur Collins, Byron G. Harlan and Len Spencer are still vividly remembered and their records avidly collected, there are large numbers of other performers who made only one or two cylinders and about whom almost nothing is known today. Realizing this, I think it will be a worthy gesture of appreciation to devote an article to telling what little I can about them.

I don't mean, however, that every artist who made only a handful of two-minute cylinders is obscure. On the contrary, well remembered people, among them Eddie Morton, Harry Tally, Alan Turner and Clarice Vance, are scantily represented in the Standard cylinder catalog, although they made many records for other companies. But there were a large number who appeared once or twice before Walter Miller's recording instruments, then were heard from no more. It is of them that I shall write.

Looking back, I think the "inspiration" of this article was my obtaining from Oliver Johnson, of St. Louis, a copy of the sheet music of Paul Dresser's 1900 song hit, "The Blue and the Gray," with a photo of Joe Bonnell on the cover. Probably 99 record collectors out of a hundred have never heard of Bonnell, but when I saw his name in Mr. Johnson's auction list I recognized him as one of the most obscure Edison artists and bid enough to obtain his photo, which I had never before seen. Then I decided I must find some excuse for reproducing it in HOBBIES, and this article is the result.

Referring to Allan Koenigsberg's book, "Edison Cylinder Records, 1889-1912," which should be owned by every collector, I find that one Bonnell record, No. 7753, "Mike, Mike Mike," was issued in April, 1901. Then in June came 7833, "I Don't Like the Irish" and 7834, "That's What the Germans Sang." His last contribution, 7899, "Casey's Wedding Night," came in September, 1901. These cylinders were all of the old engraved, soft wax kind and were discontinued on July 25, 1902, after the Gold Moulded type was introduced. Obviously, cylinders by Joe Bonnell are not easy to find. I have never heard one, but the now forgotten—well, almost forgotten—comedian's photo is reproduced herewith. He was probably a typical vaudeville performer of his time in appearance, but to me he has a bit of a "gigolo" appearance. Incidentally, Bonnell seems to have been something of a "mystery man" to the compiler of the Edison record catalog, for in the May, 1901, edition he was listed only as "Mr. Bonnell."

In one or two instances chance has helped me to learn something about these old-time artists. I was looking through a musical encyclopaedia in search of information on another subject, when I saw the name, "Louise LeBaron," and recalled that I had seen this lady's name in the Edison two-minute list. Judging from what the encyclopaedia said, she was a singer of some distinction. It described her as an American mezzo-soprano, who was born in Winchester, Mass., (date not given), and who died in Lincoln, Neb., February 11, 1918—which was Thomas A. Edison's 71st birthday. She is said to have studied in New York and Boston, then to have sung extensively throughout the country in grand opera, light opera, recital, concert and oratorio, "and was the original Alan-a-Dale in 'Robin Hood' with The Bostonians in 1904."

That last statement puzzles me. The Bostonians first began performing Reginald De Koven's opera in 1890 and sang it more than 4,000 times. How then could Miss LeBaron have been the "original Alan-a-Dale in 1904?" I am not familiar with theatrical presentations of "Robin Hood," so I can only guess that perhaps the role of Alan-a-dale was not included when the opera was first performed, but was added in a 1904 revision.

Louise LeBaron's one appearance in The New Phonogram was in April, 1907, when she was represented by 9518, "That's What the Rose Said to Me." The cylinder was given the following description:

"This record is really a formal introduction of Miss LeBaron to the Edison clientele although she acquired a limited acquaintance from having made over record No 8223, 'Whisper and I Shall Hear,' formerly sung by Miss (Corinne) Morgan. Miss LeBaron has a clear, powerful, resonant contralto voice. She will at once become a most useful addition to the list of Edison artists . . ."

However, the lady with the "clear, powerful, resonant" voice made no other Edison appearance. In view of her unusual family name, I wonder if she may have been related to William LeBaron, who did the librettos and lyrics for several musical productions, including some by Victor Herbert, as well as "Apple Blossoms," presented in 1919, which he wrote with another Victor—Victor Jacobi.

Miss LeBaron's having remade a Corinne Morgan record brings to mind another contralto, Mary Porter Mitchell, who owes her sole appearance in the Edison catalog to having sung in 1906, 8224, "For All Eternity," which had previously been by the dynamic Corinne. On the other hand, both "For All Eternity" and "Whisper and I Shall Hear" had been made originally by a soprano, Nellie Thomas, and issued in November, 1902. Both were so popular that the supply of molds was soon exhausted, and Miss Morgan did them over in time for her name to be used in the March, 1904, catalog. Meanwhile, what had become of Nellie Thomas? But, even though Miss Mitchell sang only one record, and that a "re-make," she did get her picture into the New Phonogram.

Now, I shall refer to the alphabetical list of artists in Mr. Koenigsberg's remarkable compilation and mention briefly some of the "small fry" who made a few records.

II. Angela to Butler

Nina Angela. This is the name of a whistler mentioned in a 1900 Phonogram, who must have been feminine, unless Edison was playing a trick and assigning a misleading name to, say, Joe Belmont, who made most of the whistling records 70-odd years ago. Miss(?) Angela was represented by three cylinders, issued around December, 1899: 7334, "The Bob-o-link;" 7335, "Anvil Chorus" from "Trovatore," and 7336, "The Devil's March." In June, 1900, Angela had one more offering with an undignified title, 7453, "I Could Pick de Winner Wid My Two Eyes Shut." But who was "she"? Perhaps reference to The Clipper or some other old-time theatrical paper would solve the mystery of Nina Angela and many other artists listed here, but I lack the facilities and the inclination for such extensive research. Instead, I am writing this article in the hope that someone who reads it may have information about at least a few of the performers and share it with me.

Susanne Baker. This contralto came to what Edison attention she received by remaking, in 1905, a cylinder, No. 8014, "Down Where the Blue Bells Grow," which had originally been sung by another one-record lady, Louise Roberts, for sale in June, 1902. Although Susanne Baker made only the one Edison record, she also did a little work for Zonophone discs. Her first 1905 10-inch Zonophone was 188, "Ben Bolt," issued with this comment:

"Miss Baker is a new singer in the talking machine line. This is the first disc record of her voice. We consider it the best contralto record ever made."

A few months later, the contralto made another record, 222, "Rockin' in the Win'," described as "a raccoon lullaby." In 1908 these two numbers were combined on Zonophone double-faced record No. 5350. But why was no more heard from Susanne Baker?

Edward Barrow. The first of this tenor's three records was issued in November, 1905. Its number was 9140, and its title, "The Irish Girl I Love." Following is The New Phonogram's description:

"Mr. Barrow is a well known English tenor and he here makes his first record for the Edison phonograph. Mr. Barrow commenced his first musical studies when but a youth. Going to London, he entered the Royal Academy of Music, placing himself under Arthur Thompson, an eminent professor at the Conservatory, and later under Signor Alberto Randegger, MISS DAISY BOULAIS, Soprano. She was an assisting artist to Byron G. Harlan, Frank C. Stanley and Harry Anthony.

and graduated with the highest honors. Coming to this country he continued his studies with Victor Harris. He now makes New York City his home. He is solo tenor at the Central Congregational Church, New York City and he has appeared in concerts with the most prominent singers of the country. His first Edison selection is from 'The Rogers Brothers in Ireland,' which opened at the Liberty Theater, New York, in August. The song is one of the gems of the play. It has a slow waltz movement . . ."

Barrow's second cylinder, in December, 1905, was "Lorna." He was assisted by the Edison (Hadyen) Male Quartet. His last, in January, 1906, No. 9190, was "Take Me to Your Heart Again."

Anna Barthold. Contralto voices reproduced better than sopranos in the early recording days, and the deep-voiced damsels were used more often. Anna Barthold's first four wax cylinders were issued in May, 1899: 6400, "Don't Be Cross"; 6401, "My Baby's Kiss"; 6402, "Old Jim's Christmas Hymn," and 6403, "Whose Pretty Girl Are You?" Between June and October, 1899, she had three more: 7182, "Think Once Again Before We Part"; 7183, "Nightingale," and 7184, "Rosie Carey." It has now been about 74 years since those records were issued, and if Anna Barthold were living she probably would be past the century mark. She may have been a singer of some consequence before the turn of the century, but does anybody know anything about her now?

James Bernard. Probably as many persons with the last name of Bernard have made records as could be found of any other family. The most important, of course, is Al Bernard, about whom I have been promising myself for so many years to write a HOBBIES series, but putting it off because I dread sorting through my large collection of material about him. James Bernard was a comedian who had three talking records listed in the October, 1899, Edison cylinder catalog. He told stories originally made popular by J. W. Kelly, "The Rolling Mill Man." They were: 3861, "The A. P. A."; 3862, "The Topsy Man," and 3863, "The German and Irish Races."

Daisy Boulais. This soprano is truly "a woman of mystery." She never made a solo record, but worked mostly as an incidental assistant to Byron G. Harlan and Frank C. Stanley in their duets. I have played with the idea that she was Stanley's wife, but that probably is wrong. In 1903 she sang an obligato to Harlan's record, No. 8409, "In the Valley Where the Bluebirds Sing." She sang the chorus of "Blue Bell" in No. 8736, "Two Rubes at the Vaudeville," by Harlan and Stanley; helped Harlan in 9004, "Down in Blossom Row," and harmonized with Harlan and Stanley in 9061, "Violette." In addition, she and Harry Anthony (John Young) remade two duets that had previously been sung by "Miss Chappell" (Edith Chapman) and George M. Stricklett. They were 8395, "Life's Dream Is O'er," and 8601, "Far Away." But no one seems to know who Daisy Boulais was. Edison merely described her as "a serio-comic" singer.

Frank Bush. In December, 1905, Edison issued No. 9163, "Short Stories," by Frank Bush, who, The New

(Continued on page 119)

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

GIBSON MANDOLIN WANTED, any style, condition. State price. 212 981-1808. — Musician, Box 85, Staten Island, N.Y. 10304 au3652

VIOLIN

VIOLIN—Owned since 1923 with paper label that states "Nicola Amati fecit Cremona sub titulo Santa Teresia 1657". This instrument had been owned by the family of T. M. Bell from 1856 to 1923. $3,450, or trade for signed Tiffany and/or Steuben art glass. — Scarlett, (317) 962-6756 au1673

MUSICAL ANTIQUE BOOKS

INTERESTING stories, pictures and research about restored musical antiques, in 52-page book. $1.25 postpaid from — The Musical Museum, Deansboro, N.Y. d128041

MELODEONS

WANTED: Melodeon pedals, or, information where I can purchase them. — Florence Dahlberg, 900 Gaskill Dr., Ames, Iowa 50010 au3213

PHONOGRAPHS

PHONOGRAPHS repaired: New spare parts for Edison phonographs. Send stamp for list. Phone: (201) 748-8046. — Gerichten, 23 Waldo, Ave., Bloomfield, N.J. 07003 jly128041

ANTIQUÉ PHONOGRAPH Books, Instruction Manuals, Catalogs for sale. Send 2 stamps for free list.—Allen Koenigsberg, 250 East 45th St., Brooklyn, N.Y. 11203 s6867

For Sale Victor oak cabinet phonograph $125.00. — Mrs. Mable Dear, Box 41, Grand Cane, La. 71032 Ph: 318-858-3362. au1612

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

BANJOS and Gibson Mandolins Wanted. Collector will pay cash for Gibsons in any condition. Also old C F Martin guitars. — Mr. Jay, Box 65, Staten Island, New York, 10304, or call (212) 981-1808. jly3215

EDISON "Idelia" phonograph wanted. Offering $650.00 if in excellent condition. — E. Mathewson, 141 Fourth St., Toronto 14, Ont., Canada. s3403

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

Phonogram said, "is one of the best known vaudeville artists on the American stage. The stories are extremely funny, and the manner in which Mr. Bush tells them adds to their humor. The stories given on this record have been written for this special purpose and have not been published in any form." Perhaps the National Association of Variety Artists has some information in its files concerning Frank Bush.

Amy Butler. This vaudeville comedienne seems to have been known as "Little Amy" Butler. Her sole Edison two-minute cylinder was issued in November, 1908, and was No. 9974, "It's the Pretty Things You Say." She was described as:

"A new Edison singer in one of the catchiest of songs. Miss Butler's method is that of the typical Broadway musical comedy star. Her voice is most musical and she sings with rare vivacity."

The comedienne recorded the same song on Indestructible cylinder No. 897. Her photo appears on the sheet music cover of two Irving Berlin songs in my collection—"San Francisco Bound" and "Kiss Me." The latter is reproduced with this article, and may cause you to wonder why she was called "Little Amy."

III. Chalfant to Godoy

Chalfant. Edison two-minute cylinder No. 1, issued in 1896, was "All Coons Look Alike To Me," a schottische played by the Edison Grand Concert Band. It was not a dignified beginning for a long list. The last, which went on sale in September, 1912, was No. 10575, "The Skeleton Rag," by the Premier Quartet—not an especially dignified conclusion. This does not mean, however, that more than 10,000 different titles were issued. From 1896 to September, 1899, records were numbered in a block system instead of strict numerical order, and it's likely that fewer than half the available numbers were used.

But of all the hundreds of performers who appeared on the two-minute records, none seems more obscure than "Chalfant," whose first name was not even given. A list for March, 1898, identifies him as a whistler who was Billy Golden's duet partner in four cylinders: 4016, "Minstrel Scene"; 4017, "Roll On, Silver Moon"; 4018, "Three Minutes With the Minstrels" (shouldn't that have been "Two Minutes"?); and 4079, "Whistling Medley." These records were gone by November, 1899, and so was Mr. Chalfant's name.

Another artist whose last name only was given came along in 1905. He was a vaudeville comedian known as "Tascott," who made two records: 9033, "Shame On You," and 9091, "You Must Think I'm Santa Claus." Nor must we forget "Mozarto," supposed to be a European music hall performer on more than one instrument at a time, who assisted Len Spencer in several records. "Mozarto" may have existed, or perhaps was a figment of Spencer's ingenious imagination.

MARIE HOY, Soprano. She sang three duets with Harry Anthony. Neither, Miss Boulais nor Miss Hoy made any solo records.

Edward Clarence. A pen sketch of this baritone, with a moustache and a hair style that would look at home among young men of today, appeared in The Phonogram for March, 1902, with this biographical note:

"Edward Clarence was born at Boston in 1863. At an early age Mr. Clarence developed considerable vocal talent. His singing has met with the approval of the public, and he has appeared in nearly every prominent vaudeville theater in the United States and Canada. His enunciation is clear and distinct and his records for the phonograph are deservedly popular."

Clarence had four records under his name by mid-1898. He had been assigned the 5500 series in the block system, and his titles were: 5500, "The American Toast"; 5501, "MacMahon Grenadiers"; 5502, "Gallant Emmett Guards," and 5503, "Irish Volunteers." No numbers between 5503 and 6000 were issued.

Arthur C. Clough. A musical comedy and light opera tenor who does not really belong in this list for he made a fairly large number of records for such companies as Victor, Columbia and Edison, but little is known about him personally, although he is said to have been a lawyer who turned singer. He is one of the few Standard cylinder artists who may conceivably still be living. His five two-minute records, ranging from 1909 to 1912, are: 10233, "When the Meadow Larks Are Calling, Annie Laurie"; 10251, "It's Hard to Kiss Your Sweetheart When the Last Kiss Means Goodbye"; 10261, "In the Shadow of the Carolina Hills"; 10311, "Creole Lullaby," and 10497, "Garden of Roses."

William Craig. A fiddler who made a few cylinders of Scotch dance tunes: 9893, "Lady Binnie" and "Shores of Lake Erie"; 10120, "Stirling Castle" and "Harvest Dance"; 10357, "Farintosh" and "Jenny Dang the Weaver"; and 10440, "Highland Whiskey" and "Craig's Reel." These range in date of issue from August, 1908, to November, 1910. Craig died at his home in Glenburnie, Scotland, July 10, 1911.

Lilian Doreen. I assume Miss Doreen was a vaudeville singer. She made one Standard cylinder, No. 9666, "Take Me Back To New York Town," issued in October, 1907. Her version of this well remembered Harry Von Tilzer song hit was not imported by Edison's English branch, because an English revision had been issued called "Take Me Back to London Town" and the American words were considered too regional.

John H. Duffy. A baritone who in 1905 remade two records that had previously been sung by J. W. Myers. They were No. 7839, "Bedouin Love Song," and 8010, "The Bridge."

Press Eldridge. A once noted comedian who made ten Edison cylinders in 1898 and another, No. 10121, "A Confidential Chat," which was issued in May, 1909. By that time even the Edison personnel had forgotten, apparently, that he had recorded previously, as witness this description in The New Phonogram:

"A heart-to-heart talk by 'the Commander-in-Chief of The Army of Fun,' as Mr. Eldridge is everywhere known. This is one of his most popular monologues. It is always a 'hit' at the leading vaudeville houses of the country. This record marks Mr. Eldridge's entry in the phonograph field, and we predict that he will be no less popular than he is on the stage."

There were no more Edison cylinders by Eldridge, but he had made four seven-inch records that were included in a 1900 catalog of Berliner discs: 0924, "Johnny Took the One I Wanted"; 0925, "My Girl's a Hawaiian Maiden"; 0931, "Let Them All Come," and 0932, "La La Palizer."

I have the sheet music of a song published in 1893, "I'm the Man That Wrote 'After the Ball,'" the cover of which shows Eldridge in blackface. This now forgotten ditty of course was designed to cash in on the raging popularity of Charles K. Harris' great hit, "After the Ball," which achieved almost unprecedented success in 1892 and 1893.

Harry Fay. One of the most popular English comedians before World War I, Fay was little known in the States. Two of his British cylinders were imported and issued: 10133, "I Don't Care if There is a Girl There" (May, 1909), and 10283, "Have You Got Another Girl At Home Like Mary?" (10283).

Minnie De Rue Fay. I know nothing about this singer, whose one cylinder, a "coon love song," "Moon, Moon," was issued in January, 1903. Presumably, since she was an American performer, she was not any of Harry Fay's "kinfolks."

Elene Foster. This clever comedienne made one appearance in the Edison list. She did a humorous monolog, "The Village Seamstress," (No. 9103), which came out in October, 1905. Quoting from The New Phono- gram:

(Continued on next page)

"This selection is something entirely new in the way of a phonograph record. Miss Foster . . . is a well known elocutionist, having given readings and recitations before many of the leading clubs and at select entertainments in various parts of the country. She is an unusually clever mimic. Her portrayal of the garrulous village seamstress, with the latter's characteristic repetition of the gossip of the day, will be readily recognized as lifelike by all familiar with country life. This selection is adapted by Miss Foster from Kate Douglas Wiggin."

Somewhere I have a copy of the Literary Digest issued, I believe, in 1915, which contains a reprint of an article Elene Foster wrote for another magazine in which she humorously described her first day's experience as a character actress in the silent movies. I don't know how long her film activities continued.

Guido Gialdini. This German-born whistler with the Italian sounding name really does not belong in this compilation, for he made no Edison two-minute cylinders, but he did record for Edison during the period the shorter records were being issued. Including him, gives me a chance to say I'd like to write an article about Gialdini, who was probably the greatest whistler that ever lived, if I only knew more about the man himself. An old Edison catalog says he was a dry goods clerk before taking to the stage and becoming a headline attraction in music halls throughout the world. He made many records for American companies when he toured this country from 1910 to 1912, and afterwards recorded electrically. Obviously, his act was of a wider appeal than that of the average singer, for good whistling knows no language barrier and can be appreciated in virtually any country. Gialdini's recorded repertoire, in America and Europe, included such diverse items as "Musetta's Waltz" from "Boheme," "My Hero" from "The Chocolate Soldier," "Most Noble Marquis" from "Die Fledermaus," down to "Call Me Up Some Rainy Afternoon" and "The Whistling Bowery Boy." He made Nicole discs in England as early as 1905.

Roy Gibson. The dulcimer seems to be an odd instrument to have been recorded in the early days of the phonograph, but a player named Roy Gibson made four solos in 1901: 7769, "Gibson March"; 7770, "Radetzky March"; 7771, "Seventh Ohio Regiment March," and 7933, "March Arcadia." Another dulcimer player, William Moriarity, made two, No. 8021, "Ain't Dat A Shame?" (1902) and 8665, "Llewellyn March" (1904).

Senorita Maria Godoy. A Spanish singer, who made five records in 1899, and no doubt was called on to remake them at intervals. She is one of a group of 42 Edison artists photographed in 1900. Her titles were: 7138, "La Cocina"; 7139, "La Paloma"; 7140, "El Cafe de Puerto Rico"; 7141, "Nina Pancha," and 7142, "El Gorro Frigo." She may have also been recorded for Edison foreign language catalogs.

JOHN KAISER, talking artist. He remade several "Casey" records that had previously been made by Russell Hunting and James H. White.

IV. Heins to Keefe

Billy Heins. This genial comedian was still living about 20 years ago and I can't swear that he isn't still. In 1898 he made two Edison cylinders: 1136, "I Want Them Presents Back," and 1137, "Hugh McCue." A year later, in May, 1899, the catalog contained six cylinders by Heins and the Ancient City Quartet, all part of a minstrel series: 4700, "How I Love My Love"; 4701, "Elsie From Chelsea"; 4702, "Laughing Song" (probably George W. Johnson sang in this); 4703, "Remus Takes The Cake"; 4704, "Minstrel Scene," and 4705, "Three Minutes With the Minstrels."

Heins also was an early Zonophone recorder. In 1904 he made the following: 5954, "Dis-pos-zes Means Move"; 5955, "Down On The Brandywine"; 5958, "Follow The Merry Crowd"; 5965, "Hooray for a Holiday," and 5972, "Meet Me in St. Louis, Louis." These records were in both 7-inch and 9-inch. In 1917 Heins became Billy Golden's partner for blackface comedy after the death of James Marlowe, and they worked together a couple of years, recording for most of the important companies. Still later, Golden's original recording partner, Joe Hughes (Joseph Savory) took Heins' place.

Ethel Hepburn. A mezzo-soprano who came along late in the wax cylinder recording field. In the December, 1911, supplement she had two records of the same song, "Will the Roses Bloom in Heaven?" one of Charles K. Harris' mawkish "sob ballads" about dying children. On Amberol 860 she sang a four-minute version and on Standard 10527, a two-minute interpretation. The New Phonogram said of her:

"Ethel Hepburn is a native of New York and studied music under the tutelage of Madame Louise Von Feilitzsch. She has enjoyed an enviable and varied career as a dramatic soprano, for in addition to singing in church and private concert work, she has appeared with Frank Daniels in 'The Office Boy,' in 'The Girl From Kay's,' 'The Vanderbilt Cup' and in Eva Tanguay's 'Sambo Girl.' During the seasons of 1908 and 1909 she starred as Ethel Morton of the opera company of the same name in an extensive repertoire which included 'The Mikado,' 'H. M. S. Pinafore,' 'Chimes of Normandy,' 'The Mascot,' etc."

Here we have a puzzle. Which was the assumed name, Ethel Hepburn or Ethel Morton?

Mina Hickman. Here we have a "mystery woman" who fascinates me. Mina Hickman must have been "somebody" 70 years ago, but what was her claim to fame aside from making a fair number of records? She seems to have been on only a couple of the Edison two-minutes: 7975, "When Two Hearts Are One," and 7976, "Tale of the Bumblebee," both duets with Harry Macdonough, issued in November, 1901.

She did more, however, for other companies. For Zonophone, from 1902 to 1904, she sang: 5292, "Come Down, Ma Evenin' Star"; 5413, "Under the Bamboo Tree"; 5414, "Under the Deodar"; 5778, "Laughing Water"; 5875, "In Dreamland," and 5892, "Navajo."

Besides the foregoing solos, the soprano sang four duets for Zonophone with a completely forgotten tenor, J. J. Taylor, about whom I know nothing. These records were No. 9570, "The Kiss Duet"; 9575, "Lola"; 9577, "None Shall Part Us," from "Iolanthe," and 9578, that perennial duet which Corrine Morgan and Frank C. Stanley were soon to make almost their own private property, "Oh That We Two Were Maying."

I have not found any Berliners by Miss Hickman, though she may have made some, but she had a fairly impressive Victor list, beginning in 1902 and continuing into 1904, when it looks as if her recording career ended.

The Hickman Victors included M-3294 (the number was later changed to 1916), "For All Eternity"; M3292, "Lullaby from 'Erminie'" (number changed to 1917); 748, "Killarney"; 751, "When I Think of You"; M2374, "Congo Love Song"; M2500, "My Em-maleen," from "Peggy From Paris"; M2511, "The Miller's Daughter," from "Three Little Maids"; M2532, "The Maid From Timbuctoo"; 1918, "Under the Bamboo Tree"; 2908, "Good-bye, Little Girl, Goodbye" and 2907, "There's Nothing New To Say." I wonder if Mina Hickman was better known by some other name.

J. Frank Hopkins. The first xylophone player of any prominence for Edison, Victor and Columbia was Charles P. Lowe, about whom little or nothing seems known today. His place was taken for Edison around 1902 by J. Frank Hopkins, who made a considerable number of records for the next two years, when he was succeeded by Albert Benzler, a versatile musician who played xylophone, orchestra bells, piano, and organ and occasionally grabbed a violin and helped out in the Edison Orchestra. Benzler remade most of the Hopkins records. Who now knows anything about the man, J. Frank Hopkins?

(Continued on next page)

Marie Hoy. This soprano was referred to only as "Miss Hoy" in the Edison catalog, but a 1906 advertisement of the Channell Studio of Orange, N.J., which sold photographs of recording artists, gave her first name as Marie. I called on U. G. Channell, owner of the studio, in 1947 or 1948, and he told me he had destroyed all his negatives and photographs of old-time record makers only a month before. "Too bad you didn't come a little sooner," he said. "I would have given them to you."

Miss Hoy's Edison activities were confined to singing in three duets with Harry Anthony: 9248, "I Would Like to Marry You," which came out in April, 1906; 9282, "Anxious," in May; and 9299, "Why Don't You Try?" in July. When the first record appeared Miss Hoy was described as "a new soprano to our list, whose distinct articulation and clear, well-schooled voice will no doubt be appreciatingly (!) received." I wish that on the one occasion I met "Harry Anthony" I had thought to ask him: "Just who were Marie Hoy and Daisy Boulais?"

Parke Hunter. It is surprising that so little is known today of a man who had the prominence of Parke Hunter in the early years of this century. He was the banjo duet partner of Vess L. Ossman in vaudeville and apparently he could play almost any other instrument. He frequently assisted Len Spencer in the latter's recorded comedy sketches, such as "Con Clancy and the Whistling Newsboy," and in the Victor disc of "Auction Sale of a Music Store," he maddens the crowd of onlookers by playing "Hiawatha" on one device after another. Yet the only picture I have ever seen of Hunter was reproduced from "B. M. G.," an English publication for banjo, mandolin and guitar players, in which one writer expressed the opinion that Hunter was a better banjoist than the great Vess himself. The question arises, if he was better why didn't the companies engage him, instead of Vess, to make most of their banjo records? Hunter's only appearances in Edison lists are as a member of the Ossman Banjo Trio composed of Ossman, Hunter and William Farmer. In 1904 they played two Theodore Morse compositions: 8841, "I've Got a Feeling for You," and 8859, "Make a Fuss Over Me."

George W. Johnson. I mention the favorite singer of laughing songs only because I overlooked something when writing "In Justice to George W. Johnson" for January and February, 1971, HOBBIES. Although I said I had been unable to learn his date of birth, some notes I made several years ago in Washington from a 1900 Phonogram in the Library of Congress reveal that he was born as a slave in 1846 on a Virginia plantation. He "went North" in 1873, at the age of 27, and is said to have made a tinfoil recording of his "Laughing Song" very shortly after Edison invented the phonograph in 1877. I also neglected to list his 9-inch Zonophone record, 5290, of "Carving the Duck." Johnson, like several other artists mentioned in this survey, is shown in the 1900 group photo published in HOBBIES for January, 1971. Prints of this picture may be obtained from a HOBBIES advertiser, Quentin Riggs, of Huntington Beach, Calif.

ANDREW KEEFE was an imitator of Cal Stewart, who made a few Edison "Uncle Josh" cylinders.

John Kaiser. This artist served for a time as announcer on Zonophone records. I have been told he was an uncle of my friend Frank Banta, the pianist of the Eight Famous Victor Artists, who died about four years ago. In 1905 Kaiser remade four "Casey" monologs that had previously been made by James H. White, who had gone to England to be manager of the Edison phonograph and record business there. On Zonophone 9-inch record 5911 he assisted Cal Stewart to make a hard to find record, "The Difference Between a German and an Irish Picnic," in which, presumably, Cal for once got away from his familiar "Uncle Josh" impersonation.

Andrew Keefe. A stove repair man in Albany, N.Y., some 70 years ago, Keefe acquired some local notoriety by being able to imitate the voices of recording artists. Learning that he could sound very much like Cal Stewart's "Uncle Josh," Edison engaged him to record some of Stewart's monologs, since the latter was then exclusive to Columbia. The first, 9152, "I'm Old But I'm Awfully Tough," came out in December, 1905. It was followed by 9221, "Uncle Josh in a Department Store," March, 1906, and "Uncle Josh in a Chinese Laundry," February, 1907. Keefe also made some Leeds records. More about him may be found in the Cal Stewart articles in HOBBIES, for March, 1951. Stewart's imitator ceased making records when the great man himself returned to Edison.

Matt Keefe. This tenor-yodeler was Billy Murray's singing partner when the 19-year-old future "Denver Nightingale" made his first records in 1897 for Bacigalupi Brothers, Edison distributors in San Francisco. Their first cylinder was "The Lass From the County Mayo." With another duet partner—the elusive George M. Stricklett—Keefe recorded his composition, "Mother's Lullaby," for the September, 1908, Edison list. In October they did 9963, "Matt Keefe's Yodel Song," which was thus described:

"Something new and decidedly different in a yodel(!) song. The song (by Stricklett) and the yodel (by Keefe) alternate throughout. There are no less than 10 different yodeling parts, some of them entirely unique. It is easy to understand Matt Keefe's success on the stage after hearing his latest yodel. His notes are as clear as a mocking bird's and reproduce perfectly."

In 1914 Keefe made Columbia record A1604, "Mountain High" and "The Strolling Yodeler," and in 1917, A2378, "Roll On, Silvery Moon" and "Sleep, Baby, Sleep." In 1919 he sang a double-faced Pathé disc, No. 22186, of "Mother's Lullaby" and "Roll On, Silvery Moon."

P.S. Abel Green, editor of Variety, is mentioned in the third paragraph of this article. Since it was written more than a year ago, Mr. Green has dropped dead of a heart attack. He was born in New York City on June 3, 1900, and died in the lobby of the apartment building in which he lived on May 10, 1973. The veteran editor had been with the theatrical publication since 1920 and served as editor beginning in 1933.

(TO BE CONTINUED)

Let every man honor and love the land of his birth and the race from which he springs and keep their memory green. It is a pious and honorable duty. But let us have done with British-Americans, Irish-Americans, German-Americans and so on, and all be Americans . . . If a man is going to be an American at all let him be so without any qualifying adjectives; and if he is going to be something else, let him drop the word American from his personal description." .....

—HENRY CABOT LODGE

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

8c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8.

(Except for change of address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rates.)

All advertisers who submit copy for the first time are definitely requested to furnish therewith banking or other satisfactory references.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Edison's Obscure Cylinder Makers

By JIM WALSH

PART II

I. Beginning with May(m) Kelso

Last month's installment of this survey of Edison's lesser known cylinder recording artists began with Nina Angela and ended with Matt Keefe. This month we'll begin with May Kelso and end with Bessie Wynn.

A good way to begin, I suppose, is by saying that Miss Kelso's first name really wasn't May. It was Maym (which I take to have been pronounced Mame) but the recording apparatus of the 1890's wouldn't reproduce the final "m" when her name was mentioned in spoken announcements. The sound came out as "May," so it was decided to let her name appear that way on the records and in the catalogs.

May(m) Kelso's career goes back a long time. She began appearing in farce comedy in 1888—85 years ago—but retired temporarily after three and one half years of appearing with the Russell Comedians in "The City Directory." In 1898-99, about the time her recording career began, she was seen in "From Broadway to Tokyo." She appears to have been good-natured and easy-going. The late John Bieling, with whom she had made a few Edison duets, used to smile as he recalled that his first wife would scold him for spending too much time "sitting around and drinking beer with that May Kelso."

I was surprised when a correspondent whose memory goes back a long way, wrote me that around 1913 to 1915, he saw a series of movie "shorts"—pictures of one or two reels—called "The Mutual Girl," and featuring a young actress called Dorothy Phillips. Apparently the films had a central theme concerned with the girl's adventures while shopping, and a prominent member of the cast was Maym Kelso, who took the part of Dorothy's aunt. The aunt, it seems, was both puzzled and amused by the articles her niece bought and brought home and by her experiences buying them. And that is as nearly up-to-date as I can bring the life and career of May(m) Kelso, except that "Bill" Hayes, the veteran Edison recording expert wrote me in July, 1946. "Miss May Kelso died a few years ago."

Her Edison activities covered two years or so—from mid-1899 to September, 1901, during which time she made 17 solos. The one with the lowest number, 7176, was "Because,"

FORGOTTEN MAN—Joe Bonnell made a few Edison cylinders in 1901, but is almost entirely forgotten now. He must, however, have had some vaudeville prominence for his photo to be used on the cover of Paul Dresser's song hit.

followed by 7177, "Kentucky Babe." The highest number, 7913, had her interpretation of that captivating melody, "The Honeysuckle and the Bee."

The Kelso-Bieling duets were made in 1900 and 1901. They were: 7644, "You'll Know"; 7645, "The Hymn You Loved the Best"; 7672, "One I Love," and 7749, "Just the Same as Long Ago." I imagine not many copies have survived.

The National Gramophone Company's record catalog for December, 1899, contained a seven-inch record by Miss Kelso, "Kentucky Babe," which must have been one of her favorite songs. In May, 1901, the following were included in a Zonophone list: 9414, "Stay In Your Own Back Yard" (which she also sang on Edison 7566); 9415, "Florida Flo," and 9418, "Kentucky Babe." After that I find no more Kelso records.

(Continued on next page)

II. Kenney Through Newton

William H. Kenney. This baritone was one of the first singers to make, in 1902, the new-fangled Gold Moulded cylinders. He contributed two: 8011, "The Heart of a Sailor," and 8030, "Past and Future."

Henry Kessler. A completely forgotten tenor whose four cylinders go back to 1899: 7222, "Just Behind the Times"; 7223, "After the War"; 7224, "When the Sweet Magnolias Bloom," and 7228, "One Night in June."

Dorothy Kingsley was a "soubrette" singer with a singularly unattractive vaudeville type of voice. (Many of the world's worst voices were possessed by vaudeville and light opera singers, and some of them were heard on at least a few records.) Once I played on a radio program Miss Kingsley's Victor recording of "Could You Learn to Love a Little Girl Like Me?" and after it was over my announcer said: "Well, Jim, considering the voice the lady has got, the answer to her question is 'no!'"

Miss Kingsley made two Edison cylinders: 9892, issued in August, 1908, "It Always Comes With the Summer," and 9989, a duet with Edward Meeker, "Take a Little Ride With Me," which came out in November. During the same period she sang for Victor No. 5572, "Could You Learn to Love—?" and was also on one of the first 11 Victor double-faced discs. Her side of No. 16010 was "I don't Want the Morning to Come." On the reverse, Byron G. Harlan warbled "Everybody Loves Me But the One I Love." She also made one single-faced Zonophone, No. 1078, "Do You Know Mr. Schneider?"

But the company for which the "soubrette" sang most was Indestructible. She made five two-minute Indestructible cylinders: 853, "It's Only Me In My Nightie"; 860, "Move On, Mr. Moon"; 884, "Everyone's In Love With Someone"; 927, "The Old Swing On The Lawn," and 985, "Call 'Round Any Old Time." Not one of these songs is well enough known to be easily dated today, but they all fall into the 1908-09 period.

Stanley Kirkby. This baritone, who died about ten years ago, probably made more records than any other English singer. Two of his English cylinders were imported by Edison: The two-minute 10534, "Brown Wings," and the four-minute 781, "Your Eyes Have Told Me So." The former was issued in January, 1912, and the latter in September, 1911.

Roxy P. La Rocca. He was a harp player, who was partner in vaudeville with Manuel Romain. His first cylinder, 10368, "Annie Laurie," was issued in June, 1910, and his second, "The Mocking Bird," in October.

George Seymour Lenox. This tenor was associated with Frank C. Stanley in the Lotus Quartet. Stanley's daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth A. Repelow, of West Orange, N.J., says that Lenox was about the only recording artist

J. Aldrich Libbey

"AFTER THE BALL"—J. Aldrich Libbey won great vaudeville popularity for his singing of Charles K. Harris' song hit, but his Edison cylinders did not include it.

who used to visit overnight in the Stanley home and recalls that she called him "Uncle Seymour." He made four Edison solo cylinders: 8323, "No One But You," and 8344, "The Message of the Rose," January-February, 1903; 8605, "A Dream," February, 1904, and 8793, "The Bloom Is On The Rye," September, 1904.

Maurice Levi and His Band. Levi was famous at the turn of the century as the composer of songs about a rustic character called "The Reuben," which were introduced in Rogers Brothers' productions. They included "When Reuben Comes To Town" and "The Wedding Of The Reuben And The Maid." These two numbers were included in four-minute Amberol cylinder 169, "Levi's Famous 'Reuben' Songs," issued in July, 1909. "When Reuben Comes To Town," sung by S. H. Dudley on M3001, was the first 10-inch Monarch (Victor) record. Two-minute cylinders by Levi and His Band were: 10097, "Happy Days March"; 10128, "A Coon Band Contest" and 10148, "Rolling Chair March." Other four-minutes besides the "Reuben Songs" Medley were: 134, "Fair Harvard Waltzes," and 149, "Frau Luna" Overture.

J. Aldrich Libbey. Libbey, once, was a famous vaudeville baritone who is credited with having given Charles K. Harris' 1892 hit, "After The Ball," its enormous vogue. Another artist who featured "After The Ball," and accepted "payola" from Harris for singing it, was Evan Williams (1867-1918), who was then a minstrel show tenor but many years later became a favorite Victor Red Seal artist. Harris paid him $2.50 for each time he sang the hit.

Unfortunately, Libbey didn't record "After The Ball" — the tune was passé by the time he began making records—but he made six cylinders in 1902 and 1903: 8018, "On A Sunday Afternoon"; 8019, "The Song The Soldiers Sang"; 8020, "Where The Silvery Colorado Wends Its Way"; 8171, "Only A Summer Girl"; 8204, "Marie-Louise," and 8300, "In The Sweet Bye And Bye"—the latter not the doleful old gospel song that Mark Twain hated but a pretty waltz number by Harry Von Tilzer, who also wrote "On A Sunday Afternoon."

Long Acre Quartet. This quartet made one record, "That Fussy Rag," for the September, 1910, supplement. No information was given concerning the personnel.

Jack Lorimer. He was one of the many British comedians who imitated Harry Lauder. His one record, 10102, "Hello There, McIntyre," was issued in April, 1909.

A. D. Madeira. Madeira was a baritone who was popular for about two years, then faded out of the recording picture. Nobody seems to know what his initials stood for. The late Joe Belmont told me that Madeira was of Spanish-Jewish descent and was born at Gibraltar. He made 20 Edison solo cylinders, beginning in late 1899. His last, 7817, "Tempest Of The Heart," from "Trovatore," was issued in June, 1901. Although Jewish, Madeira sang

(Continued on page 118)

MUSICAL ANTIQUE BOOKS

INTERESTING stories, pictures and research about restored musical antiques, in 52-page book. $1.25 postpaid from — The Musical Museum, Deansboro, N.Y. d128041

PHONOGRAPHS

PHONOGRAPHS repaired: New spare parts for Edison phonographs. Send stamp for list. Phone: (201) 748-8046. — Gerichten, 23 Waldo, Ave., Bloomfield, N.J. 07003 jly123041

ANTIQUE PHONOGRAPH Books, Instruction Manuals, Catalogs for sale. Send 2 stamps for free list.—Allen Koenigsberg, 250 East 45th St., Brooklyn, N.Y. 11203 s6867

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

BANJOS and Gibson Mandolins Wanted. Collector will pay cash for Gibsons in any condition. Also old C F Martin guitars. — Mr. Jay, Box 85, Staten Island, New York, 10304, or call (212) 981-1808. jly3215

EDISON "Idolia" phonograph wanted. Offering $650.00 if in excellent condition. — E. Mathewson, 141 Fourth St., Toronto 14, Ont., Canada. s3403

VIOLIN

VIOLIN—Owned since 1923 with paper label that states "Nicola Amati fecit Cremona sub titulo Santa Teresa 1687." This instrument had been owned by the family of T. M. Bell from 1856 to 1923. $3,450, or trade for signed Tiffany and/or Steuben art glass. — Scarlett, (317) 962-6756. s1673

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

several numbers of a Christian devotional nature, including "Beyond The Gates Of Paradise," "Jerusalem" and "Old Jim's Christmas Hymn." He and Byron G. Harlan made 14 duets, seven of which were made over in gold moulded form.

Madeira is called a bass in the February, 1902, Victor catalog, which lists nine solos by him, including "Calvary" and "The Lost Chord." Six of his Victor numbers were also made for Edison. He and Harry Macdonough made eight duets for Victor, including 1075, "While The Leaves Came Drifting Down," which was remade by Macdonough and S. H. Dudley and remained a standard seller for many years. Madeira obviously didn't grow rich at recording, for the March, 1902, Phonogram said he was no longer singing, but was operating a typewriter business in St. Paul, Minn. All his Edison solos were cut out when the gold moulded process was adopted in 1902, and all his Victors were gone by August, 1904. Judging by the picture, Madeira was a middle-aged man when the Edison group photo was taken in 1900. "Bill" Hayes said, in 1946, "he had passed away some years ago."

Madge Maitland. This vaudeville singer of "coon songs," made one record, "Is Everybody Happy?" (not the song of the same title frequently played by the late Ted Lewis' dance band), which was issued in February, 1906. The record description said: "Miss Maitland's 'coon' dialect has never been excelled by an Edison singer, and she injects an individuality into the song that stamps her as a clever artist. Miss Maitland is well known on the vaudeville stage."

Manhattan Mixed Trio. This group, composed of Elise Stevenson, Irving Gillette (Henry Burr) and Frank C. Stanley, had one record, 10315, "Long, Long Ago," in the February, 1910, Edison supplement. As the Metropolitan Trio, it also did considerable recording for Victor, Columbia and Zonophone.

Cornelia Marvin. Miss Marvin was a contralto who sang with Harry Anthony in No. 10355, "Some Day," issued in May, 1910. She also took part in some of the records by the Edison Mixed Quartet.

Joe Maxwell. Perhaps better known as a song writer than a singer (he wrote "I've Got My Fingers Crossed," which Byron G. Harlan recorded for several companies), Maxwell had a pleasant tenor voice. He made seven four-minute Amberal records and five Standard cylinders.

James McCool. McCool was a tenor who sang with Frank Dumont's minstrels in Philadelphia. He made one two-minute cylinder, "Just Next Door," catalogued in August, 1902. He also sang for Victor and other companies.

ONCE FAMOUS COMEDIAN—Press Eldridge, vaudeville performer, made ten humorous Edison cylinders in 1898 and returned in 1909 for another called "A Confidential Chat." (Right) "Little Amy"—Amy Butler, vaudeville singer, made a cylinder in 1908 of "It's the Pretty Things You Say."

Mabel McKinley. This soprano was a niece of President William McKinley. She wrote at least one famous hit, "Anona," which was among the first of the "Indian songs," and the well-known, "Karama—A Jap Rhapsody," in addition to "Golden Rod," which she recorded for Edison. Her two-minute record, No. 10289, "Ma Little Sweet Sunbeam," issued in January, 1910, was also one of her compositions. Her four-minutes, all issued in 1909, were: 122, "Golden Rod,"; 150, "Anona," and 157, "My Rancho Maid."

August Molinari. A player of the street piano, Molinari cranked the organ on 9615, "Street Piano Medley," issued in August, 1907, while Billy Murray did the descriptive talking. Perhaps he was the "Signor Grindolino," who made the "Harrigan" medley for Victor. Molinari's brother, P. Molinari, recorded a "Street Piano Medley," on Indestructible 1159. Major H. H. Annand says the Molinaris operated a street piano factory in Brooklyn.

Pete Murray. Murray was a vaudeville comedian who made two Standard cylinders, 10223, "I'm Crazy When the Band Begins to Play," issued in September, 1909, and "Home With The Milk In The Morning," No. 1035, March, 1910. He also sang Amberal 207, "Lily Of The Prairie," September, 1909. Murray made at least one Zonophone disc, "I'd Rather Have An Automobile," and in 1915 sang an Edison Diamond Disc, No. 50234, of "On the 5:15," whose reverse was "Happy, That's All," by a blackface dialect comedian, Van Avery. The record was so popular it was necessary to remake it, and it stayed in the catalog as long as Edison was in the record business. (Murray's side was also Blue Amberol 2561). I sometimes hear from Pete Murray's charming granddaughter, Mrs. Ann Mongelli, of Babylon, L. I., N.Y.

Marguerite Newton. Information about this soprano may be found in "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists" for March, 1965.

III. Noll to Price

Agnes Noll. Miss Noll was a soprano whose one cylinder, 10487, "Sweet Red Rose," was issued in April, 1911. The supplement said she was "a soprano well known in church and concert work. Miss Noll possesses a clear, strong, sweet voice, a refined vocal style and a delightfully distinct enunciation—a combination which will undoubtedly insure her immediate favor with Edison owners."

Frank North. Variety reported this comedian's death, July 20, 1960, in Red Bank, N.J., at the age of 89. He had been a partner in a vaudeville act called "Howard and North." North's phonograph specialty seems to have been recording parodies, and he was assigned the 6600 block of Edison cylinder numbers for that purpose. By 1900 he had made parodies on the following, No. 6600, "Family Troubles"; 6602, "A Widow's Plea For Her Son" (afterwards remade by Will F. Denny), and 6603, "Just One Girl"; had sung "Strolling Round the Town" (6004), and made a talking record of "J. W. Kelly's Favorite Story" (6605). He came again in July, 1902, with gold-moulded No. 8093, a parody on "I've Waited Honey, Waited Long For You"; in August No. 8085, "A Parody on 'Goodbye, Dolly Gray,'" and finally, in December, 1902, a parody on "Alice, Where Art Thou?" (8280).

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from preceding page)

North also made, in 1904, a Zonophone, No. 6156, of "Didn't Father Adam Have An Easy Time?"

Arthur Osmond. Another British importation, Osmond was a comedian who, on No. 10209, sang, "I Played My Concertina," in the list for September, 1909.

Fred A. Parker. Parker was a tenor who made two records, both for the July, 1902, list: 8046, "Sometimes, Dear Heart," and 8053, "The Stein Song."

Herbert Payne. This is an assumed name for Ernest Pike, "King Edward's favorite tenor," who was one of the most prolific English recording artists. He made 10125, "Ayesha, My Sweet Egyptian," issued in May, 1909.

Jack Pleasant's. An English dialect singer, Pleasants was known as "The Shy Comedian." His most popular song was "I'm Shy, Mary Ellen." He had a cylinder, "I Said 'Hooray,'" in the January, 1910, Edison list.

Frederic H. Potter. Potter was a tenor whose first record appears to have been "Dearie" (No. 514), which was part of the August, 1906, Zonophone list. The supplement said: "The first record made by Mr. Potter. He has a clear tenor voice, and we feel sure his records will become popular." "Dearie," however, is the only Zonophone I have found by Potter, whose initial Edison, No. 9548, "Let Me Hear The Band Play 'The Girl I Left Behind,'" came out in May, 1907. The New Phonogram said:

"... This record introduces a new tenor singer in Mr. Potter, although he has made over one or two catalog selections originally made by other artists. He has a fine tenor voice and promises to be an excellent addition to the corps of Edison artists."

The one "catalog record" which Potter remade was 8276, "I'll Be With You When The Roses Bloom Again," which originally was sung by Harry Macdonough and issued in December, 1902. Other two-minute Potter cylinders were No. 9588, "You'll Not Be Forgotten, Lady Lou" (July, 1907); No. 9622, "Red Wing" (August, 1907); 9882, "Topeka" (July, 1908—why such a long gap between recordings?) and 10452, "Goodbye, Betty Brown," in which he had the assistance of a male quartet, which probably was the Premier (December, 1910). A quartet, no doubt the Edison, sang in "Red Wing."

Potter's four-minute Amberols were: 366, "Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet" (March, 1910); 405, "Betsy Ross" (April, 1910); 447, "Red Clover" (June, 1910); 541, "Red Wing" (November, 1910), and 562, "Valley Flower" (December, 1910). After that Potter disappeared from the Edison list. In all these four-minute records he is aided by the quartet, and I wish I had thought to ask Billy Murray, whose voice can be clearly heard in "Red Wing," what he remembered of this obscure singer. The New Phonogram's description of the latter song is interesting:

"The phenomenal popularity of 'Red Wing' in the Standard list induced us to respond to the general demand of the public to issue it as an Amberol number. In doing so we have added greatly to its attractiveness by the novel manner in which it is arranged—the band alternating with Mr. Potter and chorus with band accompaniment. If you enjoyed this song on the Standard list your appreciation of it as an Amberol record will be infinitely greater, for the amount of entertainment is more than doubled. Mr. Potter sings with spirit and style and both chorus and band accompaniment are all that could be desired."

When an Edison Diamond Disc of "Red Wing," by Walter Scanlan and chorus, was issued in 1927, the style of the Potter four-minute cylinder was followed. The disc begins with the orchestra playing Leo Friedman's "Sun Dance" before the first strains of "Red Wing" are heard. Having sung "Red Wing" in Standard, Amberol and Blue Amberol form gives Potter a claim to making one of the most popular Edison cylinders—perhaps the most popular, although such a claim could well be contested by "The Preacher And The Bear," "Casey Jones," "Rainbow," "Silver Bell," Fred Van Eps' "Dixie Medley" and several others.

Potter also made, in 1910, a pair of two-minute Indestructible cylinders: 1350, "Red Clover," and 1362, "He's A College Boy."

Myra Price. I can't find anything to indicate whether this singer was a soprano or a contralto. Her six cylinders were made from June to November, 1901, and none was taken over into the gold moulded list. They were: 7836, "Then You'll Remember Me"; 7849, "I Dreamt That I Dwelt In Marble Halls"; 7854, "Home, Sweet Home"; 7886, "Last Rose Of Summer"; 7924, "Baby Mine," and 7972, "Because I Love You, Dear." These titles seem to belong to the soprano repertoire.

IV. Raymond to Van York

Maude Raymond. A popular comedienne, was a contemporary of Clarice Vance, May Irwin and Josie Sadler and a forerunner of Sophie Tucker. Her first Edison cylinder was Amberol 505, "Phoebe Brown," issued in September, 1910. The description said: "Everybody who is at all familiar with high class vaudeville and musical comedy knows that Maude Raymond is one of the country's bright particular 'stars.' Her work is always pleasing, due especially to her natural buoyant, vivacious manner and the amount of energy and intelligence she puts into her work."

In January, 1911, Miss Raymond's only two-minute cylinder, No. 10463, "Rag Baby's Gwine To Be Mine," went on sale. The supplement spoke of "Maude Raymond, the perennial vaudeville and musical comedy favorite. If you have heard her, you want this record; if you haven't, better get the record and become acquainted with one of the real stars of the American stage."

Maude Raymond also made some Victor records: 5671, "The Dusky Salome"; 5678, "Bye Bye, My Caroline" and 5715, Good-Bye, Molly Brown." The "Caroline" song was coupled on double-faced disc 16780 with "Take Me Out For A Joy Ride," by Billy Murray and the Haydn Quartet.

William M. Redmond. He was a tenor who was a duet partner of Murray's before Billy began making records. Redmond sang eight Standard cylinders from September, 1902, to May, 1904. The most popular was 8118, "In The Good Old Summer Time," which Murray remade in 1906. As late as 1916, Redmond did some singing in the choruses of Edison discs.

Leon Rice. A tenor, Rice made one record, No. 10479, "When The Roses Bloom," issued in March, 1911. The New Phonogram gave this information concerning him:

"Mr. Rice, who here contributes his first record to the Edison catalog, is a singer with an international reputation. Beginning with a recital at the St. Louis World's Fair in 1904, he has made 1,500 appearances in the United States, Canada and England, and his audiences during that time have aggregated more than 2,000,000 people. He possesses a pure tenor voice of tremendous power, remarkable evenness and great depth of feeling . . ."

June Rossmore. Miss Rossmore was a singer who made one solo record, No. 10062, "I Don't Like You," issued in February, 1909. She was introduced as "a new artist, who is well known on the vaudeville stage. Miss Rossmore sings . . . in a different style from any other singer now in our catalogs, introducing some of the effects that have made her such a success in vaudeville." The comedienne also sang the refrain of Byron G. Harlan's "child ballad," No. 10151, "Schoolmates," for the June, 1909, list.

Fred G. Rover. A tenor in a vaudeville quartet, Rover made one record, 8911, "Those Songs My Mother Used To Sing," which went on sale in February, 1905.

Andrew Schneider and Franklyn Wallace. This duet team recorded 8555, "Tell Me With Your Eyes," issued in December, 1903. I know nothing of Schneider except that he was a baritone prominent in concert work, but Wallace, a tenor, sang in minstrels and vaudeville and had a music publishing business in Newark, N.J. He made eleven two-minute cylinders in 1902-03.

Louis Schnepel. Schnepel was a baritone with three records of the 1899-1901 era to his credit: 8500, "Answer," originally made by Madeira and still later remade, when gold moulding came in, by J. W. Myers; 5801, "For You," and 5802, "Daddy."

Samuel Siegel. I really doubt that Sam Siegel belongs here, for he was recognized as the greatest mandolin player of the 1890's and early 1900's, and made records for virtually all the companies. As late as 1926, he did several electrically recorded numbers for Columbia. Siegel was for many years president of the Siegel-Myers School of Music in Chicago, which gave correspondence courses in playing the more popular instruments. He made ten Edison two-minute solo records, beginning in August, 1900, and continuing through October, 1905. He also played a duet with a guitarist, M. Lloyd Wolf, 9014, "Autumn Evening," issued in June, 1905. He and William Smith, another guitar player, made Amberol No. 30, "Castilian Echoes"; later, he made two duets with Roy H. Butin, and he made one Blue Amberol duet each with Butin and a ukulele player, Marie Caveny.

(Continued on next page)

J. Scott Skinner. A Scottish fiddler, Skinner made record No. 10402, "Berlin Reels," issued in August 1910.

Will N. Steele. Steele was a monologist who made eleven comic talking records, from August, 1900, to March, 1903. Most of his records were about a Jewish character, "Einstein," who may be considered the predecessor of "Cohen." Steele's photograph can be seen in the 1900 Edison group picture.

Sallie Stembler. Miss Stembler was a vaudeville comedienne who for a generation or more entertained audiences with laughing specialties. Probably her first record was a Victor, 2466, "Laughing Song," which came out about January, 1904. In March, 1909, Edison issued 10081, "Ev'rything's Funny To Me," with the statement:

"This record is by a new Edison performer, Miss Sally Stembler, who has a high soprano voice finely adapted for recording. The title of this song should convey some idea of its nature. It is one of the most infectious laughing songs ever written. Music, Theo. H. Northrup; words, Charles Noel Douglas."

Genuine old-timers among magazine readers may like to be reminded that Douglas was a bedridden man who for many years edited a department in Comfort Magazine, published at Augusta, Me., and founded Comfort's League of Cousins. He had two nurses whom he called "Maria" and "Billy, the Goat."

A second two-minute cylinder by the "laughing girl," No. 10119, "Oh, La, La, La, La, La," was issued in May, 1909. She was then unheard from until October, 1918, when she made Blue Amberol 3587, a four-minute version of "Ev'rything's Funny To Me." And in 1923, she and Edward Meeker, with the assistance of a cornet player, made one of the most popular Diamond Discs, No. 51063, "Henry's Music Lesson" (an imitation of the Okeh Laughing Record), which was coupled with one of Mr. Edison's favorite old-timers, "Porters On A Pullman Train," by Collins and Harlan.

I remember reading an article in The Billboard quoting her brother as saying that on their first trip to Europe, "Sallie cried all the way over and laughed all the way back"—probably getting into practice for her vaudeville engagements.

George M. Stricklett. This tenor was a puzzling in-and-out performer. He seems to have made no solo cylinders, and only two duets with another man—those already mentioned with Matt Keefe. Most of his work was as a quartet member. He sang in the Invincible and Lotus Quartets managed by Frank C. Stanley; in 1908, when a new ensemble was needed to replace the Edison (Haydn) Quartet, which had become exclusive to Victor, he became second tenor of the new Knickerbocker group whose other members were John Young, first tenor; Frederick Wheeler, baritone, and Gus Reed, bass. He also sang three duets with "Miss Chappell" (Edith Chapman): No. 8395, "Life's Dream Is O'er" (May, 1903); 8446, "Farewell, Beloved" (July, 1903), and 8601, "Far Away" (February, 1904). The latter was later remade by "Harry Anthony" (Young) and Daisy Boulais.

LAUGHING SPECIALIST—For more than a generation Sallie Stembler entertained vaudeville audiences with her laughing songs. She made Edison records in 1909, 1918 and 1923.

Albert C. Sweet. Some years ago I read of the death of this cornet player and am sure I clipped the news story, but can't find it. In a book entitled "We Called It Culture" he is mentioned as a native of Chicago and the conductor of an orchestra that filled Chautauqua engagements. Sweet was a very young man when he made his Edison cylinders: 7190, "Russian Fantasia" (1899); 7294, "Prismatic Polka" (1899); 7411, "In Happy Moments" (1900); 7436, "Sea Flower Polka" (1900), and 7604, "Love's Old Sweet Song" (November, 1900). He is in the 1900 Edison group photo.

B. Russell Throckmorton. An eloquist at the turn of the century, Throckmorton made much the same sort of records that Harry E. Humphrey did a decade or so later. Four of his cylinders appear in the October, 1899, catalog: 4857, "Columbus"; 3858, Kipling's poem, "The White Man's Burden"; 3859, "Hoch der Kaiser," and 3860, "Shamus O'Brien." Two others—7244, "The Declaration Of The Free," and 7351, "Barbara Frietchie" came toward the end of 1899. Throckmorton may be seen in the group photo.

Stella Tobin. She was one of the few performers who recorded jointly for Edison and Columbia rather than Edison and Victor. She was the wife of Paul Southe, who made some terrible Columbia records, and they appeared together in vaudeville for more than 20 years. Southe was found dead, of a heart attack, at the age of 58, in his New York hotel room, on August 22, 1946. His wife apparently had already died.

Stella Tobin's first Edison cylinder, 9758, "Will He Answer Goo-Goo?" was listed for February, 1908. Others were: 9824, "Tipperary" (May, 1908), and the third and last, 9862, "Daddy's Little Tomboy Girl" (June, 1908). Like most vaudevillians, she did not make good records and hers had little sale. She made two Columbias in 1909-10: A647, "Now I Have To Call Him Father" (coupled with "Say No, That's All," by Arthur Collins), and A787, "I'm Going To Do What I Please" (with "Wild Cherries Rag," by Eddie Morton).

Theo Van Yox. This tenor was advertising in The Etude in the early 1930's, so he had a long career. He made a pair of two-minute cylinders. The first, No. 9102, "I Wait For Thee," was issued in October, 1905. The New Phonogram commented:

"This sentimental song by C. B. Hawley and Ida Whipple Benham introduces to the phonograph clientele a new singer in Mr. Van Yox, who is one of America's best oratorio and concert tenors, and is tenor soloist of St. Thomas' Church, New York City."

A month later Van Yox was represented by 9123, Frank E. Tours' familiar setting of Rudyard Kipling's "Mother O' Mine." The description commented: "Mr. Van Yox's fine voice is winning him a host of phonographic friends," but this was his last record.

V. Waterous to Wynn

Allen Waterous. He was a tenor whose first cylinder, No. 9814, "The Message Of The Eyes," came out in April, 1908. The New Phonogram committed a boo-boo by referring to him as a baritone and saying:

"A sentimental song by the composer of 'Love Me and the World is Mine' (Ernest R. Ball), introducing a new baritone soloist to our catalog, although Mr. Waterous has sung duets with Mrs. Waterous."

The Waterous who had sung duets with his wife was Herbert Waterous, and The Phonogram ran a correction in May, when the tenor's next record, No. 9819, was issued, by saying: "Allen Waterous, by the way, is a brother of the Mr. Waterous who has sung duets with his wife, and not the duet singer, as stated last month." He made two more cylinders: 9835, "Summer Time" (June, 1908) and "If I Had A Thousand Lives To Live" (July, 1908). Thus his recording career covered four months.

Mr. And Mrs. Herbert Waterous.

(Continued on next page)

Mr. Waterous, who was sometimes called a baritone and sometimes a bass, was a distinguished light opera singer, specializing in Gilbert and Sullivan, but later becoming a member of the De Koven Opera Company. The September 2, 1947, Variety contained this note of his death:

"Herbert L. Waterous, basso of the grand and light opera stages for many years, who was best known for his Gilbert and Sullivan roles, died last Friday, August 29, at his home in Woodstock, N.Y. He was 78.

"Waterous was born in Flint, Mich., and began his stage career early in life. He sang with the Metropolitan Opera for two seasons before going to light opera, also singing with Fritz Scheff, appearing with the De Koven Opera Company in 'Robin Hood' and touring in concerts and recitals. He went to London in 1926 to sing the role of Dr. Engel in Shubert's production of 'The Student Prince.' In 1929 he was seen in New York in 'Lady Fingers' and in 'Naughty Marietta.'

"Of his many Gilbert & Sullivan roles, Pooh-Bah in 'The Mikado' was the one he was best known for and most often appeared in, supporting such light opera stars of the period as DeWolf Hopper, William Danforth and Frank Moulan. In 1936 Waterous appeared with Danforth and Moulan in a revival of 'The Mikado' at the Majestic. Other G&S operettas in which he had often appeared were 'The Pirates of Penzance,' 'Iolanthe,' 'H. M. S. Pinafore' and 'The Yeomen of the Guard.'

"Surviving him are his widow, Mrs. Jayne Herbert Waterous, with whom he appeared in concerts and recitals, and two sons, Allen and Donald Waterous."

Neither Mr. nor Mrs. Waterous made any Edison solos. Their first duet, 9731, "O Moment That I Bless," was issued in January, 1908, with the comment:

"This attractive selection of the semi-operatic class introduces two new artists to our catalog. Mr. Waterous has a rich baritone voice, and Mrs. Waterous sings in a soprano voice, which shows to particular advantage in the duets."

Their next regularly issued Standard cylinder was 9969, "Ecstasy," was announced for October, 1908. The description said:

"This record will recall the ovation won by the same singers in 'O Moment That I Bless.' 'Ecstasy' is a glorious semi-classic love song and has a charm that constantly grows on one. The record will prove a fine model for ambitious students of concerted singing."

Mr. and Mrs. Waterous also remade 8258, "O That We Two Were Maying," which, sung by Corinne Morgan and Frank C. Stanley, had been issued in December, 1902. When the first four-minute Amberol cylinders were announced in October, 1908, they recorded a longer version of the same song on No. 44. The description is interesting:

"As a two-minute record by the same singers this selection won the distinction of being one of the most favored duets in the Edison catalog. The song is now given complete, the singers are in better voice than when the two-minute record was made, and the recording process has been greatly improved. The record, therefore is in every way better than its famous predecessor and should meet with a phenomenal demand."

Mrs. Waterous and a contralto, Mia Weber, sang a duet in the April, 1909, list: No. 10113, "Jesus, Thy Name I Love."

While a member of the De Koven Opera Company in 1916, Herbert Waterous made the following 12-inch

PETE MURRAY
Tenor

EDISON RECORD TALENT

BESSIE WYNN
Soprano

EDISON RECORD TALENT

"VARIETY" STARS—Pete Murray and Bessie Wynn did not sing with each other, but both were popular on the vaudeville stage around 1910 and for years afterward, and both made Edison two-minute cylinders.

Pathé records:

"50004, 'Asleep in the Deep' and 'Down Deep Within the Cellar'; 50006, 'The Indifferent Mariner' and 'Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep'; 50007, Robin Hood—'The Armourer's Song' and Robin Hood—'The Tinkers' Chorus' (De Koven Opera Company); 50008, 'Gypsy Love Song' and 'The Indifferent Mariner'; and on 50010, he sang 'The Crow Song' from Robin Hood, with the assistance of the De Koven Male Chorus, while on the other side Cora Tracey, contralto, was heard in 'The Legend of the Chimes' with the De Koven Mixed Chorus."

Harry West. Mr. West was a comedian, whose one solo, 8445, "I Could Love You In A Steam Heat Flat," was part of the July, 1903, list. He and Billy Murray did the talking in 8878, "Darkey's Dream" by the Edison Military Band, issued in January, 1905. I never heard Billy mention West, and know nothing of him.

Walter Wheatley. An American tenor, had a solo, 8497, "Drink To Me Only With Thine Eyes," in the list for September, 1903. More than a decade later, while singing with the Century Opera Company, he made some Columbia discs.

Hallie White. This completely obscure lady fascinates me, although I have never heard the one soprano solo she made, 8289, "I Am The Merry Postilion," issued in January, 1903. I imagine her a joyous-faced, sparkling-eyed, black-haired girl, who had a fine time making the record. I wonder if she really did enjoy it—and how long she has been dead.

James H. White. This comedian took over the "Casey" records that had been made by Russell Hunting after Hunting went to England to live in 1898. White made seven of the "Casey" series, beginning with 7255, "Casey At Dinny Murphy's Wake" in late 1899, and ending with 8360, "Casey And His Gang Of Irish Laborers," in early 1903. White then, like Hunting, went to England. He may be seen in the 1900 group photo. Before making records, Jim White was a photographer for the early Edison movies.

George S. Williams. This was an assumed name used by Frank C. Stanley (William Stanley Grinstead) in playing a banjo accompaniment in some of Arthur Collins' turn of the century "coon song" records.

Professor D. Wormser. A zither player whose Edison recording activities began in 1899 and continued to January, 1903. Wormser also made records for other companies and played for Victor as late as 1913. The professor was born in 1850 in Landau, South Germany.

Bessie Wynn. This comedienne was described, when her first record was issued in January, 1910, as "winsome Bessie Wynn, one of the best known and most popular stars of the vaudeville stage." The cylinder was 10278, "It's Hard To Find A Real Nice Man." A four-minute Amberol, No. 346, "My Little Piece Of Dresden China," was announced in February. Then came two-minute 10329, "Not For Me," in March, and 10441, "I'd Love To But I Won't," in November. Edison had predicted Bessie Wynn's records would be big sellers, but these were all she made.

And that concludes this list of Edison's more or less "obscure" two-minute recording artists. I hope it has been interesting and, at least to some extent, informative.

The End

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Royalty and Recorded Sound

By JIM WALSH

(NOTE: This survey is dedicated to a captivating example of the Blood Royal: Princess Christy Faye Jenkins, cherished feline companion of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Jenkins, Rose Hill, Virginia. Princess Christy loves to sit in "Miss Rocky," her favorite rocking chair and listen to recorded music.)

I. Two Kinds of Royalty

"Royalty" is a word for which, over the years, recording artists have entertained an almost reverential regard—especially when it is written in the plural as "royalties." Belief that a royalty is of well-nigh sacred significance especially characterized those exalted performers whose records were listed in the "Red Seal" or "celebrity" class.

In this sense, of course, "royalty" denotes a sum paid to the artist as a percentage of the retail selling price of the records he makes. Set at five, ten, fifteen percent, or even higher, it frequently amounts to a considerable sum. Enrico Caruso, John McCormack, Alma Gluck, Amelita Galli-Curci, Fritz Kreisler and others of their high rank felt no sense of insult when they received annual royalty payments that, for the two tenors at least, sometimes amounted to several hundred thousand dollars a year. As for Gluck, it has often been told that she built a house costing more than $100,000 and paid for it from the royalties of one record alone, her "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny."

Huge royalty payments were not a feature of the earlier days of sound recording. Caruso did not receive them until after his reputation as the world's most popular operatic tenor was firmly established. In 1902, when an expert for the Gramophone Company of England visited Italy and engaged him to record ten numbers, he asked, or was offered, the equivalent of $100 each, and Gramophone officials indignantly cabled to their man:

"Fee exorbitant. Forbid you to record."

He recorded, anyway, and the records sold so well that Gramophone and its American affiliate, Victor, had no reason to regret paying the "exorbitant fee." A few years later Caruso was receiving, through his contract and royalty payments, thousands of dollars for each disc he made.

"Popular" artists were seldom showered with such largesse, although their records probably outsold those of the "classical" group ten to one. If they "free-lanced," the more plebian performers were paid a specified amount each time they made a record; if under contract they received yearly salaries paid on the installment plan. But seldom did their earnings approach the astronomical sums that cheered the Carusos and McCormacks. Yet sometimes they did extremely well after establishing their appeal.

ROYAL GROUP. This photo of Queen Victoria (Center); her son, the Prince of Wales, who became King Edward VII, and his wife, Princess Alexandra, was taken March 10, 1863, on the young couple's wedding day. Queen Victoria made one cylinder record, which she ordered destroyed after it was played. Edward seems to have made no records. Alexandra had poor hearing but enjoyed recorded music.

Gene Austin, for one, told me he "never made any real money" out of recording until his Victor discs became so remarkably popular that the company rewarded him by giving him an exclusive contract with generous royalty payments. The discs on which he received royalties were those upon which he sang both sides. Obviously, he made small fortunes out of "My Blue Heaven," "Ramona" and their couplings. Brunswick paid Al Jolson fabulous amounts, newspaper accounts of the 1920's indicate.

Certainly, it was the distribution of mouth-watering royalties that caused the majority of the world's most highly publicized singers and instrumentalists to record for Victor, or perhaps Columbia or Brunswick, rather than—as an example—for Edison, whose process had superior tonal fidelity. But the sale of Edison Diamond Discs, compared to those of Victor records, was small, and the thick "platters" could not be sold in sufficiently large quantities to offer most performers tempting royalties. Many of the Edison artists may have been as good, or better, than the extravagantly advertised coterie who restricted their services to Victor, but their names lacked comparable selling appeal. And most of Edison's luminaries "jumped" to Victor or some other company as soon as possible. Even Sergei Rachmaninoff, the Russian composer-pianist, signed an Edison contract in 1918 only because most of the Victor manufacturing plant was being used for war work and "His Master's Voice" wasn't taking on expensive new artists. Unable to arrange a Victor contract, his manager insisted that Rachmaninoff be exclusive to Edison for only two years. The virtuoso then went to Victor for much more money.

Most of the traffic was from Edison to Victor, not the other way. Artists like Frieda Hempel, who quit Victor for Edison, simply because she was dissatisfied with Victor recording and wanted to have Edison "Re-Create" her voice, were the exception. She disregarded the money question for the sake of having greater justice done to her singing. With nearly all others the money was the important thing and tone quality was secondary.

The purpose of this article is not primarily however, to discuss financial arrangements between artists and recording companies, but to tell of the phonograph's association with another type of royalty—the members of reigning families in Europe and elsewhere who owned sound reproducing devices and in many instances themselves made records. There are two kinds of royalties, and we shall now be concerned with men and women who were royal by inheritance rather than with payments of professional performers.

II. "Records by Rulers"

It strikes me that a courteous way of beginning our discussion of records by, or associated with, royalty will be to start with the "small fry" among kings and queens, then advance up to those who were more high and mighty.

In the August, 1910, Sound Wave and Talking Machine Record, published in London, I found an article that fits extremely well into this plan. Headed "Records By Rulers," it reads:

"Who would think that a king would unbend so far as to make a record for commercial sale? Yet we find in the Edison catalog two records—'Akahi Hoi.' No.

"MOST BEAUTIFUL GRAPHONE." This picture is reproduced from The Columbia Record of February, 1905. It shows what was termed "the most beautiful graphophone ever constructed," which had just been sent to the Emperor of Japan.

11504, and 'Koleo,' No. 11501, both by King Kalakana of the Hawaiian Islands. Whilst it is true that King Kalakana's dominions do not stretch from 'Pole to Pole,' yet he is a king in very truth, and we believe we are correct in stating that these are the only records made for sale by a royal personage. There is also one, No. 11502, 'Moani Ke Ala,' made by Prince Leliokoku, who, we understand, is heir apparent to the Hawaiian throne.

"The list of Edison foreign selections contains no fewer than 13 records by past or present heads of Republics. No. 20315, an address made by President Diaz of the Mexican Republic, to Senor (Thomas A.) Edison, is especially interesting, in view of the fact that it was the first record made for commercial purposes by the head of an important State. The remaining 12 are by the President of the United States, Mr. William H. Taft, and they deal with every phase of American life and politics."

The Sound Wave's belief that the Hawaiian king's records were the only ones made by royalty for commercial sale was not quite correct. Queen Elizabeth of Rumania (1843-1916), a German by birth and daughter of Prince Herman of Wied, was an author who wrote under the pen name of "Carmen Sylva." In 1903 the queen made H.M.V. record No. 1235 on which she recited her poem, "A Friend." Marguerita Sylva, the Edison soprano, took the "Sylva" in her professional name from the Queen's pseudonym.

The Hawaiians are a musical people, and probably Queen Liliuokalani would have made records if the phonograph had been available in her time. As it is, she is credited with composing "Aloha Oe" in 1878, the year after Edison introduced his first tin-foil playing phonograph. Actually, Her Royal Highness showed little originality as a music writer, for part of the melody of "Aloha Oe" is taken from a now forgotten ballad, "The Rock By the Sea," which Charles Crozat Converse wrote in 1852. The remainder of the tune comes from a favorite college song, "There's Music in the Air," composed by George Frederick Root in 1854.

A later presumably authentic member of Hawaiian royalty who did a great deal of recording was Prince Lei Lani, who was also known professionally as E. K. Rose. The prince was a member of the original Hawaiian Quintet that made a series of Victor records in 1913, and for a few years after that he was employed by Victor as a "demonstrator." Since Victor was unable to give "tone tests" like those made familiar by Edison, the prince would visit Victor dealer's stores or, sometimes, go to homes of distinguished persons and compare his voice with the recorded tones of John McCormack and Ernestine Schumann-

(Continued on page 115)

FOR SALE: Heavy stock record sleeves (40 lb. Craft 10" size.) Prices: 1-100 each 7c; 100-300 each 6c; 300-1000 each 5c; 1000 up each 4c. Post. extra. Write for rates. -- Quality Record Jackets, 2512 West Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif. 90016 d3886

MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

MUSIC BOXES! Fantastic large illustrated catalogue of wholesale music boxes, circus organs, nickelodeons, photo-players, reproducing pianos, other automatic instruments. Plus books, recordings, musical gifts. $2 postpaid; $5 subscription ($12 value!) to next 6 issues. Money-back guarantee if not delighted! — David Bowers, Box 1669D, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90210 mh64051

ORGANS—MELODEONS

REED ORGANS, melodions, bought, sold repaired. Reeds tuned, revoiced replacements. — C. H. Gunzinger, Box 276, Williamsville, Vt. 05362 o6875

MUSICAL ANTIQUE BOOKS

INTERESTING stories, pictures and research about restored musical antiques, in 52-page book. $1.25 postpaid from — The Musical Museum, Deansboro, N.Y. d128041

PHONOGRAPHS

PHONOGRAPHS repaired: New spare parts for Edison phonographs. Send stamp for list. Phone: (201) 748-8046. — Gerichten, 23 Waldo Ave., Bloomfield, N.J. 07003 jly128041

FOR SALE: Lovely Victor phonograph with large morning glory wooden horn. VIO 111 serial No. 24552. Excellent condition $1,000. — R. L. Jefferies, P.O. Box 165, Harrisonburg, Va. Phone 434-2777. o1042

ANTIQUA PHONOGRAPH Books, Instruction Manuals, Catalogs for sale. Send 2 stamps for free list. — Allen Koenigsberg, 3400 Snyder Ave., Brooklyn, N.Y. 11203 mh5867

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

WANTED TO BUY: Schoenhut baby grand piano, must have 15 black keys, 22 white keys, old original finish, flat metal bar action like a xylophone action, should have 2 sets of bars one for the black keys and one for the white. State price and condition. Will not make offer. Phone 507-334-7772 or write — Stoekel's Antique Dolls, 615 N.W. Third St., Fort Lauderdale, Minn. 55021 d30401

SHEET MUSIC

SHEET MUSIC, choose from thousands of popular, late 1800's to date. We also buy. — McNeill, 1117 So. Taylor Ave., Oak Park, Ill. 60304 d3863

ALL MATERIAL relative to history of dancing. Lithograph music covers, ballet scores, playbills, photographs, autographs. — George Verdak, Butler University, Indianapolis, Ind. 46208 d3253

(Continued from page 38)

Heink to "prove" that it was identical, in part of its range, with the tones of the two more famous singers. Edison dealers' publications never tired of jeering at "this ridiculous performance," as they termed it, and on one occasion told of Lei Lani's calling on the Governor of a Mid-Western State, giving his variant of a "tone test" and trying to sell the executive a Victrola. The Governor told him, however, he had already decided he wanted nothing but a New Edison.

After ending his Victor association, the prince became one of the popular Okeh recording artists. His coupling of "Love's Old Sweet Song," and "Red Wing" sold especially well, and the acoustic version was remade electrically. Lei Lani's command of English seems to have been a bit imperfect, for in the first song he pronounced "twilight" as "twi-leet" and "weary" as "weh-ry."

Another small-time member of royalty who recorded was "Princess Wahtawaso," daughter of a Penobscot Indian chief. The princess made a number of Victor educational records. When she died at the age of 86 in Bangor, Maine, on March 19, 1969, the Associated Press gave her name as Lucy Poolaw, but she was always known as Princess Wahtawaso.

III. Prince George's Joke On Papa

One of the most amusing stories dealing with royalty and recorded music is that of the joke played by Prince George of Greece upon his revered father, King George. The King, a Dane by birth, was a brother of Queen Alexandra of England and was what today would be called a "playboy." He never permitted the duties of his exalted position to interfere with having a good time, and performed the minimum of high-level labor. Prince George was perfectly aware of his sire's shortcomings, and, as related in the Talking Machine News, of London, for January 1, 1908:

"When some English warships were cruising in the Mediterranean, Greece's 'Sailor Prince' visited one of them. The officers set going a gramophone which, among other tunes, played 'Everybody Works But Father.' Prince George, who, like his father, speaks English and half the languages of Europe, was highly delighted with the air and words. 'I must get that record,' he exclaimed, 'and play it for my father. I know it will suit him down to the ground.'

"The Prince obtained the record, and gave a dinner in Athens to some of his intimate friends, at which he invited his father to be present. After the banquet a concert was arranged, and Prince George worked some gramophone records into the program. 'Everybody Works But Father' was inserted first. Everybody present who understood English appreciated the criticism of King George, but no one laughed more heartily at the joke than he did."

Alas! the jovial "good time King's" life ended in tragedy. A Greek named Schinas assassinated him at Salonica on March 18, 1913.

"Everybody Works But Father" began as an English music hall comic song written by Charles W. McClintock.

It came to the attention of Jean C. Havez, "advance man" for the Lew Dockstader Minstrels, who rewrote the words for American use and, on this side of the Atlantic, was credited with being the song's composer. It was one of the biggest hits Dockstader ever had, and Columbia had him record it. Billy Murray made it for Victor and Bob Roberts for Edison and Zonophone. I wonder what recorded version Prince George played for his royal father. Most likely it was none of the American renditions, but one made in England for the Gramophone Company by some popular comedian such as Burt Shepard.

IV. Queen Victoria's Broken Record

We come now to that most exalted lady, Victoria, Queen of Great Britain and Ireland and Empress of India. The dumpy but doughty little queen was born in 1819, so was 58 years of age when Edison produced his initial tinfoil instrument in 1877. She had been on the throne exactly 40 years when the first phonograph made its funny squeaking noises, and she was to be queen for more than 63 years before she died in 1901.

If you have ever wondered what your chances are of finding a record containing the sound of Queen Victoria's voice, the answer is that the chance is exactly as great as that of finding an authentic cylinder by Jenny Lind—which is none at all. Jenny Lind died in 1887 when there was not a single cylinder recording instrument anywhere in England, which for many years had been her home, so she had no chance to record. The Queen made one record, but gave instructions that it should be smashed immediately after being played, and her orders were put into effect.

The Edison Phonograph Monthly for February, 1904, gave the following account of Queen Victoria's one essay into record making:

"Sir John Harrington—(for he has been knighted by King Edward)—is the only person who ever succeeded in inducing the late Queen Victoria to talk into a phonograph. And she did this reluctantly, merely because he explained to her the immense weight that a message from her to the Emperor of Abyssinia conveyed to her in that fashion would have upon the monarch of Ethiopia."

"Queen Victoria, however, stipulated that once her message had been delivered to the negus the record should be destroyed, and pledged Sir John Harrington to see to this in person. Menelik was so delighted at hearing the Queen's voice that he promptly demanded that the record should be handed over to him. But Sir John naturally was obliged to defer to the commands of his royal mistress, and, taking hold of the record, he stamped it to pieces in the presence of the negus."

It seems rather hard-hearted of the Queen to deny the world even one record of her high-pitched voice, but of course the soft wax cylinder would have worn out or been broken long before now. In a long letter published by the Sound Wave for July, 1910, J. E. Hough, the crusty and peppery head of the Edison Bell Company, gives some further history concerning Queen Victoria's recorded message to the negus of Abyssinia:

"... Her Most Gracious Majesty, Queen Victoria, imposed a drastic condition when she made a speech upon a record to be forwarded to Menelik, the King of Abyssinia. It may be remembered that some years ago, closely following upon the Italian defeat at Addis-Ababa, the favor of the Ethiopian Emperor was sought by both the French and the English. A special envoy was sent to the Abyssinian Court, and by the influence of the Earl of Denbigh (at the time chairman of the Edison Bell Company), the company provided a phonograph which formed one of the presents to the Emperor, and her Majesty the Queen spoke a diplomatic message, dictated by the late Lord Salisbury, in which the name of Menelik and his Queen was embodied, but the drastic condition was that after listening to the message, the record was to be destroyed, and the injunction was imposed upon the honor of the Earl of Denbigh, which injunction was faithfully carried out—the record was destroyed and no copies of any kind, or any publication of the matter it contained, was made. Thus the nation has been deprived of what might have been considered a valuable memento of her late Majesty."

I have what I suspect is one of the few surviving records of "God Save the Queen," as compared to the more familiar "God Save the King," made during Victoria's reign. It is a seven-inch, single-faced Berliner, No. 1800, sung by George J. Gaskin, a tenor who was born in Northern Ireland and felt that area's traditional loyalty to the British crown. Its latest patent date is October 29, 1895, so it presumably was made in 1896. Incidentally, the battle of Addis Ababa, in which the Abyssinians badly defeated the invading Italians, occurred late that year, so Queen Victoria's spoken greeting to Menelik probably was recorded early in 1897, when European diplomats were courting the favor of his government.

V. Queen Wilhelmina's Demonstration

Another feminine European ruler who had an association with recorded music was Queen Wilhelmina of Holland. Details of a demonstration to which the Queen listened were published in the June, 1905, Talking Machine News:

"General gratification was felt in talking machine circles some time since, when it was announced that some half-dozen Royalties, including Queen Alexandra and the King of Spain, had invested in gramophones for their own use. It is this sort of tribute that raises the talker in the estimation of the general public. Many other people, too, in high places hold it in esteem, among them the Pope, King Menelik, the Shah of Persia and Queen Wilhelmina of Holland."

"Mr. P. A. Smithurst, now of the Russell Hunting Record Company, had the privilege, when with the World's Phonograph Company at the Hague, of playing some records to Queen Wilhelmina."

"In '95 I exhibited a machine and played records to Queen Wilhelmina. She was then, of course, very young—about 16 only."

"She spoke English?"
"Very little, and that little not very well, but I had a fair amount of Dutch in those days, though I have forgotten most of it since, and we got on very well."

"And the records—of what kind were they?"

"Various: Band pieces, Casey's, and some Dutch records by the Dutch Dan Leno, a comedian whose name I can remember, but would find it hard to pronounce and quite impossible to spell."

(Continued on next page)

But that did not affect his records, which were very good ones."

"And your impressions of the Queen personally?"

"Pleasant and frank in manner and, as you know, extremely attractive in her personal appearance."

Wilhelmina Helena Pauline Maria of Orange-Nassau was born at the Hague on August 31, 1880, and became Queen when her father, William III, died November 23, 1890, but her mother, Adelheid Emma Wilhelmina Theresia, served as queen-regent until September 6, 1898, when her 18-year-old daughter was "inaugurated." The Queen consequently was only 15 when recorded music was played for her in 1895. Wilhelmina, who died in 1962, remained Queen until she abdicated in 1948 in favor of her daughter, Princess Juliana.

Russell Hunting's "Casey" monologues were spoken in such a thick Irish accent that I find them hard to understand, so it is hard to perceive any reason why they were played for a tenn-age Dutch girl, who had "very little" English. What amusement or enjoyment could she find in them? But "Casey" cylinders were also among those chosen to entertain King Edward VII of England when a phonograph was demonstrated for him.

VI. A Concert for King Edward

The burly, bearded Edward succeeded his mother on the throne of England when she died in 1901 and was destined to serve only eight years before his death led to the crowning of his eldest son as George V. Edward was already in his sixtieth year when the aged Queen finally relinquished the sceptre.

In May, 1903, the first issue of the Talking Machine News appeared in London, and page six displayed an article, "King Edward and the Phonograph." It was headed by a reproduction of a telegram sent by an Edison Bell Company representative, named Limb, to the contumacious, irascible James E. Hough, head of the concern which was then at 39 Charing Cross Road, London. The hand-written "post office telegram" dated March 31, 1903, said:

"Showed His Majesty phonograph for one hour last night. He stated the machine and records were the best he had heard. LIMB."

The article then gave a list of the 48 concert size cylinder records played for the King. (Question: How could 48 cylinders have been played in the hour that the Edison Bell man was allotted for his demonstration?) Since the recital apparently took place on the evening of March 30, the Talking Machine News showed considerable enterprise by giving its readers an account of the event in that first issue dated May 1. Here is what was said:

"It is by no means generally known that His Majesty, in common with his subjects delights in the phonograph. On the occasion of the Royal visit to Portugal a representative of the Edison Bell Company was commanded to supply a special machine of the Concert size for use on the Royal yacht, the 'Victoria and Albert.'

"The phonograph, which was specially made for the Coronation time, but its delivery delayed owing to the King's illness, was highly finished throughout; the machine was nickel-plated instead of janned; the trumpet was also nickel-plated and burnished.

"The machine was duly installed on board, and His Majesty spent a full hour with Mr. Limb, of the Edison Bell, and the machine. He expressed his satisfaction with the records, 48 in number. All loyal subjects will be interested, as showing His Majesty's musical tastes, to know the names of those selected. We give it therefore in excelsis."

The following list of records played for the King was then given:

"Marches — El Capitan; Imperial Edward; Salvation Army Patrol; and New Century.

"Waltzes — Amoreuse; Tres-Jolie; My Dream; Il Bacio; Over the Waves, and The Guards.

"Selections — from 'The Toreador,' 'Three Little Maids,' 'A Country Girl,' 'Merrie England,' 'H.M.S. Pinafore,' and 'The Belle of New York.'

"Songs — The Huntsman; The House Agent; Mrs. Kelly; Mammy's Carolina Twins; The Midshipmite; The Pilgrim of Love; Pickaninny Mine, Goodnight; Husheen; The Lily of Laguna, and The Laughing Girl.

"Overtures—Morning, Noon and Night. Dances — Whistling Rufus; My Little Topsy; Away to Espana; and Cock of the North.

"Violin Solo — Cavalleria Rusticana (the Intermezzo?); Viola Solo—Simple Aveu; Flute Solo—Scotch Airs; Piccolo Solo—Light and Free; Bassoon Solo — Charlie Is My Darling. Banjo Solo — Tarantelle; Xylophone Solo—Souvenir of Eournemouth.

Descriptive Selections — Down South; Departure Of A Troopship; and a Southern Jubilee; Quartet — Old Black Joe. 'Coon' Song—Lucky Boy.

"Dialogues—Casey Riding a Bicycle; Casey Crossing the Channel; Casey as a Magistrate; Casey Taking the Census; and Casey as a C.I.V."

The large number of "Casey" records played for King Edward is about as surprising as the fact that some of them were chosen to amuse the girlish Queen Wilhelmina. And if the foregoing list is a fair sample of Edward's taste, it is obvious that His Majesty's likings in music were as plebeian as those of almost any of his subjects. The King, however, never pretended to be a "highbrow" and disliked persons who were self-consciously intellectual. Actually, if he had preferred a less trivial type of music it would have been hard to supply from the concert cylinder repertoire of 1903.

Edward's wife, Queen Alexandra, was hard of hearing, and the condition became worse as she grew older. However, she owned a Gramophone and, as has been told in a preceding article, at her request Edward Lloya, the distinguished tenor, made a special recording of "Fleeting Years," a song the Queen liked.

After King Edward died there was speculation as to whether his voice had been recorded. Arthur S. Dunlop, Editor of the Sound Wave, wrote to Thomas A. Edison in July, 1910, asking for information about any recordings by the late King, and on July 16, received this reply from H. F. Miller, Mr. Edison's secretary:

"Dear Sir: Your letter of the 7th instant received. Mr. Edison directs me to write you that, if he remembers right, one of his assistants took a record of King Edward, Lord Kelvin, Gladstone and also Bismarck. These records were in his possession for many years. Some three years ago he was killed on a railway, and Mr. Edison has never been able to locate the records, which is a great pity as we could now, by making masters, preserve them for all time."

The assistant was Professor A. Theodore E. Wangemann, who was born in Berlin, Germany, February 13, 1855. He was instantly killed June 2, 1906, when he tried to board a moving train at Bath Beach, N. Y. The missing records afterwards were found, but Mr. Edison's memory seems to have tricked him, for there was none by King Edward, and all the evidence seems to indicate that, if the King's voice was ever recorded experimentally, the cylinder did not survive.

A letter written by J. E. Hough has already been quoted, concerning the cylinder Queen Victoria sent to the Emperor of Abyssinia. In another part of that letter, written June 21, 1910, "J. E." had this to say:

"... I have made researches and find that in January, 1899, records were sent to Mr. Edison of the voices of Mr. Gladstone, Sir Morrell Mackenzie, Mr. James Knowlton, the Earl of Aberdeen, Earl of Meath, Lord Rowton, Sir John Fowler, Sir William Hunter and Sir Roland Prothero. At the Paris Exposition of 1889 we find amongst the visitors to view the phonograph were the late President Carnot, Mr. Gladstone, the Prince and Princess of Wales Prince of Monaco, Buffalo Bill, and various others, but we do not find it stated that the Prince of Wales (who became King Edward—J.W.) or any of the personages mentioned made records at that time. Whether they did or not is a matter of comparative insignificance, if the registered tones are reserved for private use and withheld from any public utility."

Mr. Hough then described the efforts he had made to have the British Museum form a collection of recordings of the voices of distinguished personages, only to receive an icy reply that "The subject is not one that can be entertained by the British Museum." With his exhaustive knowledge of all the recording done in England since Edison's first wax cylinder instrument was brought over in 1888, he was confident that no record by the King existed.

VII. Records by Kaiser Wilhelm

However, if King Edward's guttural tones were not transferred to wax, the voice of his flighty nephew, Wilhelm, the Kaiser of Germany—whom Edward detested and who despised his uncle in return—was "immortalized." The Talking Machine News for December, 1911, contained the following:

"It may not be generally known that three records of the Kaiser's voice exist, and that one is actually on the market. Two of the records are said to be in the possession of Mr. Edison and are not accessible to the public while either the Kaiser or Mr. Edison is alive, and the other is a record made by Professor Scripture in about January, 1904. As this gentleman, however, had no practical experience of recording the cylinder is not of the best from an artistic standpoint. Nevertheless, as being a record of distinct interest, it is put on the market by the American Trading Company of Nachfolgwr, Hamburg, who retail it at five marks."

There was an earlier reference to the Kaiser's recordings in the Talking Machine News for May, 1904, but it probably was rewritten from a longer discussion in the Columbia Record that immediately preceded it. Part of the Columbia publication's article, headed "Emperor William's Voice," is quoted below. The Kaiser, it should be understood, was the son of Queen Victoria and Prince Albert's eldest daughter, "Vicky," and spoke perfect English:

"Records of Emperor William's voice on metal matrices will be the first deposit made in the phonetic archives that are to be kept at Harvard University and in the national museum at Washington. The emperor upon the application of Dr. Edward W. Scripture, the psychologist of Yale University, has given two examples of his voice for permanent preservation.

"The emperor received Dr. Scripture after the morning church service on Sunday. During the making of the record the emperor was alone. He spoke twice into the apparatus. The first cylinder, made especially for Harvard University, contained observations on Frederick the Great. The other was a short disquisition on 'Fortitude in Pain.'"

The Talking Machine News said the first recording was a portion "of the oration on Frederick the Great, which His Majesty delivered some time ago at the camp of Doberwitz." I admit the Columbia Record article somewhat confuses me. Was Dr. Scripture really "the psychologist at Yale University?" And if his association was with Yale, why was he collecting records for Yale's arch rival, Harvard? How could he face Frank and Dick Merriwell after being guilty of such treachery?

I believe the Kaiser's recorded messages to Mr. Edison are still preserved at the Edison National Historic Site—formerly the Edison laboratory—in West Orange.

Back to King Edward—Ernest Pike, the most popular recording tenor in England at the same time that Henry Burr was tops in the States, was proud of being "King Edward's Favorite Tenor." Pike was the son of a baker at Sandringham Palace. After he gave a command performance before the King he was so "carried away" that he never quite recovered from the eminence he had achieved, although his mischievous duet partner, Peter Dawson, worked long and hard to cut him down to size. Pike, who died in the late 1930's, thought of himself as "King Edward's Favorite Tenor" as long as he lived.

VIII. The Gramophone Company's "Appointments"

Near the end of 1908, The Gramophone News, "house organ" of the Gramophone Company of London, published an article, "Royal Appreciation of the Gramophone... A Chat About Our Appointments," which gave an account of the members of royalty who had purchased or sometimes been given for advertising purposes the instrument known then as a gramophone in Europe and as the Victor talking machine in the United States. It makes interesting reading:

The Shah's Elaborate instrument. This picture, from the Talking Machine News of October, 1904, depicts a hydra-headed Columbia Graphophone which was sold to the Shah of Persia.

"Her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Alexandra was one of the earliest amateurs of the Gramophone. The first Gramophone bought by Her Majesty was in 1903, when the Earl Howe came to choose the instrument. Incidentally, we may say the Earl de Grey forwarded a check in payment as soon as the Gramophone was delivered. Since then very many instruments have been delivered by royal command, the latest being a Sheraton Grand which proudly occupies a foremost position in the large drawing room at Sandringham. (This model was known as the Victrola XVI in America—J.W.)

"It will be of interest to know that with the exception of Princess Victoria, no one is allowed to play the Grand. Her Majesty keeps the key of it herself. Princess Victoria generally superintends the Gramophone recitals herself and takes the keenest interest in Gramophone matters.

"His Majesty King Alfonso of Spain purchased his first Gramophone in 1903. A deputation of His Majesty's suite visited our leading dealer in Madrid to inspect the models and a very interesting snapshot photograph was taken of the royal visitors.

"Her Majesty Queen Victoria Eugenie had often heard the Gramophone played by her royal mother, the Princess Henry of Battenberg, and the Gramophone that is now installed at the palace is very popular with the royal family.

"When the doctors and state officials were awaiting the birth of Prince Jaime, the Gramophone was utilized to entertain them. We have in our possession an excellent photograph taken of the assembly in the anteroom listening to the Gramophone with evident interest. This photograph appeared in the illustrated London News.

"The Gramophone has welcomed their Majesties on more than one visit to this country when they have driven in procession through the streets of London. On one occasion, King Alfonso, turning toward the direction where the Gramophone was rendering the Spanish national anthem, which happened to be Gamage's in Holborn, smiled and then saluted.

"The story of how we were granted the royal warrant from the King of Italy is very interesting. A command was sent us for a Gramophone concert at the court. The concert had lasted about half an hour when our Maestro Sabaino asked their Majesties whether they were tired and if they wished him to stop. Whereupon the Queen replied that she was so pleased with the magnificent instrument that she would like to continue playing it until the next day. Maestro Sabaino then had to play all the records he had taken with him, including some magnificent records by the celebrated tenor (Francesco) Marconi, who is well known in the best society in Rome and a great court favorite. After a concert of two hours, during which the court listened with the greatest interest, His Majesty the King asked Maestro Sabaino a number of technical questions about the Gramophone, and the recording, and on leaving the salon he closed the Bijou Grand himself, saying: 'One is never quite sure that the servants will not touch the machine,' and, with a smile, handed the key to the Queen, saying: 'You had better keep this.' We are informed that the Gramophone is very often roomed by their Majesties in their private rooms.

"In regard to the queen mother, she expressed the desire to hear the records of her own quintet, directed by Professor Sgambati, and arrangements were made in consequence with the celebrated professor for the recording of this famous quintet. One record has already been made and will shortly be published. So pleased was Her Majesty that through the officials of her suite she appointed us warrant holders.

"The Khedive of Egypt is quite a Gramophone enthusiast and is the possessor, among other of our styles, of an Auxetophone. (This was an instrument that magnified sound through the use of compressed air.—J.W.)

"His Majesty the late Shah of Persia had a Gramophone, the case of which was specially made for him and is of a very elaborate style.

"The royal warrant itself is a curious document in Persian characters, printed in many colors and resplendent in gold, and is to be seen at our offices, City Road.

"It is the custom—in fact, the law—in Persia that those standing in the royal presence may not laugh or applaud without a signification being given by the Shah first, the penalty being the decapitation of the unfortunate courtier shortly after.

"On one occasion the Shah and his courtiers were gravely listening to the record of 'Stop Yer Tickling, Jock,' by Harry Lauder, when after a few moments some of the courtiers could no longer restrain themselves and the smiles broke into laughter, in which the Shah joined. When those present realized what they had done they were filled with consternation at the thought of the dire results, but we are happy to record that on this occasion the Shah did not invoke the law."

"Stop Yer Tickling, Jock" is a laughing song, so no wonder the poor courtiers followed the record's example and burst into mirth. It is about the only Harry Lauder record that could make me laugh in the presence of the Shah of Persia (now Iran) or anybody else. Lauder possessed a fine singing voice and his songs usually had good, swinging tunes, but I find his spoken patter unspeakably boring. Seemingly, the only way Lauder knew to try to make one of his characters funny was to cause him to sound like a half-wit. I think Glen Ellison's Edison records of Lauder songs are better than those by Sir Harry himself, because the Scotch dialect is not so extreme, nor is the "comedy" so strained.

Speaking of the Shah, the Talking Machine News and Cinematograph Chronicle (what a name!) for October, 1904, shows a picture of a "multiplex grand graphophone" which was bought by the Persian ruler. It was initially built for display at the Paris Exposition of 1900, and we are told:

"The original model was bought by the Shah of Persia. This was the largest talker ever constructed. The cylinder is of giant size, and there are three records on each cylinder. There are three horns which amplify the sound, which comes simultaneously from three reproducers tracking round the same cylinder. The machine is constructed so that the music may be divided into parts, one playing bass and contralto, the second tenor, and the third a piano or orchestral accompaniment. It can be used with equal readiness with only a single record. A Grand Record runs on it for over 20 minutes. (This must have been the first long-play record.—J.W.)

"The possession of the largest machine in the world, it is to be supposed, led the Persian potentate to desire to have the smallest in the world. So the Columbia Company were asked to construct one. So quickly does the talking machine world move that in four years the Shah's purchases wear an antique air."

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from preceding page)

The Columbia Record for February, 1905, contained a large illustration of what the accompanying reading matter termed "the most beautiful graphophone ever constructed, forwarded to the Emperor of Japan, by the Columbia Phonograph Company." The article continued:

"We present, above, a cut of the graphophone recently forwarded by the Columbia Phonograph Company to the Emperor of Japan. It not only speaks for itself but it sings and plays the music of the smiling land where the chrysanthemum grows as plentifully as the daisies in our own beaming fields, and is the emblem of royalty, but it likewise reproduces the songs and the music of all other lands for the edification of mankind in the under world.

"Nowhere beneath the skies of blue has the graphophone won a firmer place in the affections of the people than in Japan. Every hospital ship connected with the Japanese navy has its graphophone and an unrestricted collection of records. The sick and injured are amused and entertained by the musical strains that reach their ears, even as the heavy hours in camp are brightened by the music, native and foreign, that the graphophone supplies. Quite recently Columbia machines and records have been presented to the leading commanders on sea and land and the popularity of Columbia goods is universal throughout the Empire. The Japanese seem, as one man, to have given their adhesion to the theory that: 'Whatever delights us physics pain.'"

I recall with amusement that, a good many years after the Gramophone News article was published, H. M. V. again boasted that the King of Spain owned a gramophone. The Edison Company retorted in one of its dealers' publications that King Alfonso XIII had two New Edisons and had said that after acquiring the Edisons he almost never listened to any other instrument.

Whatever his listening preference may have been, the Spanish King made a double-faced Victor record, issued in May, 1925, one side of which was called "Saludo a las Repùblicas Americanas (Greeting to the Spanish-American Republics)," and the other, "Alocucion al Pueblo Espanol (Address to the Spanish Nation.)" The supplement description said:

"Addresses recorded in the Royal Palace at Madrid by King Alfonso XIII of Spain. The first is to the Latin American Republics, so many of them founded by Spanish pioneers, and the second to the Spanish people. The records are in the Spanish language. The Spanish Royal March is played. The royalties from the sale of these records purchase comforts for the Spanish troops in Africa. The records are splendidly clear and distinct."

The number of this double-faced disc was 19619, but this is surprising—although the 19000 series was reserved for 10-inch records selling at 75 cents, the price of this specimen was $1.50! This is the only record in the 10-inch Black Label series I can recall that sold at more than the current price for that series. Probably the extra 75 cents was the royalty used for the benefit of the troops doing African duty. When Victor issued 10-inch Black Label records by members of the British Royalty Family, the price was the standard 75 cents.

GAVE ENDORSEMENT. The American-born Lady Randolph Churchill, mother of Winston Churchill, wrote an endorsement praising the tone quality and fine cabinets of the New Edison phonograph.

Although the American-born Lady Randolph Churchill, mother of Britain's war-time Premier Winston Churchill, was not a member of royalty, she did belong to the exalted circles of British aristocracy. It is historically interesting, consequently, to record that she gave a testimonial to both the tone quality and the artistic correctness of New Edison instruments. On May 23, 1919, the former Miss Jennie Jerome of New York City wrote:

"What an extraordinary man Mr. Edison is. He perfects his phonograph to a point where its realism is astounding. Then he determines to make each Edison Phonograph, even the least costly, an attractive piece of furniture. Instead of the usual dentist-like looking cabinet, his designers have succeeded in putting the character and the feeling of the best periods into his phonograph cases. These graceful and artistic productions will be hailed with delight by all who can afford them, and will cause Mr. Edison's new phonograph to be received in many homes where less worthy machines have not been welcomed heretofore."

Finally, before we dismiss the subject of the Gramophone Company and its many "royal warrants," let's have a chuckle. In May, 1913, Edison Bell published an advertisement in the Talking Machine News which was headed by an illustration of the Royal Arms. In June, a pungently worded "apology" appeared, which must have been written, judging from its style, by J. E. Hough himself. It admitted that Edison Bell did not hold Royal Warrants, but bitingly added:

"Why! Great Scott, if we had sent half a dozen records into the Royal Palace and wheedled the Lord Chamberlain . . . we should have had Ramping Lions and Unicorns . . . Royal Standards, Union Jacks—and all the other glories . . ." The ad. ended: " . . . Unsought glories are so far denied us, but we have the great consolation — We Know We Deserve the Honour, for we make the World's Best Records . . ."

I am submitting a facsimile of the original advertisement and the subsequent "apology" and hope they can be reproduced.

IX. Coronation Recordings

When Queen Victoria died the phonograph was in an undeveloped condition, and little recorded attention was paid to her being succeeded on the throne by her son, the Prince of Wales. During the next few years there was of course, a spate of discs and cylinders with the words and music of "God Save the King," which hadn't been sung in masculine form during the 64 years of Victoria's reign. During this period one indignant Australian lady wrote to The New Phonogram and asked why Edison Standard two-minute cylinder No. 2, played by the Edison Military Band, was called "America" when everybody knew the title should be "God Save the King." The editor explained that the same tune was used for both "America," which has near-national anthem status in this country, and "God Save the King," and that the version she questioned had been made for American use.

Then came the death, on May 6, 1910 of King Edward and a year later companies broke their backs and almost broke their necks issuing recordings of special descriptive sketches, standard patriotic songs and transiently popular numbers commenting on the change in Kings. There must have been hundreds of such records, but only a typical few can be considered here.

Perhaps the most impressive recording made as a result of King George's coronation on June 22, 1911, was violet label Gramophone 0492 of the Homage Anthem, "Rejoice in the Lord," which was written especially for the occasion and was sung during the ceremony "as the Princes and Peers of the realm paid their homage to His Majesty." Edward Lloyd, the veteran tenor who had made the disc of "Fleeting Years" for the new King's mother, emerged from retirement to sing the solo part, and was assisted by the Westminster Abbey Choir and an orchestra conducted by Sir Frederick Bridge. The record, of course, was not made during the ceremony—such "live" recordings were impossible 60 years ago—but was done later as a "studio job."

Most outstanding of the many recorded versions of "God Save the King" must have been that sung by the incredibly deep-voiced contralto, Dame Clara Butt, on 12-inch Gramophone record No. 03240. This was sold, single-faced, for "the modest sum of six shillings, sixpence." Dame Clara was accompanied by "the full band of His Majesty's Coldstream Guards, conducted by Lt. Dr. J. Mack-

(Continued on next page)

GENUINE VELVET VP EDISON BELL
GRAMOPHONE RECORDS

MANUFACTURED UNDER

ROYAL LETTERS PATENT,
No. 26639—1912.

ENSURING THEM
FREE
from all
CLICKS, SCRATCHES
and
OTHER FOREIGN SOUNDS.

TWO TWO ON ON
ONE 2/6 ONE

10in. Double Discs.

The World's Best Records.

GENUINE VELVET VP EDISON BELL
GRAMOPHONE RECORDS

GENUINE VELVET VP EDISON BELL
GRAMOPHONE RECORDS

THE
WORLD'S BEST
Smoothest, most Natural, Matchless,
Scratchless, and No Distortion.

A
COMPENSATION
AND APOLOGY.

We used a design of the
ROYAL ARMS
in our "T.M.N." Advertisements last month and have been reminded that we are
Not Royal Warrant Holders.

We have undertaken on our own goodwill to advertise this fact as prominently as we need the design, we did not undertake to apologize. We do Apologize to all Gramophone Owners who could by any stretch of imagination possibly have been misled.

Why! GREAT SCOTT
IF WE HAD sent half a dozen Records into the Royal Palace and
Whooled the Lord Chamberlain
There would have been no mistake—
WE SHOULD HAVE HAD
Ramping Lions and Unicorns
— Tall high as Aeroplanes—
Royal Standards, Union Jacks
— and all the other glories —

"ALAS and ALACK a DAY"
the unsought glories so far as depicted in
But we have one
Great Consolation
WE KNOW
WE DESERVE THE HONOUR
For we make the World's Best Records
And others know it too.

J. E. HOUGH, Ltd.,
Edison Bell Works, London, S.E.

ROYALTY AND THE GRAMOPHONE.

H.R.H. The Crown Princess of Germany bought a Melba Gramophone on June 24th.

H.R.H. The Crown Princess of Sweden bought a Gramophone on June 24th.

Supplied already to

H.M. Queen Alexandra.

H.M. King Alfonso XIII.

H.M. King Carlos.

H.M. King George.

H.R.H. The Princess Henry of Battenberg.

H.R.H. The Crown Princess of Germany.

H.R.H. The Crown Princess of Sweden.

The "MELBA"

Supplied already to

H.H. The Pope, whose private secretary writes as follows:—

To the Honorable, The Gramophone Co.,
I beg to inform you that H.H. The Pope has received with much pleasure the Gramophone sketches you have sent him, and the pictures of the records. The Gramophone is a most valuable and useful invention, and the pictures are most interesting. I am sure that the Gramophone will be a great success, and that it will be a great help to the Church. I am sure that the Gramophone will be a great success, and that it will be a great help to the Church. I am sure that the Gramophone will be a great success, and that it will be a great help to the Church. I am sure that the Gramophone will be a great success, and that it will be a great help to the Church.

Yours faithfully,
CARLOTTA MERRY DEL VAL

Three Kinds of Gramophone Needles.

3s. per 1,000.

The GRAMOPHONE.

7.6 per 1,000.

The MELBA.

3s. per 1,000.

The PIANISSIMO.

SARCASTIC "Apology". These two advertisements from The Talking Machine News throw an amusing light upon the sound recording business as it used to be conducted in England. The first (left) appeared in May, 1913, headed by a picture of the Royal Arms. When other companies complained that Edison Bell, not being a Royal Warrant holder, had no right to use the illustration, the company's peppery, sardonic president, J. E. Hough, replied with the second ad, which is a masterpiece of sarcasm. It was published in June.

enzie Rogan, M.V.O."

Peter Dawson, then probably the most popular "serious" singer in the King's Dominions, sang, "Hail! King George!" on Edison Amberol cylinder No. 12300, and Billy Williams, the reigning comic song virtuoso, who was even more popular than Dawson, recorded a coronation song, "Where the Crowd Goes," for several companies. His Columbia version, No. 1645, was coupled with "Wake Up, John Bull!" a plea for preferential tariffs between the Mother Country and her outposts.

H. M. V.'s lower-priced affiliate, Zonophone, proudly offered a "Great Coronation Novelty—the Wonderful Zonophone Puzzle Plate." Selling at two shillings and sixpence, this record, No. 598, contained six musical selections on its two sides—"Coronation March," "Hearts of Oak," "God Bless the Prince of Wales," "Rule, Britannia," "The British Grenadiers" and "God Save the King." The grooves were so arranged that the needle might choose to track any one, and there was always doubt as to which of the three brief selections on a side it would play. The following year, Victor issued a similar type of record, also of British origin, in this country. It was called "The Conundrum—What Will I Play Next?" and there have since been many imitations, embodying simulated horse races and other novelties.

This ADVERTISEMENT appeared in the TALKING MACHINE NEWS for July, 1905. It shows that Royalty was already taking a lively interest in recorded music.

Columbia's June, 1911, list included nine double-faced discs with a coronation flavor. A descriptive specialty, "The Coronation Procession" and "Coronation Night in the Barracks" (No. 1646 sounds interesting:)

"An absolutely unique record, depicting first the scene as the procession passes through the streets, bands playing, crowds cheering and, finally, the grand welcome to the King. The other is a celebration in barracks with 'Tommy' toasting the King he has sworn to fight for. This will sell in its thousands."

Homophone, one of the German companies that was trying to get a stranglehold on the British record industry, largely through foul means, presented a "Coronation Day" Sketch (6060) that sounds as if it might have been colorful. The Talking Machine News described it as:

"A fine sample of the descriptive sketch so popular at present. There is the London crowd exceedingly well done, shouting, cheering and chaffing in the usual manner. All the principal characters in the procession are recognized as they come past—Lord Roberts, Lord Kitchener and the young Prince of Wales, all of whom receive an ovation. Then an old man steps up and wishes to have a sight of the King. He is an old soldier who has seen King Edward many times, and who had fought for Queen Victoria. Bands play, and after that King George and the Queen pass amidst vociferous cheers. As a finale of course, we have 'God Save the King,' and the record ends . . ."

Pathé's several coronation records included a disc coupling a song in tribute to the departed Edward, "That's Why the British Loved the King," with another patriotic number, "The Islander," sung on No. 8387 by "Arthur George" who was really George Baker. Then there was 8384, "When Our Good King George Is Crowned," with a bellicose, jingoistic song, "Two Keels For One," as its companion. Both were sung by Walter Field.

One of the most unusual of the records of the coronation period must have been Rena 10-inch, No. 998, of a recitation, "The King is Dead," written and spoken by a bearded eccentric, Ogilvie Mitchell, who was chief record reviewer for the Talking Machine News, and who had an unequalled genius for using ten words:

where only one was needed. Strangely, I haven't been able to find a review of Mitchell's recording in the paper for which he wrote, but its chief rival, The Sound Wave, said:

"We must felicitate Mr. Mitchell upon his really fine poem, which expresses in some seven stanzas the universal sorrow evoked by the death of our beloved Monarch. Not less is he to be congratulated upon the splendid record he has succeeded in making. It should be mentioned that a copy of the poem accompanies every copy of the record. The record label, by the way, is printed in royal purple, and bears the words, 'In Memoriam,' together with the dates of birth, accession and death of King Edward VII."

For the other side of "Ogie" Mitchell's tribute, George Alexander's old Columbia version of "Abide With Me," described as "one of the late King's favorite hymns," was resurrected.

King George V died January 20, 1936, and was succeeded by his eldest son, the Prince of Wales, who served only about eleven months before abdicating on December 12 and yielding his hereditary office to his brother, who became George VI. George, in turn, died February 6, 1952, and his place was taken by his daughter, who was crowned Queen Elizabeth II on June 2, 1953.

Of course, in the days that followed George V's accession to the throne, there was no need to "fake" recordings of such things as coronation proceedings. Beginning in the mid-twenties, electrical recording, sound films, radio and television made it comparatively easy to catch historical events as they occurred, both in sight and sound, and to present and preserve them thereafter. No doubt, for example, London TV stations' shelves are filled with stacks of recorded material depicting the present Queen in her many activities in behalf of the peoples over whom she reigns.

X. British Royal Family Recrodings

The first record of the voices of British royalty to appear in an American catalog was issued by Victor in August, 1923, and the description of the disc, spoken by King George and Queen Mary, occupied the second page of the monthly supplement. Excellent photos of their Majesties were reproduced. The record, No. 19072, sold at the usual Black Label price of 75 cents. On the A side the King and Queen delivered an "Empire Day Message to the Boys and Girls of the British Empire." On the reverse, the Band of the Coldstream Guards played "God Save the King" and "Home, Sweet Home." The description was:

"The whole of the world, wherever it gives allegiance, will be interested to hear the voices of the reigning King and Queen of England, and of the great British Commonwealth of Nations. The record embraces short addresses recorded at Buckingham Palace and requested by the King to be first played on Empire Day, May 23, 1923, in the schools throughout the British Empire. Two quotations will suffice. The King: 'Get knowledge, be brave, honorable and kind, thinking of others before yourselves, and always play the game.' The Queen: 'The home which fosters clean minds and kind hearts is God's temple; the spirit of the good home, whether it be rich or poor, is one of the best things in the world.'"

King George V broadcasting at Sandringham in 1934, two years before his death. Several of the King's broadcast addresses were issued on H.M.V. records.

All royalties accruing from the sale of this record are held for later distribution for charities to be designated by the King."

The King's remarks are reminiscent of those in a familiar quotation, copied in his own handwriting, which he always kept on his dressing table. Most of us probably are familiar with this sentence, but may be surprised to learn how much it seemed to mean to George V:

"I shall journey through this world but once. Any good thing, therefore, that I can do, or any kindness that I can show any human being, let me do it now: let me not neglect nor defer it, for I shall not pass this way again."

In October, 1924, Victor issued another royal record, this time in 12-inch size. It was No. 35746, "Sportsmanship," spoken by H. R. H. The Prince of Wales, who afterwards reigned so briefly as King Edward. The coupling was "God Bless the Prince of Wales," played by the Band of H. M. Coldstream Guards and sung by a male chorus:

"A talk on sportsmanship, personally recorded by H. R. H. The Prince of Wales; then his 'own song' and the regimental marches of the Household Brigade. The record will recall to mind those made by the King and Queen of England, and issued in America by the Victor; and with them it will preserve for future time the voices of two generations of a great dynasty."

I have this record and I think anybody with normal hearing must concede that on the strength of the acoustically recorded disc, Edward had an extremely high, rather effeminate voice. When he delivered his Abdication Speech, explaining that he could not continue the burden of being

King, without the help of "the woman I love," a number of companies—some of the fly-by-night type—recorded the radio address broadcast at Windsor Castle and placed it on the market for "a quick buck." My record of his abdication remarks bears no trademark or manufacturer's name. Electrically recorded, it gives a more resonant sound to the voice, but to me there still seems a touch of effeminacy.

The King and Queen's record was issued in Great Britain as H. M. V. No. RE284, and the one by the Prince as RD887. I take it that "R" stood for "Royal."

In May, 1930, Victor issued as 10-inch Black Label record No. 22338, King George's Speech at the Opening of the Five-Power Naval Conference in London on January 21, 1930. The recording was done in the Royal Gallery of the House of Lords and the disc was issued at home in February before making its American appearance. "His Master's Voice" supplement for February, 1930, listed it as RB3290, said it went on sale February 5, and continued:

"It was the great privilege of 'His Master's Voice' to make a record of H. M. The King's Speech. Millions heard the Speech (at the opening of the Naval Conference), and millions heard the record, made in the morning, broadcast the same evening. The Gramophone Company, Limited, will devote their profits arising from the sale of this record to the British 'Wireless for the Blind' Fund, which has been nominated for this purpose by H. M. The King. This record of world-wide interest is a triumph of recording and one that should take a place in everyone's library."

I have the Victor pressing. The King's speech is delivered simply with a complete lack of affectation, and obvious deep sincerity. I think it would give anyone the feeling that George V was a good and generous man.

Now, please forgive a brief digression. Recently, after polishing off lunch in the Drum & Fife Restaurant in my "home town" of Vinton, Va., I asked Lena Ryman, the waitress, if she could spare me some cornbread to take home for a "cornbread and buttermilk feast" in mid-afternoon. Lena passed the request on to Nellie Johnson, who made the bread, and Nellie said: "I'll see if it's ready." A moment later she smiled at me and said: "Jim, you came to our rescue! I'd forgotten about that cornbread, and if you had waited a minute longer it would have burned up!"

The memory of that sizzling cornbread (I took some home and enjoyed it) came back to me when the question arose in my mind as to how I was to prepare a list of recordings by the British Royal Family. Suddenly it occurred to me that I had a stack of old H. M. V. catalogs of 78 RPM discs—and those catalogs came to my rescue just as I had saved Nellie Johnson's cornbread from a fiery death.

Turning first to the catalog dated 1937-38, I found the following in addition to the three I have already discussed:

H. M. KING GEORGE THE FIFTH
10-inch double-faced
RB3669 Speech at Opening of Indian Round-Table Conference, Nov. 12, 1930
RB4465 Speech Opening World Monetary and Economic Conference, June 12 1933
RB8101 Message to the Empire (Broadcast Christmas Day, 1933)
10-inch single-faced
RBS4359 Message to the Empire (Broadcast Christmas Day, 1932)
12-inch single-faced
RCS2717 Message to the Empire (Broadcast Christmas Day, 1934)
RCS2811 Message to the Empire (Broadcast Christmas Day, 1935)
RC7247 Silver Jubilee Message to the Empire (Broadcast May 6, 1935) and Welcome to their Majesties (recorded during the Procession to St. Paul's)
RC2748 Speech in Westminster Hall, May 9, 1935

KING EDWARD VIII
10-inch double-faced
RB8417 Message to the Empire (Broadcast March 1, 1936)
12-inch double-faced
RC2360 Speech at Meeting Organized by National Council of Social Service, Jan. 27, 1932, in Royal Albert Hall, London. Reverse: "Jerusalem" and "National Anthem," sung by the audience
10-inch double-faced
RB2628 Speech on Armistice Night, Nov. 11, 1927 recorded at the Daily Express Remembrance Festival in Royal Albert Hall. (This and No. RC2360 were recorded when Edward was Prince of Wales.)

H. M. KING GEORGE THE SIXTH
12-inch double-faced
RG15 Message to the Empire. Broadcast on Coronation Day, May 12, 1937. (The entire Coronation Service in Westminster Abbey was also recorded on records RG1 through RG14, inclusive)
12-inch double faced
(Recorded as DUKE OF YORK)
RC1804 My Camp: Its Purpose. Reverse: Camp Songs, Recorded at the Duke's Camp, New Romney

When the 1945-46 catalog was issued the records by King George V, Queen Mary and King Edward had been discontinued, but the following had been added. An asterisk in front of a number means that record was to be cut out of the next catalog:

RC3429 Today We Give Thanks (Broadcast VE Day, May 8, 1945)
RC3432 Message to the Empire (Broadcast Christmas Day, 1944)
RC3374 Message to the Empire (Broadcast Christmas Day, 1943)
RC3329 Message to the Empire (Broadcast Christmas Day, 1942)
*RC3272 Message to the Empire (Broadcast Christmas Day, 1941)
*RC3213 Message to the Empire (Broadcast Christmas Day 1940)
*RC3147 Message to the Empire (Broadcast Christmas Day, 1939)
RB8969 The King to His Peoples (Broadcast Sept. 3, 1939)

H. M. QUEEN ELIZABETH
(Mother of the Present Queen Elizabeth II)
RC3133 Message to the Women of the Empire (Recorded Nov. 11, 1939)

H.R.H. PRINCESS ELIZABETH
(now QUEEN)
RBS9111 Message to the Children (Broadcast Oct. 13, 1940)

The following new titles are in the catalog from 1946-47 through 1950-51:

H. M. KING GEORGE THE SIXTH
RC3893 Colonial Exhibition, London (Broadcast June 21, 1949)
RC3958 The King to His Peoples (Broadcast Christmas Day, 1949)
RC3852 The King to His Peoples (Broadcast Christmas Day, 1948)
RC3698 Message to the Empire (Broadcast Christmas Day, 1947)
RC3555 Message to the Empire (Broadcast Christmas Day, 1946)
RC3481 Message to the Empire (Broadcast Christmas Day, 1945)
RC3452 Victory Message to the Empire (Broadcast Aug. 15, 1945)
RC3429 Today We Give Thanks (Broadcast VE Day, May 8, 1945)
RC3422 Message to the Empire (Broadcast Christmas Day, 1944)
RC3374 Message to the Empire (Broadcast Christmas Day, 1943)
RC3329 Message to the Empire (Broadcast Christmas Day, 1942)
RC3272 Message to the Empire (Broadcast Christmas Day, 1941)
RC3189 Message to the Empire (Broadcast Sept. 23, 1940)
RC3147 Message to the Empire (Broadcast Christmas Day, 1939)
RC3007 Speech at Opening of the Empire Exhibition in Glasgow, May 3, 1938

ROYAL SILVER WEDDING
RB9654 Broadcast April 26, 1948

H.R.H. PRINCESS ELIZABETH
RB9650 Broadcasting from Cape Town on her 21st birthday, April 21, 1947

The following additional titles are found in my latest catalogs of 78RPM HMV records for 1956-57 and 1957-58:

KING GEORGE VI
RB10209 The King to His Peoples (Broadcast Christmas Day, 1951)
RB10090 Festival of Britain, 1951 (Broadcast May 3, 1951)
RC4063 The King to His Peoples (Broadcast Christmas Day, 1950)

H.M. QUEEN ELIZABETH II
DA2042 Coronation Day Speech (Broadcast June 2, 1953)
RB10412 Christmas Message to the Commonwealth (Broadcast Christmas Day, 1952)
DA2056 Christmas Message to the Commonwealth (Broadcast Christmas Day, 1953)
DA2075 Christmas Message to the Commonwealth (Broadcast Christmas Day, 1954)
DA2023 Christmas Message to the Commonwealth (Broadcast Christmas Day, 1955)
DB21627 Christmas Message to the Commonwealth (Broadcast Christmas Day, 1956)

The Coronation Service of Queen Elizabeth was available on three long-play records, ALP1056 through ALP1058. A selection from the service could also be had on four 78RPM discs, numbered from DB21881 through DB21884. Another long-play, BLP1020, called "Memories of Coronation Day, 2, June, 1953," contained excerpts from the ceremonial and procession.

In the 1956-57 catalog there was a set of three 78RPM discs, DB9794-95 and 96, entitled "Through Childhood to the Throne," which was produced in collaboration with the British Broadcasting Company. It was described as "a record of the eventful years preceding the coronation of Queen Elizabeth II," and consisted largely of excerpts from such broadcasts as King Edward's Abdication Speech and addresses by President Franklin D. Roosevelt, Winston Churchill, etc. These records were cut out of the 1957-58 catalog, but the same material was on a long player, ALP1043, which remained available.

Since Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists is concerned primarily with recordings of the acoustic period, I have not attempted to carry research farther into the present-day electrical long-play era. I also lack latter-day British catalogs, but I presume Royal Records are still being regularly issued. I also imagine that more records by rulers of non-English speaking countries might have been found by an intensive search of foreign language lists, but that would be beyond the scope of this survey.

THE END

Postscript. Within a few days after this article was submitted to HOBBIES I received from an English friend a copy of The Phonogram's British edition for May, 1893, and was surprised to find an article casting a different light on the question of whether King Edward VII recorded.

Earlier, I have quoted from magazines published after the King's death in 1910, saying his voice was not captured on wax cylinders, but The Phonogram makes it appear likely that Mr. Edison was remembering correctly when he said that, as Prince of Wales, Edward did record for one of his representatives. It seems that the voice of the Princess of Wales, afterwards Queen Alexandria, was also waxed. Here from the 80-year-old Phonogram is a "List of Some Eminent Voices Recorded by the Phonograph":

"Living. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales. The Emperor of Germany. The Emperor of Russia. The King and Queen of Sweden. The King of Saxony. His Holiness the Pope. H. R. H. The Duchess of Teck. H. R. H. the Princess May of Cambridge. The Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M. P. Dr. Arthur Pierson.

"Dead. Lord Tennyson. Robert Browning. Cardinal Manning. Carlo Pellegrini. General Boulanger. General Sherman."

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

RUDY WIEDOEFT and OTHER SAXOPHONE PLAYERS

By JIM WALSH

I. Greatest in the World

Fifty years ago you would not have run much risk of inciting a riot by mounting a soap box on any street corner and shouting that Rudy Wiedoeft was the greatest saxophone player in the world.

Not that there weren't other fine performers. F. Wheeler Wadsworth, whose first name sometimes appeared in Pathé supplements as Frank and sometimes as Fred, and who played in the All-Star Trio and the Wiedoeft-Wadsworth Quartet, was one.

Then there was Nathan Glantz of the Van Eps Trio, who a few years later had a dance orchestra that made Edison records as the Tennessee Happy Boys; Duane Sawyer, who recorded mostly for Pathé; and in the ensemble field, there were the members of the Six Brown Brothers Saxophone Sextet—five of whom actually were brothers. (The real name of the sixth was Harry Finkelstein). And there was H. Benne Henton, a virtuoso who starred with concert bands like Conway's and Kryl's and seldom played "popular music."

Until the vogue of Rudy Wiedoeft, Benne Henton was usually considered the foremost master of the saxophone; in fact, the Victor record supplement for October, 1916, virtually bestowed the "greatest" title upon him in its description of his record of "Laverne—Waltz Caprice."

"While there is considerable difference of opinion regarding the merits of the great singers, violinists, cellists, pianists, etc., critics, musicians and the masses seem to be united in pronouncing H. Benne Henton the greatest American saxophone soloist. Mr. Henton, who has been called 'The Paganini of the Saxophone,' has delighted thousands of hearers on the Slayton and Chicago Lyceum Bureau Circuits at the head of his concert company, and has been soloist with many famous bands including Conway, Kryl, Weldon, Pullman, etc. His execution is really marvelous, and his tone exquisite . . ."

Perhaps Henton was as good as, or even better than, Wiedoeft. I am no student of the saxophone and feel incapable of taking sides. But it is certain that within two or three years after the foregoing was published, Wiedoeft was making records for almost every American company and seemed to have established himself as the greatest master of his instrument.

Like many other men of great talents, the blond Germanic-looking, Rudy Wiedoeft did not have a long life in which to develop his abilities to their utmost. When he died in his Flushing, N. Y. home, he was just a few weeks past his 47th birthday. Recently I came across "A Tribute to Rudy Wiedoeft," which appeared in a Joliet, Ill., newspaper, on February 22, 1945, five years after his death. The clipping was sent to me by my old friend, Angus Joss, who then lived in Joliet, but, the last time I heard from him, was in Montreal, Canada. The brief letter, signed "C. M.," does such a good job of summarizing Wiedoeft's life and achievements that I shall quote it:

YOUTHFUL GENIUS. Rudy Wiedoeft autographed this photo for William H. Nolan, an Appleton, Wisc., record dealer when the Eight Popular Victor Artists gave a concert in Appleton, on Monday, October 2, 1922.

"Five years ago, February 18, 1940, marked the passing of Rudy Wiedoeft, the greatest saxophonist the world has ever known. Wiedoeft was born January 3, 1893, in Detroit, Mich. At the age of 11, he played first clarinet in his father's orchestra. Soon after he became interested in the saxophone—then a little used instrument. His experiments and suggestions to manufacturers led to the perfection of a similar instrument, having five extra keys that had not existed on the previous saxophone, and a modifying of its curves, the result being an improvement of its four lowest tones, previously regarded as not melodious.

"These changes made, he proceeded to astound the world with his unbeatable technique, tone and lightning staccato. Gifted with what is termed a snake-tongue, contributed to his staccato being the fastest ever known on a reed instrument.

"He more than any other person lifted the saxophone into its own and seriously encroached upon the sacred realm of the noble violin, if indeed it did not trespass it. No passage however rapid or intricate in tone or color was too difficult for the talented Rudy.

"Concert numbers such as the 'Melodie' by Tchaikowsky were given a striking rendition which surpassed efforts of famous string artists. From the tuneful dance numbers, the technical concert waltzes, the heart songs, to the inspired works of the great masters and back again, Rudy had no peer. I do not know of one saxophonist in the field today to equal Wiedoeft and doubt if there will be any to excel him.

"As a composer his work displays originality and depth of feeling in ever-recurring beauty. His composition, 'Saxophobia,' has defied the efforts of the greatest saxophonists of today to do it full justice.

"World fame came to Wiedoeft before the twenties. He was the most sought after man in the recording studios and his indefatigable efforts of a quarter century ago cause collectors to bid dozens of dollars on rare items pressed in shellac."

That closing paragraph contains two questionable statements. Wiedoeft may possibly have been the most sought recording instrumentalist, though I don't think he was, for I believe Harry Reser, the banjoist, for one, did far more recording work. But Wiedoeft's record output was certainly far smaller than the total of many free lance singers of the period. And I don't believe any Wiedoeft discs were then, or are now, rare enough to cause collectors to bid "dozens of dollars" for them. Otherwise, the letter is an admirable tribute to a fine artist.

The Joliet writer's survey certainly is better than the obituary that appeared in The Billboard shortly after Wiedoeft's death. While the latter gives some useful information, it contains a ludicrous error in reference to the Eight Famous (or Popular) Victor Artists, of which Wiedoeft was a member for four years, and his age is wrongly given as 46. Whoever wrote the following apparently thought that the Eight was an orchestra instead of a predominantly vocal group with five singers, a monologist who also sang, an instrumentalist and a piano accompanist:

"Rudy Wiedoeft, 46, saxophonist and composer, died of a stomach ailment February 18 in Flushing Hospital, Queens, N.Y. Musicians credit him with having brought the saxophone out of obscurity into its present important position in modern dance orchestras. In the trade he was looked up to as a teacher as well as a musician and composer, numbering among his pupils Rudy Vallee, who later took his instructor's name for his own Christian name, Hubert Prior.

"At the age of 11 Wiedoeft was entrusted with a post in his father's orchestra in Denver. He played the clarinet, but soon began to experiment with the saxophone, and following a tie-up with a musical instrument manufacturer brought out a sax which improved upon that invented by Antoine Joseph Sax in 1846. Wiedoeft had added five keys to the sax stem and modified the curve to soften the lowest notes. His personal appearances on vaude stages with the instrument and recordings helped to popularize it simultaneously with the added interest in jazz.

"He went to New York about 20 years ago and later joined the Victor Artists, the orchestra which toured the country for the Victor Talking Machine Company. Among his compositions is 'Saxophobia,' known to be a 'must' in every saxophone player's student days.

"Wiedoeft had retired about three years ago, devoting himself primarily to teaching. He leaves his wife, Mrs. Mae Wiedoeft."

(Continued on page 122)

The ASCAP Biographical Dictionary adds no information to the foregoing except that Wiedoeft remained in New York after coming there in his early twenties, aside from a brief residence in California. (Perhaps he lived in the far West during the period when he conducted an orchestra called Rudy Wiedoeft's Californians). I am wondering if the Billboard statement that Wiedoeft played in his father's orchestra in Denver at the age of 11 is not a mistake for Detroit. I do not know enough about his early life to be able to say whether his family may have moved, when he was a boy, to Denver, which was the home town of such recording artists as Billy Murray, Paul Whiteman, Fred Stone and Carroll Clark, the baritone who was the first Negro singer to do serious recording.

While biographical material concerning Rudy Wiedoeft is being quoted, it perhaps will be as well to include what was said about him in the 1923 Gennett record catalog and the Brunswick volumes for 1923 and 1924. First the Gennett:

"Rudy Wiedoeft is declared by many authorities to be one of the world's greatest saxophonists. His playing is known to thousands of music lovers through his records.

"Rudy Wiedoeft was born in Detroit 29 years ago. His father was an accomplished musician, and when Rudy was still a little boy the famous Wiedoeft Family Orchestra was formed and the young virtuoso was set to studying the clarinet seriously. Ten years later he was occupying the first chair in the clarinet section of Porter's famous Catalina Island Band of San Francisco. Taking up the saxophone in 1914 as an experiment, he soon fell in love with the instrument and has dropped the clarinet altogether. You'll thoroughly enjoy his Gennett Records."

Only one Wiedoeft record—"Valse Yvonne"—was listed in that Gennett catalog, which makes some interesting statements. Apparently Rudy had lived in San Francisco as a boyish member of Porter's Band before coming to New York. And it appears that he had been playing the saxophone less than four years when he made his first Edison record in 1917—an astonishingly short time in which to achieve such consummate mastery.

The 1923 Brunswick catalog contains a small photo of Wiedoeft. With the picture is the following:

"There is only one Rudy Wiedoeft, but there is a small army of saxophonists who would be Wiedoefts if they could be. Everybody knows this gifted young saxophonist and composer, for he is simply the best player of that instrument in the U.S.A., but his modesty won't permit him to admit it. His records prove it, however, and the public cannot, nor ever will be, sufficed with Wiedoeft's records for he is a genius and, with it all, a gentleman, a student and a worker. This reads like an appreciation and that is just what it is and of one who deserves it."

In 1924 Brunswick said:

"Rudy Wiedoeft is a saxophonist of national repute and stands as an ideal for thousands of student saxophonists. His many engagements in concert have tended to more firmly establish his reputation as being one of the greatest recognized masters of that instrument—then, too, his many beautiful Brunswick records have made for him thousands of steadfast admirers, who have not had the opportunity of hearing him in person.

Predominant in his playing is the apparent ease with which he performs the most difficult passages yet still retaining a perfect technique and beauty of tone.

"Lovers of saxophone music will thoroughly enjoy him on Brunswick records."

Now, having disposed of the far from comprehensive supply of available biographical material, we may consider the history of the saxophone as a recording instrument, then proceed to a discussion of Rudy Wiedoeft's record making career.

II. Early Saxophone Recorders

The point has already been made that, although he may have been the greatest, Rudy Wiedoeft was only one of many accomplished saxophone players of his time. And, of course, he was not the first sax virtuoso to make records.

As far as I can ascertain, probably the first—and certainly one of the first recorders—was a female performer. Allen Koenigsberg's beautiful and invaluable book, "Edison Cylinder Records, 1889-1912," reveals that on April 23, 1892—more than quarter of a century before Wiedoeft made his first record—Miss Bessie Meeklen produced twelve Edison wax cylinders of saxophone solos with piano accompaniment. The instrument the lady played obviously was less elaborate in range and tonal quality than the one Wiedoeft designed and developed. The titles Miss Meeklen rendered, probably several times each, were "Ave Maria," "Sweet Lullaby Waltz," "Eugenia — Waltz Song," "Nightingale Song," "Easter Song," "Love's Old Sweet Song," "Christmas Song," "Grand Fantasie," "Dreaming," "Afterwards," "In Old Madrid" and "Palm Branches"—mostly slow-paced and comparatively simple numbers.

Following Bessie Meeklen's introductory efforts, Edison fought shy for a long time afterward from making saxophone records. No other appeared in the American domestic list until March, 1910, when H. Benne Henton was heard on two-minute cylinder 10320, in his own familiar composition, "Laverne—Waltz Caprice."

When the four minute Amberol cylinders were introduced, four saxophone titles gradually found their way into the catalog, beginning with Henton's No. 400, Cavatina from "La Favorita," in April, 1910. This was followed in May by "The Kiss Waltz" (Henton), and he, the leading player of that day, also made Record E, "Scenes That Are Brightest," which was not sold but was one of ten cylinders given to Edison owners for inducing a friend to buy a phonograph. Finally, in November, 1911, a lesser known player, Henry S. Barbour, was represented by a "Tyroliene Sere-nade."

Before Wiedoeft made his first Edison record, two of the Henton titles were reissued on the unbreakable Blue Amberols. "The Kiss Waltz" was No. 1966, and "Scenes That Are Brightest" retained its E designation. Henton made his last Blue Amberol appearance in 1919, with 3737, his tried and true "Laverne." After Wiedoeft came into the picture other saxophonists playing for Edison were Wheeler Wadsworth and Chester Gaylord. The latter, some years later, made vocal records for Brunswick. Rudy Vallee received an Edison trial, but was unable to give a satisfactory performance of the fast display numbers the recording experts wanted.

Turning back to the ancient days of the phonograph, the earliest Columbia saxophone records I have been able to find are played by Eugene Coffin and listed in the August, 1896, cylinder catalog, which says:

"The Saxophone is an instrument un-

(Continued on page 122)

MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

POLYPHON MUSIC BOX, inlaid top, 37 discs, 16" diameter, mint condition. — Seyster, 7562 Vanlage Dr., Huntington Beach, Calif. 92647 n1251

MUSIC BOXES! Fantastic large illustrated catalogue of wholesale music boxes, circus organs, nickelodeons, photo-players, reproducing pianos, other automatic instruments. Plus books, recordings, musical gifts. $2 postpaid; $5 subscription ($12 value) to next 6 issues. Money-back guarantee if not delighted! — David Bowers, Box 1669D, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90210 mh64051

ORGANS—MELODEONS

REED ORGANS, melodions, bought, sold repaired. Reeds tuned, voiced replacements. — C. H. Gunzinger, Box 276, Williamsville, Vt. 05362 ap6675

MUSICAL ANTIQUE BOOKS

INTERESTING stories, pictures and research about restored musical antiques, in 52-page book. $1.25 postpaid from — The Musical Museum, Deansboro, N.Y. d128041

PHONOGRAPHS

PHONOGRAPHS repaired: New spare parts for Edison phonographs. Send stamp for list. Phone: (201) 748-8046. — Gerichten, 23 Waldo Ave., Bloomfield, N.J. 07003 j1128041

ANTIQUA PHONOGRAPH Books, Instruction Manuals, Catalogs for sale. Send 2 stamps for free list.—Allen Koenigsberg, 3400 Snyder Ave., Brooklyn, N.Y. 11203 mh6867

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

WANTED TO BUY: Schoenhut baby grand piano, must have 15 black keys, 22 white keys, old original finish, flat metal bar action like a xylophone action, should have 2 sets of bars one for the black keys and one for the white. State price and condition. Will not make offer. Phone 507-334-7772 or write — Stoeckel's Antique Dolls, 615 N.W. Third St., Fort Lauderdale, Minn. 55041 d30401

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR SALE

HURDY-GURDY (Viele a Roue), 18th century, made by Colson, Amirecourt, France. Lute-shaped body, 6 string, excellent condition $1,500.00. Postage & insurance extra. Photo $1. California residents add 6% tax. — Russ Harrison (209) 523-6037. n1272

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

rivalled in sweetness of tone, and Mr. Coffin's work on it is of an extremely high order. These records are among the most pleasing novelties we have ever presented."

Coffin's solos were numbered from 3501 through 3508, and the titles were "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep"—with variations; "Sea Flower Polka" ("with Marvelous Triple-Tongue Execution"); "The Palms"; "Polonaise"; "Fantasie for Saxophone"; "Culver Polka"; "Say Au Revoir, But Not Good-bye," and "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp."

Columbia saxophone recording before the Twentieth Century began and for some years afterward must have left a good deal to be desired, for no Coffin records were in the 1898 catalog. Three sax solos by an unidentified performer - 12700, "The Heart Bowed Down"; 12701, Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana," and 12702, "Schubert's Serenade" are in the 1901 cylinder catalog, but they were dropped by 1904, and in 1907 the yearly listing was still without any saxophone performances.

The saxophone made its first appearance on Columbia double-faced discs in December, 1908, when No. A597, the oddly titled "Morceau D' Elevation," a solo by Steve Porpora, was coupled with Vincent Buono's cornet version of Gounod's "Berceuse." Porpora must have had some prominence, because he was afterwards chosen to make an almost unknown Edison Diamond Disc, No. 80095, on which he played "Alice Where Art Thou?" as a duet with a clarinet performer, Antonio Giammatteo. The reverse side was the Treasure Waltz from Strauss' "Gypsy Baron," by Armand Vecsey and His Hungarian Orchestra.

The once famous and vastly popular Brown Brothers appeared in the Columbia monthly list for October, 1911, and received a big send-off. They were then the Brown Brothers Saxophone Quintet rather than the Six Brown Brothers. (Obviously, Harry Finkelstein had not yet been added to the family). Their first offerings were two numbers they seemed to delight in playing, No. A1041, "American Patrol" and "The Bullfrog and the Coon Medley." Said the supplement;

"One of the finest and most uniquely attractive novelties we have offered in many months. The peculiarly mellow and beautiful tone of a single saxophone is most impressive at all times, but a quintet of these instruments, forming a combination from which all orchestral harmonic effects can be obtained, forms one of the most delightful sources of musical entertainment imaginable. The Brown Brothers Saxophone Quintet is an organization practically unique and has been heard everywhere throughout the United States in vaudeville in one of the most successful musical specialties now on the boards. The selections recorded will prove unusually popular; the 'American Patrol' being well-known as a selection that is as distinctively and typically American as music can be made. 'The Bull-Frog and the Coon' introduces some very popular airs, including 'Cubana Glide,' 'When the Moon Plays Peek-a-Boo,' 'Chicken' (Reel) and 'The Bull-Frog and the Coon.' Such perfection in saxophone playing has seldom if ever been recorded before."

"The Bull-Frog and the Coon" was a "coon song" which Ada Jones had made popular on records, but which had long passed its popularity when the Brown Brothers' Columbia record was waxed. They apparently liked to play it because it gave the bass sax an opportunity to produce humorous "bullfrog grunts," and it was one of the numbers they recorded when, as the Six Brown Brothers, they began playing for Victor in 1915. In 1919 they went to Emerson, but returned to Victor a couple of years later.

About the same time as the Columbia record was issued, the Quintet made some Everlasting Indestructible cylinders. The October, 1911, catalog contains two-minute 407, a solo, "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp" (which Eugene Coffin had played for Columbia 15 years before) by the leader of the troupe, Tom Brown. The Quintet was heard in 408, "The Bull-Frog and the Coon Medley"; 409, "The Billboard" and "Independencia Marches," and a four-minute, 1321, of "The American Patrol."

I don't know whether any of the Brown Brothers are still living, but I have death notices of three from Variety and The Billboard. William (Bill) died at the age of 66 in Chicago on June 25, 1946. By that time the Sextet had broken up and he was working in a Loop restaurant. Surviving were his father, and the four other Brown Brothers — Thomas, Verne, Alex and Fred.

Fred Brown, who was perhaps the youngest of the group, died, aged 55, in Chicago, on February 9, 1949. He was survived by three brothers and a sister. Tom died August 29, 1950, in the Illinois Masonic Hospital, Chicago. He was 68. The Billboard mentioned that the Sextet had appeared in the Ziegfield Follies and on the Orpheum Circuit. The June, 1915, Victor supplement which described their first Victor record, "That Moanin' Saxophone Rag," said they were then being featured in Charles B. Dillingham's production of "Ohin Chin." The Victor supplement showed a photo of the group, with five looking like brothers. I take it that one disguised in blackface and clown costume is Finkelstein.

After that October, 1911, record by the Brown Brothers' Quintet, no more saxophone records appeared in the Columbia catalog until May, 1917, when the astonishing statement was made, or at least implied, that until that time Columbia had never made a saxophone disc. The new offerings were by the Saxo Sextet, which I suspect was the same group as Harry A. Yerkes' Saxophone Sextet. Yerkes seems to have had some sort of a Columbia recording association. A photograph of the players is given, but I can't be sure of the identity of any, although one man looks like Wheeler Wadsworth. Record No. A-2203 combined "Poor Butterfly" with "Allah's Holiday Medley" and No. A2195, the standard show-piece, "American Patrol," (previously played by the Browns) with "Call of a Nation." The Saxo Sextet afterwards made many more Columbia records. Here is part of the announcement that gave the impression Columbia had never before distributed saxophone records:

"Announcement of saxophone recordings by the Columbia Company has been delayed until this time owing to its principle to issue no records until practical perfection is reached in reproducing the instrument or voice in question. In all recording experience no instrument has presented the difficulties of the saxophone . . . (The) singular, dim, rich tone of the saxophone has at last, and we believe for the first time, been absolutely reproduced in all its fidelity on the initials records by the Saxo Sextet. . . ."

Three months later, in August, Columbia issued the first saxophone solos it had announced since Pompora's 1908 effort. No description was given except for the heading, "Popular Saxophone Solos by Fred Allen," but the catalog number was A2099, and the titles, "The Sunshine of Your Smile" and "Somewhere a Voice is Calling."

This record has been the cause of much amusing speculation as to the identity of the "Fred Allen" who played it. That greatest of radio comedians, the late John Florence Sullivan, who used the stage name of Fred Allen, was asked so many times if he had made saxophone records for Columbia that he came to consider the question extremely annoying. He assented profanely that he never had played the saxophone and had no desire to learn.

In October, 1917, the same nonchalant treatment was given to another saxophone coupling. Under the heading, "Saxophone Selections By Brown," but with no descriptive matter, record A2320 was listed. On it Fred H. Brown (obviously one of the Six Brown Brothers) tootled "Love, Here Is My Heart" and "Kiss Me Again."

And now I think I have solved the mystery of the identity of the saxophone player, "Fred Allen." I have both the Allen and the Brown discs and have discovered an interesting fact. Their serial numbers show the recording was done in 1916, although they were not listed until late 1917. Of the two Allen numbers, "Sunshine of Your Smile" was 46985 in serial order, and "Somewhere a Voice is Calling," 46986. Fred Brown's "Kiss Me Again" was 46992, and "Love, Here Is My Heart," 46993.

In other words, Allen's highest serial number and Brown's lowest are only six digits apart, indicating they were recorded within a day or two of each other. Taking into consideration that both players had the first name of Fred, the conclusion is irresistible — Fred Allen and Fred Brown must have been the same man! Probably the numbers between 46986 and 46992 were given to unissued saxophone solos.

Now, before beginning our study of Rudy Wiedoeft's recording career, let's go back once more to the elder days of recording, and deal briefly with the only pioneer saxophone recorder who may be considered to have won even a small personal following for himself. I am thinking of Jean Moeremans, whose name suggests French descent, and who was star saxophone soloist for the U. S. Marine Band of Washington in the 1890's and early 1900's. He began making Berliner records well before the turn of the century and did Victor recording for a number of years after the 1890's had become history.

By the end of 1899 the National Gram-o-phone Corporation had been set up to obtain control of Emile Berliner's talking machine and record business and, by shocking and unorthodox methods, it soon succeeded. Its December, 1899, catalog contains 15 solos by Jean Moeremans, eight of them bearing Berliner numbers ranging from 0521 through 0607 and the remaining seven numbered from 3900 to 3908. There also are three saxophone and flute duets by Moeremans and Frank Badollet, another Marine Band soloist, and two sax and clarinet duets by Moeremans and a gentleman (first name not given) rejoining in, or handicapped by, the unusual family name of Vompoucke.

Every time the saxophone is mentioned in the National Gram-o-phone catalog the word is spelled "saxaphone." The same misspelling is followed in Berliner's catalog for the spring of 1900, issued a short time before the inventor of the lateral cut disc had to turn over his business to the National charlatans. I'll correct the spelling in the following catalog quotation:

"This talented young musician stands at the head of the saxophone soloists of the world.

"Mr. Moeremans' brilliant playing and the full rich tone he obtains from his instrument, makes his records a very pleasing addition to the Gram-o-phone catalog."

Eight of the records have the same numbers, 0521 through 0607, as those in the National catalog, but there is an addition, 0829, "Carnival of Venice — with variations," one of Moeremans' most popular numbers. The number of saxophone-flute duets by Moeremans and Badollet has grown from National's three to a total of ten. Badollet also has three flute solos.

When Eldridge R. Johnson reached an agreement with Berliner whereby he began to issue seven-inch Improved discs made under Berliner methods, he obtained the services of "Mr. Jean B. H. Moeremans, soloist of the U. S. Marine Band—Saxaphone (still spelled wrong!) Solos." These were shortly afterward issued with Victor labels and numbered as follows: V 401, "Little Nell," an Arthur Pryor composition whose name sounds as if it were suggested by the heroine of Dickens' "Old Curiosity Shop"; V 464, "Felice Waltz"; V 465, Gounod's "Serenade"; V 466, Fantasie on "Old Folks at Home"; V 467, "Carnival of Venice," and V 468, "The Star—Concert Mazurka."

There were also ten "saxaphone" and flute duets by Moeremans and Badollet, issued with the comment:

ANNOYED COMEDIAN. The late Fred Allen, famed radio humorist, and his wife, Portland Hoffa, autographed this photo for Jim Walsh. Allen was frequently irritated by being asked if he played saxophone solos issued on Columbia records under the name of "Fred Allen." He made it clear he didn't. Jim Walsh solves the mystery of the Columbia "Fred Allen" in this article.

"Note - The above records are the most pleasing and musical instrumental duets ever made."

By August, 1904, Moeremans' Victor representation had fallen to two discs, No. 2854, "Carnival of Venice," which could be had in either seven or ten-inch size, and V 2847, "Old Folks at Home — with variations," seven-inch only. By this time the spelling of "saxophone" had been corrected, and there was this brief comment: "Mr. Moeremans is considered the best saxophone player in America, if not in the world, and has made for us some very artistic records."

A year and a half later, in January, 1906, the list of Moeremans' solos had grown to five, four of which were available in both sizes. A 10-inch version had been added of "Old Folks at Home—Variations"; "The Carnival of Venice" was still available, and also included were 2971, "The Merry Postillion," and 4034, "The Gypsy's Serenade," a melodious air played without variations. The fifth record, available in only seven-inch, was 4035, containing Moeremans' own composition, "Swell of the Day—air and variations." By May, 1907, "Swell of the Day" had been dropped because seven-inch records no longer were being made, but the other four were still cataloged.

When double-faced records were introduced late in 1908, three of the Moeremans solos were taken over.

"Carnival of Venice" was coupled on 16244 with "Sylvia," a piccolo solo by Darius Lyons; "Old Folks at Home" was given an incongruous coupling on 16268 with "The Larboard Watch," sung by Harry Macdonough and William F. Hooley, and, on 16272, "The Gypsy's Serenade" was paired with "By the Watermelon Vine," played by Arthur Pryor's Band.

In 1911 Victor decided the dull and poorly recorded "Old Folks at Home" (I have it, so I know whereof I speak!) was impairing the sale of "The Larboard Watch." The latter was recoupled on 16949 with a bass solo, "Asleep in the Deep," by Hooley, which made a much more suitable combination, of two sea songs.

The double-faced couplings were Jean B. H. Moeremans' last appearances in the Victor catalog. I wonder how long he remained with the U. S. Marine Band and what finally became of him. "Jimmy the Greek" who makes bets on presidential elections and sporting events probably would give odds of 100 to one that the most popular saxophone player of the 1890's is no longer alive.

And now having traced in some detail, the history of early saxophone recordings we will turn next month to the delayed discussion of Rudy Wiedoeft's brilliant career.

(To be continued)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

RUDY WIEDOEFT and OTHER SAXOPHONE PLAYERS

PART II

I. Rudy Begins Recording

Something rather surprising happened a few months later, when another of Wiedoeft's waltz compositions, "Valse Llewellyn," was announced in the February, 1918, list. I find it odd that Rudy's photograph appeared on the cover of the January Edison Amberola Monthly, with the caption: "Rudy Wiedoeft, Saxophone, new Edison artist who makes his debut in the Blue Amberol list of February," overlooking the fact that a record by him had been placed on sale four months earlier. How could a record company, or its publicity writers, be so forgetful?

The Monthly gave no biographical information concerning its cover subject. The only mention of him on the inside pages was in the following:

"Everybody likes instrumental records, so you won't have any trouble whatever in disposing of any of the seven band, orchestra and instrumental solo records on the February list. If any of these instrumental records stands out above the others it is the 'Valse Llewellyn,' played on the saxophone by Rudy Wiedoeft. No matter how many of this record you have ordered, we are frank to state that we do not believe you have ordered enough to meet the demand it will create."

Another Blue Amberol, "Saxophone Sobs," markedly different from the waltzes that had preceded it, went on sale in March and was numbered 3421. With it Wiedoeft's recording career came to a halt, for he had gone into military service. The August, 1918, Edison Amberola Monthly published a fine photograph of him in uniform, which is reproduced with this article, accompanied by the following comment:

"Another Edison Artist Joins Marine Corps . . . Here is a picture of Rudy Wiedoeft who has made a number of Edison saxophone records, in his uniform as a U.S. Marine.

"Rudy is another patriotic member of our staff of artists who didn't have to go but who voluntarily gave up a number of profitable engagements to join Uncle Sam's Sea Soldiers. He is now a sergeant stationed at Mare Island, California. Wiedoeft has promised to do some more recording for us when the rumpus is over and we hope he keeps out of the way of the Big Berthas, because Rudy is the best saxophonist before the public today."

The Edison Diamond Disc catalog, dated November, 1918, contains a picture of Wiedoeft in Marine uniform, showing him full face. This is the only photo I have seen of him wearing glasses.

IN MILITARY SERVICE. Rudy Wiedoeft was stationed in California, as a member of the U.S. Marines, during the final year of World War I. He is shown here in his uniform as a Marine sergeant.

II. Virtuoso Freelance

When the 26-year-old Rudy Wiedoeft was released from Marine Corps duty in 1918, he immediately went back to recording. He seems not to have played again for Edison until 1920, but his name was soon appearing in Brunswick, Emerson, Aeolian-Vocalion and Pathé lists, and perhaps others. Columbia did not use him until 1926, and then the records were made in England. He first appeared in Victor supplements in 1920, as a member of the Palace Trio and the Wiedoeft-Wadsworth Quartet, and in the January, 1921, list he played a saxophone obligato to Albert Campbell and Henry Burr's duet (No. 18721) of "Feather Your Nest." His first Victor solo coupling combined "Saxophobia" and "Valse Erica."

Although he joined Burr's Eight Popular Victor Artists in 1922, Wiedoeft probably remained a free-lance artist throughout his recording career. Beginning in 1926 and continuing through 1929, Columbia called him an "exclusive Columbia artist" on the strength of the English-made records, but it is doubtful that he had a contract to make only Columbia records. He continued to record for companies other than Victor while touring with the Eight.

Little needs to be said about the records Wiedoeft made for nine or ten years after his Edison debut. They were mostly his own compositions, such as "Saxophobia," "Valse Erica," "Valse Llewellyn" and "Saxarella," together with standard numbers that let him display his unfailing beauty of tone and flawless technique. But some interesting things can be told about the recording groups with which he was associated.

Particularly worthy of attention are the Palace Trio and the Wiedoeft-Wadsworth Quartet. The former was composed of Wiedoeft, saxophone; Mario Perry, accordion, and J. Russell (he spelled it with only one "l") Robinson, piano. The quartet included Wiedoeft and his great rival for saxophone honors, Wheeler Wadsworth, and two pianists — Robinson and Harry Akst. Both ensembles seem to have been organized in 1919, but were most active in 1920.

An interesting Victor record, announced in May, 1920, had the quartet playing "The Crocodile—Fox Trot" on one side and the Trio giving forth with "I'll See You in C-U-B-A Medley" on the other. A Washington, D.C., record firm, Ansell, Bishop and Turner, Inc., which advertised that it carried in stock "every record in the Victor catalog," was so impressed by "The Crocodile," that it placed a sign in its display window terming it "the livest record ever made" and urging passers-by to come in and hear it. To make the invitation more impressive, it ordered several crocodiles from Florida and had them swimming around (unhappily, no doubt) in a suitable window aquarium. As can be seen by the accompanying photograph, pedestrians really stopped and gawked at the display.

Another amusing incident occurs to me in connection with the Wiedoeft-Wadsworth Quartet. In October, 1962, I published in HOBBIES a directory of early recording groups in which I said the quartet members were Wiedoeft, Wadsworth, Robinson and Akst.

(Continued from preceding page)

A veteran, usually well informed, record collector, from whom I enjoyed hearing occasionally, wrote to tell me I was wrong. He said the members were Wiedoeft, Wadsworth and two accordion players who, he thought, were Guido and Pietro Deiro. I replied that I had before me the Victor supplement with a photograph of the quartet and each player identified by name, so knew what I had written was right. I also said that in 1920 the Deiro brothers, who didn't get along very well, probably were not on speaking terms and certainly were not playing together. I have never since heard from my correspondent, but I am reproducing combined pictures of the Palace Trio and the Quartet, so that, if he still reads HOBBIES, he can see for himself that I was right.

III. Wiedoeft's Associates

Two of Wiedoeft's fellow players in the trio and quartet won considerable distinction for themselves as song writers. And that reminds me that in 1919 Wiedoeft himself composed music to the words of songs written by Al Bernard, one of the most brilliant comedians who ever made records. I have been promising myself for something like 30 years that one of these days I shall write a series about Bernard for HOBBIES and I really must get around to it. The trouble is that I have so much material concerning my old friend Al that I dread going through it. Anyway, Bernard, who was fully capable of composing his own tunes, although he couldn't read music, and who seldom took more than half an hour to write both the words and the melody of a song, penned some numbers for which Wiedoeft did the music. Among them were "Lone Star" and "The Saxophone Blues." (In those days, before Negro women "blues singers" such as "Ma" Rainey, Bessie Smith and Mamie Smith, had been heard of, Al Bernard was regarded as the only "blues" singer of any importance.) But, strangely, instead of recording these Bernard-Wiedoeft songs himself, Al let his blackface comedy partner, Ernest Hare, sing them for Pathé, Aeolian-Vocalian and other companies.

Russel Robinson also was a song writing partner of Bernard's. He wrote the music of the first Edison duet by Bernard and Hare, "I Want to Hold You in My Arms." After Hare ceased working regularly with Bernard, to become the partner of Billy Jones, Robinson, who had a fine deep voice, took his place as the pompous blackfaced basso who quarreled with Bernard impersonating a falsetto voiced "wench." Bernard and Robinson sang on radio and in vaudeville, calling themselves "The Dixie Stars," and wrote many songs together. Among them were "Blue-Eyed Sally," "Let Me Be the First to Kiss You Good Morning" and "When Dixie Stars are Playing Peek-a-boo." They also made a laughable, double-faced, electrical Brunswick disc of two of their Negro dialect sketches, "It Takes a Cincinnati Yellow to Satisfy a Georgia Brown" and "My Time is Charlie's Now." Robinson may not have known Bernard's full first name, for in one of their records he calls him "Albert" when it was really Alfred. By a reverse twist, the Victor record supplement for June, 1925, refers to Albert Campbell as "Alfred."

Robinson was born at Indianapolis, Ind., July 8, 1892, and died September 30, 1962, in Palmsdale, Cal. As a small boy he taught himself to play the piano, then, when he was 11, began study with private tutors. His first compositions, "Sappho Rag," and "(Hold Me, Parson, Hold Me) I Feel Religion Comin' On," were published when he was 17, and the "Religion" song was recorded by Arthur Collins for Columbia and Edison. He was at one time a member of the Original Dixieland Jazz Band and claimed authorship of the "Original Dixieland One-Step." Robinson also maintained he was the first American performer to introduce jazz music abroad. Among songs for which he wrote either the words or music were a number of hits—"Margie," "Mary Lou," "Singin' the Blues," "Memories of France," "Ag-

(Continued on page 119)

WIEDOEFT ORGANIZATIONS. This combined picture shows two ensembles that Rudy Wiedoeft headed in 1919-20. On the left is the Palace Trio, of Wiedoeft, saxophone, Mario Perry, accordion and J. Russel Robinson, piano. The Wiedoeft-Wadsworth Quartet is on the right. F. Wheeler Wadsworth and Wiedoeft, saxophones; Robinson and Harry Akst, piano.

MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

MUSIC BOXES! Fantastic large illustrated catalogue of wholesale music boxes, circus organs, nickelodeons, photo-players, reproducing pianos, other automatic instruments. Plus books, recordings, musical gifts. $2 postpaid; $5 subscription ($12 value) to next 6 issues. Money-back guarantee if not delighted! — David Bowers, Box 1669D, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90210 mh64051

ORGANS—MELODEONS

REED ORGANS, melodions, bought, sold repaired. Reeds tuned, revoiced replacements. — C. H. Gunzinger, Box 276, Williamsville, Vt. 05362 ap6675

MUSICAL ANTIQUE BOOKS

INTERESTING stories, pictures and research about restored musical antiques, in 52-page book. $1.25 postpaid from — The Musical Museum, Deansboro, N.Y. d128041

PHONOGRAPHS

PHONOGRAPHS repaired: New spare parts for Edison phonographs. Send stamp for list. Phone: (201) 748-8046. — Gerichten, 23 Waldo Ave., Bloomfield, N.J. 07003 jly129041

ANTIQUE PHONOGRAPH Books, instruction Manuals, Catalogs for sale. Send 2 stamps for free list. — Allen Koenigsberg, 3400 Snyder Ave., Brooklyn, N.Y. 11203 mh6867

EDISON "Idelia" phonograph wanted. Offering $1200.00 for same in excellent or better condition. — E. Mathewson, 141 Fourth St., Toronto 14, Ont., Canada. f3253

EDISON With morning glory horn wanted. — Keith Andreucci, 3517 Walton Ave., Fort Worth, Tex. 76133 d1821

FOR SALE: Edison phonograph with large morning glory Wooden horn $1,000.00 or best offer. Phone 703-434-2797. — R. L. Jeffries, Box 165, Harrisonburg, Va. d1481

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

WANTED TO BUY: Schoenhut baby grand piano, must have 15 black keys, 22 white keys, old original finish, flat metal bar action like a xylophone action, should have 2 sets of bars one for the black keys and one for the white. State price and condition. Will not make offer. Phone 507-334-7772 or write — Stoeckel's Antique Dolls, 615 N.W. Third St., Fort Lauderdale, Minn. 55021 d30401

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR SALE

For Sale: "Wm Kanbe" square grand piano in excellent original condition, built 1873. Rosewood case. Accepting bids. Ph. 812-533-6754. — Mrs. Carl N. Miller, Sr., RR 1, Box 309, West Terre Haute, Ind. 47885 f3238

SPORT ITEMS

BASEBALLIANA. A one-hour collection on tape of old-time baseball songs and stories featuring songs about and/or voices of Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig, Mickey Mantle, Jackie Robinson, Joe DiMaggio. Also DeWolf Hopper's "Casey at the Bat," The Man who fanned Casey, The Boy in the Bleachers, Abbot & Costello—Who's on first, International Baseball Game—"British Bulldogs vs Nazi Swastikas", many other similar items. All these for $12.50 including free lists of other old-time tapes and records. — Arnold's Archives, 1106 Eastwood, SE, E. Grand Rapids, Mich. 49506 d30441

BUTTONS WANTED

WANTED: Old buttons, badges, jewelry. —Earl Romey, Box 291, Bluffton, Ind. jsl2407

Wanted: Arkansas State Seal button back marked "Hyde & Goodrich" or "Horstmann & Allien". State condition and price first letter. — Allen Bennett, 3624 Northview, Jackson, Miss. 39206 o128271

BUTTONS FOR SALE

OLD BUTTONS, 85 assorted, 75 vegetable ivory or 40 black glass, $1.50—Mrs. Karl S. Gerstenauer, Pleasant Valley Village, R.D. 2, Milton, Pa. 17847 d6867

10, Small, black glass "Silver Lustres," $3.75. 10, small, black gl. "Goldies," $3.75. 14, Western Germany, assorted, $2.50. Miscellaneous pictures—calicos, stencils. Miscellaneous chinaware. Old sample cards, assorted. Approval. Prepaid — Ethel Miller, 1504 West Hovey, Normal, Ill. 61761 t3239

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS (Continued from page 38)

Again") and "Beale Street Mama." Besides Bernard, song writers with whom he worked included Addy Britt, Con Conrad, Benny Davis, Noble Sissle and Roy Turk.

Harry Akst was born in New York City August 15, 1894, and died in Hollywood, Cal., March 31, 1963. He came of a musical family, and his father was a violinist at the Metropolitan Opera. When he was five he began studying the piano, and before he had graduated from grammar school he gave a recital in Mendelssohn Hall. Akst became a professional pianist in his second year of high school. For four years he was Nora Bayes' accompanist. While at Camp Upton in military service during 1918 he became an associate of Irving Berlin and served for a time as a writer of musical notations for Berlin, who could work out melodies at the piano but couldn't put them on paper. He appeared in the films, "June Moon" and "42nd Street," and went abroad with Al Jolson to entertain American armed forces in 1943. Among the songs in which he had a hand were "A Smile Will Go A Long, Long Way," "You Don't Need the Wine to Have a Wonderful Time," "Dinah," "Am I Blue?" "Home Again Blues," "Laddie Boy," "Birmingham Bertha" and "I'm the Medicine Man for the Blues." He, like Robinson, made large numbers of player piano rolls, and he and Frank Banta recorded several piano duets.

I know little of Mario Perry except that he was one of the leading piano-acordion players of the 1920s, but I have said enough, I think, to show that Wiedoeft associated himself with performers of outstanding quality in the Palace Trio and the Wiedoeft-Wadsworth Quartet. But who, I wonder, were the members of the Rudy Wiedoeft Trio that made a Brunswick record in 1924? And who played in Rudy Wiedoeft's Saxophone Sextet that recorded two numbers for Aeolian-Vocalion in 1923? Mention of A-V reminds me that when Wiedoeft made a sax solo of "Valse Erica" for that company late in 1919 his full name was not used either in the catalog or on the hill-and-dale record. He was merely called "Wiedoeft." Another amusing thing is that when Rudy's name appeared for the first time in a Victor yearly catalog—the one for 1922—a ludicrous misprint appeared. Typographical errors were rare in Victor's beautifully printed publicity matter, but in that 1922 catalog his name was given as "Ruby Wiedoeft." If the Victor catalog compiler had ever heard—which he probably hadn't—of Miss Bessie Meeklen having made Edison saxophone records in 1893, he might have thought there was nothing out of the ordinary about Miss (!) "Ruby" Wiedoeft playing "Saxophobia" and the recurring "Valse Erica." Then, too, Ruby can be a man's name. Edison had a banjo player, Ruby Brooks, who died about 1906.

"LIVE" ATTRACTION. After the Victor record of "The Crocodile," by the Wiedoeft-Wadsworth Quartet, was issued in May, 1920, Ansell, Bishop & Turner, Inc., Victor dealers in Washington, D.C., proclaimed it "the livest record" ever made. As an advertising stunt, the firm imported live crocodiles from Florida to be displayed in the store windows. Large crowds were attracted. In this picture you can't see the crocodiles for the crowd.

Only one record of Wiedoeft's saxophone solos was in that 1922 Victor catalog. It consisted of the titles just mentioned. The record, No. 18728, quickly became a standard seller and was listed in the September, 1924, supplement as one of the "Ten Victor Records That Should be in Every Home." The supplement description of the coupling was accompanied by a good photo entitled "Rudy Wiedoeft Tunes Up." It showed him blowing a saxophone while with one hand he was fingering a piano keyboard.

The supplement said:

"Interest in the saxophone has of late so increased that Rudy Wiedoeft has made these two numbers just to show its possibilities as a solo concert instrument. The 'Valse Erica' is in serious, the 'Saxophobia' in comic vein, and both are the artist's own compositions. The 'Valse Erica' is of course in waltz tempo, and 'Saxophobia' can be adapted to any one of a number of grotesque steps—or even to the one-step. All the possibilities of the instrument—difficult intervals, change of register, tremolo and other tongueing effects—all the things which so test the courage of the player and so amaze the hearer!"

IV. Incidental Performance

I have already mentioned that Wiedoeft played a sax obbligato in Campbell and Burr's Victor of "Feather Your Nest." During the next few years he made a number of other "incidental" appearances in both vocal and dance records, some of which probably haven't come to my attention. Among these was a 1921 Brunswick of "Bright Eyes," by Carl Fenton's Orchestra, in which he performed a solo passage. Then there was a 1924 Vocalion of the Irving Berlin hit, "What'll I Do?" beautifully sung by another Irving—Irving Kaufman—with a sax obbligato by Wiedoeft and a remarkably well recorded piano accompaniment by Frank Banta, the Eight Victor Artists pianist. This was made after Wiedoeft had been made a member of the troupe for about two years.

Interesting, too, is the fact that Wiedoeft played an obbligato in Henry Burr's May, 1924, Victor record, No. 19282, of Dorothy Terriss, Ferdie Grofe and Paul Whiteman's hit song, "Wonderful One," which was "adapted from a theme by Marshall Neilan," a Hollywood movie director. John McCormack had recorded this song the previous November, but Billy Murray quoted Victor officials as saying the Burr version sold twice as many copies in its first week as McCormack's had during all the preceding period. One reason, perhaps, was that it had a "strong" coupling, Wendell Hall singing his own composition, "Land of My Sunset Dreams." As usual on most Burr recordings of the late acoustic and early electric period, Banta played the piano accompaniment.

In January, 1925, Victor issued No. 19509, a fox trot record of a Wiedoeft composition, "Sax-o-phun," by George Olsen and His Music, with incidental stunts by Rudy. Its companion was "Hey! Hey! and Hee! Hee!" by the International Novelty Orchestra. The supplement description shows James Edward Richardson's invariable felicity of style:

"A happy-hick sort of fox trot featuring Rudy Wiedoeft, the composer, and his famous saxophone, in laugh and slap-tongue effects; and a companion with a vocal duet refrain, a harmonica solo and novelties. 'Sax-o-phun' has been played by Wiedoeft on his concert tours as an exhibition piece; it makes a remarkably fine fox trot, humorous but a splendid demonstration of skill. 'Hey! Hey! and Hee! Hee!' is a good companion. 'Sax-o-phun' is an excellent training number for exhibition dances and an excellent model for young saxophonists. Wiedoeft himself wriggles a bit when he plays it."

Two interesting discs I have not so far mentioned are Rudy's 1919 Brunswick of another Berlin song, "Nobody Knows (And Nobody Seems to Care)," and "Lonesome Road," both of which he plays in fox trot time with a two-piano accompaniment by Carl Fenton and Harry Akst.

In 1919-20 Rudy made some duets with the late George Hamilton Green, the xylophone wizard of the All Star Trio and Green Brothers Novelty who in his later years gave up his favorite instrument to become a cartoonist for Collier's and other magazines. (I wonder why Wiedoeft was chosen instead of Wheeler Wadsworth, Green's All Star partner.) One of their Emerson records combined two of the greatest hits ever written, "Beautiful Ohio" and "Till We Meet Again." Speaking of the "Ohio" side the supplement said: "The greatest waltz of the century meets its finest interpretation right here." George Green's brother, Lewis Green, who was a member of the Novelty Band, is still living in Arlington Heights, Ill., and is an unfailing HOBBIES reader. Another xylophone playing brother, Joe Green, died many years ago.

Late in 1925, when his association with the Eight Popular Victor Artists was nearing its end, Wiedoeft played obligatos to one of Henry Burr's early electric recordings — a double-faced combination of the big Irving Berlin (again!) hit, "You Forgot to Remember" and "Alone at Last." Considerable effort was required to produce this record. On August 19, four takes were made of "You Forgot to Remember" and three of "Alone at Last," but the microphones must have behaved badly for none was acceptable. On August 31, four more tries were made to record "Remember" and three more of "Alone," before an acceptable version was obtained of the latter. Finally, on September 14, another four "takes" were made of "Remember" before No. 12 achieved a passing grade. Wiedoeft played the sax in all of these, and Lou Raderman the violin in "Alone at Last." Frank Banta was the pianist in the two August "dates," but, for some reason, he was not present on September 14, and his place was taken by one of the Victor orchestra conductors, LeRoy Shield.

At some time during 1921, Wiedoeft got together the orchestra known as Rudy Wiedoeft's Californians, which made a sizable number of dance records for companies including Edison and Pathé, but considerably more for Brunswick and Aeolian-Vocalion than any other recording concerns. I do not know who the members were, but I am almost certain, from a picture of the group in a 1922 Vocalion supplement, that a cornet player was Jules Levy, Jr., son of the more famous Jules Levy Sr., who was ranked as the world's greatest cornetist in a period that extended from the 1870's to his death in 1903. (He made tin-foil records at exhibitions of the original Edison cylinder phonograph in 1878.) The Californians stopped recording in 1922, perhaps because Rudy had signed up with the Eight Popular Victor Artists and needed to be available for concert tours.

HERO WORSHIPPER. Rudy Vallee (above), as an aspiring young saxophone player, admired Rudy Wiedoeft so greatly that he changed his name from Hubert Prior Vallee to pay tribute to his idol.

Not a great while afterward, another dance band, Herb Wiedoeft's Cinderella Roof Orchestra, which was based in Los Angeles, began to record. Since Wiedoeft is an uncommon name, I imagine Herb was Rudy's brother, and suspect Rudy may have turned the orchestra over to him when he decided to accept Burr's offer to become the Eight's star instrumentalist.

V. Rudy Joins the Great "Eight"

These questions are now before the meeting: (1) When did Henry Burr's brilliant light concert company become the Eight Famous Victor Artists? (2) When was the word "Famous" changed to "Popular?" (3) Why was it changed? (4) When did Rudy Wiedoeft join the organization?

I don't know when the group, which had been known as the Record Makers, first became the Eight Famous Victor Artists, but the change took place before any of the members were exclusive Victor artists. Billy Murray, Henry Burr, Albert Campbell, John Meyer and Frank Croxton signed exclusive contracts in the autumn of 1920, but several months earlier the troupe was already being advertised as the Famous Victor Artists. I have recently acquired a program which shows them giving a concert under that name in Steinway Hall, Boston, Mass., on Sunday, May 16, 1920.

The Voice of the Victor, a monthly magazine published for Victor dealers, frequently, but not always, gave the travel schedules of recording artists. I tried to determine from it just when the name was changed to the Eight Popular Victor Artists, but found it couldn't be relied on. The Voice called them "the Eight Popular" for the first time in September, 1923. Prior to that "Famous" had always been used. However, when the ensemble gave a concert in Appleton, Wis., on October 4, 1922, an advertising sign beneath which they were photographed called them the Eight Popular Victor Artists. But when they had appeared again in Boston in October, 1921, they were still the "Famous." The change probably occurred early in 1922. And why was it made? Most likely the idea was to emphasize the fact that they sang and played popular music and there was nothing classical about their offerings.

When did Wiedoeft join? I don't know precisely, but it was in 1922. The late Fred Van Eps told me he left the Eight that year, and, when the Appleton concert was given in October, Wiedoeft was one of the performers.

(Going back to September, 1923, when the Voice first referred to "the Eight Popular Victor Artists," it was the first month in many years in which the Victor supplement contained no Red Seal records. That was because the company was combining its single-faced Red Seals for the first time in double-faced form and preferred to issue no new titles until the couplings were complete. Later in September the monthly supplement began to be replaced with four-page weekly folders in which Red Seal discs were included, but the monthly booklets returned the following April. The annual Victor catalog for 1924 omitted Red Seal records, but there was a separate red covered catalog of them.)

If the time of Wiedoeft's joining the Eight is not precisely known, the event that led to his becoming a member is not in doubt. It goes back to the fact that Burr and Fred Van Eps, the troupe's star instrumentalist, from 1918 through part of 1922, owned the Van Eps-Burr Company, which manufactured banjos to Fred's special design.

Billy Murray, said that, one night, a few minutes before a concert was to begin, the partners received a telegram from Lyon & Healy, Chicago musical instrument jobbers, canceling an order for banjos. I think Billy said the order was for 50,000, but perhaps it was for only 10,000. No reason was given for the cancellation, but Burr and Van Eps became furiously angry and engaged in a shouting match peppered with strong language that probably was heard, and amazed, the expectant audience in front of the curtain.

Van Eps blamed Burr's business methods. "Hank" in his turn said the banjos must not be of proper quality and blamed Van Eps. Meanwhile, the other members of the Eight were trying to conceal that they were in hilarious hysterics.

When Fred's turn came to perform before the crowded theatre, he looked, Billy said, as if he were sleep-walking, but played two numbers mechanically. Then, without bothering to bow his thanks, he raced back-stage to resume his riot with Burr. The latter had been watching from the wings and when Van Eps approached, he snarled: "Go back and bow to your audience, you slab-sided son of Satan!"—or words to that purport.

Burr always followed Van Eps in the program. He went out, sang two songs mechanically, neglected to bow, and waddled back-stage, thirsting for blood. Van Eps met him and snapped: "Now, you go back and bow to your audience, you slab-sided son of Satan!" The upshot was that Van Eps left the troupe and took over undivided operation of the banjo factory, while Burr engaged Wiedoeft in his place.

During the, something like, four years that Wiedoeft was a member, the Eight reached the peak of its popularity, and its members' salaries were at their highest. Billy Murray was paid most, followed by Wiedoeft and Banta, with Silver, Campbell, Meyer and Croxton on a somewhat lower equality. Burr, of course, kept more for himself than for any of his "hired help," which was only fair, since he had the financial responsibility and the worries of arranging and managing.

Some time after Wiedoeft "joined up," young Rudy Vallee, not then a famous dance orchestra leader but an aspiring saxophone student who worshipped Wiedoeft, witnessed a performance, then came back-stage to say the Eight were the most polished and professional entertainers he had ever seen. Billy Murray quoted him as saying, "You are my ideal of show business." He attended many more performances—chiefly, no doubt, to study Wiedoeft's technique. As The Billboard said, his intense admiration for his hero led his friends to give him the nickname of "Rudy," by which he has ever since been known.

Although he was a member of the famous concert organization for a considerable period, Wiedoeft does not seem to have been an especially gregarious type and did little to establish himself as one of the happy-go-lucky "gang." Billy Murray, Al Campbell and "Mike" Silver, with all of whom I did much talking about the Eight, seldom mentioned him.

While he was a member, however, some amusing things happened. To go back to an early recollection of my own, when I was barely a teenager, reporting for a weekly newspaper, I was astonished to meet a farmer called Billy Murray. When I commented on his famous name, he told me he had a brother who, as a young man, had "done a right smart of bumming around the country." In the course of his bumming, the brother fetched up at a ranch in the Far West and, when asked his name, said it was Murray. The cowboys, all of whom were fanatical admirers of "The Denver Nightingale's" records, asked whether he was "any kin to Billy Murray." Thinking of his relation on the Virginia farm, he replied: "Sure, he's my brother!" After that nothing was too good for the wandering Mr. Murray. He remained a guest of the cow-punchers for several months, regaling them with stories about the great comedian from his fertile imagination and never being detected in an untruth. "My brother," the Billy Murray I talked with proudly told me, "always was a powerful good liar. He still is."

What am I leading up to is this: While the Eight was so extremely popular, Billy Murray's life sometimes had a nightmarish tinge because nearly everywhere the troupe went he learned there was "some drunken bum" in the city jail, pretending to be Billy Murray, the famous recording artist. Billy recalled that when he arrived in an Ohio city a Victor dealer came up to him and gasped: "Thank God you're here! There's a drunk in jail claiming he's you, and the jail people believe it. They've been phoning to the Victor offices in Camden, telling them to come down and get their star comedian before he drinks himself to death." This was especially annoying to Billy because during his recording career he was something of a physical fitness fanatic, who did not drink, smoke or do anything else that might impair his voice or well being.

The climax came when a circus performer who may be called "Xantippe, the lady lion tamer," got it into her head that Billy Murray, the world-famous recording artist, had married and basely deserted her. She kept phoning to his home at Freeport, threatening to horsewhip him with the instrument she used to control the lions, or even to shoot him, if he didn't come back to her. Matters became so serious that Billy at length agreed to meet her.

Billy, his wife, and Monroe Silver drove together to the meeting place. When they arrived and confronted Xantippe, who was more than six feet tall and broad in proportion, Mrs. Murray asked: "Now, which of these men is the Billy Murray who married you?"

Xantippe's lip curled contemptuously. "Huh!" she said, "I didn't marry neither one of these middle-aged little shrimps! The Billy Murray I married was a tall, good-lookin' young guy!"

While Wiedoeft was a member of the ensemble, he played in the first electrically recorded Victor disc, No. 35753, "A Miniature Concert by the Eight Popular Victor Artists," announced in the June, 1925, supplement. (The troupe appears previously to have made an unsuccessful attempt to record the two-part specialty acoustically.) Part 1 included an opening chorus written by Ray Perkins; "Strut, Miss Lizzie," as a piano solo by Banta; the Sterling Trio singing "Love's Old Sweet Song"; Silver in some "Cohen" jokes; Burr singing "When You and I Were Young, Maggie" and Murray and Chorus in "Casey Jones."

Part 2 included a bit more piano music; "Sweet Genevieve," by Campbell and Burr; Wiedoeft playing part of "Saxophobia"; "Gypsy Love Song," by Croxton, and snatches of "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny" and "Massa's in de Cold, Cold Ground," by the Peerless Quartet.

A couple of months before the record came out the Eight gave one of the nation wide radio concerts Victor had inaugurated in an effort to improve record sales, and Wiedoeft played a solo. All other artists in the radio series were Red Seal stars.

The "Miniature Concert" was issued in England in October, 1926, under the Zonophone label, as No. A302, but the performers were not called "The Eight Popular Victor Artists." The Gramophone and Talking Machine News' review amuses me:

"In issuing this 12-inch record Zonophone gives the public something quite new and entertaining. It is nothing less than a variety show in miniature by well-known American artists. Why American and not British we cannot quite understand unless it be that English artists are not now appreciated by their own countrymen. We sincerely wish that this American ramp would end. Still, we must confess that these Americans do very well, though by no means better than could be accomplished by the home product."

Good old Talking Machine News! It never missed an opportunity to take a grudging attitude toward American artists, and it overlooked the fact that there was no sort of light concert company in England to compete with the Eight.

I have already mentioned Wiedoeft's playing obbligatos in two Henry Burr solos made September 14, 1925, shortly after the introduction of the electric recording process. Within a few weeks afterwards, there was a shake-up in the Eight Popular Victor Artists personnel, and Campbell, Meyer and Croxton were replaced by Carl Mathieu, Stanley Baughman and James Stanley. Sam Herman, a gifted xylophone player, took Wiedoeft's spot. The reorganized Peerless Quartet recorded three numbers on October 23, so the alteration in personnel obviously occurred at some time between Wiedoeft's September 14 appearance with Burr and the October date.

It isn't clear whether the change was the result of a sudden flare-up of temper or whether Burr had been contemplating it for some time. The last record by the "old" Peerless was made July 2, 1925. They sang "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere." On the same day the Sterling Trio (Campbell, Burr and Meyer) recorded "Down Deep in an Irishman's Heart." It is interesting to note that Campbell, Burr, Meyer and Croxton were among the members of the Victor Male Chorus that recorded the Soldiers' Chorus from "Faust" on July 16 and 30, 1925, and that the same group took part in male chorus versions of "Land of Hope and Glory" recorded on September 1 and 15 only five weeks before the "New" Peerless made its first record. Carl Mathieu also participated, so perhaps Burr had already reached an agreement with him, Baughman, Stanley and Herman.

At any rate, the change was made, and Sam Herman succeeded Wiedoeft as the solo instrumentalist. I remember hearing Herman in the spring of 1926, during another of the Victor-sponsored radio programs, and recall Murray's remarks that during a recent coal strike Herman hadn't worried about obtaining fuel to heat his house: "He just kept warm by playing his next number, 'A Bunch of Roses,' on his xylophone."

Herman and Carl Mathieu are, at this writing, the sole surviving members of the Eight Popular Victor Artists. Monroe Silver told me that he and Herman were the only ones who attended Burr's funeral at Mt. Kisco, N.Y., in April, 1941. A short sketch in the ASCAP Biographical Dictionary refers to a Samuel Herman, whom I take to be the xylophonist. He is described as a "composer, author and business man," who was born in New York City, July 9, 1891. He obtained a B.A. degree at Columbia College; had his own mail order business until 1940, and was manager of another mail order business from 1940 to 1954. His songs included "It's Great to be an American." There is no mention of his being a xylophone virtuoso, but I assume the ASCAP Sam Herman and the player are the same.

VI. After Years

It may be that Wiedoeft decided to leave the Eight because he felt he could earn more by giving recitals "on his own," and because he wanted to visit Europe. Visit it he did, for the October, 1926, Gramophone and Talking Machine News said:

"Rudy Wiedoeft's Laughing Saxophone. Rudy Wiedoeft is acknowledged by all players as the master saxophonist. The Columbia Co. wirelessly him in mid-ocean on his way to London to secure his services for a series of recordings by the electric process. The first record, 'La Cinquantaine' and 'Sax-O-Phun,' is just announced. It is a unique record, for here is a new artistry in Marie's daintily tripping 'Cinquantaine.' But it is the reverse side that will tickle public fancy, for Mr. Wiedoeft transforms his instrument into a giggling, guffawing, hysterical, laughing buffoon. . . ."

In January, 1927, reviewing another Wiedoeft record, the British magazine said: "Rudy Wiedoeft is regarded as the finest saxophone player in the world." I think it will be interesting to list the double-faced, dark blue label, 10-inch Columbia records Wiedoeft made during his English stay, since some of them were not issued in America:

TALENTED TRIO. A HOBBIES reader whose name has been lost sent Jim Walsh this rather battered snapshot a good many years ago. Probably taken about the time Rudy Wiedoeft was a member of the Eight Popular Victor Artists, it includes, left to right, Wiedoeft; Zex Confrey, composer of "Kitten on the Keys" and noted pianist; and Tommy Dorsey, "Swing Band" conductor.

4037, La Cinquantaine and Sax-O-Phun; 4076, Souvenir and Llewellyn Waltz; 4083, Adorable and Gloria, fox trots with Percival Mackey's Band; 4237, Sax Serene and Sweetest Kiss of All, with Mackey's Band; 4363, Song of the Volga Boatmen and La Paloma; 4508, Serenade (Drigo) and Melodie; 4839, Minuet (Beethoven) and Valse Manzanetta; and 5063, Serenade (Tchaikowsky) and Serenade-Badine."

The last Wiedoeft records I know of were made for Victor after his return to the States. On December 2, 1927, he played "Marilyn" and "Sax-ema," with piano accompaniments by Nat Shilkret's brother, Jack. That same day he also recorded "Rubenola," one of his compositions, with an accompaniment of violin, banjo and guitar, the latter played by Carson Robison." He likewise recorded "La Golondrina" as a duet with another accomplished saxophonist, Arnold Brilhart, and with Robison's guitar accompaniment.

From that time, his name seems to disappear from record supplements. I was amused to find, some years ago, a late 1927 issue of The Billboard, whose back cover was devoted to the advertising of a manufacturer of wind instruments. Included were testimonials from various prominent artists, including Rudy Wiedoeft, with accompanying photographs. The Billboard must, however, have mislaid Rudy's picture or got it mixed with that of someone else, for the photo represented to be his was that of a "heavy-set" middle-aged man with a bushy black moustache. Whoever the man was he wasn't Rudy Wiedoeft.

After that came teaching and increasingly poor health which led to an early death in 1940. But one thing is certain: Rudy Wiedoeft was regarded in his day as a genius; he is still remembered as one, and as long as records of his playing are collected, his memory will live as that of the wizard who during his lifetime was The King of the Saxophone.

The End

AMERICAN RECORDS BY RUDY WIEDOEFT

- EDISON DIAMOND DISCS (1917-1924)
(Numbers of Blue Amberol Cylinders in parentheses)
50154 (3421) Saxophone Sobs. Reverse: New York Blues (P. Prossini, accordion.)
50162 (3276) Valse Erica. Reverse: Light as a Feather (John F. Burckhardt, orchestra bells.)
50862 (4005) Saxema. Reverse: Return of Spring Waltz. (The Three Vagrants—accordion, clarinet and guitar.)
51339 Saxarella. Reverse: Valse Vanite.
80398 (3393) Valse Llewellyn. Reverse: My Waikiki Mermaid (Waikiki Hawaiian Orchestra.)
80578 (4519) Velma—Capriccio. Reverse: Where the River Shannon Flows (Bohumir Kryl, cornet.)
80589 (4145) Saxophone Fantasie. Reverse: Fantasia from "Simon Boccanegra" (Pietro Caso and Anthony Giammatteo, flute and clarinet.)
VICTOR (1921-27)
18728 Saxophobia. Reverse: Valse Erica.
19167 Saxarella. Reverse: Souvenir.
19771 Vanity (Valse Vanite). Reverse: La Cinquantaine.
20086 Dans l'Orient. Reverse: Serenade Badine.
21152 Marilyn. Reverse: Saxema.
21598 La Golondrina (saxophone duet with Arnold Brilhart.) Reverse: Rubenola.
AEOLIAN-VOCALION (1919)
Hill-and-Dale
12239 Valse Erica. Reverse: Migliavacca—Mazurka de Concert. (Perry and Peppini, accordion duet.)
AEOLIAN-VOCALION (1920)
Lateral Cut
14088 Valse Erica. Reverse: Saxema (Sic).
RUDY WIEDOEFT'S SAXOPHONE SEXTET (March, 1923)
14504 Pan-American. Reverse: Country Dance.
EMERSON (1919-21)
10152 Pretty Little Rainbow—Waltz. Reverse: Mavis—Waltz. (Both duets with George Hamilton Green, xylophone.)
1043 Valse Erica. Reverse: Saxophobia.
1050 Llewellyn Waltz. Reverse: Fluffy Ruffles. (George Hamilton Green's Novelty Orchestra.)
1077 Beautiful Ohio. Reverse: Till We Meet Again. (Both duets with George Hamilton Green, xylophone.)
10240 Saxema. Reverse: Do Another Break.
1061 The Moonlight Waltz. Reverse: My Desert Love—Fox Trot (Both duets with Green.)
WIEDOEFT-WADSWORTH TRIO
10249 Liver and Bacon. Reverse: Don't Take Away Those Blues (Eddie Kuhn's Dance Specialists.)
GENNETT (1922)
4834 Valse Yvonne. Reverse: Pyramids Polka (Pietro Capodiferro, cornet.)
OKEH (1924)
4984 Valse Yvonne. Reverse: Page Paderewski—Fox Trot (Piano solo by Pete Wendling.)
PATHE' (1919-21)
22073 Drigo's Serenade. Reverse: Waltz Llewellyn. (issued on Pathe' Actuelle as 022073.)
22129 Valse Erica. Reverse: Silver Threads Among the Gold.
22492 Velma. Reverse: Marriage Bells

(Van Eps-Banta Trio.) (Issued on Pathe's Actuelle as 020492.)

COLUMBIA (1927-28)

- 761D Sax-o-phun. Reverse: Valse Manzanetta.
1053D Melodie (Dawes.) Reverse: Song of the Volga Boatmen.
1204D Llewellyn Waltz. Reverse: Serenade (Drigo.)

BRUNSWICK (1919-1925)

- 2015 Saxophobia. Reverse: My Cairo Love (All Star Trio.)
2016 Lonesome Road (Piano accompaniment by Carl Fenton and Harry Akst. Reverse: I've Got My Captain Working for Me Now (Palace Trio.)
2019 Lewellyn (Sic) and Erica.
2025 Nobody Knows—Fox Trot. Reverse: Come to the Moon (Gene Rodemich's Orchestra.)
2041 Saxema. Reverse: Rigoletto Humoresque (Lakesonian Sextet.)
2071 Saxophone Fantasie. Reverse: Velma.
2415 Valse Vanite. Reverse: Narcissus (The Wiedoeft Ensemble—saxophone sextet.)
2534 Vision D'Amour. Reverse: The Rosary (Wiedoeft Ensemble.)
2825 Danse Hongroise. Reverse: Saxarella.

- 2945 Manzanetta. Reverse: Melodie.
3325 In the Orient. Reverse: Sax-O-Trix.
RUDY WIEDOEFT TRIO
(Saxophone, Guitar and Piano) (1924)
3103 Sax-o-Phun. Reverse: Gloria.

RECORDS BY THE

- WIEDOEFT-WADSWORTH QUARTET
Edison Discs and Blue Amberols (1920)
50685 (4066) My Sahara Rose—Fox Trot. Reverse: Karzan—Fox Trot (Green Brothers Novelty Band.)
50696 (4049) Bow-Wow—One-Step. Reverse: Amorita—Fox Trot (Lenzberg's Riverside Orchestra.)

VICTOR (April, 1920)

- 18663 The Crocodile—Fox Trot. Reverse: I'll See You in C-U-B-A Medley (Palace Trio.)

PATHE' (1919)

- 2278 I Left My Door Open and My Daddy Walked Out—Fox Trot. Reverse: Oh! Medley. (NOTE.—This record is listed as by the Saxo-Piano Phields, but this probably was the Wiedoeft-Wadsworth group.)

BRUNSWICK (1920)

- 2042 Tell Me, Little Gypsy—Fox Trot Medley. Reverse: Lone Star—Fox Trot.

AEOLIAN-VOCALION (1920)

- 14091 Just Like a Gypsy—Fox Trot. Reverse: The Moan—Fox Trot.
14115 A Mouthful of Kisses—Fox Trot. Reverse: Bow-Wow—One Step (Star Trio.)

RECORDS BY THE PALACE TRIO

- Edison Blue Amberol (1920)
4098 Jean
4119 Missy Medley

VICTOR (1920)

- 18663 I'll See You in C-U-B-A Medley—Fox Trot. Reverse: The Crocodile (Wiedoeft-Wadsworth Quartet.)
18682 Hold Me Medley—Fox Trot. Reverse: Wond'ring—Fox Trot (Selvin's Novelty Orchestra.)
35695 Nobody But You Medley—Fox Trot. Reverse: Oh! By Jingo Medley—Fox Trot (All Star Trio.)

PATHE' (1919-20)

- 22205 Just For Today—Fox Trot. Reverse: You'll Be Sorry Medley—Fox Trot.
22243 I've Got My Captain Working for Me Now—One-Step. Reverse: I Want a Daddy—Fox trot.

BRUNSWICK (1919)

- 2014 Where the Lanterns Glow Medley—Fox Trot. Reverse: Lucille—Fox Trot. (Carl Fenton's Orchestra.)
2016 I've Got My Captain Working for Me Now Medley. Reverse: Lonesome Road (Rudy Wiedoeft, saxophone.)
2017 You'll Be Sorry Medley—Fox Trot. Reverse: Fluffy Ruffles—One-Step (Green Brothers Xylophone Orchestra.)
2034 Desert Dreams—Fox Trot. Reverse: Missy—Fox Trot.

AEOLIAN-VOCALION (1920-21)

- 14053 Missy Medley—Fox Trot. Reverse: Unlucky Blues.
14126 Hop Skip and Jump—Fox Trot. Reverse: Beautiful Faces Medley—Fox Trot.
14115 Bow-Wow—One-Step. Reverse: A Mouthful of Kisses (Wiedoeft-Wadsworth Quartet.) NOTE.—"Bow-Wow" is listed as by the Star Trio, but this is probably another name for the Palace.

EMERSON

- 10156 Missy—Fox Trot Medley. Reverse: Oriental Stars—Fox Trot (George Hamilton Green's Novelty Orchestra.)
10203 The Love Nest—Fox Trot. Reverse: Close to Your Heart Medley—Fox Trot.
10216 Red—Fox Trot. Reverse: In Sweet September—Fox Trot (Plantation Jazz Orchestra.)
10218 Spanish Eyes—Fox Trot. Reverse: Anytime, Anyday, Anywhere—Fox Trot (Plantation Jazz Orchestra.)
10219 Spanish Moon—Fox Trot. Reverse: Bells Medley—Fox Trot (Merry Melody Men.)
10240 I Love You Sunday—Fox Trot. Reverse: Murder—One-Step. (Plantation Jazz Orchestra.)
10309 I Want to be Somebody's Baby—Fox Trot. Reverse: That Cat Step—Fox Trot.
1062 Where the Lanterns Glow Medley—Fox Trot. Reverse: You'll Be Sorry Medley—Fox Trot

OKEH (1921)

- 4211 Coral Sea—Fox Trot. Reverse: Margie—Fox Trot (Rega Dance Orchestra.)

RECORDS BY

RUDY WIEDOEFT'S CALIFORNIANS

- Edison Diamond Discs & Blue Amberols (1922-23)
50891 (4452) Georgia Rose—Fox Trot. Reverse: It's You—Fox Trot (4461.)
51020 (4660) Rose of Bonbay—Fox Trot. Reverse: Say It While Dancing—Fox Trot (Vincent Lopez's Broadway Orchestra.)

PATHE' SAPPHIRE

- (Hill and Dale) (1921)
22467 Beautiful Faces—Fox Trot. Reverse: Show Me How—Fox Trot.

PATHE' ACTUELLE

- Lateral Cut) (1922)
020656 Wabash Blues—Fox Trot. Reverse: Everybody Step—Fox Trot (Vincent Lopez & His Orchestra.)
020771 Swanee Bluebird—Fox Trot. Reverse: Rustic Ann—Fox Trot.

BRUNSWICK (1921-22)

- 2056 Beautiful Faces—Fox Trot. Reverse: Grieving for You—Fox Trot (Green Brothers Novelty Band.)
2065 Hop, Skip and Jump—Fox Trot. Reverse: Hula Blues—Fox Trot (Green Brothers Novelty Band.)
2072 In the Dusk—Fox Trot. Reverse: Midnight Blues—Waltz, composed by Al Bernard and Ernest Hare (Carl Fenton's Orchestra.)
2081 Humming—Fox Trot. Reverse: Na Jo—Fox Trot.
2096 I'll Keep On Loving You—Fox Trot. Reverse: I Lost My Heart to You (Fox Trot.)

- 2102 Jabberwocky—Fox Trot. Reverse: Tea Leaves—Fox Trot.
2139 Say It With Music—Fox Trot. Reverse: South Sea Isles Medley—Fox Trot.

- 2157 Somewhere in Naples—Fox Trot. Reverse: When Buddha Smiles — Fox Trot.

- 2175 Broken Toy—Fox Trot. Reverse: The Sheik—Fox Trot.
2191 Song of India—Fox Trot. Reverse: Gray Morn—Fox Trot.

- 2248 Lonesome Hours—Fox Trot. Reverse: Old Fashioned Girl — Fox Trot.

- 2275 Little Thoughts—Fox Trot. Reverse: Sing Song Man—Fox Trot.
2283 Suez—Fox Trot. Reverse: Where the Volga Flows—Fox Trot.

AEOLIAN-VOCALION (1921-22)

- 14193 My Man—Fox Trot. Reverse: Tiddle—Fox Trot.

- 14206 Listening—Fox Trot. Reverse: Shivaroe—One-Step.
14251 June Moon—Fox Trot. Reverse: When Buddha Smiles—Fox Trot.

- 14263 April Showers—Fox Trot. Reverse: Stars—Fox Trot.

- 14285 Dear Old Southland—Fox Trot. Reverse: Song of India—Fox Trot.

- 14290 Blushes—Fox Trot. Reverse: Old-Fashioned Girl—Fox Trot.

- 14320 Mr. and Mrs.—Fox Trot. Reverse: Rosy Posy—Fox Trot.

- 14345 Swanee Bluebird—Fox Trot. Reverse: Sweet Indiana Home—Fox Trot.

THE COLLECTOR READS:

THE WORLD OF ANTIQUE ARTS, Orille Bourassa Rhoades. Gives a grasp of the antique arts from antiquity to yesterday. Covers 50 broad fields of collectors' arts in short, swift moving chapters. Comprehensive. Concise. Full of fascinating facts for collector, writer, student, business man, and housewife. Excellent for quick reference on the antique arts, their history, processes, qualities. Gives features to consider in collecting your antiques. Over 235 illustrations of museum pieces, many full page. Explanatory captions for each picture add valuable information. Extensive bibliography lists books by the masters of these antique arts. Excellent for shop, club, or home library. Basic. Informative. Cultural. Will not get out of fashion. Blue cloth binding. Gold decoration and lettering. An ideal gift, $7.50.

THE ARTS OF THE TIFFANYS, by Gertrude Speenburgh. A warm human interest story about the Tiffanys, and their artistic wares. It is Americana that will appeal to the casual reader, but for the collector it is a must. It contains such chapters as Art of Silversmithing, The Tiffanys — Men of Many Facets, Louis C. Tiffany & The Painter, The Story Behind Favrite Glass, Art of True Stained Glass, Art of Jewelry and Enamels, Louis Comfort Tiffany, Laurelton Hall — Art of Magnificent Living, etc. The story is told concisely in 120 pages, with about 27 illustrations of views of Tiffany collectors items, and Laurelton Hall, $5.

THE CURIOUS HISTORY OF MUSIC BOXES, Roy Mosoriak. The first book written about the first automatic musical instrument of wide use in the world. Tells how the music box was finally invented, how the makers, inventors and craftsmen of several countries competed to perfect the music box and thus bring music into the homes of thousands of people where it had never been before. Describes and illustrates great rarities in the antiquarian world: Mechanical action — scene pocket watches, music playing watches; musical snuff boxes; gold gem-studded miniatures and mechanical action scenes and music; musical dolls, clocks, mechanical musical singing birds; all types of cylinder and disc music boxes which antedated the phonograph or "speaking-machine" invented by Thomas A. Edison. Checklist of clockmakers, watchmakers, makers of automata and inventors; checklist of all U.S. Patents for music boxes; music box musicology; checklist of manufacturers, bibliography, index, 242 pages, 133 half-tone illustrations, many items never before pictured, 232 pp. size 9x12 inches, $5.00.

Postpaid order direct from:

HOBBIES MAGAZINE, 1006 S. Michigan
Chicago, Ill. 60605

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

"COME TAKE A TRIP IN MY AIRSHIP" (Seventy Years Of Aviation Songs)

By JIM WALSH

(Note: This article is dedicated to Bill Knowlton of Syracuse, N.Y., an Air Force Lieutenant who collects records about fliers and flying.)...

I. All in a Lifetime

Seventy years is the generally accepted normal span of a human life. To an individual, three-score years and ten may seem a long time, but, viewed as a part of recorded history, they are hardly more than the blinking of an eye. Even so, 70 years is a period long enough for great changes to occur between its beginning and end. To illustrate, let us consider the development of the now thrice familiar airplane.

This survey is intended for the January, 1974, HOBBIES, and should come to the attention of readers about the middle of the preceding December. That will be approximately 70 years since Orville and Wilbur Wright made their first experimental flights at Kitty Hawk, N.C., on December 17, 1903. Their pioneer plane remained aloft, during four attempts, from 12 to 59 seconds. Most American newspapers ignored this historic achievement.

Obviously, aviation did not have an awe-inspiring beginning. But within little more than 10 years from the Wrights' first fumbling efforts, planes were dropping bombs on cities in the first World War. Within less than a quarter of a century Charles A. Lindbergh had flown across the Atlantic to France. Within 40 years air travel around the world was commonplace. And in less than the traditional life span, men had soared 250,000 miles to the moon and safely returned. All this had been done within an average lifetime.

Which brings us to the subject of this scholarly dissertation. During the 70 years since the Wright Brothers made history, there have been many songs written about man's new-found ability to fly, and the more outstanding ones have been recorded. Not only that, but old record catalogs include a fair-sized sprinkling of comic and descriptive specialties dealing with air travel. Knowing this, it seems appropriate to observe the 70th anniversary of that epoch-making happening on the Carolina sand dunes by discussing aviation recordings.

No claim is made that the list will be absolutely complete. Titles of songs and records have been jotted down almost entirely from memory, and it is likely that some, worthy of being included, haven't been recalled.

RAGTIME KING. Seventy years ago GENE GREENE (left) was known in vaudeville as "The King of Ragtime." In 1911 he wrote a song about flying, called "I'm Going to Stay On Solid Ground," which he recorded for Victor. This picture of him about to leave solid ground for the briny deep was taken by Albert Deane in 1912 on the Olympic Steamship Lines pier at Sydney, Australia. To Greene's right is Fred Niblo, noted theatrical producer.

One record, however, did come to mind after being initially overlooked. A week or more after I had made notes of all the airplane songs I could think of, I fell asleep, but woke about 15 minutes later, seeming to hear a voice intoning, "I'm Going to Stay on Solid Ground." Sleepily sitting up in bed, I recalled those words as the title of a song recorded by Gene Greene, the famous vaudeville comedian, for Victor, and issued in July, 1911, on single-faced record No. 5848. Gene wrote the words and Chris Smith the music. The supplement said:

"Don't fail to hear the darky tell about his trip in the aeroplane, and learn why he is willing to leave such aerial stunts to the white man hereafter."

Unquestionably, my sub-conscious mind had worked while I slept. I have since recalled a few other numbers that at first didn't occur to me.

In early flying songs, and through the 1920's, the word "airplane" was seldom, if ever used. At first "airship" was preferred, but "aeroplane" soon took its place. No doubt some songs in old record catalogs mention flying machines, but their titles do not suggest anything having to do with air travel. The most I can say is that this symposium is a generous representative, if not all-inclusive.

One more point: I don't intend to mention all the recordings of some popular numbers, such as the songs hailing Lindbergh after his successful journey to Paris. These were pressed under many obscure labels as well as the standard brands. Preference will be given to the production of the larger record companies, with less attention to minor firms.

(Continued from preceding page)

II. The First "Airship" Recordings

Even before the Wright Brothers were born there had been songs describing the joys of flying, but with balloons as the medium of transportation. Let's go back more than one hundred years. In 1869 an Englishman, G. W. Hunt, wrote a cheerful ditty called "Up in a Balloon," which referred to flying "over the Monument" on Fish Street Hill and over St. Paul's. An American version with different words, written by George Leybourne, was issued in this country. Still another had words by H. B. Farnie. I can think of only one recording of "Up in a Balloon." It is sung at the beginning of "Songs of the Past, No. 19," issued in 1917 on Victor 12-inch record No. 35585, and sung by the Victor Mixed Chorus. I am amused that the other side, No. 20, begins by way of contrast with "Down in a Coal Mine."

James L. Thornton, one of the leading popular song writers of the Nineties foresaw the possibility of a trip to the moon in a balloon when he wrote "My Sweetheart's the Man in the Moon," in 1892. The singer is supposed to be a girl who is in love with the mythical occupant of the sterile, rocky orb that shines at night.

Since Edison's tinfoil phonograph was only 15 years old in 1892 and his instrument playing wax cylinders had been brought out just four years earlier, I doubted that any contemporary recordings had been made of the Thornton song. Research showed, however, that the North American Phonograph Company, which mismanaged Edison's talking machine business for a few years, made a cylinder, No. 484, the year the song came out. It was sung by Edward Clarence, a baritone and one of the first performers to gain popularity through recordings. The Phonogram for March, 1902, contained a pen-and-ink drawing, showing him with a moustache and hair parted in the middle. A brief description said:

"Edward Clarence was born at Boston, Mass., in 1863. At an early age Mr. Clarence developed decided vocal talent. His singing has met with the approval of the public and he has appeared in nearly every prominent vaudeville theater in the United States and Canada. His enunciation is clear and distinct and his records for the Phonograph are deservedly popular."

Mr. Clarence must have passed on years ago, but I don't know when. Probably Columbia also made a brown, white, yellow, or some other color wax cylinder of "My Sweetheart's the Man in the Moon," but I haven't been able to find it listed.

The song had a long rest, so far as record companies were concerned, until 1926, when Manuel Romain, then slowly dying of the cancer which took his life later that year, sang it on Edison Diamond Disc 51837. It was coupled with another old-time Jim Thornton number, "She May Have Seen Better Days." There is nothing about the sound of the record to denote that Romain, who was then 56, was a dying man. His voice sounds as strong and well as it had on cylinders made nearly 20 years before.

Perhaps some older readers would like to have the hitting chorus recalled to their memory. The first refrain goes:

"My sweetheart's the man in the moon. I'm going to marry him soon.
"I would fill me with bliss just to give him one kiss,
But I know that a dozen I never would miss.
I'll go up in a great big balloon to see my old man in the moon.
And behind a dark cloud, where no one's allowed,
I'll make love to the man in the moon."

The first successful air travel song written after the Wrights put their pioneer plane through its preliminary paces was "Come Take a Trip in My Airship." This melody was published in 1904, a few months after the Kitty Hawk experiment, with words by Ren Shields and music by George "Honey Boy" Evans. Two years earlier they had produced the big hit of 1902, "In the Good Old Summer Time."

As far as I could ascertain, the first recording of the "Airship" song, from which this survey takes its title, was the Victor single-faced disc, No. 2986, which came out in September or October, 1904, and was sung by — as you've probably guessed — Billy Murray, then just beginning to win recognition as the most popular of pioneer recording artists. It is amazing how many recording "firsts" the Denver Nightingale had to his credit. Among others, he apparently was the first singer to make a record mentioning television. This was done in a song called "Main Street," issued on Edison Diamond Disc No. 52609 in the summer of 1929. Billy's name does not appear on this side of the disc, which is labeled as being by "Cy Pitkin and the Town Band." On the other side, and under his true name, he sings "In Old Tia Juana." The video reference is, "If there should be television, I have made a firm decision" — to tune in the doings on the Main Street of his home town.

But back to "Come Take a Trip," Billy's two-minute Edison cylinder version, No. 8874, was issued in January, 1905. The description is worth quoting, especially since it includes the words of the refrain:

"A serio-comic waltz song that has recently become very popular. The theme is a new one as will be seen from the chorus:

"Come take a trip in my airship;
Come take a sail 'mong the stars;
Come have a ride around Venus;

OBITUARY

ELLIOTT SHAW

Elliott Shaw, a leading recording artist from 1917 through the 1930's, died August 13 in Lawrence Hospital, Bronxville, N.Y., near his home in Eastchester.

Mr. Shaw, who was 86, was born April 10, 1887, in Davenport, Ia. He was following a musical career in the New York City area in 1917 when he learned that the Victor Talking Machine Company had asked Wilfred Glenn, the famous basso, to organize a new quartet for making Victor records.

Shaw, a baritone, applied for a post in the quartet, which became known as the Shannon Four. Other members were Charles Hart, first tenor, and Harvey Hindermeyer, second tenor, but Hindermeyer left after about a year and was succeeded by Lewis James. All members of the quartet are deceased.

In 1925, the quartet, with Franklyn Baur as first tenor, instead of Hart, who had gone to Germany to study for opera, added Ed Smalle as pianist and "harmony man," and began to specialize in jazz-style singing. The group, with some changes of personnel, was popular all through the remaining 1920's and 1930's. It made hundreds of records under more than one name, but was best known as the Revelers, and was a featured radio attraction for many years. For several years Hart and Shaw were among the most popular recording teams.

After retiring, the baritone lived in Sharon, Conn., but upon the death of his wife, who had been Miss Abigail Schauf, he moved to Eastchester to be with his daughter, Barbara, who is Mrs. Joseph C. Denmark. He was almost blind and deaf at the time of his death, but had been considered in good health. His death occurred just three days after the beginning of his illness.

Besides Mrs. Denmark, Mr. Shaw is survived by a son, Douglas T. Shaw, of Pawling, N.Y., and three grandchildren — Elliott, Abigail and Filomena Shaw.

Jim Walsh intends to write a biographical account of Mr. Shaw's life and recording career for HOBBIES' Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists department.

MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

MUSIC BOXES! Fantastic large illustrated catalogue of wholesale music boxes, circus organs, nickelodeons, photo-players, reproducing pianos, other automatic instruments. Plus books, recordings, musical gifts. $2 postpaid; $5 subscription ($12 value!) to next 6 issues. Money-back guarantee if not delighted! — David Bowers, Box 1669D, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90210
mh64051

ORGANS—MELODEONS

REED ORGANS, melodions, bought, sold repaired. Reeds tuned, voiced replacements. — C. H. Gunzinger, Box 276, Williamsville, Vt. 05462 a06675

MUSICAL ANTIQUE BOOKS

INTERESTING stories, pictures and research about restored musical antiques, in 52-page book. $1.25 postpaid from — The Musical Museum, Deansboro, N.Y. d128041

(Continued on page 120)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

Come have a spin around Mars.
No one to watch while we're kissing.
No one to see while we spoon.
Come take a trip in my airship,
And we'll visit the man in the moon'.

"George Evans, composer of 'In the Good Old Summer Time,' wrote the melody and to its catchy swing may be attributed its quick jump into popular favor. . . . Billy Murray does both writers full justice with his fine phrasing and distinct articulation."

Zonophone made a nine-inch disc of this first airplane song, which came out in February, 1905. It was No. 6035 and was sung by "Frank Howard," who was really Albert Campbell.

J. W. Myers, a baritone who was then one of the leading recording artists, sang "Come Take a Trip" on both a cylinder and a disc for Columbia's combined November and December, 1904, list. Evans, its composer, when singing it on the stage, would ask the audience to join in whistling the chorus, and Myers does the same stunt. As he is about to begin the second refrain he says, "Will the audience kindly join me in whistling the chorus?" and he receives assistance, presumably from the orchestra. The disc was No. 1878 and the cylinder, 32589.

A quarter of a century later, in 1929, Columbia revived the song for its country music series, on record No. 15385D but under the erroneous title of "I Once Loved a Sailor." It was sung and played by a North Carolina hill-billy, Charlie Poole, and the North Carolina Ramblers. Poole probably had picked the song up by hearing other country musicians sing it and didn't know the correct title, but it seems somebody in the Columbia artist and repertoire department should have. His knowledge of the words was faulty, probably because of their being learned at second or third hand.

In 1907 there was a return to a song about the balloon as a travel mode. Harry Tally sang a number called "Ballooning" on Zonophone 10-inch record No. 863 and on Victor 5213. The Victor supplement didn't give the composer's name, but said the composition was introduced in a musical comedy, "Fascinating Flora," which starred Adele Ritchie.

III. More Airplane Songs & Sketches

A few paragraphs farther up I gave the unintendedly misleading impression that Billy Murray's "Airship" record was the first inspired by the Wright Brothers' stunt. So far as songs are concerned the statement may stand, but the very first aviation record appears to be Victor Monarch 2803, "Reuben Haskins' Trip 'Round the World In His Airship." (A month or two later it was available in a longer version on 12-inch disc No. 31215). The smaller size was announced in June, 1904—less than six months after the Kitty Hawk escapade. No one who is familiar with the alert mental processes of the astonishing Len Spencer, and who knows how quick he always was to seize upon any popular topic as a subject for a descriptive record, will be surprised to see how quickly he introduced his "rube" character, Reuben Haskins, of Skowhegan, Me., to the airplane. He had previously had Reuben ride in a "cyclone auto" and take a steamship voyage to Europe. No wonder the man from Maine now became the first aviator to circumnavigate the world—and to do it all within the confines of a phonograph record that played about two minutes and 40 seconds.

"DENVER NIGHTINGALE." BILLY MURRAY, the greatest name among early "popular" recording artists, probably was the first singer to record an airplane song when he sang "Come Take a Trip in My Airship" for Victor and Edison in 1904.

Spencer was assisted in making the record by Parke Hunter, a skilled banjoist who could also play nearly every other instrument. The supplement description is amusing:

"The Air Ship is all ready to fly from Skowhegan — 'All ready, Ezra?' 'Yes, dad!' 'Then let 'er go!' Skowhegan's prominent citizens give the great inventor an ovation as he flies Eastward.—Ocean liners look like flies — they pass over Ireland — Ezra whistles an Irish tune—'What's that smell? Limburger and Germany, b'gosh!' — 'Look out for the Alps, Ezra!' 'Turkey is crossed as Ezra whistles a celebrated dance. Full speed—the wind rises — the Philippines — across the Pacific in four seconds — the Golden Gate — the Mississippi — 'Don't butt into the Capitol, Ezra!' Statue of Liberty — Home again — 'Yankee Doodle,' by Ezra — 'Three cheers for the greatest country on earth!'"

I wonder if Len Spencer intended the Reuben Haskins series as a rival to Cal Stewart's "Uncle Josh" stories about the people of Punkin Center. It's amusing to note that in one of the series—"Reuben Haskins' Ride on a Cyclone Auto"—on Columbia doublefaced disc No. A375, the label says the record was made by Len Spencer, with no mention of anyone else, but when it is played the preliminary announcement describes it as "by Len and Henry Spencer." Why wasn't younger brother Harry mentioned on the label? Harry takes the part of the wealthy motorist who gives Reuben a ride to "Tall Trees Center," and Len is the countryman from Skowhegan frightened almost into convulsions by the speed of the car, which destroys everything in its path. How did so terrified a rustic, blossom into the inventor of an around-the-world airplane! Toward the end of the record, as the motorist lets Reuben out of the car, he says: "Hope to have the pleasure of running across you some time!" and the squeaky-voiced Reuben replies: "Run across me? No, by chowder, I guess not—not if I see you fust!"

In 1909 Len had another try at writing an airplane skit, which he recorded with the assistance of Ada Jones. On Victor it was called "Zeb Green's Airship" and was combined on record No. 16342 with "Oh, You Lovin' Gal," by Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan. The October record supplement commented: ". . . A new airship record by Miss Jones and Mr. Spencer. Cast of characters: Circus Manager; Zeb Green, inventor; Bridegroom and Parson — Len Spencer. Bride and Vocalist — Ada Jones." Thus it will be seen that the endlessly versatile Len played four parts.

A month later, Edison issued the sketch on two-minute cylinder, No. 10254, but the name of "Zeb" was changed to "Zep." The supplement said:

"Zep Green is making his initial trip as a navigator of the air as well as of the sea of matrimony. They take the parson up with them in the airship — and down again when it collapses and falls into the river. Mechanical devices, a band, singing, cheering, and remarks from the crowd contribute to the novelty of the record."

What a long distance there was between this satiric "rube" sketch and a disc issued in the late 1920's by English Columbia! On No. 9161, Sir Alan Cobham, who flew from England to Melbourne, Australia (not non-stop) in 1926, used both sides of the 12-inch record to tell "How to Fly an Aeroplane." How would you like to be a passenger in a plane whose pilot had learned to fly by listening to a phonograph record? Sir Alan's flight began June 30 and he returned to London October 1.

English Columbia came through with another unusual one in mid-August, 1930, when Amy Johnson, C. B. E., told on 10-inch record No. DB189, "The Story of My Flight." (The other side was taken up with "The Royal Air Force March," played by the Band of H. M. Royal Air Force, conducted by Flight Lieutenant J. H. Amers.) I don't recall anything about Miss Johnson's aviation fame, but the supplement ecstatically exclaimed:

"The record of the year. The story of her flight from England to Australia told by Amy Johnson herself — simply but eloquently narrated in a girlish voice, but thrilling in its impressive simplicity. A historic record that all will treasure. It was recorded in Sydney (N. S. W.) by special permission of the 'London Daily Mail' and is exclusive to Columbia."

"Columbia is proud to announce that they have recorded the very charming and confident voice of Miss Amy Johnson, narrating her thrilling flight from England to Australia. The story is quite exciting and modestly told. It reveals clearly the splendid personality of the world's most intrepid air-girl. This issue is timely, for Miss Johnson has just been experiencing her national welcome on her return to England."

I can't think of any recordings about Amelia Earhart, the most famous American woman aviator of 40-odd years ago, but surely there must have been a few "hill billy" tunes dealing with her baffling disappearance, just as there was a song written to praise a now forgotten aviatrix, Ruth Elder, who tried unsuccessfully to fly from the United States to France, a few months after Lindbergh's historic flight.

In February, 1928, Edison issued a Diamond Disc, No. 52183, of "Flaming Ruth," sung and spoken, to the accompaniment of various airplane noises, by Arthur Fields. Four Tin Pan Alley denizens appear to have had a hand in composing this far from remarkable number, which termed Miss Elder "a Yankee Joan of Arc." One was Lyn, whose first name I lack, and the others were Alfred Bryan, Harry Axt and Carl Mendoza.

Until I consulted the 1928 World Almanac I couldn't have told you anything about Ruth Elder's airborne adventures. It seems that, riding in "The American Girl," with George Haldeman as pilot, she left Roosevelt Field, N. Y., at 5:04 p.m., on Tuesday, October 11, 1927, in an attempted trip to Paris. On the following Thursday a broken oil line caused the plane to land near the Dutch oil tanker, Barendrecht, about 350 miles northeast of the Azores and after a flight of some 2,623 miles. And then, the almanac says, "The fliers proceeded to France, via the Azores, where they were given an enthusiastic welcome similar to those accorded their more successful predecessors."

Since Miss Elder was not piloting the plane, but was only along for the ride, and since the flight was unsuccessful, it seems to me she was acclaimed as "Flaming Ruth," a heroine of the air, on rather unsubstantial grounds.

IV. More Old Songs and Sketches

Two years or so after the Wright Brothers' flight, Monroe H. Rosenfeld and Alfred Solman wrote a song that may, or may not, have had a relationship to airplaning. It was called "I'm Up in the Air About Mary," and was sung by Billy Murray on Edison two-minute cylinder No. 9329, issued in August, 1906. Nearly a quarter of a century later, in 1929, Columbia revived the song for its hill-billy catalog, as it had "Come Take a Trip in My Airship." I heard the country music version by Riley Puckett a good many years ago, but don't remember whether there was any reference to aviation.

There is no doubt about the meaning of "Up In My Aeroplane," sung by Harry Macdonough and the Haydn Quartet, which was issued in September, 1909, on Victor No. 16340—just two numbers ahead of "Zeb Green's Airship." The supplement described it briefly as "the latest aeroplane ballad."

In June, 1910, Arthur Collins was represented in the Victor list, on No. 16498, with what would have been called in those days "a coon aeroplane song." The title was "Let Me Down Easy" and the amusing words described how Sam Johnson who was of an inventive mind, built a device which is called in one place an "airship" and in another a "balloon." Sam was flying high, wide and handsome when the apparatus exploded, and the angels heard him proclaim that if his life was spared he would "go to church and read the Good Book like it's never been read before." Sam also promised that he would "never build no more machinery things till the Good Lord gives me a pair of wings." The other side of this Collins classic was "I'll Make a Ring Around Rosie," sung by the Haydn Quartet.

Another excellent comic song about "aeroplaning" is "Take Me Up With You, Dearie," sung by Billy Murray and the Haydn Quartet and issued on Victor single-faced disc No. 5718, in August, 1909. Afterwards it was made available on double-faced disc No. 16769, coupled with Murray's "I Love My Wife, But Oh You Kid." The supplement remarked:

"The recent success of the Wright Brothers has made a crop of aero songs a foregone conclusion. Here is the best of these numbers, which describes the aerial courtship of two fond lovers. A 'patter chorus' by Murray, a remarkable feat of enunciation, is alone worth the price."

That concluding sentence is an understatement. Billy runs through the patter chorus so rapidly, but with such perfect distinctness, that I always begin gasping when I hear it and feel as if my own supply of breath has been abruptly cut off.

"The Denver Nightingale," alias Murray, also sang this number on Edison cylinder No. 10213. The supplement does not indicate whether it contains that rapid-fire "patter."

I have an idea that a song issued in 1930 on Columbia record No. 15453D (the "familiar tunes old and new" series), appeared originally as a popular song of the early 1900's, although I have been unable to trace it. The name is "Papa, Please Buy Me an Airship," and its style is like the maudlin "kid songs" that Charles K. Harris and other Tin Pan Alley writers turned out in such profusion. Despite its naivete, it is still too sophisticated in treatment to be a genuine "folk ballad." The tear-jerking lyrics tell of a little girl asking her father to buy her an "airship," so that she and he can fly to Heaven and bring her dead mother back home. The completely unknown singer of this dirge is listed as James Johnson. On the reverse side Mr. Johnson sings that perennial standby, "Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet." I imagine both songs were of about the same period, 1909.

This idea of a child wanting to communicate with her dead mother was used on a 1929 Edison disc, No. 52507, "I'd like to Send a Message Up to Heaven," composed by Fred Hall and sung and played by "Pop Collins and His Boys." (Hall probably was "Collins.") Two years earlier, on Edison No. 52096, the Radio Franks (Frank Bessinger and Frank White) had sung another song with the same worn-out idea, "Mister Aeroplane Man (Take Me Up to Heaven.)"

In December, 1909, Columbia marketed an amusing skit by Fred Duprez and Bob Roberts called "Blitz and Blatz in an Aeroplane." The supplement description brings a smile:

"Our distinguished German friends, Blitz and Blatz are here depicted in a novel situation and one which Blitz finds extremely disconcerting. He runs across Blatz, who is preparing to make an aeroplane flight, and is inveigled by the latter into joining him. He does so, though not without some misgivings, and when they finally get up into the clouds his condition of 'cold feet' becomes pitiable. After a series of spectacular adventures, the machine finally catches fire and the closing scene is extremely amusing."

V. The Biggest Aviation Song Hit

The year 1911 brought recordings of what was probably the most successful of all aviation songs, "Come, Josephine, In My Flying Machine." Victor's first version was announced in March, sung on Purple Label disc No. 60032. The artist was the popular vaudeville comedienne, Blanche Ring, whose photo also appeared on the song's sheet music. (See the accompanying illustration).

"Josephine" was such a success that in May, Victor issued it as a Black Label, double-faced record No. 16844. It is by Ada Jones and the American Quartet, according to the label, although it is really a duet between Miss Jones and Billy Murray, with the quartet coming in for the refrain. The coupling was "Thro' the Hole in the Fence," a humorous discussion of baseball by Murry K. Hill. A few months later Victor decided the airplane song needed a more suitable companion than a comic monolog and paired it, on No. 16953, with "I Love It," by the American Quartet.

Ada and Billy, with the quartet, also made the Edison cylinder versions—No. 10506 on the two-minute Standard and 659 on the four-minute Amberol. After the indestructible Blue Amberols were introduced, the four-minute was taken into that catalog as No. 1949, and for years was one of the most popular Edison cylinders.

(Continued on page 127)

CLOCKS WANTED

CLOCKS, Pocket Watches, Cases, Movements, Misc. Parts. — D. D. Way, 11 Eastwood Court, Oakland, Calif. 94608

CASH PAID for old or unusual Clocks by Collector. — W. Harding, 623 Smallwood, Rockville, Maryland 20850 n124201

WATCH CASES and clocks with an automotive theme. Early automobile objets d'art. — David Bausch, 252 N. 7th St., Allentown, Pa. 18102 au120821

CLOCKS &amp; WATCHES FOR SALE

300,000 Authentic Copies dials & date strips. In colors, with names, dates. Sec. and alarms & calendar dials, 8,000 custom cut wheels in stock. 3 Flyers: stamps, please. — Old Time Shop, Box 5126, Poland, Ohio 44514 ap68271

For Sale: 25 Old Watches — one owned by early Trader Louis Vasquez. Contact — Maud Coleman, La Veta, Colo. 81055 ja1002

"AMERICAN WATCH Historical Information With Serial Numbers, Dates", 15 page booklet $1.35, plus free list watches for sale. — Harper Enterprises, Box 2026-H, Natchitoches, La. 71457 f3004

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 121)

It is hard to concentrate on writing when you have to get up every ten minutes of a cold November day and let a cat go outdoors or come inside, but I am trying. Having just returned upstairs after acting as doorman for Professor Plum Duff Walsh, Ph. D., I can say that Ada Jones had a near-monopoly of participating in records of "Come, Josephine." She was not able to use Billy Murray as a partner in U. S. Everlasting cylinders, but substituted Henry Burr on No. 1186. She also sang the "flying machine" melody as a solo on Indestructible cylinder No. 1468. The Columbia disc, however, was made by Harry Tully, the lead tenor of the Empire City Quartet, and was incongruously paired with "The Washington Grays March," by Prince's Band. Shortly afterward, Columbia, like Victor, decided to do some recoupling, and gave the Washington Grays a more appropriate companion — "The National Emblem March," on No. A1025, also by Prince's Band. Now, no thanks to constant feline interruptions, I have lost the notes from which I have been working and can't keep going until I find them.

Thirty-six hours later. I have at last found the notes, beneath my bed and so far beyond reach I had to rake them out with a yardstick. How they managed to leave my typing stand, while I was referring to them and hide beneath that bed, I don't think I shall ever understand. But to resume:

FIX CLOCKS, WATCHES

For Fun &amp; Profit

Fascinating new handbook by master craftsman H. G. Harris gives you the kind of knowledge skilled watchmakers learn.

OVER 200 ILLUSTRATIONS show how to install hands, dials, crystals, mainsprings, stems . . . re-house old movements in modern cases . . . speedily cure many troubles by demagnetizing or cleaning, etc. INSTRUCTIONS COVER every popular watch and clock chimes, grandfathers, cuckoo, everyday alarm and electric clocks. HANDBOOK tells where to buy parts . . . where to send "overflow" work for repairs at wholesale prices as business expands. FRIENDS GLADLY PAY $5 to $50 for restoring cherished timepieces.

Try the HANDBOOK OF WATCH & CLOCK REPAIRS 10 days!

$5.95 Plus 30c Handling

10-Day Money-Back Guarantee

EMERSON BOOKS, Inc., Box 949-X, Reynolds Lane Dept 164A, Buchanan, N.Y. 10511

jac

CLOCK PARTS

CLOCK REPAIR Material and Tools Custom Clock Springs, Quality Clock Dials American Clock Escape Wheels, Verge Kits, Clock Wts., Brass Sheet, Rod and Wheel Blanks Oil Temp. Flat Steel and Ground Rod, Spring Steel, Strip and Wire, Unimat, Maximat Lathes Microflame Torches. List for 40c send to Antique Nook Inc. Box 338 Atwater, O. 44201 ja120614

"There is a sun-dial in the garden of old St. Mark, near Venice, with this inscription 'Horas non numero nisi serenas.' Translated, the motto would be: I count only the sunny hours."

Koven's "The Wedding Trip." Five months later, in October, Columbia came through with "The Air King March," played by Prince's Band on A1200. It had one of those frequently remarkable Columbia couplings, "Fiddle Dee Dee," a comic song written by E. Ray Goetz and Irving Berlin, who had married Goetz's sister, Dorothy. (She lived only about a year after the marriage and Berlin wrote "When I Lost You" as a tribute to her memory). The singers were Lew Dockstader, the minstrel impresario, and the Peerless Quartet.

Meanwhile, in August, Victor had issued No. 17113, "That Aeroplane Glide," sung by this same Peerless and coupled with "That Sneaky Snakey Rag," by Collins and Harlan. I find Catalog Editor Sam Rous' sour summing up somewhat amusing:

"Even the aeroplane cannot escape the universal tendency of the song writers to seize upon anything in the universe for a subject for a 'glide,' 'swing' or 'trot.' With this new 'glide' is another 'rag'—and the catalog editor refuses to comment further!"

Other "aeroplane" recordings, issued just before, or shortly after, the beginning of World War I, include: "The Aeroplane Tango," a Charles A. Prince composition, played by the Municipal Band of Buenos Aires, on Columbia A1464; the same piece, but this time by Prince's Band, on No. A1541, with a tango dancing lesson on the other side; and "The Aeroplane Slide," sung by that ubiquitous Peerless Quartet on No. A1600, and coupled with a very popular Collins and Harlan "monkey" offering, "The Aba Daba Honeymoon." Edison got into the act of putting out a dance number, "The Aeroplane Dip," played by the National Promenade Band, on Blue Amberol 2385.

(To Be Continued
Next Month)

BIG SONG HIT, "Come, Josephine" was probably the most widely popular of all aviation songs. When it was published in 1911 it was recorded by such artists as Ada Jones, Billy Murray and the American Quartet; Harry Tully, and Blanche Ring, whose photo is shown on this print of the sheet music cover.

In May, 1912, Columbia issued one of the most obscure airplane recordings — No. A1135, the "Aeroplane Duet" from "Little Boy Boy," a musical comedy whose composer's name is given as Bereny. It was sung by Charles Harrison and Beulah Gaylord Young, who some years later became Mrs. Harrison. On the other side was another Harrison-Young duet "Awakened Love" from Reginald de

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

"COME TAKE A TRIP IN MY AIRSHIP" (Seventy Years Of Aviation Songs)

(Continued From January Issue)

By JIM WALSH

VI. The War and Afterward

I have not searched intensively through British catalogs of the First World War period, but it seems a reasonable assumption that some of the English companies issued patriotic songs or descriptive specialties in which aviation as a means of warfare played a part. Songs of this type were recorded by American companies in World War II—"Johnny Zero" and "He Wears a Pair of Silver Wings" are examples—but considering anything issued much after 1930 is beyond the scope of this survey.

I have one wartime English record that I doubt is possessed by many, if any, other Americans. It is Edison Bell Winner No. 2828, and was made in 1915. On one side Jack Judge sings "Paddy Maloney's Aeroplane," and on the other, "Have You Heard of Michael O'Leary?" An odd thing about the disc is that the aeroplane side has the Winner label, but its reverse is a Beta—a brand otherwise unknown to me. (Obviously, Winner records were pressed for some private trader with his own Beta label). The disc has a touch of historic significance, because Jack Judge was the author of the First World War marching song classic, "It's a Long, Long Way to Tipperary," and, although the labels don't say so, he presumably also had a hand in writing these two now forgotten tunes.

Another airplane recording in my collection, which I doubt could be duplicated in the States, is an eight-inch Broadcast disc, No. BA20, from Australia. This so-called "electrically recorded long play record" probably was made about 1929. Both sides are by a comedian, Keith Desmond, who seems to have specialized in portraying Cockney types, and neither is highly amusing to American ears. One of the monologues is "Gimme the Ground," an expression of the Cockney's aversion to airplaning, and the other is "A Cockney Version of 'The Death of Nelson.'"

After the United States entered World War I, American song writers paid small attention to the "aeroplane's" part in conflict, but an aviation sketch or two was recorded with some success. I have in mind especially "A Battle in the Air," which came out in November, 1918, just as the war was ending, on double-faced Columbia A2626, and was also issued on Edison Blue Amberol 3618. The Columbia was by the (again!) Peerless Quartet of Albert Campbell, Henry Burr, Arthur Collins and John Meyer, and the cylinder was made by "the Premier Quartet and Company." The quartet was John Young, Billy Murray, Steve Porter and William F. Hooley, and the "Company" was Edward Meeker, who chuckled occasionally and issued some military commands. On the reverse of the Columbia was "A Submarine Attack Somewhere at Sea," by the Peerless, which also was made (by the Premier and Company) on Edison disc as well as Blue Amberol. Edison's files show that the quartet making the submarine attack record was Young, Murray, Porter and Donald Chalmers, and the "Company" consisted of Meeker and Helen Clark, who takes the part of a Red Cross nurse, with two sentences to speak.

HIGH UP. FRED DUPREZ, famous vaudeville comedian, assisted by BOB ROBERTS, recorded a humorous sketch for Columbia called "Blitz and Blatz in an Air Ship." The man in this picture is not Fred Duprez, but his brother Charles, who was recognized as one of the best daredevil photographers in New York City. He seems to have gone about as high here to get a picture as Blitz and Blatz ascended in their plane.

According to the Edison lists, both sketches were written by Theodore Morse, one of the greatest popular song writers, but Columbia credits the "Submarine Attack" to the entire Peerless Quartet, and "The Battle in the Air" to Campbell, Collins and Morse—all of whom were members of the troupe soon to be known as the Eight Famous Victor Artists. The Columbia supplement description of this coupling is rather interesting:

"Eight bells and all's well" opens 'The Submarine Attack,' but the singing of the boys in the forecabin is soon stopped when the sub is sighted. Then the fun begins and you get all the thrills in this clever descriptive, which only stops with the 'direct hit.' Only more exciting is the 'Air Raid' over the trenches where the very hum of the motor is heard amid all the excitement of the bombardment. There is a lot of realism in the atmosphere and a lot of human nature in the conversations and singing of the soldiers in both these descriptives."

Another sketch of the same period was Edison No. 50478, "The Colored Recruits," in which Billy Heins, as a recruiting officer, seeks to enlist Billy Golden as a Negro soldier. When Heins asks Golden if he would like aviation duty, the "raw recruit" replies to this effect: "No, sir, no indeedy, not for dis nigger! Terra cotta is good enough for me!"

I have already said that I am not taking recordings of the World War II period into consideration, but I will modify this assertion by remarking that the last record ever made by Billy Murray (and Monroe Silver), "Casey and Cohen in the Army," on Beacon No. 2001, contains somewhat similar dialog. On this 1942 disc, Billy tells "Mike" that aviation service really isn't dangerous, "because, Cohen, every man has a number and you don't go until the good Lord calls your number"—to which the skeptical Cohen replies, "Yes, Casey, but what if the good Lord calls your pilot's number?"

(Continued from preceding page)

In 1919, Lew Brown and Albert Von Tilzer wrote a successful comic song, "Wait Till You Get Them Up in the Air, Boys." It advised the young swains of 50-odd years ago who were not making enough "court-ting" progress to take their girl friends for plane rides, because: "You can make them hug and kiss you, too, for if they don't, just say you won't come down until they do... There never was a girl who'd fall that far for any man," the song writers said. Billy Murray recorded this song for Victor and Columbia, and Irving Kaufman for Emerson. About three years later Murray made for Victor a record of what may be considered a sequel: "I Was Married Up in the Air (I've Been Up in the Air Ever Since.)"

Another song with the same idea as "Wait Till You Get Them Up" came out in 1927. It was called "You Can't Walk Back From An Aeroplane (So What Are You Girls Gonna Do?)" Billy Jones & Ernest Hare sang it for Columbia, and Jack Kaufman for Edison. No doubt there were other recordings, but it doesn't seem worth while to try to trace them all.

This seems a suitable place to mention "Katie, Keep Your Feet on the Ground," which Aileen Stanley and Billy Murray recorded for Victor on June 13, 1929, and which was issued on No. 22040, with "Oh Baby, What a Night!" by Murray and Walter Scanlan as its coupling. "Katie" is a fine comic song in which Billy, as the girl's mother, objects to her joy riding in the air with her boy friend, "Clancy." It is the same type of skit as "Maggie (Come Right Upstairs!)" and "Bridget O'Flynn," and is equally amusing. On that same June day Billy and Aileen recorded "Please Don't Cut Out My Sauerkraut," but it remains unissued.

VII. Recorded Tragedies of the Air

Vernon Dalhart's recordings of "The Wreck of the Old 97" swept the United States in 1924-25 and established a pattern of commemorating railway fatalities. Airplane crashes were a less fertile field for writers of the country music school, but they were not overlooked.

Perhaps the first aviation tragedy to be related on records was that of the Shenandoah, which wrecked over Ohio on September 2, 1925, and caused the deaths of 14 members of the crew. With remarkable speed, Carson Robison ground out a ballad about the sad event under the disguise of Maggie Andrews, which was his mother's maiden name. With equally startling speed, Dalhart recorded it in Victor's New York studios on September 9—exactly a week after the wreck. Lou Raderman played the violin accompaniment and Robison took the guitar part.

Victor announced the record, coupled with one of Dalhart's greatest successes, "The Death of Floyd Collins," in the November supplement as double-faced disc No. 19779. Supplement Editor James E. Richardson thus described it:

"Popular songs of recent American tragedies. They belong with the old-fashioned penny-ballad, hobo-song or 'come-all-ye.' The curious will note that they are even in the traditional 'ballad' metre, the 'common metre' of hymnodists. They are not productions of, or for, the cabaret or the vaudeville stage, but for the round-house, the water tank, the caboose or the village fire-station. They have splendid simple tunes in which the guitar accompanies the voice, the violin occasionally adding pathos. These songs are more than things for passing amusement; they are chronicles of the time, by unlettered and never self-conscious chroniclers."

Mr. Richardson's concluding sentence is somewhat misleading. Carson Robison was not an "unlettered chronicler," but a song writer with his share of cynicism who had the knack of dashing off crudely worded "hill-billies" and did because there was money in it. For the same reason, Dalhart, an artist with opera training, sang them.

You may be surprised to learn, after the supplement's high praise, that the "Shenandoah" song stayed in the Victor catalog just one month. It was removed almost as soon as issued because, according to a story in the Talking Machine World, relatives of the dead crew members objected to the airplane's loss being musically commercialized. In December the "Floyd Collins" side was recoupled on No. 19821, with "The Dream of a Miner's Child" for its companion.

Columbia, Edison and other companies for whom Dalhart recorded "The Wreck of the Shenandoah" did not follow Victor's example and remove it because of family objections, but let it run its normal term of life. Incidentally, as a free-lance performer, Dalhart recorded the same titles for so many companies, many of them minor, that it would be a waste of space to try to list all the versions.

When I began this article I had a vague impression that I had seen the name of another airplane song, "The Lost French Fliers," in some record catalog or catalogs, but a hurried search through Victor, Columbia, Edison, Brunswick, Okeh, Vocalion and a few others failed to turn it up. Then I looked among my Dalhart records and was surprised to find that I had it on Brunswick No. 3572, doubled with "Lucky Lindy," of which we shall hear more. The song, also written by Robison, sorrows over the loss of Captains Charles Nungesser and Francois Coli, famous French flying aces, whose plane, "The White Bird," left Le Bourget, France at 5:19 a.m., May 8, 1927, headed for New York. The craft was reported sighted over England, but no further trace of it was ever found.

One of the most gripping and memorable of all radio broadcasts resulted from the crash of the German dirigible, the Hindenburg, at Lakehurst, N. J., as it was completing its first 1937 trans-Atlantic voyage, on May 6. Herb Morrison, an announcer for WLS, Chicago, was on hand to describe the dirigible's arrival and the recording of his broadcast as he sees the Hindenburg burst into flames is almost unbearable in its intensity. He gasps, gulps, loses his voice, breaks down and cries—no one but the most confirmed sadist could listen to the record with pleasure. I have a copy on Romeo (another name for Cameo) No. 7-08-76. The label says Morrison is assisted by a WLS engineer, Charles Nehlsen. This disc is worth having and keeping as a historical document, but it is not something to play for soothing jangled nerves.

VIII. The "Lucky Lindy" Era

Charles A. Lindbergh's successful first unaccompanied transatlantic flight began at Roosevelt Field near New York at 7:52 a.m., Friday, May 20, 1927, and ended at 10:24 p.m. (Paris time) the next day. Naturally, the "Lone Eagle's" unprecedented achievement resulted in history's greatest outpouring of aviation songs. Lindbergh landed on Saturday, and, the following Monday, Vernon Dalhart was in Victor's Liederkrantz Hall studios in New York, recording Howard Johnson and Al Sherman's hastily contrived "Lindbergh, The Eagle of the U.S.A." to an accompaniment of cornet, clarinet, violin, violoncello, piano, guitar, tuba and drums. It was coupled with Vaughn De Leath singing "Like An Angel You Flew Into Everyone's Heart," which "The First Lady of Radio" recorded two days later. The record pressing plant

(Continued on page 122)

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR SALE

For Sale: "Wm Kanbe" square grand piano in excellent original condition, built 1873. Rosewood case. Accepting bids. Ph. 812-533-6754.—Mrs. Carl N. Miller, Sr., RR 1, Box 309, West Terre Haute, Ind. 47885 f3238

MUSIC BOXES FOR SALE

MUSIC BOXES! Fantastic large illustrated catalogue of wholesale music boxes, circus organs, nickelodeons, photo-players, reproducing pianos, other automatic instruments. Plus books, recordings, musical gifts. $2 postpaid; $5 subscription ($12 value!) to next 6 issues. Money-back guarantee if not delighted! —David Bowers, Box 1669D, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90210 mh64051

ORGANS—MELODEONS

REED ORGANS, melodions, bought, sold repaired. Reeds tuned, revoiced replacements. —C. H. Gunzinger, Box 276, Williamsville, Vt. 05362 ao6675

HISTORICAL RECORDS

(Continued from page 38)

of course went into high gear and large quantities of the timely disc were rushed to dealers.

Dalhart was not alone on Monday, May 23, in making a Victor record of a Lindbergh song. That day, at the company's Camden studios, Ernest Rogers, a "folk music" artist from Atlanta, Ga., recorded his own composition, which was at first called "The Flight of the 'Flying Fool,'" but the label of record No. 20671, gives the name as "The Flight of 'Lucky' Lindbergh." On the other side Ernest V. Stoneman, a mountaineer from Galax, Va., told of "The Mighty Mississippi," which had produced a terrible flood.

On Thursday, May 26, Not Shilkret and the Victor Orchestra played for posterity another Lindbergh song, "Lucky Lindy," assisted by a distinguished vocal group including Richard Crooks, Franklyn Baur, Lambert Murphy, Frank Luther and Fred Patton. Notice the predominance of tenors! I know nothing of Patton, but assume his was the only deep voice in the group.

Now here is an example of how memory can play tricks, especially after 45 years. L. Wolfe Gilbert wrote the words of "Lucky Lindy" and Abel Baer the music. In a 1972 Variety interview, Baer said the song was written immediately after the flight and got off to a slow start until the (once more!) Peerless Quartet made a best selling Victor record of it. Actually, the Peerless did not record the song for Victor or anyone else, and Victor's master books show that the Shilkret version was the only one recorded for that label.

Moreover, the song, like "Lindbergh, the Eagle of the U.S.A.," had to have been written before the flight and kept on hand in the event "Lindy" achieved his mission, for Okeh had on sale a disc combining the best versions of these two numbers just ten days after "The Spirit of St. Louis" landed at Paris. I know. I bought one, and I still remember how a music store played a copy over and over on an electrically amplified Brunswick Panatrope. The Okeh was probably the most heavily amplified vocal record ever made up to that time. Its number was 40826, and the artist was "Noel Taylor"—another name for Irving Kaufman. It had an enthusiastic and Yankee-Doodle-Dandy atmosphere that no competing version managed to achieve. I still have my copy.

Of the group that sang in the Shilkret version, Franklyn Baur and Lambert Murphy have been dead for years, and Richard Crooks died in California of cancer, October 1, 1972, aged 72. Frank Luther is living at this writing (Monday, November 20, 1972). I don't know about Patton. Both "Lucky Lindy" and "Lindbergh, the Eagle" were recorded for virtually every company, mostly by Dalhart.

Another Victor recording of a Lindbergh song was No. 20741, "When "FIRST LADY OF RADIO." VAUGHN De LEATH, said to have been the first woman to sing on a radio program, made an Edison record in 1927, which she began by telling of having just been on the roof of the Edison building in New York, watching the huge parade, which welcomed Charles A. Lindbergh on his return from France in 1927.

Lindy Comes Home," which Billy Jones and Ernest Hare did June 14, 1927, to Dave Kaplan's piano accompaniment.

Lindbergh's homecoming resulted in what to me is one of the most interesting recorded references to his flight, although it is done only incidentally. Miss De Leath begins her Edison disc (52044) of "It's a Million to One You're In Love," by saying: "Here we are down at the Edison Company. We have all been up on the roof, watching the Lindy parade. And was it marvelous? Oh, I'll say so! Very sentimental, with thousands of automobiles coming up Fifth Avenue and the crowds cheering! It was simply wonderful! So I said to my accompanist, 'Come on, Bill, let's sing a little song for the folks!' So here we are." (The accompanist was Bill Regis.) Vaughn's remarks indicate the date of the recording—Monday, June 13, when 10,000 troops preceded Lindbergh and his mother in the parade up Fifth Avenue (the Edison studios were at 79 Fifth Avenue), during which 750,000 pounds of torn paper were dropped.

Two days before the New York celebration, Lindbergh had arrived from France aboard the U. S. Cruiser "Memphis," at the Washington Navy Yard, from which he was driven to the Washington Monument, where he was greeted by President and Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, and the President presented Lindbergh with the Distinguished Flying Cross—the first of its kind. Victor recorded the proceedings, and issued, on No. 20747, "Actual Moments in the Reception to Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh at Washington, D. C.," with Graham McNamee announcing. One double-faced record, No. 35834, was taken up with Lindbergh's Address Before the Press Club, and No. 35835 and 35836 were devoted to President Coolidge's welcoming remarks and Lindbergh's reply. The recordings were taken from NBC broadcasts.

More than a year after the history-making flight, Victor issued another record with "Lindbergh" in the title—"The Lindbergh Hop." This was recorded in Memphis, Tenn., on September 9, 1928, by a group called the Memphis Jug Band, and had "Sugar Puddin'" as its coupling.

Early in June two other astronauts received publicity for flying the Atlantic. A monoplane, "The Columbia," piloted by Clarence D. Chamberlain, and with its owner, Charles A. Levine, as its passenger, left Roosevelt Field on June 4, bound for Berlin. The plane ran out of gas at 5:30 a.m., June 6, and refueled near Eiseleben, Saxony. They flew to Klinge, where their gasoline again gave out, and landed in a muddy field. After being repaired, the craft reached Berlin at 6 p.m., June 7.

I am positive that I have, somewhere, a record of Jones and Hare singing "Chamberlain and Lindy (Our Hats Are Off to You)," but haven't been able to find it in a hurried search, so I assume it must be filed under the name of its other side.

But unsuccessfully looking for it in a Brunswick catalog caused me to make an interesting discovery. I found mentioned a Lindbergh record of which I had never before been aware. It is No. 40219, with both sides sung in Yiddish by J. Feldman. One side is called "Charles Lindbergh" and the other "Charles Levine"—the latter obviously a tribute to Mr. Levine's nationality. Wonder how many readers have this record, which I have never seen.

Levine also gets a mention in one of the funniest of all singing records—"Since Henry Ford Apologized to Me," which Jones and Hare recorded in thick Yiddish dialect for Victor, Columbia, Perfect and other companies. Jimmy Hussey sang it on Brunswick 3654, with "Rose of the Studios" as its coupling. Edison did not issue the satiric number, written by Dave Stamper, Ballard Macdonald and Billy Rose, presumably because of Thomas A. Edison's intimate friendship with Mr. Ford.

The song resulted from a libel suit in which Aaron Sapiro, a Chicago lawyer and Jewish cooperative marketing head, sued Henry Ford for a million dollars, alleging that Ford had falsely accused him, in his notoriously anti-Semitic Dearborn Independent, of being a Communist. The trial began March 15, 1927, but during it a settlement was arranged in which Ford retracted, admitted the Independent had published false charges against the Jews, and apologized. In the side-splitting comic song, Jones and Hare sing: "He's got an aviator for his new machine; instead of Charley Lindberghs he's got Charles Lewine!" As an example of how completely Ford has been forgiven for his libelous publications, Hare asks: "Are you glad he changed his point of view?" and Jones replies: "Sure, I like even Edsel, too, since Henry Ford apologized to me!"

In 1928 two German aviators and one Irishman reversed Lindbergh's procedure by flying east to west from Ireland to Newfoundland. Their names were Herman Kohl, J. C. Fitzmaurice and G. von Hünefeld. Edison issued double-faced record No. 52283, containing two songs in honor of this achievement. Both were sung, to the accompaniment of airplane noises, by Arthur Fields. One, composed by Roy Turk and Fred E. Ahlert, was "Well, the Irish and the Germans Got Together," and the other, by Tom Kennedy and J. O. Donovan (nothing German about those names!) was "They Landed Over Here From Over There."

Colonel Lindbergh again became the hero of popular songs in 1929 when, after flying to Mexico, he met Anne Morrow, daughter of Ambassador Dwight Morrow, and married her. I have a Silvertone record No. 1611 on which Dalhart sings a number called "Lone Eagle (Lindy to Mexico)," which must have been made in 1928, because its reverse side is "That Old Wooden Rocker," by Dalhart and Carson Robison. Since this team had "split" by 1929, the recording cannot be later than some time in 1928.

Then, in the summer of 1929, there was a spate of recordings of "Plucky Lindy's Lucky Day," an account of the flier's marriage to Miss Morrow. Most of the records were by Dalhart, but Irving Kaufman sang the Columbia. The song was written by Charles Abbot and Dale Wimbrow. (Wimbrow made some Columbia and Edison records). Victor offered it two ways, on No. 40086, as a solo by Dalhart, recorded March 26, and a dance version by the High Hatters, made on March 9, with singing by Leonard Stokes, Frank Luther and Randolph Weyant.

Today, 44 years later, despite the tragedy of his small son being kidnapped and murdered, Charles Lindbergh no doubt agrees that it was his "lucky day" when he married the ambassador's daughter. Theirs has seemed an ideal union, in which both husband and wife have won distinction—he as a scientist and she as an author. And on this happy, if slightly sentimental note, we have come to a good place to end our survey of aviation recordings made since Orville and Wilbur Wright first flew at Kitty Hawk in mid-December, 1903.

THE END

P.S. I was preening myself on being through with this laborious effort when it occurred to me that I had better go through all my Dalhart country music records to see if there were any about airplanes that I had missed. I found three. One is Perfect 12349, "The Last Flight," which, on being played, proved to be the same thing as "The Lost French Flyers."

Then there was Banner 6114, "Mildred Doran's Last Flight," composed by Carson Robison and apparently recorded in 1927. I gather that Miss Doran and two male companions embarked on a flight from San Francisco to Japan, but their plane was lost at sea.

HE PRAISED "THE LONE EAGLE." Irving Kaufman, shown here with his wife, who is a noted organist under her professional name of Belle Brooks, made one of the best records celebrating Charles A. Lindbergh's 1927 flight to Paris. The Okeh disc was sung under the assumed name of Noel Taylor and combined "Lucky Lindy" and "Lindbergh, the Eagle of the U.S.A." When this article was written, Mr. and Mrs. Kaufman were living in Palm Desert, Calif.

Finally, I found Romeo No. 893, of two songs dating from about the time of Lindbergh's marriage. Dalhart sings "Charley Boy (We Love You)" and on the coupling "Harry Smith" (Irving Kaufman) addresses the hero's bride in "We Know You'll Take Good Care of Lindy (Little Girl of His Dreams)."

And I have also recalled—in what I hope will be my wind-up recollection—a Capitol record of the early 1940's (No. 103) on which Johnny Mercer sings "The Air-Minded Executive," coupled with "The Strip Polka."

OBITUARY

MARJORIE HOWE DIXON

Marjorie Howe Dixon, wife of Eric Dixon, well known writer on antiques, and co-owner of Blue Spruce Antiques, Kenosha, Wis., passed away recently.

Mrs. Dixon was a graduate of the Chicago Academy of Art, and the Pratt Institute, New York. She operated her own commercial art business in Chicago at one time. She taught art in the Glen Ellyn, Ill., schools for a number of years.

She was a writer of comedy and biblical plays suitable for women's club audiences.

In 1959 she and her husband moved from Illinois to Wisconsin, where they continued their long time shop, Blue Spruce Antiques.

Mrs. Dixon took a deep interest in her husband's writing activities and accompanied him on many of his sojourns in writing about antiques and visiting the people who make the antiques fraternity.

Available from antiques dealers nation-wide
2 FAMOUS PRODUCTS
... leaders in the field for over 15 years

New SUPER-STRENGTH CEMENTIQUE

Mends things stronger than new
... glass, wood,
leather, china,
dolls, jewelry, etc.
Mended joints are permanent, unaffected by age or atmospheric conditions. No unsightly
glue line.

3000 pounds per sq.
inch tested bond strength. Nozzle tip permits direct application; usable to the last drop.
Pure, white, creamy, always ready, no waste.

2½-oz. bottle $1 postpaid

Or SOLVENTIQUE

the WIPE-AWAY paint remover that dissolves up to 8 coats of oil paint or varnish in a single application. No sanding, no scraping, will not drip or run. NON-FLAMMABLE, NO
FUMING. Safe in confined areas leaves no residue, no after-solvents needed. Ideal for walls, ceilings, woodwork, moldings, carved furniture.

Removes old "buttermilk" paints other removers won't touch.

1½ lb. package $2.25 postpaid
($2.50 Pacific Coast States)
SOLVENTIQUE orders,
Add 50c postage and handling.

ANTIQUE CORNER, Inc.
Box 58-H, South Bend, Ind. 46824
Please send postpaid:

.....bottle(s) Cementique at $1
.....can(s) Solventique at $2.25
(($2.50 Pacific Coast States)

Name .....
Street .....
City .....
State ..... Zip.....
Enclosed is my remittance. $.....
alc

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

AL BERNARD

PART I

By JIM WALSH

(NOTE.—This Al Bernard tribute is dedicated to a pair of my friends who are long-time Bernard admirers—Albert Via, Jr., and N.G. Terry, Jr., of South Boston, Va.—and a new friend, but an equally enthusiastic Bernard devotee, Miss Pamela Ochojski, a Monsey, N.Y., college girl.)

I. "The Boy From Dixie"

Since boyhood I have admired Al Bernard, brilliant comedian and song writer, who in the last decade of his life became my valued friend. I am certain he deserves high rank among the greatest "popular" recording artists in a 20-year period beginning just after the end of World War I. And I am glad that, following a quarter of a century of postponed good intentions, I have at last buckled down to the pleasant task of bringing his personality and achievements before HOBBIES readers.

Harking back some 15 years, all the "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists" space in Volume 64 of HOBBIES (March through August, 1959) was devoted to the life stories of two of the greatest recording and radio comedians — "The Happiness Boys," Billy Jones and Ernest Hare. In the series I mentioned that Ernie Hare had begun record-making as a partner of Al Bernard in blackface comedy sketches, but said I would refrain at that time from a detailed account of the Bernard-Hare association because I planned to prepare an equally comprehensive survey of Bernard's career. In April, 1959, I wrote:

"I could devote a great deal of space to relating in detail the professional association of Bernard and Hare. However, since Bernard, as the author and composer, was the 'top man' of the Bernard-Hare duo, I shall withhold that information for a later series which will give that brilliant comedian's life story."

I had not read the Jones and Hare survey since the days when it appeared in HOBBIES, but when I turned back to see what I had written, I was glad to find that I had treated Hare and Bernard's working agreement with restraint, because it left more good material for the present undertaking. Particularly am I glad that I did not include descriptions of the many duets the pair recorded for Edison (their best work was done on the Diamond Discs) and for other companies. Such information will be useful now.

When I was telling my HOBBIES

THE YOUNG AL BERNARD. Al Bernard as he appeared at the beginning of his recording career in 1919.

—Photo from Quentin Riggs

friends everything I knew about Jones and Hare I thought I would soon follow with Bernard, but I am only now essaying that long-contemplated task, on Monday, October 29, 1973. Harry Truman was President when I wrote concerning Billy and Ernie, but he gave way to Dwight D. Eisenhower and is now dead. Eisenhower, also dead, has been succeeded by John F. Kennedy and Lyndon Baines Johnson, who likewise have died, and the officiating President, Richard Nixon, is up to his neck in trouble. A lot can happen in 15 years.

There are a number of reasons why I have been so long about undertaking the life story of Al Bernard. As I have previously said, I have dreaded the physical and mental labor of searching through my overflowing reference files and beginning to shape an article dealing with Bernard that bids fair to occupy three or more installments.

Another drawback is that many of the comedian's records were in "blackface" dialect, and gave exaggerated impersonations of the less cultured and educated types of blacks—a kind more common 40 or 50 years ago than today.

Al Bernard, despite his Louisiana birth and his calling himself "The Boy From Dixie," was no bigoted, narrow-minded racist. The last time I talked with him, in 1949, he asked me not to play on my radio programs any of his records that latter-day black men and women might find offensive.

"In the old days," Al said, "we didn't mean any harm by 'taking off' the lower-class Negroes and using such words in records as 'nigger,' 'coon' and 'shine,' because that was what they called each other. But today it's different. Black people are better educated and things that used to be all right aren't right any more. Forty years ago the blacks laughed as much at my 'coon songs' and comic sketches as the whites. Today, though, I don't want to hurt their feelings, so please be careful which old records of mine you play."

I told Al that I made a point of not playing anything offensive to any group, but said that when I was growing up his records were popular among my black friends and that I particularly remembered going to the home of a Negro boy who was one of my best friends and finding him and his family convulsed over a recorded rendition of "The Nigger Blues." The comedian, who was to be dead within another six months, smiled, but suggested that I restrict myself mostly to his later Brunswick discs, which were largely devoid of any offensive terms. "My Edisons," he said, "were my only acoustic records that were really good. Edison caught my voice perfectly, but the other companies did only a so-so job. My best electricals were the Brunswicks, and they're the ones I'd rather you'd use." My own opinion was that his electrical Columbias and Okeh's were as good as the Brunswicks, if not a little better, but I promised to observe caution whenever I played his records.

(Incidentally, although I am a native Virginian, I have never used such words as "nigger" or "coon" except in speaking of the old-time "coon songs." When I was a small boy my mother told me that if she ever heard me refer to a Negro as a "nigger," in or out of a black person's hearing, she would "whip you till you can't stand up," and I never have. Words like "nigger" indicate contempt that I don't feel. But, as Al said, I have frequently heard quarreling, or joking Negroes address each other as "nigger" or, less frequently, "coon." I well remember hearing an indignant Negro boy shouting to a group of blacks who were using bad language: "All you niggers up on this street is jes' heathens!")

Al Bernard, who in later life gave up being known as "The Boy From Dixie" and was called "The Gentleman

From the South," was just that—a Southern gentleman who strived only to entertain his hearers, white and black, and was guiltless of feelings of malice or spite toward any population segment. And that may well bring us to some facts concerning the man himself.

II. Al Bernard, the Man

If Al Bernard were still alive he would be an aged man of 85, but he was a young fellow barely turned 30 when he made his first record, shortly after World War I came to a merciful close. Perhaps the best way of telling something about the personality of the debonair, irrepressible comedian is to quote things published about him in the early days of his recording career. But first, let's turn to the end of his life, and see what a newspaper said about him when he died at the comparatively young age of 60. I am about to quote a death notice that appeared in the March 7, 1949, "New York Times":

"Al Bernard, radio singer and song writer known as 'the boy from Dixie,' died yesterday in St. Clare's Hospital at the age of 61. His home was at 305 West Forty-fifth Street.

"Mr. Bernard recorded 4,000 songs. He was one of the first to make a record in the United States, for which he received an autographed picture of Thomas Edison.

"The singer wrote 125 songs, including 'Let Me Be the First to Kiss You Good Morning.' He and Russell Robinson wrote 'When Spring Comes Peeping Through' and 'Blue-eyed Sally.'

"Mr. Bernard was a member of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. Surviving are his widow, Gertrude Bernard and two daughters, Mrs. Richard Douglas and Mrs. Charles Blanchard."

"The New York Times" boasts that it publishes "all the news that's fit to print." It preens itself on its high standards of accuracy, but this obituary leaves much to be desired.

To begin, Al was 60, not 61, when he died. I seriously doubt that he made 4,000 records, though this possibly may be true. My doubt was somewhat shaken when I went through my own Bernard collection and found records he made under his own name and various disguises on 35 labels, and I may have missed a few. They included Actuelle, Aeolian-Vocalion, Arto, Banner, Brunswick, Cameo, Columbia, Celebrity, Diva, Domino, Edison Blue Amberol cylinder, Edison Diamond Disc, Emerson, Gennett, Globe, Grey Gull, Harmony, Hy-Tone, Lincoln, Lyric, Madison, Melotone, Okeh, Paramount, Pathé (sapphire), Perfect, Radiex, Regal, Romeo, Silvertone, Triangle, Victor, Velvetone, and Vocalion.

This does not mean that he was singing for 35 different companies. Actuelle, Pathé and Perfect records, for instance, were all made by Pathé Freres. Emerson made Regal and probably Arto, and Diva, Harmony and Velvetone were from Columbia presses. Some of the other "off-brands" were disguises for Cameo, Gennett and Grey Gull. But, regardless of label trickery, it is apparent that Al Bernard did a lot of recording, so perhaps after all his total reached 4,000.

The statement that Bernard was "one of the first" to make a record is ridiculous. Recording had been done for 41 years before he first appeared—on tinfoil, wax cylinders, magnetized wire, discs, and indestructible cylinders. Thousands of persons had preceded him to phonograph studios. And while he may have received an autographed photo of Thomas A. Edison, who was no enthusiastic admirer of Bernard's singing, that was not, as the article seems to imply, the only payment he received for his first Edison recordings. Too, "Russell Robinson's" real name was J. Russel Robinson.

The "Times'" obituary may be supplemented by the following entry from "The ASCAP Biographical Dictionary of 1952":

"BERNARD, AL, composer, author, minstrel, radio and recording artist, actor in vaudeville, musical comedy, television and motion pictures, born New Orleans, La., Nov. 23, 1888. Died New York, N.Y., March 9, 1949. Organized own troupe of amateur minstrels as schoolboy; professional entertainer at 18. Radio artist continuously from 1923. Author of books of minstrel songs, comic songs and spirituals. Songs: 'Let Me Be the First to Kiss You Good Morning,' 'Shake, Rattle and Roll,' 'Read 'em and Weep,' 'Blue-eyed Sally,' 'Sugar,' 'Birmingham Papa,' 'Twenty-five Years From Now,' 'I Got Horses and Got Numbers On My Mind,' 'Pick That Bass.'"

My information concerning some phases of Bernard career is not so comprehensive as I would like it to be. I know nothing about his appearances in moving pictures. He and J. Russel Robinson, I believe, appeared together in vaudeville, and possibly at one time or another Al came on as a 'single'. Billy Murray told me he believed that Bernard had never been a member of any minstrel troupe, but this may have been wrong. The ASCAP list of Bernard's songs is far from indicating the scope and quality of his work, and one of those mentioned, "I Got Horses," must have been completely unsuccessful, for I have never seen it mentioned elsewhere and don't think it was recorded. "Pick That Bass" is a novelty among Bernard's compositions, for it seems to have no words and may have been intended as a guitar solo. I have a record of it by the Hoosier Hot Shots. Since Al could not read or write music, it is surprising to find him producing a rather elaborate and tricky instrumental number.

For the past 45 minutes I have been going crazy, trying to find the copy of Al Bernard's death certificate, which I ordered from the New York City Department of Health. It must be here somewhere, for I had it in my hands only two or three days ago, but now, although I have before me the envelope in which it was mailed I can't find the certificate itself. It should turn up, however, and I'll postpone mention of its contents until I begin to discuss the large "family" of Bernard's who made records.

III. Published References

Meanwhile, I obtained years ago, from some source I do not now recall, a ragged, torn page of "Stage World" for October 20, 1920, with a discussion of the work of Al Bernard, who had been making records about a year and a half. Since almost no HOBBIES reader is likely to have seen this article by Mark Vance, it is worth reprinting here. It appeared in a department called "In the Song Shops," with the sub-title, "Al Bernard's Fame Growing":

"Al Bernard is a worthwhile chap. And you can stick a pin right here that you will hear a lot about young Bernard before the year is out for he has forged to the front in regular Man O' War fashion. We use the name of Man O' War advisedly for the simple reason that he is the fastest horse of the times and a great money maker. Not only do we believe that the present popularity of Bernard will shoot to amazing bounds but we do know he will become a mighty big money maker as he continues his making of records for the different 'mechanicals' and keeps up his song writing hits.

"Bernard hails from the City of New Orleans, where he obtained his start in the amusement business. He had a natural inclination to imitate the dialect of the buck Negro and having a voice of high range and quality seemed to find it natural to sing his way through life. Eventually he joined a minstrel show and learned the ways of the actor man. Then he landed on all fours in gay New York, now the city of 'buys' and 'drys', and modestly awaited his turn at opportunity's door. Then the song hit came: You remember 'Sugar,' which made such a furore less than two years ago. Bernard wrote it. There were many others, but one of his latest is 'Read 'em and Weep.' Then there is 'See Old Man Moon Smile.' And last, but not least, another brand new one called 'Midnight Moon.' And he has others up his sleeve. But that isn't all.

"Bernard and Ernest Hare have made a series of 'double records' for the 'mechanicals', and we heard them sing 'Read 'Em and Weep,' and then realized that in Al Bernard, New York had a real treasure, a music-writing genius, one who understands his lyrical properties, and that Bernard has a bright and glorious future. Whether it be Emerson, Okeh, Federal, Victor, or what not, the answer is the same. The Bernard-Hare records are worth two dollars of any man's spending money. One of the first 'mechanicals' that established Bernard as out of the ordinary was 'St. Louis Blues' and 'Beale Street,' which he sang some time ago and which had such a phenomenal sale that 'remakes' are now in order. Keep your musical and popularity eyes upon Bernard. He is going to make you sit up and listen."

Certainly this is unstinted, even fulsome, praise, but like the "New York Times" obituary, it is not a model of accuracy. The statement that Bernard joined a minstrel show may be true, despite Billy Murray's contrarary impression, or perhaps it refers to the troupe Al is alleged to have organized as a teen-ager. "Sugar" came out only a year or a little more before this article appeared and was not even a hit, much less creating a "furore." "Midnight Moon" apparently died without shining on the popular song loving public, for I have never heard of a record of it.

Vance gives the impression that Bernard and Ernie Hare recorded duets of "Read 'Em and Weep," but all the records of this amusing song that I have seen listed were by Bernard alone. He mentions Federal as one of the companies for which the tenor-comedian recorded, but omits Edison for which he was doing his and that you might even be interested in buying some. If you have any interest in them, I would be happy to show them to you at any mutually convenient time. I would be most grateful for any assistance you might give."

(Continued on page 120)

He signed himself, "Caspar Wistar Davis", and enclosed a list. When we saw the name, we wondered—could he possibly be a descendant of Caspar Wistar, the Colonial maker of the famous South Jersey glass?

Sure enough, he is one of the few living descendants to bear the illustrious name. Because of this, he had inherited the collection of buttons from a great-aunt, who had long cherished it. Most of the collection had been handed down through the family from Revolutionary days.

Were we interested? It is not often that one is offered six such rarities, even if two of them are listed as "alike". We replied at once, giving directions how to reach our home, and suggested that he come Saturday, the 13th. Instead, he telephoned that he would arrive Sunday. He lived on one of the three Puget Sound Islands we see from our west windows, from which we can watch the ferries plying back and forth from Seattle.

Sunday came: he arrived, bringing the buttons in a paper bag. They were mounted on three very old cards, with the ones attributed to Caspar Wistar identified in fading ink. Only a few of the others we had not seen before. The two "Inaugurals" listed as being alike we recognized as being different dies. We knew at once we would buy them all if we had to, but we felt it would not be right for him to let the buttons, hand-made by Caspar Wistar, leave the family. We asked his price and agree to meet it, but made a counter offer to buy all those not made by Caspar Wistar. He considered it but wanted to talk it over with his wife.

He left, taking the buttons with him. We wondered if we had been too enthusiastic about Button Collecting—something with which he was not familiar.

However, on Monday, he telephoned to say that he had decided to keep the Caspar Wistars, and to accept our bid for the others. He said he would bring the buttons next day. He brought them, and we gave him our check.

"George Washington Inaugurals" are not Campaign buttons, as collectors of Political buttons sometimes insist. Campaign buttons are issued when more than one candidate is in contention. George Washington was the candidate of all the people—he had no opposition. These many different buttons were issued to commemorate his inauguration as President of the United States.

We could have wept when we saw the verdigris imbedded in the "Linked States". However, we were able to remove it, and a final polish with jeweler's rouge restored the luster. The cards had been lying in Mr. Davis' attic, unwrapped, for the last three years; the heat of summer and the damp of winter had caused the mold, which we spent a whole morning removing. But the buttons did polish beautifully. Two are copper and the others brass. It is seldom that one of these "Memorable Era" buttons (No. 6) is found in mint condition. But regardless of condition, all the buttons add greatly to any Presidential collection.*

*Identification of the separate buttons is given below the illustration. The numbers given in parenthesis are those attached to the different design by A. H. Albert ("The Record"), David F. Johnson ("American Historical Buttons") and J. Harold Cobb ("George Washington Inaugurals and Medalets").

No. 1—"GW" in oval. (Albert No. 11b. Cobb No. 5c.)

No. 2—"Linked States" border. (Albert No. 1a. Johnson No. 871. Cobb No. 9.)

No. 3—"Linked States" border. Same design as No. 2, but button was struck on a larger planchet. (Albert No. 4A. Johnson No. 871. Cobb No. 9.)

No. 4—"GW" in plain script, with "Long Live the President" border. (Albert No. 10A.)

No. 5—"GW" in dotted script, with "Long Live the President" border. (Albert No. 9A. Johnson No. 974. Cobb No. 10.)

No. 6—Eagle with date and legend: "March the Fourth 1789—Memorable Era." (Albert No. 1A. Johnson No. 892. Cobb No. 4.)

THE GLAMOROUS CHICAGO ANTIQU SHOW and COLLECTORS' FAIR

Meet your old friends and make new ones at this twice yearly event. The next one is

JUNE 8-12
at the CONRAD HILTON
Exhibition Hall

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

AL BERNHARD

(Continued from page 38)

BLACKFACE DUO. A cartoonist with the Richmond (Va.) Times-Dispatch drew this picture, showing how he imagined Billy Jones and Ernest Hare would have sung a "mammy song," to illustrate an article about Hare by Jim Walsh. Actually, it would be more appropriate to consider it a sketch of Al Bernard and Hare, for Jones and Hare almost never did Negro comedy impersonations, while Bernard and Hare made no other type of record.

most important work. I didn't find in my collection any Federal records by Bernard, but Silvertones of that period were generally made from Federal masters, and my Silvertone of "Can't You Heah Me Callin', Caroline?" (a fine rendition, but not so good as Vernon Dalhart's Edison) has an F. beside the serial number, and I take the F. to stand for Federal. "Read 'em And Weep," by the way, was introduced in "Come Seven," a musical comedy featuring the Negro characters about whom Octavus Roy Cohen was then writing in the "Saturday Evening Post," and Bernard, corked up, took the part of the hero, Florian Slappey.

The mention of "The Beale Street Blues" and "The St. Louis Blues" is puzzling. It gives the impression that they were coupled on the same record. If this is a reference to Bernard's Edison records, it is an error, for W. C. Handy's "Beale Street Blues" was combined on Edison with "Jazz Baby," by Rachel Grant (Gladys Rice) and "St. Louis Blues" had Bernard and Hare singing Bernard's funny blackface composition "Henry Jones, Your Honeymoon Is Over," for its companion. I don't understand the reference to "remakes" being in order. I have copies of these "blues" records made in the mid-1920's and both are from B. masters. If the original versions had been done over, the remakes would have been from masters F. G., or H.

Continued on next page)

(Continued from preceding page)

It is amusing that in his classic humorous novel, "Leave It to Psmith," P. G. Wodehouse described Miss Peavey, an American poetess, who would also steal anything that wasn't nailed down, strolling along an English country road and singing "that curious composition known as 'The Beale Street Blues.'" And I have long wondered why Bernard, in the Edison record of the "St. Louis Blues," exclaims: "So, Memphis Blues, be on your way!" Why didn't he say, "So, St. Louis Blues, be on your way!" instead?

IV. The Bernard Death Certificate

I stopped at the end of section three because of nervous exhaustion, the consequence of my unavailing effort to find the certificate of Al Bernard's death. A few hours later I spied it lying beneath the chair in which I had been sitting. Evidently it had slipped unnoticed out of my grasp while I was leafing through a stack of reference items. Now that I have the elusive thing, I have decided to refer to it before it disappears again rather than wait for my promised discussion of the Bernard "family".

The certificate shows that Bernard's first name was Alfred, even though he was always called Al. His middle name began with A., but it is not revealed what the name was. His associate, J. Russel Robinson, probably didn't know Bernard's first name, for in one of their records he calls him "Albert".

According to the certificate, Bernard was born November 23, 1887, rather than in 1888, as the ASCAP Biographical Dictionary said. If this is correct, and it should be, since the information came from Mrs. Bernard, he really was 61 (as the "New York Times" said) rather than 60 at the time of his death, and began making records when he was 31, instead of 30, as I wrote earlier. Which reminds me, I meant to point out, but it slipped my mind, that the death date, March 9, in the Biographical dictionary, is wrong. March 6 is correct.

The certificate says Al had lived in New York for 25 years, but since he was recording there in 1919 this figure should have been 30, or more. His occupation is given as "radio artist" and his birthplace as New Orleans. He was never in the armed services, no doubt being excused in the first World War on the ground that he was a public entertainer whose services were necessary to the national morale.

The comedian's father also was Alfred Bernard and his mother's maiden name was Katherine Tuett. He died in St. Clare's Hospital, Manhattan, at 11 a.m., of natural causes, not described. When I met him September, 1948, he was suffering terribly from phlebitis, and some of his letters, to be quoted in a succeeding installment, may give a clearer idea of his last illness.

Al Bernard was buried March 9, 1949, in the Gate of Heaven Cemetery at Mt. Pleasant, N.Y. The funeral directors were Stafford & McGlynn, of 307 West 51st St., New York. And that is the extent of the certificate's information, except — which we already know—that he was married and his wife's name was Gertrude.

V. "Along Broadway" Article

For several years Thomas A. Edison, Inc., published a "fan magazine" for buyers of what the Library of Congress has called "the incomparable Edison Diamond Discs", which almost every critic now admits were the supreme masterpieces of acoustic recording. Under the heading of "Tales of Tin Pan Alley," the periodical presented an interesting article, in its December, 1919, issue, concerning Al Bernard and his recording partner, Ernest Hare:

"Ernest Hare asked Al Bernard for an egg and that gave 'The Boy From Dixie' the idea for his big success, 'I Want to Hold You in My Arms'."

"When a song is recorded at the Edison recording studios no vast audience greets, applauds and inspires the singer. No elaborate setting nor elaborate costuming helps to 'put the number across.' Instead, the artist faces a great, yawning, somber throated horn, projecting from the wall. Standing on a pedestal, by the artists, is the music director. Back of the artist is the orchestra, one of the best in America. Only those who take part in the recording work are allowed in the big, bare room, high up on the top floor of a New York office building. So acute is the hearing of the horn that a faint shuffling of feet, even a whisper, would be recorded and thus spoil the Recreation. 'Ready,' whispers the music director. Everyone expectantly watches a little red globed lamp above the horn. 'Hush,' whispers the director as he raises his baton; the little red globe suddenly lights up, twinkles for a moment and dies. The baton descends, the artist sings and in a few minutes the great horn has swallowed and digested the last note. Again the light twinkles, announcing that the recording process is finished. The orchestra, the artist, all cough — that seems the proper thing to do. The tenseness of the performance is past."

"Only two artists have ever committed the serious offense of interrupting a recording. Ernest Hare, famous for his delineations at the Winter Garden, New York, and Al Bernard. 'The Boy From Dixie,' were the offenders."

"Do you remember their smile-provoking Recreation, 'I Want to Hold You in My Arms,' on the September list? They recently made one even more humorous, 'See Old Man Moon Smile,' which will appear in January. The humor in 'See Old Man Moon Smile' so appealed to the members of the orchestra that they stopped playing and laughed during the recording. (We shall see later what made them laugh.—J.W.)"

"These two hundred per cent comedians write their own comedy skits, and Al Bernard composes his own songs. He sings but cannot play any instrument or write music. Concerning his songs, Bernard says:

"I never 'work' at song composition, but wait until the idea comes to me. Usually I think of a title first, then build the words and music of the song. I have composed words and music within fifteen minutes, and usually the composition of a song does not take me more than half an hour."

"Ernest Hare and myself live in Henri Court, New York City. My apartment is just above his. We had written the lines for the Recreation, 'I Want to Hold You in My Arms,' but had vainly hunted New York for the proper song to use. Also, then, we had no name for it."

"One night Ernest shouted up: 'Say Al, have you an egg I may borrow?' I said, 'I've got it.' 'All right, drop it down,' answered Ernie. 'Not the egg, but the song idea. Come on up!'"

"Honestly, the idea came to me while I was standing at the dumb waiter. I pictured Ernest as a colored soldier seeing his honey up in the window for the first time since he had gone away. I just pictured what that chocolate colored baby would say to him and that was 'I Want to Hold You in My Arms.'"

Regardless of this "inspiration", however, The Boy From Dixie didn't write both the words and music of "I Want to Hold You in My Arms" within that seemingly incredible 30-minute time limit. Possibly he turned out the words that fast, but for the music he relied on his friend, the already mentioned J. Russel Robinson.

A somewhat similar article about Bernard and Hare appeared in the "Edison Amberola Monthly" for April, 1921. In part, it repeats what has just been quoted from "Along Broadway", but, with repetition omitted, here is the remainder:

"Al Bernard and Ernest Hare are almost too well known to our readers for us to be able to tell them anything new about these laugh artists. Their records speak for themselves."

"Both Hare and Bernard hail from the Sunny South. Hare was born in Norfolk, Va. and as a boy distinguished himself for high soprano voice. Who would ever think it now, when they listen to his profound bass? The show business called him early, and his first theatrical adventures were in a summer musical stock company. From that time he worked steadily up the ladder until he became one of the principals of the Winter Garden Show in New York."

"Al Bernard is known as 'The Boy From Dixie.' He sings the 'blues' type of song so well that people think he invented it. Also, he writes the words and music of songs."

"Beginning with April 4th, Al Bernard is to have a 'Music Week' in his honor in New Orleans. During that time every orchestra in the city will play some of his best known numbers, among them being 'Read 'Em and Weep.' . . ."

A little more than a year earlier, the same publication, intended for dealers in Blue Amberol cylinders and Edison Amberolas, had reproduced on the back cover of the January-February, 1920, issue, a photo of Bernard and Hare, apparently slipping or skating on ice. Bernard, somewhat the taller, is wearing a derby hat and looking morose. Hare, sporting a felt hat, is smiling broadly. Both have on overcoats and both clench cigars in their mouths. The caption says:

"The World's great fun makers whose original style of conversational singing in Negro dialect is a sensation in the field of music. If you haven't heard them sing 'I Want to Hold You in My Arms,' 'See Old Man Moon Smile,' 'You're My Gal' and 'Henry Jones, Your Honeymoon is Over,' you have missed one of the funniest experiences of your life. The Edison Amberola dealer will play them for you."

(To be continued)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

AL BERNARD

PART II

By JIM WALSH

(NOTE.—This Al Bernard tribute is dedicated to a pair of my friends who are long-time Bernard admirers—Albert Via, Jr., and N.G. Terry, Jr., of South Boston, Va.—and a new friend, but an equally enthusiastic Bernard devotee, Miss Pamela Ochojski, a Monsey, N.Y., college girl.)

(PART I CONTINUED)

New Orleans is famed the world over as the cradle of ragtime and jazz, so it was appropriate that Al Bernard's home city should present a week-long celebration honoring its native son, especially since his forté was impersonating the old-fashioned type of Negroes who brought those characteristically American types of music into prominence. The Bernard music week was again mentioned in the Edison record supplement for April, 1926, when Al's lively disc of "Hot Coffee," with a "hot" accompaniment, was announced:

"Al Bernard, the popular songster and composer, is known as 'The Boy From Dixie.' He hails from New Orleans, where they are so proud of Al that they conducted an entire music week in his honor several years ago. But Al's popularity isn't confined to his home town, No, Sir! Al is a whale of a success everywhere, and his popularity has been enhanced greatly by his radio broadcasting as one of the 'Record Boys,' a jolly group of entertainers, organized by Al. Try 'Hot Coffee' for your musical diet this evening."

The Record Boys, who will be discussed later in this series, were Bernard; Frank Kamplain, a yodeler with whom Al began making duet records in 1920, and Sam H. Stept, composer and pianist. Bernard's photograph was reproduced on the front cover of the supplement.

Speaking of the comedian's association with Kamplain, my collection includes duets by Bernard with him, Billy Beard, Vernon Dalhart, Frank Ferrara (playing a guitar or ukulele accompaniment, but not singing); Wilfred Glenn (called for the occasion "Charles Aubrey"; (Al remarked to me that Glenn was "awfully slow learning to do blackface dialect"); Ernest Hare, and J. Russel Robinson. Bernard also sang in a few Columbia records by the Lasses White Minstrels. It has only recently occurred to me that never in his career, so far as I can recall, did he record with a woman as a duet partner.

VI. Brunswick and Gennett Publicity

Despite his great popularity, Al Bernard was never the subject of many write-ups in the record companies' yearly catalogs. He recorded so little for Victor that he was given no special attention; Columbia also listed his records under his name and let it go at that, and Edison, whose biographical notes were usually restricted to artists recording "serious" music, also told record buyers nothing about him in the annual catalogs. He was frequently praised, however, in the monthly supplements.

THEY MADE THE EDISON ORCHESTRA BREAK DOWN AND LAUGH. Al Bernard and his blackface comedy partner, Ernest Hare, in 1920.

About the only exceptions to the "no biography" rule were Brunswick and Gennett. In the 1922 issue the Brunswick catalog published a picture of Bernard, with this comment:

"Al Bernard ought to be happy for he gives loads of laughs to thousands. Bernard is a singing-comedian or a comedian singer (according to the song you hear and see him in) of the first water. Of course, he is a wonderful artist, but he's human and funny and fine on or off the stage. He's always got a new song or scene in his head which means entertainment to Bernard fans everywhere. In Rip Van Winkle's words we part with Al Bernard—"May he live long and prosper!"

There was no Brunswick descriptive comment about Bernard in 1923 and 1924, but in 1925, under the heading of "Dixie Stars," appeared a photo of the comedian and J. Russel Robinson, his associate in song writing, a skilled pianist and the possessor of a ponderous deep voice somewhat similar to Ernest Hare's. The catalog said:

"Our old friends, Al Bernard and Russel

CORKED UP. Al Bernard's first recording partner, Ernest Hare, in blackface make-up. Bernard and Hare always used burned cork on their faces, to "get the right atmosphere," before making a comedy record.

Robinson (sic). The Dixie Stars, are touring the entire country and broadcasting by radio in most of the larger cities.

"Their songs are individual, cleverly arranged, and most are of their own composition."

"You will thoroughly enjoy Brunswick Records by the Dixie Stars, and then, too, you'll find some highly entertaining tenor solos in this catalog by Al Bernard."

Nothing Brunswick said, you will observe, really told anything about Al Bernard, the man.

The 1923 Gennett commentary, illustrated by a rather poor cut of Bernard, was no more explicit:

"Al Bernard is better known as 'The Boy From Dixie,' and certainly needs no further introduction. He is known throughout the country as the originator of the 'Blues' records and is also a song writer of note. He has written many successes among which is 'Read 'Em and Weep' which has been recorded on Gennett Record 9077."

That Gennett catalogue offers only three double-faced Bernard records: 4544, coupling "Everybody Wants a Key to My Cellar" and "Bluin' the Blues"; 9077, combining "The Broadway Blues" and "Read 'Em and Weep"; and 4651, teaming two Bernard-Hare duets, "Change Your Name, Melinda Lee" and "See Old Man Moon Smile."

It was not strictly true, as the Gennett catalog asserts, that Bernard originated "blues" vocal records. The first such record about the "blues" appears to have been "The Memphis Blues," sung by Morton Harvey and issued by Victor in January, 1915. Columbia made the same song by Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan some time later. The Columbia version is good, but the Victor is a fiasco because Harvey had one of the strongest Mid-Western accents I have ever heard and his heavy voice was totally unsuited to that type of song.

VII. Weird "American Weekly" Story

One more bit of publicity about Al Bernard remains to be quoted, before attention is paid next month to the large number of persons with the family name of Bernard who have made discs and cylinders. Then we can proceed to a detailed discussion of the recording career of the most important Bernard.

On hand for the amused consideration of Bernard admirers is a wild and incredible "story" published in the "American Weekly", a magazine supplement that was a part of the Hearst Sunday newspapers. In the piece I am about to copy, it turned its attention to Al Bernard and made the absurd statement that in order to become well known and establish himself as an entertainer he sang seven years on radio without pay.

This article saw print in 1929 or 1930, and was illustrated with the same photo of Bernard as a young man that accompanies the present installment of the comedian's life story. When it appeared Al had been for 10 years one of the most popular recording artists and had been established in radio almost that long. Anybody who believes that he had sung all that time on radio without remuneration, either as a soloist or as the leader of the Record Boys, must be naive.

My copy of the article is torn, and some of the heading is gone. The part that remains says, "Worked 7 Years," and the remainder must have been "Without Being Paid," or something similar. Anyway, here is the article for what it is worth:

"The millions of 'listeners in' who hear the singing of Al Bernard, of New York, in today's ambitious radio programs probably picture this performer before the microphone as another of the fortunate artists who went in for entertaining over the ether because it is easy, pleasant work that commands big pay. It is true that Mr. Bernard is fairly paid, but it was a long, hard battle during which he faced the 'mike' for seven long years and never got a cent for his services. The Biblical character who worked seven years in order to marry the girl of his heart and then didn't get her was no less determined than Mr. Bernard, who tenaciously set out to make a place for himself in the world of radio.

"Mr. Bernard saw the possibilities of radio for entertainers when the industry was in its infancy, and did his first singing into the 'mike' in 1921 when radio was looked on as an impractical fad and receiving sets were few and far between. He broadcast over one station for two years and collected not a cent for his long hours of vocalizing.

"Then he toured the country with a writer of popular songs (J. Russel Robinson—J.W.) and sang—free of charge—over almost every station then operating. A music publisher paid his railway fare, but he had to sing in clubs and behind music counters to earn his board and lodging. But never once did Bernard doubt that his day would come, any more than did some 200 other popular radio entertainers of the moment who put in years of unpaid work in studios in order to build their reputations and put them in line for well-paying positions.

"Bernard believes that a radio performer must serve an apprenticeship of hard work, just as movie stars do, in order to know how to please radio audiences. To him singing into the 'mike' is an art that requires a distinct technique, which, thanks to his seven years' work without remuneration, he mastered."

PART II

I. The Bernard Recording "Family"

This series was prefaced by a dedication to a new friend of mine, Miss Pamela Ochojski, of Monsey, N.Y., and two old friends, A. R. Via, Jr., and Nat G. Terry, Jr., both of South Boston, Va.

As this is written, neither the young lady nor the mature gentleman know that they are the recipients of a dedication; nevertheless, both Miss Ochojski and Mr. Via have made useful suggestions concerning this survey of Al Bernard's life and recording achievements.

Miss Ochojski has written that it would be particularly appropriate to have the series appear as early as possible in 1974, to commemorate the 25th anniversary of the great comedian's death on March 6, 1949. The commemorative aspect had not occurred to me, but I am glad that I asked HOBBIES to begin publication of the Bernard material in the March issue, which is only a few weeks after the anniversary of my old friend, Al's, too early passing.

Mr. Via has suggested that Al, with his genial personality, ready wit and never-failing sense of humor, would have been an ideal member of the Al's Club, a burlesque type of organization I founded many years ago, in which each member had a title beginning with Al. Both "Jack" Via and his wife would be entitled to belong on the strength of their given names, for his is Albert, which was the title bestowed upon the Al's Club president. The vice president was Alfred, and the string of "Al" designations continued down the line, with — Mrs. Via will be displeased to learn — the mere rank and file having the "title" of "Alice," which is her Christian name. The Al's Club was one of a number of more or less subversive "secret orders" I have originated, of which the most important was the Ancient, Honorable and Independent Order of Liver-Flingers, whose members prided themselves on being more independent than ancient and more ancient than honorable; the Association for the Abolition of Wedlock and, most recently, the Amalgamated Hail Hearers of America, whose primary purpose is to "hear hail to beat hail!" Having said which, I hereby declare Al Bernard posthumously elected to full membership in the Al's Club, with the title of Alfred, which, as was revealed last month, was his full first name.

I doubt that any family name has appeared more often on record labels than Bernard and its variants, such as Bernardo. There have been other popular names, of course. "Spencer," for instance, has popped up in the never-to-be-forgotten Len Spencer; his more easily forgotten brother, Henry (Harry); Janet Spencer, a contralto who made a few Red Seal records, and Elizabeth Spencer, the popular soprano, who was Mrs. E. B. Southworth when she began making records, but had started her professional career when she was married to Otis B. Spencer. Ernest Hare was even called "Ernie Spencer" on some records.

Then there were the Stanleys, although "Frank C. Stanley," the first famous bearer of that name, was really William Stanley Grinstead, and Aileen Stanley's maiden name was Elsie Maude Muggridge. James Stanley, a basso, like Stanley Grinstead, seems to have used his real name, and so presumably did Helen Stanley, a member of the Chicago Opera Company who made records. The populous Jones family was represented, among others, by Ada Jones and Billy Jones, and the Smiths did especially well among black women "blues" singers — of whom Mamie, Bessie and Clara come to mind. But none of these family names had so many representatives as the Bernards, perhaps a majority of whom were Jewish.

Because of this Hebraic prominence, many collectors have the idea that Al Bernard was Jewish, but he was not. Instead, he was of Louisiana French descent and, in a part of the sketch of his life in the ASCAP Biographical Dictionary, which I unintentionally neglected to quote last month, it was mentioned that he obtained his education in Catholic schools. Another omitted statement said he made "one of the first talking and singing film shorts." I believe I quoted the reference to his having been a "pioneer in television, writing and directing his own programs."

I am gradually working my way toward a discussion of the beginning of Al Bernard's recording career, but, meanwhile, let's give at least passing mention to some of the other persons by the same last name who made, or tried to make records. One, of whom few of us probably have ever heard, was Alfred Bernard, a tenor, who on December 20, 1920, received the following brusque dismissal at the hands of Thomas A. Edison: "No. Dead interpretation. Barytone timbre." Despite the fact that this aspiring tenor was named Alfred Bernard, he surely cannot have been our friend Al, who at that time was one of the most successful Edison singers.

Much farther back, Miss Marguerite Bernard, described as a lyric soprano who had sung at Nice and Monte Carlo, earned the great, half-deafened inventor's disapproval: "Bad tremolo. High notes ragged — bad. No."

No more fortunate was Giuseppe Di Bernardo, a lyric tenor described as having sung in Milan. This note from Mr. Edison is undated, but is followed by a 1915 entry about Rhoda Bernard, a singer of Yiddish and Italian dialect songs. Concerning Signor Di Bernardo, Mr. Edison snorted:

(Continued on page 120)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

"Scale: Awful tremolo, 'Girl of Golden West' — Don't compare with Martinoli. Not desirable."

I don't understand the reference to the Puccini opera, "The Girl of the Golden West," unless it means Di Bernardo had made a test recording of an aria from that not overly successful production. It was not easy to elicit a favorable opinion from Thomas A. Edison, but he never doubted that he could judge a voice's recording qualities better than anyone else.

Rhoda Bernard was a comedienne who made a few records for the four leading American companies — Victor, Columbia (she also, I believe, sang some Little Wonders, of Columbia origin), Edison and Pathé, but Mr. Edison's analysis of her work on July 29, 1915, was not highly favorable.

"The thing is odd, but her articulation is very bad. I couldn't get a word. My wife could not get it all. If she can be got to articulate, think she would be good. Try her on this and caution about articulation."

It is not indicated what Rhoda Bernard had sung on this occasion. Possibly it was "I'm Looking for Antone," but this was not recorded until October 11, 1915, when masters were made that resulted in the song being issued on Diamond Disc No. 50324

(with "Ballymooney and Billy McGee, by Billy Murray, as its coupling,) and as dubbed Blue Amberol No. 4182. The disc came in an envelope with the following description of the two sides, beginning with "Antone."

"Al Piantadosi has made his biggest success with sentimental ballads, several of which have been 'heard round the world.' He seems to be able to write character songs also, as the present number will attest. Of course the main interest of the selection lies in the words, so we must mention Joe McCarthy, who wrote them. The whole idea of the song is an amusing conception, but it would fall pretty flat if a less accomplished artist than Rhoda Bernard presented it. The Italians of New York — the lower classes — have a unique manner of talking English, and it is by no means easy to imitate them. 'Billy Murray is certainly clever in the way he 'puts over' his wide variety of songs. So long as it's funny, Billy Murray can sing it and make even a mediocre song sound like a winner. Mr. Murray's popularity with Edison owners dates from his first record, for nobody since has ever been satisfied with hearing him only once."

Regardless of the Edison writer's praise, the Bernard side of the record was a "dog." It had no tune worth mentioning, and the words were too hard to understand for the average Diamond Disc buyer to find them amusing. Rhoda Bernard's must successful record probably was a Victor of a genuinely funny Jewish dialect song, "Cohen Owes Me Ninety-Seven Dollars," with words and music by Irving Berlin.

Lester Bernard, whom I take to be Rhoda's husband, although perhaps he was her brother, made some Edison tests, and received this verdict from Mr. Edison on November 19, 1915:

"Hebrew—Not good dialect. Not funny.
"Italian—O.K. and good in the Italian record. Get it?"

The Italian dialect record to which Mr. Edison referred probably was "Italian Rosa," which was not issued on the disc but became Blue Amberol 2939. I have a copy of this recitation and often have wondered why it was approved for sale. Hardly anything could be duller, and I imagine it had one of the poorest sales of any Blue Amberol, despite Mr. Edison's commendation. Possibly there was a slight demand in the Italian areas of large cities, but I can't imagine small town and rural purchasers, who were the backbone of the Edison cylinder business, handing over 50 or 60 cents for something they found unintelligible.

Lester and Rhoda Bernard did teamwork in a Columbia record that puzzles me. I saw it in a mail order auction list, but have been unable to find it in any Columbia supplement or catalog. The number was E2994, and one side was called "The Delegate and Shop Girl of the Cloak and Suit Makers' Union." The other was "The Speechmaker." (Note to my friend, Tim Brooks, who has access to the Columbia files: How about checking this record and seeing just how it was issued and what happened to it?)

Some of the recording Bernards are shrouded in mystery. Who knows anything about Milton Bernard, a tenor making two Pathé sapphire discs in 1917? On No. 20220 he sang "A Tear, A Kiss, A Smile" and on 20268, "Absence Makes the Heart Grow Fonder," a ballad first popular in 1900. The words of this melodious composition were by Arthur Gillespie and the music by Herbert Dillea, of whom Isaac Goldberg records, in "From Ragtime to Swingtime":

ANOTHER BERNARD — A large number of men and women with the family name of Bernard made records. One was Rhoda Bernard, who specialized in Yiddish and Italian dialect numbers. She is shown in this page from the June, 1916, Victor record supplement. With her are other top-ranking popular singers of that day: Geoffrey O'Hara, Henry Burr, Arthur Collins, Byron G. Harlan, Billy Murray, Harry Macdonough and Will Oakland.

"Dillea was the director of the orchestra playing at the ill-fated Iroquois Theater of Chicago on the day of the noted fire. With real heroism he remained in the orchestra pit until his baton was singed, trying to keep up the public morale by having his orchestra play until it was driven out by the flames. He practically gave his life that day, for he was never the same thereafter."

For many years the "Absence" song was one of the most popular numbers, on Victor discs and Edison cylinders, in Harry Macdonough's recorded repertoire.

Another tenor who did a little recording was Don Bernard, whom I believe to have been a member of the vocal staff of the National Broadcasting Company in the 1920's. I once had a Puritan (Paramount) record on which he sang "I Passed By Your Window."

Probably the earliest Bernard to win phonograph recognition was James, who in the late 1890's made three comic monologues for Edison: No. 3861, "The A. P. A."; 3862, "The Tip-sy Man," and 3863, "The German and the Irish Races."

A better known humorist was Barney Bernard, who was represented in the Victor monthly list for June, 1916, with No. 18029, "Cohen at the Telephone" and "Goldstein Goes in the Railroad Business." The "Cohen" side, of course, was made to compete with Joe Hayman's amazingly successful Columbia version, which George Clarence Jell, for many years manager of the Columbia artist and repertoire department, told me sold more than two million copies. Edison made it by George L. Thompson. Concerning Barney Bernard the Victor supplement said:

"The Victor has engaged a well-known dialect comedian, Mr. Barney Bernard, who is now playing Potash in Montague Glass' 'Abe and Mawruss,' to make a series of Hebrew dialect records, the first two of which are now presented. Mr. Bernard has given us a very old, but very good, story of an attempt by Mr. Cohen to use the telephone for the first time, and two funny episodes in the life of his friend Goldstein. The issue of these two amusing impersonations is likely to be followed by requests for more."

I have no doubt the record sold well; any version of "Cohen on the Telephone" would have, but there were no more Victor discs by Barney Bernard.

Another famous impersonator of Jewish characters was Sam Bernard. I don't, however, know of any recordings by him. It was for Sam Bernard's special use that Irving Berlin, at the age of 21, wrote a comic dialect song called "Oh, How That German Could Love!" of which Irving himself made a record for Columbia — his sole issued Columbia recording. He has told me that he occasionally plays it and "laugh my head off, not at how funny I was, but at my having the nerve to record it." Berlin had a thin, piping voice that was in no sense musical, and this record brings out all its shortcomings.

II. Mike Bernard and His Columbia Records

One more record-making Bernard remains for discussion. So does another Bernardo. Then I'll proceed at last to narrating the early phases of Al Bernard's Edison career.

Aside from Our Hero, Al, Mike Bernard, the ragtime pianist, is probably the most important member of the Bernard recording "family." He was for many years a highly regarded instrumentalist, and when Columbia issued his first double-faced record in March, 1913, he was given an elaborate description. The record was No. A1266, and combined "Everybody Two-Step" with Bernard's arrangement of a descriptive number, "The Battle of San Juan Hill." This was probably the best record Mike Bernard made and contained what certainly was the most authentic recording of a "popular" piano performance up to that time. The following year Victor began to make piano versions of popular music played by Felix Arndt, but Columbia's piano recording was consistently better than Victor's, though not nearly so good as that Edison produced eight or ten years later with such performers as Ray Perkins, Ernest L. Stevens and Henry W. Lange. The supplement said:

"The Columbia has added to its list of vaudeville headliners the name of Mike Bernard, king of all ragtime pianists and one of the highest priced entertainers in vaudeville at the present time. Mr. Bernard's name has been associated with the ragtime craze in America since its very beginning. For many years manager of Tony Pastor's original Fourteenth Street Theater, New York, he early recognized the possibilities of this form of musical entertainment and was one of the first writers of ragtime in the United States. He later gave his entire time to exploiting it in piano performances in vaudeville and is now admitted to be unapproached in this field. He has made an exclusive recording arrangement with the Columbia and gives us as his first double disc a remarkable rendering of the popular 'Everybody Two-Step,' combined with an extremely clever fantasy suggestive of a battle scene, in which the strains of 'Dixie' mingle with the boom of cannon and rattle of artillery. Some of the effects he obtains in this record are truly remarkable."

That concluding assertion is not overstated. Bernard did achieve some remarkable effects, including representations of bugle calls and the firing of cannon, all done by judiciously forceful manipulation of the keyboard. If you run across this brilliantly recorded disc it is worth picking up, even at an inflated price.

Mike Bernard recorded fairly regularly in 1913, '14 and '15, but then there was a long silence, broken only by the issuance of one more double-faced disc in 1918. Of recent years, jazz enthusiasts have hit upon him as a sort of pioneer patron saint of their cult, and seek his records zealously — so much so that they are becoming hard to find. Since they all are fine examples of unusually good early piano recording, they are worth having, and I shall list them here. In each instance both sides are by Mike Bernard.

- A1266 Battle of San Juan Hill. Reverse: Everybody Two-Step.
A1276 Fantasia on Mendelssohn's Spring Song and Rubenstein's Melody in F. Reverse: Fantasia on Pilgrims' Chorus

- from "Tannhauser" and Finale to Rubinstein's Concerto in E. Flat.
A1313 Medley of Ted Snyder Hits. Reverse: That Peculiar Rag.
A1286 Medley of Irving Berlin Songs. Reverse: Tantalizing Tingles.
A1427 Maori. Samoan Dance. Reverse: 1915 Rag.
A1590 Tango Bonita. Reverse: A Trip Across the Pond.
A2577 They Were All Out of Step But Jim—Medley Fox-Trot. Reverse: Blaze Away March.

As will be seen by the titles of A1276, Bernard did not scruple to play "classical" compositions, and to give them a ragtime touch.

I have a peculiarly personal interest in Mike Bernard's recordings because in June, 1955, I received a letter from his daughter-in-law, Mrs. Esther Bernard, then of 1517 42nd St., Brooklyn, N. Y., asking my help in finding some of the pianist's increasingly scarce discs. Under date of June 14 she wrote:

"Mr. Ray Walker, of ASCAP, has suggested that I get in touch with you with reference to recordings made by the late Mike Bernard. He thought you might have some or know where I can find some."

"Mike Bernard was the father of my husband, and my two sons are very anxious to hear some of his recordings. We happened to come across some of his musical history in a book which also mentioned several of his recordings. I have written to Columbia, who made them to Variety and Billboard and to several record dealers, but have not been able to locate one. Thank you very much for any help you can give me in this. Sincerely, ESTHER BERNARD."

Replying, I told Mrs. Bernard that I had several Mike Bernard records (I still don't own, which I should like to have, the medley of Irving Berlin songs), with which I didn't want to part, and sent her a list of several possible sources from which they might be obtained. Then I added:

"I am a great admirer of Mike Bernard, and should very much like to have a photo of him in my large collection of pictures of famous recording artists. If you could find one of him suitable for framing that you could give me, or lend me, to have a copy made, I'd greatly appreciate it."

In a letter dated July 2, 1955, Mrs. Bernard thanked me for my suggestions, but said:

"As to a picture of Mike Bernard, I am sorry to say that my husband was completely out of touch with Mike for years before Mike's death and there does not seem to be anything at all of his in the family. However, there is one possibility which I will try to run down. If a picture does turn up I would be very pleased to send a copy on to you. Thank you very much for your thoughtfulness."

Apparently Mrs. Bernard was unable to find a picture, for I didn't receive one. I did, however, acquire an extra copy of "The Battle of San Juan Hill" and "Everybody Two-Step," which I sent to her, with an offer to have my other Mike Bernard records copied by a radio station engineer if she wished to pay for them. I am sure she wrote to thank me, but can't find any more correspondence with her. It was, at any rate, a genuine, unexpected pleasure to hear from Mike Bernard's daughter-in-law.

Now we come to the remaining "Bernardo" record, and what a record it is! I have no idea how I happened to obtain it, but it is a Polyphone disc made in Germany and bearing the catalog number 31238. The two sides have serial numbers of Z-23318 and Z-23319.

(To be continued)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

AL BERNARD

PART III

By JIM WALSH

(HISTORICAL RECORDS: By Martin Sokol, usually appearing on this page, will be found on page 120 of this issue.)

Although recorded in Germany, the disc obviously was intended for export to English-speaking countries, for the dialogue of one side is in what passes for English, but a weird type of English it is. The title is given on the record label as "Die Gesangsprobe," which I translated as "The Singing Lesson," and it is described as a "humoristische scene," which I also take to mean "humorous scene." The artists are listed as "Lucie Bernardo, mit ensemble." That, naturally, means "with chorus" or "ensemble."

I take this record to have been made shortly after the end of World War I, perhaps in 1920. Obviously, during the war, the Germans weren't exporting records to English-speaking countries. The "Singing Lesson" side begins by a gruff-voiced, very Germanic sounding gentleman urging "Miss" to hurry up and sing something, because "time is money." Miss Bernardo then begins trying to render "I'm Forever Blowing Bubbles" (which was a world-wide hit in 1919, hence my guess of 1920 for the date of the recording), but pretends to become confused and sings "I'm forever blowing boogles" (bugles). This exasperates the music teacher, who shouts at her to try again. She does, but each time she sings "bugles," or "boogles," instead of bubbles." Before long the disc follows the pattern of the familiar Okeh Laughing Record, although it apparently was made years before the Okeh classic, and everybody breaks up in hysterical laughter. Lucie Bernardo appears to have been a laughing specialist, like Sally Stembler and Irene Young in this country.

The second side also is a laughing skit, but I can't translate the title, "Die laches de Tafelrunde." If any English is spoken I can't understand it. The gruff-voiced man delivers what appears to be an oration of some length; Miss Bernardo begins laughing hysterically, and the thing ends in a whirlwind of synthetic merriment. I prefer the singing lesson side, because I, at least, can tell what it's about. There are, I imagine, precious few copies of that record on this side of the Atlantic.

So now, let's end our research into the Bernard "family" on a note of mirth and investigate the beginning of Al Bernard's recording career.

"DADDY OF THE BLUES." William Christopher Handy (1873-1958) was the foremost composer of "blues," and Al Bernard was the leading interpreter of his songs in the pre-electric recording period. The great black song writer is holding a copy of his immortal hit, "St. Louis Blues." He was blind when he autographed this photo to Jim Walsh on May 28, 1956, a fact that accounts for the illegible scrawl.

In passing, if any of you would like to learn more about the history of the French descended Bernard family, an article on this subject by Hazel Kraft Eilers begins on page 146 of HOBBIES for November, 1969.

For a bit more family history, I have come across a notice of Al Bernard's death from a 1949 issue of The Billboard. It mentions that he made his radio debut over WEA, New York, in 1922, and says that beside his wife and two daughters, his father and his brother (whose name was Joe) survived him.

III. Al Starts With Edison

So far as I have been able to learn, Al Bernard did his first recording work in January, 1919, or perhaps in the declining days of 1918, when he sang for Edison what is described only as a "Negro blue song." As was customary, Thomas A. Edison, on hearing the test, was not eulogistic. It may be true that sometime later he presented Bernard with an autographed photo, but on January 24, 1919, he wrote concerning the comedian's maiden effort:

"This is only an imitation of a Jewish cantor applied to (a) Negro song. Don't think much of it."

If this opinion of "the Old Man's" was passed on to Bernard he had no reason to be especially depressed. Mr. Edison, although he had a remarkable knack for selecting singers with good recording voices, likewise rejected the services of many, such as Amelita Galli-Curci, who became outstanding stars. On hearing Al Jolson's first Victor record in 1912, he pronounced Jolson to have a peculiarly metallic, irritating voice—a verdict with which, although I frequently differ with Mr. Edison's opinions, I happen to be in accord.

One of the legends of the Edison Shop, which Charles Edison, son of the inventor, operated for many years across the street from the public library on Fifth Avenue in New York, is that Enrico Caruso frequently "dropped in," listened to Edison Diamond discs and lamented that his exclusive Victor contract prevented his making Edison records, "so I could hear what my voice is really like." John McCormack and Mischa Elman are also said to have been Edison Shop habitués. Whether the Caruso story is or isn't true, even if the Italian tenor had been at liberty, he probably would have found it hard to obtain an Edison contract. At some time, Mr. Edison listened to Caruso's Victor disc of "Una furtiva lagrima" ("A Furtive Tear") from "Elisir D'Amore" and scrawled this comment:

"Scratchy. Accompaniment good type. Terrible metallic sounds on strong notes. Spill by these. Tremolo bad. Fair tune."

Concerning the duet of "Crucifix" by Caruso and Marcel Journet, Thomas A. remarked that the tune was good, but said the record was "scratchy." He termed the accompaniment "fair" but said, "Caruso has bad tremolo." Caruso and Scotti, he added, were "not a good combination. Both have tremolo." Since tremolo was a singer's cardinal sin, in Mr. Edison's opinion, there is little chance that he would have extended a contract to Enrico Caruso, regardless of the little Italian's being the most highly acclaimed opera tenor in the world, and said, "Sign here."

I had mislaid my copy of the inventor's opinion of the Jolson record, "That Haunting Melody" and "Rum Tum Tiddle" (Victor No. 17037), but now it has made itself visible, and for the sake of greater accuracy, I shall quote it:

"'Haunting Melody.' Accompt. no good. Abnormally sharp voice. Extra sounds in voice. No scratch. Disagreeable voice. Metallic. Tune not good. Volume good. Other side — same results — not so loud."

So if Al Jolson, Marcel Journet and

"THE MAMMY MAN." Here is another "Al" whose voice and singing style Thomas A. Edison did not regard with favor. After hearing the first record by Al Jolson (above), the Father of the phonograph dismissed him by saying he had a "metallic, disagreeable voice."

Enrico Caruso could earn nothing but condemnation from Thomas A. Edison, what reason was there for Al Bernard to be downcast because he was accused of singing a "blues" as if he were a Jewish cantor?

Edison's most popular "classical" violinist, Albert Spalding, once remarked to me: "Old man Edison was an awful crank. Walter Miller, the manager of the New York recording studios, was a nice fellow, but he and all the other staff members were scared to death of 'The Old Man' and dreaded his sarcastic notes about the records they made."

Probably what Albert Spalding said was true. Miller, "Bill" Cronkhite, Bob Gayler and other recording officials had no desire to risk the displeasure of the phonograph's inventor, but they did sometimes engage an artist for whom Mr. Edison lacked enthusiasm. His attitude toward Al Bernard did not keep them from beginning to make "blues" recordings by "The Boy From Dixie." Al's first "official" date was February 14, 1919, when he sang "The Hesitation Blues," and I wonder if he had sung this number previously on the "test" which

(Continued on next page)

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Re feathered

Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

tlc

We specialize in musical ANTIQUES

for our fully illustrated CATALOGUE, no. 3 send $2.00 to:

Nostalgia

automata
phonographs
music boxes harpichords roller organs player pianos
rare instruments

DEPT. 6H
NEWTONVILLE,
MASS. 02160

(617) 965-0530 or 731-0530

jlly47c

I BUY GIBSON brand MANDOLINS

Also want old CF Martin guitars, and BANJOS made by Gibson Master-tone, B&D, A.C. Fairbanks, S.S. Stewart, Epiphone, Paramount, Vega.

CASH PAID!
ANY CONDITION!

Write:

Mr. Jay, P O Box 85-H, Staten Island, N.Y. 10304 Or CALL COLLECT: 212 981-3226.

jlly

MUSIC BOXES REPAIRED AND RESTORED
SALES AND SERVICE ON ANY TYPE BOX

AL MEEKINS 609-858-6421
Box 161, Collingswood, N.J. 08108

tlc

ELECTRIFY PLAYER PIANOS PUMP ORGANS

YOU CAN QUICKLY END TIRESOME FOOT-PUMPING With a Compact Low-Cost Lee Silent Suction Unit

EASY TO INSTALL
FULLY GUARANTEED
1000'S IN USE

write to:
LEE MUSIC MFG. CO.
525H, Venice, Ave.
Venice, Calif. 90291

mh57p

MISCELLANEOUS MUSICAL ITEMS

PHOTOS! The three most remarkable group photos ever taken of early recording artists: Edison artists of 1900, Edison artists of 1914, and Victor Male Chorus of 1925 (reproduced in HOBBIES January 1971, October 1970 and July 1970). One 8x10 enlargement for $2, two for $3.50, all 3 for $5. Other 8x10 photos of recording artists available at $2 each: Ada Jones, Billy Murray, Collins, and Harlan, Henry Burr, and many others. Write for list. — Quentin Riggs, 21171 Greenboro Lane, Huntington Beach, Calif. 92646 my38231

FOR SALE: Heavy stock record sleeves (40 lb. Craft 10" size.) Prices: 1-100 each 7c; 100-300 each 6c; 300-1000 each 5c; 1000 up each 4c. Post. extra. Write for rates. — Quality Record Jack-ets, 2512 West Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif. 90016 jly66731

VERY FINE 2700 disk record library, 16" transcriptions, 78, 45, LP. Also antique phonograph collection. Please send SASE for details. — Hoag, 3 Fineview Dr., Utica, N.Y. 13502 jcs863

Please mention HOBBIES when replying to advertisements.

gave Mr. Edison the impression that he sounded like a Jewish cantor in blackface. The "blues" side was provided with a rather incongruous coupling, the mournful "Don't Cry, Little Girl, Don't Cry," well sung by Irving Kaufman.

On February 25, Al essayed "The Nigger Blues," which George O'Connor, a Washington, D. C. lawyer who was called "the favorite White House Entertainer," had made popular on a Columbia record two years before. To keep it company, Edison rather oddly had the deep-voiced Ernest Hare, who, you will remember, was then living above Bernard in a New York apartment house, sing the plaint of a Negro woman, "Satan, I'm Here (I Couldn't Stand for No Triflin' Man)." Both sides were genuinely funny, and sold well, both as discs and as Blue Amberols.

Bernard recorded his first "blues" composed by W. C. Handy on March 18. This was "The Beale Street Blues," which celebrated life as it had been on that world-famous Negro street in Memphis before prohibition came along and damped its vivacity. The lyrics asserted that on Beale Street, "You'll find that business never closes till somebody gets killed." At the end, the singer expressed his intention of "goin' down to the river, oh maybe bye and bye. Goin' down to the river, an' here's the reason why - because the river's wet, an' Beale Street done gone dry." The coupling was "Jazz Baby," sung by "Rachel Grant" (Gladys Rice).

In my opinion, Bernard sang all three of these blues superbly—fully bringing out the rhythm and their humorous qualities. For years it has been the fashion of collectors who consider themselves "connoisseurs" of "blues" and "spirituals" to sneer at Bernard's interpretations. Their ears, such as they are, tell them that no "blues" are worth hearing unless they are lugubriously howled, wailed or shrieked by Negro women or, less frequently, intoned by black men. They have a right to their opinions, but I resent their condescendingly superior attitude, and wouldn't give one Bernard record for fifty by Bessie Smith or Ma Rainey. Still, I'd like to know how well Handy liked Bernard's singing.

Eight days after Al recorded "The Beale Street Blues," Bernard and Hare made their Edison duet of "I Want to Hold You in My Arms," which, as was related last month, was inspired by Hare's peering down the dumb waiter shaft and asking Bernard to lend him an egg. This suggested to Bernard the vision of a Negro soldier, newly returned from France, standing beneath his girl friend's window and receiving anything but the rapturous welcome he had anticipated.

"I Want to Hold You in My Arms," though funny, is not, I think, so CRITICAL INVENTOR. Thomas A. Edison (above, in his chemical laboratory) did not have a high opinion of Al Bernard's first recording efforts. Pictures of other singers, whose voices and styles didn't please Mr. Edison, are reproduced with this article.

mirth-inducing as some of its successors, but I'll stick my neck out again by saying, or repeating, that I consider the Bernard and Hare duets the most amusing blackfaced comedy records ever made. To my perception, they are far funnier than Amos 'n Andy or The Two Black Crows, whom I have always found tiresome. Portions of some of the comic dialogues by Billy Golden and Joe Hughes come close to matching them, but, on an overall basis, as delineators of Negro dialect comedy, Al Bernard of New Orleans, La., and Ernest Hare of Norfolk, Va., have no equals.

At the same time it should be set down, for the sake of historical accuracy, that the Bernard and Hare duets were essentially a throwback to the "coon sketches" which Ada Jones and Len Spencer had begun recording in 1904. These usually involved, as did the Bernard-Hare records, acrimonious repartee between a quarreling black woman and man, but more often than not followed by a reconciliation.

To me perhaps the funniest exchange in any record occurs in the Jones-Spencer "Every Little Bit Helps." Len, as a swaggering young black, accosts Ada as she is walking past and says: "Where you a-gwine, huh?" The girl replies: "Ain't gwine nowhere. I done been whar I'm gwine." To which he masterfully exclaims: "Don't give me none o' dat noise! Come to me - ya heah me?" She then retorts with this crusher: "Who you talkin' to? Go count yo'-self, nigger, you ain't so many!" — the funniest line, I think, I have ever heard on a record, and one probably the result of Spencer's scriptwriting genius. Considerably subdued, Len says: "I don't understand yo' talk, lady!" and she replies: "You don't? Then I'll sing it to you," whereupon she begins caroling her sentiments. Len interrupts by saying, "Oh, honey, don't be cross; I'll let you be the boss." She snaps back: "Say, nigger, I ain't for let—on yo' way!" Crestfallen, he begins pleading for her affections by singing a then new Fred Fisher song, "Every Little Bit Helps."

Another laughable Jones and Spencer sketch is "Mandy and Her Man." It begins with Len's supposedly banging on his lady love's door, to seek refuge, and asking her; "Has that nigger Jackson been here?" She replies: "Nobody's been here since you've been gone." Quaveringly, Len asks, "Did you heah him say he was gwine to knock me silly?" and Ada acidly retorts: "Why, no, I thought you was silly enough already!" To which he responds, with heavy sarcasm: "Is that so?"

Ada insists that her swain has nothing to worry about, because, "You're a bigger man than Jackson." "I know," Len comes back, "but Jackson carries the difference in his hip pocket. That nigger's got a gun!" She sweetly says, "Well, you've got a razor. That'll win in the long run." Still frightened, he retorts: "Yes, but I'm afraid it'll be the longest run I'll ever have." Convinced that he is a coward, Ada contemptuously exclaims: "Skeered, are you? Jim Johnson, you ain't the man for me!" then begins singing a song of dismissal, "On Yo' Way." They make up at the end, however, and "Jim" goes to buy the marriage license after borrowing a dollar from his beloved to pay for it. We are left wondering whether Mr. Jackson barged in and broke up the wedding. These sketches admittedly are not refined, but I think they are undeniably funny.

I have "Mandy and Her Man" on both eight and ten-inch Victor records. The eight-inch contains most of the dialogue of the ten-inch, but the artists speak more rapidly. Oddly, on the eight-inch, Spencer says: "Jackson carries the difference in his hip pocket," while on the ten-inch this becomes, "the difference in his pocket," with "hip" omitted.

Having traced the ancestry of the Bernard and Hare duets, let's divert ourselves by considering the spoken exchanges in "I Want to Hold You in My Arms." It is as well to do this, because I intend to quote the dialogue of all the Edison duets in which Bernard plays the "wench's" part and Hare is a beseeching, or blustering male. Whenever I write "She" the speaker is Bernard; "He" is Hare:

SHE—Who is dat knockin' at dat do?
HE—It's me, honey.
SHE—Who's me?
HE—It's me, yo' papa.

(Continued on next page)

SHE—Is dat ole frog head?
 HE—Naw, I ain't no frog head. Say, listen here, blacker than me, open up the door!
 SHE—Blacker than you? You know what they say?
 HE—What do they say?
 SHE—"The blacker the berry the sweeter the juice."
 HE—Come on, honey, open up the door or I'll bust it open.
 SHE—Go on, you ain't no young Sampson.
 HE—I know I ain't no Sampson, but I'm some tough man.
 SHE—How tough is you?
 HE—I'm so tough that when I come from canary birds sing bass.
 SHE—You is bad, ain't you?
 HE—You better believe I'm bad!

Then they begin to sing as a duet, "I Want to Hold You in My Arms," with some rapid-fire exchanges in the singing. After the chorus, the following dialogue is heard:

SHE—He's gone now. Guess I can open the window and git a little atmosphere. (HE knocks again.) Fishmouth, is you out dere still?
 HE—I'm out here, but I ain't still. Come on, honey, open up the door or throw my trunk out, one or the other.
 SHE—Huh? You're standin' in the middle o' yo' trunk right now.
 HE—How come dat?
 SHE—When you button yo' vest yo' trunk am locked!
 HE—Oh, honey, don't talk to me like dat. You know I loves you, an' I fought my way all the way back from France, just to—

He resumes pleading, "I Want to Hold You in My Arms," and the chorus is sung to its completion, with interchanged wisecracks but no indication of whether the maiden's heart will soften and lead her to admit her returned soldier man. The marital status of Bernard and Hare couples is sometimes obscure. Since the "hero" had left his trunk in the house, he may have been addressing his estranged wife instead of a girl friend.

A hearing of the song makes it evident that Bernard was no purist when it came to rhyming, and confirms his statement that it usually took him about 15 minutes to write a lyric. My intellectual cat, Prof. Plum Duff Walsh, Ph. D., shook his head disapprovingly when I told him Bernard coupled "arms" with "false alarm" and "brain storm," which, "Pony Boy" said, cannot by any stretch of poetic license be considered rhymes.

As was related last month, Bernard wrote the words of "I Want to Hold You in My Arms," and he and Hare probably collaborated on the dialogue. The music was the work of J. Russel Robinson.

Bernard made two more Edison discs during the spring of 1919. The first, recorded April 15, was one of the innumerable prohibition songs of that period, the clever and catchy "Everybody Wants a Key to My Cellar," which was issued on both the disc and cylinder. The second, made April 29, was a paean to "crap shooting," "Shake, Rattle and Roll (Who's Got Me?)" composed by Bernard himself. It was made available on Blue Amberols but not on the disc.

There were no more Edison recording dates until September 4. Meanwhile, the young comedian's songs were beginning to be recorded by other artists and sung for a variety of companies, and his own first record of the immortal "St. Louis Blues" came out on an Aeolian-Vocalion hill-and-dale disc in July, 1919.

The Vocalion supplement gives the impression that Bernard had previously made records for that company, but I have been unable to trace any. Under the heading of Novelty, it lists "The St. Louis Blues" and "Venus Blues," the latter a composition by Robinson, with whom Bernard was closely associated. The words possibly were by Bernard, since some record companies gave only the names of the composers of the music and omitted authors of words. Accompaniments were by the Novelty Five, probably the original Dixieland Jazz Band. The description of this disc, No. 12148, was:

"Another novelty record by that synopated songster Al Bernard. He admits that he comes from 'down south,' the land of the blues — and certainly his singing of the 'St. Louis Blues' with its tango rhythm and the 'Venus Blues' would indicate it. The Novelty Five supply an irresistible accompaniment."

The comedian's next Aeolian-Vocal-ion disc was issued in October, and contained two Bernard compositions—"Sugar" and "Big Chief Blues"—on No. 12191. "Sugar" is the song referred to in the article quoted last month from Stage World as having been a big hit. "Big Chief Blues" was something of a failure, for I can't recall any other recording of it. A photograph of Bernard was reproduced with the description of the record:

"It isn't everyone that can write popular songs and sing them too, but that is what Al Bernard does, and the two listed above prove his ability along both lines.
 "Oh you 'Sugar!' This is one of the most tantalizing tunes of the season. It tells the tale of the impatient suitor who wants 'Mr. Hack-man' to make his old horse show some pep so he can catch a train that takes him back to sweet 'Sugar' down among the sugar-cane in old 'L.A.' (Irsumably, 'L.A.' stands for 'Louisiana' not 'Los Angeles.' —J.W.)
 "Everybody's had the musical blues of late, and now 'Big Chief' has taken them in Al Bernard's clever Indian Prohibition song. The prospect of 'no more firewater' was too much for him, so he couldn't be blamed for getting blue about it."

(To be continued)

THUMBS DOWN ON CARUSO — Not even Enrico Caruso (right), most popular opera tenor of all time, could win Thomas A. Edison's approval. Edison maintained that his voice had a "bad tremolo" and probably would not have recorded him if his services had been available. In this photo Caruso and Titta Ruffo are listening to their first duet on a Victor record.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

AL BERNARD

PART IV

By JIM WALSH

(HISTORICAL RECORDS: By Martin Sokol, usually appearing on this page, will be found on page 117 of this issue.)

I. More Edison Recordings

In my preceding discussion of Al Bernard's early Edison records, I forgot to mention that his first "Re-Creation" headed the list in a special "blues special" supplement. Although undated, it came out in the spring of 1919. Besides Bernard's record, "The Hesitation Blues (Oh, Baby, Must I Hesitate?)" the monthly list included "The Alcoholic Blues," sung by Vernon Dalhart, and coupled with "Every Day Will be Sunday When the Town Goes Dry," by Edward Meeker. These titles, of course, referred to the imminence of national prohibition. Dalhart thus shares honors with Bernard as among the first Edison singers to make a "blues" record. On investigation I find that Dalhart actually ante-dated Bernard since the "Alcoholic Blues" serial number was 6577 and that for the "Hesitation Blues," 6621. On the other hand, the catalog number of the Bernard record was 50524 and of Dalhart's 50529. What this means is that Dalhart's "blues" was recorded a month or so before Bernard's, but was not issued quite so promptly. Dalhart's interpretation of the "dry law wail" is good, but either Bernard or Billy Murray, who sang it for Victor and Columbia, could have done it better.

Concerning the Bernard disc the supplement said:

"They call Bernard 'the Boy from Dixie' and all over the country he is popular as a singer of this style of song. This is unquestionably the cleverest and best of all the blues songs written so far. It is a real novelty."

This was a sweeping statement considering that W. C. Handy had already written, among others, "The Memphis Blues," "the Beale Street Blues," and "The St. Louis Blues." The "Hesitation Blues" was not a new number when Bernard recorded it. Some companies had offered dance versions of it in 1916.

The rising young comedian made no Edison records from April 29, when he recorded "Shake, Rattle and Roll" until he and Ernie Hare joined forces on September 4, 1919, to wax a Diamond Disc of "See Old Man Moon Smile," which you will remember was so amusing, the Edison orchestra members burst out laughing and the singing and talking specialty had to be done over. I should have, in my files, but can't find, an account of how amused the Edison recording committee was at hearing a test pressing of the record, and how Bernard and Hare beamingly agreed that it was better than their initial duet, "I Want to Hold You in My Arms." From this point, Bernard had frequent Edison recording engagements for the next few years. Meanwhile, before "Old Man Moon" was made, his first Aeolian-Vocalion records, including "The St. Louis Blues," had appeared.

POPULAR SONG. "Broadway Blues" was one of Al Bernard's best selling Edison records. Aileen Stanley (above), shown with Billy Murray, her duet partner for comic songs, recorded the same lament about life on Broadway for Victor and Brunswick. "Broadway Blues" was on the first Stanley record issued by both companies. "Bridget O'Flynn" is one of the best remembered Murray-Stanley recordings. Victor called it "the first successful whispering record ever made." The sheet music cover is reproduced by courtesy of its owner, Miss Pamela Ochojski.

II. "See Old Man Moon Smile"

Al Bernard apparently wrote both the words and music of "See Old Man Moon Smile," and the humorous dialog was mostly or entirely his. Being the composer should have entitled him to royalties on the sale of this, and similar, mirth-inducing productions, and considerably added to the fee he was paid for the record making itself.

Now, as we did last month, with "I Want to Hold You in My Arms," let's read the words of "See Old Man Moon Smile" and see if we can decide what made the orchestra break up in merriment. Again Bernard is referred to as "She" and Hare as "He":

He: I wonder where dat gal is? I just walk up an' down here so much dat my socks are spats . . . O dere she is now. Hello dere, honey!

She: Hello, son!

He: Where you been, honey?

She: Oh, I been out lookin' after the cows.

He: Well, how is all the cows an' little cawlets?

She: Oh, dey're all well. How's all yo' folks?

He: Oh, my folks is well. Here, here, honey, my folks ain't no cows! Say, baby, papa's gonna take you to a party tonight.

She: Ain't gonna take me to no party. The last time you took me to one you disgraced me.

He: How come I disgraced you?

She: What did you do when that nice lady asked you to pass her the nut cracker?

He: Well, what did I do?

She: You turned right around and passed her a beer bottle!

He (laughing): Well, dat was de best nut cracker I could find! But what did you say when dat nice lady passed you the ice cream?

She: What did I say?

He: You say, "Lady, I always likes my puddin' hot."

She: Oh, I ain't said dat. I ain't dat ignomious!

He: Gal, you is so ignorant you ain't got no brains.

She: Yes, and if brains was a disease you'd have the leprosy!

Here the song begins, and is devoted, with plenty of give-and-take, to His unsuccessful efforts to persuade Her to go to the party. After some close harmony in the chorus, the bickering resumes:

He: Why won't you go with me to the party, honey?

She: Because you're a coward. You come from a running family. I saw yo' ole daddy run so fast one day that when he turned a corner his vest pocket dipped sand.

He: Yeah, an' yo' ole pappy runs so fast dat dey see de bottom of his feet so often dey think he's laying down!

She: Is dat so? Keep on an' I'm gonna hit you so hard dat yo' shirt will run up an' down yo' back like a window shade!

He: Yeah, an' if I ever swing dis wicked left o' mine at you an' miss you de breeze from it will give you pneumonia!

She: Keep on peticatin' an' one more clean swat's gonna do you!

He: Uh, uh! Dat woman means dat! I better square myself! Say, honey, come on an' give me a little kiss!

She: Well, coax me!

He: Coax you! Yas suh. I'm a nigger dat don't have to coax no woman to kiss me, because de ladies call me "Tree top Charlie," an' black but sweet, O Lord!

She: Yeah, an' don't forget dat I'm some high yaller, an' choc'late to de bone!

He: You is dat, honey, I will admit it!

The singing resumes, but no meeting of minds is reached and she does not agree to go to the party.

As best I recall, Edison was the only company to record "I Want to Hold You in My Arms," but Bernard and Hare made the rounds of the various studios with "See Old Man Moon" and it was liberally represented on other labels. Neither Victor nor Columbia used it, however; in fact, they never, for some hard to understand reason, ever issued a Bernard and Hare duet.

One of the companies marketing "See Old Man Moon Smile," was Pathé, which issued it on a sapphire ball version, No. 20471, and combined it with another Bernard composition, "Change Your Name, Malinda Lee." The Pathé label misquoted the name as "Change Your Name to Malinda Lee." I remember being puzzled when I first learned of the Pathé version as to why two unknown artists, "Jack Clare and Frank Mann," had been selected to do the recording, when the originators, Al Bernard and Ernest Hare, were available. When I heard the record, however, I realized that the singers really were Bernard and Hare, and that Pathé had given them assumed names instead of profiting by their growing popularity. Both songs were credited to Bernard as composer, but I don't believe any Pathé duets by the team were catalogued under their real names. They were always "Clare and Mann."

Summing up the "See Old Man Moon" discussion, my guess is that the orchestra broke down and laughed when Bernard said the cows were all well — "How's all yo' folks?" Obviously, because of shorter playing time, the versions of this song on other discs included a reduced amount of "cross-talk." I believe most of us will agree that the repartee in "See Old Man Moon Smile" is funnier than that in "I Want to Hold You in My Arms" and that it's no wonder the orchestra laughed.

III. "You're My Gal"

Only eleven days intervened between Bernard and Hare's Edison recording of "See Old Man Moon Smile" and their next duet. They were back in the studio at 79 Fifth Avenue, New York, on September 18, and romped through another "Darktown" opus, "You're My Gal," which followed the pattern of the two preceding sketches. On October 10, to move up a bit, Bernard sang a solo of his composition, "I'm a Dancing Fool," but although this was accepted as Blue Amberol No. 3920, it apparently was not considered good enough for the disc, the standard for which were higher than those for the cylinder.

Now, back to our routine of quoting the funny, if not refined dialogue between He and She — or, I suppose I should say, Him and Her. But first it may as well be pointed out that "You're My Gal" is the first Bernard song in which his famous dusky "hero," Henry Jones appears and this ditty about a picnic may be taken as a follow-up of "See Old Man Moon Smile," with its references to going to a party. The mention of a mysterious "Charlie" may also be the forerunner of a Bernard song that came several years later, "My Time is Charlie's Now."

This record, unlike its forerunners, begins with singing, after which there is the following exchange:

She: I'm a singer, ain't I, son?

He: You is dat—an' you's my gal.

She: Your gal? I wouldn't have you 'cause you got can't you — don't you hair.

He: What you mean — can't you — don't you hair?

She: You can't comb it and don't you try.

He: Is dat so? Well, don't forget dat I'm a handsome fastidious gentleman!

She: Handsome! Why, coon, if I was as ugly as you I'd look up to de good Lord and ask to be dismissed!

He: You might do dat, but still you is my gal.

She: Never count yo' chickens before they are hatched.

He: Now dat's a fine way to talk! Dat ain't de way to say dat!

She: Well, how should I have said it?

He: You should have said, never cacaleate upon your juvenile poultry until the proper process of incubation has been fully materialized.

She: Man, you're a cat's uncle when it comes to talk, ain't you?

He: Gal, I knowed Mr. Webster well.

She: Say you did?

He: Yeah, I usta run with his dog!

She: Aw, come on, coon, you've got de swinny(?)

He: Only horses git de swinney.

She: No, but mules git it, too.

He: Well, I ain't no mule.

She: No, your ears are too long.

He: Yeah, my ears are gal, my ears ain't too long.

She: Well, dey'll grow.

He (confused): Well, they—no they won't grow.

After singing about the picnic to which Henry wants to take Sal, the argument is resumed:

She: Yo' sho' is a persistent coon. You make me sick!

He: Well, you don't make me feel any too well!

She: Is dat so? Another thing, coon, you don't know how to love!

He: I don't know how to love! Listen, what it takes to love I'm broke out with! An' you know you only run dat other guy in to make me jealous, 'cause you know — (He resumes singing "You're My Gal," and the song ends with the "wench" confessing "Yes, I'm yo' gal!")

The reference to "running in dat other guy" relates to "Charlie," of whom She said in the chorus: "Charlie's name is Sampson, an' he sho' can fight." His reply is, "If I ever swing my wicked left at him he'll die of fright." In the second chorus, the damsel asserts that "Charles was born in Texas, raised in Tennessee," which elicits the retort, "And he'll die in Alabama if he messes with me!"

"You're My Gal," which was coupled on the Edison record with "Floatin' Down to Cotton Town," sung by the Harmonizers, who were then called the Premier Quartet on Diamond Discs, was as successful a comic specialty as "See Old Man Moon Smile." It also was extensively recorded by other companies.

I am uncertain about the word, "swinny," after which I have placed a question mark. "Swinny" is what it sounds like, but I can't find such a word in Webster's. Perhaps it is a Negro slang term unfamiliar to me.

IV. "Henry Jones, Your Honeymoon Is Over"

None of the Al Bernard solos or Bernard-Hare duets so far discussed were included in the book, published in 1925, of the 300 best-selling Edison discs, but they all sold well for years and most stayed in the catalog as long as Edison was in the record business.

"See Old Man Moon Smile," was discontinued, however, in 1927, and "You're My Gal" in 1928. "I Want to Hold You in My Arms," the first duet, which had not been considered so funny as the others, went the entire route, partly, I suspect, because of having as its companion, Ada Jones' "Oh Lawdy! (Somethin's Done Got Between Ebecaneezer and Me.)"

"The Boy From Dixie's" Edison activities were in high gear through the remainder of 1919 and from 1920 through 1924, after which, perhaps because of his radio and vaudeville work, they tapered off, although extending through 1927 . . . And here let me add something I have just discovered that the list of record-making Bernards, published last month should have included Anthony Bernard, who conducted the London Chamber Orchestra on a Brunswick record or two.

There was also a Miss Isolda Bernhard, who on July 19, 1926, made an Edison test recording of Tosti's "Goodbye." By that time Mr. Edison's deafness had so increased that he was no longer criticizing, but Arthur L. Walsh, who was vice president in charge of the Edison recording division, wrote: "Fair singer — high tones best — would only do for the highbrow type of song — not what we need now."

Our Hero's solos seem to have been even more popular among cylinder record buyers than with those who used the Diamond Discs, for a fair number made their appearance on "rollers" but remained unissued on "platters." One of these was "I'm a Dancing Fool," which Al recorded on October 10, 1919.

Six days later Bernard and Hare got back together for an Edison recording that made history. This was "Henry Jones, Your Honeymoon is Over," which brought back the nominal hero of "You're My Gal," and proved the most successful of all the team's duets up to that time. Its popularity was made even greater by the fact that on October 29, Bernard, alone, made his famous Edison record of "The St. Louis Blues," which received the easily remembered serial number of 7000. As we know, Aeolian-Vocalion had announced a record by him of the same blues classic in July, but it attracted little attention as compared to the Edison, which was destined to find its way into that book of the 300 best sellers. "Henry Jones" was coupled with "St. Louis Blues," and, with two such good sides, it would be hard to say which was most responsible for its large sale.

The Blue Amberol of "Henry Jones" came out in February and that of the "St. Louis Blues" in March. I well remember going on an errand to the home of an elderly man who owned an Amberola. He and his wife were being entertained by a young man who had brought about a dozen of the latest Edison cylinders. As I was made welcome, they were playing "Uncle Josh's Birthday," by Cal Stewart and Company. This was followed by Bernard's "St. Louis Blues," and I can still hear the old man exclaim, as the smooth-surfaced, clear-toned cylinder was tracked by the diamond point: "Don't that soun' jes, exactly like a nigger?" We all agreed that the blackface dialect was remarkably natural.

The "Re-Creation," as Edison discs were called up to 1923, must have been issued about the same time as the cylinders, though, because of a slower manufacturing process, perhaps a month or so later. Many years afterward I came across a review of "Henry Jones" and "St. Louis Blues" in "The Best of the New Records" department conducted in Judge by "Disco." His critique required just two words: "Perfect recording." Which was perfectly true.

In "Henry Jones, Your Honeymoon is Over" we find the male character married to some ladylove, but it isn't clear whether she is the "Sal" of "You're My Gal." As the record begins, "She" is singing "doo-doo-da do," while "He" is snoring. Then the dialogue begins:

She: What's dat nigger tryin' to do - sing bass with me? Wake up, coon!
He: Aw, go 'way, go 'way, woman, an' let a good man sleep!
She: Huh! Yo' mammy sh' mus'a been fond of children to raise you!
He: Listen here, woman! One-two-three, an' I'm gonna hop right at you!
She: Yeah, four-five-six, an' you'll hop right back!
He: Look here, gal, don't you realize dat where I come from dey call me 'Bad Bill'?
She: Huh! Fool with me an' they'll call you Sweet William!
He: Keep on, gal, an' I'm gonna sew up yo' eyes!
She: 'As you sew, so shall ye reap.'
He: Say, what you tryin' to do, make a fool out of me?
She: No, nature done beat me to it! Listen, here, coon, I wanna tell you somethin'.

When this stage is reached the couple begins singing. Mrs. Jones complains that she can't live on love. Henry, she says, has been "living in clover" for three months, but since he's taken his uniform back to the government she no longer gets "that thirty bucks that used to pay the rent." In his defense he says, "Gal, you know I was a hero over dere!" also, "but I didn't live in clover over dere!" She, however, insists that she has had more than enough of an unsatisfactory married life. The back-and-forth exchange resumes:

He: Aw, listen, gal, you know you ain't treatin' me right.
She: I know, son, but I can't live on dat cupid stuff. You know, if I don't get somethin' to eat real soon I'm gonna mildew.
He: Oh gal, don't be so officious!
She: I wish I wuz!
He: Wuz what?
She: Full o' fishes. I'm so hungry my stomach's done sent up two wireless messages to send some Ree-freshments!
He: Oh, gal, you ain't hungry!
She: Coon, if I was to see a beefsteak my tongue would slap my brains out. And, believe me, coon, I done drank so much water since I been with you that my stomach thinks I'm takin' in washin'.
He: Don't exasperate yo'self, baby.
She: Don't baby me, coon! I'm so dawgone hungry that my skirts is draggin' my tracks out! An', believe me, I done eat so many beans since I been with you that I'm ashamed to look a bean in the face!
He: Oh, quit tantalizin' me!
She: Coon, if I was to see a hambone layin' on de ground I'd pick it up an' eat it!
He: Dat ain't nothin', gal! Show me where it's layin' and I'll eat de ground!
She: Well, it's no use talkin'. Let's quit!

They sing again, and Henry says: "Well, all right, I'm gone!" She laughs, and he asks: "What you laffin' at?" She replies, "You is been a good nigger, ain't you?" He says, "You know I has, honey," and receives the honeyed assurance, "Well, I'll forgive you dis time! Give me a little kiss!" He murmurs, "Awright!" and they kiss, after which he exclaims, "Oh, honey!"; she, "Oh, man!" and they end in harmony, singing, "We'll let it go at dat!"

"Henry Jones" is one of the most amusing of the Bernard-Hare duets, and I hope that no black readers of HOBBIES will be offended at my perpetuating the dialog, which, as I have previously pointed out, contains some words now considered offensive. The talk is quoted as a good example of bygone humor. Incidentally, there seem to be a few, if any, collectors of records by pioneer recording artists among Negro Americans. I can't recall ever receiving a letter from any reader who identified himself as black. I imagine many Negroes, however, collect "blues" and "spirituals," while others prefer the same type of music as do whites.

V. Bernard's Victor Records

The fact that the Edison disc of "Henry Jones" and "St. Louis Blues" was made available about March, 1920, reminds me it was in that month that Bernard's first Victor record was announced. It consisted of the only two solos by him that Victor ever issued, and neither was his own composition.

For some hard to explain reason, Al never was able to obtain a firm Victor foothold. As I have said, Victor issued no Bernard and Hare duets, and Al's experience with the leading record company of that day was somewhat like that of Billy Jones and Ernest Hare after they became famous on radio as "The Happiness Boys." Jones had made some Victor solo records from early 1920 until September, 1922, but they all appeared under the name of Victor Roberts. Hare never recorded any Victor solos, or if he did they remained unissued. The duet team made one double-faced combination of "Oh! Eva" and "Hard-Boiled Rose," which appeared in the summer of 1924, but were unable to break into the Victor list again until they did some electrical recording late in 1925. After that their popularity was soon established, and they made Victor discs fairly regularly for about five years.

Bernard's initial Victor record, was No. 18644, which contained two rather unsuccessful numbers — "You Know What I Mean" (a phrase he had introduced in "Henry Jones") and "The Bell Hop Blues." The description in the monthly supplement began:

"Al Bernard, the 'Boy From Dixie,' has come into a well-deserved place as one of the best 'blackface' comedians ever developed. Here are his first records as a Victor artist."

There followed a description of the two songs, which it is hardly worth while to quote. An excellent photograph was reproduced, in which Bernard's eyes appear to be dark brown. Nearly all pictures of him make him look dark-eyed, but my recollection — which may be wrong after a quarter of a century — is that his eyes were blue.

Bernard's name, by the way, should be pronounced Ber-nard not Bern-ard. He did so little work for Victor that it will be as well to dispose of it now.

He did not reappear in a Victor supplement until August, 1921, and then only incidentally, when he sang the refrain in a fox trot version of "The St. Louis Blues," by the original Dixieland Jazz Band. The record, No. 18772, was combined with "Jazz Me Blues," also by the Dixieland group, but with no refrain. I wonder if Al's friend and associate, J. Russell Robinson, was then playing in this, the first jazz band to become famous on records.

It is beyond me why Victor didn't think it worth while to devote an entire record to a vocal rendition of the "St. Louis Blues." Anyway, here is the description of the dance version written by one of my favorite authors, James E. Richardson:

"Saint Louis of France or Saint Louis, Missouri, here are two great fox trots! If East and West Saint Louis declare they give one another the blues, that's a family matter. The number (in modernistic language) is a live one, with plenty of lemon yellow oboe squeals for shivery dancers. In the middle of it Al Bernard sings a vocal refrain of the kind vaudeville idiom used to call a 'coon-shout.' The number is by W.C. Handy. 'Jazz Me Blues' is by Tom De-laney. It is a slowish, even stately, fox trot with the occasional neuralgia effects that so delight lovers of the 'blues.'"

In November, 1921, the Original Dixieland Jazz Band returned with both sides of No. 18798, "Dangerous Blues" and "Royal Garden Blues," in each of which "The Boy From Dixie" sang. I'll quote the introductory part of the description:

"Blue records have been compared to musical mixed pickles, containing, as they do, as many flavors. This double-faced one has then, all, with a few acid condiments not usually sold in the musical delicatessen shops. Every instrument of the dance-orchestra is heard, the rhythm gloriously hawking a way through. Al Bernard sings a refrain in each number . . ."

After that Bernard's name appeared no more in a Victor list, but on October 10, 1925, he recorded three songs under the serial numbers 33568, 33569 and 33570. None was issued, probably because the early electric recording was unsatisfactory. Three "takes" were made of 33568, "On a Slow Train Through Arkansas," which Bernard had written to cash in on the growing market for hill-billy tunes. Edison also recorded this number and issued it, as did a few other companies. Frank Ferara played a steel guitar accompaniment, and James Harrington was at the piano. The next two selections had Harrington again providing a piano accompaniment. Two "takes" were made of each. One, "They're Always in the Way," sounds from its title as if it were also hill-billyish, but I have never heard it. The third, "Pretty Little Honey Lou," was one of his compositions that Al had recorded for Edison about three years before, with a yodeling obligato by Frank Kamplian, of whom we shall be hearing considerably more.

This song puzzled me for years, because the Edison catalog listed it as being written by "A. and J. Bernard," and I wondered who J. Bernard was. I finally asked Al, and he replied that it was his brother—the one who survived him. The other Bernard had nothing to do with writing the song, he explained, but he had an affectionate habit of sometimes adding the names of relatives or friends to the credits of songs he had composed, and this time he had chosen to honor his brother. Unfortunately, "Honey Lou" as one of Al's less successful efforts, so if his brother was "cut in" on the royalties they probably didn't make him rich.

Later, I acquired a copy of the record, and it credits co-authorship to Joe Bernard, which makes me wonder if I had remembered incorrectly and the brother's name was Joe instead of John, as I may have given it last month. Perhaps I can arrive at a firm decision toward the end of this series, when I begin to publish excerpts from Al's letters.

Now back to our play-by-play analysis of his Edison recording career.

VI. "I Come From Get-It Land"

Obviously, if Al Bernard made anything like four thousand records, I

(Continued on page 119)

We specialize in

musical ANTIQUES

automata
phonographs
music boxes harpisichords roller organs
player pianos
rare instruments

for our fully illustrated CATALOGUE, no. 3
send $2.00 to:

Nostalgia

DEPT. 6H
NEWTONVILLE,
MASS. 02160

(617) 965-0530 or 731-0530

ily47p

Music Boxes

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Reforeathered

Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

tte

I BUY GIBSON brand MANDOLINS

Also want old CF Martin guitars, and BANJOS made by Gibson Master-tone, B&D, A.C. Fairbanks, S.S. Stewart, Epiphone, Paramount, Vega.

CASH PAID! ANY CONDITION!

Write:

Mr. Jay, P O Box 85-H, Staten Island,
N.Y. 10304 Or CALL COLLECT: 212
981-3226. ilyp

MUSIC BOXES REPAIRED AND RESTORED SALES AND SERVICE ON ANY TYPE BOX

AL MEEKINS 609-858-6421
Box 161, Collingswood, N.J. 08108

tte

ELECTRIFY PLAYER PIANO PUMP ORGAN

YOU CAN QUICKLY END TIRESOME FOOT-PUMPING
With a Compact Low-Cost Lee Silent Suction Unit

EASY TO INSTALL
FULLY GUARANTEED
1000'S IN USE
write to
LEE MUSIC MFG. CO.
635H, Venice, Ave.
Venice, Calif. 90291 mb57p

MISCELLANEOUS MUSICAL ITEMS

PHOTOS! The three most remarkable group photos ever taken of early recording artists: Edison artists of 1900, Edison artists of 1914, and Victor Male Chorus of 1925 (reproduced in HOB-BIES January 1971, October 1970 and July 1970). One 8x10 enlargement for $2, two for $3.50, all 3 for $5. Other 8x10 photos of recording artists available at $2 each: Ada Jones, Billy Murray, Collins, and Harlan, Henry Burr, and many others. Write for list. — Quentin Riggs, 21171 Greenboro Lane, Huntington Beach, Calif. 92646 au34941

FOR SALE: Heavy stock record sleeves (40 lb. Craft 10" size.) Prices: 1-100 each 7c; 100-300 each 6c; 300-1000 each 5c; 1000 up each 4c. Post. extra. Write for rates. — Quality Record Jack-ets, 2512 West Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif. 90016 ily66731

VERY FINE 2700 disk record library, 16" transcriptions, 78, 45, LP. Also antique phonograph collection. Please send SASE for details. — Hoag, 3 Fineview Dr., Utica, N.Y. 13502 je3863

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

OLD CLARINET MOUTHPIECES: Alendais 8, Chedeville 8, RVS (Soligen), Langenus, Meyer Bros., Mahillon, Mickey Gillette, Goldbeck, Bet-toney. — R. Monie, 502 N. Alexander, New Orleans, La. 70119 jel432

WANTED URGENTLY, violins, violas, cellos, parts, bows, cases, books and catalogs. Condition unimportant. KASH. — M. Pratt, 446 Plymouth St., Abington, Mass. 02351 n6297

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR SALE

MUSIC BOXES! Fantastic large illustrated catalogue of wholesale music boxes, circus organs, nickelodeons, photo-players, reproducing pianos, other automatic instruments. Plus books, recordings, musical gifts. $2 postpaid; $5 subscription ($12 value to next 6 issues. Money-back guarantee if not delighted! — David Bowers, Box 1669D, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90210 apl26313

REED ORGANS, melodions, bought, sold repaired. Reeds tuned, revoiced replacements. — C. H. Gunzinger, Box 276, Williamsville, Vt. 05362 o6675

OLD AND NEW PARTNERS.—By mid-1921 the partnership between Al Bernard and Ernest Hare for recording blackface comedy sketches had passed its peak. They worked together occasionally for another two years, but Hare meanwhile had met and teamed with William Reese (Billy) Jones to record more conventional types of popular songs. On radio Jones and Hare became "the Happiness Boys" and had the first sponsored program. Quentin Riggs copied these pictures from a 1920 book of photographs of Edison artists. Left to right: Al Bernard, Ernest Hare, and Reese Jones.

(FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS—Cont. from page 38)

am not going to list and discuss them all. My plan is to work my way through the Bernard and Hare duets on Edison "Re-Creation," then deal in only general terms with the remaining discs and cylinders, but pointing out some of the more interesting and unusual titles. After all, I can't let this series extend through all eternity, which would be almost necessary if I were to undertake a summary of every record in which the genial comedian had a part.

After recording the "St. Louis Blues" on October 29, Al returned to the Edison studios on November 20 and sang "Chasing the Blues," another of his compositions that was approved for Blue Amberol sale, but not for the disc. On December 9, he was heard in a song by Andrew B. Sterling and Harry Von Tilzer, "He Went In Like a Lion and Came Out Like a Lamb." This comic discussion of unhappy married life received a fair interpretation, but it was not the sort of song Al did best, and his rendition was inferior to that of Billy Murray on a number of brands, including Victor and Aeolian-Vocalion. For one thing, he did not, as Billy did, make his voice sound like that of a roaring lion, "which," as the Victor supplement said, "ought to be heard for a good three miles on a still night," and he did not develop the comedy so effectively. But Murray always sang songs of this type better than anyone else.

Then, five days before Christmas, 1919, on December 20, Bernard and Hare brought their year's busy partnership to a temporary close by recording the fifth of their blackface specialties, "I Come From Get-It-Land."

This record turned out a comparative failure. It was as funny as its forerunners and had, moreover, a catchy banjo accompaniment (I wonder who played it?), but it remained in the catalog only through 1923. One possible reason for its short life is that the moulds might have become damaged and it was not considered worth while to remake them. A more probable supposition is that the record's sale was impaired by the weak coupling—a not very amusing Jewish dialect character song, "Snoops, the Lawyer," by Maurice Burkhart. Burkhart had a small voice and most of his records suffered from lack of adequate volume. This helps to explain why "Snoops" became the dull affair that it was.

"I Come From Get-It-Land" was another of Bernard's original compositions. Here is how the dialog goes—but first let's quote the description on the envelope in which the record was packed:

"Black-face comedian patter is usually funny, but when Bernard and Hare are the performers there is no doubt of its 'de-splitting quality.' They are a genial team with a species of dialog tending to tie them up in knots as well as their listeners. When they come in the door, care flies out of the window.

"The banjo in this dialog has its own say too, and its part in the conversation is worth noting. Did you ever think of how a banjo can punctuate a remark?"

After listening to the record two or three times, I am inclined to believe the patter may be the funniest in any of the Bernard and Hare records. Whether or not it is, here it is:

He: Here's where I'm gonna serenade my baby
She: Here, here, here! What is all dat noise?
He: Why baby, dis is yo' honey bunch singin' to ya!
She: Singin'? You call dat singin'? Be on yo' way, Midnight!
He: Midnight! Why, gal, you ain't no half past eight o'clock in de mornin' yo' self!
She: Don't argue with me today, coon!
He: I ain't arguin', but when I got somethin' to say it must be said!
She: By dat you means to interrogate dat you is bad?
He: Gal, you learns quick, don't you?
She: Is dat so? I bet I'll drop dis skillet on yo' head an' separate yo' ideas from yo' appetite!
He: Yeah, an' I'll take my shoe an' half-sole yo' eyes!
She: Any time you do I'll jump from dis window an' run you so fast dat you'll turn de corner in de middle of de block.
He: Now, listen here, lop-ears—!
She: Here, keep my ears outa yo' mouth, coon, 'cause if ears was snowflakes you'd be a blizzard!
He: I'll bet I'm gonna draw my Smith an' Eastern, an' shoot up dis place!
She: Huh, dat thing won't shoot!
He: Why, gal, my gun shoots 82 miles an' den stops an' begins to throw bricks!
She: Yeah, but don't forget dat I has a razor inlaid with pearl. If I ever chase you with it you'll be inlaid with a crowd walkin' slow behind va, and I claim de music they play you won't be able to ball the jack by!

He: Now, honey, don't get riled! You know I was only jokin'. I'm not only a man dat's turned over a new leaf—
She: I guess you're gonna tell me dat you turned over a tree!
He: Aw, noney, let's not argue any more. I got a proposition to make to you, and I'm gonna sing it to ya!
She: Let'er go! I ain't blind!
He: Well, here goes, and I craves yo' polite attention!
She: Man, you're a reg'lar Chesterfull Brummeifield, ain't ya?

The ardent suitor then begins to make musical love to the "gal," whose name is Malinda Johnson. He assures her that he is a natural "go-getter," as high pressure business men used to be termed, and that, being a "go-getter," he comes from "Get-It-Land," an assertion that provides the song's title. Bernard again shows his disregard for exact rhymes by pairing "Malinda Johnson" with "orange blossom." Then follows a brief, but amorous, discussion:

She: Son, I claim dat yo' singin' an' yo' inducements is irresistible. You sho' has won dis time!
He: 'Course I has. An' you know dat what it takes to get it I got it, an' my middle name is Get-It, an' I come from Get-It-Land! That's why I'm gonna take you down to Parson Blake's—

The chorus is then sung again, with characteristic close harmony.

Again, I think that from the standpoint of rapid-fire repartee, this may be the funniest of the Bernard-Hare records, which means the funniest of any records by a pair of blackface comedians. I am, however, inclined to think that the sketches Bernard wrote are not so true to traditional Negro life as the dialect work by such comedians as Billy Golden and Joe Hughes and Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan.

Billy Golden was born in 1854 and died in 1926. His Negro characters, consequently, were based on his knowledge of blacks who had grown up before the Civil War, and there is virtually no trace of exaggeration in the way he depicts them. Collins (1864-1933) and Harlan (1861-1936) also knew the older type of Negroes of the plantation era and modeled their impersonations accordingly.

By contrast, Bernard's blacks seem of the big city type for the most part and they are what literary critics call "larger than life" — that is, their traits are exaggerated to make them more amusing. No Negro couples ever quarreled with such unflagging scintillating humor and with such sustained brilliance of invective as do the male and female brawlers of Bernard and Hare. That fact does not diminish in the least the delightfully humorous quality of their recordings, but does mean that they should not be accepted as historically accurate portrayals of Negro life a half century or more ago.

VII. Frank Kamplain Joins Bernard

Another performer who was to take an important role in Al Bernard's recording and radio career made his Edison debut just as 1919 was about to give way to 1920. He was an accomplished yodler, Frank Kamplain.

I am not sure but that Kamplain should be called the most important of Bernard's recording associates. While the Bernard-Kamplain singing and yodeling duets did not have the immediate run-away popularity of the Bernard and Hare comic sketches, they sold well, and Bernard's partnership with Kamplain was maintained for seven years. He worked with Hare for only four, and during the last two of those, after Hare increased his popularity as the singing sidekick of Billy Jones, Al and Ernie recorded together only infrequently. All told, Bernard and Kamplain probably made a considerably larger number of duet recordings than Bernard and Hare.

(Perhaps it is worth drawing attention to here, as I had meant to do earlier, how often "Henry Jones" or what other male is concerned in the Bernard-Hare sketches is proud of the devastating quality of his "wicked left" and how frequently he boasts of the death-dealing merits of his weapon that went by the name of Smith & Wesson, but which he invariably calls "my Smith an' East-ern.")

Of Frank Kamplain, the man, I know remarkably little, for I never had an opportunity to question Bernard about him. I recall, however, that a radio announcer whom I knew in Johnson City, Tenn., told me that he formerly had worked at a station in another State from which Kamplain frequently broadcast, and said he knew the yodeler well. He described him as pretty much of an irrepressible, fun-loving fellow. He may still be living; I, at least, have never seen any mention of his death.

After Bernard, Kamplain and Sam H. (Sammy) Stept, pianist and song writer, had begun to call themselves "The Record Boys" in 1925 and to broadcast regularly from New York, a writer in The Billboard said they spent most of their spare time "just sitting around and arguing. They'll argue about anything." I don't have the clipping for reference, but I remember the Billboard man went on to point out that he had mentioned

Kamplain's name first of the three, "and after this issue comes out they'll spend the rest of the day arguing about why Kamplain's name precedes the other two."

Kamplain's recorded work was mostly confined to his duets with Bernard, with, or without, the accompaniment of Sammy Stept's piano. (We shall hear more about Stept later.) However, he made a few Edison solo discs, one of which "Roll On, Silver Moon," won a place among the 300 best sellers. Victor also had him, in 1924, re-make record No. 17012, that had contained two yodel specialties—"The Cuckoo Song" and "Papa's Baby Boy"—by George P. Watson. Since Watson was still living and active—a little later he did a bit of electrical recording for Victor — I wonder why he wasn't called upon for the re-makes. (He died in 1926.) Bernard and Kamplain did nothing together for Victor—at least nothing that was issued.

The pair's initial Edison offering was George Gershwin's first song hit, "Swanee," which they recorded on December 27, 1919. Strangely, the record seems not to have been a success, but its lack of popularity could not be blamed on the coupling, a fine rendition of "When My Baby Smiles at Me," by "Rachel Grant" (Gladys Rice) and Billy Murray, with some incidental imitations of a "laughing trombone" by Edward Meeker. Despite this seemingly strong pair, the disc, No. 50651, was deleted from the catalog after 1923. You will notice that it was recorded exactly a week after "I Come From Get-It-Land," which also had a short catalog life.

As a rule, all the talking in the Bernard-Kamplain duets was done by the "senior partner," with Kamplain restricting himself to yodeling.

VIII. The "Moonshine" Song

Bernard's first Edison recording in 1920 was "The Unlucky Blues," which he sang into the horn on February 19. This was another of his offerings that was considered suitable for cylinders but not for discs. It was not one of his compositions, but was listed as the work of Lewis (probably Sam M. Lewis) and J. Russel Robinson.

On April Fool's Day, Bernard and Kamplain sang "Oh Joe, Please Don't Go," a "coon song" for which Bernard provided the words and Larry Briers the music, although only Briers got label credit. (I wonder if Bernard had his brother in mind when he wrote the lyrics.) Twenty-eight years later, the aging erstwhile "Boy From Dixie" sang this song a few months before he died, at the John Bieling Day observance in September, 1948.

Then on April 29, Bernard and Hare got together again to record an amusing version of a then currently popular song lamenting the "horrors" of prohibition. It was "The Moon Shines On the Moonshine." The words were by Sidney de Witt and the music by Robert Hood Bowers, who was then conductor of the Aeolian-Vocalion recording orchestra. The plea for "Joe" not to go was combined with the "dry law" lament on Diamond Disc No. 50672. They also entered the Blue Amberol list.

Both the words of "The Moon Shines On the Moonshine" and the dialog are laughable. There is less talking than usual, however, and much of it is worked in as a part of the song. There is also a duet mid-way between a "boozeeon" (bassoon) and a "trambone" (trombone.) "Henry Jones" again is the "hero." And this, by the way, was the first conventionally written popular song that Bernard and Hare had recorded. The others had been produced by Bernard alone or with a collaborator, and with the special requirements of the Bernard-Hare duets always uppermost:

She: What's the matter with you, Henry Jones? For the last month you've been moping aroun' here. What's the matter with you anyway?
He: I ain't myself, gal. I'm DE-pressed.
She: What makes you DE-pressed?
He: Well, listen tuh me an' I'll tell yuh.

Here Henry begins singing his mournful plaint about being robbed of the solace of alcohol, while She makes jeering comments. After the first chorus they have this conversation:

He: It might be merry, but not for me. I'm DE-pressed. Oh well, I guess I'll play me a little section on my instrument. (He begins playing "How Dry I Am.")
She: Say, Henry, what is dat instrument you're playing?
He: Why, gal, dat's a boozeeon.
She: 'Course you'd have to have booze in it.
He: Oh, hush yo' mouth, gal. Don't bother me.
She: Wait a minute, Henry, and I'll play with ya.
He: What's dat you gonna play on?
She: Why, I'm gonna play dis trambone.
He: A trambone? Why, you'd play better on a hambone!
She: Nevertheless, I'm gonna help you out. I don't b'lieve you think I can play dis thing.
He: Oh well, all right. Come on, le's start.
She: Say, Henry, what is dat tune we is playin'?
He: We is playin'? Where you git dat 'we is' at? The melody dat I is playin' is 'John Barleycorn's Swan Song.' But you ain't helpin' me a bit. You're just maldin' it mizzable fo' me.

They resume singing, and the chorus ends with Henry taking a deep bass note on the last word of "out where the moon shines on the moonshine so stillily." She giggles and exclaims, "Dat's some still!" and then the record ends. While the dialog in this number is hardly so funny as in the duets that preceded it, the total effect, with the bassoon-trombone duet included, is amusing.

IX. "Slide, Kelly, Slide"

On May 12, Al and Frank Kamplain recorded another of their singing and yodeling specialties composed by Bernard, "My Lovin' Sing Song Man," into which the old song, "Sweet Evalina, My Evalina" is effectively introduced. This was combined sometime afterward with one of Bernard's best solos, "The Broadway Blues," which, however, was not written by him. Neither was it by Handy or any other Negro composer, but by Grant Clarke and Carey Morgan. "The Broadway Blues" was on one side of Aileen Stanley's first Victor record issued in November, 1920, and was also her only issued recording for Brunswick.

May 12 brought another Bernard and Hare recording, "Slide, Kelly, Slide," which had the subtitle, "The Trombone Blues." It was a comedy number written by George F. Briegel and had nothing to do with the "Gay Nineties" tune of the same name always associated with J. W. Kelly, "The Rolling Mill Man." I wonder, by the way, if George F. Briegel was merely a disguise for Bernard's song writing friend, Larry Briers. Perhaps it was Briers' real name. I know nothing about Briers, who isn't listed in the ASCAP Biographical Dictionary, but have considered the possibility that he might have been a member of some phonograph company's recording staff. I remember that I once saw a disc of Irish jigs and reels played by a violinist, Joseph Samuels, with Briers' piano accompaniment, but can't recall the label. It is interesting that there were a few comedy trombone effects in "The Moon Shines On the Moonshine," and that, in its follow-up, the "slide" has a leading part. Possibly Bernard wrote the words of this number, but no one but Briegel is mentioned in the "credit" part of the Edison record label.

Again, "Henry Jones" is the man in the song, as he is also in "Change Your Name, Malinda Lee," another Bernard-Hare duet recorded on September 14, 1920, and combined on Diamond Disc No. 50731 with "Slide, Kelly, Slide." This was the first time that two blackface skits by Al and Ernie had been coupled on one record to give their admirers double value.

Between the combined duets, however, Bernard had, on June 24, sung an amusing solo, "Mississippi Bound," composed by Charley Straight, who was for years Gene Greene's accompanist in vaudeville. On August 6 Al made a record of "Read 'Em and Weep," his own composition, which he sang in the musical comedy, "Come Seven." Its "hero" is a dedicated gambler, "Old Bill Flat from New Orleans." There is an entertaining "crapshooting" scene, which results in arrests, followed by the dice tossers being hauled away in a "paddy wagon." An unidentified man, possibly Edward Meeker, impersonates a policeman.

Al Bernard told me that many of the characters in his songs, such as "Old Bill Flat," were taken from well known Negro personalities in the New Orleans of the 1890's and the first decade or so of the 20th Century. "Parson Jenks," "Brother Low-Down," "Stavin Change (the Meanest Man in New Orleans)" and others in the Bernard mythology were flesh and blood people before they passed into his songs, according to Al.

Now, we'll discuss the dialogs in the two duets just mentioned. First, "Slide, Kelly, Slide," and then "Change Your Name Malinda Lee":

She: Well, dawgone, if yonder ain't ole

Henry!
He: Yeah, here I is!
She: You know, I ain't seen you since you had de fluanna!
He: Aw, gal, you means fluenna. Listen here, Kelly, I want—
She: Heah, heah, heah! What you callin' me Kelly about? Kelly is a man's name. Why do you do it?
He: I calls you Kelly because you reminds me of a fellow I knows named Kelly. You know, you an' him both are great musicians. You plays de same insterment.
She: I don't understand what you mean.

"Henry" sings an explanation about "Kelly" being a trombone virtuoso. At its conclusion his lady love exclaims:

She: Stop a minute! Say no more! Desist! Now I knows what you means! Kelly is the new trombone player in town!
He: Ah, now, I sees that you is usin' de thinkin' matter dat habitates yo' cranium!
She: Very singular! Let you know about dat later. But, say, can Kelly play like dis?

A long slide is heard from the trombone, and they sing a song discussing the lady's musical genius. The trombone is heard throughout. Then:

He: Gal, you plays a mean trombone!
She: Ain't it so? But, you know, you ought to be able to play a trombone.
He: Why?
She: 'Cause you got a big mouth.
He: A big mouth? Huh, yours ain't no buttonhole!
She: No, but when de good Lord was makin' yours if He'd a-made another cut He'd a-cut yo' head off!
He: Dats all right about my mouth. But, say, Kelly, you is good at slidin' de trombone, out how is you on technique?
She (laughing): Why, I speaks it fluently!
He: Speaks it? I'm gonna try you out. What is four-four, six-eight?
She: Dat ain't technique, fool. Dat's hist'ry!
He: Dawgone, I can't fool you, can I?
You know, when I was talking about technique what I should have said was "conspirato, di capo."
She: You tel: 'em, ragtime, I'm syncopated!
He: All right. Let's go! (The record ends with repetition of the chorus.)

Now, here is the characteristically funny conversation in "Change Your Name, Malinda Lee":

He: Yo ho, Malinda! Yo' sweet baby has arrived!
She: Well, if it ain't my own blackberry!
He: Blackberry? Listen here, gal, you ain't no glass of buttermilk yo'self!
She: I know, son, but you're so dawgone black dat de lightnin' bugs follow you aroun' in de daytime!
He: Aw, honey, let's not argy today, 'cause I'm a man dat's fell in love!
She: In love! Listen, coon, you on away from me! You know you're just tryin' to trifle with my affections!
He: No, I ain't honey. I'm a man's dat's fell heavy in love!
She: In love!
He: Sure, ain't you never fell in love?
She: No, but I fell in de river once!
He: Oh, but dat's diff'rent. You know, when you falls in de river dey fishes you out, an' when you falls in quicksand dey drags you out, but when you falls in love you is utterly an' eternally submerged!
She: Henry, I must confess dat you has worked it out in an obnoxious manner.
He: Worked it out! Why gal, yo' language ain't fit to eat! Let me explain mo' explicit-like what love is.
She: Well, go on.
He: Love is a circumrotary pitty-patty bumpification of de heart which produces a condition of de mental cerebellum dat causes complete oblivion to de delinquencies of yo' inamorara.
Shh: Oo, oo, oo! Hit me flat on de head with a brick! Coon, you know you're a reglar Dickster's Websterary himself.
He: 'Co'se I is! Wait till I ignites my see-gar! I wants to say somethin' to ya!
She: Don't say it to me, Henry. Sing it.
He: Aw right, stay right where you is!

Henry sings a plea to his ebony "Inamorara" to "Change Your Name, Malinda Lee."

She: Henry, you know you sings jes' like a bird!
He: Does you think so, baby? What sort of a bird does I sing like?
She: A blackbird!
He: Aw, hush yo' mouth, gal!

They reach an amorous agreement that after they are married she will do the cooking and he will chop the wood — an understanding which he qualifies by singing at the bottom of his bass range, "I mean de kindling wood!" But everything is harmonious at the record's end.

By the time this disc, providing a double helping of Bernard and Hare's humor, was issued, the comedians' partnership had reached, and was about to pass, its peak. Not long before, Ernest Hare had met Billy Jones in the Edison recording studios and they had amused themselves by singing opera in a burlesque fashion, as they did in their 1922 record of "Operatic Syncopation." The pair soon proved to be the Damon and Pythias of "show business." They seemed to have everything in common except that Jones was a bachelor (he took a wife after his mother's death) and Hare was married, with a little girl named Marilyn, who was to serve for a short time as Jones' singing partner after her father's death in 1939. Hare was six years older to the day than Jones; both had mothers whose maiden name was Roberts; both were five feet and seven inches tall; both had voices of operatic calibre that perfectly complemented each other, and both had had operatic experience. In every way they seemed "twin souls" and they achieved a perfection in comic duet singing that, after their first experimental months, probably has never been equalled.

The result might be called fore-ordained. Hare continued to be on good terms with Bernard and to work with him occasionally, but, looking into the future, he could see there was a sameness to the Bernard-Hare duets that militated against their long-range popularity.

Funny as they were, it would become increasingly a case of "more of the same." He correctly foresaw brighter prospects in teaming up with William Reese Jones to sing a wider variety of popular music. For a while, however, he remained the partner of both Bernard and of Jones.

Before I end this installment, I think it well to point out that Jones was not known as Billy Jones on Edison records until he sang "Casey Jones" (No. 50747), recorded February 8, 1921, and announced in October, 1921. Previously, he had been called "Reese Jones" when singing for Edison. Incidentally, the reverse side of "Casey Jones" was "A Scene On the Old Plantation," by Billy Golden and the Empire Vaudeville Company, and it is the only comic sketch I can think of in which Al Bernard took an incidental part—that of "Aunt Dinah." Other members of the "cast" in this skit, recorded February 17, 1921, were Edward Meeker; three members of the Harmonizers Quartet — Charles Hart, Steve Porter and Harry Donaghy — and a banjoist, Billy Pryor.

(To be continued)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

AL BERNARD

PART V
By JIM WALSH

I. Biography of A Genius

When this series was just getting under way, I quoted an article from "Stage World" for October 30, 1920, in which Mark Vance referred to Al Bernard as "a song writing genius." The farther I proceed with research bearing upon the life and achievements of "The Boy From Dixie," the more I feel those words of praise were justified.

During the almost century-long history of the phonograph there have been many recording artists with highly developed, if sometimes narrowly specialized talents, but the number to whom the word "genius" can accurately be applied is, in my judgment, few. Len Spencer, I maintain, was a creative genius, and his recording partner, Ada Jones, might be termed a genius of interpretation and mimicry. So might Billy Murray and, so, I think, might Arthur Collins, with Byron G. Harlan perhaps just a step below his long-time associate. Cal Stewart might be added to the genius list because of his creation of the mythical "world" of Punkin Center, with the personality of "Uncle Josh" as its focal point. Frank Crumit both as singer and song writer might be admitted to the genius grouping, and the combined comedy accomplishments of Billy Jones and Ernest Hare add up to genius, regardless of whether their separate efforts qualify. Possibly you have nominees of your own. But the number of geniuses in any branch of artistic endeavor is small. If the possessors of genius were not exceptional they wouldn't be geniuses, and the term is not one that should be loosely applied to recording artists, no matter how clever, or to anyone else.

As for Al Bernard's right to belong in the ranks of the exalted, consider his achievements. He wrote the most sparkling, scintillating minstrel-type humor ever put on records. He composed scores of simple, but tuneful and unforgettable songs. He was one of the pioneer popular performers on radio. He was successful on the legitimate stage, in minstrel work and in the films. He was the author of much published minstrel material. He had an excellent high tenor voice although some record companies occasionally were misguided enough to refer to him as a baritone, and as a singer of "blues" from a more sophisticated standpoint that that of cottonfield Negroes, he had no equal. The man did well everything he attempted, and I sincerely believe that, from both the creative and interpretative standpoints, the accolade of "genius" is rightfully his.

MINSTREL MAN.—Al Bernard is shown both in blackface and as he really looked on the cover of this book published in the early 1930's.

After completing the third part of this survey, I came across a large paperback book called "Al Bernard's Complete Minstrel Folio, for stage, radio and home entertainment." I knew I had the book, but had never done more than glance at it and didn't realize that it contained a brief biographical sketch of Bernard, which provides a few details concerning him that I had not previously mentioned.

The "folio" was published in 1933 by Bibb and Lang, Inc., of New York, after Al's recording career was virtually over, even though he remained popular in radio for years afterward. The foreword, giving information about Bernard, who wrote, or at least edited the book, is worth quoting:

"This Minstrel Book is the brain child of Al Bernard—who is Al Bernard? It would take pages to tell you of his career in the world of show business.

"However, we shall endeavor here to give you briefly a resume of his accomplishments, mainly to convince you of his qualifications to authorship of this marvelous book.

"From the time he was old enough to walk, Mr. Bernard's one ambition in life was to be an actor and essentially a comedian. His first opportunity came in 1907 when he obtained a job singing at a picture house in New Orleans, La. From there Al went right on. He organized a road tab show and here got his fundamental experience in minstrelsy. He played through the country continually, until in 1919 he arrived in New York City.

"He immediately became an Edison record artist and he continued recording for the different companies until he became so famous he organized the Record Boys, one of radio's first sensational attractions.

"During his radio career, Mr. Al Bernard has been featured with the Record Boys—Dutch Masters Minstrels—Raybestos Twins—and today is featured on the N. B. C. network as Al Bernard, the Minstrel Man.

"Over the period of years he has originated and compiled the wealth of incomparable material contained in this book and it is his earnest wish that you may derive the fun and pleasure from it that he has so sincerely endeavored to give you. Sincerely, THE PUBLISHER."

The book contains "The Sunflower Minstrels," "a complete 2-hour show with original songs, jokes and situations"; much other dialect humor; and ten of Bernard's songs. Only two of these, "Prancin' Dancin' Yodelin' Man" and "Yodelin' Bill" were well known on records, as duets between Bernard and Frank Kampain, but Al made one or two records of three others—"At the Pumpkin Fair in the Old Town Square," "Mister Black Boy, Good Night" and "Stay Away From My Man." The other five are relatively obscure: "Henceforth I'll Call on Friday," "If He Enters That Door," "It's Not Funny When It Happens to You," "My Ole Mule's Name Is 'Iz'" and "The Race Track Blues."

No doubt the Bernard songs and sketches helped to extend the life of minstrelsy, which was even then a vanishing form of entertainment and has now almost completely perished. Even many Lions' Clubs no longer present their traditional annual minstrel shows, and Al Bernard, if he were alive today, would, I am sure, be saddened by the disappearance of his favorite entertainment medium.

Now, let's return to consideration of the records that Al and Ernie Hare were making for Edison while their partnership still flourished.

(Parenthetically, I wonder about the statement that Bernard sang in movie theaters in 1907. That was a time when there were no film shows except in primitive store front "nickelodeons," which projected split-reel "rainy" pictures over and over. At five cents admission, it doesn't seem they would have been sufficiently profitable to permit a "vocalist" being used as a supplement to the filmed "attractions." Perhaps, however, Al sang between changes of film and, since he was only 17, he wouldn't have been paid much. I believe, too, that the year in which he came to New York should be 1918, instead of 1919. As was revealed in an earlier installment, he recorded "The Hesitation Blues" for Edison on February 14, 1919, and he had made tests, which did not meet with Mr. Edison's approval, before that. He and Ernest Hare were living in the same apartment building when they sang "I Want to Hold You In My Arms" on March 18, and must have been there for some time to become acquainted and work as partners. So 1918, seems the more likely date.)

II. "Satisfied"

Last month's discussion of Bernard-Hare recordings ended with an account of "Slide, Kelly, Slide" and "Change Your Name, Malinda Lee." Perhaps because of its double value, the Diamond Disc (No. 50731) containing these two Bernard compositions was one of the pair's most successful offerings and found its way into the list of "300 best sellers." So did their next, which had the brief title of "Satisfied" and was combined with Bernard's solo, "Read 'Em and Weep." The words of both "Satisfied" and "Read 'Em and Weep" were by Bernard, but the music of the first was by the elusive Larry Briers, and that of the second by Walter Haenschel, who at that time was an orchestra conductor for Brunswick. Again I wonder: Why did Bernard, who had such a well defined gift for composing attractive, catchy and easily remembered tunes, so often "farm out" the musical portion of his songs to someone else?

The description printed on the record envelope said truthfully:

"'Satisfied' is entertaining and amusing, both in the song itself and in the conversational interlude. Al Bernard and Ernest Hare give a realistic performance of the colored people."

Of "Read 'Em and Weep" the description went:

"That branch of gambling commonly known as 'rolling the bones' is more or less familiar to all, but seems to be particularly appropriate to the colored race. At any rate, there have been a great many funny stories about their activity in that line. 'Read 'Em and Weep' tells about Old Bill Flat, a veritable genius of the dice. When he rolls them out his opponent has only one thing to do—'Read 'Em and Weep.' But, before the end of the story, the long arm of the law plays its hand and somewhat spoils Old Bill's triumph."

"Al Bernard has a happy faculty for impersonating colored folks. The dialect is natural and sustained throughout."

"Satisfied" is a humorous song in which considerable down to earth philosophy is expressed. It is a discussion between two far from affluent blacks as to what they would do if they had their "druthers" and what it would take to make them satisfied with their existence, which they realize can never be on the higher plane to which they wistfully aspire. (George M. Cohan used the same idea in his earlier song, "Then I'd Be Satisfied With Life.") In "Satisfied" the man, who apparently is again "Henry Jones," for he is called "Hen," has only low-life materialistic desires, introduced for comedy effect, but there is a touch of pathos in the woman's yearning to be of a higher social status. Here is the first chorus, sung by "Henry," with the feminine comment on his remarks in parentheses: "If I could find some work to do (You work?) Den I'd be satisfied. I mean some nice hard work fo' you! (Dat's diff'runt!) Den I'd be satisfied. If you would come right home to me with all de weekly salary— If I could spend our money free (our money?) Den I'd be satisfied. If I could live a life of ease, Den I'd be satisfied. Eat all de chicken dat I please, Den I'd be satisfied. If I could figure out some way to always throw a four and trey— If I could lay aroun' all day (Humph!) Den I'd be satisfied."

"She," portrayed by Bernard, reveals in the second refrain that she has high society aspirations:

"If I could dress like quality, Den I'd be satisfied. Have all de wimmin envy me, Den I'd be satisfied."

If I could own a big sedan,
Have lots of di'monds on my han',
Could hear dem say, 'Now ain't she gran'!'
Den I'd be satisfied.
If I could lead de upper set,
Coon, I'd be satisfied.
If I could be de social pet,
Den I'd be satisfied.
If I could only wear silk hose,
If I could wear silk underclo'es—

(Continued on page 117)

I BUY GIBSON brand MANDOLINS

Also want old CF Martin guitars, and BANJOS made by Gibson Masterstone, B&D, A.C. Fairbanks, S.S. Stewart, Epiphone, Paramount, Vega.

CASH PAID! ANY CONDITION!

Write:

Mr. Jay, P O Box 85-H, Staten Island, N.Y. 10304 Or CALL COLLECT: 212 981-3226. jlyp

ELECTRIFY PLAYER PIANOS PUMP ORGANS

YOU CAN QUICKLY END TIRESOME FOOT-PUMPING With a Compact Low-Cost Lee Silent Suction Unit

EASY TO INSTALL FULLY GUARANTEED 1000'S IN USE write to

LEE MUSIC MFG. CO. 535H, Venice, Ave. Venice, Calif. 90291 mh57p

MISCELLANEOUS MUSICAL ITEMS

PHOTOS! The three most remarkable group photos ever taken of early recording artists: Edison artists of 1900, Edison artists of 1914, and Victor Male Chorus of 1925 (reproduced in HOBBIES January 1971, October 1970 and July 1970). One 8x10 enlargement for $2, two for $3.50, all 3 for $5. Other 8x10 photos of recording artists available at $2 each: Ada Jones, Billy Murray, Collins, and Harlan, Henry Burr, and many others. Write for list. — Quentin Riggs, 21171 Greenboro Lane, Huntington Beach, Calif. 92646 au34941

FOR SALE: Heavy stock record sleeves (40 lb. Craft 10" size.) Prices: 1-100 each 7c; 100-300 each 6c; 300-1000 each 5c; 1000 up each 4c. Post. extra. Write for rates. — Quality Record Jack-ets, 2512 West Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif. 90016 jly66731

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

OLD CLARINET MOUTHPIECES: Alalanda 8, Chedeville 8, RVS (Soligen), Langenus, Meyer Bros., Mahillon, Mickey Gillette, Goldbeck, Belfoney. — R. Monie, 502 N. Alexander, New Orleans, La. 70119 jel432

WANTED URGENTLY, violins, violas, cellos, parts, bows, cases, books and catalogs. Condition unimportant. KASH. — M. Pratt, 446 Plymouth St., Abington, Mass. 02251 n6297

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR SALE

MUSIC BOXES! Fantastic large illustrated catalogue of wholesale music boxes, circus organs, nickelodeons, photo-players, reproducing pianos, other automatic instruments. Plus books, recordings, musical gifts. $2 postpaid; $5 subscription ($12 value to next 6 issues. Money-back guarantee if not delighted! — David Bowers, Box 1669D, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90210 ap126313

REED ORGANS, melodions, bought, sold repaired. Reeds tuned, revoiced replacements. — C. H. Gunzinger, Box 276, Williamsville, Vt. 05362 o6675

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

If I could smell jus' like a rose,
Den I'd be satisfied."

The last remark is followed by a bit of repartee that if used today on television or radio would bring a storm of protest. Henry says: "Why, baby, you does smell like a rose." She replies: "Does I? What kind of a rose does I smells like?" and he returns: "You smells jes' like the Neg-rose"—meaning, of course, "Negroes."

They both laugh at this, and then join in singing the last few lines of the song, which sum up what it is about:

"HE—If I could be what I am not
SHE—Now, listen man, I'll tell you what—
BOTH—If we could have what we ain't got,
Den we'd be satisfied!"

The conversational give and take between the first chorus and the second verse is up to the usual Bernard-Hare standard, although it perhaps is not their most laughable:

"SHE—Now I know why dey calls you 'Hen.'
HE—Why does day call me 'Hen'?
SHE—'Cause you're always layin' aroun'.
HE—Oh, gal, igno'ance is eatin' you up!
SHE—Is dat so? Coon, you gonna keep on insultin' me until some mornin' you're gonna wake up in de graveyard an' find somebody patten' you on de face with a spade!
HE—Yeah, and I bet I take dis here brick an' make it fit yo' mouth like a toothpick!
SHE—Well, go on, senseless!
HE—Senseless! Say, isn't here, gal! If you had just one o' my ideas in yo' head it would bust yo' skull!
SHE—Coon, you flatters me!
HE—Aw, you keep argyvin' with me an' we dona forgot what we was doin'.
SHE—Whut wuz we doin'?
HE—Why, we wuz singin' a song.
SHE—Wuz we? We wuz, wuzn't we?
HE—An' I got some mo' to sing.
SHE—Wait till I git the music-kins together.
Mister Director, will you start yo' jazz hounds?"

The orchestra then begins playing for the second stanza, and there is no more spoken repartee except for the assurance near the end that "She" has a rose-like fragrance.

The next Bernard and Hare duet for Edison was not recorded until May 24, 1921, by which time Hare had met Billy Jones and struck up their ever memorable friendship and team work agreement. Between the recording of "Satisfied" on November 10, 1921, and the singing of the next duet, "Ain't You Comin' Out, Melinda?", Al did some solo work. On November 23, he recorded "Play Me a Dixie Melody," an unusually serious song to be sung by him, which was issued both on the Diamond Disc and the Blue Amberol cylinder.

This was followed on December 17, with a highly amusing tongue-twister tune, "Timbuctoo," written by Bert Kalmar and Harry Ruby telling of the adventures and misadventures of a family named Buckingham. At one point, in my copy of the record, the usually fluent tenor gets slightly mixed and refers to a "bucking broncho" as a "brucking boncho." This record was coupled with "I've Got the Blues for My Old Kentucky Home," by the Harmonizers, using their Edison name of the Premier Quartet, and was a good seller.

Bernard began his 1921, Edison activities by recording one of his compositions, "Dew Drop" (music again by Larry Briers) as a duet with his yodeling sidekick, Frank Kamplain. This was on January 6. Ten days later he made a lively solo version of the Creamer-Layton hit, "Strut, Miss Liz-zie," and on February 4, recorded another fine "nut song," "Ump Pah-Pah," written by Walter Donaldson, which told of how "old man McNally's" daughter Sallie suffered from his insistent and incessant playing of a bass horn or trombone, I'm not sure which. Next on February 24, came another yodel song with Kamplain, "Oh, Yeedle Ay," which was combined with an already mentioned Bernard solo, "Mississippi Bound." This coupling, No. 50785, also was taken into the list of the 300 most popular Edison discs.

"TALENT FEE."—One of the many checks received by Al Bernard for making Edison records is shown here. Bernard's endorsement, written on the back of the original check, here is reproduced at the right. Signatures on the face of the check are of Walter Miller, manager of the Edison recording studios, and Fred Rabenstein, cashier and paymaster.

Here is the description that came with the disc:

"Few Edison owners need an introduction to the artists of this record. Both Al Bernard and Frank M. Kamplain have done similar work for us, in which yodeling is used as an embellishment of a song. The words of the lyric are pure nonsense, and serve to drive away dull care. The song is the work of Fred Fisher and Irving Maslof.

"There is a great deal of light comedy in 'Mississippi Bound,' and you can feel certain that Al Bernard, 'The Boy From Dixie,' is peculiarly fitted by birth and nature to sing the longings in the heart of a ducky who wants to get back below the Mason-Dixon line. A train effect is introduced, and a bit of dialog, which emphasizes the loneliness of the unfortunate ducky who misses his railroad connection. Charley Straight wrote the music of 'Mississippi Bound,' and the words are the work of Spencer Williams."

Williams, by the way, was black. Probably you will have observed that the Edison writer twice used "ducky," a word frowned on today, but which in those times usually had an affectionate meaning.

III. "Ain't You Comin' Out, Melinda"

On April 5, 1921, Our High-Spirited Hero—he was young and high-spirited in those long ago days—made a Diamond Disc of a new "blues" song, "The Boll Weevil Blues," written by Cliff Hess. It appeared on No. 50787, combined with another of Bernard's compositions, "I Ain't Afraid of Nuthin' Dat's Alive." The latter record, however, was not sung by Al, but by his buddy, Ernie Hare.

Evidently Al lacked the stiff-necked self-esteem that might have led him to insist on one but he should record his compositions. Not only did Hare make the Edison record of the song on the threadbare theme about the Negro who feared nothing except "ha'nts," but the great black comedian, Bert Williams, recorded it for Columbia. A little later, Williams also recorded another Bernard song, featuring a cantankerous, gin-swinging, real life old Negro preacher known in New Orleans as "Brother Low-Down."

As was brought out in the two-part article on Rudy Wiedoeft, published in November and December, 1973, HOBBIES, Bernard collaborated with the legendary saxophone virtuoso in writing a number of songs, the words of which were by Bernard and the music by Wiedoeft. Among them were "Lone Star," of which Hare made an Aeolian-Vocalion record, and "The Saxophone Blues," which Ernie recorded for Pathé, Emerson and perhaps other companies, with a saxophone obbligato by Wiedoeft, himself. And late in 1919, Byron G. Harlan, the premier singing delineator of "rube" types on records, waxed for Emerson a version of Bernard's amusing rustic production, "That's the Feller!" (No. 9221) which was coupled with "Oh, Oh, Oh, Those Land-lords," by Irving Kaufman. The cheerful ditty relates the colorful exploits of a one-time "rube," and the refrain ends: "That's the feller, used to be the teller, in our home town savin's bank."

Al Bernard himself was an admirable interpreter of "rube" comedy numbers. He did an electrically recorded Okeh of Ben Hapgood Burt's classic, "Wal, I Swan," that is better than the Victor that Harlan had sung years earlier. Bernard's 1928, impersonation of the conceited, self-satisfied, fatuous old yokel is irresistible.

While I am sweeping up these loose odds and ends, I'll mention that Bernard and Hare collaborated in writing at least one number. In 1921, a song called "Midnight Blues Waltz" and credited to them was played on Brunswick record No. 2072 by Carl Fenton's Orchestra. Hare probably did have a part in the writing, but it is possible that Bernard followed his previously mentioned custom of sometimes adding the names of relatives or friends to his effort as a gesture of affection.

It might also be mentioned that some of the numbers Bernard wrote in the 1920's—among them, "Blue-Eyed Sally" and "When Dixie Stars Are Playing Peek-a-boo," were extensively recorded by dance bands. His "Le Wanna" was played by the All-Star Trio in 1919 for Brunswick.

It is also worth mentioning that Al sang the vocal parts of only a few dance records, as compared to such tireless "pluggers" as Irving Kaufman, Arthur Fields, and Harold (Scrappy) Lambert. We have already seen that he did the vocalizing in some Victor records by the Original Dixieland Jazz Band, and I have a Brunswick fox-trot disc in which he sings the refrain of "Paddlin' Madeline Home." No doubt other examples could be found, but, relatively speaking, his appearances in dance records were infrequent. His "Coon Songs" of the Bernard-Hare type, of course, were not suited for dance music.

And now we come to the next duet on Edison records by Bernard and Hare, "Ain't You Comin' Out, Malinda?", which was recorded May 21, 1921, and coupled with a comic Negro talking specialty, "Aunt Phoebe's Wedding Day," by Billy Golden and Billy Heins.

This time, although Bernard wrote the dialog, the song was the work of Andrew B. Sterling and one of the greatest composers in the history of American popular music, Harry Von Tilzer. And what a coincidence that only a few months after Al himself had written a highly successful song about a Negro maiden named Malinda ("Change Your Name, Malinda Lee") Von Tilzer and his veteran collaborator should have struck upon the same given name for a similar song! Bernard, however, was not the first to use "Malinda" in a song title. There had been a "Malinda's Wedding Day," recorded by Collins and Harlan for several companies in 1912, and no doubt other examples could be found. I have just thought of one. A few years before the wedding day song, Collins and Harlan had sung "Some Day, Malinda." It seems to have been something of a stock name for Negro women characters, just as "Alexander" and "Rastus" were for males.

There are some funny moments in "Ain't You Comin' Out, Malinda?", and we shall proceed to consider them now.

HE—Well, here I am, still in front of de same gal's house an' still on de outside. I'll call her. Oh, baby!

SHE—Who kin dat be? Who is dat addressin' me in such endearin' words?

HE—Oh, gal, you knows who dis is.

SHE—Huh, You sho' matters yo'self.

HE—You know, baby, tonight's de night!

SHE—Travel on, useless!

HE—Useless? Say, listen here, gal, you gonna keep on messin' with me till some mawnin' you're gonna wake up an' find yo'self asleep in a marble orchard.

SHE—Marble orchard! Whut's dat?

HE—A marble orchard is where de roots of trees grows in yo' face!

This ends the spoken colloquy, and He (presumably, once more, Henry Jones), begins singing an invitation to Malinda to come out into the moonlight. After the first chorus is sung, the acrimonious conversation is resumed:

SHE—Son, speakin' of honeysuckle vines reminds me of dem roots of trees you was speakin' about. By dat you means to insert dat you is terrifically bad?

HE—Bad? Why, gal, dat ain't no name for it! I'm so bad dat if I ever hitcha de only way yo' folks will be able to communicate wid ya will be through a weedy board!

SHE—Nigger, move on while you is all together!

HE—Is dat so? Well, after dat remark I'm 'sposed to teli ya dat I'm gonna hop on you like a duck!

SHE—You is, is ya? Well, when you do you better have web feet!

HE—Now, baby, let's don't confab any more, 'cause I got mo' poetics to unfurl.

SHE—Well, go on an' unfold!

They sing the remainder of the song, but no apparent decision is reached as to whether Malinda will leave her window and join her swain. At the last, however, she calls him "mah dear," so presumably she is in a more amenable mood.

GREAT BLACK COMEDIAN.—Bert Williams (1874-1922), shown, left, with his partner, George Walker, made Columbia records of two of Al Bernard's songs. (Photo from Quentin Riggs.)

The Von Tilzer song was extensively recorded in differing styles of interpretation. Among the various versions, the Peerless Quartet sang it on a Victor record in close harmony, but not "cooned up" as in the Bernard-Hare rendition.

IV. First Columbia Record

The time is approaching when because of space limitations and the vast number of Al Bernard recordings that I must end these "play by play" descriptions. However, I do intend to quote the dialog passages in the remaining Edison duets by Bernard and Hare.

After "Ain't You Comin' Out, Malinda?" there was a lapse of four months before Bernard again faced the Edison recording horn. This time, on September 5, 1921, he sang "I Wants to Stand on Dixie Land," which went forth in Blue Amberol form, but not as a disc. Sixteen days later, he was heard in another of his songs, which has already been mentioned more than once, "Brother Low-Down." Its music was by Larry Briers, who has also had more than one mention. This was issued in 1922, combined with an Italian dialect comic song, "Spagoni's Wedding Jubilee," which Billy Murray had recorded three years earlier as a successor to the popular "In the Land o' Yamo Yamo."

Bert Williams must have made his Columbia version of "Brother Low-Down" at about the same time Al was waxing the some song for Edison, for the Columbia disc came out in January, 1922, on No. A3508, coupled with "Unexpectedly," a number that Perry Bradford had written especially for Williams. The supplement held forth as follows concerning the Bernard song side:

"Brother Low Down" was a colored preacher down in New Orleans. He was anxious to save souls—for a money consideration. His text was—"If you want to keep from sin, drop your little nickels in and help poor 'Brother Low Down.'"

Of all the major recording companies, Columbia proved the hardest nut for Al Bernard to crack. His name was not seen in a Columbia list until this same February, 1922, supplement, when he joined Vernon Dalhart, who had not then begun his "country music" career, in singing one of the "mammy" songs written by the hundreds in the early 1920's. It was called "I Want My Mammy" and Dalhart's name was placed before Bernard's. Oddly, Columbia described the record as a "tenor and baritone duet," apparently assigning the baritone role to Bernard. Their teamwork had rather distinguished company on the disc's other side, for it contained "Edwin Dale" singing "That's How I Believe in You." "Dale" was Charles Hackett, Metropolitan Opera tenor. (While I have Hackett in mind, I wonder who was "William Morgan" who joined "Dale" in a duet listed in the January, 1922, Columbia supplement—an Irish dialect number called "Maggie Maguire" and written by Harry Von Tilzer. It was not one of Harry's successful songs. Since Columbia was in financial difficulties in 1922, and went bankrupt a year later, its staff of artists was limited, and Oscar Seagle seems to have been about the only baritone who was being used regularly. I have never heard the "Maggie Maguire" disc, but I'm guessing that Seagle joined Hackett in singing it. Hackett had made some opera duets with Riccardo Stracciari, the fabulous Italian baritone, but I strongly doubt that the latter luminary lowered his sights down enough to sing "Maggie Maguire." Having never heard the record, I can pass no aural judgment as to the baritone singer's identity.)

Al Bernard was given no special "send off" in the brief description of his duet with Dalhart, and there was no mention of this being his first Columbia appearance. The supplement said:

"No, this isn't just another 'Mammy' song—it's a beautiful new lyric written around a theme deserving of the best and sweetest there is in musical expression. Dalhart and Bernard bring out, with a depth of feeling and a wealth of harmony, the words of this melodious piece."

(Returning to the "Maggie Maguire" matter, I have just noticed that George Reardon, the baritone of the Criterion Quartet, did some duet work with "Dale" under his real name, so it is quite possible that he was "William Morgan" of the dialect song.)

(To be continued next month)

And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not love, I am nothing.

—Apostle Paul (Corinthians 13:2)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

AL BERNARD

PART VI
By JIM WALSH

More than a year elapsed after Bernard's inconspicuous beginning before he was again heard on Columbia discs, but at some time in 1923, he recorded "Parson Jenks," another song about a "street corner" black preacher, which was combined on A3918 with "Sweet Mama, Tree Top Tall," sung by the famous minstrel performer, "Lasses' White, its composer, with whom that song will always be identified. Bernard was also featured in No. A3871, a two-sided offering by the Lasses White Minstrels coupling a "Plantation Scene" and a "Levee Scene." After electrical recording took over in 1925, he sang "Pretty Puppy," on No. 452D, combined with "Ev'ry Sunday Afternoon," by the Shannon Four. On No. 470D he presented his own song, "Old Uncle Bill," with a German dialect frivolity, "Dot's Vot Looie Uses," by Art Lennick, for its companion. Other numbers followed and established Al Bernard as a popular Columbia artist for the first few years of the electrical recording period.

But back to his Edison activities. Bernard's Columbia duet with Dalhart must have been made about the same time as the one they did for Edison. These are the only two records I know of in which this pair of tenors sang together. Unlike Columbia, Edison placed Dalhart's name after Bernard's. Their song was a lively thing called "I've Got My Habits On," about a black woman who delighted to strut on the ballroom floor. Isabelle Patricola made a good record of this ditty for Victor, but it is not so attractive to my ears as the tenor duet. Bernard and Kamplain achieved their one Edison example of recorded duet work on November 25, 1921.

Within the next few months there followed three duets with Frank Kamplain: "You've Had Your Day," which was not issued either on cylinder or disc; "Tyrol," which went into the list of 300 best sellers; and the several times mentioned "Pretty Little Honey Lou," in which his brother shared composer credit by courtesy of Al's good heart. This period also included two solos: "Broken Hearted Blues" and "I'm Gonna Buy a One-Way Ticket to a Little One-Horse Town." The latter is one of the few Edison records I can recall in which the comedian had the assistance of a male chorus. Another is "What Has Become of Hinky Dinky Parley Voo?" This was recorded in 1924.

Then came the next of the dwindling series of Bernard and Hare duets:

V. "Hurry Along, Liza, With Me"

The Edison National Historic Site has provided me with facsimile copies of handwritten lists of all Al Bernard records, but recording dates are omitted for some of the titles of the 1922, period, and internal evidence suggests others may be inaccurate.

RISING STAR.—Al Bernard, a newcomer, was included in photos of a group of established recording artists, on this page from the Aeolian-Vocalion supplement for March, 1920.

At some time during that year, either shortly before or after Bernard and Hare recorded "Hurry Along, Liza, With Me," which will shortly be up for "analysis," they also sang a Bernard composition called "The Picnic" in the Edison files, but which was known as "Picnic Time" when they recorded it for Brunswick.

The Diamond Disc version became the only Bernard-Hare duet I know of to be rejected by Thomas A. Edison. A slightly blurred note concerning the record exists in his handwriting. It is dated August 1, 1922, but I am not certain whether this refers to when the record was made or to when "The Old Man" wrote the note. After having previously permitted all the duets we have discussed to be issued, he wrote unfavorably of "The Picnic":

"Rejected. Don't want singing set to funny talk when singing is not melodious and with proper singg(?) like Collins and Harlan."

I am not sure of the word after which I have placed a question mark. It looks like "singg" and perhaps was intended for "singing," although that had already been used a little earlier in the sentence. It appears Mr. Edison was saying that Bernard and Hare did not sing melodiously, like Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan, in their duets, and that he didn't want singing with funny words unless the melody element was there. The pair's singing in the "Picnic" record, however, judging by the Brunswick version, was as harmonious as in any of their earlier Edison records, so if this one was banned by Edisonian edict, why had he let the others go on to wide popularity?

Mr. Edison's surviving handwritten comments on Al Bernard's work all seem to be unfavorable, but that surely was not his over-all attitude toward the comedian whom, according to the "New York Times", he presented with his autographed photo. Under date of January 11, 1924, the inventor, who was then 77, wrote concerning a rendition of Bernard's comic song, "De Ducks Done Got Me," which had been submitted for his approval: "Bernard very weak. No. Edison." I have never heard a record on which Bernard's voice was weak, but "The Old Man's" hearing undoubtedly was. I wonder if he could hear the ukulele accompaniment by Frank Ferara?

Then, on July 22, 1924, Mr. Edison tested some unidentified selection that had been recorded by Bernard and Russel Robinson, but without reaching an absolute decision. With a casual disregard for good English, he wrote:

"Don't seem there was anything funny in this. Let Walsh decide. I don't hear all the words. E."

The Walsh referred to was not the author of Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists, but Arthur L. Walsh, a vice president of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., who was then choosing music to be recorded and supervising the company's record-making activities. Apparently, in view of the old gentleman's obvious lack of enthusiasm, he decided against issuing the tested disc, for no Bernard-Robinson duets ever made their way into the Edison catalog. Mr. Edison's hearing began to fail so badly about this time that he had to give up passing judgment on records, and Walsh took over that responsibility. One result of this was that the accompaniments were improved, for Art Walsh, who was later to be a Senator from New Jersey, was himself a musician and did not hold with his employer's belief that there should be just enough accompaniment to support the singer's voice, and that the orchestra should be almost inaudible while the record was played.

Because Bernard and Hare recorded "Picnic Time" for Edison, even though it never reached dealers' stocks. I think its dialog, as given on the Brunswick record, belongs here, so shall quote it. You will note that in such things as the reference to a "marble orchard," they repeat lines that had already been used in some of their Edison recordings.

RUSTIC CHARACTER IMPERSONATOR.—Cherubic faced BYRON G. HARLAN, foremost singer of "rube" songs in the early days of the phonograph, made an Emerson record of Al Bernard's amusing "That's the Feller." (Photo from L. and D. McNeill.)

Notwithstanding Mister Edison's thumbs down, the "Picnic" song is a laughable piece of nonsense, not erring on the side of delicacy of sentiment. The couple are still the same blustering, but essentially timid, deep-voiced male braggart, and his shrill toned beloved with a comparable taste for threats of bloodletting. They begin, however, in a more amiable mood than usual as he portrays the delights of the coming outdoor event.

"Picnic Time" must have been suggested by its predecessor, "You're My Gal," which also has such a gathering for its theme. The hero, "Henry"—presumably once more Henry Jones!—promises to dance with the dusky damsel, and asserts that he will "take along my razor and my gun," to which she replies, "A little bit of 'citement will be fun." Then they hold a conversation, peppered, as those in earlier sketches had been, by gibes at each other's oversized ears. The largest hearing organs in the world must have belonged to the men and women inhabiting the make-believe world of Bernard and Hare:

HE—Listen to me, woman. It's a good thing you sung back sweetly at me.

SHE—If not, what den?

HE—Why, I'd a-took my razor an' cut dem big black ears o' yours off.

SHE—Don't talk about my ears, coon, 'cause you have to tie a towel round yo' head to keep yo' ears from knockin' the biscuits off the table!

HE—Aw, go on, lampblack, an' sell yo' stove polish!

SHE—Meanin' I'm black, huh? Well, believe me, you is so black dat you is unhealthy!

HE—Keep on makin' remarks about my manly beauty an' you'll wake up in a marble orchard!

SHE—Marble orchard? Whut's dat?

HE—A marble orchard is a place where de roots of trees grows in yo' face.

SHE—Aw, go on down the street, small change!

HE—Come on, come on, woman! I'm tired o' standin' here, chewin' de rag with you! If you're going to de picnic, come on, let's go!

SHE—Well, coax me!

HE—Coax you! I bet I'll coax you with a brick! Me coax you! Why, woman, I got fair yellows, high browns an' chocolate fightin' to pay my board—an' den me coax you!

SHE—Well, dat may be true, but don't forget dat Mr. Webster terms me no a . . . woman entitled a 'ox blood beauty.'

HE—Oh, Lawd, help me to git right! After dat remark you takes the cake. Come on, sweet mama, an' lead sweet papa to dat sweet picnic!

Here the singing is resumed. The words where I have left a row of dots in the woman's final repartee are unintelligible—at least to me. I never have been able to understand them.

"The Picnic" was not one of Al and Ernie's more spectacular successes. So far as a casual survey reveals, Brunswick was the only company to publish a record of it, though perhaps one or two minor firms did.

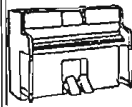

Judging by my own collection, Bernard and Hare's second duet specialty, "See Old Man Moon Smile," was recorded more extensively than any other, but "Henry Jones, Your Honey-moon is Over" was a good second. For the "man in the moon" song I have the Edison disc, which probably was the first version they made; the Blue Amberol cylinder; the Pathé sapphire and its dubbing on Actuelle lateral-cut; Brunswick; Aeolian-Vocalion; Emerson, Gennett, Grey Gull, and Paramount. The latter offered good value, for it had "Change Your Name, Malinda Lee" for the coupling. The Brunswick was one of the first issued records of that brand. Its number is 2004, and it has Bernard's solo of his song, "Sugar" on its reverse side.

I don't have the Okeh record of "See Old Man Moon Smile," but it also was coupled with a Bernard's

(Continued on page 120)

ELECTRIFY PLAYER PIANOS
PUMP ORGANS

YOU CAN QUICKLY END TIRESOME FOOT-PUMPING
With a Compact Low-Cost Lee Silent Suction Unit

EASY TO INSTALL
FULLY GUARANTEED
1000'S IN USE

LEE MUSIC MFG. CO.
62511, Venezia, Ave.
Venice, Calif. 90281

mb57p

MISCELLANEOUS MUSICAL ITEMS

PHOTOS! The three most remarkable group photos ever taken of early recording artists: Edison artists of 1900, Edison artists of 1914, and Victor Male Chorus of 1925 (reproduced in HOBBS January 1971, October 1970 and July 1970). One 8x10 enlargement for $2, two for $3.50, all 3 for $5. Other 8x10 photos of recording artists available at $2 each: Ade Jones, Billy Murray, Collins, and Harlan, Henry Burr, and many others. Write for list. — Quentin Riggs, 21171 Greenboro Lane, Huntington Beach, Calif. 92646 au34941

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

WANTED URGENTLY, violins, violas, cellos, parts, bows, cases, books and catalogs. Condition unimportant. KASH. — M. Pratt, 446 Plymouth St., Abington, Mass. 02351 n6297

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR SALE

MUSIC BOXES! Fantastic large illustrated catalogue of wholesale music boxes, circus organs, nickelodeons, photo-players, reproducing pianos, other automatic instruments. Plus books, recordings, musical gifts. $2 postpaid; $5 subscription ($12 value) to next 6 issues. Money-back guarantee if not delighted! — David Bowers, Box 1669D, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90210 ap126313

REED ORGANS, melodions, bought, sold repaired. Reeds tuned, revoiced replacements. — C. H. Gunzinger, Box 276, Williamsville, VT. 05362 o6675

FOR SALE DOLLS: china, bisque, mache and wax also doll parts. Appointment only. 812-883-2706. — Countryside Doll Hosp., Salem, Ind., R. 2, 47167 ja6657

Hodge-Podge Shop
Searsport, Me. 04974
Ph. 207-548-2509

Royal Doulton Serving Dish 11½" by 9¼"
The Leather Bofal Inn oak leaves acorns around border colorful $28.00
Imperial Stretch Glass Bowl 12" wide 3½" high Champagne color $38.00
Scones Brass 2 arm See Warman's 10th page
407 $32.00 pr.
Snuff Bottle silver Mongol head sides medallion with 7 blue stones in circle around coral stone 6 coral stones on domed top marked
China $68.00
Ostrich Feather Fan black 23" wide 15" high $22.00
Souvenir Spoons Actress Series head & signature on handle Have 3 Marion Davies, Norma Talmadge, Norma Shearer $12 ea.
Ivory hand carved 4" long pin 8 elephants graduated from ¼" to ½" high $18.00
Badge N.Y. Civil Defense enamelled red white & blue ¾" high $3.00

S.A.S.E. & Postage Insurance extra. aup

FARMSTEAD ANTIQUES

Marian K. Peduzzi
Kinderhook, N.Y. 12106

1. OIL ON CANVAS (9½x12½), unframed, snow covered Mts, lake in foreground, mostly blues & grays, signed Carol Rees $35.
2. CRACKLE GLASS pale amber Vase, 5½" t. Body is a ¼" rounded square w. dimpled sides, enameled seaweed & fish at each corner. Tapers to a 3" d neck. Very heavy glass. $30.
3. HP PORCELAIN Cups & Saucers. For him, an oversize cup with a game bird scene, bunched flowers on saucer, $10. For her, smaller cup, turned in rim, scattered flowers, $8. (both saucers have tiny rim chips)
4. SANDWICH FLINT: Rayed with Loop Border 8" plate, $21. Hairpin lace cup plate $19. Both mint.
5. TIN TOY: Chain 8" l. Trolley Car, brightly litho in VG cond. $12.
6. COLORED PATTERN GLASS: Sq. Hobnail salts, 1 blue, 1 green, ea. $7; vase-line Diam. Quilted finger bowl, $10; turq. Cable goblet (from the '30s) $8; amber Zipper Rib cov. Sugar Bowl, $9.
7. HAND WROUGHT IRON FEEL, 24" handle swells to a diamond shape w. hanging hole at end. Shovel part shows wear. $24.
8. DE VILBISS Powder Box, orchid cased glass. $15.
9. STERLING SOUVENIR SPOONS, demi size, gold washed bowls—Xmas '93 $8; New Year 1894, twisted handle with stork on end $10; Poughkeepsie (Bertha, May 27, '91 on back of handle) $9.
10. BARGAIN BOX: each $2. Wine bottles, found at bottom of Adirondack Mt. lake, off old steamboat landing. Dk. green & amber, ass't blob tops, high kickups, 3 part molds, etc. Have 12. auc

ELIZABETH HALL—ANTIQUES

210 Somerset Ave.

Princess Anne, Maryland 21853

By Mail and by Appointment

BRONZE FIGURAL LAMP—Two feet overall, unsigned, lovers standing beneath a tree, in the branches two lights complete with SIGNED QUEZAL gold iridescent shades. Polaroid available. Write.

DOZEN STERLING SILVER OYSTER FORKS—Single, small Old English initial engraved at base of tines (Q. G. or O?) These forks are old, dainty and perfect, $39.50

SINGLE OYSTER PLATE—Six natural looking oysters edged in deep pink on dark brown background, $12.50

CUT GLASS KNIFE REST—4½" ball ends w. star, notching on ends as well as on paneled center bar, no chips but a few tiny rough spots, $13.50

CINDERELLA SLIPPER—Porcelain, 6½", gold luster with a Watteau type scene on buckle, $16.00

DARK BLUE STAFFORDSHIRE—Plate, 10", Lakewood, N.J. large center scene, wide border made up of small scenes in same area back is pierced for hanging, $18.00

OPEN SALT and PEPPER SHAKER—Pierced Sterling with cobalt glass liners, sterling salt spoon included $19.50. I have two pairs at the above price per pair.

DIAMOND POINT WINE—Flint, mint condition, $20.00

Maryland residents please include 4% State tax and

FAVORITE PIONEER
RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

solo, "Chasin' the Blues." Okeh treated the duet in an unconventional way. It put Hare's name before Bernard's—something that seldom happened—and described the record as a "baritone duet," which it certainly wasn't. "Chasin' the Blues" is termed a "baritone solo." Anybody who called Al a baritone must have been tone-deaf.

The foregoing list includes virtually all record brands of any consequence in 1919-1920. Federal is missing, and it's possible that the duet may have been recorded for it, but I have no lists to check. Bernard and Hare, however, were never represented on the Indestructible cylinders which Federal issued. In 1920, Bernard made just two Indestructible solo records—"So Long, Oo Long" and "Swanee," and Hare's name never appeared in the company's lists. These were Al's only cylinder records, aside from his numerous Edison Blue Amberols. He came along too late to make two- or four-minute Edison wax cylinders.*

The song on the other side of "Picnic Time" was another Bernard-Hare duet, "Hurry Along, Liza, With Me." "Liza" was their next issued Diamond Disc duet, for Mr. Edison, who had rejected the picnic foolishness, let it get by. This, like many of his actions, was inexplicable, because one was as worthy of being placed on sale as the other.

The Edison "Liza" was handicapped by a weak coupling and did not sell so well as some of its forerunners. It was combined with Collins and Harlan's melodious (Mr. Edison's word) singing of "With His Umpah Umpah On the Umpah Isle," one of the many unsuccessful songs Harry Von Tilzer wrote in the 1920's, when his star was waning. It was another novelty number, like "Ump-Pah Pah," which depended for its humor on describing an unskilled player's performance on a slide trombone. Although a good comic song, it just didn't catch on.

"Liza," of course, being by Bernard and Hare, has some mirthful moments. The hero once more is named Henry, but this time he is Henry Green, not Jones. As the record begins he speaks:

"Well, suh, here I is and dere she is. I got a s'prise for her. It's a very important event. I suppose I should a-told her about it. Well, de easiest way is de sweetest way. I'll address her in my most melodious and pleasant manner."

He then sings, "How do you do dis mornin', Liza Johnson?" and she

HORSE SENSE

*A horse can't pull while kicking.
This fact I merely mention
And he can't kick while pulling.
Which is my chief contention.
Let's imitate the good old horse
And lead a life that's fitting
Just pull an honest load, and then There'll be no time for kicking.*

—Author Unknown

"BLUES" WRITER.—Apparently the first Edison vocal recording of a "Blues" song was made not by Al Bernard, but by Vernon Dalhart. Words of the song, "The Alcoholic Blues," were written by Edward Laska (above). Laska sent this photograph to Jim Walsh in April, 1954. It is inscribed, "To Jim Walsh, the Boswell of American Songs, Song Writers and Singers, from Ed Laska." "Ed" is in musical notation.

replies, "I'm feelin' middlin' tol'able, Mister Green." Still singing he informs her that he is going to take her down to "Parson Lee's" with matrimonial intent. Her attitude is receptive; in fact, this has the "friendliest" dialog of any Bernard and Hare record up to that time. He tells her to hurry into the house and get ready to go to the minister's, and after the first refrain is concluded, they have the following discussion:

SHE—Listen, Henry, befo' I hurries into de house to dress I want to ask you a question.

HE—Well, what is de question, gal?

SHE—If I go down to Parson Lee's with ya, are you goin' to take me down to Florida on my honeymoon?

HE—Why, certainly I is, honey. But if it so happens dat I don't—

SHE—Yeah?

HE—I'll buy you a bottle of Florida water.

SHE—You will?

HE—I sho' will, honey.

SHE—Henry, you is so good to me!

HE—Well, now, hurry up, gal, 'cause it's gittin' late, an' I want you to go upstairs an' bedeck yo'self in yo' finest of finery.

SHE—Well, Henry, what might dat be?

HE—How 'bout puttin' on dat orchard colored organdy gown?

SHE—Orchard? Oh, orchid! Dat's jes' what I was goin' to advocate. I was afraid, dough, you was goin' to ask me to wear my cerise grenadine.

HE—No, gal, I think you looks modistey(?) in de orchard—I means, orchid! (They laugh.) How about ya, gal? Is ya ready?

SHE—Uh hch.

They then sing the second chorus and all is harmony.

Frankly, I am baffled by the word that I have written as "modistey" followed by a question mark. As best I can make out, it sounds like "mo'dicty," or "mo'disty," and I can't imagine what it means if that is what it is. I played both the Edison and Brunswick records and they were equally unintelligible. The reference to the "orchard" colored gown reminds me of the times, "Marble Orchards" had been mentioned in other Bernard and Hare specialties.

(To be continued)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

AL BERNARD

PART VII
By JIM WALSH

I. "Samuel Johnson, Get Thee Gone"

As I peg away from month to month, telling the world—or at least that part of the globe which reads HOBBIES—all I know about Al Bernard, I occasionally find myself learning something new relating to the song writer, comedian, singer and actor.

This morning, Monday, December 10, 1973, as I was about to begin writing this installment, I received a letter from Quentin Riggs, who has supplied some of the photographs to illustrate the Bernard series. It said:

"Glad to hear the Al Bernard article is coming along so well. I have intended to ask you if you are familiar with a song called 'A Basso Profundo Am I', which was written by Al Bernard and George Bolstord and published in 1932. I have never heard it sung and have never heard of a record of it, but I picked up the sheet music years ago and have thought that it's really a delightful song. The singer supposedly has had a lifelong ambition to become a tenor, to be able to sing love songs and to hit high Cs. Unfortunately, his voice became a bass and the only kind of songs he can sing are things like 'Down Deep Within the Cellar,' 'The Big Bass Viol' and 'Davy Jones' Locker.' The music is excellent and the words are very clever."

So far as I can recall, I had not before heard of this song and, like my California friend, have never seen it listed in a record catalog. When it came out in 1932, record sales were at their lowest ebb, and those companies that had remained in business were issuing little popular music except dance tunes. It's odd that Bernard, himself a tenor, should write a song with a basso profundo range, just as it was strange—I mentioned this months ago—that he composed a number without words, "Pick That Bass," when he played no instrument and could not read music. This basso song sounds like something that would have been ideal for his old partner, Ernest Hare, and I wonder if he was thinking of Ernie when he wrote the words. Perhaps he was; or, since he did some recording work with Wilfred Glenn, he may have had Glenn in mind. It is something I should like to hear.

During this series it has been brought out repeatedly how often Ernest Hare played the part of "Henry Jones," the blustering swain who has so much trouble in winning the affections of his lady love. It has just occurred to me that he was occasionally called "Henry Jones" on off brand records. I have a Regal (made from an Emerson master) on which he and Bernard sing "I've Got the Wonder Where He Went and When He's Coming Back Blues" with their names appearing on the label as "Skeeter" Sims and Henry Jones. They also recorded this song, under their own names, for Brunswick.

Another oddity of the late 1922, or early 1923, period is a Banner record on which Bernard and Hare sing "Aggravatin' Papa," the lively, irresistibly catchy music of which was by their old friend, J. Russel Robinson, under the names of Bernard and Thomas. Hare was often called "Bob Thomas" on the lower priced, off-brand records which he made with Billy Jones, who, in turn, was usually disguised as "Billy West" when singing duets with Hare on such labels as Banner.

Still another 1923, novelty was a duet version by Bernard and Arthur Fields of "Maggie! Yes, Ma'am (Come Right Upstairs)" with which Aileen Stanley and Billy Murray made a memorable hit on Victor. I have the Bernard and Fields performance on a Pathé Actuelle disc as well as on a Regal. I believe that in those days the Emerson company obtained some of its master records from Pathé, and suspect this is one. I have not, however, played the Actuelle and Regal copies to ascertain if they are identical.

"COVER BOY." Al Bernard's photo, identifying him as a member of the Record Boys, appeared on the front of the Edison record supplement, for April, 1926, when his Diamond Disc of "Hot Coffee" was listed.

Yet another 1923, Al Bernard record worthy of special mention is his Cameo of Wendell Hall's big hit, "It Ain't Gonna Rain No Mo'," but that will come later. Mention, however, of the "rain" song, which became a nation-wide epidemic late in 1923, brings us to the next Edison Diamond Disc duet by Al Bernard and Ernest Hare.

I have in mind one of the last, and best of the lot, "Samuel Johnson, Get Thee Gone From Here," which was announced in December, 1923, as No. 51261, and coupled with "It Ain't Gonna Rain No Mo'," sung by Hall himself. Wendell also recorded his sensational, but not really original, hit for Gennett about October 1, 1923, and for Victor on October 12. The Edison obviously belongs to the same period. In it, Hall combined parts of both "It Ain't Gonna Rain" and his "Red-Headed Music Maker," with rather unsatisfactory results. The tune of "It Ain't Gonna Rain No Mo'" is one of considerable antiquity. My father told me it was a country tune when he was a teen-age boy and that he had often square danced to the music of "It Ain't Gonna Rain No Mo.'" Hall took the old fiddlin' number, gave it new and amusing words, and had himself a hit. I have recently learned that Hall died in 1969 while living in Fairhope, Alabama.

In the following month, January, 1924, the last Bernard and Hare duet on Edison records appeared. It also was one of the best — No. 51271, "Cindy, It Am Weddin' Time" — which happens to be "Jack" Via's favorite of the lot. Actually, "Cindy" was made first, but was issued a month later than "Samuel Johnson." "Cindy's" serial number was 9203, and "Samuel's," 9208, indicating they may have been made on the same day, or with perhaps a day or two in between. I have been unable to find the recording date, in the Edison list. The supplement in which "Cindy" was listed contains a picture of Hare, wearing a black felt hat, about to kick a football, which Bernard, sporting a derby, is putting into place. After these last performances with his old friend Al, Hare must have been too busy making records, singing on radio and making personal appearances with Billy Jones to do any more recorded blackface work. Jones and Hare were for several years easily the most popular radio feature.

There is ambiguity concerning the marital status of the male and female protagonists in "Samuel Johnson." Although this is the name of the nominal "hero," he addresses the ram-paging object of his affections as "Miss Tildy Brown." The question then arises: Is he calling his wedded wife by her maiden name or are they cohabitating without the formality of marriage? No answer is forthcoming, but Tildy makes it clear that she craves no more of Samuel's society. (Just as his last name is Johnson, so was "Liza Johnson" the heroine of "Hurry Along, Liza, With Me.") As the song begins they alternate in singing:

"SHE—Wake up, you good-for-nothin' an' start travelin'!"

HE—Who is you talkin' to, Miss Tildy Brown?

SHE—You know right well to whom I'm talkin', egghead!

HE—Woman, you don't mean you've turned me down?"

She retorts, "Yo sho' have got my meanin' proper, lampblack!" and reminds him: "You know I handles razors an' I handles them with class, an', boy, I sho' cuts long an' deep when'er I make a pass!" He tries to remonstrate, but she interrupts, saying: "When you're gone I'll shed no tear, so, Samuel Johnson, get thee gone from here!"

Perhaps you have observed that Tildy refers to Samuel as "egghead." This reminds me of an amusing incident in my own life that I had forgotten until I began leafing through a mass of Al Bernard information. In its issue of October 8, 1956, "Newsweek" published a long article about "eggheads," and credited John Alsop with originating the term in 1952, to describe "superficial intellectuals, the kind who deserted General Eisenhower for Adlai Stevenson."

Upon reading a follow-up reference to that article in "Newsweek" for May 12, 1958, I was moved to write a letter saying that "egghead" was in use much earlier than 1952, for it is heard as a derogatory term in the record now under discussion. The letter was published with a heading, "The First Egghead?" in June 9 "Newsweek".

"I have a 1923 Edison Diamond Disk (sic) featuring two comedians, Al Bernard and Ernest Hare. On it, Hare asks: 'Who is you talkin' to, Miss Tildy Brown?' Bernard replies: 'You know right well... Egghead!' In justice to John Alsop, who is credited with originating that term... It must be admitted that 'Miss Tildy Brown' doesn't use 'Egghead' to her husband as a token of intellectual superiority, pseudo or genuine. On the contrary, he is plumb dumb. —JIM WALSH, Vinton, Va."

After the first refrain has been sung, the orchestra plays a few bars of an appropriate "theme song," Ed Rose and Ted Snyder's 1905 masterpiece, "Nothin' From Nothin' Leaves You," and then the customary dialogue, full of high-sounding bluster and threats, is heard:

HE—Say, woman, after dat gob o' talk I got a good mind to muss you up with dis yere coat scuttie!

SHE—Go ahead! Who's holdin' you back?

HE—You think I'm skeered o' yo' razor, don'tcha?

SHE—I ain't talkin'.

HE—Now, don't talk 'cause if I ever gits my Smith 'n' Eastern blood up, you hyena-faced baboon, you gonna have the buzzards waitin' fer you out on yo' front porch!

SHE—Keep on talkin' an' the next thing you'll be runnin', an', man, I claim dat I'll run you till you git so thin you'll be able to sit on a dime an' show eight cents change!

HE—Woman, in a few minutes I'm gonna git up outa dis yere rockin' chair an' hit you so hard.

SHE—You is?

HE—Yes, I is, an' if you don't fall after I does hitcha, I'm gonna walk all aroun' you to see what's holdin' you up.

SHE—Yeah, an' be careful where you look, 'cause, man, I carries undertaker, hearke an' coffin right heah in dis meat chopper!

HE—Oh, Lord! Say, gal, can't we patch dis thing up?

FUN-LOVING TRIO. Pictures of the group known as "The Record Boys" are hard to find. Here is one taken from a 1927 "Radio Program Weekly." The artists are, left to right: Al Bernard, comedian; Frank Kamplain, yodeler, and Sammy Stept, pianist-composer.

SHE—Patch! You talk 'bout patchin'! Why, man, I done patch my clo'es so much since I been with you till folks think I'm a crazy quilt!

HE—Aw, honey, don't take on so!

SHE—Don't take on so! Dey gonna take you on outa here in a minute! An', as I said befo'—

They sing the second refrain, and the song ends without reconciliation and still on a note of hostility, even though Samuel expresses his willingness to "work hard for you, out in de cold, cold snow."

II. "Cindy, It Am Weddin' Time"

The mood of the final Bernard and Hare duet on Edison records, and perhaps their last for any company, "Cindy, It Am Weddin' Time," is much more amiable. It ends with marriage seemingly just ahead. The first stanza and refrain are devoted to a courtship with affection expressed on both sides. Then comes this dialog:

HE—Say, Cindy, does you like hot cawn on de cob?

SHE—I adores it!

HE—Well, does you like fried spring chicken with country gravy?

SHE—Co'se I does, fool!

HE—An' does you like big fat red tomatoes an' cucumbers with new potatoes, an' on de side some candied yams what am?

SHE—Boy, is you tryin' to tantalize my stummick?

HE—No, gal, I wuz just tryin' somethin'.

SHE—Well, do you have to git me hungry to try it?

HE—No, no! An' I wants to ax you one mo'.

Does you like po'kechops?

SHE—Hyah! hyah! hyah! Stop dat talk!

You'll have me in my kitchen in a minute!

HE—Why?

SHE—'Cause all dat sounds so good!

HE—Well, I'm glad o' dat, 'cause I done bought me a little piece of land with all dat on it.

SHE—Henry, is you fabricatin'?

HE—Gal, you knows right well I wouldn't fabricate to you.

SHE—No tellin' what a man might do! But, say, Henry, why you tellin' me all dis?

HE—'Cause it's all for you, Cindy!

SHE—For me? Well, slap me down, den pick me up! Come hyah, boy, an' hug an' kiss yo' baby! An', say, son, sing me some mo' about Cindy!

HE—Aw right!

Henry and Cindy then join most harmoniously in singing the final refrain. Incidentally, when I heard the deep-voiced swain called "Henry" I thought that "Henry Jones" must be making another of his many appearances, but this belief was dispelled at the end when Cindy warned him that there must be "no more hangin' round the town with sweet Henry Jones." Since the suitor is Henry, this bringing in another man of the same first name is confusing and, inasmuch as Cindy so obviously has a low opinion of the absent Mr. Jones, "sweet" is a bad descriptive word to apply to him.

The thought that two Henrys were confusing must have occurred to Bernard after the Edison record had become popular (it was included in a supplemental list to the original 300 "best sellers"), for in versions made later for other companies the name was changed. On Pathé Actuelle No. 021001 it becomes "sweet Billy Jones." I imagine Bernard and Hare had a good laugh at the thought of thus slandering Ernie's other recording and radio partner—the tenor half of the "Happiness Boys." And Billy Jones probably also was delighted if he heard the disc.

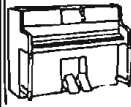

On the reverse of this Actuelle disc, which calls the artists Jack Clare and Frank Mann, Bernard and Arthur Fields sing "Maggie! Yes, Ma'am (Come Right Upstairs)" which I mentioned in a preceding paragraph. Upon playing it and the Regal record of "Maggie," also by Bernard and Fields, they seem to be from the same original recording. In both, Fields begins by singing, "Al, I've Got a Great Idea."

A Vocalian record of "Cindy," dating from the early electric period, is by Al Bernard and "Charles Aubrey" (Wilfred Glenn), with piano accompaniment by Sammy Stept, which shows that it was made in the last half of the 1920's, when Bernard and Stept were members of the Record Boys. It has "Samuel Johnson," by the same performers, for its coupling. In this "Cindy," too, the absent Mr. Jones, whose ears must have burned because of the talk about him, is "sweet Billy."

(Continued on page 117)

ELECTRIFY PLAYER PIANOS
PUMP ORGANS

YOU CAN QUICKLY END TIRESOME FOOT-PUMPING
With a Compact Low-Cost Lee Silent Suction Unit

EASY TO INSTALL
FULLY GUARANTEED
1000'S IN USE

Write to
LEE MUSIC MFG. CO.
425H, Venezia, Ave.
Venice, Calif. 90291

mh57p

MISCELLANEOUS MUSICAL ITEMS

PHOTOS! The three most remarkable group photos ever taken of early recording artists: Edison artists of 1900, Edison artists of 1914, and Victor Male Chorus of 1925 (reproduced in HOBBIES January 1971, October 1970 and July 1970). One 8x10 enlargement for $2, two for $3.50, all 3 for $5. Other 8x10 photos of recording artists available at $2 each: Ada Jones, Billy Murray, Collins, and Harlan, Henry Burr, and many others. Write for list. — Quentin Riggs, 21171 Greenboro Lane, Huntington Beach, Calif. 92644 n1494

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

WANTED URGENTLY, violins, violas, cellos, parts, bows, cases, books and catalogs. Condition unimportant. KASH. — M. Pratt, 446 Plymouth St., Abington, Mass. 02351 n5297

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR SALE

MELODEON - McLeod, Wood & Co., Guelph, Ont. Beautiful rosewood; excellent condition; $450; photo 25c. — John Ripley, 1205 West 29, Topeka, Kans. 66611 s1891

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

On the other hand, an Okeh electrically recorded disc, No. 41388, which couples "Cindy" and "Henry Jones" and is by Bernard and a well-known minstrel comedian, Billy Beard, changes the name to "Jonathan Jones." This record came out in the spring of 1930. In January, 1929, Bernard and Beard, who died November 15, 1954, in Atlanta, Ga., aged 74, occupied both sides of Okeh record No. 41140, with two comic talking skits, "Black Opinions" and "Fowl Talk." They received this brief review in the "Phonograph Monthly Review".

"Beard and Bernard are a long way behind the Two Black Crows, but there are several amusing moments in their 'Black Opinions' and 'Fowl Talk.'"

There is no use of making a scene 45 years after this verdict was published, but I vehemently dissent from it. However, as I have already made clear, I never have liked the Two Black Crows. I couldn't find a review of "Cindy" and "Henry Jones."

Before dismissing the Bernard and Hare partnership and passing on to other phases of "The Boy From Dixie's" career, I think it may be well to mention a few more records they did for companies other than Edison's.

One, made in 1922, combines two Bernard songs, "I'm a Demon On My Old Jew's Harp" and "Lindy Lou." The first number introduces what purports to be a duet between a Jew's harp and a flute, but the flute sounds to me more like someone whistling. There is no doubt about the authentic quality of the harp.

Another Brunswick, which I have not heard, is No. 2347, coupling "I'm Done, Done, Done With You" and "Sweet Mandy." Both sides were written by Al. Some years later "Sweet Mandy" made another appearance on a Domino record, No. 424-A, which has a Negro woman, Bessie Williams, singing "Deep River Blues," for its mating. I bought a second-hand copy of this disc many years ago and recently found it in an album of Bernard and Hare duets. I doubt that I had played it during the entire 33 years I have been writing "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists," but when I put it on the turntable it soon became obvious that neither Bernard nor Hare is in this recording, whose performers are termed on the label, "Lucy Johnson and Dixie Gray." "Dixie Gray," whoever he was, had a tenor voice and was a poor singer. His enunciation was indistinct and his phrasing bad. I can't decide whether "Lucy Johnson" was a woman or a man speaking and singing falsetto. Both "Lucy" and "Dixie," I think, were black. The label credits Bernard as the song's composer. This record is all singing with no comic value.

I neglected to mention when discussing the Edison record of "Cindy" that its coupling was "The 31st Street Blues," written by Harry Giese and Wendell Hall, and sung by Bernard and his yodeling accomplice, Frank Kamplain. As you may remember, "Samuel Johnson," which came out a month before "Cindy," had Hall singing "It Ain't Gonna Rain No Mo'" for its companion. I recall being in a second-hand store in Jonesboro, Tenn., about 35 years ago, looking at some old records, when I entered into conversation with an elderly man.

"Want to know the prettiest record I ever heard?" he asked me. "I'll tell you. It was on one of them thick Edison records and it was a piece called 'The Thirty-First Street Blues' by this here Al Bernard and a feller that yodeled. Prettiest piece I ever heard. But I always thought Edison made more pretty records than anybody else and had the best singers." This was an unsophisticated view, but not an uncommon one.

III. Othe Edison Records by Bernard
Something I haven't yet mentioned about the "Cindy" record now occurs to me. In the first half of the song these lines occur:

"All de little birdies am a-sayin' It's spring.
An' Pahnson Jones done axed me if I've bought the ring."

This adds more confusion and makes me wonder if the frowned-upon Henry Jones has turned parson, but still retains his shiftless ways.

Some back-tracking is now in order, to mention a few Bernard records made between "Hurry Along, Liza" and "Cindy." One was a solo, "At the Honky Tonk Steppers' Ball," which is undated on my list provided by the Edison National Historic Site, but apparently was made in the autumn of 1922. It remained unissued as either a cylinder or a disc. Then came "When the Moon is Shinin' Down in Alabam'," words by Bernard and music by Nat Vincent, and sung by Al with yodel embellishments from Frank Kamplain. It was coupled with "Down Old Virginia Way," by Walter Scanlan and Helen Clark, and was not one of the better sellers.

"The Boy From Dixie," however, soon had two more that hit the Edison "big time." One was a partly sung and partly spoken humorous number with touches of pathos, "My Dawg," the composition of which was credited on the label to Bert Murphy, who is somebody about whom I know nothing. (I wonder if this could be a misprint for Bert Morphy, an old-time comedian who made a few records in the phonograph's early days. I also wonder if the words may have been by Bernard.) The Bernard side was combined with "Down By the Old Apple Tree," a popular comic song by Billy Jones and Ernie Hare, who somehow just can't be kept out of this narrative, and was included in a supplement list of "best sellers" after the original grouping of 300 was compiled.

When Bernard came to the John Bieling Day party held in September, 1948, "My Dawg" was one of the numbers with which he entertained his admirers. Although he was not a well man—in fact, he was suffering considerable pain—he gave an excellent account of himself, and his voice and style were exactly like what they had been on the Diamond Disc made more than a quarter of a century before.

Next was another Bernard-Kamplain duet, "O-Le-O-Lady," which became one side of a highly unlikely coupling, with—of all things!—Walter Scanlan and a chorus singing "The Wearing of the Green" for its companion. Despite the obvious incongruity of titles, this too was added to the supplementary steady seller list.

Bernard's character delineation of a Louisiana "bad guy," "Stavin' Change (The Meanest Man in New Orleans)" took its place in the chronological order and was mated with an oddity—a comic blackface dialect talking sketch with no singing, "From De Old Town (the Meeting of Lincoln and Glasco)" by Billy Jones and—again!—Mr. Hare. I can't recall Billy and Ernie having made any other all-talking record in Negro vernacular. It was the sort of thing that might have been expected from Billy Golden and Joe Hughes, but not from the Jones-Hare partnership.

Another singing and yodeling duet, "When Dixie Stars Are Playing Peek-a-Boo," had an exceptionally pretty tune and was the joint handiwork of Bernard and J. Russel Robinson, who was soon to join Al in teamwork under the name of "The Dixie Stars." It was combined with a resurrected comic song that had been popular twelve years earlier, "Oh You Circus Day," but called "Circus Days" on the record label. Why it was thought that there would be a demand for this long defunct song by Edith Maida Lessing and Jimmie V. Monaco is hard to imagine. The Edison sales gaugers apparently thought it would have a limited circulation, for it was one of those "red star" discs that dealers were not required to keep in stock but could obtain on "special order." Nevertheless, the combination went so well that it too appeared in the supplementary "best seller" compilation. Which probably just goes to show there was no way of telling what records Edison enthusiasts would choose to fancy. "Dixie Stars,"

(Continued on page 124)

AL IN BLACKFACE. This photo reproduced from the November, 1927, Edison record supplement, shows Al Bernard "blackened up" for minstrel show work. He and Ernest Hare are said to have used this type of make-up before recording their comic specialties.

HAGAN'S CLOCK MANOR
Horological Collection Catalogue

Limited Edition autographed and numbered, 8½" x 11½", 72 pages, over 150 photos of clocks identified and dated. A valuable reference book for all collectors and dealers.

Paper Bound - $5

HAGAN'S CLOCK MANOR
6930 E. Girard Ave. #408
Denver, Colo. 80222 tfx

BUILD THESE BEAUTIFUL CLOCKS

Now at big savings! Send just $1 for plans & instructions to build choice of: (A) Grandfather (B) Banjo (C) Steeple (D) Grandmother—plus information-packed catalog of movements, dials, parts & kits to build these & 16 other fine clocks. All 4 plans—$3.50. Catalog alone—25c.

MASON & SULLIVAN
Dept. HOB, Osterville, MA 02655
IN CANADA: COLONIAL TIMES
Waterloo, Ontario nu57c

FOR SALE

ANTIQUE & RR WATCHES. 23-JEWEL BUNN SPECIAL: VERITAS ELGIN RR WATCH: 23 JEWEL BALL SPECIAL RR. MINUTE REPEATER. ¼ HOUR REPEATER. OTHER WATCHES FROM $25.00 & UP. BARNEY JOSEPH PERSONALLY INVITES YOU TO COME IN AND BROWSE AROUND AT NO OBLIGATION.

JOSEPH BROS.

5 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.
312—ST 2-2774 tfe

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 117)

however, was, as I have indicated, an unusually pretty number, and "Circus Days," as sung by "Robert White" (Vernon Dalhart) with animal imitation by Edward Meeker, was genuinely amusing; so there was a reason for the popularity of the disc.

And now it has occurred to me for the first time that Bernard and Robinson must have taken their team name, "The Dixie Stars," from the song on which they collaborated. It was one of their numbers that was extensively recorded by dance orchestras.

IV. Bernard's Later Edison Period

Al Bernard always had a keen scent for profitable trends in vernacular music; consequently, when Wendell Hall's "It Ain't Gonna Rain No Mo'" set the nation to singing, whistling, and dancing toward the fag-end of 1923, Al decided to get into the pseudo-country music act. He cultivated this remunerative field of popular melody to some extent during the remainder of his career.

To begin with, he himself made a record of "It Ain't Gonna Rain No Mo'" for the cheap Cameo label, which sold for 35 cents as compared to 75 cents for standard lateral-cut discs like Victor, Columbia and Brunswick and $1 for Edison. It was a huge seller, even though the makers, sure of its appeal, crippled it with a "dog" for a coupling — something called "Daddy, Change Your Mind," wailed by a black blues singer, Blanche Klaise. An advertisement published by a Roanoke, Va., Victor dealer in the spring of 1924 said Hall's Victor version had already sold the seemingly incredible total of more than two million copies, but nowadays Bernard's Cameo seems to turn up more often in second-hand stores than the historic Hall disc. Many listeners prefer Bernard's singing of the rain song to Hall's because Al's style is so rhythmic you almost feel that he is dancing as he lfts away to a ukulele accompaniment by Frank Ferrara, with whom he was to have a considerable recording association for the next few years. Hall's rendition, by way of contrast, is deliberate and slow-paced, but with strong emphasis upon humorous effect.

Bernard and Ferrara also sang and played "Ain't Gonna Rain No Mo'" on Paramount No. 5102. The reverse side was one of Al's few experiments with Italian dialect, "Me No Speak-a Good English," likewise with Ferrara's accompaniment.

Considering the great popularity of "It Ain't Gonna Rain No Mo'" it is interesting to look down the list of artists who recorded it. Hall, who made the Victor, Gennett and Edison versions, told me when I met him in Chicago in 1951, that he thought he sang it for four companies. He said he thought the fourth was Okeh. Possibly he did make a trial Okeh recording, but the published one was by Ernest Hare. Jones and Hare made it for Columbia. Brunswick missed the "gravy train" by not issuing a vocal record of the hit, but did provide a dance performance by Cal Fenton's Orchestra with singing interludes by Jones and Hare. Victor also offered a dance version by the International Novelty Orchestra with incidental singing by Billy Murray and Ed Smalle. No doubt other brands likewise offered "cover" renditions, but I don't know who made them except that Ben Selvin's Bar Harbor Society Orchestra played it in fox trot tempo for Vocalion.

When Hall wrote a second edition of his greatest success a year or so later he recorded it for Victor, and Jones and Hare followed suit for Edison. Most companies appear not to have made discs of the second version which had the same tune as the first but different words. After electrical recording came in, Victor of course had Hall remake his fabulous No. 19171.

Not only did Bernard record "It Ain't Gonna Rain No Mo'" for Cameo and Paramount, he also began to write songs in similar style. One which he turned out early in 1924, was "Twenty-Five Years From Now." It was labeled as the fruit of collaboration between him and Frank Ferrara, who provided the ukulele accompaniment, as he had on the Cameo "Rain No Mo'." Ferrara, although of Portuguese descent, was a native of Hawaii, who, according to old Edison record supplements, came to this country in 1900, and was the first person to introduce Hawaiian music to American listeners. He had a long and successful recording career with his wife, professionally known as Helen Louise, and after her death, with another Hawaiian guitar player, Anthony Franchini. He also managed the Waikiki Hawaiian Orchestra, which frequently played for Edison, and, all told, in various combinations, he must have taken part in thousands of records issued by practically every company. Among other things, he played the guitar accompaniment in Vernon Dalhart's Edison record of "The Wreck on the Southern Old 97," which led the way to Dalhart's stupendously successful rendition of the same hill-billy song for Victor.

In "Twenty-Five Years From Now," we find Al Bernard in the role of prophet, relating the changes that would have taken place by 1949—a year that now seems part of the remote past. Among other things he said there would be "nothin' but sky-writin'" and he foresaw the advent of "taxi aeroplanes"—a reference that I forgot to include in my article about aviation songs, published in this year's January and February HOBBIES. By virtue of hindsight, there is a touch of pathos in the concluding words of the song: "We'll help Gabriel blow his horn twenty-five years from now"—for 1949, the year of which he was singing, was also the one in which the then carefree comedian died.

(To Be Continued)

"PLATTERMATE."—William ("Wee Willie") Robyn was a popular tenor recording artist of the early 1920's. He sang "At the End of the Road" on the reverse side of one of Al Bernard's records of "Blue Eyed Sally." Today, the tenor is known as the Rev. William R. Rubin and is a cantor for a New York Jewish temple.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

AL BERNARD

PART VIII

By JIM WALSH

Bernard recorded "Twenty-Five Years From Now" for more than one company besides Edison. It was combined on the Diamond Disc with what I consider one of the cleverest and most genuinely amusing satiric comic songs ever written, even though it did not become a popular success—"Since Ma is Playing Mah Jongg," written by Billy Rose and Con Conrad to ridicule the mah jongg craze that swept fashionable circles during the early 1920's. The Edison record was by Jim Doherty. Among the amusing lines are: "Ma left dishes in the sink; pa went out and killed a Chink—Ma's playing mah jongg now." In the second stanza it is revealed that Ma's enthusiasm for things Chinese has become so intense that she is driving a laundry wagon. The final portion is perhaps the funniest of all in the way it introduces reminiscences of John Greenleaf Whittier's "Barbara Frietchie":

"General Stonewall Jackson learned this game somehow. 'He who touches yon gray head dies like a dog. Mah jongg!' he said. Ma's playing mah jongg now!"

This record also was not expected to have widespread appeal, for its label was provided with that red star, which (supposedly) meant that the dealer wouldn't stock it but would have a copy "specially made at the factory" for any customer who wanted one. This, as I have previously pointed out in HOBBIES, was sheer nonsense, for the "custom built" red-starred records were not ordered by local dealers from the factory, but were kept in stock by jobbers, and most retailers also stocked them as they would any other Edison discs.

A few months later, Alfred A. Bernard again paraded his gifts of prophecy with "In 1999," a cheerful ditty forecasting how things would be in another 25 years from this present time and half a century after Bernard's own death. He visualized that the end of this century would bring a woman president; the custom of drinking kerosene; rapid-fire divorces and a forecast that seems to be coming true, that women would "be wearing less and less." However, the added prediction that "for ten or twenty cents or less you can buy the wife a dress" does not appear likely to come to pass. Perhaps the most cheering prediction was that "they won't write any 'mammy songs' in 1999." The country then had been suffering from a tidal flood of mawkish ditties praising the "befo' de wah" Negro mammy and all of them patterned after Gus Kahn and Walter Donaldson's smash-hit, "My Mammy," which Al Jolson had led to a runaway success. For a time it seemed as if the "popular" sections of record lists for years to come would be devoted almost entirely to the threadbare "mammy" theme.

Mr. Ferara (pronounced "Fe-RAY-ra") was not Bernard's accomplice when "In 1999" was recorded. Instead, there was orchestral backing.

"In 1999," like "Twenty-Five Years From Now," sported one of the red stars denoting limited circulation. On its reverse side Billy Jones sang a number with considerable topical interest and one that would intrigue today's delvers into radio history—"Tune In On L-O-V-E." This opus by Leonard Whitcup contained many references to the amazing novelty of radio, and mentioned the two leading stations of half a century ago—KDKA and WEA.

Another 1924, Edison record by the inimitable Al was considerably removed from his usual vein, a lament for a well remembered unrefined song popular with American service men during World War I, "What Has Become of 'Hinky Dinky Parlay Voo'?" This was a laugh-provoking song splendidly sung by Bernard and a male chorus—one of the few records in which he had such help.

On May, 1925, after a rather long absence from the Edison studios, Al was back with another funny effusion that was different from his usual style, "The King Isn't King Any More." This was followed on September 18, with one of Al's own songs in mock hill-billy style, "Old Uncle Bill," which, as we saw in an earlier part of this series, he also recorded for Victor but without having the pleasure of seeing it issued. On October 5, he essayed the country music mode again with another of his compositions, "On a Slow Train Through Arkansaw." I was playing this record in the second-hand store when the countryman told me that the Bernard-Kamplain duet of "Thirty-First Street Blues" was the "prettiest" thing he had ever heard. Sixteen days later Al sang something called "The Hand of Fate," which I take to have been also a hill-billy, but it was not published and remained unheard.

The foregoing reference to "The King Isn't King Any More" reminds me that I recently came across an old scrapbook, of the 1931-34 period that I hadn't seen in years, and found a clipping that gives further light on something I wrote in my October, 1973, article, "Royalty and Recorded Sound." I said that Queen Victoria of England made a cylinder record that was sent to the Emperor of Abyssinia as a token of friendship, but that it was destroyed after being played once. However, this clipping of a news item dispatched by the Associated Press from London says that a copy of Victoria's recorded greeting to Emperor John had been found in the Edison Bell recording company's archives, and experts were striving to "restore" it so that the Queen's voice once more could be clearly heard. I wonder if they succeeded and where the "restored" cylinder, if it still exists, is now. Apparently the Edison Bell staff, who made the record, tricked the Queen by running off a copy to be preserved).

V. Work With Russel Robinson

This account of the late years of Al Bernard's Edison recording career has picked up so much steam that it has bypassed one or two subjects that call for attention. One is the fact—barely touched upon before this—that after Bernard and Ernest Hare made their final duet recordings the tenor half of the team found a vaudeville, radio and recording partnership with Russel Robinson, the pianist, who had been his collaborator in writing a number of popular songs, among them the first Bernard-Hare duet, "I Want to Hold You in My Arms."

This photo of Al Bernard is reproduced from a minstrel show folio, for the use of amateur performers, which the comedian wrote in the 1930s.

Robinson had been a member of Rudy Wiedoeft's Palace Trio and of the Wiedoeft-Wadsworth Quartet, and some information concerning him was included in my December, 1973, HOBBIES article about Wiedoeft. Photographs of Robinson were also shown. The information given there perhaps should be briefly repeated. Robinson, described in the "ASCAP Biographical Dictionary" as "composer, author, radio, television, phonograph and piano roll recording artist," was born July 8, 1892, in Indianapolis, Ind. He taught himself to play the piano as a small child and at 11 began to study with private tutors. His first compositions were published when he was 17. He appeared with the Original Dixieland Jazz Band in concerts in the London Palladium. Among the big song hits in which he had a hand were "Margie," "Mary Lou," "Aggravatin' Papa," "Beale Street Mama" and "Palestena," in addition to the specialty numbers he wrote with Bernard. He died in Palmsdale, Cal., September 30, 1963.

The foregoing information is supplemented by notes in the "Complete Entertainment Discography," edited by Brian Rust and Allen G. Debus, which relate that Robinson formed a youthful piano-and-drum act with his brother, and toured vaudeville circuits in the South and Midwest. During this period he was composing ragtime, such as "Eccentric" and "Dynamite Rag." He went to Chicago to play in a jazz band, then joined the Original Dixieland Jazz Band as a replacement for its first pianist, and appeared with them, as we have seen, in London. He left London because of his wife's poor health and returned to this country, where he worked with the Palace Trio and the already mentioned quartet, but rejoined the band in July, 1920, and left again in April, 1921. He was again a member of the jazz band when it was reorganized in 1936. After the Dixieland ensemble broke up in January, 1938, he moved to California and began composing incidental music for films.

Robinson teamed with Bernard in 1924 and 1925, but seems to have ceased to be Al's partner for a two-year period during which Al was working with the Record Boys trio of himself, Frank Kamplain and Sammy Stept, pianist-arranger-composer. After Bernard left the Record Boys in 1927, he and Robinson were partners again for a year or two.

As a whole, the songs Bernard and Robinson wrote while they were singing together (Robinson had a good deep recording voice but without the basso profundo quality of Ernie Hare's) were less boisterous than those which had been contrived to fit the Bernard-Hare partnership's special needs. One, "Blue-Eyed Sally," which had a considerable success in 1924-1925, was a quiet, dainty number about the singer's shy little mountain sweetheart. Many dance bands played and recorded it, among them, Billy Wynne's Greenwich Village Inn Orchestra, which made it for Edison. It seems strange that Edison did not also have Bernard and Robinson record their song hit, later, on December 7, Bernard and as a duet, but Robinson's name never appeared as an Edison recording artist. Earlier in this series a note written by Mr. Edison was quoted, saying he could see nothing funny in a test duet by Al and Russel. The name of the song to which he listened was not given, but perhaps it was "Blue-Eyed Sally."

Other successful songs that Bernard and Robinson wrote and recorded together in the mid-1920's, included "Let Me Be the First to Kiss You Good Morning," "Let My Home Be Your Home (When You're Down in Dixieland)," and, a return to their earlier rowdy style, "Birmingham Papa (Your Memphis Mama's Comin' to Town)." They sang these for several companies, and it is noteworthy that their Cameo of "Blue-Eyed Sally" had, on the other side, "Wee Willie" Robyn's tenor rendition of "At the End of the Road," which Ballard Macdonald and James F. Hanley had written as a sequel to their 1917 classic, "Indiana." It in turn harked back to "On the Banks of the Wabash." William Robyn, who made hundreds of records as a free-lance artist, is still living. He is known today by his real name, the Rev. William R. Rubin, and is cantor for a Jewish temple in New York City. Robyn, by the way, should be pronounced as ROE-BINE, not as "Robin."

When electric recording came in, Russel Robinson assisted Bernard to do re-makes of some of the old Bernard-Hare specialties, such as "Henry Jones, Your Honeymoon is Over." Bernard up-dated the version of this ditty, which they recorded for Brunswick in 1927, by having Henry's wife, or girl friend, advise him to "jine the army; they kin use you now." To which Henry replied: "Aw, gal, me and them Nicaraguans ain't had no quarrel!" This was a reference to the trouble the Coolidge administration was experiencing because of insurrections in some parts of Latin America, especially Nicaragua.

VI. Era of "The Record Boys"

We have reached that period when the Record Boys trio had come into being and were beginning to star weekly on radio as well as to make records. This, however, is not the time and place to consider the group in depth, for Bernard, Kamplain, and Stept made no Edison records under the Record Boys name. Of course, Bernard and Kamplain had been making duets for years, and the trio was only them with Sam H. Stept's piano added. For some reason, although Al and Frank continued to sing for Edison, Stept was never called on to use his piano for background music. An orchestra invariably furnished the accompaniment.

On November 6, 1925, Bernard and Kamplain recorded one of Al's compositions written especially to enable his partner to display his remarkable talents as a yodeler. The title was "Yeedle Deedle Lena," and it was one of the numbers frequently broadcast on the Record Boys' programs. When it was made for companies other than Edison, Stept usually provided the accompaniment and it was labeled as being by the Record Boys. A month Kamplain did another song on much the same model, "Prancin' Dancin' Yodeling Man." It also was a broadcast favorite.

One of the best songs Bernard ever participated in writing was recorded by Edison on March 9, 1926, but was left unissued, although Columbia, Brunswick and perhaps some other companies gave it a chance to be heard. It was called "Sally's Not the Same Old Sally," and the words were by Bernard with the irresistible tune being the brain child of Sammy Stept. Apparently this unissued Edison version was a solo by Bernard with orchestral backing. The Columbia also was by Bernard, with Stept at the piano. The Brunswick brought in

(Continued on page 120)

ELECTRIFY PLAYER PIANOS PUMP ORGANS

YOU CAN QUICKLY END TIRESOME FOOT-PUMPING. With a Compact Low-Cost Lee Silent Suction Unit

EASY TO INSTALL
FULLY GUARANTEED
1000'S IN USE

LEE MUSIC MFG. CO.
525H. Venezia, Ave.
Venice, Calif. 90291

MISCELLANEOUS MUSICAL ITEMS

PHOTOS! The three most remarkable group photos ever taken of early recording artists: Edison artists of 1900, Edison artists of 1914, and Victor Male Chorus of 1925 (reproduced in HOBBIES January 1971, October 1970 and July 1970). One 8x10 enlargement for $2, two for $3.50, all 3 for $5. Other 8x10 photos of recording artists available at $2 each: Ada Jones, Billy Murray, Collins, and Harlan, Henry Burr, and many others. Write for list. — Quentin Riggs, 21171 Greenboro Lane, Huntington Beach, Calif. 92646 n34941

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

WANTED: Old metal or wooden body guitar with internal resonator cone made by National/Dobro. — Paul Kierney, 271 Toke, E. Brunswick, N.J. 08816

WANTED URGENTLY, violins, violas, cellos, parts, bows, cases, books and catalogs. Condition unimportant. KASH. — M. Pratt, 446 Plymouth St., Abington, Mass. 02351 n6297

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR SALE

MUSIC BOXES! Fantastic large illustrated catalogue of wholesale music boxes, circus organs, nickelodeons, photo-players, reproducing pianos, other automatic instruments. Plus books, recordings, musical gifts. $2 postpaid; $5 subscription ($12 value) to next 6 issues. Money-back guarantee if not delighted! — David Bowers, Box 1669D, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90210 apl26313

REED ORGANS, melodions, bought, sold repaired. Reeds tuned, revoiced replacements. — C. H. Gunzinger, Box 276, Williamsville, Vt. 05362 o6675

FOR SALE DOLLS: china, bisque, mache and wax also doll parts. Appointment only. 812-883-2706. — Countryside Doll Hosp., Salem, Ind., R. 2, 47167 j66657

For Sale: Violin, date of origin 1700. Pictures furnished on request. For further information, write — P. O. Box 91, Bethel, Minnesota 55005 n3066

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

Kamplain to yodel and was catalogued as by the Record Boys.

"Sally's Not the Same Old Sally" was a sequel to "Blue-Eyed Sally," which, as we have seen, Bernard had written a year or more earlier with Russel Robinson. But in the later number the tempo and style have undergone change. "Blue-Eyed Sally" was a tender tribute to a shy little sweetheart living a secluded life in the Ozark Mountains. But, with what many hearers must have considered shocking cynicism, "Sally's Not the Same Old Sally" relates how the narrator had to leave home for a while and when he returned found that his bashful blue-eyed beloved had become the highest-stepping "flapper" in all the hills. The lively refrain tells the story, as the singer laments:

"Sally's not the same old Sally I left on the Ozark trail!
I returned to find my Sally ridin' roun' in swell coupe's—
Say, she's forgot those one-horse shays!
When I left home she never had been kissed,
But now there's not a boy in town she's missed!
Sally's not the same old Sally I left on the Ozark trail!"

The second refrain is much the same except that the words are changed to bewail that Sally had been "runnin' roun' with country sheiks—I know that gal; she read 'Three Weeks' and to add: 'When I left home she was a bashful miss; now she's a vamp, and let me tell you this—Sally's not the same old Sally I left on the Ozark trail!'"

There are two amusing topical references in that last set of words. "Three Weeks" was a novel written in the early 1900's by an English author, Elinor Glyn. It was considered terribly shocking and immoral, but compared to the filth spewed on every side today and accepted as literary art it was as innocent as "Goldilocks and the Three Bears." The "vamp" statement of course was inspired by the "sultry" type of seductive women—the most notable of whom was Thedda Bara—who appeared in the old-time silent movies. While I agree that it was perhaps deplorable for Bernard to transform his erstwhile blue-eyed heroine into a victim, or a high priestess, of the "jazz age," I still think "Sally's Not the Same Old Sally" is altogether a more ingenious and attractive song than its predecessor. And that isn't something that ordinarily can be said about sequels to books, songs or anything else.

But I am a bit ahead of schedule. Before "Sally" was recorded, Al had sung on February 16, 1926, a lively song called "Hot Coffee," which was mentioned in the first installment of this series. It had a "hot" accompaniment and was issued on Diamond Disc No. 51700, with "I'm Gonna Let the Bumble Bee Be," sung by Arthur Hall and John Ryan, as its coupling. Although an unusually good comedy record, it must not have sold well for it was dropped when the 1928 catalog was issued.

Bernard's next Edison disc was recorded April 28, 1926, and was more successful from the sales standpoint than "Hot Coffee," although by this time the output of Edison records had declined so drastically that the company's distribution totals were slight as compared to Victor, Columbia and Brunswick and probably were well behind Okeh's. The title of the new number was "Hokum Smokum (Yodelin' Indian Man)," another in the series written especially to utilize Kamplain's gifts. Of its kind it was a corker. The words were by Bernard and the music by Sammy Stept, who was born in Odessa, Russia, September 18, 1897, and was brought to this country as a tot of three. He was a musician from his childhood in Pittsburgh, Pa., and became staff piano player for a Pittsburgh music publisher. In vaudeville he was accompanist for such stars as Jack Norworth, Anna Chandler, Esther Walker and Mae West.

While living in Cleveland, Ohio, in 1920, Stept organized a jazz band. The ASCAP Biographical Dictionary credits him with bringing together the Record Boys in 1925, but Bernard almost certainly was the founder of the group and simply added Stept to himself and Kamplain as an accompanist and for his ability to arrange and set words to music. Stept went to Hollywood in 1929, to write songs for movies and afterwards established his own music publishing business. Films for which he wrote the scores included "Big Boy," "Baby, Take A Bow," "Having A Wonderful Time," "Nothing But the Truth," "Syncopation" and "Laughing Irish Eyes." He also composed the music for several stage shows and among his song hits not written in collaboration with Al Bernard were "Don't Sit Under the Apple Tree With Anyone Else But Me," "I'll Always Be in Love With You," "That's My Weakness Now," "Congratulations" and "Please Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone." The ASCAP Dictionary does not mention Bernard as one of the lyric writers with whom the gifted little Russian worked, but lists Bud Green, Charles Tobias, Lew Brown, Ned Washington, Sidney Clare, Herb Magidson and Herman Ruby. Stept died December 1, 1964, in Los Angeles.

"Hokum Smokum," as its sub-title suggests, lyrically relates the yodeling prowess of an Indian chief by that name. Stept fitted Bernard's clever words with a fascinating tune and Kamplain was given full scope for his falsetto effects. Apparently figuring that the lively song was certain to do well, Edison gave it for backing an "old standard" or "old chestnut," depending on which term you prefer—Al H. Wilson's already ancient yodel song, "In Tyrol," sung by Kamplain alone. Frank's record of a famous Wilson composition, "Roll On, Silver Moon," was one of the most popular in the catalog, so perhaps it was thought another offering from the same hand would do equally well.

Having done well with a song about an Indian who was skilled at the "Oh le-oh lady!" type of vocalizing, Bernard a year or so later turned to the Red Man's traditional enemy, the cowpuncher, and contrived a liltin' affair called "Yodelin' Cowboy Joe." It showed a marked kinship to the 1912, hit, "Ragtime Cowboy Joe," and obviously was suggested by its popular predecessor. He and Kamplain recorded it for Okeh.

Again, mostly because of the haphazard way in which Edison listings of Bernard's later records were kept, I have gone ahead of myself. Nine days before "Hokum Smokum" was sung and yodeled into the big horn in Edison's Fifth Avenue recording plant, Bernard and Kamplain had recorded, on April 19, 1926, another specialty, "Yodelin' Bill," written by Bernard, both words and music, without any acknowledged help from Stept. And for a coupling exactly the same sort of stunt was resorted to as with "Hokum Smokum." Kamplain was called on to do another solo, "The Alpine Yodeler." "Yodelin' Bill" is a catchy song, but the record obviously wasn't in demand, for it was listed in only one yearly catalog—the issue for 1927.

A six-month period of inactivity then followed. It was broken on October 26, when Al returned to his old comic "coon song" vein with one of his own compositions, "If You Think Your Luck is Hard (Mister Black Boy, Goodnight.)" This is one of the few Edison records by Bernard that I don't have, but I heard it many years ago, and have a vague impression that somebody who did not get label credit helped with the dialog. "Mister Black Boy" was combined with an Irving Berlin hit, "I'm On My Way Home," sung by Johnny Ryan.

On December 20, Bernard recorded another of his songs, "Stay Away From My Man," in which he had the assistance of Jim Doherty. This was one of the Bernard records that the public never had a chance to buy as a Diamond Disc, although some other companies issued it.

We have now reached the final year in which Bernard did Edison recording. On February 2, 1927, he sang a carefree composition that many hearers found laughable, "All Men Are Devils," but the majority of buyers probably were even more diverted by the song Billy Jones tendered on the other side. Its title was "I Wonder How I Look When I'm Asleep."

What a pity that Bernard's Edison version of the classic New England "rube" ditty, "Wal, I Swan!" which he waxed on March 30, wasn't issued on the disc. Luckily, as has previously been mentioned, it was made available on an Okeh red label disc and some others. And the handful of persons still buying Blue Amberol cylinders could get it on No. 5412.

The last Edison record by Al Bernard to be added to the catalog was "Who's That Knockin' On My Door?" which he sang on September 27. It was his only electric Edison and was combined on No. 52110, with "You Can't Walk Back From an Aeroplane," warbled by Jack Kaufman. Then on October 24, followed one more unissued number, "My Special Friend is Back in Town."

With that final failure to win approval, Al Bernard's eight-year Edison career was over.

(To be continued)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

AL BERNARD

PART IX
By JIM WALSH

I. Daylight Ahead

Eight months ago, March, 1974, when I began this survey of Al Bernard's life and recording career, I said that I had been "thinking" of writing it ever since I started contributing to HOBBIES, but had kept putting it off because I dreaded the hard work involved in studying and analyzing all the reference material I had accumulated.

Today, I know that dread was justified. For weeks, while trying to organize and present my notes in the most attractive form, I felt like a man trying to slash his way through a dense jungle with no better weapon than a toy store hatchet, or like one groping uncertainly down a seemingly endless pitch-black tunnel. During all this time, even when I haven't been writing, my mind has been on the task I assigned myself, and I have been puzzling over how to tell Bernard's "story" in the most effective way.

At this stage of the proceedings, however, I am beginning—if I may use a cliché—to see daylight ahead at the end of that tunnel; now that I have almost completed the long account of Bernard's Edison recordings the worst is over. About all that remains to be done is to give some account of his association with the other members of the Record Boys; to discuss briefly some of the more interesting records he made for companies other than Edison; to describe my two meetings with him, and to quote from the letters Al wrote to me during the last part of his life. I hope to reach the end of the tunnel with this installment, although one or two more may be required.

II. Records With Animal Interest

Perhaps I may as well start by discoursing about some odd and unusual Bernard recordings, and one of them is remarkable not so much for the song Al sings as for its bizarre coupling. My reference is to Harmony disc No. 226-H, which was made in 1925 or 1926. Bernard's contribution is one of his typical Negro dialect songs, "Don't Fail Me, Dice," which he wrote in collaboration with Sammy Stept, the Record Boys pianist, who presumably plays the accompaniment.

It is the reverse side, however, that brings astonishment, for it purports

FINAL EFFORT—Illustrated here is the cover of perhaps the last dialect song Al Bernard wrote. It was published only a few months before his death by W. C. Handy, the famous composer of the "St. Louis," "Memphis," and "Beale Street" Blues.

to have been recorded by a dog! Yes, the title is "Fifi's Serenade," and the label asserts with mock, or real, solemnity that it is by "Fifi the Bark-ing Dog With Her Laughing 'Companions.'"

When I came across this indisputable novelty in my Bernard collection I couldn't remember ever hearing it, but placing it on the turntable revealed that it is a variant of the old Okeh Laughing Record, which had so many imitations. "Fifi's Serenade" begins with a seemingly unskilled cornet player squawking his way through "The Last Rose of Summer." He begins to blow sour notes and "Fifi"—either a real dog or somebody imitating one—barks in heartbroken tones. This soon leads to laughter by whoever is lurking in the background, and the record ends with a wild explosion of mirth. Who made it? I have no way of knowing, but my guess is that the laughing effects were by Al H. Weston and Irene Young, who made more such records half a century ago than anyone else.

It has already been brought out that Al's Edison record of "My Dawg!" a black man's rather touching tribute to his dog, "Toby," was extremely successful, and it may be that was the reason Al himself, a few years later, wrote a "doggie number" called "My Puppy Bud." It was issued on Vocalion No. 5262, and for its mating had a much better comedy song, Ben Burt's "Wal, I Swan!" whose absence from the Edison disc catalog I have already lamented. Still another offering with a canine atmosphere was Brunswick No. 2762, "My Poodle-Oodle Dog," with "Keep On Going" for its coupling. Both were by Bernard and Robinson. Another of my friend Al's animal songs does not meet with my approval, nor will it be cherished by any sensible person who loves cats—as I am convinced all intelligent people do. It is called "You Better Get Rid of That Cat!" and Russel Robinson was responsible for its tune. The singer purports to be a black man who is very much displeased because of his spouse's giving living quarters to a feline, and who orders her to disperse with it forthwith. It's all in fun, of course, and for all I know "The Boy From Dixie" may have been as much a cat worshipper as I am. Its companion on Cameo record No. 496 — the only version I have found — is Bernard and Frank Ferrara's rendition of the Italian dialect song, "Me No Speak a Good English," which I have already mentioned on a Paramount disc. I do not play the "Cat Song" within hearing distance of my Professor, Lucky Jim or "Twisty."

Bernard and Ferrara also made a Vocalion record of a song they wrote jointly, called "De Ducks Done Got Me" (they likewise recorded it for several other companies), but the "ducks" to which it refers are not web-footed creatures. Instead, "de ducks" are deductions from the troubled singer's pay. He complains that "de ducks done got me; de ducks dot got me strong," and that there is little left of his income after "de ducks" have been taken out. You may recall that Thomas A. Edison played a test recording of this number, but rejected it because he said Bernard was "very weak." Its Vocalion backing was "Twenty-Five Years From Now," which was discussed in the red-star Edison version.

Is it unduly belaboring the animal theme to mention that Bernard sang the refrain of a 1924 dance number, "Go 'Long, Mule," played on a Cameo record by Bob Haring's Orchestra? A horse named Napoleon is, by the way, a prominent character in "Wal, I Swan!" because of the repeated catch phrase, "Giddy-up, Napoleon, it looks like rain!"

Finally, it might well be argued that Bernard's several recordings of the evergreen "Preacher and the Bear" should be dealt with under the animal heading, but I'd rather wait and talk about them when I expatiate about how some companies called on him to record old, well-established popular songs. Which is something I may as well do next.

(But first a digression, which has nothing to do with the subject of this article except that Al Bernard usually impersonated black characters and that I have been discussing some of his odd and unusual records.)

While I was writing this section I received information concerning one of the most unusual discs—not by Bernard—of which I have heard—one that must be a genuine rarity. Morgan Seymour, a retired police officer of Box 442, Carmel, N.Y. 10512, sent me a facsimile of the record's label. Beginning on the left and continuing across the top in a half circle, are the words: "The Jack Johnson Record." Below this in smaller type appears: "My own story of the big fight in Reno, Nevada," followed by a replica of Jack Johnson's signature, and then, "Heavyweight Champion of the World." Next is given the price, $2.50. At the bottom is, "the Jack Johnson Record, 124 East 24th Street, New York, N.Y." Numerals scratched on the label are the kind that appeared on records of Columbia origin.

The fight which the record commemorates took place July 4, 1910, with Johnson knocking out Jim Jeffries, his white opponent, in the 15th round. Probably Johnson was far less boastful in his account of whipping Jeffries than "Henry Jones" of the Bernard-Hare duets would have been, but those were the days of bitter race prejudice and most white devotees of prizefighting cordially hated "Li'l Arthur," as Johnson was called, for having the audacity to beat Jeffries. Threats against Johnson's life were frequent.

I don't think I had ever before heard of this record, although possibly there is an excerpt from it on "I Can Hear It Now," or some other such long-play series. Obviously, at $2.50, its sale was small, for few white persons would buy it, and the average Negro, no matter how great his pride at having a black champion, couldn't afford to. This was probably the first record to be issued by a company which, ostensibly or actually, was controlled by Negroes. It preceded the pioneer Negro record company, Black Swan, by about a dozen years. Mr. Seymour says his copy was given to him by an uncle some 55 years ago. He is willing to sell it, but only for a price consistent with what he believes to be its extreme scarcity.)

III. Assumed Names and Old Songs

Immediately after I wrote what you have just read, an idea seized me that my next step should be to discuss the names under which Al Bernard's records found their way to the

(Continued on page 119)

ELECTRIFY PLAYER PIANOS
PUMP ORGANS

YOU CAN QUICKLY END TIRESOME FOOT-PUMPING.
With a Compact Low-Cost Lee Silent Suction Unit

EASY TO INSTALL
FULLY GUARANTEED
1000'S IN USE

write to
LEE MUSIC MFG. CO.
525H. Venezia, Ave.
Venice, Calif. 90291

mh571

MISCELLANEOUS MUSICAL ITEMS

PHOTOS! The three most remarkable group photos ever taken of early recording artists: Edison artists of 1900, Edison artists of 1914, and Victor Male Chorus of 1925 (reproduced in HOBBIES January 1971, October 1970 and July 1970). One 8x10 enlargement for $2, two for $3.50, all 3 for $5. Other 8x10 photos of recording artists available at $2 each: Ada Jones, Billy Murray, Collins, and Harlan, Henry Burr, and many others. Write for list. — Quentin Riggs, 2117 Greenboro Lane, Huntington Beach, Calif. 92646 n34941

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

WANTED: Old metal or wooden body guitar with internal resonator cone made by National/Dobro. — Paul Kierney, 271 Tpk. E. Brunswick, N.J. 08816 d3624

WANTED URGENTLY, violins, violas, cellos, parts, bows, cases, books and catalogs. Condition unimportant. KASH. — M. Pratt, 446 Plymouth St., Abington, Mass. 02351 n6297

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR SALE

MUSIC BOXES! Fantastic large illustrated catalogue of wholesale music boxes, circus organs, nickelodeons, photo-players, reproducing pianos, other automatic instruments. Plus books, recordings, musical gifts. $2 postpaid; $5 subscription ($12 value) to next 6 issues. Money-back guarantee if not delighted! — David Bowers, Box 1669D, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90210 ap126313

REED ORGANS, melodions, bought, sold repaired. Reeds tuned, revoiced replacements. — C. H. Gunzinger, Box 276, Williamsville, Vt. 05362 ap6846

FOR SALE DOLLS: china, bisque, mache and wax also doll parts. Appointment only. 812-883-2706. — Countryside Doll Hosp., Salem, Ind., R. 2, 47167 ja6657

For Sale: Violin, date of origin 1700. Pictures furnished on request. For further information, write — P. O. Box 91, Bethel, Minnesota 55005 n3066

HARP-PICCOLO Music Box 22" long 6" high. Inlaid floral design on top. Eight classical melodies. Lever-wind, glass inner lid, two-section comb. Fine condition. $675. — Basil's Antiques and Art, 1736 South Main, Salt Lake City, Utah 84115 ja3207

PHONOGRAPHS

WANTED: Silvertone Upright Phonograph, oak, waffle-effect grille, flush motor board. Cecilian table model, mahogany, both circa 1920. Send for photocopy. — Miller, Box 668, Yucaipa, CA. 92399 d3684

PHONOGRAPHS repaired: New spare parts for Edison phonographs. Send stamp for list. Phone: (201) 748-8046. — Gerichten, 23 Waldo, Ave., Bloomfield, N.J. 07003 jly124851

"DIRECTORY OF Phonograph and Record Collectors," lists 250 collectors and their wants. $3.50 postpaid, satisfaction guaranteed. Two stamps for free list of antique phonograph catalogs, books, magazines. — Allen H. Koenigsberg, 3400 Snyder, Brooklyn, N.Y. 11203 mh63621

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

public. Such a discussion will not take long, for Bernard's pseudonyms were relatively few as compared to those used by such prolific recorders as Vernon Dalhart, Irving and Jack Kaufman, Arthur Fields, Billy Jones and Ernest Hare.

As you already know, Bernard and Hare were called Jack Clare and Frank Mann in Pathe discs, and were "Skeeter" Sims and Henry Jones on the Regal label. Al was disguised as "John Bennett" on some Madison records from Grey Gull presses (the Bennett name was used, as well, for other artists), and perhaps he made some of the Grey Gulls by "Vel Veteran," a "catch-all" term of concealment applied at one time or another to several singers.

I also have a Madison record of a song called "Eva," with his name given as "Dave Sanborn." (He sang the refrains in some dance records made by Grey Gull without receiving label credit). And there is a Cameo of "My Sweetie Went Away" on which Al Bernard is metamorphosed into "Al Simpson." The other side is a song of which I'll bet you've never heard, "That Sweet Somebody of Mine," sung by "Arthur Baldwin," who was really Arthur Fields.

On Romeo record No. 506 Al sings "At the Pumpkin Fair (In the Old Town Square)," which was one of his compositions, with the other side held down by "The Preacher and the Bear." On both sides he is called "Uncle Joe and His Banjo." This brings up a rather interesting question: Did Bernard himself choose that name or was it applied without his knowledge? And if he made the choice, was he perhaps thinking of his brother Joe, whom he "cut in" on "Pretty Little Honey Lou," or was the name suggested by Teddy Morse's 1912 song hit, "When Uncle Joe Plays a Rag On His Old Banjo?"

It, of course, has already been mentioned several times that Bernard and J. Russel Robinson called themselves "The Dixie Stars" on records and radio, and it will be mentioned now that Cameo and Perfect (the latter was one of Pathe's lateral cut labels) issued "When Dixie Stars are Playing Peek-a-boo," with the names of the performers given as the "Dixie Trio." Perhaps this designation was used for other song titles and other record labels, but I haven't come across examples. It has been established that some Cameo masters were bought from Pathe, so both these records probably originated with that company. The Perfect is No. 12083 and has "Mama Goes Where Papa Goes," by Vernon Dalhart, for its companion. The Cameo, No. 448, is coupled with an oddly haunting ditty of no cultural significance, "Lovey Came Back," sung by Martha Pryor, who probably was a vaudevillian.

We might be justified in concluding that The Dixie Trio was an earlier name for the Record Boys, except that the discs seemingly were made before Bernard's association with Sammy Stept began. Since the artists were unmistakably Bernard and Kamplain with piano accompaniment, and since Russel Robinson wrote the music of "Dixie Stars" to Bernard's words, it seems almost certain that the pianist was the composer, Robinson, himself.

Inasmuch as he was such a prolific recorder, I imagine that Bernard discs were published under other names which have not come to my attention and which he more than likely knew nothing about.

Coming now to the subject of Bernard's sometimes being called on to record old-time popular songs, this service seems to have been required of him most often by Grey Gull, Brunswick and Vocalion, which became a Brunswick subsidiary in 1925. It is well known that Grey Gull was able to sell records at an extremely low price partly because of using inferior materials and partly because it would couple a late "hit tune" either with an old-time number, published before the royalty payment provision of the copyright law went into effect in 1909, or with something ground out by an obscure writer, for which a flat fee of 50 dollars was given with an agreement that there were to be no royalties. I have, to cite examples, a 1929 Grey Gull supplement, listing three "hit" tunes played by unidentified dance bands. (Names of dance groups were seldom given on Grey Gull records and their many affiliates). "Mean to Me" is coupled with something called "Close Fit Blues," which nobody but owners of this record ever heard of. "Broadway Melody" is combined with the equally obscure "Burma Girl," and "Dance of the Paper Dolls" with the unheralded, "I'm That Way About You."

Among the popular vocal numbers are No. 2477, "I Want to Be Bad," by "Betty Brown," whom I will guess to have been Vaughn de Leath, combined with "Play Dat Rag," by Al Bernard. The latter may have been something that Al himself wrote, but since ragtime was passe' by 1929, it may also have been a revival of a "coon song" which Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan had recorded in 1909 on Victor No. 16124, coupled with "Mr. Dinkelspiel," by Collins. The Victor was called "Play That Rag," but it was probably the same song as Bernard's Grey Gull.

Likewise in this list Al sang two old songs on No. 2467, "Down Among the Sugar Cane" and "Let Me Down Easy," a laughable song about a black man who experienced calamity after trying to operate a home-made flying machine. I mentioned Arthur Collins' Victor version of "Let Me Down" in my "Fifty Years of Aviation Songs" last January, but overlooked Bernard's. And here permit me to mention a few other flying songs I didn't include. On the back of a Bernard's Grey Gull No. 2338 of a comic ditty, "No, No, Positively No!" Arthur Fields is heard in "Lindy, Lindy, How I'd Like to be You," a more than ordinarily obscure song about Charles A. Lindbergh. Several correspondents, including Captain Bill Knowlton, to whom the aviation series was dedicated, have informed me that in the late 1930's "Red River Dave" McEnry recorded a tearful contrivance called "Amelia Earhart's Last Flight," which Bill says is a hit today among college students, "Because it's so bad it's good." Joe Drochetz, of St. Louis, says "Montana Slim" sang "The Hindenburg Disaster" for a Bluebird record issued in Canada. And Allen G. Debus recalls that a book written by Miss Earhart contained a pocket inside the cover with a short talk by her on a small flexible record. I, of course, had emphasized that I couldn't possibly include every aviation song in writing "Come Take a Trip in My Airship." One I forgot was "My Sweetheart's the Man in the Moon," by Will Oakland and William H. Thompson, on U. S. Everlasting cylinder No. 1485.

Lacking a comprehensive supply of Grey Gull printed matter, I cannot undertake to list every more or less ancient song that Bernard recorded for the Boston company, but I have a few in my own collection. On Radiex 4198 Al sings "Ida, Sweet as Apple Cider," with John Ryan's rendition of Harry Von Tilzer's first hit, "My Old New Hampshire Home," for its companion. On Madison No. 1932, Al brings back "Good Evening, Caroline," which he sings as ("John Bennett"), in an irresistibly lilting manner, with "There's a Mother Always Waiting For You at Home, Sweet Home," by "Jack Rhan" (John Ryan) for the coupling. On Radiex 4177 "The Boy From Dixie" is heard in "Steamboat Bill," and "Vel Veteran" (on this occasion, Irving Kaufman) occupies the reverse with "Everybody Works But Father." Two old minstrel numbers, which Harry C. Browne had made popular on Columbia records and which also had some vogue among country music singers, are on Grey Gull 4240, "Jordan Am a Hard Road to Trammel" and "De Gospel Train Am Comin'." Bernard's real name is used on both.

The 1928 Brunswick catalog listed under (ha! ha!) "folks songs and ballads" a double-faced disc on which Bernard sang two songs that had won some notice years before. Both were said to be by "Al Bernard and His Gully Jumpers," an ensemble whose membership is unknown to me. One side was "On a Good Old-Time Straw Ride," and the other better known, "I'm a Twelve O'Clock Feller in a Nine O'Clock Town," which had been passingly popular in 1917 when Byron Harlan recorded it for Victor, Columbia and Edison. This was No. 191 and was listed as part of Brunswick's "Dixie Series." On No. 178 which, in its many versions by Arthur Collins for nearly all companies, was probably the most popular pre-electric recording. (Strangely, Pathe never had Collins sing it, but this was almost a lone exception). And if Collins had remained in good health and active throughout the 1920's it's likely that Bernard would never have been permitted to record the folk classic of the preacher who went hunting on Sunday and, as punishment for his transgression, had a terrifying encounter with "a great big grizzly bear." There was an unwritten law among American record companies that Arthur Collins "owned" that song and only he could make vocal records of it. (In England it was recorded by Albert Whelan and other comedians). This celebrated bit of composition was composed in the early 1900's by George Fairman, a native of Front Royal, Va., while he was working as a pianist in an unedifying establishment called The Harp in Columbus, O. Fairman sang and played it to amuse his uncultured clientele. He wanted to seek bigger opportunities in Chicago, so one night when a man named Joe Arzonio dropped in and made him an offer, he disposed of all rights to "The Preacher" for 500 dollars. The song was published under Arzonio's name and all record catalogs show him as the composer—the only song with which his name is connected. In actions similar to Fairman's, Stephen Foster sold some of his immortal songs to Edwin P. Christy, manager of a well-known minstrel troupe, and they were published under Christy's name.

At an earlier stage of these proceedings, Bernard's Romeo record of "The Preacher," made under the name of "Uncle Joe and His Banjo," was mentioned. Two other examples in my collection are Vocalion 15643, which has "The Old Gray Mare" for a coupling—another to be added to the comedian's animal songs list. It's odd that Vocalion made the mare song the A side, because "Preacher" was certainly the more popular of the two. Brunswick also issued the "Preacher" tune, coupled with "Bill Bailey, Won't You Please Come Home?" on No. 312.

Then there was Harmony 649-H, with the Fairman masterpiece on one side, and "Bill, You Done Me Wrong," also sung by Bernard, on the other.

Now, while I think of it, let me correct at least a semi-misstatement in a preceding article, when I said that Bernard's first Aeolian-Vocalion record was No. 12148, "St. Louis Blues" and "Venus Blues," both with a jazz accompaniment by the Novelty Five. It is true that this disc was the first A-V that Bernard made with the accompaniment subordinated to the singer, but he had appeared in three earlier dance records by the Five, singing the incidental refrains.

The first was No. 12117, "Bluein' the Blues," which appears in Aeolian-Vocalion record supplement No. 11. The list is undated, but apparently was issued somewhere around the middle of 1919. Bernard is not heard in the reverse side, "Don't Cry, Frenchy, Don't Cry." I have been wondering if the Novelty Five was some small organization better known under another name, and now it suddenly occurs to me that it very likely was the Original Dixieland Jazz Band. That ensemble did some A-V recording under its own name, and Regas, the composer of "Bluein' the Blues," I believe was one of its members.

After this initial number, came No. 12124, "Shake, Rattle and Roll," one of Al's own songs. He went unheard in "Idol," the coupling. Then, on 12135, he sang the refrain of "I Want to Hold You in My Arms," which, as we already know, was the first duet he and Ernest Hare recorded for Edison, and which was written by Bernard and Russel Robinson. The other side, with no refrain, was "Lonesome Road Blues." I am also on record as saying that the Bernard-Hare duets were not suitable for use as dance music. As a rule they were not, but in this record "I Want to Hold You" was successfully given fox trot treatment. But why didn't Aeolian-Vocalion have Bernard and Hare sing and talk it in their inimitable fashion! Perhaps Al had an agreement that he would record the number as a blackface sketch only for Edison.

Now, still another correction. I had forgotten that I owned the A-V "I Want to Hold You in My Arms," and hadn't played it for many years. I have just put it on the turntable and found that, although he gets only incidental label credit, Bernard dominates the record. It begins with him doing some of the comic talk he and Hare had done on the Diamond Disc—and Bernard takes the part of both the man and woman, although not attempting to speak in Hare's sepulchral bass tones. In singing the song he also takes both roles, but changes the words somewhat from those in the Edison version. The result is a swinging fox trot with a lively, captivating melody, but the recording is many degrees below the Edison standard.

IV. Talking Specialties and "Blues"

We already know that what the English call "cross talk"—that is, a rapid-fire exchange of repartee—was a prominent feature of the Bernard-Hare duets, but on a relatively few records Bernard also made comic talking specialties without the help of a partner. One of these is Radiex No. 4256, on which he tells about "Rufus Green at the Schoolhouse." It is backed with "The Trial of Josiah Brown," by Harlan E. Knight, Steve Porter and Byron G. Harlan, a "rube" sketch which this group, with the assistance of Ada Jones, had done more effectively for Edison.

Al also wrote and recorded a few monologs in which he impersonated a black preacher of the type he had known in New Orleans. The minister was called "Brother Pollasses," a word that sounds as if it were suggested by "molasses," and his routine involved preaching "sermons" about letters of the alphabet. Brunswick 406 combined "Brother Pollasses' Sermon on the Letter 'S'" with the old standby song, "Read 'Em and Weep." On Harmony 319-H Brother Pollasses discoursed on the letter "F," while for a coupling the Record Boys sang, played and yodeled, "Stay Away From My Man," a typical Bernard song which he and Sammy Stept had written.

As a soloist the comedian of course was preeminently a "blues" singer, and the "St. Louis Blues" was probably the number he recorded most often. In one of his letters he told me he sang it for 19 different companies, and in my own collection I have him singing it on Edison, Victor, Aeolian-Vocalion, Brunswick, Emerson and Madison discs. His acoustically recorded Brunswick was one of that company's earliest records and was coupled on No. 2062 with "The Beale Street Blues," also by Bernard and truly a good value for admirers of the "blues." Both songs were written by "the Daddy of the Blues," W. C. Handy. His "John Bennett" version for Madison was combined with a legendary "hobo" song, "Hallelujah, I'm a Bum," whose tune was taken from a rousing old camp meeting hymn, "Revive Us Again." The Brunswick record was so popular that when electrical recordings supplanted singing into a horn, he was called on to re-make it on No. 3547. The Emerson, No. 10296, was combined with "The Broadway Blues," sung by the popular black comedian, Noble Sissle, who at this writing is still alive at past the age of 90. Also yet living and giving recitals of ragtime music is Sissle's pianist-partner, Eubie Blake. We have already seen that Bernard recorded "The Broadway Blues" for Edison and it is rather odd that he should be on one side of another disc upon which Sissle sang the same song. On the other hand, the "Crazy Blues," by the Negro writer, Perry Bradford, was usually associated with Sissle, who recorded it for Edison and Emerson, but Bernard sang the refrain in a dance record of that number played by Bennie Krueger's Orchestra on Brunswick 2977.

Bernard also made several records of one of Handy's earlier songs, "The Memphis Blues," which many students of this art form like even better than the "St. Louis Blues." One little known "Memphis Blues" recording is on a Silvertone disc, probably made from a Federal master, in which he is assisted by Ernie Hare. On the other side they sing "The Alabama Jubilee." This looks like an effort to "cover" the big selling 1915 Columbia record, No. A1721, on which the songs about Memphis and Alabama were sung by Arthur Collins and Byron Harlan.

Unfortunately, Edison never issued a vocal "Memphis Blues." Brunswick's acoustic recording was by Bernard and Carl Fenton's Orchestra, with "Frankie and Johnny" on the other side. This is a vaudevillized arrangement of the traditional Negro song about the "gal" who "killed the man that had done her wrong," which in its turn seems to stem from an older, simpler number called "Frankie and Albert." The vaude version is attributed to the Leighton Brothers, best known as the composers of "Steamboat Bill." The Brunswick "Memphis Blues" was such a good seller that it was re-made electrically, on No. 3553, by Bernard and the Fenton Orchestra, but "Frankie and Johnny" was dropped and "The Hesitation Blues" substituted.

While we are on the subject of "Frankie and Johnny," Bernard's was probably the first version of the song both recorded and issued in this country. The very first record of it, however, almost certainly is the one Gene Greene made in London in 1912 on Pathe sapphire disc No. 5370. Small quantities were imported into the States after Pathe began business over here in 1914, and I am lucky to have one. Its coupling was a "rube song," "Go Back." "The Ragtime King," as Greene was called, also sang "Frankie and Johnny" for Victor on March 9, 1917, but it remained unissued.

While Bernard believed himself to have been the first singer who recorded "blues" songs he, of course, was not. The true pioneer was Morton Harvey, whose Victor record of "The Memphis Blues" came out in January, 1915. Collins and Harlan followed a few months later with the same song for Columbia, and there were other vocal records of "blues" numbers before Bernard came along. Without trying to be too specific, Irving Kaufman made a Victor of "The Chinese Blues" in 1916, and Gene Greene sang the Chinese ditty on both five-inch and seven-inch Emersons. And Vernon Dalhart's Edison of "The Alcoholic Blues" was recorded before any of Bernard's "blue numbers. Nevertheless, in my opinion, Al was far and away the best of the "blues" singers.

Among Bernard's other records with a "blues" coloration are Gennett 4544, "Bluin' the Blues," on which he is accompanied by the Kansas Jazz Boys, whoever they were, and which has him singing "Everybody Wants a Key to My Cellar" for its teammate. On Hytone record 73 (Hytone seems to be a disguised Cameo) he sings "The Anticipatin' Blues" and "I'm Looking for a Bluebird to Chase My Blues Away," and on Madison 1927 he does the vocal refrain in a dance version of a Handy number, "Deep River Blues."

By diligent, prolonged and patient research it probably would be no insuperable task to lengthen considerably this list of Bernard's "blues" recordings, but it is at least representative as it stands. Obviously, too, the tenor also recorded his share of the more conventional types of popular songs, but I don't think they call for special mention.

(To be continued)

HISTORICAL RECORDS

(Continued from page 36)

59. B 25321-4 5/27/21 V 87328; V 546 (33); G 7-53049; G DA 133 (3)
Unpublished takes: B 2521-1, 2, 3 5/27/21
When Love Is Kind (Moore)
60. B 26472-2 5/12/22 V 87344; V 898 (45); G 2-3677; -;
Unpublished takes: B 26472-1, 3, 4, 5 5/12/22
- Group IV - Viktor Electric
Acis v Galatea (Lites): Confiando Jilguerillo
61. BSO 17091-1 11/19/37 V 2201 (62); -;
Unpublished takes: BSO 17091-1A, 2 11/19/37
Amantes Chasqueados (Lacerna): Jilguerito con pica de oro
62. BSO 17092-1 11/19/37 V 2201 (61); -;
Unpublished takes: BSO 17092-1A, 11/19/37
Amour Mouille (Varney): Valse d'oiseau
63. BVE 30275-6 12/30/27 V 1333 (66); G DA 981 (66)
Unpublished takes: BVE 30275-5, 7 12/30/27
Il Bacio (Arditi)
64. BVE 28619-11 5/27/27 V 1262 (71); G DA 900 (71)
Unpublished takes: BVE 28619-6, 7, 8 5/27/26; BVE 28619-9, 10 5/27/27
Bohème (Puccini): Mi chiamano Mimì
65. CVE 14477-13 5/5/28 V 6790 (81); V 14206 (reverse: Martinelli); G DB 1644 (81)
Unpublished takes: CVE 14477-12, 14 5/5/28
Bohème (Puccini): Musetta's waltz
66. BVE 28620-11 12/30/27 V 1333 (63); G DA 981 (63)
Unpublished takes: BVE 28620-7, 8 5/27/27
BVE 28620-9, 10 12/30/27
Bohème (Puccini): Addio di Mimì
67. CVE 33476-5 11/21/25 V 6561 (80); -;
Unpublished takes: CVE 33476-1, 2, 3 10/16/25; CVE 33476-4 11/21/25
Bohème (Puccini): Sono andati (with Tito Schipa)
68. CVE 33943-3 11/24/25 V 8063 (69); G DB 911 (69)
Unpublished takes: CVE 33943-1, 2 11/24/25
Bohème (Puccini): O Dio, Mimì (with Tito Schipa)
69. CVE 33944-2 11/24/25 V 8063 (68); G DB 911 (68)
Unpublished takes: CVE 33944-1, 3 11/24/25
Calm as the Night (Goetze): (with Lawrence Tibbett)
70. BVE 38854-3 6/1/27 V 1747 (73); V 3043 (73); G DA 912 (73)
Unpublished takes: BVE 38854-1, 2 6/1/27
Canto Andaluz (nin)
Unpublished takes: BSO 17715-1, 2 12/24/37
Ciribiribin (Pestalozza)
71. BVE 28643-8 5/27/27 V 1262 (64); G DA 900 (64)
Unpublished takes: BVE 28643-4, 5, 6 5/5/26; BVE 28643-7 5/27/27
Clavelitos (Valverde)
72. BVE 15823-5 6/1/27 V 1385 (83); G DA 1043 (83)
Unpublished takes: BVE 15823-3, 4 6/1/27
Con Amores/El Vito (Obradores/Nin)
Unpublished takes: BSO 17713-1, 1A 12/24/37
Contes d'Hoffmann (Offenbach): Barcarolle (with Lawrence Tibbett)
73. BVE 38855-3 6/1/27 V 1747 (70); V 3043 (70); G DA 912 (70)
Unpublished takes: BVE 38855-1, 2 6/1/27
Coplas de curro dulce (Obradores)
Unpublished takes: BSO 17712-1, 1A 12/24/37
Cruz de Mayo (Valverde)
74. BVE 33977-2 12/8/25 V 1190 (89); G DA 799 (89)
Unpublished takes: BVE 33977-1, 3 12/8/25
Don Giovanni (Mozart): Battì, battì
75. CSO 11414-2 7/22/37 V 14614 (88); G DB 3820 (88)
Unpublished takes: CSO 11414-1, 1A, 2A 7/22/37
Don Giovanni (Mozart): Vedrai carino
76. BSO 11715-1 8/13/37 V 1846 (85); G DA 1894 (85)
Unpublished takes: BSO 11715-1A, 2, 2A 8/13/37
Don Quijote de la Mancha (Obradores): Consejo
77. BSO 17093-1 11/19/37 V 1978 (78); -;
Unpublished takes: BSO 17093-1A, 11/19/37
In the Woods (Schumann): (with John McCormack)
Unpublished takes: BVE 34167-1, 2, 3, 4 12/18/25
It's You (Green)
Unpublished takes: BVE 33853-1, 2, 3 6/1/27
Jota (De Falla)
78. BSO 17090-1 11/19/37 V 1978 (77); -;
Unpublished takes: BSO 17090-1A, 2 11/19/37
Little Damsel (Novello)
79. BVE 33478-3 11/21/25 V 1162 (95); -;
Unpublished takes: BVE 33478-1, 2 10/16/25; BVE 33478-4, 5 11/21/25
Louise (Charpentier): Dupuis le jour
80. CVE 33475-6 12/2/25 V 6561 (87); -;
Unpublished takes: CVE 33475-1, 2, 3, 4 10/16/25; CVE 33475-5, 7 12/2/25
Madama Butterfly (Puccini): Un bel dì
81. CVE 38061-5 1/4/28 V 6790 (85); G DB 1644 (85)
Unpublished takes: CVE 38061-1, 2, 3 5/27/27; CVE 38061-4 1/4/28

- Note: Many copies of this record will show a take 2. This is an error. Only take 5 was issued.
Malaguena (Nin)
82. BSO 17094-1 11/19/37 V 1984 (94); -;
Unpublished takes: BSO 17094-1A, 2 11/19/37
Malaguena (Pagans)
83. BVE 14343-4 1/13/28 V 1385 (72); G DA 1043 (72)
Unpublished takes: BVE 14633-3, 5 1/13/28
Manon (Massenet): Adieu, notre petite table
84. CSO 11718-1 8/13/37 V 14618 (92); -;
Unpublished takes: CSO 11718-1A, 2, 2A 8/13/37
Manon (Massenet): Gavotte
85. BSO 11416-1 7/22/37 V 1846 (76); G DA 1894 (76)
Unpublished takes: BSO 11416-1A, 2, 2A 7/22/37; BSO 11416-3, 3A, 4, 4A 8/13/37
Mignon (Thomas): Connais-tu
86. BVE 45153-2 5/18/28 V 1361 (87); G DA 1017 (87)
Unpublished takes: BVE 45153-1, 3 5/18/28
Mignon (Thomas): Ma voisi dans son boudoir
87. BVE 45154-3 5/18/28 V 1361 (86); G DA 1017 (86)
Unpublished takes: BVE 45154-1, 2 5/18/28
Night Hymn at Sea (Goring-Thomas) (with John McCormack)
Unpublished takes: BVE 34166-1, 2, 3 12/18/25; BVE 34166-4, 5, 6 12/24/25
Nozze di Figaro (Mozart): Deh vieni non tardar
88. CSO 11415-1 7/22/37 V 14614 (75); G DB 3820 (75)
Unpublished takes: CSO 11415-1A, 2, 2A 7/22/37
Patotero Sentimental (Joves)
89. BVE 33978-1 12/8/25 V 1190 (74); G DA 799 (74)
Unpublished takes: BVE 33978-2, 3 12/8/25
Primavera d'or (Glazunov)
90. CVE 33959-4 12/2/25 V 6699 (96); G DB 1168 (96)
Unpublished takes: CVE 33959-1, 2, 3 12/2/25
Rondine (Puccini): Ore dolci e divine
91. CSO 11716-1 8/13/37 V 14615 (99); -;
Unpublished takes: CSO 11716-1A, 2, 2A 8/13/37
Secret of Suzanne (Wolf-Ferrari): O gloria la nube
92. CSO 11417-3 8/13/37 V 14618 (84); -;
Unpublished takes: CSO 11417-1, 1A, 2, 2A 7/22/37; CSO 11417-3A 8/13/37
Seguidilla (arr. Reimann)
93. BVE 45165-2 5/22/28 V 1348 (100); G DA 1039 (100)
Unpublished takes: BVE 45165-1, 3 5/22/28
Seguidilla Muricana/Jota (De Falla/Nin)
94. BS 17095-2 11/1937 V 1984 (82); -;
Unpublished takes: BS 17095-1, 1A 11/19/37
Simonetta (White-Rumbold)
95. BVE 33477-7 12/8/25 V 1162 (79); -;
Unpublished takes: BVE 33477-1, 2 10/16/25; BVE 33477-3, 4, 5 11/21/25; BVE 33477-6, 8 12/8/25
Tales from the Vienna Woods (Strauss)
96. CVE 33960-10 5/27/27 V 6699 (90); G DB 1168 (90)
Unpublished takes: CVE 33960-1, 2, 3 12/2/25; CVE 33960-4, 5 12/22/25; CVE 33960-6, 7, 8 5/5/26; CVE 33960-9, 11 5/27/27
Tomba y le (Obradores)
Unpublished takes: BSO 17714-1, 2, 3 12/24/37
Traviata (Verdi): Ah fors'è lui
97. CVE 41441-3 6/20/28 V 7438 (reverse: Fonselle); G DB 1606 (reverse: Fonselle)
Unpublished takes: CVE 41441-1, 2 1/4/28; CVE 41441-4, 5 6/20/28
Traviata (Verdi): Sempre libera
98. CVE 41442-1 1/4/28 V 11-8569 (reverse: Caruso); -;
Unpublished takes: CVE 41442-2, 3, 4 6/20/28
La Vida Breve (De Falla): Vivan los que rien
99. CSO 11717-1 8/13/37 V 14615 (91); -;
Unpublished takes: CSO 11717-1A, 2, 2A 8/13/37
La Violetera (Goetz-Padilla)
100. BVE 45164-2 5/22/28 V 1348 (93); G DA 1039 (93)
Unpublished takes: BVE 45164-1, 3 5/22/28
- All records of Victor origin with a B prefix matrix number are 10"; those with a C prefix are 12".
  - The conductors on the Bori records are as follows:
2/12/14, 3/27/14, 4/2/14, 4/8/14, 3/23/15, 4/16/15 Walter B. Rogers
4/6/21, 4/7/21, 4/8/21, 5/10/21, 5/12/21, 11/2/21, 11/23/21 Joseph Pasternack
5/12/22, 5/16/22, 9/26/22, 10/2/22
10/13/22 Rosario Bourdon
3/28/23 Nat Shilkret
9/27/23, 9/28/23 Rosario Bourdon
10/8/23, 1/14/24, 6/13/24 Nat Shilkret
10/16/25, 11/21/25 Rosario Bourdon
11/24/25 Nat Shilkret
12/2/25, 12/8/25 Rosario Bourdon
12/18/25, 12/22/25, 12/24/25 Nat Shilkret
5/5/26, 5/27/27, 6/1/27, 12/30/27, 1/4/28, 1/13/28, 5/18/28, 5/22/28, 6/20/28
7/22/37, 8/13/37, 11/19/37, 12/24/37
George Copeland (pianist)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

AL BERNARD

PART X
By JIM WALSH

Al Bernard gave Jim Walsh this autographed photo of himself on September 10, 1948, when he was one of the honored guests at a party for pioneer recording artists.

LAST DAYS:—Al Bernard at the John Bieling Day party for early recording artists, at Garden City, N.Y., in September, 1948, a few months before his death. He is holding the published music of his song, "Oh Joe Please Don't Go!"

—Photo by Allen G. DeBus

IV. "The Record Boys"

Throughout this series there have been scattered mentions of the Record Boys, the recording and radio trio of which Al Bernard became the principal member, probably in 1925, and some of their records, such as "Hokum Smokum" and "Yodeling Bill," have been touched upon. Now it appears time to consider their association and recordings in somewhat more detail.

Granted, it already has been made clear that the ensemble was nothing but the old partnership of Bernard and Frank Kamplain with Sammy Stept added as pianist-composer. Bernard and Kamplain had been working together since 1919 (it would be interesting to know how, when and where they met and decided to form a partnership), but how long they had known Stept there seems no way to determine. At any rate, they became the Record Boys and they were almost immediately popular, from the time they began their broadcasts and phonograph work.

I have found, in an old scrapbook, a few clippings dealing with this talented trio. One which I can identify as from the Washington Post and which I judge was published in 1926 says:

"The Record Boys, nationally celebrated as radio favorites and phonograph stars, are the special added attraction at Crandall's Metropolitan theater this week in conjunction with first local presentations of Colleen Moore's production for Elster National of 'It Must Be Love.' This clever trio is comprised of (sic) Al Bernard, Frank Kamplain and Sam Stept. Two are solo vocalists, all three sing in their humorously concerted numbers and one is an expert pianist. This information probably will impress the reader as redundant because these boys have captivated audiences in all parts of the United States by the verve and speed of their work not to mention its genuinely artistic quality."

Another clipping, also apparently from the Post, is amusing because of the ludicrous way it mixed up the artists' individual functions:

"The Record Boys will be heard in a quarter hour of serio-comic songs and straight ballads, with Al Bernard at the piano and Frank Kamplain and Sam Stept serving as solo vocalists."

How amused the "boys" must have been, if they saw that item, to learn that Bernard, despite his inability to read music, had become the pianist while Stept had taken his place as a singer! I do not recall Stept's singing in any of their recorded offerings.

My guess is that the following is from a 1926 New York Herald Tribune:

"Record Boys To Rest From Radio Programs. WJZ and WRC Stars Will Broadcast Wednesday in Closing Recital. To Return September 1."

"The Record Boys, who have been broadcasting through WJZ and WRC will close the season with a final program from that station at 10 o'clock Wednesday night. Frank Kamplain, Al Bernard and Sammy Stept feel that they must have at least two months rest this summer to prepare themselves for the fall season. The boys have promised the management of WJZ that they will rejoin the ranks of the station's entertainers shortly after September 1."

The news item adds the following which presumably had nothing to do with the Record Boys, but is worth quoting for its historical radio interest:

"On a postal card received from Maj. Lester D. Gardner, the editor of Aviation, by Charles W. Popenoe, manager of station WJZ, he makes the statement that WJZ was heard clearly in the ancient city of Jerusalem. The card is postmarked June 3, 1926."

Having written the foregoing, I believe that the reference to WRC indicates that the article was not, as I had thought, taken from a New York paper. I am not familiar with those call letters, but perhaps WRC was a Washington station.

The next brief, clipping is unmistakably from The Billboard:

"Record Boys Sign for 1927. Al Bernard, Frank Kamplain and Sammy Stept, songwriters, record and radio artists, have signed a contract to broadcast every Monday evening over WJZ from 8 to 8.30 p.m., beginning January 3. During each broadcasting period they will be accompanied by a crack orchestra."

This item, you observe, refutes the American Weekly statement, quoted at the beginning of this series, that Al Bernard sang on radio for seven years without getting a cent for his services. It would not have been worth his while, nor that of Kamplain and Stept, to sign a contract to appear each week for nothing. But why was an orchestra needed to supplement Stept's piano?

Now, some discussion about the discs made by the Record Boys. Certainly one, off the beaten path, was Vocalion B15265, on which they sang and played "When a Kid Who Came from the East Side Found a Sweet Society Rose." This pretentiously naive and unsophisticated number, which had only slight popularity, was not one of Bernard and Stept's compositions. It was written by Al Dubin and Jimmy McHugh, and the lyrics celebrated the courtship and marriage of Irving Berlin, greatest popular song writer of his day, to Ellen Mackay, daughter of Clarence Mackay, the Postal Union telegraph magnate. (Mackay afterwards married Anna Case, the Metropolitan Opera soprano and Edison recording favorite. My knowledge of family relationships is shaky, but I suppose that made Anna Berlin's step-mother-in-law). The other side of this disc, which has genuine historical interest of a humble kind, was a Bernard-Stept composition, "When Spring Comes Peeping Through."

"When Spring Comes Peeping Through," a pretty little number, was also issued on Harmony 130-H, coupled with "Come Back, Marguerite," which was not one of Bernard and Stept's compositions but was credited to "Fischer and Bryan." "Marguerite" is an Italian dialect song, and I am unable to convince myself that Bernard sings the lead. The voice and style do not seem to be his on either side of the disc.

Another Harmony disc by the Record Boys, No. 154-H, combines their singing of a Bernard-Stept song, "Hello! Are You There? Hello!" with one of Bernard's superb solo renditions of "Wal, I Swan!" Harmony recordings also appeared under several other labels, including Diva, and I have Diva No. 2465-G, on which the trio records still another opus, "Troo-Le-Oo-Le-Ay," written by the prolific Bernard and Stept, and obviously concocted to display Kamplain's yodeling. The other side contains a comic number, "All Men Are Devils," a Bernard solo which he also sang for Edison.

One of the most frequently recorded Record Boy offerings was "Hokum-Smokum Yodelin' Indian Man," which they did for Edison, Pathe, Vocalion and other companies. The Vocalion, No. 15308, sports still another Bernard-Stept cooperative effort, "Harmonica Joe."

Stept occasionally played the piano for Bernard in records that did not include Kamplain. One was an electrically recorded Vocalion on which Al revived his 1924 success, "Twenty-Five Years From Now." The label credits the composition to Bernard, (Frank) Ferrara and "McHugh" — presumably Jimmy McHugh. The other side is one of the numerous downpour songs suggested by "It Ain't Gonna Rain No Mo'" — Phil Cook's "It Don't Do Nothin' But Rain." Bernard also made an electric Okeh of "Twenty-Five Years" which was issued on No. 4124. There is a guitar accompaniment by an unidentified player, possibly Ferrara. Its coupling is one of Bernard's original ditties, "Times Am Gettin' Hard," which I do not recall having seen elsewhere.

I wish I had thought to ask Al why the original Record Boys "dissolved partnership" late in 1927. Could the incessant arguing which The Billboard said went on among them have been responsible? Probably not, for there is some indication that the parting was friendly. At any rate, Bernard and Stept withdrew, and Kamplain probably became manager of the new trio composed of himself; Tom Ford, baritone, and Lew Cobey, pianist. "Ford" was really Lester O'Keefe, who did a little singing under his right name for Edison. He had what sounds to me like a strong Mid-Western accent and I find his voice and style rather unpleasant.

The new group continued, I suppose, to do radio work and also engaged in a small amount of recording, but their association seems not to have lasted long and probably ended with the 1929 depression. In December, 1927, they appeared on Edison disc No. 52127, singing "Mock the Mocking Bird" (words by Mort Dixon and music by Sammy Stept) and "Try to Behave, Mister Moon."

A few months later the new Record Boys sang four numbers which were issued on two Brunswick double discs. No. 3857, which came out in July, 1928, combined "Hokum Smokum" and another Bernard-Stept song, "Yeedle Deedle Lena." Their being permitted to record these numbers after Bernard and Stept had left the trio seems to indicate that the parting was amicable, but leaves me wondering why Brunswick did not have the original group sing them two years earlier when they were being issued by so many other companies.

In September, No. 3858 offered the trio in the same two songs they had sung for Edison nine months earlier. Again, there is room for wonderment as to why Brunswick was so late. The songs, of course, may have been recorded a long while before they were issued, but held back because they had no special timelines.

Those are all the recordings I have been able to find by the reorganized Record Boys. Meanwhile, whatever his reasons were, Bernard had ceased to be a member of the trio that had been popular on records, in radio and in vaudeville and had returned to his old associate, J. Russel Robinson. Once more "The Dixie Stars" were twinkling together. We shall now consider some of the records they made, both before and after the Record Boys era.

(Continued on page 119)

ELECTRIFY    PLAYER PIANOS
PUMP ORGANS

YOU CAN QUICKLY END TIRESOME FOOT-PUMPING
With a Compact Low-Cost Lee Silent Suction Unit

EASY TO INSTALL
FULLY GUARANTEED
1000'S IN USE

write to:
LEE MUSIC MFG. CO.
52511, Venezia, Ave.
Venice, Calif. 90291    mh57

MISCELLANEOUS MUSICAL ITEMS

PHOTOS! The three most remarkable group photos ever taken of early recording artists: Edison artists of 1900, Edison artists of 1914, and Victor Male Chorus of 1925 (reproduced in HO8-BIES January 1971, October 1970 and July 1970). One 8x10 enlargement for $2, two for $3.50, all 3 for $5. Other 8x10 photos of recording artists available at $2 each: Ada Jones, Billy Murray, Collins, and Harlan, Henry Burr, and many others. Write for list. — Quentin Riggs, 21171 Greenboro Lane, Huntington Beach, Calif. 92644
f34941

NOBODY—The Story of Bert Williams, by Ann Charters. Hardbound edition with illustrations, $2.50 postpaid. — Napco, 133 Main Street, St. Johnsbury, Vermont 05819    mh3414

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

WANTED: Old metal or wooden body guitar with internal resonator cone made by National/Dobro. — Paul Kierney, 271 Tpke. E. Brunswick, N.J. 08816    d3624

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR SALE

MUSIC BOXES! Fantastic large illustrated catalogue of wholesale music boxes, circus organs, nickelodeons, photo-players, reproducing pianos, other automatic instruments. Plus books, recordings, musical gifts. $2 postpaid; $5 subscription ($12 value to next 6 issues. Money-back guarantee if not delighted! — David Bowers, Box 1669D, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90210
api26313

REED ORGANS, melodions, bought, sold repaired. Reads tuned, revoiced replacements. — C. H. Gunzinger, Box 276, Williamsville, VT 05362    ap6846

FOR SALE DOLLS: china, bisque, mache and wax also doll parts. Appointment only. 812-883-2706. — Countryside Doll Hosp., Salem, Ind., R. 2, 47167    ja6657

HARP-PICCOLO Music Box 22" long 6" high. Inlaid floral design on top. Eight classical melodies. Lever-wind, glass inner lid, two-section comb. Fine condition. $675. — Basil's Antiques and Art, 1736 South Main, Salt Lake City, Utah 84115    ja3207

PHONOGRAPHS

WANTED: Silvertone Upright Phonograph, oak, waffle-effect grille, flush motor board. Cecilian table model, mahogany, both circa 1920. Send for photocopy. — Miller, Box 668, Yucaipa, CA. 92399    d3684

PHONOGRAPHS repaired: New spare parts for Edison phonographs. Send stamp for list. Phone: (201) 748-8046. — Gerichten, 23 Waldo Ave., Bloomfield, N.J. 07003    jly124851

"DIRECTORY OF Phonograph and Record Collectors," lists 250 collectors and their wants. $3.50 postpaid, satisfaction guaranteed. Two stamps for free list of antique phonograph catalogs, books, magazines. — Allen H. Koenigsberg, 3400 Snyder, Brooklyn, N.Y. 11203    mh60621

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

V. "The Dixie Stars"

A Bernard-Robinson duet with pronounced individual qualities is "My Sweetie Turned Me Down," on Columbia 389D, issued in 1925. It begins with Bernard saying something to "Russel" and Robinson in return calls him "Albert," as he had on one previously mentioned record. Didn't Robinson, I can't help from wondering, know that Al's first name was Alfred, and if he didn't, why hadn't Bernard told him? The catchy song is the lament of a poor soul trying to pretend that he doesn't care because his best girl has rejected him, but letting his true sentiments betray themselves, in the laughable lines near the end:

"While in this terrible rage
I think I'll go on the stage.
I'll sing 'Mammy' and I'll get shot—
But what do I care? What do I care?
My sweetie turned me down!"

That reference to singing "Mammy" shows how weary everybody had become of the tidal wave of "mammy songs" that "My Mammy" had touched off in 1921. And, incidentally, "My Sweetie Turned Me Down" was the work of Gus Kahn and Walter Donaldson, whose souls bore the guilt of having written "My Mammy."

The reverse side is "New York Ain't New York Anymore. It too is labeled as by Bernard and Robinson, but after listening I find myself not fully convinced that the singer really is our friend Al. If it is, the early electric process has thickened his voice—distorted it perhaps would be the better term—virtually beyond recognition.

The lyric tells of seeing George M. Cohan standing on Broadway, tearfully lamenting that his favorite street has changed for the worst. (What oh what? would he think now of Times Square?). Billy Rose and Lew Brown, who wrote the words to Ray Henderson's music, must have known better, but the meter compels the singer to pronounce "Cohan" as "Co-hen," whereas the Irish George M. called his family name "Co-han."

If the artist actually is Bernard, he achieves a startling tour de force by shucking his natural New Orleans accent and reciting a lament for Broadway's past glories in tough Bowery-like tones that are excellent mimicry of the way George M. Cohan talked nasally, from the side of his mouth. Since the label says the disc is by Bernard and Robinson, "The Dixie Stars," I suppose we must take its word, but there's something wrong with the recording if it is. The piano sound is as distorted as the vocal. As a novelty, however, the record is one all Al Bernard fans should own.

An attractive, but not well known melody is "Never Gettin' No Place Blues," written by Bernard, Frey (presumably Hugo Frey) and Robinson, and issued on Brunswick 2689. Bernard's singing invests it with a genuine touch of pathos, almost entirely devoid of comic effect. Robinson accompanies him at the piano, but they also have the backing of an orchestra. The coupling is "Blue-Eyed Sally," which, as has been several times mentioned, was one of the most successful Bernard and Robinson compositions. "Never Gettin' No Place," also sung and played by Bernard and Robinson, likewise appeared on Columbia 309-D, with another Bernard song, "Birmingham Papa," for its teammate.

Worthy of mention, too, among "Dixie Stars" recordings is the Cameo of a nostalgic song about World War I, which you have already been told Al sang for Edison with help from a male chorus, "What Has Become of Hinky Dinky Parlay Voo?" It is No. 572 and is combined with "Believe Me" by the Radio Franks—Frank Wright and Frank Bessinger.

A Brunswick record which I have not heard that combines two Bernard and Robinson duets is No. 4121. One side is "Bless You! Sister." No composer's name is given, but I suspect it was the work of Bernard. The other face is "By the Watermelon Vine," which I imagine is the melodious ballad of that name written by Thomas S. Allen in 1904.

I have reserved for the last one other double-faced duo by Bernard and Robinson, which I feel deserves extended discussion, for I consider both sides to be among the funniest numbers Bernard ever recorded. Robinson takes the male role formerly filled so brilliantly by Ernest Hare and does splendidly. One side is "My Time is Charlie's Now," and the other, "It Takes a Cincinnati Yellow to Satisfy a Georgia Brown." Brunswick discs of this period omitted the names of authors and composers of popular songs, but it's virtually a certainty that Bernard not only wrote the highly entertaining dialog, but also contrived the lyrics to Robinson's ear-tickling tunes. I feel that these duets belong in the great Bernard and Hare tradition, so shall quote the conversational give-and-take in both. The talk, with blustering threats of violence, is about the "roughest" of that in any of Bernard's humorous skits.

"My Time is Charlie's," background is one of humble life. Bernard portrays a washerwoman who, after three years with her husband (Henry Jones?) has firmly determined that she wants nothing more to do with him and that thenceforth her affections will be lavished upon "Charlie." (Perhaps this is a throwback to "Charlie Sampson" who was described in "You're My Gal" as having been born in Texas and reared in Tennessee, to which "Henry" replied, "An' he'll die in Alabama if he messes with me.") Not even the husband's protests that he has brought his spouse so much washing that she has become known as "the Queen of Suds and Tubs" quenches her ire. During the singing she concedes: "You totes good washin," I'll confess, but when compared to Charlie you're an awful mess."

Robinson, as he, instigates the repartee:

He—Woman, you is jes' fixin' to git yo'self battered up! My fist is jes' itchin' to leave its trademark of love on dat thick lower lip!

She—Try it! Jes' try it! You know whut dey sav: 'He who hesitates is beyon' redemption!

He—I'm gonna redeem you! But on second thought, I'm gonna protect myself ag'inst yo' corroded skin. I'm jes' nacherly gonna git myself a young oak tree an' beat you down to a black puddle!

She—Why, you lynx-eyed zebra, take dat! (The sound of something thrown is heard.)

He—Jes' missed me! On third thought, I'm gonna take my knife dat I hunts lions with an' strip yo' ears from dat oblong haid you totes aroun'!

She—I don't throwed my bes' washbo'd atcha! Now I'm gonna take this here clothesline an' put a noose aroun' yo' neck an' play in an' out de winders widya!

He—You'll need help, so run out to de zoo an' git Charlie an' de rest of dat monkey family outa de cage!

She—Don't lude to Charlie dat way, you baboon-faced slicker!

He—Lay low on dat slicker stuff, gal. I know not what it means.

She—You know what I mean, you fly slicker.

He—Who's a fly slicker?

She—You, dat's who! Take dat! (Sound of a crash.) I hope de oil in dat lamp lights de way to yo' uncle, de devil himself!

He—Well, I'm goin', but I will return, an' when I do it will be too bad!

She—J'n huh. If my Charlie sees ya—sees ya—it sho' will be too bad!

He—Have my slippers laid out an' my easy chair settin' by de fire, 'cause when I git through with you dere's only gonna be me an' you an' de graveyard left.

She—Dat'll be fine, 'cause you can tell yo' frien's dat I've buried de last man!

He—Aw now, honey—

The orchestra strikes up and they continue their acrimonious discussion to its accompaniment. As it ends, however, she is still ungoddingly determined to replace her laundry-toting husband with the scintillating "Charlie."

In an article submitted to HOBBIES more than a year ago, but not yet published, I pointed out that Bernard did something unusual in this recording. He "fluffed" by repeating "sees ya" and wasn't required to make the record over. I have previously mentioned his singing "brucking boncho" for "bucking bronco" in "Timbuctoo." In a minstrel record, to be considered later, he speaks of "blowing off the foam" instead of "foam." I am not sure about the words I have written as "fly slicker." Perhaps they should be "sly slicker." The meaning of "fly slicker" eludes me.

As "It Takes a Cincinnati Yellow" begins, the feminine half of the duo is at great pains to be explicit as she, with devastating frankness, informs her deep-voiced admirer that his love is hopeless because he cannot compare favorably with an Ohio Adonis whom she has recently met. There are a few words in the dialog that I never have been sure I understood:

She—Refleck befo' you argues with me, refleck, 'cause I am a woman dat has had de picasures!

He—Woman, unfold yo' remarks! Make dem light, 'cause when you talk dere is a dark error!

She—In plain words, I went, I came an' has been conquered!

He—You been readin' history?

She—No, but I met de man dat wrote de hist'ry of love!

He—Whom? Romeo?

She—Romeo! Dis man I 'hudes to is a Donna Wanna par excellence (?) an' his way o' coolin' makes a turtle dove soun' like a bullfrog!

He—Woman, you is gonna keep dis ti-radin' or till you finds yo'self laid out in yo' fun real dress!

She—I fear thee not, dark ages, I fear thee not! I am a woman dat has met de man dat taught Cupid how to use his bow an' arrow!

He—An' while we is holdin' dis euology on dis said Antonius, may I inquire who an' whom an' where an' when dis sudden combustion of poetic extravaganza is?

She—Dat you may, blacker than all others, dat you may!

He—I know I'm black, but dat's not de question, O Lily of Midnight!

She—Well, ask on, darkness! I should have said, Africa darkness! Interrogate me if you wish!

He—Whenceforth is dis pusson dat you have put upon yo' sweet Georgia cruller?

She—Draw up yo' chair so you'll be puff-lickly at ease while I unloads myself an' mojolates!

He—Mojulates?

She—Yes, mojolates, 'cause I'm like a songbird in de radio when I gits to goin'—I must be mojolated.

He—Unload yo' baggage, woman. I am to say the least, affectedated.

The song begins with her account of a trip to Cincinnati, where she met an irresistible "Buckeye man." The "Cincinnati yellow" could not read or write, but his brand of "lovin'" was just what the enamoured "wench" required. Her Georgia lover pitifully says, "Why, gal, you know I'd beg for you; I'd even steal." She retorts, "But, Papa, you ain't never had no sex appeal!" He tries once more, asking, "Don't I do black bottom? Don't I sing dem blues?" only to be told that the distant charmer has "got lots of talents dat he's never used!" There the colloquy ends.

I am not at all sure about the part which I have quoted as "Donna Wana par excellence." I take it that she is mispronouncing the name of "Don Juan," the legendary captivator of fair ladies, but I may have misunderstood. A little farther down, what sounds like "euology" may be a mispronunciation of "eulogy" and I doubt that "dis said Antonius" is accurate. "Africa darkness" and "affectedated" may also not be correct. These skits, although earthy, are not off-color and they certainly are funny. Bernard's comedy always was clean.

Having reached this point, I have decided that a few more installments are necessary to tell about Al Bernard's later life and to quote from his letters. Here, then, we bivouac until succeeding months.

(To be continued)

CENTURY HOUSE ANTIQUES

Box 802 Alfred, New York 14802
Tel.: 607-587-3322

Loop and Dewdrops Goblet	$ 16.00
Atlas cordial (6)	each 16.00
Dia. & Teardrop Cruet, matching stopper	22.00
Panelled Daisy Celery	24.00
Torpedo salt & pepper shakers	25.00
Barberry covered sugar (shell final)	32.00
Liberty Bell Goblet	35.00
Bellflower compote SV 8" low standard	45.00
Northwood's Drapery & Pillar Rose Bowl, pastel, s. N	100.00
Pink Staffordshire 10 1/4" soup plate "The Bosphorus" by R. Hall & Co.	12.00
Pink Staff. cup pl. "Canova" by T. Mayer	15.00
Black transfer 7" plate "Monte Video, Conn."	30.00
Pink Staffordshire 15 1/2" platter. "Caledonia" imp. Adams	65.00
Buffalo Pottery Robin Hood Jug (Altman p. 47)	165.00
NYS residents add sales tax. Postage & insurance extra.	dp

BETTY TAIT

128 Richbell Rd.
Mamaroneck, N.Y. 10543

"KING ARTHUR & HIS KNIGHTS": Frith. 1932 Garden. 406 p. 4 color SCHOOVER. $3.00

Beautiful Edition: "CHRISTMAS CAROL". Dickens. Superb 12 color; profuse bl. & wh. Everett Shinn. 1938 Garden City. $7.00

"MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH": Hegan. 1914 Century. $2.00

"ANDERSEN'S FAIRY TALES": 1945 Grosset/Dunlap. 8 fullp. color & many others Arthur Szuk. $4.00

Large, heavy: "THE ILLUSTRATED TREASURY OF CHILDREN'S LITERATURE": Martignoni. 1955 Grosset/Dunlap. 512 pages. Color; bl. & wh. profusely illustr. Greenaway, Rackham, Cox, Gruelle etc. $8.00

"TALES FROM SHAKESPEARE": Lamb. 1925 John C. Winston. 4 color & bl. & whites Frank Godwin. $2.00

"PATRIOTIC AMERICAN STORIES": Foote. 1937 John C. Winston. 4 color, bl. & whites Ferris, Bergey, Coleman. $3.00

"TREASURE ISLAND": Stevenson. 1932 — Windermere Series. 8 color etc. Milo Winter. $3.00

"HO-MING, GIRL OF NEW CHINA": Lewis. 1934 John C. Winston. Color; bl. & wh. Kurt Wise. $3.00

"THE GOOD SHEPHERD": Gunnarsson. 1910 First Edit. Bobbs-Merrill. DJ. Illustr. Masha. 84 p. $3.00

"MUSIC APPRECIATION WITH THE VICTROLA FOR CHILDREN": 1923 Victor Talking Machine Co. 288 p. Illustr. color, bl. & wh. $3.00

Dollbooks:

"Miss Flora McFlimsey's Birthday": Mariana. 1954 Lothrop. $3.00

"Miss Flora McFlimsey & Little Laughing Water": 1954. $3.00

"Miss Flora McFlimsey's Christmas Eve": 1956 (largish ink-exlibris). $3.00

"TOY ROSE" (Doll): Pamela Bianco. 1957 Lippincott; First Edition. Ex-library but very exc. $4.00

"The Yearling": Rawlings. 1938 Scribners FIRST. illustr. Shenton. $3.00

"Alice's Adventure In Wonderland": Carroll. 1923 Lippincott. Large. 8 color Gertrude Kay; many orig. by Tenniel. $7.00 dml

Large "THE BOYS FROM DICKENS". Sweetser. 1951 Harper. 223 pages. 11 fullp. illus. George Alfred Williams. Superb. $8.00

EXPERIENCES OF A BOTTLE COLLECTOR

(Cont. from page 121)

family had used over the years.

Eventually, though, the finds became scarcer, and I realized that my explorations were coming to an end. However, the memory of the many pleasant "digs" I had there will linger on for years to come.

Recently I have been exploring a city dump, abandoned since the early 1940s. Such dumps offer a wider variety of finds, but little feeling of personal acquaintance with those who have "donated" them. In time, though, such explorations will give an observant bottle hunter a knowledge of a community's past tastes in foods, medicines, cosmetics, beverages, implement, tools and toys. Which, by the way, is a facet of local history usually ignored by historians.

Bottle hunting, it should be added in closing, is a relatively safe hobby. Gloves should be worn to protect the hands from cuts due to coming in contact with sharp pieces of broken glass. Occasionally one may dig up a snake. But then he usually is more scared of you than you are of him, and will make a hasty retreat. Personally, my most painful accident resulted from disturbing a nest of exceedingly ill-tempered bumble bees. That hat-flogging melee resulted in the temporary loss of my eye-glasses and the acquisition of sundry swellings, including one on the end of my nose.

CAM-CAR FAMILY ENTERPRISES

Now Anyone Can Enjoy the Thrill of Digging for Valuable Buried Bottles

PLAY BOTTLE HUNT

A unique new family game recreating the thrills, joys, and hazards of one of the fastest growing hobbies in America today: the search for valuable, historic, buried bottles.

Using miniature glass replicas of classic antique bottles as playing pieces, you'll have hours of fun on the beautifully illustrated game board going from one digging site to another while combatting bees, skunks, snakes, and poison ivy.

The Ideal Christmas Gift For All Ages

Send $6.95 plus $1.00 postage and handling to:

BOTTLE HUNT

BOX 89J COSCOB, CONN. 06807

dp

HAZEL CLARK

268 Claremont Ave.
Montclair, N.J. 07042

Pattern Glass

1. Ashburton 2 wines ea. 30.
2. Honeycomb gob. Flint 25.
3. Sugar shaker Opal Cranberry swirl 55.
4. Tullip Sawtooth egg cup 22.
5. Rare dark blue brilliant sharp, old colored Daisy & Button brilliant sharp, old colored bone dish 15. Canary boat shap. 10" bowl 28. Amber 5 panelled saucers ea. 8. D & Button slippers. Blue 5" with Cat Head, clear 5 1/2. Amber 4 1/2 pat. 1886 ea. 16.
6. Thousand eye cruet 10.50
7. Horse trough ft. blue 15.
8. Frosted circle plain 15.
9. Cupid & Psyche ped. sauce 8.
10. Jewel & Dewdrop handled juice 8.50
11. Bohemian, Czech, from old stock, red glass Cut & engraved, pattern Deer & Castle. Bird & Castle in Rhein Wines, gob. cordial set pr Decanters, Tumblers. Write.

Shipping extra.

dp

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

AL BERNARD

PART XI
By JIM WALSH

I. Radio Minstrels

As a confirmed skeptic, I have an almost unshakable lack of belief in the supernatural. I place no credence in reports of landings on this planet by visitants from outer space. I do not believe in spiritistic "phenomena" or in ghosts. Yet things happen in my old "mansion" that batter this hard-headed incredulity, and make me wonder sometimes if I am entertaining unawares those prankish blobs of ectoplasm known by persons who believe in such things as poltergeists.

When I began this Al Bernard series, which will be concluded in two or three months, I thought I recalled that I had in an old scrapbook a newspaper clipping telling of Bernard, Percy Hemus and Steve Porter being starred in a radio minstrel series. I made several searches, but although I found a number of scrapbooks I couldn't locate the one supposed to shield the clipping. At length, one bitterly cold day a week or so ago, I went into a storage closet adjoining an unheated back room, and did some more rummaging around. Again I came upon an ancient scrapbook or two, but couldn't find the item that I thought I recollected. My hands became numb, and I returned to my bedroom and snuggled beneath an electric blanket, seeking to dispel the chill from my shivering frame.

Less than an hour later I glanced at the floor below the bed and saw lying there what appeared to be a yellowed page from an old scrapbook. With idle curiosity, I picked it up, and there, staring at me was the clipping for which I had searched off and on for weeks! This discovery was, and is, uncanny because the page certainly hadn't been there 60 minutes earlier, much less during all the weeks I had been looking for it, and I hadn't brought it out of the closet. Where did it come from? For the moment I was tempted to believe that the playful poltergeists had tired of teasing me by keeping the old scrapbook concealed, and had decided to prove their kind hearts by leaving beside my bed the one page I needed. Of course they were delighted to baffle me or they wouldn't have been poltergeists!

Whatever the explanation for the page's mysterious emergence, and I have so far been unable to decide upon a rational one, the clipping I wanted to quote apparently is from a 1928 New York Herald Tribune, and is as follows:

FAMOUS END MAN. Percy Hemus is shown teaching American sailors to sing, in this picture reproduced from the Victor record supplement for April, 1918. Originally a distinguished concert baritone, Hemus was one end man in a 1928 radio minstrel show. Al Bernard was the other, and Steve Porter was interlocutor.

"New Minstrel Radio Series To Open Soon . . . Hemus, Bernard, Porter Featured in WJZ Tuesday Evening Broadcasts."

"A weekly series of minstrel programs will be inaugurated on Station WJZ and a hook-up of associated chain stations on September 4, continuing every Tuesday at 9:30 p.m. thereafter."

"Percy Hemus, Al Bernard and Steve Porter, minstrel comedians of long experience, will be featured in the series. An orchestra, under the direction of Hugo Mariani, soloists and a male quartet will support the entertainers."

"Guest soloists will appear occasionally, while the members of the entertainment cast will be featured in new specialties each week. The feature will be known as the Dutch Masters' Minstrels."

"Although each program will present a regular three-part minstrel show, made up of the usual opening, the olio and the after-piece, the specialties that will be introduced will give each week's presentation a separate flavor."

"The program will open with the band tuning up just before 'the rise of the curtain' and as it proceeds the minstrels swing into an opening chorus of an old familiar tune. Much of the first part of the program will be devoted to the amusing experiences of the two end-men, Hemus and Bernard, as told by them at the insistence of Interlocutor Porter."

"As in all old-time minstrel shows, there will be a real olio, made up of vocal and instrumental specialties. Banjos and tambourines, will be in evidence. Guest artists and the featured members of the cast will be heard in songs which will range from such perennial favorites as 'When You and I Were Young, Maggie' and 'Asleep in the Deep' to hits from the latest Broadway productions. The orchestral music will be varied."

"Comedy skits will take place in the afterpiece. Carson Robison is scheduled to present 'The Arkansas Traveler' in the inaugural program, and he and other entertainers well known to radio and theatre audiences will be featured in following programs."

This certainly seems to have been a rather ambitious undertaking, and there is no question that star talent had been recruited. Steve Porter was one of the real veterans of record making, having begun in 1895 while still engaged in a successful vaudeville career. For a time in the late 1890's he and Russell Hunting were engaged in turning out the crude types of moving pictures made in those days. Both soon afterward went to England, where Porter became recording manager of a small recording firm — probably Nicole Freres. He then went to India as manager of the Gramophone Company's Calcutta recording plant. Apparently feeling homesick, he returned to the States in 1906 and soon was again a successful recording artist, whose comic talking specialties about "Flanagan" were almost as popular as Cal Stewart's "Uncle Josh" monologs. He was a member of the Rambler Minstrel Company, consisting, besides himself, of Billy Murray, Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan; became baritone of the Peerless Quartet and left it for a similar place in the American quartet. Porter had an inventive turn of mind. He originated and manufactured a hearing device called the Portophone, which was sometimes advertised in the Saturday Evening Post (he is said to have developed it to relieve his mother-in-law's deafness) and he designed a system of lateral disc recording which he either presented or sold to Thomas

A. Edison, Inc., but which that company never used. Still later he was baritone of the Harmonizers Quartet. He died in New York, aged 72, on January 13, 1936.

Hemus, like Porter, a baritone, was born in Auckland, New Zealand, in 1880, and died December 22, 1945, in the first aid room of the RCA building in New York. He came to this country at an early age and lived for a time in Kansas. By 1906 he was making Columbia and Imperial records under the assumed name of Charles Gordon. For five years he was soloist at St. Patrick's Cathedral, and also appeared in concert with such artists as Ernestine Schumann-Heink and Louise Homer. During World War I he was song leader at the Pelham Bay training camp and later appeared on the stage in such productions as "The Love Song" and "The Vagabond King." Hemus, who was one of Elliot Shaw's vocal instructors made a number of Victor records from 1908 to 1919, and a larger total for Pathe. I suspect that he was also Turner Roe, another Pathe baritone.

In view of his successful concert experiences, being a minstrel end man must have seemed a "come down" to Hemus, but he was equipped with his share of theatrical "ham." In 1913 he recorded for Victor a two-part recitation of Poe's poem, "The Raven," on a 12-inch double-disc, and he "hammed" that unfortunate poem, to Gladys Craven's piano accompaniment, even worse than DeWolf Hopper mangled "Casey at the Bat." "The Raven" is one of the most ludicrous records I have ever heard.

My old friend, the late Cecil C. Smith, of Perham, Minn., who was a devout admirer of Collins and Harlan, once wrote me that when initial plans of the Dutch Masters Cigar Company to sponsor a radio minstrel series were published, it was announced that the end men would be Collins and Harlan, and Porter would serve as interlocutor. Cecil said he was bitterly disappointed when he tuned in the opening program and found that Bernard and Hemus had been substituted for his favorites. Probably the reason was that Collins' health was failing and he was about to retire, or had already gone to live in Tice, Fla. Had the original plan been carried out, with Collins, Harlan and Porter, it would have meant the revival of the Phonograph Rambler Minstrel Company of more than 20 years before except that Billy Murray would not be included.

I don't know how long the radio minstrel series was presented, but doubt that it was for more than one season. In the early 1930's Dutch Masters sponsored a program starring Billy Murray, Walter Scanlan and Marcella Shields, and the only minstrel program of any consequence was the Sinclair presentation with Gene Arnold, "Big Bill" Childs, Cliff Soubier, Fritz Clark and others.

Bernard seems to have done almost no recording after the 1929 depression began, but I have one record by him that came out somewhere in the early 1930's. It is a Melotone, made by the Brunswick Recording Corporation, which had taken over the record business of the Brunswick-Balke-Coller Company. On one side Al sings his own composition, "Stay Away From My Man," and on the reverse another of his tunes, "That's What I'm Gonna Do To You." He is assisted in both numbers by artists who get no label credit. In "Stay Away" a man with a high voice takes a contrasting "wench" role as he and Bernard squabble over a male person coveted by both. In "That's What I'm Going To Do To You" there is a deep-voiced singer who may have been Russel Robinson, Wilfred Glenn or somebody else. The piano accompaniment, similarly, may have been by Robinson or perhaps Sam Sept, but I believe Sept had gone to Hollywood to write for the movies before this record was made. The "tough" dialog on both sides is funny and in the Bernard-Hare tradition. But public taste was changing and there was little sale left for records of that type.

Al Bernard, however, was not through with broadcast minstrel work. We shall find him popping up again years later, but on TV instead of radio. On the Melotone record label, by the way, instead of being called "The Boy From Dixie" or "the Gentleman From The South," he is referred to as "the Minstrel Man."

II. A Letter from Al Bernard

While I was still living in Marion, Va., I must have written a letter to Bernard, expressing boyish enthusiasm for his recorded work, but received no immediate reply. After I had gone to live in Johnson City, Tenn., however, I received a note which had been forwarded from my Marion address. The letterhead had a photo of Bernard at the upper left, and to the right the statement that he had made recordings for all phonograph companies and was a writer of popular songs. In the top center was his name, followed by "The Gentleman from the South" and below that "Radio's Black Face Singing Comedian" and his address, 345 West 55th Street, New York City. Above his picture was his phone number, CO-lumbus 5-6311.

Although the letter appears to have been personally typed with a blue ribbon, it was essentially a form, which had no bearing on, and was not a reply to, whatever I had previously written. Instead, it was a "pitch" to sell the sheet music of his latest song. Under date of January 27, 1936, the letter said:

"Mr. Ulysses Walsh,
"Marion, Virginia.
"Dear Radio & Record Friend:
"Just a line to let you know that my new song, "Sixty-Seven Men in Savannah," is now out on the music counters. Sure wish that you would call on your local music dealer and have them (sic) play it for you. Please tell your friends.
"In the event that your dealer cannot

(Continued on page 119)

ELECTRIFY PLAYER PIANOS
PUMP ORGANS

YOU CAN QUICKLY END TIRESOME FOOT-PUMPING
With a Compact Low-Cost Lee Silent Suction Unit

EASY TO INSTALL
FULLY GUARANTEED
1000'S IN USE

write to
LEE MUSIC MFG. CO.
625H, Venezia, Ave.
Venice, Calif. 90291

mh571

MISCELLANEOUS MUSICAL ITEMS

PHOTOS! The three most remarkable group photos ever taken of early recording artists: Edison artists of 1900, Edison artists of 1914, and Victor Male Chorus of 1925 (reproduced in HOBBIES January 1971, October 1970 and July 1970). One 8x10 enlargement for $2, two for $3.50, all 3 for $5. Other 8x10 photos of recording artists available at $2 each: Ada Jones, Billy Murray, Collins, and Harlan, Henry Burr, and many others. Write for list. — Quentin Riggs, 21171 Greenboro Lane, Huntington Beach, Calif. 92646
f34941

NOBODY—The Story of Bart Williams, by Ann Charters. Hardbound edition with illustrations, $2.50 postpaid. — Napco, 133 Main Street, St. Johnsbury, Vermont 05819
mh3414

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR SALE

MUSIC BOXES! Fantastic large illustrated catalogue of wholesale music boxes, circus organs, nickelodeons, photo-players, reproducing pianos, other automatic instruments. Plus books, recordings, musical gifts. $2 postpaid; $5 subscription ($12 value to next 6 issues). Money-back guarantee if not delighted! — David Bowers, Box 1669D, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90210
ap126313

REED ORGANS, melodions, bought, sold repaired. Reeds tuned, revoiced replacements. — C. H. Gunzinger, Box 276, Williamsville, Vt. 05362
ap6846

HARP-PICCOLO Music Box 22" long 6" high, inlaid floral design on top. Eight classical melodies. Lever-wind, glass inner lid, two-section comb. Fine condition. $675. — Basil's Antiques and Art, 1736 South Main, Salt Lake City, Utah 84115
ja3207

PHONOGRAPHS

PHONOGRAPHS repaired: New spare parts for Edison phonographs. Send stamp for list. Phone: (201) 748-8046. — Gerichten, 23 Waldo, Ave., Bloomfield, N.J. 07003
jly124851

"DIRECTORY OF Phonograph and Record Collectors," lists 250 collectors and their wants. $3.50 postpaid, satisfaction guaranteed. Two stamps for free list of antique phonograph catalogs, books, magazines. — Allen H. Koenigsberg, 3400 Snyder, Brooklyn, N.Y. 11203
mh60621

BINDERS

The wealth of information contained in each issue of HOBBIES is too valuable to be thrown around with consequent danger of loss.

Holds 12 issues.

Price each $4.00

HOBBIES Magazine

1006 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill. 60605

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

supply you with copies and you would like to have a copy. I will be glad to take your order direct. Forty cents per copy, or my 'Al Bernard's Complete Minstrel Book' and a copy of my new song both sent postpaid for $1.10.

"Should you order from me and wish your copies autographed, please state in your letter.

"Thanking you in advance, I am,

"Sincerely,

AB/h "AL BERNARD."

I don't recall that I ordered an autographed copy. But I wish now that I had. That letter was the last I ever heard of the "Sixty-Seven Men" song. It was not one of Al's successes.

III. Meeting Al Bernard

After receiving this rather impersonal letter, almost five years went by during which I cannot recall having heard of, or from, Al Bernard. Then, as I have often mentioned in these pages, I took my first trip to New York in October, 1940, to spend two weeks with Billy Murray at his home in Freeport. I arrived on Friday, October 11, and on the following Monday went to the National Broadcasting Company studios. Walter Scanlan took me into a room where a radio transcription was being made of a program called "Harlem Quiz" — one of the innumerable questions and answers shows of that time. Walter pointed out Irving Kaufman, who was short, freckled and rather bald, and also showed me Al Bernard.

Most of the artists taking part in the recording, or it may have been only a rehearsal, were standing in a line. Al was near the bottom end of the line and Irving near the top. I retained an impression that Bernard was rather short — perhaps about five feet seven — and that he had light sandy hair. I believe he was wearing glasses, but I don't think Kaufman was. None of the other performers were mentioned by name, but there was a woman whose part was to cackle hysterically at the jokes and, as I have said in an article not yet published, I have wondered if she might have been the laughing specialist, Sally Stembler.

When the time came for a concerted number to be sung, Al moved up from the end of the line and stood directly behind Irving. I observed that he held a lighted cigaret all the time he sang. This surprised me because the pictures I had seen of him smoking always showed him with a cigar. I felt that the fumes from the cigaret couldn't be good for his throat or the voices of the other artists.

When the performance was over, Walter led me up to Irving, but Al, who seemed to be in a hurry, as though he had to keep an engagement, had begun walking rapidly away. "Irving," Walter said, "here's one of your admirers — Jim Walsh."

Irving started and a surprised look came into his eyes. "From Tennessee?" he asked. (I had written him several letters from Johnson City and he had sent me autographed photos of himself). "That's right," I said.

Irving sprang into action. He started running toward Bernard, and exclaimed: "Al! Al! Come back here a minute! Here's somebody I want you to meet!" I thought Al looked rather reluctant to return, but he did, and Irving told him my name and where I lived, then added: "And he writes the most marvelous letters!"

"And I've written to you," I told Al. His reply seemed rather snappish, and I was certain he was under some sort of strain. "Well, I answered them, didn't I?" he asked. I told him he did without mentioning that the only thing I had received from him was not an answer to what I had written, but an effort to sell one of his songs.

Al left a moment later without my having had a chance to become really acquainted, but I couldn't expect him to stay when there was obviously something he needed to be doing. I promised Irving that I would try to call on him the ensuing Thursday at his home, but wasn't able to do it because Billy Murray and Jimmy Martindale had made plans to take me to the World's Fair. I proved a poor sightseer, for my feet soon developed blisters and I became sick from the overheated air of an exhibit showing how automobile tires were made. Billy, who had the endurance of a blacksmith, which his father had been, was keen to go on walking miles more when I was completely fagged out and had to beg off from further traipsing. I was glad when we left the exhibition center in a special bus, but suffered — to Billy and Jimmy's exquisite delight — a spell of acute embarrassment when a heavily made-up fat woman, complaining of the cold, asked permission to warm herself by snuggling up under my warm overcoat, then made an unsuccessful effort to "date" me that night. For no discernible reason she called me "Sailor," but I had seen an ocean for the first time in my life when I arrived in Freeport.

Another eight years were to elapse before I again saw Al Bernard, for the second and last time, and only a few months before his death. As I have explained earlier, this was at the September, 1948, John Bieling Day party in Garden City, Long Island. I was so busy giving newspaper and radio people information about the party that I had scant opportunity to talk with the artists whom I had been wanting to meet; however, I did manage a few minutes with Al. His face was lined with pain — he told me phlebitis was causing him a great deal of suffering — and those eight years had greatly changed his appearance, but I decided that he was somewhat taller than I had remembered, perhaps about five feet nine or ten. His voice was unaltered from the old recording days, and he revealed when he sang "My Dawg!" and "Oh Joe, Please Don't Go." He presented me with an autographed photo, and, as I have already related, asked me to play his records on my Walsh's Wax Works radio program, but not to use those containing expressions that would be offensive to black listeners. Because, I suppose, of his physical afflictions, he seemed almost painfully serious, seldom smiled and there was no trace in his talk of the exuberant fun of his earlier, record-making days. Nevertheless, although Al looked ill, I was shocked to learn of his death on the following March 9.

(To be continued)

OBITUARY

FRANK J. TART

Frank J. Tart, St. Augustine, Fla., a member of the Board of Trustees of the Lightner Museum of Hobbies, since its inception in that city 25 years ago, passed away on October 22 at his home.

Mr. Tart once served his city as mayor, and he also was on the city commission in various civic capacities through the years.

Since the time that O. C. Lightner, publisher of HOBBIES Magazine and well known collector, negotiated with the City of St. Augustine, to accept the Museum for the City in trust, Mr. Tart had been an enthusiastic member of the museum board.

Mr. Tart and other fellow St. Augustinians, including the then mayor, other members of the city commission, and the then president of the St. Augustine Historical Society, spent a long week-end in Chicago visiting the museum and Mr. Lightner.

The Lightner collections then were housed in a three-story Victorian house on South Michigan Avenue, Chicago. The landmark home had previously been the subject of a chapter in the book on old Chicago houses by John Drury, a noted Chicago newspaper man.

The Lightner collections filled the house beautifully and appropriately. Collections were vast and included comprehensive categories of Rogers groups, coins, stamps, jewelry, Indian relics, old advertising art, musical instruments, one of the world's most outstanding crystal collections, etc. etc.

Mr. Tart's great enthusiasm for the Lightner collections and their importance in the history and art field on that original visit, was reflected through the years of his service on the Board of Trustees of the Museum. He was a friend of the Museum and collectors everywhere.

Survivors of our friend include his wife, Mrs. Virginia Claire Tart, St. Augustine; two sisters, Mrs. John H. McManus, Monroe, N.C., Mrs. Leland McManus, Monroe, N.C., Mrs. Leland E. Thomas, St. Augustine; two brothers, Walter H. Tart, St. Augustine, Wallace H. Tart, Orlando; and several nieces and nephews.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

AL BERNARD

PART XII
By JIM WALSH

III. "Dear Al" and "Dear Jim"

That meeting at Garden City between Al Bernard and me took place because I had written to Al a few months earlier, sending the letter to the address he had used in 1936. I told him about the forthcoming John Bieling Day honoring early recording artists and asked him to be present. He replied on a blue letterhead, with "Al Bernard, Radio's Minstrel Man, Author-Composer" at the top center. To the left was his address, 305 West 45th Street, New York 19, and to the right his phone number, Circle 6-3555. At the bottom of the page was "Minstrel Shows Coached and Produced," and down the left hand margin was printed: "Scripts—Minstrel First Parts—Afterpieces—Monologues—Black Face—Rube—Hill Billy—Eccentric—STUMP SPEECHES—COMEDY SERMONS—DOUBLE ACTS for Male and Female—MINSTREL END MEN SONGS—Special Material for Stage and Radio." Obviously, Bernard was still keying his "show biz" activities to the fading Minstrel art.

In quoting from his letters, beginning with this one, of June 8, 1948, I shall use only parts that I consider of general interest. Accurate typing and correct spelling were not Al's strong points, so I shall also make corrections where they seem called for. He wrote:

"Dear Jim: Yours of June 2 just received this morning. This was due to the fact that you mailed same to my old address on 55th Street. I have been away from there now some 12 years. It was great to get your letter, and thank you very much for all the nice things you say about me.

"As you will note from the attached literature, I write minstrel shows for clubs all over the U.S.A., keeping the spirit of minstrelsy alive.

"Just before Petrillo put the ban on recordings, I made a complete minstrel show for Celebrity Records, which they intend releasing this coming season. . . . It is made up of an album (four sides), two recordings, and it has everything in it from the quarter, gags, jokes, and songs, ballads and trombone solo. The two records run about 13 minutes and make up a swell show. I shall advise when they are released. Incidentally, I just recorded some records for my personal use, and was wondering if you could run them and see what the reactions would be in the way of mail, etc. Anyway, it will give you a good idea of how much better after so long a time I am doing my particular stuff. If you think well of the idea I will send them on to you.

"Regarding the Affair, you can just bet I will be there . . . I just recently had my minstrel show on television (WABD), which went over very good indeed, and I am told that we will go back again in September. Anyway, regardless, I am sure I will be there and talk over old times with you.

"By the way, I am giving you the name of a collector who is also a great admirer of my recordings—Quentin Riggs, 2035 N.W. 81st St., Oklahoma City, Okla.

AL BERNARD

CHARLES HART
(Upper left)

ELLIOTT SHAW
(Upper right)

PAGE OF STARS. The photo reproduced here from a 1919 Aeolian-Vocalion record catalog is probably the first of Al Bernard to be used in any phonograph publication. Also included are the popular duet team of Charles Hart and Elliott Shaw. The latter died in August, 1973, at the age of 86.

"Just how many records have you of mine? I hope you have my recording (Brunswick). "What the Engine Done," also "Bill Bailey, Won't You Please Go (sic) Home?" These went over very big; and, of course, "St. Louis Blues." I made "St. Louis" for about 18 different companies. In fact, I was the first to record it on any record, back in 1919. Handy and I are still good friends . . . He is now publishing my new song, "Take Your Sins to the Devil," and I expect copies this week. If there is any live talent on your station, I will be glad to send a copy for them to sing. Keep the good work going. All good wishes, as ever. Yours sincerely, AL BERNARD."

A few comments are necessary. Perhaps it should be explained for readers too young to remember that in the 1940's James C. Petrillo, head of a musician's union, imposed for a time a ban against union members playing for recordings on the ground that "mechanical music" was depriving musicians of employment. I had already met Quentin Riggs in September, 1947, and knew about his admiration for pioneer recording artists—an admiration that has grown with time. Al did send me several copies of "Take Your Sins to the Devil (Who Will Be So Good to You)" and I imagine it was the last song he composed. It was not a seller, but I retained one copy for myself after distributing others among staff members of Radio Station WSLs in Roanoke, Va., where I was a news writer.

I am submitting the cover for reproduction with this series. In the accompanying circular I was interested in seeing that among the Lions Clubs for which Al had provided songs and skits was one in Bedford, Va., about 20 miles from Vinton, the town in which I live.

I replied immediately to the foregoing letter, and on June 12 Al wrote again:

"Dear Jim: . . . Sure was surprised to learn that Quentin Riggs is so young. Must have been a great kick for him on that story you wrote about him. Today I had the publisher send you four copies of my new song, 'Take Your Sins to the Devil.' Sure appreciate your cooperation in plugging this for me. During this week I am making up four records. On one side I will do 'Take Your Sins' and on the other side, 'There's a Kitchen Up in Heaven.' On the other record I will do 'Ida, Sweet as Apple Cider,' and 'You Gotta Stop.' I am also having my co-writer record 'Just a Fair Weather Sweetheart' and 'My Mother's Bible.' These are all new and would appreciate very much if you could use them as much as possible."

Al then added a long list of his electrically recorded Brunswick records, asking if I had them (I did have most), and also including the Columbia of "New York Ain't New York Any More" and "My Sweetie Turned Me Down." Last month I said that the Columbia recording sounded so little like him I doubted that it really was Al, but here we have his own statement, which I had forgotten (not having read these letters in a quarter of a century) that it was. He commented:

"These Brunswick records are among my best work and sure wish you could get hold of them. My 'St. Louis Blues' and 'What the Engine Done' are really swell. Well, I will sure be glad to see you in September. Sincerely, AL."

To this day (Monday, January 7, 1974) I do not, I am sorry to say, own a copy of "What the Engine Done" and have never heard it.

I wonder who the "co-writer" was who was about to record two songs in the composition of which Al presumably had a part. If he did help write "My Mother's Bible" it was probably his only song of a religious type.

On July 5, 1948, I heard again from the one-time "Boy From Dixie":

"Dear Jim: Yours received and would have answered sooner, but was thinking that I could have sent the records before now. I made some, but they are not just what I want. When I do make what I think are A-1, will shoot them on to you along with a photograph. Regarding (Vernon) Daihart, I have not run into him for quite some years. Do not know his address. If I do hear will shoot it on to you."

"Note what you say about the Edison records. . . . That is why I say my Brunswick records are okay for today. If you run an Al Bernard program, be sure to use 'St. Louis' and 'Beale' and the duets with Russel Robinson. Would like to hear any response you get on them. Best as always. Sincerely, AL."

The next letter from my friend Al was dated November 16, more than two months after we met at the Bieling Day party, and was written after his physical condition had begun to fail. Unlike the others, it was not typed, but was done with pen and ink, as were all letters I afterwards received from him.

"Dear Jim: . . . I would have answered your letter sooner, but I have been ill for the last few weeks—down with phlebitis—very painful. Could not walk or get out of bed for ten days. I am up and around the house, but have not as yet made the street."

"Sorry to know your blood pressure is kicking up. Hope you are okay by now."

"Whenever you run the program of Al Bernard will be okay, and I will appreciate it and a copy of the script. Write soon. Best wishes."

Sincerely, AL."

That reference to blood pressure "kicking up" puzzles me. In those long-gone years I was constantly troubled by my pressure being too low and by occasional bouts of anemia, and I am sure that whatever blood problem I may have had then involved the pressure "kicking down" instead of "up." It is only in recent times that it has insisted on going too high and that I have had to take measures to bring it down to where it should be.

During this period I gave an Al Bernard show on the Walsh's Wax Works program at WSLs, Roanoke, and sent my friend a copy of the script. He thanked me in a letter written November 25:

"Dear Jim: Today is Thanksgiving and I do hope it will be a happy one for you and yours. I received the script and your letter. That was a swell show and I am indeed thankful. You can bet I appreciate it a million."

"As soon as I can use my typewriter I will answer your letter in detail. The swelling is still in my left arm and I cannot use it at present. I go to the hospital every day for therapy treatments. They say I will be O.K. in about a week. I do hope so."

"Joe Bernard is my brother. He is an actor—used to do an act in vaudeville (dramatic). He has been in pictures out in Hollywood since 1927."

"I used to put folks on some of my songs as a compliment, so when I wrote 'Pretty Little Honey Lou' I put his name on it and it gave him a surprise. I will write you a long letter in about a week."

Al's next letter was dated December 8:

"Dear Jim: Unable to use typewriter as yet. Just wanted to let you know that I received the HOBBIES Magazine. Thanks very much—swell story (about the John Bieling Day affair). Hope we will all be together again next September."

"I am still tickled over the script that you put on about me. I read it to some of my co-writers, and they roared. By the way, I will soon have a new record for you of a new song of mine, 'Fair Weather Sweetheart.' Looks good. I am coming along—go every day to the hospital for therapy treatment. Write soon. Sincerely, AL."

On December 13, Al mailed me a Christmas card, and on December 30, I received the following letter:

"Dear Jim: . . . Believe me, it sure was a surprise to know that you are giving me another Bernard program. Received a letter (from a collector) and he tells me that a dealer in St. Louis has my records listed at $75 to $90. Can this be true? If so my record of George M. Cohan singing 'Life's a Funny Proposition' must be worth something real. Cannot use my typewriter as yet. Rheumatism in my shoulder and left arm, and I have been going through something."

I imagine I replied that prices of $75 to $90 for Al's old records were plain insanity, and that Cohan's "Life's a Funny Proposition" was not of great value. Of the seven George M. records that Victor issued, only this one was a good seller and at that time it was easy to find.

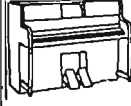

A day later, on December 31, Al again wrote:

"The 'Al Bernard's Merry Minstrels' is now released. Heard it today and it is a swell show. Don't know whether your dealer in Roanoke handles them or not, but you can tell him it is the Celebrity Record, owned by Joe Davis, 1619 Broadway. I am really proud of this album and look for it to go over in a big way. Be sure and send me a copy of the Monday night script. Happy New Year."

I evidently replied, suggesting that Bernard have the recording company dispatch me a copy of the minstrel album to be played on the Wax

ELECTRIFY    PLAYER PIANOS
PUMP ORGANS

YOU CAN QUICKLY END TIRESOME FOOT-PUMPING
With a Compact Low-Cost Leo Silent Suction Unit

EASY TO INSTALL
FULLY GUARANTEED
1000'S IN USE

with a
LEE MUSIC MFG. CO.
625H. Venezia, Ave.
Venice, Calif. 90291

mh57p

MISCELLANEOUS MUSICAL ITEMS

PHOTOS! The three most remarkable group photos ever taken of early recording artists: Edison artists of 1900, Edison artists of 1914, and Victor Male Chorus of 1925 (reproduced in HOBBIES January 1971, October 1970 and July 1970). One 8x10 enlargement for $2, two for $3.50, all 3 for $5. Other 8x10 photos of recording artists available at $2 each: Ada Jones, Billy Murray, Collins, and Harlan, Henry Burr, and many others. Write for list. — Quentin Riggs, 21171 Greenboro Lane, Huntington Beach, Calif. 92646 f34941

NOBODY—The Story of Bert Williams, by Ann Charters. Hardbound edition with illustrations. $2.50 postpaid. — Napco, 133 Main Street, St. Johnsbury, Vermont 05819 mh3414

DISC STORAGE ALBUMS wanted for seven, 10, and 12 inch records. Albums must be mint. — E. Mathewson, 141 Fourth St., Toronto, Ont. Canada M8V 2Y6. ap3234

"A GENERAL GUIDE TO THE COLLECTING OF OLD RECORDS". A new 37 page reference $2.50. Send money to — Wayne Glenn, Box 415, Nixa, Mo. 65714 f1522

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS FOR SALE

MUSIC BOXES! Fantastic large illustrated catalogue of wholesale music boxes, circus organs, nickelodeons, photo-players, reproducing pianos, other automatic instruments. Plus books, recordings, musical gifts. $2 postpaid; $5 subscription ($12 value) to next 6 issues. Money-back guarantee if not delighted! — David Bowers, Box 1669D, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90210 ap126313

REED ORGANS, melodions, bought, sold repaired. Reeds tuned, revoiced replacements. — C. H. Gunzinger, Box 276, Williamsville, Vt. 05362 ap6846

For Sale: Violin of 1700 origin. Pictures furnished on request. For further information, write — P.O. Box 91, Bethel, Minnesota 55005 ap3006

PHONOGRAPHS

PHONOGRAPHS repaired: New spare parts for Edison phonographs. Send stamp for list. Phone: (201) 748-8046. — Gerichten, 23 Waldo, Ave., Bloomfield, N.J. 07003 jly124851

"DIRECTORY OF Phonograph and Record Collectors," lists 250 collectors and their wants. $3.50 postpaid, satisfaction guaranteed. Two stamps for free list of antique phonograph catalogs, books, magazines. — Allen H. Koenigsberg, 3400 Snyder, Brooklyn, N.Y. 11203 mh60621

Works, for on January 4, 1949, he wrote:

"Dear Jim: Attached please find my check for $2.50. That is what the album costs. I would rather do it this way, so send for it and accept it as a gift from me."

"Do me a favor and get it on as soon as you can, and let me know the reaction. You have been a good friend and I appreciate it. I am figuring on this album getting me personal appearances. Will write you in the morning about the script. In haste, AL."

I did order a copy of the album, but didn't cash Al's check, which I preferred to keep as a memento of our friendship. When I opened the letter I have just quoted I found the check tucked inside the envelope where it had remained for almost precisely 25 years.

(Continued on page 119)

RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

As he had said he would do, Al wrote on January 5:

"Dear Jim: I wanted to get my letter off to you yesterday and did not say anything about the script. It is swell, and I do hope you have some good reaction on it. Yes, 'Stavin' Change' and 'Brother Low Down' both were real live characters, so you hit it right. Thanks a lot.

"I do hope that when you put the Minstrel Show on the air you will tell the folks it is my new album and can be purchased at their dealer. I am still at home, walk as far as the corner and back. Phlebitis has not yet left entirely, nor the rheumatism, but I am hoping. Regards to Mel and always best to you. Sincerely, AL."

"Mel" was Mel Linkous, an announcer who worked with me on the Wax Works program. My old friend Mel is still with WLSL-TV, but as an executive.

On January 15 Al once more penned a note:

"Dear Jim: Wrote you two letters last week and up to date I have not heard from you. I sincerely trust that you are not ill. I am still doctoring and can walk as far as the corner and back. Legs still weak and the tired pains are awful.

"I heard my records last Sunday over one of the stations here, and they came over swell. I am enclosing a circular on them. By the way, I met a lot of collectors at the affair, but I do not have their full names and their addresses. Can you give me a list of their names, etc.? I want to send them circulars. Do trust you are well. Let me hear from you. Sincerely, AL."

Then on February 2—exactly nine weeks before his death—Al penned the last message I was ever to receive from him:

"Dear Jim: This is the first day I've been out of bed in two weeks, and I am trying to write you a few lines.

"I wrote to the man there at the Lions some time ago, but never heard so far. Thanks for sending me his name. I want to answer your letter and post card in full, so pardon me this time. The old aches have sure got me. Sincerely, AL."

I suppose I must have sent Al the name of whoever was in charge of producing the Vinton Lions Club Minstrels at that time (the club ceased giving the shows a few years ago), and he had written, trying to sell his services. The reference to the "old aches" sounds as if he were thinking of his song, "De Ducks Done Got Me." From that time, I imagine, Al was so bedridden and in so much pain that writing anything was beyond his powers—a sad ending to the life of an artist who had given so much pleasure to millions of his fellow men.

That was not quite the last letter I was to receive, however, from a member of the Bernard family. On March 29, 1953, his widow wrote to me saying she would like to sell Al's record collection "to someone that would appreciate them as Mr. Bernard did." She asked me, as so many other people have done in attempting to dispose of old records, where she could sell them and what prices she should ask. While she hoped to sell most of the collection as a lot, she preferred to deal separately with a

Phone COLUMBUS 5-6311

AL BERNARD

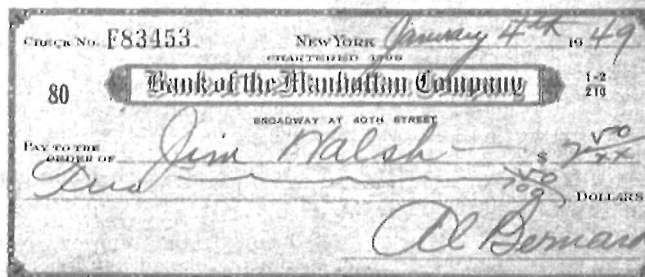

The Gentleman from the South

RADIO'S BLACK FACE SINGING COMEDIAN

345 WEST 55th STREET

New York City, N. Y.

Recordings
on all Phonograph Co's.
•
Writer of Popular Songs

COMEDIAN'S PERSONAL PAPERS. Shown here (top) is the upper portion of a printed letterhead Al Bernard used in 1936. Below is an uncashed check which he made out to Jim Walsh for purchase of an album of "Al Bernard's Merry Minstrels."

number of records that she thought were rarities—the Cohan disc, and others by Sir Harry Lauder, Bert Williams, and John McCormack, as well as DeWolf Hopper's "Casey at the Bat" and Digby Bell's "The Man Who Fanned Casey."

I regretfully replied that records of the type she mentioned were not rare enough to bring prices out of the ordinary, and suggested that she might easily dispose of them by inserting a classified ad in HOBBIES under some such heading as: "Record Collection of Famous Recording Comedian, Al Bernard, for sale. Includes both popular and classical music. Send offers to Mrs. Al Bernard, 305 West 45th Street, New York 36, N.Y." I also gave her the names of a dealer or two who might buy them. The ad never appeared, and I heard no more from Mrs. Bernard. I don't know whether she is still living.

"Al Bernard's Merry Minstrels," the two-record, 10-inch album which Al was eager for me to broadcast and which became available such a pathetically short while before his death, was a bright and sparkling compilation of old-fashioned entertainment. Besides Al the artists included Henry Swope, tenor, who sang "Truthfully"; the Sunflower Quartet, heard in the chorus, "There's Nothing Like a Minstrel Show"; and the Home Town Minstrel Band, playing "Trombone Jitters." Tom Shirley was the interlocutor. Bernard himself sang the old favorite, "Bill Bailey," which is said to have been President John F. Kennedy's favorite song, and his voice sounded as fresh and youthful as when his recording career had begun almost 30 years before. The record gives the impression that it was taken from a radio broadcast, but it may have been at first intended for, or dubbed from, an electrical transcription, or perhaps it was a "straight" recording job, artfully designed to sound as if the performers were on the air. Whatever it was intended to be, it is a fine production, on unbreakable discs, and should be sought by any Al Bernard admirer who doesn't have it. I imagine its sale was limited and that the album is hard to come by today.

Obviously, Al's health had deteriorated so badly by this time that he would not have been able to fill the personal appearance engagements he hoped the minstrel album would bring him.

IV. Bernard's Television Minstrels

Al's reference in one of his letters to a television appearance made me wonder if he had in mind one that was not "recent" when he wrote in 1948, since it was given on Tuesday, March 7, 1945. I recalled that I had a clipping of a review of the program written by Joe Koehler and published in "The Billboard," which I had laid carefully aside with the intention of quoting it. I decided to fit it into this space and sought for it on my desk, where I was sure I laid it down. There ensued six hours of intensive searching, spread over two days, during which I seemed to have looked at every piece of paper in the room, without finding what I wanted. Then, just as I was ready to cry quits, I riffled through several letters lying on the foot of my bed, and, mixed up among them, I was flabbergasted to find the review, where I suppose the spooks, who had hidden it, had decided to leave it and astonish me. On the whole, it gives the television minstrel production very favorable treatment, and here, before it disappears again, it is:

"Al Bernard's Schooldays was pure and unadulterated corn direct from Dixie by way of Gus Edwards, via Bob (WOR) Emery's Rainbow House. If there is any wonder how a completely delightful half hour came forth from under the wing of the Emery, it is respectfully explained that Bob had the sound idea of taking innumerable gags directly from Al Bernard's collection and stringing them together. Although they all smelled from overuse, they came so fast and furious that the viewer was laughing at himself for laughing at what he knew were old, old minstrel routines in white-faced.

"Al Bernard played the Negro porter who took over the teacher's desk while she was a-missing, and played the role in a combination interlocutor-and man manner. In the school-room were all the Gus Edwards characters—from the tough guy with a derby to the sweet and dumb young thing who never had the right answer in her life. There was plenty of movement—plenty of color, not a dull moment in a carload—and not a sophisticated one, either. Through the use of a blackboard idea they were able to get across the WOR credit without pushing and the camera work was ace—only once or twice missing a person on a routine.

"Credit Mrs. Bob Emery at the producer's console for this, and Bob, who acted as floor manager in the studio, keeping things moving—and the white-faced minstrel routine rolling along.

"How often a schooldays telecast could hold an audience is questionable. Al Bernard's act used to travel and he didn't have to have new material every week. However, based on the evidence of this one show—and hope that the corn will continue green—this rates the top Emery to date."

That, remember, was 29 years ago, when American television was still primitive. Judging by the description, this program must have been something like Avon Comedy Four's "New Schoolteacher" routine, rather than a "straight" old-fashioned minstrel. That makes it seem less likely that Al was referring to it when he said he had "recently" staged a minstrel show on WABD. On second thought, it couldn't have been the same show, for the 1945 production was on WOR.

V. And Finally—

At last, after many months, we are reaching the conclusion of this Al Bernard series. I greet it with a feeling of relief for, let me confess, I have had qualms about devoting so many months of space to what is virtually a book-length biography. Naturally, I realize that all-out Bernard enthusiasts have "eaten it up," but there must be less dedicated readers who crave a change of menu. However, during the many years in which I have been assuring myself that I would some day take the time and trouble to write about Al Bernard, I have informed my nagging conscience that I would undertake the task only when I was prepared to prepare as comprehensive and complete account of his life and achievements as it was within my power to do.

One of the "no holds barred" Bernard devotees who I hope has enjoyed what I have written is Miss Pamela Ochojski, the Monsey, N.Y., college student, one of my friends to whom the series has been dedicated. It was a letter I received from Miss Ochojski in July, 1973, that finally pushed me over the line and made me resolve to bring into being the series about which I had been hesitating so long. Because of its, so to speak, historic importance, I think portions of her communication deserve to be quoted:

"Dear Mr. Walsh: When my HOBBIES Magazine came I was very excited to see the mention of Al Bernard, who is one of my favorite people on old records. It would be really nice

If some time you did an article on him, because the articles are interesting, with all sorts of information, and because I would like to know more about him. All I have right now is the 'New York Times' obituary and what the 1966 ASCAP Biographical Dictionary says about him, plus previous mentions in HOBBIES, which I have taken since 1963. I also have some assorted old issues and am always looking for more.

"Although I only started collecting records about a year and a half ago (and started reading your department), from the beginning I have enjoyed your cats and 'possum's Christmas greeting and news about them. They are really nice animals, especially The Professor. (The latest news at this writing about the Professor, Pam, is that he has had four abscessed teeth extracted—J.W.) I guess that Popsy wouldn't approve of Al Bernard singing 'Mississippi Bound' with the reference to 'good old roasted 'possum' with baked potatoes. Three of my Al Bernard records . . . are minstrel sketches with Ernest Hare, and I really enjoy them even if they aren't exactly approved of today. Actually, it was because of Ernest Hare that I got my first Al Bernard record, 'See Old Man Moon Smile' (Brunswick). I was just starting out, and really didn't know who anyone was, when I recognized the name Ernest Hare from my mother's telling me about 'The Happiness Boys.' She was a loyal fan of theirs and still likes to listen to my records by them.

"Did you ever get to meet Al Bernard? Since he was mentioned as going to one of the old artists' parties in the Arthur Hall article, I guess you did. He was also mentioned in the 'Silver-Masked Tenor' article as being on a radio show with Irving Kaufman. I only wish I could find more of his records, especially the sketches with Ernest Hare, because they are really good. He really should be written about. Seeing that mention of Al Bernard 'inspired' me to write to you. Your articles have helped me a lot, just learning about different people. A lot of the records I bought were bought because I had read about the people in HOBBIES. I know you are busy, researching Al Bernard (I hope). If you can't answer just keep the stamp and consider it eight cents worth of liver for Popsy and the cats. I really like all of them and enjoy reading their Christmas messages!"

Well, young lady, see what you accomplished! You proved that, when wielded by you, the pen is mightier than the sword, because simply by writing a letter you drastically changed the subject matter of "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists" for an entire year and received the biography you had been wanting! . . . Pamela, by the way, detests some of the rubbish that passes among many of today's young people for Music. She recognizes it for the nerve wracking trash it is, as would Al Bernard. Billy Jones and Ernest Hare if they were living today.

Since I typed the reference to my charming friend, Pam, whom I have now met in person, a couple of matters have come to my attention and should be referred to here. Oliver Graham, of Westerly, R.I., has sent me a death notice from the Hartford (Conn.) "Courant" of Wednesday, June 16, 1971, revealing that Bernard's yodeling associate, Frank Kamplain, had died the preceding day. Kamplain then made his home in Coventry, Conn. The article read:

"Frank M. Kamplain, of Fitzgerald Boulevard, one-time recording artist for RCA-Victor and Brunswick recording companies, died Tuesday at Windham Community Memorial Hospital, Willimantic. Born in Vincennes, Ind., he made a number of recordings and entertained in hotels and night clubs in the U.S. and Europe until he retired in 1950. He moved to Coventry several years ago.

"He leaves his wife, Mrs. Ann Kamplain, of Coventry, and a brother, the Rev. William H. Kamplain, of Montgomery, Ala. The funeral will be Thursday at 11 a.m. at the Potter Funeral Home, 465 Jackson Street, Willimantic. Burial will be in Coventry Center Cemetery. There are no calling hours."

The obituary, you will observe, did not mention Kamplain's having re-

(Continued on next page)

AT LAST!! SOMETHING NEW IN A RECORD ALBUM —

A COMPLETE MINSTREL SHOW

APPROXIMATELY 12 MINUTES OF LAUGHTER, SONGS, STORIES AND JOKES ON TWO COMPLETE UNBREAKABLE RECORDS (4 SIDES)

AL BERNARD'S MERRY MINSTREL SHOW

Featuring AL BERNARD; HENRY SHOPE, Tenor; SUNFLOWER QUARTET;

TOM SHIRLEY, Interlocutor; HOME TOWN MINSTREL BAND

Just the Thing for Entertainment on the RADIO or HOME, PARTIES
and CLUBS

SONGS....
STORIES..
JOKES.....
GAGS.....

ALL FOR THE LOW PRICE OF
$2.50 (POSTPAID)

4 SIDES —
2 UNBREAKABLE RECORDS

DETACH HERE

LAST RECORDING. An album of a "Merry Minstrel Show," featuring Al Bernard, was issued only a few weeks before the comedian's death. This is a copy of a circular advertising it.

OLD METALS

PEWTER FOR SALE

AMERICAN PEWTER, antique. Illustrated list $1. New book "Collecting American Pewter" by Katherine Ebert $12.50 postpaid. — Katherine Ebert, Box 234, Wellesley Hills, Mass. 02181 my6468

PEWTER WANTED

FLAGG & HOMAN PEWTER wanted: Please give description, number, and price. Thank you — Bob Flagg, 6128 Fisher Rd. #103, Dallas Tex. 75214 o120061

RUBIE KOHL ANTIQUES

2424 N.E. 22nd St.
Pompano Beach, Fla. 33062

STERLING SILVER FLATWARE— MATCHING SERVICE

Hard-to-find — obsolete, inactive & active patterns of all American Silverware. Over 400 patterns to select from. List your wants with us; if we do not have it, we will try to get it for you. If pattern is unknown, make a pencil sketch of the pattern and the maker's mark.

We buy sterling—Write or ship. If you accept our price we mail you a check immediately. If not, we ship at our expense. Stamped envelope for reply. tfe

SPOONS WANTED

STERLING SOUVENIR unusual spoons wanted. Describe fully with price first letter.—Hamilton, 269 Tropic Dr., Ft. Lauderdale, Fla. 33308 ap122511

OLD STERLING souvenir spoons of Wisconsin cities. Describe and price. — William Parks, 4715 Sheboygan Ave., Apt. 303, Madison, Wis. n120441

THE LAMP POST ANTIQUES

(Toni Garrett)

8312 E. 11th St.
Tulsa, Okla. 74112

We specialize in Sterling Flatware - all patterns - with rare exceptions. Our discounts begin at 40% off Active and Inactive list prices, often more. All silver in first rate condition. Coin Silver and English Georgian and Victorian Silver available as purchases permit. Always include SASE for an answer.

Satisfaction guaranteed. tfe

THE FERGUSONS

509 North 72nd Avenue
Omaha, Nebraska 68114

Complete silverplated flatware matching service. Old and new patterns. Want list maintained.

Send pattern name or drawing.
Satisfaction guaranteed. SASE please. apm

SILVER FOR SALE

FLATWARE: For active, inactive and obsolete sterling patterns. Write us your needs. Prompt replies. — Edward G. Wilson, 1802 Chestnut St., Philadelphia 3, Pa. jel26561

STERLING. 600 hard-to-find patterns, pieces to complete sets, other sterling. — McCarthy, 1104 Bigelow North, Seattle, Wash. 98109 ap3243

STERLING SILVER, Silverplate, Souvenir Spoons—variety of patterns available. Want list kept. Please send SASE for each type list. — The Sterling Shop Box 595 Silverton, Ore. 97381 o128271

INTERNATIONAL STERLING — "Serenity", 3 place forks, $34.00 ea., 3 place knives, $25.00 ea., 6 salad forks, $25.00 ea., 8 teaspoons, $22.00 ea. Never used Write — Mrs C. Braun, 516 41st Street, SE., Charleston, West Virginia 25304 op3666

STERLING SILVER Pattern Matching Service. Specializing in Obsolete, inactive and Active patterns. Send SASE for list. Mail order only. Postage and insurance extra: Phone (916) 331-0416. — Iverson's Antiques, P.O. Box 41063, Sacramento, Ca. 95842 je65221

SILVER WANTED

PAYING $2.50 oz. any scrap sterling silver. Also buying scrap gold. Ship for prompt payment. — Meridith, 541 W. Third, Reno, Nevada 89503 ap6297

BUYING ANYTHING Made of Gold, Silver, Platinum! Coins, Jewelry, Rings, Gold Watches, Dental Gold, Sterlingware, Etc! Any conditional Ship For Highest Cash Offer! Shipment Held Pending Your Approval — Metallurgy Co., Box 5222-H, Charleston, S.C. 29406 mh3216

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from preceding page)

corded for such companies as Edison, Columbia and Okeh, nor did it give his age. However, he had begun recording duets with Bernard 52 years before his death, so if he was in his early 20s when he started, he must have reached the mid-70s in 1971.

In a preceding installment, I said that Bernard made a Federal (Indestructible) cylinder of "The St. Louis Blues," which was issued by mistake under Irving Kaufman's name. This was a slip of the typewriter, for the song was really "The Alcoholic Blues."

So here we are at the jumping-off point. Over all these years I have feared that, in spite of my good intentions, I would only think of writing about Al Bernard and not get down to the actual work, and I knew that it would be a source of vain regret if I found myself going to my ultimate accounting without having paid tribute to one of the most accomplished recording artists of his time. At last, though, the job has been done and I have the satisfaction of knowing that by waiting all these years I have been able to publish a better and more informative series than I could have if I had undertaken the task 25 or 30 years ago.

The story of Al Bernard has now been told as well as I can tell it, and I am very, very glad.

THE END.

FRANKLINIANA

(Continued from page 119)

BEN FRANKLIN

even before the ship carrying Franklin arrived in the colonies.

Franklin was chosen as a delegate to the Second Continental Congress soon after his return from England. He drew up the first plan for the Union to be presented to the Congress; he organized the first postal system and was to become the first Postmaster General; he served with George Washington on a committee to arrange for the engraving and printing of the first Continental paper money; he was a member of the committee which drafted the Declaration of Independence.

In 1778, Franklin was instrumental in the treaty alliance with France which provided the colonies with financial assistance, armament for war, etc. He was named minister plenipotentiary of France and served as president of the board of trustees of the University of Pennsylvania.

In 1787, Franklin was seated as a representative at the Federal Convention. Although he was not prominent in the ensuing debates, nor did he approve of all of the provisions, he signed the Constitution, "as the best instrument available under the circumstances."

Franklin's last public act was the signing of an anti-slavery petition to Congress as president of the Pennsylvania Society for promoting the Abolition of Slavery.

After a lifetime of service to his fellowman, Franklin passed away on April 17, 1790.

The dates January 17, 1706, and April 17, 1790, may not be commemorated nationally, but they shall not be forgotten in the annals of American history. Yes, these are the dates of the birth and death of a GREAT MAN, whose efforts made the world a better place for all mankind.

It is not surprising that one finds innumerable mementoes of this great American. Books, magazine articles, and hopefully this story may set off some boy or girl on the trail of acquiring Frankliniana.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

An Evening In Thomas A. Edison's Laboratory

By JIM WALSH

(Dedicated to Leah Stenzel Burt, without whose original inspiration and hard and dedicated work the twice yearly Edison Site meetings might not have come into being.)

I. A Great Night

Thomas A. Edison's historic laboratory at West Orange, N.J., was jumping on the evening of Friday, October 18, 1974. And it should have been. The quaint building, where the greatest of inventors conducted many experiments that resulted in epoch-making discoveries, was host to a meeting of several former Edison recording artists and more than a hundred enthusiastic collectors of early recordings.

I was guest of honor and one of the speakers at the get-together, held in the auditorium of the veritable shrine, now maintained by the National Park Service as the Edison National Historic Site. Knowing that Mr. Edison had been a master of electrical experimentation and development, I could well believe that flashes and sparks from his own dynamic personality had remained alive in the laboratory. Perhaps some of them came from the in-the-flesh presence of Mr. Edison's surviving daughter and son, Mrs. Madeline Sloane and Theodore Edison. Whatever the explanation, I seemed to sense a warm electrical current flowing from me to my audience when I spoke and an equally vibrant response coming back. Interest and enthusiasm appeared to be unbounded, regardless of whether the participants were several boys and girls aged 12 or so, teen-agers, young men and women in their 20s, or middle-aged or elderly "senior citizens."

The meeting was one of several which have been organized and managed by Mrs. Leah S. Burt, the Site's assistant archivist. They are held six months or so apart, and the next probably will be a few months from now, in May. This, the fourth of the series, was the first I have attended, but Leah says the interest grows greater each time, and I can well believe it does.

Of primary importance, of course, was the fact that although Thomas A. Edison, Inc., went out of the phonograph and record business a little more than 45 years ago, five former Edison artists graced the occasion with their presence:

Edna White Chandler, known on records as Edna White, renowned trumpet player and leader of the HELPFUL FRIENDS — Left: The Rev. John A. Petty, of Rutherfordton, N.C., who gave Jim Walsh transportation to the Edison meeting. He is standing beside a photo of Jim, which was on display in the Historic Site. Right: Merrill Malvern, of Buffalo, N.Y., who recorded the entire Site program. He and his wife, Phyllis, returned the HOBBIES writer to his home in Vinton, Va.

—Photos by Tim Brooks

Gloria Trumpeters, once famous in concert.

Rosalynd Davis Kaplan (Rosalynd Davis on records), violinist of the Dann Trio, which in 1922 went on "tone test" tours with Harvey Hindermyer.

Gladys Rice, soprano and one of the most popular Edison artists, who in the 1920's and '30's was a member of "Roxy's Gang" on radio and at the Capitol Theater, New York.

Douglas Stanbury, baritone, also of Roxy's Gang, who made Edison test recordings in 1924, and Ernest L. Stevens, pianist, who recorded at West Orange under Mr. Edison's personal supervision.

Mrs. Hazel Dann Burleigh, sister of Blanche and Felice Dann, pianist and cornet virtuoso of the Dann Trio, was also among us and, by her warm, outgoing personality, won the affection of every one who met her. The opportunity to meet, clasp hands and chat with Edison artists, and, in my case, be kissed by the ladies, as well as to have the privilege of speaking with the immortal inventor's own son and daughter made the occasion one that nobody who was present is likely ever to forget.

There were some regrettable absences. Mrs. Victor Young, the contralto, who made records as Helen Davis and with her husband, a skilled pianist, gave "tone tests" learned of the meeting too late to attend, since she had a conflicting engagement. The Rev. William A. Rubin, known in the old phonograph and radio days as William ("Wee Willie") Robyn, had been asked by Doug Stanbury, his intimate friend and associate of Roxy's Gang, to be on hand, but was visiting a nephew in Texas and did not get back in time. The beloved Victor soprano, Olive Kline, although not an Edison artist, had nevertheless been invited, but has been crippled since suffering severe injuries in a fall and was physically unable to make the trip from her home in Pelham, N.Y. There are other presumably surviving Edison artists whom we should have been delighted to honor, but whose addresses were not known. Dick Robertson and Frank Luther are two whose names come to mind. M. J. O'Connell may also be a possibility. And I have recently heard that Lester O'Keefe and Lew Cobey, who were partners of the late Frank Kamplain in the second edition of the Record Boys, are believed to be living in New Jersey. Anna Case (Mrs. Clarence Macky) also would have received a tumultuous welcome.

All these we wish we could have had with us. However, regardless of the absent ones, it was a great evening.

But, perhaps you are wondering, how was Jim Walsh persuaded to leave his home and his cats in Vinton, Va., and travel to "the effete East" to take part in such an occasion? I will explain.

II. Beginning the Journey

During the summer, Leah Burt, Wally, her husband, and Sally, her daughter, had come to see me after taking Sally's sister, Candy, to Durham, N.C., where she entered Duke University. During their gingery inspection of my dusty, cobwebby, old, one-time white house, Leah showed interest in an Edison Diamond Disc phonograph, which she said was a model not included in the collection at the Historic Site. I told her I should be glad to present this model, and she went home excited about the prospect of its being added to the Site's possessions. After she returned to her Edison duties I received a letter from James W. Coleman, the Site's superintendent, expressing pleasure at the prospect of acquiring the 18th Century Model Edison for the collection, and saying arrangements would be made to have it transported from my home to West Orange. A little later, it occurred to me that I could also arrange to contribute a Sheraton model Edison that was in the home of a friend living 80 miles away. This, too, was accepted, and on Sunday, October 13, just five days before the historic meeting was held, a driver for the National Park Service, called at my home, put, with my help, the Louis XVIII into a large van, then proceeded westward to take possession of the Sheraton. One of the legs of the XVIII was weak, so we had to lay the heavy old phonograph on its side. When he returned to his headquarters at Harper's Ferry, W. Va., it was discovered that some repair work was needed, and the machines consequently were not transferred immediately to West Orange, N.J.

A week or so before I was visited by the driver, who wore a broad-brimmed cowboy-styled hat and evinced a vividly vigorous vocabulary when he held forth on the trouble he had experienced finding my house and on the excessive weight of the 18th century Edison, I had talked by long distance with Warren D. Beach, chief of interpretation and protection for the Historic Site, and had been invited to be present at the forthcoming meeting, where I would "receive a handshake" and be thanked for presenting the phonographs. Mr. Beach said I also would be allotted time to speak to the gathering and describe some of the high-lights of my long writing career in HOBBIES.

The prospect of being present attracted me, but at first I feared I should not be able to go. One important drawback was the 10 cats, the 'possum in my basement and the tiny black mouse in a rear room who receive their daily nourishment from me. Transportation, too, was a problem. But then my "adopted brother," Merritt Malvern, of Buffalo, N.Y., who was going to record the program, wrote me that he and his charming wife, Phyllis, would be willing to drive all the way to Vinton and take me with them for the sake of having me present. My friend and neighbor, Robert G. Sink (whom nobody in Vinton calls anything but "Pete"), said he would come down once a day and leave food enough to keep the cats from acute hunger. The cats know and love Pete, so that took care of that, since I decided I could put enough food in the basement and the back room to do "Possy," the 'possum, and "Squeaky," the mouse, until I returned. So I agreed to journey northward with Merritt and Phyllis, and word began to circulate that I was likely to attend. Allen Koenigsberg mentioned the likelihood of my coming in his publication, and Tim Brooks, who took most of the pictures reproduced with this article, wrote to Merritt asking him to drive carefully while I was in his car. "Jim Walsh," Tim said, "is a national institution."

Meanwhile, Leah Burt, who is now my "adopted sister," had been urging me to take the trip and to be her house guest during my stay. That made me all the more inclined to go, although I always dread traveling, especially by car, and easily become exhausted. Car-riding aggravates my inner ear ailment.

And then something happened to relieve Merritt and Phyllis of driving hundreds of miles out of their way. The Rev. John A. Petty, a Methodist minister of Rutherfordton, N.C., and one of the most ardent collectors of Cal Stewart's "Uncle Josh" records, learned that I planned to be there, and said that since he was also going he would be glad to have me as a passenger. He kindly offered to drive to Vinton to pick me up and thereby ease the burden for the couple from Buffalo. This was a generous gesture on John's part and the most practical solution to the transportation problem. There was one drawback however: John would have to leave early Saturday morning to be at home in time to occupy his pulpit the following Sunday, and I didn't want to go that soon, for it would make my visit with the Burt family too short. Besides, I hoped to go into New York City to see my dear friend by correspondence, Louis Cohn, the retired 90-year-old lawyer who was so generously helpful to me when I was writing the article about Dolly Connolly and her husband, Percy Wenrich, that appeared in HOBBIES for June and July, 1973. We had taken a great liking to each other through our interchange of letters, and I had promised Lou that whenever I was near New York, I would come to his apartment in Hotel Beacon at 75th Street and Broadway and visit with him, his wife, Lillian, and "Chris," their devoted nurse from the West Indies.

Here, Merritt again, came to the rescue. (The kind things that Merritt Malvern has done for me in the three years or so that we have known of each other's existence are almost beyond counting.) He said that if John Petty brought me to Morristown, the home of Wally and Leah Burt, he and Phyllis would be happy to get me back to Vinton, a community they very much like. In fact, Merritt toys, more or less seriously, with the idea of living here some day.

On the early morning of Thursday, October 17, I had given my house key to Pete Sink, so he could enter and minister to the appetites of three "inside" felines, Professor Plum Duff Walsh, Ph.D., Lucky Jim and Twisty, and had left a dozen or so cans of cat food on the back porch, which he would open for the "outsiders" - Donna, Donna's daughter, "Barney," and Barney's four beautiful babies - Fwee, Tige, Lou (named

(Continued on page 119)

MAIL FRIENDS MEET — Left: Peter Digg, ardent young record collector of Baldwin, N.Y., with Jim Walsh. They had previously known each other only by correspondence. Right: Jim, in a specially posed picture, proclaiming his determination to have "law and order" while he spoke. He is menacing his audience with a nightstick sent to him by Morgan Seymour, a retired policeman of Carmel, N.Y.

—Photo by Tim Brooks

MISCELLANEOUS MUSICAL ITEMS

PHOTOS! The three most remarkable group photos ever taken of early recording artists: Edison artists of 1900, Edison artists of 1914, and Victor Male Chorus of 1925 (reproduced in HOBBIES January 1971, October 1970 and July 1970). One 8x10 enlargement for $2, two for $3.50, all 3 for $5. Other 8x10 photos of recording artists available at $2 each: Ada Jones, Billy Murray, Collins, and Marian, Henry Burr, and many others. Write for list. — Quentin Riggs, 21171 Greenboro Lane, Huntington Beach, Calif. 92646 mh1747

NOBODY—The Story of Bart Williams, by Ann Charters. Hardbound edition with illustrations, $2.50 postpaid. — Napco, 133 Main Street, St. Johnsbury, Vermont 05819 mh3414

DISC STORAGE ALBUMS wanted for seven, 10, and 12 inch records. Albums must be mint. — E. Mathewson, 141 Fourth St., Toronto, Ont. Canada M8V 2Y6. sp3234

"A GENERAL GUIDE TO THE COLLECTING OF OLD RECORDS". A new 37 page reference $2.50. Send money to — Wayne Glenn, Box 418, Nixa, Mo. 65714 mh1522

RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 38)

in honor of Mr. Cohn and Pete Sink, Jr., as well as a young black tomcat, "Junie," who stays beneath my house much of the time. I also had filled two plates heaping high with dog food for Squeaky, and left what I hoped was an ample allowance down the cellar for Popsy. My bags were packed, and by the time the Rev. Mr. Petty, who had risen in the middle of the night to drive from Rutherfordton to Vinton, made his smiling appearance, I was ready to "pull freight." I had already gone to breakfast, but had decided to let any mail remain in my post office box until my return.

The Rev. John seemed intrigued, or, perhaps I should say, bewildered because I had included among my baggage an impressive looking nightstick sent to me by my friend, Morgan Seymour, a retired policeman of Carmel, N.Y. Mr. Seymour, who was mentioned in HOBBIES a few months ago as having a record by Jack Johnson, the Negro prizefight champion, that he was willing to sell, had presented me with the "billy" for use in controlling my rambunctious "enemies" at the Vinton post office, but an impish impulse had made me decide to take it along to New Jersey, to be brandished before I delivered my prepared "address" as a sign that I meant to have a law and order administration while I spoke. John was amused when I explained that I intended to use it to rap the head of anybody who showed signs of dozing after I began discoursing.

So, on a beautiful autumn day, with the inviting prospect of a long drive through the Shenandoah Valley before them, the Rev. John A. Petty and Jim Walsh set forth with light hearts on their pilgrimage. But as I am writing, on Sunday, December 15, this account of the journey, my heart is heavy because yesterday morning I found one of the most beautiful of Barney's kittens, Tige, lying dead on the back porch about half an hour after I had given his brothers, Fwee and Lou, and his sister, Petunia, (Pete) their breakfast. When Tige did not come with the others I called him three or four times and it breaks my heart to think now that the poor little suffering fellow may have heard me and used his fast ebbing strength to crawl from wherever he lay and somehow manage to reach the back porch where he died in answer to my call. He had appeared well the evening before, his body showed no sign of injury, and I am at my wit's end to imagine what tragic thing happened to him. Tige, gray with black stripes, had a perfect personality and loved me devotedly. His greatest pleasure was to walk down the hill from my home with me when I started to the restaurant for breakfast and to roll over and over at my feet. Never in his short life did he lose his temper or show resentment of anything I did.

EDISON RECORDING ARTISTS — Left: Rosalyn Davis Kaplan, violinist of the Dann Trio, who made Edison records and gave "lone tests," with her husband, A. Milton Kaplan. Mr. and Mrs. Kaplan accompanied Merritt and Phyllis Malvern and Jim Walsh on a tour of Thomas A. Edison's historic home, "Glenmont." Right: Edna White Chandler, great trumpet and cornet player, with her 19-year-old friend, Roy Puffer, who brought her to the meeting from her home in Massachusetts.

—Photos by Leah Burt

I was privileged to have him only six months and 10 days, but in that brief period sweet Tige (short for "Tiger," his original name) won my heart so completely that as long as I have memory he will never be forgotten. Of one thing I am glad: that he didn't die while I was gone away, for I could never have forgiven myself if I had returned and found his lifeless body.

I hope editor and readers will forgive my using space for this farewell tribute to a beloved friend, who returned my love with heaping measure. Now I'll resume the account of our trip to Morristown and West Orange.

III. New Jersey Bound

Probably it should go without saying that as John Petty and I progressed steadily out of Southwest Virginia into the Shenandoah Valley we indulged mostly in "record collector talk," about Cal Stewart and other well-loved pioneer recording artists. When I travel there is usually at the back of my mind a "theme song" with some bearing on where I am going and what I am doing, so occasionally I found myself humming or singing a few lines of Charles K. Harris' 1898 hit, "Mid the Green Fields of Virginia":

"Mid the green fields of Virginia,
In the vale of Shenandoah,
Stands an ivy-covered homestead that I love . . ."

Part of the time I found hidden entertainment in providing John with a middle name, since I don't know what the "A." sandwiched between "John" and "Petty" represents. No doubt he would have told me if I had asked him, but I preferred to use my imagination and assign something highfalutin', Biblical or otherwise impressive for his mid-way cognomen. Among them were Absalom, Abijah, Aristides, Abimalech and Antidishmentarianism. I hope my traveling companion will be amused, rather than indignant, when he reads this confession of my secret mental activities.

As the morning wore away and we neared the West Virginia border, we decided it was time to have lunch. John said he had a liking for eating in truck stops, "because truck drivers always insist on having good food," so when we reached Winchester, Va., we went into a combined Union 76 stop and restaurant on U.S. 81. While we were waiting to be served (John may remember what we ordered, but I don't have the slightest recollection), a waitress who was not in charge of our table came up to my ecclesiastical companion and asked if he were, or were not, a country-Western singer named Don Reno, whom she esteemed highly. "You look just like him," she said, and pointed to a picture on a wall nearby, of Mr. Reno, of whom I admit — not being a country music fan — I had never before heard. The Reverend modestly disclaimed the eminence to which the waitress wished to elevate him, and she appeared genuinely disappointed. "I thought sure you was him," she said. She did not say whom, or what, she thought I looked like!

Cal Stewart is said by some accounts to have been born on a farm near Charlotte Court House, Va., and since my geographical conceptions have always been vague, I asked our waitress if she knew whether we were anywhere close to that town, but she said she had no idea where Charlotte Court House is. I have since learned from Albert (Jack) Via, Jr., that we were nowhere in the vicinity of Cal Stewart country, but that Charlotte Court House in Charlotte County, is not many miles from South Boston, Va., where Jack lives.

John had parked his station wagon just outside the restaurant, and we chose a seat where we could keep an eye on it, for it contained a large quantity of recording equipment he planned to use the following day in copying Edison records at the Historic Site, which has five nearly complete sets of Diamond Discs, graded, in order of their playing condition, from one to five. And John, really did put in a heavy taping schedule Friday, before the evening meeting took place. After we had eaten and were taking our dignified departure, I saw a display of ball point pens reading

"Virginia Is For Lovers," and bought one, which I am still using. It cost me 49 cents.

As the afternoon progressed, we passed through a part of West Virginia and continued into Maryland. I am not sure whether we entered Frederick or only skirted it, but I remember thinking of John Greenleaf Whittier's poem relating how old Barbara Fritchie defiantly waved a Union flag at "Stonewall" Jackson and his invading Confederates:

"Shoot if you must this old gray head,
But spare your country's flag!" she said."

I also recalled Frederick as the home of my old friend, Ed Thomas, who was a newsman with me when I worked for Roanoke television station WSLI. Ed, I understand, is now a Maryland State Senator and is active in politics.

When we got into Pennsylvania, the Rev. John Aristotle Petty, who is an enthusiastic "ham radio" operator and listener, began talking with his fellow "hams," trying to find someone in the vicinity of West Orange or Morristown who would communicate by phone with the captivating red-haired Leah Burt and let her know that the pilgrims from the South were on their way and making steady progress. Although he had many conversations with affable operators, to whom he identified himself only by his first name, as they also did in replying, I don't recall that he succeeded in making the connection he desired.

Our route led through Chambersburg, Pa., and I remembered that as a boy I was walking near the Norfolk and Western Railway station in the town of Marion, Va., where I then lived, and observed two men and a woman standing near a car which they had parked nearby. One of the men looked about 40 and was tall and thin. The plump woman, no doubt his wife, appeared about the same age. The second man, probably the father of one of them, was elderly and short and wore a large checked cap. As I passed them the older man remarked, with what I took to be a strong deep Southern accent: "We ought to be in Chambersbu'g early t'morrow mawnin'." I don't know who those people were or where they were from, but the memory of that chance meeting has remained with me. I remember wishing wistfully that I too were traveling and would be in "Chambersbu'g t'morrow mawnin'."

We passed through Easton, Pa., and I recollected that a pioneer recording artist, Harvey Hindermeyer, was born there, and tried to visualize him as a short, stout boy walking Easton's rather quaint-looking, old-fashioned streets. (That at least was how the ones I saw impressed me.) I also recalled Harvey's surprise the first time we met when I mentioned his having come into being in Easton. "How did you know that?" he asked, and I told him old Edison record catalogs mentioned Easton as his birthplace. I also remember coming to Harrisburg, the Pennsylvania capital.

The afternoon declined and we passed out of Pennsylvania into New Jersey and knew that we now were bearing down upon our destination. And, sure enough, after waging a losing battle with the sinking sun, we found ourselves past dusk inside the historic old city of Morristown, where the Burt family lives and where, half a century ago, a great recording artist, Frank Croxton, basso of the Peerless Quartet, made his home and, in addition to his phonograph work, operated a successful school of vocal instruction.

Now we had to find our way to the Burt home at 47 Woodlawn Avenue. John parked beside a supermarket and began to make inquiries, but unfortunately he asked the way to Woodland, not Woodlawn, Avenue, and couldn't seem to get much information. Leah afterwards told me, laughingly, that 47 Woodland Avenue was the address of the city police department!

So, John decided, there was nothing to do but phone to Leah, let her know the Southern delegation had arrived, and ask her: "How in the heck do we get to Woodlawn Avenue? To which the always helpful Leah replied that she would drive to our parking place and guide us. Within a few minutes I was made happy by the beaming countenance of the lovely lady whom I consider one of my dearest friends.

With Leah as an efficient auburn-topped escort we soon reached her home in a wooded, rather secluded section of Morristown. John did not tarry, but continued on to Whippany, N.J., a few miles away, where he was to be the guest of one of his record collector friends.

Shortly after our arrival, Merritt and Phyllis Malvern drove up and were warmly greeted, as I had been, by all the residents of the Burt household, including "Smoky," the family cat. Merritt and I discussed what use we should make of our time the next day before the evening meeting began, and decided that we would devote the morning to looking for homes of pioneer recording artists who had lived in West Orange in the early 1900's. Since I knew two of the addresses from which Byron G. Harlan had addressed his mail, his name was placed first, but we also hoped to find the house which Frank C. Stanley had occupied. I had seen it in 1947 when Stanley's daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth G. Repelow, had taken me for a view of the large two-story dwelling with, I believe, a porch extending around most of its exterior, but didn't remember what street it was on. I thought Mrs. Repelow was still living in West Orange, but her name was not in the telephone directory, and we didn't know how to find her. The afternoon would be partly devoted to visiting Thomas A. Edison's historic home, "Glenmont," a short distance from his former laboratory, in company with Rosalynn Dann Kaplan, violinist of the Dann Trio which made Edison records and gave tone tests more than 50 years ago, and her husband, A. Milton Kaplan, and I planned some research at the sight. It was agreed, at Leah's suggestion, that we would return to her home for an early supper so that Merritt would have ample time for going back to the Historic Site and setting up his recording equipment. With all this settled, it was not long before we felt the urge to go to bed and recuperate from our long day's exertions.

IV. Hunting for Mr. Harlan's Home

Early Friday morning Merritt, Phyllis and I rode in his eccentric vehicle, "Crazy Mazie," from Morristown to West Orange, which I hadn't seen since I had last visited the Edison Laboratory on Thursday, September 7, 1950, in company with a Canadian record collector, and "disc jockey," Ed Manning, and Edith, his attractive wife. We then set about searching for Byron Harlan's homes.

(TO BE CONTINUED)

"AL BERNARD GIRL" — Left: Pamela Ochojski, of Monsey, N.Y., who had a major part in persuading Jim Walsh to write the HOBBIES series about Al Bernard, which ended last month, was snapped shortly after her arrival with her father, Dr. Paul M. Ochojski, professor of comparative literature at Seton Hall University, South Orange, N.J. He collects records of Asian music and also Asian instruments. The Rev. John A. Petty is at their left. Right: Ed Daly, a guide at the Edison National Historic Site, who described a tone test given by the flute virtuoso, Harold Lyman.

—Photo by Leah Burt

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

An Evening In Thomas A. Edison's Laboratory

PART II

By JIM WALSH

(Dedicated to Leah Stenzel Burt, without whose original inspiration and hard and dedicated work the twice yearly Edison Site meetings might not have come into being.)

Obviously, there wouldn't be much point in asking anyone we met, "Do you know where Byron G. Harlan used to live?" for the genial comedian has been dead since 1936 and his wife since either 1949 or 1950. Few West Orange taxpayers would remember him now, though Mrs. Repelow told me that during his lifetime residents of the city, seeing him walking down the street, would point him out to strangers and say, "There goes Byron G." And the out-of-towners usually knew exactly who was meant.

Before I began corresponding with Mr. Harlan a few years before his death, I had asked Frank Walker, a Columbia recording official, for the singer's address, and he informed me that Harlan was then living at 167 South Valley Road. When the correspondence began, however, his address had changed to 4 Lawrence Avenue. So we set forth in search of South Valley Road.

That street wasn't hard to find, but it didn't look as I had imagined it for so many years. Somehow, the name had given me a mental image of a steep, shady road, thickly covered with fallen leaves, and I visualized Mr. Harlan driving his car down the hill until he reached a valley in which his home had been built. There is something of a descent to South Valley Road, but not so much as I had imagined, and the street has much more of a commercial appearance than the rather secluded area of my depiction. I suspect it has not changed for the better since Harlan's day.

Although South Valley Road was easily located, finding No. 167 was not. The truth is, we never did identify it. We drove down the 100 block until the trail ended at No. 164. There was no house anywhere in the neighborhood numbered 167 and, to make our search more baffling, there appeared to be no adjacent site on which a dwelling had once stood but been pulled down. Our attention became fixed upon an attractive large house colored pink which stood where it seemed 167 should have been. Merritt, however, talked with a lady and her daughter living there and they said it did not have a South Valley Road number, but was considered as being on an adjoining street. After HISTORIC HOMES (?) — During their stay in New Jersey, Merritt and Phyllis Malvern and Jim Walsh went looking for homes of pioneer recording artists who had lived in West Orange, N.J. Left: Pink-colored house that may have been occupied by Byron G. Harlan, one of the most famous old-time artists. Right: A dwelling at 4 Lawrence Ave., in which Mr. Harlan lived when he and Jim corresponded.

—Photos by Merritt Malvern

the conversation ended, Merritt and I came to a tentative conclusion that this house, which looked as if it had been one in which Harlan had lived, probably had been numbered 167 in the remote past, but the numbering system had since been changed.

Finding 4 Lawrence Avenue was no problem. It was just across the road from the "pink palace" and was a less pretentious building, but it stimulated my imagination to recall that Byron G. Harlan had once written me letters that originated in that house. Since my return home, Quentin Riggs has written to say Mrs. Harlan told us when we called on her in 1947 at the Christian Science reading room in West Orange that she and her husband had also lived on Lincoln Avenue, but I had forgotten that, so no search for their one-time Lincoln Avenue residence was made.

Someone suggested that a man who operated a neighborhood super-market might know something about the Harlans or at least where 167 South Valley should be, but he didn't. He did suggest that if we drove a block or two farther down the street we might find it in a group of houses situated at a considerable elevation above the road, but when we obediently followed his advice we discovered the numbers all ran far higher than 167. Where the former Harlan home could have been remains a mystery, although I still like to think he lived in a pink house. Of course there is the possibility that Frank Walker gave me a wrong number.

The morning was now about to yield to afternoon, and there was no time for further house hunting. Merritt and Phyllis had to drive to a outlying Holiday Inn some miles away to pick up Roz and Milton Kaplan for the tour of the Edison home, so he took me to the Historic Site, where I intended to do my research in Leah's office. And John Petty had been having himself a busy day, using the recording equipment he had brought to copy large quantities of Diamond Discs and Blue Amberol cylinders in the Site's collection. Leah had arranged for him to do this, as she had originally brought the twice-yearly meetings into being and has since done the bulk of the work connected with having them successfully staged.

V. A Surprising Discovery

Soon after I entered the historic old building, which looked little changed from my visit 24 years earlier, Leah introduced me to Warren ("Denny") Beach, who was to thank me that evening for adding the two Diamond Disc instruments to the Site's collection. He proved to be the likeable, genial fellow I had visualized after talking with him on the phone. We then went to Leah's office, where I showed her something else I intended to present — a cartoon by the late Jimmy Hatlo, who originated the "They'll Do It Every Time" comic panel, humorously depicting Thomas A. Edison as the first disc jockey. The picture showed Mr. Edison demonstrating his newfangled cylinder phonograph to an unenthusiastic group of sour-faced ladies and gentlemen, who were making snide comments.

The inventor was calling their attention to the beauty of a recording "Snookums," sung by "Smiling Billy Tonsils." When Jimmy Hatlo, with whom I occasionally corresponded, sent me the drawing he said he had Billy Murray in mind when he gave "Billy Tonsils" his name. Record collectors know that you can frequently hear Billy Murray smile as he sings.

I had been with Leah only a few minutes when I made a discovery that astonished me. On a table were stacked a miscellaneous group of Edison Diamond Discs, and topmost was a white label pressing of one of Ernest L. Stevens' more popular piano solos, "On a Little Side Street." (Ernie says the best seller of all he made for Edison was "Three O'Clock in the Morning.") The only trouble was — and this was what set my hair on end — that the label said the record was not by Ernie Stevens but by someone of whom I had never heard, Clifford Murray.

I at once called this to Leah's attention and told her we were in the presence of a mystery. How did a record by Ernest L. Stevens come to be labeled as by Clifford Murray? She had no immediate idea, so I tentatively suggested that, since Edison issued other Stevens recordings under assumed names such as Franz Falkenberg, it might have been intended to make this one available under still another nom de disque. But why have labels printed with the Clifford Murray name, then withdraw the pressings and substitute Stevens? I kept on being baffled, and when I spoke that evening I interpolated some remarks about the mysterious recording and asked Mr. Stevens if he knew how it came about. He didn't and said he had no knowledge of the name Clifford Murray being used for his records. (By a lapse of memory, each time I referred in the talk to the pianist, I called him Malcolm, instead of Clifford Murray.) Then, to anticipate a bit, on Saturday afternoon, when I was again in the Site, Leah and I examined the card files of recording dates, or at least she did, and we discovered that Clifford Murray has no assumed name. He had lived at 48 South 7th St., Newark, N.J., and had been Ernie Stevens' predecessor in making experimental piano records under Mr. Edison's personal supervision. On October 4, 1921, he played "The Twelfth Street Rag." On the following December 19, he obliged with "All That I Need Is You," and on January 3, 1922, with "On a Little Side Street," the one I had seen and which Ernie was soon afterward to remake. On January 4, he played "There's a Down in Dixie Feeling Hanging Over Me," and on January 11, "Ma" (introducing "Glow, Little Lantern of Love"), also remade by Mr. Stevens, and which became popular. His final effort was on January 13, when he recorded a waltz medley incorporating "Little Lost Flower" and "Hawaiian Rainbow." Then, for some unknown reason, Clifford Murray passed out of the Edison picture and Ernie Stevens took up where he had left off. When I visited my friend Ernie at his home Saturday afternoon he said he had never heard of Clifford Murray and had not known Murray had preceded him as Mr. Edison's staff pianist at West Orange. None of Murray's records were issued — only the two which Ernie remade.

Leaving the Murray mystery for a while, I plunged into making notes from bound volumes of such Edison trade publications as "Diamond Points" and the "Edison Phonograph Monthly" and was vastly enjoying myself in my favorite kind of research when the phone rang and we were told that Merritt was waiting downstairs for me to accompany him to "Glenmont." My heart was in what I was doing, so I abandoned it with some reluctance, but I also wanted to see the inventor's home, so I lost no time in going down and joining Merritt and Phyllis and meeting Milton and Rosalynn Kaplan, who, I soon decided, were among the warmest, most immediately likeable persons I had ever met. Since the former Rosalynn Davis had been an Edison recording artist I was of course specially interested in her. She had a sweet face and a soft, cultured voice, as well as a lively sense of humor. On our way to Glenmont she told of some hotels she had endured while tone testing that could appropriately be described as "flea bags." In one there was hanging in the lobby a comb and a tooth brush, with a sign saying they were for community use, "but use at your own risk."

The visit to the Edison home was extremely interesting even though I was under the handicap that my inner ear imbalance occasionally caused me to have seizures of giddiness. I remember once, when I stumbled slightly, the lady who served as guide and explained the details of the various rooms caught me by the arm and said, "Be careful, dear."

As we visited the various rooms — the library, drawing room, dining room, master bedroom, children's rooms, etc., recordings were played, calling attention to the various features. These had been made by Mr. Edison's surviving children, Theodore and Madeline. We saw the bed in which the great inventor died in 1931 at the age of 84 and also visited the plot at the side of the house where he and his second wife now rest. Merritt and Phyllis made a number of snapshots of our group standing outside the doors of Glenmont.

And so the afternoon waned until it was time to return to the Burt abiding place for that scheduled early supper, then go back to the Site for the final arrangements, including Merritt's formidable task of setting up his recording equipment in what he hoped would be in perfect running order. It was. With that expert recording engineer at the controls it couldn't well be anything else.

While Merritt worked I ambled about, viewing the photos, including one of me, that were on display; the old posters advertising early moving pictures, such as the 1896 production of "The Kiss," starring Gladys Rice's father, John C. Rice, and the comedienne, May Irwin, which aroused a storm of puritanical indignation because it actually showed, on a large screen, a man kissing a woman! (I wonder what those blue-noses of nearly 80 years ago would have thought of today's filthy films!) There was also an interesting display of Mr. Edison's 1912 "talking movies," produced by means of a projector being geared to synchronize with a phonograph playing Blue Amberol records of the large concert type — the oversized cylinders being used, of course, because they gave great volume. I also made sure from time to time that I still had the nightstick Mr. Seymour had given me so that law and order could be maintained after my dulcet tones began to be heard from the rostrum.

About half an hour after our arrival, record collectors began to trickle in. But I'll reserve for next month more detailed mention of them as well as an account of the evening's proceedings.

(To be continued)

PRESENTATION — Jim Walsh, left, shaking hands with Warren D. Beach as he hands the Edison Site official a framed "They'll Do It Every Time" cartoon by the late Jimmy Hatlo, showing Thomas A. Edison as the first disc jockey.

—Photo by Tim Brooks

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

An Evening In Thomas A. Edison's Laboratory

PART III

By JIM WALSH

1. They Begin to Arrive

The triumphally successful meeting of Edison recording artists and record collectors, held at the Edison National Historic Site on the evening of Friday, October 18, 1974, was formally opened with brief welcoming remarks by Warren D. Beach, the Site's chief of interpretation and protection. But before Mr. Beach told his audience how glad he and other Site officials were to have them present, much preliminary work had been done. Merritt Malvern had installed his recording equipment, with which he planned to tape the entire program, and Leah Burt had arranged for copies of a neatly typed program to be placed upon all the chairs. Mr. Beach thanked several staff workers by name for their aid.

Included in the program proper was information as to who was to speak and on what topics and a list of the Edison Diamond Disc which Prof. Raymond R. Wile would play on a Chippendale Official Laboratory Model Edison as the concluding part of the entertainment. Other items of genuine record collecting interest were attached to the program, however. One was a facsimile of an advertisement in a Carrollton, Ga. newspaper, heralding a "tone test" which Gladys Rice had given in 1920, and saying that Gladys had signed certificates attesting that all the Official Laboratory Model New Edisons which the Carrollton dealers had in stock could successfully meet the same test of "direct comparison" as the instrument that had been used in the demonstration.

Also provided was a facsimile of a "tone test" schedule followed by Helen Davis and Victor Young in Georgia and Florida during December, 1922, and a copy of an article in a Mt. Vernon Ind., newspaper for October 16, 1924, announcing that Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan (whose West Orange homes Merritt and I had sought that morning) would give a tone test "in the armory building in this city on the night of Monday, October 27." The news story went on to say that Collins and Harlan had made a similar appearance five years earlier, "and their program at that time constituted one of the very finest musical attractions ever brought to this city. The visit of Collins and Harlan again this year will mean the renewal of friendships with local music lovers, friendships which their recreations on the New Edison have preserved fresh and fine since their last appearance. As singers of funny songs and catchy tunes the country boasts no higher class combination than Collins and Harlan." The article doesn't say so, but both comedians were "getting on in years" at the time of their second Mt. Vernon visit. Collins was 60 and Harlan 63. This was toward the very end of their recording career, for Collins' health was failing and he retired soon after returning from the tone testing tour.

Of more than ordinary interest to me was a letter from H. G. Parker, manager of the Montana Phonograph Co., "distributors, the New Edison and Amberola Phonographs, Records and Supplies," to Arthur L. Walsh, then head of Edison's musical phonograph division. The letter was dated October 26, 1925, at a time within a few weeks after Victor had announced the New Orthophonic Victrola and electrical recording, and Brunswick,

"MUTUAL ADMIRATION SOCIETY." Left — Rosalynn Davis Kaplan and Jim Walsh author of "Favorite, Pioneer Recording Artists," HOBBIES Magazine, photographed in front of Thomas A. Edison's historic home, "Glenmont," in West Orange, N. J. Both seem to be saying, "Gee! You're wonderful!"

Right — This group, also posed at the Edison home, includes Fred Harrington, Phyllis Malvern, Jim Walsh, Rosalynn Davis

TYPICAL SCENES AT THE EDISON MEETING. — Left, Gladys Rice, having autographed a record for Martin Bryan, publisher of "The New Amberola Monthly," sings a bit of the recorded song. In the background are "still pictures" of scenes from the movie,

"The Kiss," which May Irwin and Miss Rice's father made in 1896. Right — A part of the gathering in the refreshment period. Note the mixture of all ages.

the Panatrope, both said to be inventions that had "revolutioned" recorded music. It told of a tone test given in Helena by Elizabeth Spencer, soprano, and Lucille Collette, pianist, and said: "... We had 2,200 attending. The Tone Test was a big success in every respect, Miss Collette sharing equally with Miss Spencer in the applause."

Then Mr. Parker's concluding paragraph plaintively asked:

"Is there any possibility of Mr. Edison awakening to the necessity of national advertising at this crucial moment when all conditions seem to be playing into his hands? Must the Edison continue to stay hidden in the dark while the 'Dear Public' is informed with flare of trumpet of the marvelous new Phonograph 'Panatropes,' 'Heliotropes,' and other 'tropes' which reproduce with a perfection unapproached by any Phonograph heretofore? It is most exasperating and discouraging to both jobber and dealer."

This letter touched upon a sore spot with Edison jobbers and retailers. From 1915 until early in 1922 the New Edison was regularly advertised in the Saturday Evening Post and most other important magazines. Then, in the spring of 1922, just after introducing the white label record and when radio was gaining its first hold on public attention, Mr. Edison abruptly stopped advertising. So, for that matter, did most other phonograph and record companies, aside from Victor and Brunswick. Edison seems to have decided to rely entirely on tone tests as an advertising medium—a method that convinced the minority of persons who attended them, but said nothing to the millions who didn't. Sales of New Edison phonographs and Diamond Discs fell sharply and progressively and, as business became consistently worse, the company lost large numbers of its retail dealers and many jobbers despairingly ceased to distribute the line. For the last few years of Edison's activities, it relied largely on its own branch offices set up to take the place of franchised wholesalers.

One thing that surprised me about the Parker letter was the fact that tone tests were being given toward the end of 1925. I had believed they were discontinued in 1924. "Cousin Arthur" (as I used to call him) Walsh passed the letter on to Mr. Edison and received it back with this terse scrawl: "Walsh. Noted. T.A.E." This meant that the phonograph's inventor had read it, but was making no promises. Edison did do a little national advertising the next year, however, "plugging" the heavier "dance reproducer" to help meet the demand for greater volume from Edison records, and placed them more nearer on a loudness equality with Orthophonic Victrola and Brunswick "light ray" discs.

Then, in 1927, Edison published a series of advertisements in which Mr. Edison purportedly answered questionnaires concerning the differing methods of sound recording and reproduction and scientifically explaining the superiority of his hill-and-dale system over the lateral type.

Those who arrived early had ample time to read the programs and related matter before the speaking began, but probably few did. The first delegates to enter the room, I believe, were three young gentlemen with a New England flavor, each of whom is making a name as a recorded music researcher. In the forefront was Tim Brooks, who now lives at Jackson Heights, N.Y., but is a native of New Hampshire. I once recorded a program for him by long distance telephone when he had a disc jockey show while attending Dartmouth College. Tim I recognized at once, for he had visited me a few years ago.

With the smooth-shaven, Mr. Brooks were Martin Bryan of St. Johnsbury, Vt., publisher, and William R. Bryant, of South Harpswell, Me., who is trying to compile complete listings of Imperial and Zonophone discs. I used to hear fairly often from Martin when he was in his early teens. He, like Tim, was smooth of face but wore glasses. Bill had written me that he flaunted a "spade-type" beard that made him look somewhat like Lenin, the long gone Russian political leader, and he had not exaggerated. He had written to me shortly before I left home, asking to borrow my old Zonophone catalogs, and I had brought them with me. When I handed the set to him he pronounced them "fabulous" and said they would be of great help in his research, as I hope they are proving to be. All three "boys" were genuinely pleasant and friendly, and I am sorry that I couldn't talk with them as much as I should have liked, but I was constantly being sought by new claimants for my time and attention, and it was not possible to speak long with anyone.

Shortly after the "Down East" contingent made itself manifest, I was approached by a charming young lady, accompanied by a handsome, distinguished looking gentleman. They were Pamela Ochojski, of Monsey, N.Y., and her father, Dr. Paul M. Ochojski, who teaches comparative literature in a South Orange, N.J., college, within a few miles of where the meeting was being held. He specializes in collecting Asiatic instruments and recordings of Far Eastern music. Pam, as faithful readers of this department know, was, with Albert Via, of South Boston, Va., largely responsible for my writing the recently concluded HOBBIES series about Al Bernard. A letter from her expressing great admiration for my old friend Al and urging me to tell his life story had the effect of pushing me over the border line at which I had long been hesitating, and turning out a book-length manuscript which ran from March, 1974, through last February, the longest series I have ever published.

Pamela had written me that she was working on an article about black racial "stereotypes" for her college paper, and I had brought her a tape cassette containing recordings of songs displaying prevalent misconceptions about Negroes. A little later, Pam and Dr. Ochojski seated themselves behind Gladys Rice and Douglas Stanbury, who had by this time made their entrance and with whom I had had a few moments of enjoyable conversation. Leah Burt said they asked her, "Did Mr. Walsh come?" but expressed fear that the trip had been too long for me to take. They were informed that Mr. Walsh had come and was "receiving" in the auditorium where the program was to be given. Pam has since written me that she was thrilled at meeting and talking with Gladys, and kept thinking: "There is somebody who sang with Billy Jones, and actually made records with Billy Murray!"

EMINENT SPEAKERS. — Left, Prof. Raymond R. Wile, of City College, New York, describes arrangements made for Edison "tone tests." Right — Ernest L. Stevens, Edison staff pianist, tells an amusing story about his encounter with a burglar.

I can of course more easily recall my meetings with my old friends of the U.S. mail than I can with others who introduced themselves but I had not previously known my correspondence, and whose names I do not now in many instances recall, although they were nice people with whom I was glad to shake hands and exchange a few words. Even if I could recall their names it would be impossible to mention them all.

I can't think of his name, but I do recall vividly a very likeable young man—I believe he said he was from Pennsylvania—who told me he had several thousand records by Collins and Harlan and Billy Murray, and remarked wistfully: "Of course, I came along too late to see Billy Murray, but you were lucky. You knew him!" It was obvious that of all the dead and gone recording artists "The Denver Nightingale" was, to many collectors present, the towering legendary figure. I felt especially sorry for a man from Indiana, a correspondence friend of the Rev. John Aloysius

Petty, who had misunderstood, I believe, something John had said in a long distance conversation, and had come to the meeting in the belief that Billy Murray was alive and would be present. He had not known that Billy died August 17, 1954, and would be 97 if he were still here.

Also among early arrivals was Allen Koenigsberg of Brooklyn, publisher of many valuable reprints of early talking machine catalogs and other publications. Allen was accompanied by Peter Dilg, of Baldwin, N.Y., an enthusiastic young fellow with a large collection.

Another friend by correspondence from Brooklyn was Paul Charosh, who advertises each month in HOBBIES for certain types of old single-faced records. After I returned home Paul sent me some color snapshots of himself and his cat, "Mickey."

The Rev. Mr. Petty, tired from his strenuous day of taping records in the Site, showed up at about the same time as Dr. Ochojski and Pam, and Leah photographed him beside them. He was accompanied by his host from Whippany. Another of my friends by correspondence whom I was meeting in person for the first time was Fred Harrington, of Traverse City, Mich. Fred formerly gave programs of old recordings over a chain of educational radio stations. They were heard by Merritt Malvern, and it was this that led to the rewarding friendship between Merritt and me, for he wrote to Fred, asking where he obtained his information on pioneer recording artists. Fred replied that he got much of it from my writings in HOBBIES, and Merritt then communicated with me. Since I returned home I have been grieved to learn that Fred Harrington has become seriously ill, but am hoping fervently to receive, before long, better reports of his health.

The undisputed long distance attendance champion was an interesting 22-year-old youth from British Columbia, Canada. Michael Eert is the young man's name, and he used to write to me about his idol, Bob Roberts, when he was in his early teens. Quite recently he has been to "Ragtime Bob's" home town, Cincinnati, looking for surviving relatives of the great comedian, and was fortunate in meeting Roberts' stepdaughter. He learned that Bob was operating a poolroom and also appearing in a comedy act over a Covington, Ky., radio station at the time of his death in 1930.

I believe it was after the program had been given and a refreshment period was being observed that I talked with Irving Levin, of New York. Irving is an ardent admirer of the great saxophone virtuoso, Rudy Wiedoeft, and told me how much he had enjoyed my article about Wiedoeft in HOBBIES for November and December, 1973.

(To be continued)

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Re feathered

Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

Quality repairs

on Antique Musical Boxes

of all types; new gears made; governors overhauled; new endless screws made; broken comb teeth replaced and tuned and new mainsprings made and installed. For fast service contact:

DWIGHT G. PORTER

Box 28
Sharon, Vt. 06065
Tele. (802) 763-8039

tfc

tfc

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

An Evening In Thomas A. Edison's Laboratory

PART IV

By JIM WALSH

In the last issue (May, 1975, page 37), I mentioned talking with Irving Levin at the memorable evening. I repeat that Irving is an ardent admirer of that great saxophone virtuoso, Rudy Wiedoeft, and told me how much he had enjoyed my article about Wiedoeft in HOBBIES for November and December, 1973.

He said he sent Xerox copies of it to Rudy Vallee, who was called "Rudy" because of his great admiration for the king of saxophonists, and received a "rave letter," as he termed it, in which Vallee asked how he could get HOBBIES each month. I told Irving I had written a follow-up article, based largely on information given to me by Miss Irene Smith, of Seattle, Wash., who knew more about Wiedoeft than I did, and it should be published within the next few months. After I came home, Mr. Levin sent me a huge amount of informative material he had accumulated concerning Rudy Wiedoeft, and it is a treasure I greatly appreciate.

Perhaps the youngest enthusiast with whom I talked was a boy whom I took to be about 11 or 12. (I think he is shown in a group photo I am submitting for publication with this installment). The youngster was a great admirer of Leola Lucey, a soprano, now dead, who made many Edison records and gave "tone tests." He proudly showed me Miss Lucey's scrapbook, which he had found in a second-hand book store, and asked me to tell him all I could about her. When the record playing began, he had the pleasure of hearing one, "It Might As Well Be You," by his favorite.

Of course, by this time the special guests of the evening were coming in. Leah Burt introduced me to Ernest Stevens, the Edison pianist whom I had wanted for many years to know. Ernie lived up in very way to my expectations, and I was glad to promise to call on him the following day at his music studio in Montclair. Rosalynd Davis Kaplan and Milton, her husband, I had already met that afternoon when we toured Thomas A. Edison's home, and it was a joy to be with them again. Mrs. Hazel Burleigh, sister of Felice and Blanche Dann, the ladies who had played with Mrs. Kaplan in the Dann Trio, also came, but somehow I did not meet her before the scheduled session began. When I began speaking, however, and asked if she were present, she smilingly identified herself.

Finally, Edna White Chandler, accompanied by her young friend, Roy Puffer, who had served as chauffeur on their trip from her home in Massachusetts, warmly greeted me. We had kept up a friendship by correspondence since first meeting in 1949, when Edna was a member of a theatrical company headed by Will Oakland, which entertained service men in Veterans' Hospitals, but had not met in person since we both attended the "John Bieling Day" held in 1950 in Hempstead, N.Y.

Edna's exclamation upon seeing me was especially gratifying. "Why," she said, "you look younger and handsomer than you did the last time I saw you!" I fear Edna's remark was not strictly factual, but, being human, I was glad that she felt I was holding my own in the face of the inevitable ravages of time. I thought that Edna, in spite of having had more than one serious illness, was looking fine.

But now it was time for the "official" program to begin. As it got under way I was seated about midway of a row near the center of the auditorium, awaiting a call to the speaker's stand. Wally Burt, Leah's husband, was at my left, and Douglas Stansbury and Gladys Rice on my other side. Pamela and her father and Harold Anderson, retired head of the Site, were behind me. All in all, I couldn't have had better company.

II. Jim Walsh "Orates"

As was said in the beginning, Warren Beach called the assemblage to order with some introductory words of welcome. He then referred to the Historic Site's having received through my "most gracious generosity," a gift of two Diamond Disc phonographs needed for its collection. He went on to mention that I was among those present, told something about my long association with HOBBIES and revealed that I planned to discuss some phases of my work for the magazine. In conclusion he said, "Jim, the floor is yours for as long as you like."

This was the signal for me to walk majestically down to the speaker's platform. Acting on Merritt's instructions, Phyllis Malvern had fastened a small microphone around my neck, so I was technically all set to "orate." As I started down the aisle, however, I became entangled with some wires, as, being me, I would, and vociferated as I made my bumbling way forward, "Well, here I come, trailing clouds of glory!" This brought a laugh, and my wiring difficulty was remedied after I reached the rostrum. With an inquiry to Merritt as to whether he was recording, and getting an affirmative reply, I began my remarks, which, of course, I can present here in only a shortened version.

Although "Denny" Beach had said I could have all the time I wished, I felt that I was supposed to "speak your piece and git" within 20 minutes so as not to cause the program to run overtime. I had marked some paragraphs that could be omitted if necessary, but since I wanted to get everything in I read at a rapid-fire clip, which I fear was too fast for comfortable listening. Nevertheless, the audience responded without fail to the humorous passages and I felt a warm response from my hearers all the way through, so I suppose I did well enough. At any rate, I was given many assurances that my dissertation had been enjoyed.

I started by recalling that Murry K. Hill, a brilliant recording comedian of 65 years ago, used to begin his vaudeville act by saying: "Thank you for your very generous applause . . . I was expecting more! What's the matter with you people? Are you handcuffed?" But added that I shouldn't follow Murry's example. I mentioned that Pamela Ochojski, who started me on the long road toward writing the Al Bernard series, then running in HOBBIES, was with us and asked: "Pam, how about stepping up here beside me and taking a bow?" Not expecting this invitation, Pam didn't come forward to join me, but rose from her seat, curtsied, and received hearty applause.

After displaying Morgan Seymour's nightstick and explaining that I had brought it to assure law and order while I held forth, I expressed my pleasure at the presence of Ernest Stevens, Gladys Rice, Douglas Stansbury, Edna White Chandler, Rosalynd Davis Kaplan and Mrs. Hazel Burleigh, and said that an article would soon appear in HOBBIES, explaining that I was mistaken when I wrote, in 1972, that Mrs. Kaplan and the late Blanche Dann were members of Ada Jones' party that gave a concert in my home town of Marion, Va. I had noticed that Gladys' name was one that could be resolved into its component parts better than any other that had come to my attention, so I said:

HOBBIES' SPOKESMAN.—Left, Jim Walsh telling of the things he has tried to accomplish during his 34 years of writing for HOBBIES. Right—Dr. Fred Summerill relates his experiences attending "tone tests."

"... Since I was a small boy the name of Gladys Rice has carried magic for me. You and Rachel Grant were among my dream girls . . . and you and Rachel turned out to be the same girl . . . Your distinguished parents, John C. Rice and Sally Cohen, certainly know what they were doing when they chose your given name . . . Let's analyze the name of Gladys as we used to have to break down sentence construction in school. The first letter G., and that stands for several fine things - Gentle, Gifted, Gracious, Glamorous, Gorgeous and GREAT! . . . The next four letters in your name - L-A-D-Y - spell Lady. Great lady of stage, radio and records, that's you! And, of course, the concluding S stands for Sweet Soprano Singer, just as the first four letters, G-L-A-D spell out your sunny nature.

Edison used to call you 'the Glad Girl.' But, Gladys, I don't much like your last name. Instead of being Rice, it should be Nice."

Miss Rice wrote to me after I returned to Vinton that my tribute gave her "a wonderful, wonderful feeling." She told me when I resumed my seat that her assumed name was taken from her grandmother's—Rachel from one and Grant from the other. Laughingly, she said that she was "a mongrel—part Jewish, part Scotch and part Swedish." (I hope I have remembered those racial strains correctly). She also said that she liked to make records for Edison, "because they always paid us before we did the work. When we walked into the recording studio we were handed our money before we sang."

I served notice that I expected all the lady artists to kiss me when we said goodbye, and, to anticipate, they all did, with Roz Kaplan setting the example. When Edna White Chandler and I embraced, Tim Brooks missed getting a "shot," so asked us to repeat the performance and put "some real passion" into it. Edna said, "My pleasure!" and we went into a clinch that would have brought the censors down upon us in the days of May Irwin and John C. Rice, as the accompanying illustration will attest.

After saying how glad I had been to see so many of my friends by correspondence, I pointed out that West Orange was a historical city not only because Thomas Edison's laboratory and factories had operated there, but because some of the most popular pioneer recording artists once lived inside its boundaries.

"I often think," I said, "how fortunate the people of West Orange were 65 to 75 years ago . . . Almost every day they might see men and women whom today's record collectors look back upon as figures larger than life . . . If you and I had been living in West Orange in 1905 we might have gone into a grocery store and seen Arthur Collins buying the family food supply and, no doubt, beetling about the high cost of eating. We might have strolled into a barber shop where Byron Harlan was getting a haircut. We might have stepped into a corner grog shop and observed Edward Meeker, who announced the Edison two-minute cylinders, lubricating his vocal chords with a modest quencher. A little later we could have attended a wrangle of the West Orange board of Aldermen and seen Frank C. Stanley serving as one of the city fathers. To the denizens of West Orange this great bass singer, writer of comic rube sketches and organizer of the Peerless Quartet, was known as Alderman Grinsted . . . And, crowning touch, we could have loitered in the vicinity of this very building and seen Thomas A. Edison himself, walking from his laboratory to his home . . . I also mentioned that many Edison artists had lived in the adjoining city of Newark.

Taking up the subject of my HOBBIES writing, I mentioned that I have received any number of letters asking me to collect "all your articles" into a book, but said I had no intention of trying to do so because it would take 30, 40 or 50 books, depending on word count, to contain all I have already written, and that I preferred to build up the largest possible back-log for future use rather than to devote much precious time to editing my already published articles in the hope of seeing them between cloth covers. I also pointed out that the articles were not written with book publication in mind and that a great deal of their contents as published in HOBBIES would have to be altered or taken out to make them suitable for book use. Another point I made was that if such a book, or series of books, could be published it would begin to be obsolete before seeing print because new articles would still be coming out each month in HOBBIES and would not be included.

I said I doubted that I could achieve my ambition of supplying HOBBIES with enough material to keep "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists" going through the year 2,000, but I was trying and my supply of articles was now a few years ahead of current publication. I also said I could not use articles by anyone other than me, for if I accepted some unsolicited contributions but turned down others I would be accused of unfairness and favoritism, and didn't want that to happen.

"A GOOD TIME WAS HAD BY ALL."—Left, Jim Walsh, Gladys Rice and Douglas Stanbury having an animated conversation as Pam Ochojski looks admiringly at the artists. Right—Jim and Edna White, although old friends, hadn't seen each other for 24 years. In this picture, posed at the request of photographer Tim Brooks, they indulge in "passionate" endearments while Irving Levin looks smilingly on.

Toward the end of my discourse, I referred to record collectors here and abroad who, I knew, were wishing they were among those assembled in the Historic Site. In my manuscript I referred to Lucie and Walt Jenkins, who, I said, lived "in the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia, near the Trail of the Lonesome Pine." (I didn't say "on the trail," for they live near the trail, not upon it). I had originally intended merely to read this quotation from the old popular song, but an impish impulse seized me to sing those two lines instead of reciting them. I did, and the startled response was gratifying, especially when I asked if my rendition would have qualified me as an Edison tone test artist. In conclusion, I said: "The officials of the Edison National Historic Site are doing a great work in sponsoring these informative sessions . . . I hope the meetings will keep on being held for many years to come. Thank you very much."

As I turned to go back to my place in the audience, Warren Beach asked for my manuscript, saying it should be preserved in the Site's archives. He promised to send me a facsimile copy. He did, and I have had the benefit of referring to it in quoting from my remarks.

III. Professor Wile Takes Over

When I had finished, Mr. Beach again spoke briefly, saying my talk was "a tough act to follow," but that we would next hear from one person who could follow it, Prof. Raymond R. Wile, who would speak on Edison tone tests and play records of the type used in the "direct comparisons." Mr. Beach also mentioned that the Site had recently acquired $2,000 worth of taping equipment and would soon be able to supply copies of recordings in its archives.

Ray Wile was late in arriving. I didn't meet him before the program began, but as he walked past me on his way to the speakers' stand, I greeted him and we exchanged a cordial handshake.

In beginning his remarks, Professor Wile told of discovering, in a second-hand store a few years ago, copies of the Music Lover's Guide and the American Music Lover, magazines which contained articles I had written before I became a monthly contributor to HOBBIES. "We are very grateful to Jim," he said, "for everything he has done."

Discussing tone tests, Ray told how these were arranged. Many tests were given by famous

(Continued on next page) 127

INSTRUCTION CLASSES on the care and restoration of antique musical boxes starting June 16, 1975, also classes July and August. Advance class building complete new 15½" Regina double comb boxes. Kits available. Lloyd G. Kelley, 40 years experience restoring and manufacturing musical boxes will be your instructor. Send for brochure to Lloyd G. Kelley, 154 LaSalle Road, West Hartford, Conn. 06107. Tel. 203-232-6250. After June 1, Lloyd G. Kelley, Regina Music Box Co. Inc., Sawnee Bean Road, Thetford Center, Vermont 05075. Tel. 802-785-2669. jcl747

World's Largest Selection of

MUSIC BOXES and NICKELODEONS!

World's largest wholesale selection—over 500 in stock!—of music boxes, nickelodeon pianos, orchestrions, circus organs, etc. Huge catalogue illustrates prices, describes our inventory—just $2 postpaid, or $10 for next 6 issues. Satisfaction guaranteed.

Also can supply the latest printing of the mammoth 1008-page, 8-pound "Encyclopedia of Automatic Musical Instruments," by Q. David Bowers. Thousands of illustrations. Learn all about instruments, various types and models, and their history. Book autographed and inscribed to you by author, $30 postpaid. Money back if not delighted! Over 6,000 copies sold. Awarded "one of the most valuable reference books" award by the American Library Association.

Huge selection of instruments available for immediate low-cost shipment from storage points in America and Europe! Get acquainted with us today!

Write to us in the U.S.A. at: Mekanisk Musik Museum, Box 1869, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90210, or to our headquarters in Europe, 28 cents postage required for airmail to Europe. Send for your copy of our catalog today!

MEKANISK MUSIK MUSEUM

VESTERBROGADE 150

COPENHAGEN, DENMARK

Telephone (01) 22-21-22

nc

Quality repairs

on Antique Musical Boxes

of all types; new gears made; governors overhauled; new endless screws made; broken comb teeth replaced and tuned and new main springs made and installed. For fast service contact:

DWIGHT G. PORTER

Box 28

Sharon, Vt. 06065
Tele. (802) 763-8039

t67c

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Refeathered

Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

tfc

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 37)

artists whose names appeared regularly in Edison record lists, but some were by lesser known performers, whose discs did not appear in the catalogs but were used for the tone test comparisons. Something I found especially intriguing was his discovery that tone tests were given in Australia by Stella Power, a soprano who had been a protégé of Nellie Melba. Miss Power seems to have made five double-faced Diamond Discs. Three were afterwards included in the American catalog, but sale of the other two was restricted to her native Australia. Prof. Wile also described a film "The Voice of the Violin," which was used to advertise the tone quality of Edison phonographs and discs. He then called upon Ed Daly, a guide at the Historic Site, who began working for Thomas A. Edison, Inc., in 1913. Mr. Daly, a genial gentleman, gave a most interesting account of hearing a tone test performance by Harold Lyman, the flute virtuoso who, when he was not playing on tour in comparison with the New Edison, returned to other duties as a member of the Edison staff. One of his jobs in the final days of Edison records was to listen to Diamond Discs before they went on sale and write criticisms listing the qualities, good or bad, of recorded performances.

Ernest L. Stevens was introduced as Mr. Edison's personal pianist, and told of what a privilege he had considered it to work closely with the inventor, and how impressed he was by Mr. Edison's "sincerity and interest." As an example of the value of painstaking work he related that he had once heard Ignace Jan Paderewski, perhaps the greatest of all pianists, practice the opening measures of his "Minuet" for five straight hours. Ernie brought down the house with a story about how, after he and his wife bought an old house, Mrs. Stevens constantly thought she heard someone walking about on the floors below their bedroom and sent him three or four nights a week to investigate. After years of fruitless gumshoeing he went down one night and came face to face with a burglar. When the robber ordered him to hold up his hands, he replied: "Wait till I call my wife! She's been wanting to meet you for the last 25 years!" Ernie's lively remarks were followed by the playing of a Diamond Disc, "Dirty Hands, Dirty Face!" by his dance orchestra.

After this, came an unpublished record of World War I by Gladys Rice and the Shannon Quartet, "Sweet Little Buttercup." This had one of the most unusual arrangements I have ever heard, and the record was so attractive I don't understand why it wasn't issued. The Quartet sang the entire first verse and chorus before Gladys' soprano voice was heard.

Douglas Stanbury came next with his Edison test record, also never issued, made on July 17, 1924, of "June," a tuneful song with commonplace words. Before it was played Doug said he couldn't remember making it and would listen with considerable trepidation. This, one of the two tests he made for Edison, was greeted with warm applause.

Doug, I observed, pronounced "record" in the British manner as "rek-cord," and some other characteristics of his speech made me wonder if he were of English birth, but I had no chance to ask him.

Dr. Frederick Summerill told of attending a tone test given in 1915 by Elizabeth Spencer at New Brunswick, N.J., and also mentioned hearing Gladys Rice sing many times in the Capital Theatre.

Edna White Chandler was called upon. Perfectly poised and obviously accustomed to public speaking, Edna described her Edison record making experiences and told of her surprise at learning from me that her trumpet solo of "When You And I Were Young, Maggie" had been dubbed onto one of the first Edison long-play records. When Professor Wile said that the next musical selection on the program would be her unissued Diamond Disc of "Agnes Dei," she exclaimed: "I hope it's better than the one I made of the same song for Columbia; It sounded horrible!"

A sombre note was added by the playing of "I Know That My Redeemer Liveth," sung by Julia Henrich, a young soprano who met a tragic death in St. Louis during a tone test tour. She was waiting for a train near a spot where a baggage truck had been left projecting over the rails. The train came along, smashed into the truck, and it was hurled across the platform, killing Miss Henrich.

Rosalynd Davis Kaplan recalled her tone testing experiences as a member of the Dann Trio, with Harvey Hindemyer as tenor soloist. "We traveled most of the States," she said, "and were presented with candy and flowers everywhere we went. We were to go to Europe to give tone tests, but I met Friend Husband and decided not to go. 'But,' she added roguishly, 'I haven't regretted it!'"

In playing the last Diamond Disc of the evening, Glen Ellison singing a Harry Lauder song, "It's Nice to Get Up in the Morning (But It's Nicer to Lie in Bed)," Professor Wile

Gladys Rice, the popular soprano, gave an extraordinary recital Friday night, October 1st, at the city hall.

Miss Rice walked on to the stage and stood beside a stately cabinet. She began to sing "Forever Is a Long, Long Time." The audience immediately yielded to the spell of her beautiful voice. Then suddenly there was a stir—a subdued murmur of surprise—and a perplexed rubbing of eyes. The voice continued to fill the auditorium with undiminished sweetness—your ears were proof of that—but her lips had become absolutely silent—your eyes told you that.

What a wizardry was this? It was the test of direct comparison with the living artist, which Thomas A. Edison has developed to demonstrate that the Official Laboratory Model of his new phonograph will sing any song exactly as it was sung by the artist, and that his RE-CREATION of a singer's voice, as it comes from his wonderful new phonograph, positively cannot be distinguished from the singer's actual voice, when both are heard in direct comparison.

Miss Rice made repeated comparisons—always with the same result. It was truly wonderful. This master achievement of the great wizard, Edison, marks a new epoch in music.

The New Edison

"The Phonograph With a Soul"

You can have a duplicate of the wonderful instrument used at the city hall and, if you act quickly, we can furnish you with an engraved certificate (signed by Miss Rice) certifying that it is an exact duplicate in tonal quality of the instrument she used in her amazing comparison; also that it will sustain precisely the same test.

We have ten of the famous Official Laboratory Models and Miss Rice has certified every one of them. Come to our store at once and ask to see and hear the Official Laboratory Models on which Miss Rice has issued her Certificates of Authenticity.

O. S. Miller Piano Co.

Worthy Drug Store—Carrollton, Ga.

AUDIENCE MYSTIFIED BY PHONOGRAPH

Hears Famous Soprano Compare Voice With RE-CREATION By Edison's New Phonograph--Could Not Tell The Two Apart.

GLADYS RICE "TONE TEST."—This reproduction of an advertisement from a Carrollton, Ga., newspaper, was distributed as part of the program at the Edison National Historic Site meeting. It tells of an Edison "tone test" Gladys Rice had given several days before the ad appeared.

recalled an article about Lauder which I published in HOBBIES more than 20 years ago, and quoted me as saying that some people prefer Ellison's singing of Lauder songs to their originator's. I am one of those who like Ellison best.

This concluded the program. After it ended, I knew for a while what it was to be a faint approach to a celebrity. I was approached repeatedly and asked for my autograph, was assured by many smiling ladies and gentlemen that they had enjoyed my talk, and was asked how many years ahead of current needs my HOBBIES articles now stood. A high spot was a brief, but enjoyable, talk with Theodore Edison. He told me he had not, as I had believed, helped to develop the Edison, an improved Diamond Disc phonograph brought out in 1927, but that he had designed the reversible pick-up for the Edison electric phonograph, which permitted both lateral cut and hill-and-dale records to be played. I thought Mr. Edison looked very much like the photos of his father reproduced on the boxes in which two-minute wax cylinders were packed. I also had a brief chat with Ray Wile and told him I didn't consider that he and I were rivals in Edison research, since he was concerned primarily with business and legal aspects of the company's activities while I concentrated on learning all I could about the artists. Agreeing, Ray said: "Nobody could ever hope to be your rival where the artists are concerned." Another pleasant meeting was with Mrs. Warren Beach.

Breaking-up time came, and as I was riding home with Leah Burt I told her I was sure it would be nice to be a millionaire, "but rather than be a rich man interested in nothing but making money and whose only recommendation is the money he has made, I'd choose to be plain Jim Walsh and receive the heart-warming reception and attention I got at this meeting tonight." And I still say that. Leah replied: "This meeting was the best yet! What worries me now is how we'll ever be able to have another to equal it!"

IV. Winding It Up

What remains to be told of my eventful "voyage" to New Jersey must be "capsuled." Syd Silverman, the editor of Variety, had asked me to write an account of the Site program and to bring it to his office on West 46th Street in New York City the following Sunday, so some of the forepart of Saturday was spent in Leah's office struggling to master an unfamiliar typewriter and write the "story." Leah watched with delighted amusement as I writhed in the throes of composition, but the article at length was done. However, because I told in it of some of the things I had said during my "spiel," I felt it should not appear under my byline and, to tease Leah, signed it as being by "L. S. Burt." That was the way it appeared, at full length and unchanged, in the next issue of Variety. On Sunday morning, Merritt and Phyllis Malvern and I rode into New York, and I presented the article to Mr. Silverman, who is one of the most charming persons I have ever met. I also enjoyed meeting Variety's managing editor, Robert J. Landry, and the editor of its music section, Leonard Traube. Len told me, "You are a legend around this place!" After that, Merritt, Phyllis and I called on my dear friend, Louis Cohn, and his lovely wife, Lillian, at their quarters in Hotel Beacon at 75th Street and Broadway, about a block from Gladys Rice's apartment, and had a most enjoyable visit with my wonderful 90-year-old friend.

But I am getting ahead of myself. On Saturday afternoon, with the Variety article written and out of the way, Leah and I went to Montclair and had a delightful hour with Ernie Stevens in his elaborately equipped music studios, where he does a thriving business in piano instruction. That evening Leah, Wally, Merritt, Phyllis and I were dinner guests of Fred Harrington, Dorothy, his wife; their daughter, Valerie, and their son-in-law, Thomas Burke, in the Burke home at Short Hills, N.J. The food was excellent and the hospitality overflowing, so we thoroughly enjoyed ourselves.

Mr. and Mrs. Malvern and I arose early Monday morning, to get started for my home in Virginia as soon as possible. As I followed Leah into her kitchen to say goodbye, she evidently was thinking my performance at the Friday evening session, for she was singing:

"In the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia,
On the Trail of the Lonesome Pine!"

She told me she wished I didn't have to go home and could stay in New Jersey, with both of us doing research at the Historic Site.

The trip to Virginia got off to a bad start on an interstate highway when Merritt missed a turn into, I believe, Highway 78, which connected later with No. 81 leading straight into Vinton, and we had to stay on 76 and take a longer route by way of Philadelphia. It was, however, a beautiful, bracing day, and Merritt said that he liked to take wrong routes for the sake of enjoying new scenery. On the outskirts of Carlisle, Pa., we stopped for lunch in an attractive restaurant, the Dutch Kitchen, where the pretty waitresses were attired in traditional Dutch costumes. While waiting for our meal we made a long distance call to Olive Kline at her home in Pelham, N.Y., and told "Ollie" how sorry we were that she hadn't been able to come to the meeting, but hoped her crippled condition would steadily improve. Afterwards we drove into Carlisle, where I mailed a card to "Chuck" Summers, my enemy-in-chief in the Vinton post office, saying: "Having fine time. Thank God you're not here." But to Chuck's intense disgust, I reached Vinton ahead of the card.

As the afternoon wore away, I began to feel elated at the thought of soon being at home and again seeing all my furry family. Merritt wanted to obtain some Virginia legal forms, so we made a couple of unsuccessful stops in towns along the way in search of them, but still managed to reach Vinton at about dusk. My heart was beating high as we drove into my back yard. I soon found that both the "inside" and "outside" cats were present and accounted for and seemingly showing no ill effects from my absence. Merritt went upstairs with me to replace a couple of defective light switches — another example of his unfailing thoughtfulness — and to connect an attachment to my tape cassette outfit so that it could reproduce through a "hi-fi" record player for better tone and increased volume. When we went back downstairs, Phyllis gave me a five dollar bill, saying she wanted to help take care of the cats' food bill — "buy them some beef liver," she urged — and told me that while she was waiting Possey had emerged from beneath the house and taken a long drink of water out of the supply I keep on the porch for the cats. I soon discovered that both he and "Squeaky," the back-room black mouse, had disposed of most of the food I had put out for them, so gave them a fresh supply.

Now it was time for Merritt and Phyllis, having brought me safely home, to begin the long ride back to their abode in Buffalo. Cordial good-byes and waving of hands, and they were gone. I went early to bed and soon fell asleep, after reflecting happily upon all the wonderful things that had happened to me during the past five days, and thinking how lucky I had been to attend that evening in the Edison National Historic Site — a joyful experience I hope to repeat at some not distant date.

THE END

T
H E

G
L
A M
O R
O
U S

CHICAGO
ANTIQUE SHOW
and COLLECTORS' FAIR

MAY 30 - JUNE 3

CONRAD HILTON
EXHIBITION HALL

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

William J. Halley (Judge William Joseph Hanley, Sr.)

PART I

By JIM WALSH

I. A Unique Artist

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists has been appearing for 33 years, and during that long span I have written about a multitude of unusual, gifted and outstanding men and women. Never before, however, have I chronicled the life story of a singer who began his recording career before he was old enough to vote, continued as a public entertainer long enough to work his way through law school, then abandoned that career to become, first, a lawyer, and, afterwards, a highly regarded judge.

That is the story of the talented comedian who made records from 1913 through 1915 under the name of William J. (or Will) Halley, but whose real name was William Joseph Hanley. The nearest parallel I can recall to his career may be found in Arthur Clough, who, as recorded in HOBBIES for June and July, 1968, is said to have been first a lawyer, and then a singer who planned to return to law practice and win his cases by singing, instead of speaking, his arguments. But, whereas Clough reputedly was a lawyer turned singer, Hanley was a singer who developed into a lawyer-judge.

For years I had "William J. Halley" in mind as a subject for a HOBBIES biography, but couldn't write about him because my information was scanty.

A few years before I began writing for HOBBIES I asked Billy Murray and his close friend, Jimmy Martin-dale, if they knew Will Halley and what had become of him. Neither apparently had known him personally, but they told me his real name was said to be Hanley and they believed he had quit singing "to go into politics into New Jersey." That was more nearly accurate information than some I have been given at various times about early recording artists!

The years went by without bringing any more information concerning the somewhat mysterious singer. Then, in August, 1973, I received a letter from Albert Kuechle of Newark, N. J., saying he knew of two bygone recording artists who were still alive — William J. Halley and Fred Hillebrand. Mr. Kuechle said he understood Halley became a judge "somewhere around Hoboken" and that Hillebrand lived at the Lambs Club in New York.

My correspondent was misinformed. Hillebrand, with whom I corresponded briefly some 20 years ago, was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., December 25, 1893, and died in New York City, September 15, 1963. He was in his youth a vaudeville partner of Walter Van Brunt (Walter Scanlan), with whom he did a little recorded duet work and, from about 1919 to 1924, he made records for a number of companies, including Edison, Emerson and a few minor firms. And "Will Halley," as you are about to learn, had been dead almost 12 years when I received Mr. Kuechle's communication.

A 1913 Victor record supplement had described Halley as a "young comedian and singer, who is making a success in vaudeville." The statement that he was still living and had "graduated" from "show business" to a judgeship fired my imagination, and convinced me that Will Halley would be a colorful, attractive subject for an article. I passed the information on to my friend, Quentin Riggs, of Huntington Beach, Calif., who is always as delighted as I am to receive news about still living pioneer recorders, and I either suggested, or it occurred to him, to turn through indexes to back files of the New York Times and see if he could find anything about Judge William J. Hanley. Quentin, as I recall, began researching during his lunch hour, and almost immediately experienced a mixture of good and bad. The good was that he soon found a reference to Judge Hanley; the bad, he learned that the Jersey jurist was not still alive, as we had hoped and believed, but had been gone since the autumn of 1961.

Quentin's account of his experience is worth quoting. In a letter dated August 28, 1973, he wrote:

"You asked how I found Hanley's obituary in the New York Times. Well, it was a matter of luck that I found it so quickly. If he was a Judge in Hoboken I figured that such a distinguished person would have been mentioned at one time or another in the Times. A library near my office has a complete set of the New York Times index, so I planned to systematically go through them until I found something about him. The indexes of 1960 to the present are on the main floor and the earlier ones are in the basement, so I thought I'd start with the most recent ones. I started with 1960 and looked under both 'Hanley' and 'Deaths,' but didn't find anything. The second volume I picked up was the 1961 index, and under 'Deaths' I learned that an obituary for William J. Hanley appeared in the November 15, 1961, edition. I immediately asked to see the roll of microfilm that contained that edition, and copied the obit that I sent you. I managed to do all this during my 45-minute lunch period."

Never one to overlook any way of obtaining more information, Quentin, having learned from the death notice that Judge Hanley had a son, Patrick, living in Hoboken, wrote him a letter and sent it to the address given in the obituary. It was returned, marked "Moved — Not Forwardable," to his considerable mystification. He then found the name of Patrick Hanley in a perhaps outmoded telephone directory and tried to make a long distance call, but the information operator told him there was no longer a Patrick Hanley listing for Hoboken. Mr. Hanley, however, is still living and active — he is a space salesman for Barron's Weekly, the noted New York financial paper — and I have heard his voice on a tape which my Buffalo, N. Y., friend, Merritt Malvern, recorded when he called on Judge Hanley's other son, William J. Hanley, Jr., at his home in Upper Montclair, N. J. But I am getting ahead of my subject. I have the most unholy ill luck in misplacing items to which I mean to refer, and I can't find that New York Times death notice. Fortunately, this matters little, for I have obtained more detailed information from another source.

After learning of Judge Hanley's passing, it occurred to me to write to the Jersey Journal, a newspaper published in the area in which he lived, and ask for any information its files contained about Judge William J. Hanley. The Journal did not reply directly, but referred my letter to the Free Public Library of Jersey City, whose director, Ben E. Grimm, obligingly wrote to me:

"August 29, 1973 . . . Dear Mr. Walsh: The enclosed obituaries of William J. Hanley are in response to your request to The Jersey Journal."

"I am very sorry that we were unable to locate any photographs in the library files. Sincerely, yours, BEN E. GRIMM, Library Director."

I must express my gratitude to Mr. Grimm for the trouble he took to find the obituaries and have them copied for me, and I hope the appearance of this article, which certainly should interest many patrons of the Free Public Library of Jersey City, will lead him to believe that his kindly efforts were not wasted.

Now it may be as well to consider the obituary notices, which I shall edit to avoid needless repetition. After that will come a discussion of the "William J. Halley" records and after that, in a succeeding installment, an intimate depiction of the singer-lawyer as his surviving relations describe him.

II. What the Newspapers Said

First, The Jersey Journal, to which I applied for information. On Novem-

VICTOR RECORDS FOR MAY—1913

- 17316 {At Uncle Tom's Cabin Door
(Bayha-Cowan) Wm. J. Halley } 10
Kentucky Days (Mahoney-Wenrich)
Billy Murray
- A melodious Southern number in which Mr. William Halley makes his Victor debut. This young comedian and singer, who is making a success in vaudeville, delivers Cowan's lively song with much clearness, exhibiting a pleasant tenor voice.
- On the reverse a gentleman by the name of Murray offers Mahoney and Wenrich's melodious ballad of Kentucky, which is meeting with great favor.
- 35278 {Firefly Waltzes (From "The Firefly") Victor Concert Orchestra } 12
When a Maid Comes Knocking at Your Heart (From
"The Firefly") (Friml) Olive Kline
- Two records containing the principal melodies in Rudolph Friml's new opera, in which Emma Trentini is starring.
- The waltz melody is made up of a half dozen of the most popular airs, and the number Miss Kline has given is Mile. Trentini's best song in the opera.
- 35292 {Eva Waltzes—For dancing (On Motives from the Operetta "Eva") (Lehar) Victor Dance Orchestra } 12
Sands of the Desert Medley Waltz—For dancing
(Ernest Ball) Victor Military Band
- An attractive pair of records for dancing purposes. "Eva" is a new operetta by the composer of "Merry Widow," and it contains some of the finest music Lehar has written, especially the waltz, "Love is a Pilgrim," which is featured in this selection.
- "Till the Sands of the Desert Grow Cold," the principal number in the medley waltz on the reverse side, is a tremendous hit everywhere, and this fine dance record is sure to be much in demand.
- 17319 {Haunting Rag—Turkey Trot (Lenzberg) Victor Military Band } 10
Sunshine Girl Tango (Argentine Dance from "Sunshine Girl")
(Rubens) Victor Military Band
- And still the cry is TURKEY TROTS! Here is another lively one, but not quite as fast in tempo as those recently issued.
- On the reverse is the fine tango which is one of the hits of "The Sunshine Girl," now playing in New York.
- 17320 {Daddy Has a Sweetheart and Mother is Her Name
(Buck-Stamper) Edna Brown } 10
Those Ragtime Melodies (Hodgkins) Peerless Quartet
- An attractive song in which a little girl naively tells of "daddy's" affection for "mamma."
- On the reverse, the Peerless gives a kind of review of the various ragtime songs which have been successful. Bits of these numbers are introduced in an ingenious manner.

Halley

NEW RECORDS FOR JULY

Twelve New Popular Songs

The list of popular songs for this month is an unusually complete and attractive one, and contains twelve of the latest sentimental ballads and ragtime songs, topical ditties and "geographical" numbers.

The talented corps of singers whose services the Victor commands have made special efforts in their presentation of this July list, which contains none of the objectionable songs that have aroused such unfavorable comment of late.

Oakland

Campbell

Burr

Murray

Halley

17344 {You're a Great Big Blue Eyed Baby (Brown) Heidelberg Quintette } 10
And the Green Grass Grew All Around (Jerome H. Von Tilzer)
American Quartet

17347 {Give Me Your Hand (Havez-Botsford) (with WRL Oakland) Heidelberg Quintette } 10
Let Me See Your Rainbow Smile
(Havez-Barron) Campbell-Burr

17349 {Sail on Silvery Moon (Downs-Erdman) Campbell-Burr } 10
Georgia Land (Fields-Carroll)
Peerless Quartet

17354 {Harmony Joe (Taylor-Schiller) Peerless Quartet } 10
The Old Maid's Ball
(Irving Berlin) Billy Murray

17353 {Love Her, Oh! Oh! Oh!
(McCarthy-Monaco) William Halley } 10
I'd Do as Much for You
(Von Tilzer) Jones-Murray

17355 {There's One in a Million Like
You (Clarke-Schwartz) Brown-Harrison } 10
Then I'll Stop Loving You
(Piantadosi) Chas. W. Harrison

Porter

Collins

Bieling

Hooley

Porter

Victor Fibre Needles, 50c. per 100

RECORDING DEBUT. — Two pages from 1913 Victor record supplements are reproduced here. "William J. Halley's" first record was announced in May and was accompanied by his photo. In July he was shown with ten other famous Victor artists.

ber 15, 1961, this Jersey City paper published an article under the heading of "Ex-Judge W. Hanley, 66, Hoboken." This was headed by a photograph of Judge Hanley. The article read:

"The funeral for William J. Hanley, former Hudson District Court judge, will be Saturday at 9 a.m. A solemn requiem mass will be held at Our Lady of Grace Roman Catholic Church at 10 a.m.

"Interment will be at Holy Cross Cemetery, North Arlington.

"Mr. Hanley, of 1000 Hudson Street, Hoboken, died yesterday of a heart attack at the Veterans Hospital in East Orange. He was 66.

"A graduate of St. Peter's prep and Holy Cross College, Mr. Hanley was famous for his singing voice. He turned down a singing career for the law, but used his voice to work his way through New York Law School.

"He was a hard campaigner for Gov. A. Harry Moore and Mayor Frank Hague of Jersey City. His work earned him a seat in the Assembly in 1918, but he resigned his post to enter the U. S. Marine Corps a year later. He was appointed to the district court bench in 1923, and served for 10 years.

"He refused a higher paying job as assistant U. S. attorney to keep his $3,000 a year board of education post. He continued his private law practice at 84 Washington Street.

"Mr. Hanley strongly advocated a legalized state lottery and maintained this would block criminal elements from games of chance. He also espoused capital punishment as a deterrent to murder. Mr. Hanley's wife, Anne, died in 1953. He is survived by two sons, William J., Jr., and Patrick, and three sisters, Mrs. Grace Blake, Mrs. Beth Coyle and Miss Eleanor Hanley.

"The Bosworth Funeral Home, Hoboken, is in charge of arrangements."

You observed, probably, that the Jersey Journal gave Judge Hanley's age as 66. Another notice, still to be considered, makes it 67, and still a third, 68. This latter, which also was used in the New York Times death notice, appears to be correct, for it would tie in well with his beginning to make records early in 1913, when he was still attending law school. His birthday therefore may be set down as January 17, 1893, which means that young "William J. Halley" had just become 20 or was drawing near it when he made his first record.

A questionnaire filled in by his son, Dr. Hanley, says that William J. Hanley was born in Hoboken, N. J., the city in which he lived virtually all his life and in which he died. His father was Timothy Joseph Hanley, a plumber. Timothy Hanley was born in Providence, R. I., and married Miss Mary Elizabeth McHenry, a native of Ireland. William was their eldest child. Dr. Hanley says he doesn't know whether there were any children besides his father and the three already mentioned sisters. Timothy Hanley died prior to 1913, and his wife, on April 11, 1946, at the age of 83.

The boy who was to become known as singer, lawyer and judge attended Sacred Heart Academy in Hoboken and St. Peter's Preparatory School in Jersey City, before going to Holy Cross College, from which he was graduated in 1913 — apparently at about the time his first records came out. Sports in which he participated while in school were football and baseball.

Young Hanley first began singing in high school when he was 15 or 16 years of age. He had no formal musical training, played no instrument, and could not read music, but was gifted with a good, strong natural voice. His musical career was confined to singing at Shanley's restaurant, or cabaret, in New York City, and to making records. He never toured in vaudeville. Dr. Hanley described him as having been about six feet one inches tall as a young man and weighing around 185 pounds. In those days he had "titan-red" hair. His wife, whose maiden name was Anne McGahy, was a native of Rye, N. Y.

In view of Will Hanley's later ardent campaigning for Governor Moore and for Frank Hague, whose Hudson County organization was one of the most powerful political groups in the country, there seems no doubt that he, like most Americans of Irish descent, was an ardent Democrat.

Now, let's return to the newspaper obituary notices. There appears, by the way, an error in the one previously quoted. It said Hanley was elected to the New Jersey Assembly in 1918, but left to join the Marines. As the story immediately to follow shows he probably was elected in 1917, but left the following year to take officer training at the Marine Base in Quantico, Va.

And, speaking of his becoming a member of the New Jersey Assembly, I don't think it out of place to mention here that one of the present day's most enthusiastic record collectors, and a regular reader of Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists, is the clerk of the New Jersey Senate, Henry H. Patterson, of Asbury Park. Mr. Patterson tells me he has between 50,000 and 60,000 records and is especially interested in the most ancient discs, such as Berliner, Climax, Monarch and Zonophone.

III. A Personality Sketch

I said we would return to the obituary notices, but the article now to be quoted actually is not a death notice, but a summary of Judge Hanley's personality, character and achievements. It appeared in The Jersey Journal for Thursday, November 16, 1961, under the heading, "William J. Hanley, Ex-Judge, Was a Man of Many Parts." It was written by Thomas Howell, who apparently knew the jurist well. Though it pays tribute to Judge Hanley's many fine qualities, Mr. Howell erred in his arithmetic. He says the one-time recording artist was 67, then gives his birth year as 1891. A little ciphering will show that if he were born in that year he would have been 70 in 1961:

"The classic Renaissance ideal of 'a man of many parts,' in this day and age so rare, came to fit the description of William J. Hanley when he was yet a young man. He kept these qualities throughout his life.

"Artist, scholar, soldier and man of affairs, former Hudson District Judge William Hanley was instantly recognized in Hoboken and throughout Hudson County. His career included a year as state assemblyman.

"At his death on Tuesday, at 67, the judge was still active in civic affairs as attorney for the Hoboken Board of Education — a job he held since 1933, and maintained despite the inducement of a $2,000 a year raise if he would become assistant U. S. attorney.

"William Hanley was born in Hoboken in 1891. After completing primary school, Mr. Hanley attended St. Peter's Preparatory School in Jersey City. Upon graduation he enrolled in Holy Cross College in Worcester, Mass.

"He had a fine singing voice and when he was graduated from Holy Cross and went to New York Law School, he took a job as a troubadour in Stanley's (This should be Shanley's — J. W.) night club after school hours. This was, however — apart from recording a few popular ballads — his only professional use of his singing talent.

"Mr. Hanley entered Hudson County politics after being admitted to the Bar. His support of the late Governor A. Harry Moore and of the mayoralty campaign of the late Frank Hague in 1917 resulted in his own nomination for a seat in the New Jersey Assembly. He was elected, but resigned his seat to join the U. S. Marines. Sent for officer candidate training to Quantico, Virginia, he received his commission too late to join the fighting. The Armistice had already been signed.

"Returning to Hudson County politics Mr. Hanley was appointed as judge to the Hudson District Court in 1923, and remained on the bench 10 years. On his retirement from the judiciary, Judge Hanley took the post of attorney for the Hoboken school board. He also resumed his long-suspended career in criminal law, and came to the defense in many cases.

"Notable examples were his defense of ex-Judge James Pellachia of Newark, and of Sylvio Devito, one of a trio who held up the Universal Supermarket in Newark in 1951 and killed special guard James Law during the robbery. The Pellachia case concerned the embezzlement of $600,000 from the Columbia Trust Company in 1948. Pellachia's father was president of the bank, and Pellachia's conviction seemed certain. He got off with a much lighter sentence than anticipated.

"Devito's case ended also in conviction, but he escaped the death penalty that was the fate of one of the other two bandits. Notwithstanding Judge Hanley's eloquence in his client's defense, the judge was an advocate of capital punishment as a deterrent to murder. He also backed a legalized state lottery, which he firmly believed would exclude criminal agencies from games of chance.

"Judge Hanley lost his wife, Ann, in 1953. He is survived by two sons, Dr. William Hanley, Jr., a dentist in Montclair, and Patrick Hanley of Hoboken. He also leaves three sisters, Mrs. Grace Blake, Mrs. Beth Coyle and Miss Eleanor Hanley, all of Hoboken."

YOUNG ATTORNEY. — William J. Hanley ("William J. Halley") as he appeared after he gave up a musical career to practice law.

I am sure that it had nothing to do with Judge Hanley's advocacy of legal lotteries, but, coincidentally, in 1933 his sister Eleanor won $150,000 in the Irish Sweepstakes and went to Ireland to be paid her money. Miss Hanley, a school teacher, had about $40,000 left after the British and American governments levied tribute on her winnings.

An account of Judge Hanley's death in the Hudson Dispatch for November 15, 1961, reads for the most part like a rewrite of the one already quoted from the Jersey Journal, and it would be a waste of space to quote it in full. However, it mentions the judge's saying that "every unpunished murderer takes away something from the security of a man's life," and ends with the following fresh information:

"Just two years ago Mr. Hanley appeared on a New York television show for a 30 minute interview which included playbacks of his recordings of 'You Made Me Love You,' 'It's a Long Way to Tipperary' and other popular songs. Always a campaigner, he took the occasion to 'innocently' give Mayor John J. Grogan a political plug.

"Mr. Hanley had a brief introduction to the newspaper world, circa 1910, before entering the political arena. Working for the Hudson Dispatch in those days, he enjoyed recalling a mission he made to New York on behalf of the paper. He was sent to the city to bring back an immense roll of paper via the West Shore Ferry for the next day's edition. After that experience he decided the legal profession offered an easier life."

Finally, in this round-up of newspaper publicity concerning Judge Hanley's death, the following from the Jersey Journal's paid announcements column of November 17, 1961, may be copied:

"HANLEY — Judge William J., on November 14, 1961, of 1000 Hudson Street, Hoboken; beloved husband of the late Anna (nee McGahy); (father of Dr. William J., Jr., D.D.S., and Patrick R. Hanley; brother of Mrs. Edward (Beth) Coyle, Mrs. Grace Blake, and Miss Elinore Hanley. Funeral from Earl F. Bosworth Funeral Home, 311 Willow Avenue Hoboken, on Saturday at 9 a.m. Solemn High Mass of Requiem, Our Lady of Grace Church, at 10 a.m. Interment, Holy Cross Cemetery.

"HANLEY — SUMMONS — Brothers of Hoboken Lodge No. 74, E. F. O. Elks are invited to attend funeral services. Friday, November 17, 1961, at 8 p.m. at Bosworth Funeral Home, Hoboken, to pay our last tribute of respect to our deceased brother William J. Hanley, Francis Bertotti, Exalted Ruler Anthony Amoroso, Secretary."

It probably will not have escaped your attention that in the first of these notices, Judge Hanley's wife's name was incorrectly given as Anna instead of Anne, and his sister's as Elinore when it should be Eleanor.

(Continued on page 130)

World's Largest Selection of

MUSIC BOXES and NICKELODEONS!

World's largest wholesale selection—over 500 in stock!—of music boxes, nickelodeon pianos, orchestrions, circus organs, etc. Huge catalogue illustrates prices, describes our inventory—just $2 postpaid, or $10 for next 6 issues. Satisfaction guaranteed.

Also can supply the latest printing of the mammoth 1008-page, 8-pound "Encyclopedia of Automatic Musical Instruments," by Q. David Bowers. Thousands of illustrations. Learn all about instruments, various types and models, and their history. Book autographed and inscribed to you by author. $30 postpaid. Money back if not delighted! Over 6,000 copies sold. Awarded "one of the most valuable reference books" award by the American Library Association.

Huge selection of instruments available for immediate low-cost shipment from storage points in America and Europe! Get acquainted with us today!

Write to us in the U.S.A. at: MEKANISK Musik Museum, Box 1669, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90210, or to our headquarters in Europe. 28 cents postage required for airmail to Europe. Send for your copy of our catalog today!

MEKANISK MUSIK MUSEUM

VESTERBROGADE 150

COPENHAGEN, DENMARK

Telephone (01) 22-21-22

nc

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Re feathered

Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

lfc than is buying stocks and bonds which many people paid good money for, and now they find they can get back only a portion of what they spent. The organization that sells Christmas Seals is in business to sell as many of them as they can. They print hundreds of millions, perhaps even billions, and it is rumored that they keep the plates going so that if they ever run out of a certain year, they can print more. They even sell these in quantities to dealers to encourage them to handle them, by giving them at less than one dollar per sheet. (After all, their sole desire in issuing them is to raise money.) And if the dealers in Seals can buy them any time they want for less than one dollar per sheet, they are hardly likely to pay a speculator more than that. If there is any monkey business involved, it is the old story of someone buying stamps without first finding out from someone who knows if what he is doing is wise.

QUESTION

I have an upside down air mail stamp on a letter. Where can I sell it?

ANSWER

There is a stamp which appeared in 1918 on which the airplane in the center is printed upside down, while the balance of the stamp is normal. It is quite unlikely that you have this. There were only 100 originally sold over the counter at the Washington Post Office. Today we know the whereabouts of approximately 90 to 94 of them; the balance is lost, or in unknown collections. The stamp in fine condition sells for about $42,000.

We suspect that what you have is an ordinary, common air mail stamp, which someone carelessly affixed to the envelope upside down. It would have no particular value. If it were to, why would not everyone in the country start putting stamps on envelopes upside down?

QUESTION

I have had a lot of pleasure showing friends an envelope which came through the mail recently. It is postmarked November 31. November has only 30 days, so this is an error. I would like to sell it.

ANSWER

The error was made by a postal clerk. There are over 30,000 Post Offices in this country. Many have up to several dozen branches. Many have hundreds of clerks. Every day a Post Office is open, perhaps 100,000 postmarking devices are being changed from the date of the previous day. It is a tribute to the care that as few errors occur as do happen. This particular clerk did not realize that he should have changed the date to December first since November does have only 30 days. If such an item were of value why would not clerks do this intentionally, and provide tens of thousands of rare philatelic items?

You have an interesting curiosity, but no more than that. "Errors" of this sort are by no means unusual. Study the postmarks on any incoming mail and you will see an occasionally upside down date, the month name inverted, or the like. Just last week we had a November 52, 1974 date. What happened is that the clerk inserting the numerals in the postmarking device reversed the position of the "2" and the "5".

Joint U.S.-Soviet Stamps To Mark Apollo-Soyuz Linkup

The U. S. Postal Service and the Ministry of Posts and Telecommunications of the Soviet Union have announced joint plans to issue a twin pair of postage stamps honoring the Apollo-Soyuz space mission.

These stamps, one of U. S. design and one of Soviet design, will be issued on the day of the launches, now scheduled for July 15.

The U. S. design is by noted space artist Robert McCall, of Paradise Valley, Arizona. The U.S.S.R. design is by Soviet artist Anatoly M. Aksamit.

McCall has been closely identified with the U. S. space program since 1958. McCall's space art combines the weight of reality with the weightlessness of outer space in a convincing and dramatic way.

Aksamit has been a professional artist since 1946. For many years, he was chief artist for advertising for Aeroflot, the Soviet airline.

The United States stamps will have their first day of issue at Kennedy Space Center.

First day cancellation requests should be addressed to "Apollo-Soyuz Stamps, Postmaster, Kennedy Space Center, FL 32815." The cost is ten cents per stamp to be affixed to the self-addressed envelopes which must accompany orders. Remittance should be by check or money order, instead of cash, or postage stamps.

Because of the size of the stamps, the return address should be written low and well to the left. Orders must be postmarked no later than July 15.

MINI-THOUGHTS

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 122)

out to Valley Forge on our bikes.

To see it all again and then to reflect back upon those years of 1776 and those who suffered to give us our blessed freedom!

Edna and I went in town (downtown Philly) once a week—and how great that was as we went by train (my second love!) and we did see again Independence Hall and Christ's Church. Here again we could almost hear the shouts of victory as the old Liberty Bell rang out Freedom For All! We met so many friends of HOBBIES but we didn't get many stories. We did enjoy so much the Perelman Antique Toy Museum. We were a little disappointed that there were so few Doll Houses and so few miniatures in that great collection of old toys. Somewhere along the way we saw tiny narrow pads of scratch paper and at the very top was printed "For Those With Narrow Minds!"

Guess we should have tiny pads for those of us with MINI MINDS! Wherever you go, you are always on the lookout for miniatures! We saw so few of them in any of the many places we visited. Our last stop was with our dear oldest granddaughter in Lawrence, Kans., and on Easter Monday our Margie took us over to Kansas City to visit the beautiful and outstanding Crown Center. I am sure I could spend a week there and never tire of it! We were happy to see the shop of Bits and Pieces. What a display of miniatures! We obtained some of those tiny apple taffies for our soda parlor. We enjoyed seeing the one room on display by the John Blauers. It was a Victorian Parlor and had the most impressive copies of the famous Belter arm chairs. That day was a joyous day!

We had bought so much (not miniatures, but we do have an antique shop!) that we even had to rent a trailer from Iowa City.

More next month about so many helpful ways of making those houses for dolls! Does anyone know of a good more or less simple plan for a doll house? So many have asked for plans for doll houses. Also we hope you will share with our many readers the story of your MINI collection or your doll house. Take care!

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 37)

to all parts of America, imprisoned in the grooves of phonograph discs.

Yet I wonder. How did it happen, if it did, that no one, living in Hoboken and knowing Mother Hanley, picked up a copy of the monthly Victor record shipment, saw a picture of young "Billy" Hanley (his name misspelled as Halley) and showed it to the good lady, saying: "Mrs. Hanley, this Victor book has got a good picture of your boy Billy in it!" But, as far as I know, no one did.

There is a possibility, of course, that Mary Elizabeth Hanley did know her son was earning tuition money by exercising his voice, and that she acceded to his singing so long as he did not openly parade his "shame" by using his real name, but I doubt that this occurred.

"Will Halley's" recording activities appear to have been confined to Victor and Columbia labels, with Victor coming first. He also did a little singing for Victor after he had ceased to work for Columbia, but the total number of his Columbia discs was greater than of his Victor, even though they were confined to a period of eight months.

(To be continued)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

William J. Halley (Judge William Joseph Hanley, Sr.)

PART 1A

By JIM WALSH

(Continued from the July issue)

No Halley records were issued on Edison discs or cylinders, but in the Edison National Historic Site there is a note in Thomas A. Edison's handwriting, showing that the crotchety and deafened inventor, who seldom liked any recorded voice submitted for his opinion, ruled unfavorably concerning "William Halley." On January 14, 1915, "The Old Man" wrote:

"Mr. William Halley, Baritone. Explosive—not a good interpreter—don't get the funny lisping accent that Collins out in. Articulation not extra good."

Just what Mr. Edison meant to indicate, other than that he didn't care for Halley's singing isn't clear. He evidently didn't write what was in his mind for "that Collins out in" makes no sense. In the note printed previously, the inventor even criticized his favorite Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan. After listening to one of their records, he scrawled: "Can't hear a word. Awful sharp." The fault undoubtedly was in his hearing, for Collins and Harlan's articulation and enunciation were invariably fine. Mr. Edison probably was under mental strain when he wrote the Halley note, for his great factory fire had occurred the month before.

There is nothing to indicate that "Halley" had made a test Edison record. In all probability Mr. Edison was listening to one he had made for Victor or Columbia. It was his staff's custom each month to buy the latest records of competing companies and have the old gentleman listen to them, to see if he heard any artists he would like to engage to sing for him. (He seldom did.) Probably a majority of the critical comments in Mr. Edison's notebook are based on listening to Victor and Columbia recordings, so the likelihood is that he based his opinion of Halley on the young man's reproduced voice.

But what record did he listen to? This was January 14, 1915, remember, and Halley had not had a Victor disc issued since August, 1914, when he sang the boisterous "I Love the Ladies." He had not been in a Columbia supplement since September, 1914, when he was heard in three songs—"All He Does Is Follow Them Around," "They're On Their Way to Mexico," and "He Was Always Fooling Round." I am familiar with all these records, and in fairness I must say that none contains, to my ears, a trace of "the funny lisping accent" of which the Wizard complained.

In February, 1915, Victor did issue a Halley record, "I'm Glad My Wife's in Europe," but it could not be obtained before January 28, the nationwide date for beginning the sale of new Victor records, so Mr. Edison could not have heard it two weeks earlier. There is one indication that the record, whatever it was, was a Columbia. Victor had begun by calling the law student-singer "William J. Halley," but in August, 1914, had switched to "Will Halley" and thereafter kept the shorter name. Columbia called him consistently "William Halley," without the middle J., and that is the way he is referred to in Thomas A. Edison's note.

How ever all this may have been, there is no doubt that "William J. Halley's" first Victor record was announced in the May, 1913, supplement, and it was something of a plume in his cap that he was given the A. side (usually considered to indicate the probably better selling number) with the veteran Billy Murray, then the most popular recording artist in the world, consigned to the B. The Halley song was "At Uncle Tom's Cabin Door," while the Murray, a tuneful Percy Wenrich ballad, "Kentucky Days," was a sort of trial run for "When You Wore a Tulip and I Wore a Red, Red Rose." It was a more sentimental type of composition than Billy ordinarily sang. The supplement published a small photo of Halley, in which he appeared to be wearing a rather grim expression, and the description of his initial offering was:

"A melodious Southern number in which Mr. William Halley makes his Victor debut. This young comedian and singer, who is making a success in vaudeville, delivers (Ruby Cowan's lively song with much clearness, exhibiting a pleasant tenor voice. On the reverse a gentleman by the name of Murray offers Mahoney and Wenrich's melodious ballad of Kentucky, which is meeting with great favor."

This record (No. 17316) was a combination that seemed to have all the characteristics to insure popular success, for the Wenrich ballad, especially, was being extensively advertised and sung, and the coupling was a lively number with an attractive swing. Yet "Kentucky Days" did not win the overwhelming vogue that was destined to be accorded to "When ou Wore a Tulip," and the record was out of the catalog by November, 1915.

You will notice that the supplement described Halley as a tenor. The complete Victor alphabetical catalogs always called him a "tenor-comedian." Columbia, however, invariably referred to him as a baritone, and my ears tell me Columbia was right. His voice was too low-pitched to be tenor. But then Victor also called Arthur Fields a tenor, and Arthur wrote me that he always wondered why it did.

One month later, in June, 1913, the fledgling recording artist had been promoted to the status of a "favorite Victor singer." On No. 17323 Collins and Harlan sang "Roll On, Missouri," and were accompanied on the B. side by Halley's rousingly catchy "In the Golden West." Supplement space was limited that month, and the description was brief:

"Two attractive 'locality' ballads, praising the gr.at but muddy Missouri and the glorious West, are effectively given by favorite Victor singers."

Continuing his pace of a record a month, the "tenor-comedian" was represented in the July, 1913, Victor supplement with the A. side of No. 17353. He sang a rapid-fire number, whose keynote was exuberance, "I Love Her Oh! Oh! Oh!" The young fellow must have laughed to himself at the concluding lines of the song, which proclaimed: "She has red hair, but I don't care—I love her oh! oh! oh!" for the imaginary heroine's locks were the same color as his own. He had good company on the B. face with Ada Jones and Billy Murray singing "I'd Do As Much for You."

Record buyers who obtained these early "William J. Halley" records discovered that the singer, about whom most of them knew nothing, had a voice and style that was typical of the vaudeville, cabaret and musical comedy vocalists of the time. There was nothing subtle about his singing, but his delivery was strong and spirited, and his enunciation clear even if, as Mr. Edison had said, he had at times a tendency to be a bit "explosive"—a characteristic he shared with most vaudeville singers. There was also a marked resemblance in his voice and style to the singing methods of Al Jolson, although he lacked the eccentric mannerisms which made multitudes admire Jolson and a smaller number dislike him.

This resemblance to Jolson was especially marked in Halley's September, 1913, record. (He was not included in the August Victor record list.) This time he sang one of the big hits of 60 years ago, "You Made Me Love You (I Didn't Want to Do It)," which was coupled with a song composed by Irving Berlin, then already the reigning king of popular song writers. The Berlin number, "Somebody's Coming to My House," was sung by Walter Van Brunt, and had the A. side. This was an example of misjudgment, for "You Made Me Love You" swept the country, while Berlin's contribution was not particularly successful. "You Made Me Love You," written by Joe McCarthy and James V. Monaco, was Halley's most successful Victor record and stayed in the catalog longer than any of his others.

There was a wait of three months before another Halley disc was announced. He had the A. side of No. 17453, "Pullman Porters on Parade," which was combined with the Peerless Quartet's "My Lovin' Melody Man" in the December supplement. "Pullman Porters" was as lively and rhythmic as the name suggests. Its music was by Maurice Abrahams and the words by a mysterious character who called himself Ren G. May. Never heard of him? Well, if you will scramble the letters of "Ren G. May" and rearrange them you will find that they spell "Germany." And what is the capital of Germany? Why, Berlin! In other words, the lyric writer's alleged name was an anagram for "Germany" and a disguise for Irving Berlin, who wrote the words for his friend, Maurie Abrahams, husband of the vaudeville star and future recording artist, Belle Baker.

"Halley" by this time was through law school, assuming that 1913 is the correct date of his graduation, and must have been trying to establish his law practice. Probably he found money from cabaret singing and record making to be still acceptable while he was getting started at his chosen profession. But there were no more Victor records by him until August, 1914, although he had begun singing regularly for Columbia. And when his next Victor appeared, his name, in the supplement and on the label, had been shortened to "Will Halley"—probably on the theory that "William J. Halley" sounded rather stiff for a comedian and that the short form gave a pleasing touch of informality. On the A. side of No. 17560 he sang a current comic song hit, "I Love the Ladies," while for its coupling the Heidelberg Quintet harmonized the irresistible "By the Beautiful Sea," whose chorus offers probably the trickiest line ever included in a popular song: "I love to be beside your side beside the seaside by the beautiful sea."

This combination seemed to have everything from a sales standpoint and, in view of the popularity of both songs, should have stayed in the catalog for many years, but it vanished when the May, 1917, catalog was published.

Half a year went by before "Will J. Halley" again showed up in a Victor list. This time, on No. 17683, he sang "I'm Glad My Wife's in Europe (For She Can't Get Back to Me.)" The B. face was the tuneless "I'm Goin' Back to Louisiana," by Collins and Harlan. This record of course was issued when World War I had been in progress only a few months, and when there was thought to be something funny about American wives being stranded abroad and unable to return to their rejoicing help-meets. Halley, who presumably was not married when he made the record, expressed the hope that if the wife of whom he was singing "should come to London town I hope that London Bridge will break down."

"Will Halley's" final Victor record, and his last, apparently, for any company was a part of the April, 1915, list. He sang, on the B. side, "Ruff Johnson's Harmony Band," while on the A., Collins and Harlan gave one of their inimitable renditions of a Teddy Morse "jungle song"—"Doodle Oodle Dee (Means Won't You Marry Me?)" Sam Rous, the supplement writer, said this disc contained "two comedy favorites by Halley and the Colossal Comedy Twins"—the latter one of his frequent sly digs at Collins and Harlan's pronouncedly excess avoirdupois.

After "Ruff Johnson's Harmony Band" was issued, the name of Will Halley ceased to appear in Victor supplements, meaning, I take it, that he had given up singing and settled down with determination to his future career in the legal profession. But there was to be one more mention of this "swan song" disc.

In June, 1917, Victor announced a new record of "Ruff Johnson's Harmony Band," sung by Gene Greene and coupled with his famous nonsense song, "The King of the Bungaloes." The description of the Greene disc said:

"An admirable record of 'Ruff Johnson's Harmony Band' is already in the Victor catalog, but we just had to get out Gene Greene's variation of it for the sake of his imitation of the musical instruments. Flute, drum or loud bassoon—it's all the same to Gene."

The "admirable record" already in the catalog of course was Halley's. It remained there through 1919, along with two of his others, "You Made Me Love You" and "I'm Glad My Wife's in Europe," but when the 1920 edition came out the name of Halley had disappeared.

V. Halley's Columbia Records

Although William Halley, to use his Columbia designation, made a few more records for Victor's chief competitor than he had for the rival largest manufacturer of discs, their period of issue was confined to a shorter span. The aspiring young legal student's name was seen for the first Columbia time in February, 1914, and for the last time, so far as the monthly supplement went, in the following September.

Halley's initial Columbia contributions were contained on two double-faced records, his song in each instance being coupled with something by other performers. First, numerically speaking, was No. A1455. Columbia discs did not use the A. and B. system of indicating which side was considered the more likely seller, but A1455, as listed in the supplement, began with "The Little Church Around the Corner," sung by Nora Watson (Elsie Baker), contralto, and Henry Burr, tenor. Its mating was "I'm Afraid I'm Beginning to Love You." Supplement descriptions of Columbia records were brief. This is what was said of the one just mentioned:

"A new song by the writers of 'The Trail of the Lonesome Pine,' 'There's a Girl in the Heart of Maryland,' etc., entitled 'The Little Church Around the Corner,' promises to become one of the sensational successes of the month. It is combined with a record by a new singer, Mr. William Halley, whose voice and style will undoubtedly please our patrons greatly."

The second Halley offering was mentioned before its coupling. On No. A1457 he sang a genuine comedy hit, "He'd Have to Get Under, Get Out and Get Under," with another almost equally successful humorous composition on the other side, "The Pussy Cat Rag," by Ada Jones and the Peerless Quartet. This amusing ditty proved a bonanza for Ada and the Quartet. They also sang it for Victor and for Edison discs and cylinders. Concerning this combination the supplement said:

"In new up-to-the-minute ragtime we have the great Winter Garden hit, 'He'd Have to Get Under, Get Out and Get Under,' sung in splendid style by Mr. Halley. It is coupled appropriately with the 'Pussy Cat Rag,' a song by the composer of 'What Do You Mean You Lost Your Dog?' sung by Miss Jones with the support of the 'Peerless Quartet.'"

The motor vehicle song's full title was "He'd Have to Get Under, Get Out and Get Under (And Fix Up His Automobile)." It was written by Grant Clarke, Edgar Leslie and Maurice Abrahams, and was recorded also by Billy Murray on Victor 17491, and Edison Blue Amberol 2194, as well as by Arthur Collins on Pathe' B5023. (A B prefix on a Pathe' seems to have indicated that it was recorded in the United States.) I haven't heard the Pathe' version, but it is interesting to compare Murray's Victor with Halley's Columbia and observe how markedly the words they sing differ. In the absence of the sheet music it is hard to determine which comedian, if either, is "singing straight" and which is changing the words whenever he thinks he sees a chance to improve them. Murray, however, was probably doing the more changing because he never hesitated to try to better a lyric, and Halley sings the chorus three times without variation.

There are too many differences in words to list them all, but they begin with the first line, which Halley sings as "Johnny O'Connor owned an automobile" and Murray as "bought an—." Halley says "He was dressed up in his best Sunday clothes," but with Murray this becomes "all toggled up—." Halley says "off came his hat and coat," and Murray "off went." Halley begins the chorus with "So he got out and got under," and Murray with "He'd have to get under, get out and get under."

One of the most noticeable differences is that Halley sings, "Every time that he would reach for a kiss the darned old thing would miss," while with Murray it's "darned old engine" one time and "sparkplug" the next. In the second stanza, "Millionaire Wilson" is quoted as telling Johnny, in Halley's version, that his daughter "likes to ride, by the way." Murray has it, "She likes to ride ev'ry day." Halley sings at the end of each chorus, "and fix up his little machine," while Murray makes it, "and fix up his automobile." Since the latter was given by Victor as the sub-title of the song, it appears probable that in this instance Murray was singing the printed words and Halley wasn't, but, if he wasn't, why the change?

(Continued on next page)

All of this is of no importance to the ultimate well-being of the world, but it is worth observing as an indication of how hard it is to know the exact words of a song by listening to a record. Popular artists, especially those with marked individuality, usually reserved the right to make any changes they considered for the better in comic songs.

Came March, 1914, and Halley sang both sides of No. A1479. One was "Sit Down, You're Rocking the Boat," which Murray had offered in the February Victor list and which he also sang for a Blue Amberol. The other side of Halley's "Sit Down" was a now completely forgotten number composed by Albert Von Tilzer, "Stop Thief." The supplement mentioned them briefly as "two bright and lively flirtation songs in ragtime style."

April brought "Do You Take This Woman For Your Lawful Wife?" a Harry Von Tilzer comic song by Halley, paired with "Don't Blame It All on Broadway," by the Peerless Quartet. The description was:

"Two comic songs now everywhere sung . . . recorded respectively by Mr. William Halley and the Peerless Quartet are among the most interesting offerings of the month and will be received with the sort of welcome their snap and humor deserves."

No more William Halley records were announced until July, when two of his comic songs took care of both sides of A1535. One was "He'd Push It Along" and the other, "They Don't Hesitate Any More." "He'd Push It Along" was composed by Maurice Abrahams, for whose songs Halley seems to have had a special fondness. The supplement said:

"Mr. Halley gives us two more facetiously clever numbers in 'He'd Push It Along' and 'They Don't Hesitate Any More,' songs in which the spirit of the present dancing craze is a most successful factor."

There were two more Halley songs in August. A1551 mated his "Do They Love It?" (another Maurice Abrahams number) with "You Can Tango, You Can Trot, Dear, But Be Sure and Hesitate," by Ada Jones. On A1552, Halley's rendition of a big comic hit, "When You're All Dressed Up and No Place to Go," which Billy Murray had recorded some months earlier for Victor and Edison, was combined with "Goodbye, Broadway," by Eddie Morton and the Peerless Quartet. This was the comment:

"At the head of the list is the great comedy song hit, 'When You're All Dressed Up and No Place to Go,' introduced in Raymond Hitchcock's new musical comedy success, 'The Beauty Shop.' The song is one of the best of its kind ever brought out, and Mr. Halley knows just how to sing it . . . No less certain to become a popular ragtime hit is the fac-etiously humorous 'Do They Love It?' in which Mr. Halley again shows his ability to 'put over' songs of this type."

September brought Halley's final bow in the Columbia list, with no less than three titles. On A1563 his "All He Does Is Follow Them Around" (still another song by Abrahams!) kept company with Ada Jones and Billy Watkins singing "By the Beautiful Sea." (Probably you remember that Halley's Victor record of "I Love the Ladies" had the "Sea" song, by the Heidelberg Quintet, as its coupling.) A1565 brought an Irving Berlin number, "They're On Their Way to Mexico," dealing with a dispute the Wilson administration was having with the Mexican government, and "He Was Always Fooling Around," both sung by Halley.

And that ended the chapter. The young man presumably applied himself diligently to his law practice and felt no more urge to have his voice "immortalized" on records. During the period in which he was recording, Columbia brought out "A Night Scene In Maxim's," which was recorded December 27, 1913, and sung by a mixed quartet called "The Maxim's Cabaret Singers." Columbia files do not give the names of the artists, but some collectors have fancied that the man who sings "Down in Chattanooga" one of three musical numbers in the record—is Halley. I, however, have never been able to detect any special resemblance, and Dr. Hanley, Jr., after hearing the recording, emphatically denied that the voice is that of his father. He also says that "William J. Halley" never sang in Maxim's, but made all his night club appearances at Shanley's. Halley did, however, sing for the imaginary Walsh Talking Machine Company which I founded as a small boy, but, like all my other artists, he was unaware that he was working for me.

For some hard to fathom reason, the Columbia records by the young lawyer from Hoboken appear to have been especially popular in Detroit, Mich., where he must have been known personally to almost nobody. The Columbia branch office in Detroit published large newspaper advertisements calling attention to his records, and the Max Strausburg Co., "The Finest Talking Machine Shop in Detroit," proclaimed that entertainment seekers could "Hear Will Halley, in your own home, sing the big hit, 'I Love the Ladies,' and many other popular songs in his characteristic and entertaining manner on your Victor and Grafonola." It would be interesting to know why Halley achieved such disproportionate popularity in Detroit since, as I pointed out, it could hardly have been on a basis of Michigan residents' personal acquaintance with him.

Halley's name remained longer in Columbia catalogs than it had in Victor. Five of his numbers—"All He Does Is Follow Them Around," "Do You Take This Woman for Your Lawful Wife?" "He'd Have to Get Under," "He Was Always Fooling Around" and "When You're All Dressed Up" remained available until the September, 1919, catalog, after which only "He'd Have to Get Under" was left. This stuck around through 1922 under Halley's name, but in that year it was remade—probably because some damage had occurred to the

(Continued on page 130)

World's Largest Selection of

MUSIC BOXES and NICKELODEONS!

World's largest wholesale selection—over 500 in stock!—of music boxes, nickelodeon pianos, orchestrions, circus organs, etc. Huge catalogue illustrates, prices, describes our inventory—just $2 postpaid, or $10 for next 6 issues. Satisfaction guaranteed.

Also can supply the latest printing of the mammoth 1008-page, 8-pound "Encyclopedia of Automatic Musical Instruments," by Q. David Bowers. Thousands of illustrations. Learn all about instruments, various types and models, and their history. Book autographed and inscribed to you by author. $30 postpaid. Money back if not delighted! Over 6,000 copies sold. Awarded "one of the most valuable reference books" award by the American Library Association.

Huge selection of instruments available for immediate low-cost shipment from storage points in America and Europe! Get acquainted with us today!

Write to us in the U.S.A. at: Mekanisk Musik Museum, Box 1669, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90210, or to our headquarters in Europe. 26 cents postage required for airmail to Europe. Send for your copy of our catalog today!

MEKANISK MUSIK MUSEUM
VESTERBROGADE 150
COPENHAGEN, DENMARK
Telephone (01) 22-21-22

nc

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Re feathered

Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

tfc

tury, all of our stamps were done by the flat plate process. Little by little rotary presses were brought in, although as late as the 1940s, we were still using the flat plate presses to print the dollar values of the 1939 series.

Today with the great advances in printing there are many different processes used some of which enable the Bureau of Printing and Engraving to produce multicolored stamps in a single operation. (In the old days, each color required a separate run through the presses). However, the large number of stamps required today, and the short time in which they are produced means that virtually every process used is some sort of adaptation of the rotary press.

It takes careful measuring to tell a flat plate stamp from a rotary press stamp. Just as an acre of hilly farm land covers more ground than an acre of flat land, so is a rotary stamp a tiny bit larger than a flat plate, for the design has been printed from a curved (hilly) plate rather than a flat one. It is not the paper that is measured but the design of the stamp itself, i.e., the inked portion.

There are also differences which informed collectors have picked up which enable them to tell the difference without measuring. The ink on a flat plate stamp takes longer to dry, for it is impressed for a longer time than the quick running rotary. (The latter has a heat dryer which dries the ink almost instantaneously.) One can turn a stamp over, and if a green stamp and if there are tiny specks of green on the back, from where one wet sheet lay on another, it usually is flat plate. If there are no specks, meaning that the ink dried immediately, it is usually rotary. There are often other differences, such as in perforation, as the flat plate stamps were perforated on entirely different equipment than was used on the rotary. (There are exceptions to this, but they involve stamps of such great rarity, such as the thousand dollar 1c green Franklin Perf. 11, that the rule of thumb in the foregoing may be safely followed.

Question.

How many collectors are there in the United States?

Answer.

This is a question philately has wrestled with for generations, but until someone defines the word "collector," it is anyone's guess. The Post Office sticks by its figures of sixteen million, although 40 years ago Postmaster General James A. Farley claimed 20 million. If by a collector one means someone who buys a plate number block or a sheet of stamps at the Post Office, and puts it away as an "investment," their figure may be correct.

However, if by "collector," one means someone who is interested enough in the hobby to buy a stamp catalog, join a stamp club, or buy literature pertaining thereto, the figure is vastly on the high side. The largest stamp society, the American Philatelic Society, has about 35,000 members and 5-10% of these live in Canada or abroad.

If one ignores completely the factor of duplication, and adds up the membership of every club in the country, the subscription list of every magazine, and the roll of every one of the national societies, he will still be a long way from a million collectors.

We have often wondered how many read this feature. In an effort to find out some months ago we offered a free perforation gauge, a device used to identify postage stamps to anyone who sent in a stamped addressed envelope. We had about fifty requests.

The offer is renewed at this time. If you would like a free perforation gauge, together with instructions for its use, send a stamped addressed envelope to Herman Herst, Jr., P.O. Box 1583, Boca Raton, Fla. 33432. We are not in the stamp business, so no approvals nor stamps will be sent you although a circular or two to improve anyone's knowledge of the hobby may be included as a protection to keep the gauge from being folded or bent. We are curious to see how many requests a second mention of the offer will bring.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 37)

master—by Frank Crumit. (Crumit also made over Walter Van Brunt's "And the Green Grass Grew All Around" and Arthur Fields' "The Little Ford Rambled Right Along.") Halley's name thus was, after 1922, no longer in either Victor or Columbia catalogs. Oddly, after Crumit did the remake, the "Get Under" record stayed in the catalog only one year. Why go to the trouble and expense of making it over if it was to be cut out so soon!

Some Halley records were issued in England by Victor and Columbia's British affiliates. In March, 1914, Zonophone offered No. 1254, "I Love Her Oh! Oh! Oh!" by "W. J. Halley," combined with Billy Murray's "Let Her Go, Let Her Go, Let Her Go." The supplement said: "W. J. Halley makes a bow and a hit together! His big, round, humorous, vigorous voice is humour itself — it records astonishingly well—and with his first song he bids fair to convulse the nation. Hear it, and when you have finished guffawing feel for that half-crown; it will put you in possession, also, of Billy Murray's latest success, perkily performed."

In December, 1915, Zonophone's parent company, H.M.V. announced, on No. B515, Halley's "I'm Glad My Wife's In Europe," paired with "My Croony Melody," by Collins and Harlan.

English Columbia issued Halley records on its cheaper Regal label, corresponding to H.M.V.'s Zonophone. The following came out in 1914 and early 1915: G6044, "He'd Have to Get Under," coupled with "Noah's Ark," by Arthur Collins; G6699, "I'm Afraid I'm Beginning to Love You," with "Molly Dear," by William Thomas; G6780, "Sit Down, You're Rocking the Boat" and "Stop Thief"; and G6831, "Do They Love It?" with

"When You're All Dressed Up."

It may be that some Halley records also were issued in India, Australia and New Zealand, but I lack catalogs for checking.

We have now reached the point where we must part company with the mythical "William J. Halley," tenor (Victor), baritone (Columbia), and comedian. When next we meet we shall talk about Counselor and Judge William Joseph Hanley, Sr., and give an account of his personality, achievements and character, based on a large scrapbook kept by members of his family and on the recollections of his surviving relations.

(To be continued)

Attention, Jim Walsh readers:

Due to an oversight in making up the following paragraphs were inadvertently omitted from the July issue. This section should have followed on page 37 of the July issue. We apologize to both Jim Walsh and the readers for this omission. — Sorry.

Make mental note, too, of this: Although William J. Halley did sing a Victor record of "You Made Me Love You," in competition with Al Jolson's Columbia (his interpretation sounds a great deal like Jolson's), he did not record "Tipperary," or at least no records by him of the great World War I hit were issued. Victor offered two vocal versions — a Black Label by the American Quartet and a Red Seal by John McComack assisted by a male chorus that sounds like the Orpheus Quartet. The Columbia was by Stanley Kirkby, with the master imported from England, and the Edison was sung by another English baritone, Albert Farrington. Pathé issued only an orchestral interpretation, also of English origin, with a vocal refrain.

IV. Will Halley's Victor Recordings

When, before he was old enough to vote, young "William J. Hanley" took an assumed name for his night club and recording work, he obviously made the minimum change in his own legal signature. The first "n" in Hanley was replaced by "l," and the disguise was effected. His surviving sisters say they believe he altered his name because his devout Roman Catholic mother objected to her son having anything to do with "show business" and he saw no harm in keeping her in ignorance of the way in which he was paying his law school expenses. Apparently, Mrs. Hanley did not learn, throughout his brief entertainment career, that her son was singing, if not on the stage, at least in a "cabaret," and was having his voice shipped

(The article from here, then, continued on page 130 of the July issue.)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

William J. Halley (Judge William Joseph Hanley, Sr.)

PART IIA

By JIM WALSH

I. Getting In Touch

As was mentioned earlier, I discovered from Quentin Riggs' research in the New York Times that the late Judge William J. Hanley, Sr., who as a youth made Victor and Columbia records under the slightly changed name of William J. Halley, was survived by two sons. One son lived in Hoboken, N. J., and the other in Upper Montclair.

Like Quentin, I tried to communicate with Patrick Hanley by telephone, but "Information" said there was no phone under his name in the Hoboken directory. I then decided to try the other son, Dr. William J. Hanley, Jr., a practitioner of dental surgery. After obtaining the doctor's home and office numbers I dialed the one for his residence on the evening of Tuesday, September 4, 1973. The ring was answered almost immediately — and I now quote the entry I made in my diary at 7:15 p. m.:

"I have just phoned to Dr. Hanley's home, but I didn't find him in. His teen-age-sounding son said he is on a vacation, but will be back about 10 o'clock tonight. He said he is sure his father will be delighted for me to write an article, but I told him I was sure Dr. Hanley will be tired out when he gets in and I will call again tomorrow night. The boy was pleasant. He said Patrick Hanley is still living in Hoboken, but at a changed address."

Later I learned that the teen-ager is Peter Hanley, a high school sophomore who is fond of sports and plays baseball and football.

Peter said he would tell Dr. Hanley I had called about writing a biographical sketch of Judge Hanley, and he was confident his father would be waiting the following night to hear from me.

Of course, I did call Wednesday night. I can't be sure now whether Peter answered the phone, then handed it to his father, or whether I communicated directly with Dr. Hanley. At any rate, he said Peter had told him about my trying to get in touch with him the preceding night, so after a few remarks about how hot the weather had been both in my Virginia and his New Jersey — the town of Vinton, in which I live, was undergoing a heat wave — I got down to business and explained why I would like to write an article about his noted father for HOBBIES.

I asked Dr. Hanley a number of questions about Judge Hanley, and the answers he gave me have been incorporated into a preceding part of this article. He said that instead of trying to give information by phone he would prefer for me to send him a questionnaire, which he could complete after conferring with his father's surviving sisters. I agreed to this, and promised to type a list of questions. He was interested to learn that I had reasonably good copies of all of "William J. Halley's" Victor records and some of his Columbias, and said that the ones he had were badly worn and no longer gave much idea of his father's voice. I replied that I would be glad to make a tape recording of the ones

I had to send to him and also said I would include a couple of copies of HOBBIES so he would be able to see just what type of magazine the singer-judge's biography would appear in. I kept my word and within a short time went to Television Station WSLs in Roanoke, where an old friend, Mel Linkous, taped the Halley records with my introductory comments. I also sent the promised HOBBIES and added facsimiles of 1913 Victor record supplements showing listings of the first Halley records. Of course, I likewise sent the questionnaire. Mel used reel-to-reel tape to copy the records and, unfortunately, Dr. Hanley didn't have a recorder of that type nor did he know anyone who did, so it went unplayed for weeks. The light weight pick-up on the studio record-playing equipment didn't bring out some of the numbers clearly, and I now know that I could have done a more satisfactory recording job by playing them on my Credenza model Orthophonic Victrola. I plan to do this and to copy them on a tape cassette that Dr. Hanley can use. A few of the discs that sounded worn-out at the studio seem almost like new on the Orthophonic.

After I mailed the various things to Dr. Hanley, weeks went by without my hearing from him, but I waited, in the hope that he was putting together the information I needed. Then my "adopted brother," Merritt Malvern of Buffalo, N. Y., drove to West Orange, N. J., to attend a lecture given by Prof. Raymond Wile in Thomas A. Edison's old laboratory, which is now the Edison National Historic Site. Knowing of my plans to write an article about "William J. Halley," he decided to go a few miles to Upper Montclair, taking a cassette tape recorder, and to question Dr. Hanley for me. He and Phyllis, his wife, were cordially received by Dr. and Mrs. Hanley and those of their children who were at home, and Merritt's visit resulted in a lively tape with many intriguing recollections of the late Judge Hanley's character and personality. I am relying largely on that recorded tape in writing this article and am grateful to "Brother Merritt" for obtaining it.

I think Merritt must have spoken a few words in my praise as an honest and reliable character who was not engaged in racketeering, for Dr. Hanley entrusted him with the big family scrapbook about his father to be passed on to me. It remained unopened for weeks while I was writing the Al Bernard series, but I have since scanned every page and made notes of many interesting and intriguing items to be included in this survey. For the taped interview and temporary possession and use of the scrapbook I am gratefully indebted to both the Hanley family and to my brother by adoption.

Judge William J. Hanley in early middle age.

II. The Taped Interview

Now let's turn to that taped discussion and set down, in no particular order, some of the always interesting and sometimes amusing things that Dr. Hanley recalled concerning his notable father.

In 1915, when World War I had been ravaging Europe for only a few months, an English comic song that became popular in this country was "Sister Susie's Sewing Shirts for Soldiers." It was a tongue-twisting ditty that required great skill in articulation for singing properly, as you may judge for yourself by the words of the chorus:

"Sister Susie's sewing shirts for soldiers;
Such skill at sewing shirts our shy young Sister
Susie shows,
Some soldiers send epistles — said they'd rather sleep in thistles
Than the saucy, so! short shirts for soldiers
Sister Susie sews."

As Patrick Hanley recalls, Al Jolson featured "Sister Susie" in his act and after singing it without stumbling over the tricky syllables would offer a $20 bill to anybody in the audience who could come upon the stage and go through it without a mistake. Young "Will Halley," himself then, like Jolson, a Columbia recording artist, learned of the offer and took advantage of it. He appeared several times, sang the song without a hitch. He would even have the orchestra speed up the tempo, so he sang faster than Jolson. Before long, however, his face began to appear ultra-familiar to the fabulous blackface comedian, and when Hanley would get up and offer to render the song Jolson would tell him to get lost for his services were not required.

Jolson, naturally, made a Columbia record of "Sister Susie," in which he has the assistance of a male chorus that, although given no label credit, almost certainly is the Peerless Quartet. He uses the prize "gag" in the record, but instead of offering $20 says he will present a hat to any male volunteer who sings the refrain flawlessly, while successful lady contestants will be given a 10-pound box of candy, their choice of — I am not sure of all the brand names — Huyler's, Liggett's or Park and Tilford. (This is an excellent instance of the way some fortunate manufactured products used to get free publicity on records.) Someone, probably Henry Burr, volunteers to sing the chorus, but Jolson declares him "out" when he says, "Some soldiers sent a pistol —"

The Jolson record is amusing, but far from being as good as the Edison by Billy Murray, in which bystanders also are invited to participate and — of course by pre-arrangement — develop twisted tongues and sing "Sister Susie" for "Sister Susie." At any rate, it is amusing to know that young Will Hanley had the skill to call Jolson's bluff and collect his money until the irate comedian, recognizing him as a "repeater," ruled him out of bounds.

Dr. Hanley described his father as "a great guy," but one with a rather abrupt manner. He was extremely fond of sports and served as lawyer for the New York Americans in the early days of professional football.

Sometimes, Dr. Hanley said, his father would phone to him and say he had tickets for some important sports event, bark, "Meet in the lobby!" and hang up without giving his son time to explain that other things, such as studying for examinations, were looming large in his immediate future. His attitude seemed to be like that of an army officer — he gave instructions and they were to be obeyed, or perhaps his manner was the same as a judge who makes sure his courtroom instructions are carried out.

During his long legal career, William Hanley was attorney for Jack Kearns, the manager of heavyweight boxing champion, Jack Dempsey, and he was also the lawyer for a middle-weight champion, Mickey Walker. He was a warm admirer of Joe Louis and, his son says, went to all of Louis' fights. One of his particularly warm friendships was with Dan Parker, sports writer of the New York Daily Mirror.

"Somehow," Dr. Hanley recalls, "he could always get good seats. I remember one fight where he arranged for me to sit in the press section beside Parker, who agreed on condition that I would keep my mouth shut and not do anything to distract his attention from the story he was writing. Another time, at a game between Army and Notre Dame, Father fixed it for my brother and me to sit on the Notre Dame bench. Of course he himself was athletically inclined and had played football and baseball, but not as a professional, while he was getting his education."

As evidence of his fondness for sports, Judge Hanley was a member of the New York Athletic Club. He was fond of dining at Toot Shor's and Dinty Moore's restaurants, where many sports notables ate. One of his close friends was Robert L. Ripley, who drew the famous "Believe It Or Not" cartoons.

William, Jr., and Patrick were Judge Hanley's only children. Asked about their father's personal characteristics, they recalled that he had no hobbies of the collecting type. He usually owned a Lincoln car and had a chauffeur, but never himself learned to drive. Although he smoked cigarettes for years, he eventually gave up the habit. Dr. Hanley said he could recall three Hoboken houses and two apartments in which the family lived during his father's lifetime. He described the lawyer-jurist as being six feet or so tall during his later years and weighing about 210 pounds. His photos show that he gradually lost most of his Titian-red hair, and was graying and becoming bald by late middle age. Both he and his wife had blue eyes, and they are buried in the same plot in the North Arlington cemetery.

Dr. Hanley said his father didn't talk much about his recording career, but sometimes his sons would get out what badly worn "William J. Hanley" records the family owned and play them to tease him. "Father said the old records didn't sound like him," his son said — and, considering their condition, they probably did lack a great deal of fairly representing his voice.

One thing his sons proudly recalled was that their father was such a good speaker and had such a fine personal presence that other lawyers on occasion engaged him to plead their cases. His ability to speak effectively also was put to frequent use when he campaigned for Democratic candidates seeking local and state offices.

Shanley's, the New York night spot, in which the young William J. Hanley sang, was at 1525 Broadway, where the Paramount building now stands. Dr. Hanley says that in later years his father liked to take the family for vacation stays at the Spring House Hotel at Block Island, R. I., and would frequently sing "Let Me Call You Sweetheart," the favorite song of the proprietor, Ray Payne.

Now it seems time to turn to the large old family scrapbook and see what light it sheds upon the personality and career of the man who "graduated" from being a recording comedian to becoming a lawyer and then a judge.

III. Early Days as Judge

From the beginning of his legal career William J. Hanley was a successful attorney, or counselor, as trial lawyers usually seem to be called in New Jersey. He won acquittal for a number of clients who seemed almost certain to be convicted and obtained prison sentences for others who appeared on their way to the death penalty. And while making an outstanding record as a man of law he was also active in Democratic politics and was regarded as one of the party's most forceful, effective campaign speakers.

Undoubtedly, these factors were taken into consideration when Gov. George S. Silzer was confronted by the necessity of appointing a judge for Hoboken District Court. Hudson County political leaders were torn by dissension and unable to agree upon a suitable man to recommend, so, keeping in mind Hanley's reputation for hard work, capability and party loyalty, the Governor chose the former recording artist. The new judge was then barely 30, and some critics considered him too young for the job.

This attitude was commented upon editorially by the Hudson Dispatch, for March 15, 1923. Under the heading of "Hanley's Opportunity" the paper pointed to the young lawyer's singing career as evidence that he had the qualifications to succeed in anything he undertook:

"Out of the political confusion that has attached to the selection of a man for the Hoboken District Court Judgeship has come the appointment of Counselor William J. Hanley at the hands of Governor Silzer.

"It is pretty generally known that the Governor has had a deal of trouble in reaching a decision in the Hoboken case; he has given more than ordinary attention to the selection, possibly due to the fact that names presented by the political organization in Hoboken failed to measure up to the importance of the position. "In the selection of Mr. Hanley the matter of age is looked upon as a handicap; he is too young. But these are times when young men are assuming big responsibilities these are times when responsibilities are developing young men, these are times when young men are expected to measure up to responsibilities rather than waiting to grow up to the responsibilities."

(Continued on next page)

"Ten years ago, after leaving high school, this young man became a singer in one of the big restaurants of New York. He was making big money; he could have gone on the stage and anybody who knows his capabilities would hardly fail to predict that he would have been one of the big comedians of the stage. At any rate, that was his outlook. But he had ambitions for more serious things; one might say for bigger things, except that such a statement would be a reflection on those comedians, those real artists, whose worthwhile mission it is in life to make the world laugh. The life of a comedian is not a loss, not by any means. Take William H. Crane, Eddie Foy, Thomas Q. Seabrooke, Louis Mann, Jimmie Powers, William Hodge and a hundred others; by the happiness they have radiated from the stage they have dispensed happiness to thousands — millions. . . . If Mr. Hanley had elected to remain on the stage his life would not have been wasted. The fact is, however, that he chose to give up the glamour of an attractive life, and the big money he was already making, and the bigger money which no doubt lay ahead, for his ambition to be a lawyer."

"He still has a wonderful keenness for humor as those who have heard him in after-dinner speeches know so well; but it is impressive that he works hard at the law, it is impressive that he is a genuine hustler. This young man will now sit in judgment on the civil litigations of his fellow citizens. When he gave up the stage to become a lawyer, he sought the serious side of life, sought responsibility. He now has an opportunity to make good in a big way, has an opportunity at an age long before most young men get their chance. He has a rare opportunity, and he no doubt will make the most of it."

On Tuesday, April 3, Counselor Hanley's title became Judge. The Dispatch published an article relating the details of his being sworn in to office, illustrated with a photo of the young judge, looking stern and business-like, and holding a gavel with which he had been presented. Excerpts from the news story follow:

"William J. Hanley, new judge of the Hoboken District Court, marched into his new position yesterday amid a bower of flowers, mostly roses. At the same time Counselor J. Raymond Tiffany marched out of the judgeship in a most graceful fashion. The whole affair was like a big family party."

"The family touch was heightened by the appearance in court of Judge Hanley's mother, Mrs. Mary Hanley, who is a member of the faculty of the Hoboken Vocational Training School, his wife, and two of his sisters, Miss Eleanor Hanley and Mrs. T. A. Blake."

"Judge Hanley in a modest and straightforward little speech gave his mother the credit for his success so far in life. When he was a careless lad not fully aware of the importance of his school work it was the firm and kindly influence of his mother, he said, which kept him plugging on up the upward path of education."

"Colonel Clement de R. Leonard, the white haired 'Dean of the Hoboken Bar,' and known as the only 'grand old man of the Republican party in Hoboken,' stepped forward and expressed his appreciation of the youthful judge."

"He had watched 'Bill' Hanley's progress from the time he was a small boy, he said, and congratulated Governor Silzer and Mayor Patrick H. Griffin on their good judgment in backing him for the judgeship. . . . Counselor Harold Halpern, who has been connected with Judge Hanley's law office for the past five years presented him with a gavel with an engraved silver band around it."

"Among the floral presentations was a stunning basket of roses from Mayor Griffin. . . . a veritable fountain of blossoms from the Hoboken Jitney Owners Association, which Judge Hanley has represented as counsel, a large pot of climbing roses from the Second Ward Democratic Club, and baskets of flowers and potted plants from many other individuals and organizations."

The tribunal over which Governor Silzer had chosen William Hanley to preside was generally known as "the poorman's court" because it could not try suits involving more than $500. In the majority of cases, as a newspaper article pointed out, when suits were brought for smaller an authentic history of the Victor Talking Machine Company and biography of its founder, written by his son. Profusely illustrated and with fascinating information heretofore undisclosed it is well worth reading by anyone interested in antique phonographs and records.

HIS MASTER'S VOICE WAS ELDRIDGE R. JOHNSON A HARD COVER BOOK BY E. R. FENIMORE JOHNSON,

SEND CHECK TO:

GOLD STAR PUBLISHING COMPANY

90 CRICKET AVENUE

ARDMORE, PA. 19003

FOR $10.00, PLUS POSTAGE OF 26c. For Canada add 8c extra postage.
Pennsylvania residents add 6% sales tax. Dealer inquiries invited.
Please mention where you saw this ad.

sp

amounts than the maximum, the persons involved were poor and long waits for a decision would work a hardship upon them.

With this in mind, the former recording artist was determined from the beginning of his tenure to dispose of cases as rapidly as was consistent with justice, and he soon won a reputation as a fair-minded, efficient judge who ran "a tight court" and stood for no nonsense or intentional delays.

In the Hanley scrapbook is a newspaper clipping dated November 21, 1932 — more than nine years after Judge Hanley ascended to the bench — in which leading jurists at the second annual dinner of the Hoboken Lawyers Club praised the judge and the conduct of his court: Of Judge Hanley, Vice Chancellor John J. Fallon said:

"Those who have had occasion to appear before him during the period of years he has been on the District Court bench are aware that he has done his level best to dispose of his cases in a manner to reflect credit on the court and himself."

Concerning Judge Hanley's performance, an undated clipping from an unidentified newspaper, but probably the Hudson Dispatch, remarked:

"The law's delay, now being made the subject of discussion by the Hudson County Bar Association, as well as similar organizations in this State and elsewhere . . . is virtually unknown in the Hoboken District Court. Speed in the determination of cases is one of the things that is foremost there, but speed consistent with justice as the cases require."

In March, 1925, under the heading of "HANLEY TO BEGIN HIS THIRD

(Continued on page 53)

★ ★ ★

World's Largest Selection of

MUSIC BOXES and NICKELODEONS!

World's largest wholesale selection—over 500 in stock!—of music boxes, nickelodeon pianos, orchestrions, circus organs, etc. Huge catalogue illustrates, prices, describes our inventory—just $2 postpaid, or $10 for next 6 issues. Satisfaction guaranteed.

Also can supply the latest printing of the mammoth 1008-page, 8-pound "Encyclopedia of Automatic Musical Instruments," by Q. David Bowers. Thousands of illustrations. Learn all about instruments, various types and models, and their history. Book autographed and inscribed to you by author. $30 postpaid. Money back if not delighted! Over 6,000 copies sold. Awarded "one of the most valuable reference books" award by the American Library Association.

Huge selection of instruments available for immediate low-cost shipment from storage points in America and Europe! Get acquainted with us today!

Write to us in the U.S.A. at: Mekanisk Musik Museum, Box 1609, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90210, or to our headquarters in Europe. 28 cents postage required for airmail to Europe. Send for your copy of our catalog today!

MEKANISK MUSIK MUSEUM
VESTERBROGADE 150
COPENHAGEN, DENMARK
Telephone (01) 22-21-22

nc

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Re feathered

Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

tfc

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 37)

YEAR AS LOCAL JUDGE" the Dispatch reported:

"When Judge William J. Hanley sits tomorrow in the Hoboken District Court he will celebrate his second anniversary as a judge in the Mile Square City Court. Two years ago he was appointed to fill the vacancy caused by the expiration of the term of Judge Raymond Tiffany. Since then he has heard and decided hundreds of cases, but up to the present time not one has been reversed. Since he took up his duties the business of the Court has greatly increased and today it is one of the busiest district courts in the State."

On occasion, associates and admirers of the popular judge honored him with testimonial dinners. Typical is an account of one in a column-long, undated article which I take to be from the Dispatch. It obviously was published in 1928, because it mentions predictions that A. Harry Moore would be the next Governor of New Jersey and Moore took office for three years in January, 1929, after Judge Hanley, who was an intimate friend of the candidate, had proved himself probably the most effective pro-Moore speaker in the entire State. The news story was headed, "HONORS HEaped ON JUDGE HANLEY AT BIG DINNER":

"Members of the Bench and Bar, state officials and statesmen sang the praises of Judge William J. Hanley at a banquet given in his honor at the Hotel Astor, New York City, Saturday night. Honored and respected by his fellow barristers, the admiration and affection in which the Hoboken District Court Judge is held by his many friends was forcefully demonstrated by the 350 men who gathered to honor him."

"Incidentally, City Commissioner A. Harry Moore, who was toastmaster was repeatedly hailed by the speakers as the next Governor of New Jersey, and although the general atmosphere was akin to a Democratic organization rally political shades of opinion were obliterated in the general demonstration for the guest of the evening, and the enthusiasm was as sincere as it was wholehearted."

"In paying his tribute, Commissioner Moore stressed 'his qualities of loyalty and the fine humanity of 'Bill' Hanley as a man, a lawyer and a judge'. Judge Thomas F. Meaney of the Juvenile Court said: 'When Bill Hanley was elevated to the bench the human element was placed there'."

"A humorous talk was given by Judge Hyman Lazarus, of Bayonne, in the course of which he paid a sincere compliment to Judge Hanley . . . and predicting that there was in store for him still higher honors. On behalf of his friends he presented the judge with a gold mesh bag for Mrs. Hanley and a diamond ring set in platinum for himself."

"In responding to the eulogies that had been showered upon him . . . Judge Hanley made a typical Hanley speech. . . . That he had had serious misgivings as to his adaptability for the bench, he admitted, but in his characteristic manner said: 'Candidly, I wanted that job as Judge of the Hoboken District Court. I wanted the opportunity to show that I could make good in a serious role. You know all my life I had made my money being funny. I have tried to make good, and you men, gentlemen of the bar, know how far I have succeeded.'"

IV. In Judge Hanley's Court

One of the quoted speakers referred to the "human" quality that "Bill" Hanley brought to his court. Like most such institutions dealing chiefly with small claims and litigation of the poor, less educated classes, Judge Hanley's court had its share of colorful cases, which sometimes gave him an opportunity to make Solomonic decisions and brought out the warm and sympathetic heart beneath his judicial demeanor.

A case that the reporter appeared to find highly amusing involved a woman of Irish descent who was one of the occupants of a five-story tenement building. The lady, whose name of Sypheers certainly doesn't sound Irish, was charged by her American landlady and by Spanish, Swedish, Italian and German fellow tenants with keeping six canaries that constantly annoyed them by whistling "The Wearin' o' the Green."

According to the reporter, the complainants appeared in deadly fear of Mrs. Sypheers, who was described as "a tall, thin woman with angry, blazing eyes." The story continues:

"They testified that just to annoy them Mrs. Sypheers fed about 40 cats and dogs in the hallway of the house every day. Mrs. Sypheers said she did it out of the kindness of her heart. She said she fed a hungry dog one day, and it returned the next day with three other dogs and two cats. The third day there were seven cats and a dozen dogs and after that the hall was always full of them."

The clipping is torn and ends at this point, but the heading says "5 NATIONS WIN HOBOKEN WAR AGAINST IRISH." This sounds as if the Judge ordered the feeding stopped.

Another torn clipping, with the beginning gone, gives evidence of Judge Hanley's own goodness of heart. The dispute involved two women — Mrs. Mary Jacopac and Mrs. Sadie Jacopac, who, despite their odd names, were not related. Mary owned a house in which Sadie and her four small children occupied an apartment. Mary told the court she had been patient and had waited six months for her rent without being paid. She wanted the other Mrs. Jacopac evicted because she needed income from the apartment.

On the other hand, Sadie Jacopac had been deserted by her husband seven weeks. She came into court and had no means of support for herself and her frightened children. She was described as "a small and undernourished woman" who "stood in apathetic silence while Judge Hanley debated the question of what might be done." He understood full well that Mary Jacopac was entitled to $180 for the six months rent on which nothing had been paid for five months before Sadie's husband deserted her, but at the same time, he was concerned by the pitiful plight revealed in the newspaper account:

"On $5 weekly she receives from the poor-master, Mrs. (Mary) Jacopac said she has succeeded through the winter months in providing meager fare for herself and her little brood, whose ages run from two to six years. She has had little fire in her home. There has been no milk. Even now, she said, there was only a little wood in the house to provide some slight warmth."

"Affected by the woman's pathetic story, Judge Hanley asked the landlady if she would wait a little longer. She wouldn't. So he deferred action and after court gave Mrs. Jacopac money for groceries and for her immediate needs. He spent some time then in telephonic communication with various firms in an effort to obtain employment for the woman, who expressed an eager willingness to work if she could find some place where the children might be left during the day."

Poor, poor women! — the landlady with not much income of her own, who needed to have some money coming from her apartment, and the mother of four small children, penniless and not knowing where to turn. Probably the earthly troubles of both are over by now. But this incident shows Judge Hanley's warmth of heart. And it is not the only clipping in the big old scrapbook telling of his digging into his own pocket to help unfortunate people who came before his court.

V. Back to Practicing Law

William J. Hanley was appointed judge of the Hoboken District Court for five years. In 1928, after he had done yeoman service to elect his friend, Harry Moore as Governor, Moore re-appointed him for another five years. But when the question of the judgeship came up again in 1933, some quirk of Hoboken's internal Democratic politics kept the Governor from renewing the appointment.

Judging from newspaper reports, the District Court incumbent was not friendly with the Mayor of Hoboken, Bernard H. McFeely, and because of this ill-feeling Governor Moore found, or felt, himself unable to ask his old friend, who had campaigned so hard for him, to continue in office. That is the impression I get, at least, from an editorial, "The Irony of Organization Politics," in the Hudson Dispatch, for Mon., December 5, 1932:

"The irony of fate — or the irony of organization politics — has decreed that Judge William J. Hanley should not be reappointed by Governor Moore. It was Judge Hanley who made the speech in South Jersey, in 1930 that gave notice of the fact that Moore would again be a candidate for Governor, in 1931. It was one of those 'significant' speeches. Much had been written predicting that Moore would run again, but when Judge Hanley, close friend of the then former Governor, projected him into the race, the people of New Jersey knew it was real. . . . That Hanley would not be making a speech unless he knew exactly what he was talking about. . . . But Judge Hanley close personal friend of the Governor, is not in the good graces of Mayor McFeely, leader of his party in Hoboken. Appointments cannot materialize without the O. K. of the leader. That is organization politics, whether it be Democratic or Republican. It works strangely in some cases, but seldom more ironically than in this case."

Shortly after Judge Hanley returned to his law practice, a columnist wrote of meeting him and finding him without bitterness at having lost the judicial post in which he had served with fairness, intelligence, integrity and distinction. Part of the tattered clipping is missing, but the newsman wrote:

"Thank God, in private he's the same old Bill. And after a few more years of the serious life maybe he will be so well established that he can be natural again in public. And when that time comes this world will be a lot brighter and a lot happier, for Big Bill Hanley is in a class all by himself in spreading laughter. And after all I wonder if Will Rogers is not as useful in his way as Elihu Root is in his way. There are many great lawyers, but there are only a comparatively few really great comedians."

There is much to reflect on in that concluding remark!

We are now through with Judge Hanley's judicial career. But I have just come across the tag end of the story about Mrs. Sypheers being accused of feeding all those cats and dogs in the tenement hallway, and perhaps it should be quoted to tell how the controversy ended:

"The neighbors then told of a barrage of tomato cans and bottles that always awaited them outside the door of the Sypheers flat on the second floor."

"Mrs. Sypheers is awaiting action by the grand jury on a charge of beating one of her neighbors, Mrs. Lena Hoogreff, with a bottle. Sypheers testified that his wife was 'the most peaceful woman in the world.'"

"Judge Hanley gave the Sypheers three days to get out of the house."

At some time after he ceased to be a judge, William Hanley moved his law office to Jersey City. An undated clipping from the Hudson Dispatch (which was published in Union City, N. J.) says:

(Continued on next page)

"HANLEY TO RESUME LAW PRACTICE IN HOBOKEN. . . . Former Judge William J. Hanley, who has engaged in the practice of law in Jersey City for the past five years, will move back to Hoboken within the next few days, and establish his offices at 84 Washington St. Hanley was judge of the Hoboken District Court 10 years and is a former assemblyman. He lives at 1213 Bloomfield St. The former judge will take an active interest in the campaign to reelect President Roosevelt."

I said this news item is undated, but the words, "Thursday, October" appear on the back. The figure indicating the day of the month has been trimmed off. Circumstantial evidence indicates the story appeared in October, 1940. Hanley did not give up his judgeship until 1933, so could not have practiced law in Jersey City for five years before a period ending, at the earliest, in 1938. Roosevelt won his second term in 1936. Probably, then, Hanley was preparing to work for him in the few remaining weeks before the election when he tried for a third term in 1940. (In 1939 the President indicated he would not seek a third term, but later changed his mind.) Just possibly the year was 1944, when Roosevelt was elected for the fourth and last time, but 1940 seems more logical.

The chronology of Hanley's post-judgeship days becomes more puzzling when another news story is considered — this time, one headed, "HANLEY CHOSEN AS COUNSEL TO SCHOOL BOARD. . . . Succeeds Greenberg, New Judge of the District Court." Only a few lines of the long story, dealing mostly with routine matters that came before the school board, are worthy of quoting:

"Former Judge William J. Hanley, who was for ten years on the Hoboken District Court bench, was last night appointed counsel to the Hoboken Board of Education, succeeding Judge Joseph Greenberg, resigned, who last year replaced him in the District Court. . . . He (Hanley) became associated in practice with Norman R. Wynne nine years ago."

According to stories quoted during the earlier part of this series, Hanley was chosen to be attorney for the Hoboken Board of Education in 1933 and held that position until his death, at one time refusing to give up the post although he was offered $2,000 more a year to serve as U. S. District Attorney. The clipping from which I have just quoted, however, shows that his school board appointment was made in May, 1934, for on its reverse side is a column of death notices about people who had died from May 19 through 22 in that year.

Throughout his entire legal and judicial career, "Bill" Hanley was active in politics and was one of the speakers most frequently called upon by the Democratic organization. He was extremely active in the 1925 campaign to elect A. Harry Moore Governor, and Moore did win, by a statewide margin of 25,000. The majority reported for him in Hanley's Hudson County was 104,000. This indicates that Moore lost the remainder of New Jersey by 79,000, and shows how badly he needed Hudson County, and Bill Hanley's oratory, in order to win.

In the 1928 campaign for Governor, Hanley actively campaigned for the Democratic nominee, William L. Dill, but, Morgan F. Larson, a Republican, was elected. A year or so later Moore selected Hanley to make the first public announcement that he would try again for the governorship in 1931. He did, with Judge Hanley's enthusiastic support, and won his second term. (That year was a good one for Democrats everywhere, just as 1928, when Dill ran, had been bad.) Then, as we know, in 1933, Moore, unable to bring himself to break with the mayor who headed the Hoboken Democratic organization refused to reappoint Hanley to the bench.

Here is an interesting story from the Dispatch of October 21, 1936, telling of Hanley's taking the place, LATER LIFE. — Judge William J. Hanley as he appeared in the last years of his legal and judicial career.

as a party campaigner, of an old classmate who had become ill:

"Comradeship that began 31 years ago held true again yesterday for former District Court Judge William J. Hanley of Hoboken and Representative Edward J. Hart of Jersey City."

"For last night Hart, considered one of the most effective political speakers in the State was 'curing a cold,' by resting at his home. . . . Both Hart and Hanley have long been front line speakers in Democratic county and state campaigns and so last night it was Hanley who was selected by Democratic headquarters to go with (State Senator William H. Smathers, Democratic candidate for U. S. Senator) to Elizabeth, Rahway, Summit and Plainfield on the Union County tour. U. S. Senator A. Harry Moore, of Jersey City (the former Governor — J. W.) and Allen Barkley, of Kentucky, were in the same touring party. For Hanley (sic) it was a particularly pleasant assignment, because it meant not only an opportunity to 'bat' for his boyhood friend but to maintain his unbroken record of state campaigning since 1932."

"Hart and Hanley were classmates at St. Peter's Prep Jersey City, from 1905 to 1909, and always they were friendly rivals and the leading orators in an institution which has prepared some of the best public speakers in the state. In the annual elocution contests at the school in their four years, Hanley and Hart divided top honors — each was twice winner and twice runner-up. . . ."

I pointed out the misprint of Hanley's name as Haley, but did you observe that Alvin Barkley, who was to become U. S. Senator from Kentucky and Vice President of the United States, was referred to as Allen Barkley? More than one person on the Dispatch staff must have been napping.

Besides delivering political addresses, Hanley, both as attorney and judge, also spoke before many other groups. He urged high school pupils to get the best educations they possibly could, arguing that the time when an adult could win success with only grammar school instruction had gone by. He delivered Armistice Day addresses to his fellow veterans of World War I and, since there were still men living who had fought in the Civil War, spoke before them in praise of their old commander, General Ulysses S. Grant. He obviously led an unceasingly active and useful life throughout his recording career, and no doubt was full of plans for the future when he died at the age of 68.

VI. Dr. Hanley's Family

All that remains to be done before concluding this account of "William J. Hanley's" life is to tell something about his son, Dr. William J. Hanley, Jr., who has been my chief source of information about his father; Dr. Hanley's wife and their five children. I should also mention that Dr. Hanley described his mother as "a beautiful woman," who before her marriage was a hat model in the famous Hattie Carnegie salon, where two of Judge Hanley's sisters also were once employed.

Dr. Hanley was graduated from dental school in 1950. His wife before her marriage was Miss Kathryn Sanger, a native of East Orange, N. J. When they were married she was living in New York City and was a member of the New York Ballet Company. The wedding took place in a New York City church affiliated with Xavier High School, which Dr. Hanley had attended.

Their oldest son, Christopher, was a senior at Amherst College, Amherst, Mass. He has been, his father said in the taped interview with Merritt Malvern, "all over the world." An expert photographer, he has a large "side-line" income from taking wedding pictures and finds the money a valuable aid to his travels. He has played the guitar since he was a small boy, has a hobby of re-finishing and re-stringing old instruments, and periodically takes a few of his restored guitars to England, where he sells them for enough to pay his flight expenses. He has studied architecture and creative writing and served as art director of the college literary journal.

A daughter, Barbara, who is a year younger than Chris, attends Wheelock College in Boston. Peter, with whom I talked by phone while I was trying to reach his father, was in his senior high school year. He plays football high school year. There are two sons younger than he — William James (Jamie) and Robert Terence (Terry.)

The Hanley family has reason to be proud of the bearer of that name who came before them and advanced from being a student and part-time public entertainer to a leading attorney and widely admired and honored occupant of a judge's bench. I hope they will find pleasure in reading this recital of their forebear's achievements and knowing that some of the details of his outstanding life will be preserved for further generations in HOBBIES.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

ALAN TURNER

PART I

By JIM WALSH

The late Alan Turner today is a man of mystery—he is, at least, to me, but from 65 to 75 years ago he was among the leading singers of the British Isles and was generally regarded as one of the best English operatic baritones. This one-time prominence makes it the more difficult to understand why it is now so hard to obtain trustworthy information concerning the man and his life.

In writing "the late" before Turner's name, I took a certain amount of license. I don't know when and where Alan Turner was born, and I don't know when he died—if he is dead. There is a remote chance that he still is living, but, if he is, remorseless arithmetic proves that he is nearing the century mark, if he has not yet reached it. Since such a long life is uncommon, I assume that the once famous baritone has died and the news of his going has not come to my attention. I know that he was alive and active 40 years ago, in 1935, but of his life after that I have learned nothing. He is, as I began by saying, a mystery man.

What then, do I know of Alan Turner that justifies my undertaking this study of his recording career? I'll try to relate the scanty facts in some sort of order.

First, I know that his first records apparently were issued in 1906, although some probably were recorded in 1905. He was then already noted for his English language interpretations of certain operatic arias, such as "The Heart Bowed Down," from "The Bohemian Girl"; "The Toreador Song" from "Carmen"; "Even Bravest Heart," from "Faust"; "In Happy Moments," from "Maritana," and the Prologue from "Pagliacci." Photographs of him, published in record lists shortly after he began recording, depict him as a man who perhaps was as young as 25, and, possibly, though not probably, as much as 10 years older. Most likely, the best guess is that he was 27 or 28 when his first records were made. Say 27. That would make him 96 now.

The thumbnail photo of Turner which appeared in Victor record catalogs for many years and was also reproduced in the lists of some other firms shows him as a man with a rather high forehead, dark hair and a black mustache that curled upward at the ends. The face appears the same in an almost full length picture in a catalog published in 1913 by the minor English company, Diploma, but shows him wearing a high, stiff white collar, a cravat and a white

B45 Silver Bell
Yesterday you called me sweetheart, by Robert Carr

Mr. ALAN TURNER, Baritone.

B52 Until
Your eyes have told me so

B53 Yeoman's Wedding
In Happy Moments

B58 O, Star of Eve
She is far from the Land

B51 Love's Old Sweet Song
Queen of the Earth

ARTISTIC BARITONE. — This almost full length photograph of Alan Turner was copied from a 1913-14 catalog of Diploma records issued in England by a German firm. As far as is known, it was never used in any other record list.

vest, a dark jacket, probably of some checked material, and a pair of trousers of the same type. He has one hand in a trouser pocket. Another rests upon the arm of a chair. His appearance seems typical of that of the concert and operatic singers of his day, and I fancy a resemblance between him and the Italian baritone, Battistini. Regardless of whether you like mustaches—and I don't—the impression his photo makes is that of a man of intelligence, culture and character. Another picture, which was used in an advertisement in the Talking Machine News makes his eyes appear light in color—probably gray or blue.

From my childhood until recent days I have had a fixed mental image of Alan Turner—always the same rather distinguished looking man with the upward curling mustache. Not until I began to assemble information for this biographical study did it occur to me that the man, who appears in the full length picture to be short and somewhat slender, had parents, like everybody else; that he was once a baby, then a small boy; that he was sent to school and perhaps attended a university, and somewhere along the path to manhood learned that he had a fine baritone voice and was able to put it to successful professional use. Yet all these things obviously are true. It had not even occurred to me to wonder whether he married and had children of his own, but, rightly or wrongly, I persist in imagining him a bachelor.

I have known for years that Turner at one time was a member of the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company, which traveled throughout England, presenting English language productions of famous operas. I obtained this information from a brief letter written by A. W. Sutton, of Old Brompton, Kent, England, which appeared in the Sound Wave for June, 1910:

"I heard Mr. Alan Turner sing in 'Maritana' with the Carl Rosa Opera Company in this town twice last spring, and I should like very much to have records of 'The Heart Bowed Down' and 'In Happy Moments,' sung by him on Ambersols."

Mr. Sutton should have owned a disc, rather than a cylinder, talking machine. He would have learned that it was almost impossible to find an English or American brand of disc records that did not have Alan Turner's renditions of those arias from "The Bohemian Girl" and "Maritana."

(Though it was for many years of high repute in England, where, for all I know, it may still be operating, few American music lovers know much about the Carl Rosa Opera Company. It was founded in 1875 by a German who was born in Hamburg and whose real name was August Nicolaus. He changed his name to Carl Rosa after coming to England with his plan of establishing an opera company that would sing in the native tongue. Rosa died in 1889. His wife then carried on the company and it was afterwards under the management of Walter and Alfred von Noorden and, after them, Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Phillip. It almost certainly was the inspiration of the company giving operas in English which Alan Turner managed in the 1920s and '30s and perhaps into the '40s, though most likely its activities ceased after World War II began in 1939.)

I thought, until I was well along with this article, that Turner, who almost certainly during his career must have sung some roles in foreign tongues, made records in no language except English. One Sunday, by painstakingly clipping and pasting, I put together, in the exact order I wanted it, what I considered to be the most nearly complete list of his recordings it would be possible to prepare. Then on the next day, Monday, I received from William R. Bryant, of Portland, Me., a list of discs Turner had made for small short-lived American companies, such as International—records of which I had known nothing. And Bill called my attention to there being in a Spanish language Zonophone record catalog dated May, 1906, a rendition of "Pro peccatis" from "Stabat Mater," sung in Latin by—Alan Turner! I have that Zonophone catalog, but it just didn't occur to me that a list of records compiled almost 70 years ago and printed in Spanish would contain anything by the English baritone.

The only other Turner record I can think of that might possibly be in a foreign language is his famous 12-inch rendition of the prologue from "Pagliacci," which the Gramophone Company issued in England in February, 1907, and which many collectors, especially those in the British Isles, still consider one of the best Prologue records ever made. I have never heard it, although I have his shortened 10-inch version on Victor and sung in English. The Gramophone disc may be in Italian, but I think it more likely that it, too, is in Turner's mother tongue.

Bill Bryant, who said he learned through a "grapevine" named Martin Bryan that I was assembling the ingredients of a Turner series, told me something amusing about two Rex vertical-cut records he owns which play with a sapphire point. These short-lived, small-selling discs were made from about 1915 to the beginning of 1918. The first, No. 5290, contains on one side a ragtime song, "Alagazam," written by Harry Von Tilzer. The label says the singer is Alan Turner, but it is really Arthur Collins. Then record No. 5291 of "The Bedouin Love Song" is, according to the label, by Collins, but the singer really is Turner! Whoever printed the labels got mixed up and assigned the artists' names to the wrong songs. But I'd be willing to bet that Arthur Collins, who had a fine baritone voice, could have done a better job of singing Bayard Taylor's pseudo-Bedouin ditty than the dignified Mr. Turner could have done with "Alagazam."

I thought that the first record by Alan Turner issued by any American manufacturer and perhaps by any company anywhere was his single-faced Zonophone of "I'll Be Waiting In The Gloaming, Sweet Genevieve," which came out in April, 1906. But then Bill Bryant's list showed that one month earlier, in March, a Turner rendition of the "Letter Song" from "Veronique" had been published on one of those 10½-inch American records, made of a blue material called "Empedite." They had a trademark showing an Indian listening to an external horn phonograph and the motto, "Music Hath Charms." Perhaps some of the Sterling cylinders Turner recorded in England were made even earlier. During the 1906-7 period, Sterling, as will be shown later, claimed Turner as an exclusive artist for all types of records, disc as well as cylinder, but perhaps this "exclusive" stipulation applied only to the British Isles and he was at liberty to sing for as many companies as he liked on his periodic visits to the United States.

I knew before I began work on this series that the name of Turner was one of considerable distinction in British musical circles. At the period (1906-7) when Alan Turner was beginning to win widespread popularity through his records, there was a tenor, Bernard Turner (could he have been Alan's brother? Probably not for they made no duets together) who, as set forth in the Talking Machine News of November 1, 1907, had succeeded "the King's favorite tenor," Ernest Pike, as soloist of Holy Trinity Church, Sloane Square, Chelsea. He was a prolific recording artist, and, T. M. N. said, sang some of his Homophone discs in London, but had to go to Berlin to make others. Only one of Bernard Turner's records appears to have been current in the States—his solo of "Angels Guard Thee" (the Lullaby from "Jocelyn"), which was combined on Columbia A760 with Elise Stevenson's "A Little China Doll." The Turner side, of course, was made of matrices imported from England. I have never seen a photo of Bernard Turner, whose English records were perhaps as numerous as the baritone Turner's,

44

OPERATIC LIST

NUMBER			SIZES
31765	Belle of Brittany, Gems from the	Victor Light Opera Co.	12
	Chorus, Act I.—"Two Giddy Goats"—"Daffodil Time"—"Little Country Mice"—"Stepping Stones"—"The Old Chateau"—Finale, "All Roads Lead to Church."
5776	Belle of Brittany—Stepping Stones	Marsh-Macdonough	10
31761	Bohemian Girl, Gems from (Balfe)	Victor Light Opera Co.	12
	Part of Overture—Chorus, "In the Gypsy's Life"—Chorus, "Come With the Gypsy Bride"—Entre Act Waltz—Chorus, "Happy and Light"—"Then You'll Remember Me"—Finale, "Oh, What Full Delight."
2980	Bohemian Girl—I Dreamt I Dwelt in Marble Halls (Balfe)
	Elizabeth Wheeler	10
31285	Bohemian Girl—I Dreamt I Dwelt (Balfe)	Corinne Morgan	12
4567	Bohemian Girl—The Heart Bow'd Down (Balfe)	Turner	10
	2756 Bohemian Girl—Then You'll Remember Me (Balfe)	Macdonough	10
31757	Broken Idol, Gems from
	Victor Light Opera Company	12
	"A Little China Doll"—"Love Makes the World Go 'Round"—"Marie"—"Signs of a Honeymoon"—"Alabama."
5721	Candy Shop—Medley (With Vocal Selections)	Victor Orchestra	10
5376	Carmen—Toreador Song (Bizet)	Turner	10
	This always popular "Toreador Song" is given a spirited and vigorous rendering by this sterling baritone.
31788	Chimes of Normandy, Gems from	Victor Light Opera Co.	12
	Chorus, "Silent Heroes"—"Just Look at This, Just Look at That"—"Cold Sweat is on My Brow"—"That Night I'll Ne'er Forget"—"Bell Chorus," Finale.
4074	Carmen—Toreador Song (Bizet) (In Spanish)	Francisco	10
60012	Chocolate Soldier—My Hero (Straus) (Price 75c.)	Marsh	10
31780	Chocolate Soldier, Gems from A	Victor Light Opera Co.	12
	Opening Chorus—"That Would be Lovely"—"Letter Duet"—"Thank the Lord the War is Over"—Finale, "My Hero."
58334	Dinorah—Si, carina caprettina (Yes, My Beloved One)	Huguet	12
31783	Dollar Princess—Ring o' Roses	Marsh-Macdonough	12
31751	Dollar Princess, Gems of	Victor Light Opera Company	12
	"How Do You Do"—"My Dream of Love"—"Ring o' Roses"—"Tennis Dance"—"Hip! Hip! Hurrah!"
58399	Don Pasquale—Pronta io son (My Part I'll Play) (Donizetti)	Huguet-Badini	12
52458	Don Pasquale—Quartet, Act I—E rimasto la impietrate (He Stands Immoveable)	Brambilla, Corsi, Pini-Corsi and Scipioni	10
58351	Don Pasquale—Signorina in tanta fretta (My Lady, Why This Haste?)	Corsi and Pini-Corsi	12
52430	Elisir D'Amore—Io sono ricco e tu sei bella (I Have Riches, Thou Hast Beauty) (Donizetti)	Passari, Pini-Corsi and Chorus	10

TURNER

FAMILIAR PHOTOGRAPH. — This picture of Alan Turner is from a page in a 1910 Victor record catalog. It continued to be reproduced in each yearly Victor catalog through 1924.

but have long imagined him a fairly large man with a felt hat pushed somewhat back on his head, talking with another man at a street corner and smiling broadly while he clutched a cigar between his teeth. The chances are this imaginary scene does him an injustice, however, because, as a singer who needed to take care of his voice, he probably didn't smoke. I have never imagined Alan Turner smoking anything.

Another recording tenor was named John Turner and a Maurice Turner appears in a July, 1913, record list. S. P. Turner was the business manager of the Pathe Company's British branch, and it is worth recalling that Maud Powell, the legendary American violinist, was the wife of H. Godfrey Turner. I don't however, know whether Godfrey Turner was a musician. And Walter James Turner (1889-1946) was one of the most important English music critics of his time.

Most important of all, however, of all the musically accomplished English Turners was the great operatic soprano, Eva Turner, who is still living. Eva Turner was born in Oldham, a city on the outskirts of Manchester, Lancashire, on October 10, 1898, just 25 years, four months and nine days after Ada Jones, destined to be the most popular of American recording comedienne, came into being there on June 1, 1873. Like the great English comedienne of World War II days, Gracie Fields, who was born in Rochdale, Eva Turner had a father who was superintendent of a cotton mill.

Was Eva Turner, soprano, related to Alan Turner, baritone, who probably was born some twenty years before her? At this writing I don't know. However, Quentin Riggs, who kindly provided the photo of Miss Turner that I have submitted, with one of Gracie Fields, for reproduction with this article, knows a man who is a close friend of Miss Turner, and says he will ask that gentleman to talk with the soprano and find out if she is kin to the baritone or whether she knew him during his singing days. If he reports his findings, I'll include them as this narrative progresses.

Regardless of relationship, there was a certain community of interest between the two Turners. When Eva was a child of, say, about ten, her father took her to a performance in Bristol by the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company (it was authorized to include the word "Royal" in its title after giving a number of command performances for Queen Victoria) and, says Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians, after hearing whatever opera was presented in English that day, she decided to make operatic singing her career. (If the performance she witnessed took place in the 1907, '08 or '09 period, Alan Turner was probably one of the members of the cast.) A few years later the girl was sent to London to study at the Royal Academy of Music, first under Edgardo Levy and later under Richards-Broads. She obtained a licentiate and fellowship, but left the R. A. M. and joined the Rosa company as a member of the chorus to gain practical operatic experience. (This probably was during the first World War, when I doubt, for reasons I'll explain later, that Alan Turner was in England.) Before long she was permitted to sing leading parts, such as Leonora in "Fidelio," but not being satisfied with her English experiences, went to Italy to study. This led to her later scintillating successes.

FAMOUS LANCASHIRE SOPRANO. — Eva Turner, the celebrated operatic diva, was born, like Alan Turner, in the area dominated by the great cotton manufacturing city of Manchester. Her father was a cotton mill superintendent.

Regardless of whether Eva and Alan Turner were related, it's intriguing that he was a star baritone of the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company and that she gained her first operatic experience with the same organization.

(Continued on page 127)

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

OLD FLUTES—Wood, Metal. Description, manufacturer, photo. — Kornblit, 902 Frostwood, Houston, Texas jcl2639

USED MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS — Bought — Sold — Iammarino, 9265 S.W. 43rd St., Miami, Fla. 33165 d3802

PHONOGRAPHS

PHONOGRAPHS repaired: New spare parts for Edison phonographs. Send stamp for list. Phone: (201) 748-8046. — Gerichten, 23 Waldo, Ave., Bloomfield, N.J. 07003 jly124851

"DIRECTORY OF Phonograph and Record Collectors," lists 250 collectors and their wants. $3.50 postpaid, satisfaction guaranteed. Two stamps for free list of antique phonograph catalogs, books, magazines. — Allen H. Koenigsberg, 3400 Snyder, Brooklyn, N. Y. 11203 mh66921

★ ★ ★

World's Largest Selection of

MUSIC BOXES and NICKELODEONS!

World's largest wholesale selection—over 500 in stock!—of music boxes, nickelodeon pianos, orchestrions, circus organs, etc. Huge catalogue illustrates, prices, describes our inventory—just $2 postpaid, or $10 for next 6 issues. Satisfaction guaranteed.

Also can supply the latest printing of the mammoth 1008-page, 8-pound "Encyclopedia of Automatic Musical Instruments," by Q. David Bowers. Thousands of illustrations. Learn all about instruments, various types and models, and their history. Book autographed and inscribed to you by author. $30 postpaid. Money back if not delighted! Over 6,000 copies sold. Awarded "one of the most valuable reference books" award by the American Library Association.

Huge selection of instruments available for immediate low-cost shipment from storage points in America and Europe! Get acquainted with us today!

Write to us in the U.S.A. at: Mekanisk Musik Museum, Box 1669, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90210, or to our headquarters in Europe. 26 cents postage required for airmail to Europe. Send for your copy of our catalog today!

MEKANISK MUSIK MUSEUM

VESTERBROGADE 150
COPENHAGEN, DENMARK
Telephone (01) 22-21-22

nc

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Re feathered

Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

tfc

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 37)

II More Facts and Fancies

When I reached this point I received a letter from the ever helpful Quintin Riggs telling me he has a photostatic copy of part of an article about Alan Turner that appeared in the June, 1907, issue of the Sterling Recorder, a "house organ" published nearly 70 years ago in London by the Russell Hunting Record Company, then makers of Sterling cylinders. Quintin said the photostat was sent to him some years ago by Ernie Bayly, of Bournemouth, England, publisher of the International Talking Machine Review, and that Ernie could let me have a facsimile of the complete article. Although I was "as sick as a dog" the day Quintin's letter arrived, I compelled myself to write a letter to my old friend, Ernie, and to dispatch it by air mail. I asked him to send me as soon as he possibly could a copy of that article, together with any other information he had found dealing with Alan Turner.

I shall not, however, hold up this installment by waiting for the mail from England, for I am eager to start the Turner series as soon as the one about William J. Halley ends. Whatever information Ernie sends me I'll work into a later part.

Quentin told me a couple of interesting things: One, that Turner, according to the Recorder article, was born in Manchester and began his formal music study in, or about, 1898 with the distinguished concert baritone, Andrew Black, who made Gramophone records in 1902. Assuming Turner was 19 or 20 when the studies began, this makes his age about what I have estimated and gives the probable year of his birth as from 1877 to 1879.

The news that Alan Turner was born in Manchester also increases the possibility that he was related to Eva Turner, whose birthplace, as I have already mentioned, was Oldham, seven miles to the northeast of the larger cotton manufacturing city. Perhaps before this series ends we shall have some word from Miss Turner as to whether she knew her masculine namesake and whether they were related.

III Turner's American Stays

Circumstantial evidence appears to indicate that the Manchester native took one or two trips to the United States each year, beginning in 1905 or 1906 and continuing through 1914, to make records the majority of which were for Victor. I suspect that in this country he was exclusive after about 1910 to Victor for lateral-cut discs, but was permitted to sing for small companies, such as Operaphone and Rex, which made hill-and-dale records that Victor would hardly have considered sales competition. Then, in 1913 or 1914, he became for a time a member of the Philadelphia-Chicago Opera Company.

Beginning with the January, 1912, record catalog, Victor published a brief sketch concerning Turner, but it gave no biographical information. In the May, 1914, issue, however, this was altered by the addition of a third paragraph of one sentence. The augmented annotation read:

"A LASSIE FROM LANCASHIRE." Gracie Fields, the brilliant English music hall comedienne and recording artist, was born in the cotton mill town of Rochdale, 10.5 miles north-northeast of Manchester. She and Eva Turner both had fathers who were mill superintendents.

"Mr. Turner has become a great favorite with Victor customers through the fine series of standard songs and opera airs he has made for us. This baritone's range is a remarkable one, his upper notes being particularly pure and clear."

"The selections which this singer has made—Irish ballads, English patriotic airs, sacred songs and opera songs in English—are all rendered with dignity and artistic finish."

Mr. Turner has just paid a brief visit to America to fill a short engagement with the Philadelphia-Chicago Opera Company, and his fine impersonations of Valentine and the Toreador were much enjoyed by opera goers."

In succeeding editions, the third paragraph was altered to "Mr. Turner was a member of the Chicago Opera Company during its final season," with Philadelphia" being deleted, and still later "final season" was changed to "a recent season." This continued through 1924. The notes were dropped in the 1925 catalog, but the list of his records was still extensive.

You have observed that the May, 1914, catalog, said Turner paid "a brief visit to America," but I am wondering if he returned to England or was still here when World War I began in the summer of 1914. A puzzling thing is that he apparently made no records in England during the entire four years the war was being fought, but his records continued to be listed regularly in Victor supplements. His name does not appear in English record publications of that period. This seems to indicate that he remained on this side of the Atlantic, living in the States or perhaps in Canada, and possibly singing as a member of some minor opera company. Had he gone back to England at the conclusion of his Chicago operatic engagement, he would hardly have risked returning to this country each year with Germany pursuing a policy of unrestricted submarine warfare.

The roles which Turner is mentioned as singing during his Philadelphia-Chicago appearance, were from "Faust" and "Carmen." I imagine he must have rendered them in French, for he would hardly have been permitted to sing in English while the remainder of the cast was heard in the language in which the operas were originally written.

IV Back In London

Alan Turner's last American records (by which term I also include those he did in Canada) were made in 1918. The war ended in November, and I assume he returned to England soon afterward. He then disappeared from view—at least from my view—for some 16 years.

When, however, I was well into compiling notes for this series, I began to think I had a vague recollection of an item having appeared in The Gramophone magazine, published in London by the novelist, Compton Mackenzie, and his brother-in-law, Christopher Stone (both are dead now), mentioning that Alan Turner was the organizer and manager of a company of amateur performers singing operas in English. Obviously, such a reference deserved to be included here. My recollection was that it appeared at some time before I left Marion, Va., in October, 1934, to work for a newspaper in Johnson City, Tenn., and I thought it probably was in a set of 1924 issues which I acquired shortly before changing my address. I decided to search for it, and that proved an almost heartbreaking task. First I went through the 1924 copies, searching each page for a mention of Alan Turner, but found none. I continued doggedly over a period of several days, looking intently at thousands of pages, but nothing turned up. When I reached the 1931 volume I desperately assumed that perhaps the mention of Turner had been published in 1923, the The Gramophone first appeared, but the result there also was negative. I began to think that, after all, the missing item, if it ever existed, might have been printed after I left Marion, but I kept going through 1932 and 1933, with the same lack of results. Then, when I came to 1934, I turned through the pages, until, in the February number, under the heading of "Trade Winds and Idle Zephyrs," I suddenly saw the magic words, "Alan Turner," in bold, black-face letters and realized I had reached my goal. Here is what I read:

"It is not too late for Londoners, at any rate, to go to Rudolf Steiner Hall . . . in order to witness what is claimed to be the first amateur production of Strauss' 'Die Fledermaus,' or 'The Bat' (for it is sung in English) by the Alan Turner Operatic Company. The full operatic version, including the ballet, is used. The opening performance on Tuesday night was in aid of the Middlesex Hospital (and will be) followed by nightly performances at 7:45 for other worthy objects till the end of this week (February 3)."

"The producer and manager, Mr. Alan Turner, is one of our most faithful readers and has records to make up 14 'complete' opera programs, which he plays to a circle of congenial friends."

I think I did pretty well to remember that short mention of Turner after more than 40 years, even though

(Continued on next page)

I did mistakenly believe it was published 10 years earlier than it actually appeared. And I wonder how many of Turner's own records were included in the "complete operas" which he played for his friends. That note, written by Christopher Stone, didn't mention Turner having been a distinguished opera singer, but in the following month there was a follow-up by P. G. Hurst, who conducted the Collectors' Corner for lovers of early "classical" vocal reordings. My old friend, P. G., who once referred to me in The Gramophone as "the prince of letter writers . . . who always has something interesting to say," wrote:

"Almost simultaneously with my discussion of 'The Heart Bowed Down,' by Alan Turner, I read in the editor's notes that Mr. Turner is a regular reader of The Gramophone. His records of 1906 are justly accepted as historical (Hurst thought no records issued after 1907 were worthy of mention—J. W.) and are included in the 'Who's Who.' His record of the Prologue from 'Pagliacci' comes chronologically after that of Scotti and is sung in superlative style. Indeed, it may be said without fear of contradiction that his fine, virile style of delivery and faithful traditional phrasing were those of an operatic singer of the first rank. I heard him as Telramund in a really notable production of 'Lohengrin' which I heard twice in the course of a week, and he remains uppermost in my memory among exponents of this role."

My research does not indicate that, aside from the "Evening Star" number, Turner ever recorded any arias from Wagnerian operas, and I wonder if he sang in German in the "live" "Lohengrin" productions which the late Mr. Hurst attended.

Coincidence has played a striking part in my work on this article. After I found the two items I have just quoted I received a letter from my friend, Milford Fargo, a member of the faculty of the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, N. Y., who is the foremost authority on Ada Jones, asking for the address of a record collector with whom I corresponded briefly a good many years ago. I couldn't recall where the man lived, but got out some of my old diaries and went through the address columns in the hope that I might have jotted that information down. I didn't find the address, and still haven't, but I was startled to see in one diary the name of Alan Turner and a reference to an item about him in The Gramophone for March, 1935. I at once went in search of that paragraph, which I had entirely forgotten, and here it is—but if it hadn't been for Milford's asking for an address I didn't have, it would still be lost to HOBBIES readers.

"The Alan Turner Opera Company has plenty of pluck. Johann Strauss' 'Gipsy Baron' is an ambitious work for an amateur company to tackle, and we note that their next efforts will be 'Cavalleria' and 'Pagliacci.' The five performances of 'The Baron,' beginning February 12, benefitted several deserving charities, and delighted large, enthusiastic audiences. 1,200 pounds has been raised since 1927. Applications for membership in this excellent company should be sent to Northdown House, Northdown Street, N. 1. Amateurs only, of course."

I imagine Alan Turner sang the principal baritone roles in all the operas produced by his company—and here I may mention that some American collectors down-grade Turner's artistic achievements and his standing as an operatic artist because his records were virtually all sung in English. In England, though, he is accepted, the way P. G. Hurst rated him, as one of the important artists of his time.

About a decade and a half ago, when Quentin Riggs was living in Australia, he learned that Alan Turner had been a subscriber to The Gramophone and wrote to the publishers, asking for Turner's address. (Quentin retains a faint hope that Turner is still living.) The reply was that a man named Alan Turner took the magazine and occasionally wrote letters to the editor, and his address was supplied; however, when Quentin wrote to the gentleman he received a friendly answer to the effect: "Sorry, but I'm not THE Alan Turner." There is no doubt, though, that THE Turner was a Gramophone reader in the 1930's.

That March, 1935, paragraph is the latest reference I have found to Alan Turner—and that was 40 years ago. Next month we'll begin to consider his recording career in detail, and perhaps, if I hear in time from Ern'e Bayly, I may also be able to include some fresh biographical notes.

(To be continued)

NOTICE

By working together we can win the battle against inflation. The expiration date of your subscription is printed right above your name on the wrapper of your magazines.

By watching this date and submitting your remittance three months in advance of the expiration, will eliminate the need of us sending you a reminder. By helping us to reduce our cost, you will benefit by continuing to receive the "greatest" publication at the "lowest possible cost."

HOBBIES Magazine

SMALL THEY MAY BE BUT BIG THEY THINK

The Hempstead (N.Y.) Bicentennial Committee reports that children may be small in stature but where the Bicentennial is involved they think big.

The Committee tells us that when John Ryan, the principal of Milburn Elementary School suggested to students that making a flag would be a suitable project for the Bicentennial observance, they didn't think of just any old flag. "Not the massive minded Milburners," says the Committee.

The children decided to recreate the original "Star Spangled Banner," the

Nada Convention, 1975

Monterey, Calif., will host the 1975 Annual Convention of the National Association of Dealers in Antiques, Inc., September 29 through October 2.

The program is highlighted with appropriate lectures and tours through many historical sites. Dr. Robert Haas, Director of the Arts and Humanities Department at the University of Los Angeles, will lecture on Oriental rugs. Arthur and Grace Chu will speak on "Oriental Collectibles." Mr. Chu is a graduate of China's National Central University and Mrs. Chu holds a doctorate from the University of California at Berkeley. Both have written for many periodicals and they collaborated on a book, "Oriental Antiques and Collectibles — A Guide."

Charles and Leila Lyons will speak on prints. The Lyons, both college professors, began collecting Japanese prints while in our government's service in the Orient. They now own and operate one of the largest graphic arts studios in the West. Their stock numbers over 100,000 prints engravings and lithographs. Their lecture will display many rare and unusual examples of these art forms.

Hal Dietzel, a noted authority, will give an illustrated lecture on clocks.

Tours will include the famous, scenic "17 mile drive" along the rugged coast and visits to several missions. An adobe tour, conducted by the Monterey History and Art Association, will be taken by bus and will include visits to eight adobe homes. Some of these are private residences which will be opened solely for NADA Conventioneers. Luncheon on this day will be in the Memory Garden and will feature a typical Western chicken barbecue dispensed from a huge keg on an ox-cart.

Non-members are invited to the convention each year. The $50 registration fee includes two dinners, two luncheons, all museum entry fees and bus transportation on the tours. Annually an auction is held and will be closed to the public this year with only the registrants being allowed to attend.

For further information contact Lewis Scott, Convention Chairman, P. O. Box 5696, Carmel, California 93921.

flag that flew over Fort McHenry during the War of 1812 and inspired Francis Scott Key to compose the national anthem.

The flag was reproduced by the students in its original size—all 1,280 square feet of it or 40 by 32 feet!

The students raised funds for the project through a series of events including a faculty-student basketball game, cake and cookie sales, a white elephant auction and a paper drive. They exceeded their goal of $195 for materials, and then cut, measured, basted and sewed until the 1812 replica was finished.

REPRINT: COURTESY
—BICENTENNIAL TIMES

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

ALAN TURNER

PART II

By JIM WALSH

I Early Victor Records

Your conrite correspondent has to confess that he made a boo-boo in an earlier portion of this series. He — meaning, I — wrote that Alan Turner's first record for a company in the United States appeared to be his American disc of "The Letter Song" from "Veronique," and that his Zonophone, came next. By a trick of memory I had been led to believe that Turner made Zonophone records before he recorded for Zonophone's parent, Victor, and had assumed he was given a "try-out" on the lesser known brand before it was decided he could be a successful Victor artist. My hazy recollection at the time I was writing placed Turner's Victor debut early in 1907.

But I was exactly a year off the track. I have just gone through old supplements and find that the British baritone's first Victor records were announced in February, 1906, a month before the American disc and two months before the first Zonophone. Apparently then (but any statement of this sort is always subject to change on the basis of later evidence) Turner's first American records were Victors, and he must have been in this country late in 1905 to make two discs that were listed in the February supplement.

Here, before beginning to quote Victor's monthly booklets concerning the Turner records, I pause to wonder just how did it happen that Alan Turner elected to visit the States and seek work as a recording artist? Did he engage an agent to obtain engagements for him before he crossed the Atlantic or did he personally visit the different recording studios and arrange a series of "dates?" If he followed the latter course he must have had remarkable powers of persuasion to induce virtually every American recording laboratory to include him among its artists and, especially, to talk them into letting him sing the same numbers over and over. It is of course possible that his Victor and Zonophone records made such a good impression that competing manufacturers felt he was an artist whose services they could advantageously use, and asked him to name his terms, even though there was no lack of capable American recording baritones, such as Frank C. Stanley, James F. Harrison and Percy Hemus, who sang the same type of compositions as Turner.

As to why the competing organizations engaged him to record such things as "The Heart Bowed Down" and "In Happy Moments," which he had already sung for Victor and Zonophone, perhaps he was asked: "What would you like to sing that you think would be a good seller for us?" and Turner replied: "Well, I made 'The Heart Bowed Down' (or some of the others) for Victor and it's been a steady seller ever since it came out. Don't you think your catalog needs a rec-CORD of 'The Heart Bowed Down'?" Presumably there would be a nodding of heads and agreement that every record catalog was regrettably incomplete without an Alan Turner rendition of the favorite, if hackneyed, baritone aria from "The Bohemian Girl."

When Turner's first two single-faced Victor records were announced to a receptive public, one was 10-inch and the other 12. The 10-inch was his unflinching war horse, "The Heart Bowed Down," which he must have whipped into recording condition at least a score of times for that many different companies. I believe it was the number he recorded more often than any other, although I haven't bothered to make an exact count. Anyone who wishes to do so may call his computer into action and tally the totals when my comprehensive, but probably not complete, list of Turner recordings appears at the end of the final part of this symposium. Anyway, here are the supplement comments:

"1567. The Heart Bowed Down. Balfe. A dignified and finished rendering of Balfe's favorite 'Bohemian Girl' number. Perfectly sung with a most distinct enunciation."

If practice makes perfect, the gentleman with the sky-tilted mustache should have been able to sing "The Heart" with "most distinct enunciation."

"31481. I'll be Waiting in the Gloaming, Sweet Genevieve. Helf. One of the best rustic ballads of the season, which is meeting with much success. Mr. Turner has given us both verses of the song."

The Victor dealers' order blank phrased the description of the 12-inch record somewhat differently, saying:

"A very popular ballad of which both verses are given by Mr. Turner. As you know customers frequently prefer two verses of a ballad on a record. This is often impossible on the 10-inch, but with the new prices there should be a good trade for 12-inch ballad records."

(The reference to "new prices" was made because Victor at the beginning of 1906 had reduced the price of single-faced 10-inch Black Label records from a dollar to 60 cents, and of 12-inch from $1.50 to $1.00.)

Preceding the foregoing descriptive comments was this general introduction:

"BARITONE SOLOS BY ALAN TURNER with orchestra. A new singer who is certain to be a Victor favorite. Although listed as a baritone, Mr. Turner's range is so remarkable that he can almost be called a tenor. His upper tones are of a very beautiful quality."

There was no mention, you observe, of Turner's being an Englishman.

Edison issued the "Genevieve" song as a tenor solo by Byron Harlan and as an ocarina number by the flute virtuoso, Eugene C. Rose, who told me he had never tried to play an ocarina until three or four days before he made the cylinder.

Now I come to a personal admission. I have never been an unqualified admirer of Alan Turner's singing, although I admit the fine quality of his voice and enjoy hearing him, or did, before my inner ear imbalance turned listening to almost any music into something less than a pleasure. But it seems to me his vocal style was marked more by strength and forcefulness rather than sweetness and subtlety. (That seems to be a characteristic of English baritones.) As a boy of perhaps ten years of age I took what I now know to be an unjustified dislike to his singing when a lady played for me her Victor record of Turner's singing "Annie Laurie." He rendered it somewhat differently from the version by the Columbia Quartet which my family owned — naturally, the arrangement for a soloist would differ from that for a male ensemble — and I indignantly proclaimed that he was "singing out of tune" — which he really wasn't. But I, in my infantile assumption, thought otherwise.

I have Turner's record of "I'll Be Waiting in the Gloaming," whose refrain echoed the music of the much earlier "Sweet Genevieve," and I also have it sung on a Columbia record by Albert Campbell. I have always thought the Campbell interpretation much the better. There is a sweetness and expressiveness about Al Campbell's lyric tenor rendition that, to my hearing, Turner's style does not equal. Nevertheless, I consider that in baritone arias suited to him he was one of the finest English-language artists of his time.

Our British friend's next appearance in a Victor list was in June, 1906, when he sang another of the stock numbers of his repertoire, Ethelbert Nevin's "The Rosary," which he must have liked but which I detest, and a 12-inch version of "The Letter Song," which had previously been issued by American. Presumably these discs had been recorded several months earlier and held for later release — unless, of course, Turner was making an extended stay in the States:

"Nevin's songs, which have won a wide popularity, are noted for beauty and originality, but the most widely known is this sad, but exquisite 'Rosary,' which has attained a vogue larger perhaps than any (other) song by an American composer. Mr. Turner's rendering is most adequate, and the accompaniment is beautifully played.

"The Letter Song. This is the gem of Andre Messager's delightful opera, Veronique, which has made such a great success both in England and America. The words are especially beautiful, and Mr. Turner delivers this appeal of the heart broken Veronique with all the pathos which it requires."

A month or so earlier Victor had issued a 12-inch record by Turner of "The Village Blacksmith," but I have been unable to find it in a supplement.

In October, 1906, another 12-inch Turner record was issued — one of his comparatively few religious offerings, Gounod's "There is a Green Hill Far Away." The supplement annotation said "Turner sings this fine Gounod number in the impressive manner which it demands."

The baritone's next Victor appearance was in the January, 1907, record list, a few months before a great panic set in and so drastically reduced American business — the talking machine industry included — that it took Victor five years to build its record sales back to what they had been in the more prosperous part of the depression year. The 10-inch selection offered this time was a "chestnut" that may have ranked next to "The Heart Bowed Down" among Turner's standby recording arias. It was "In Happy Moments," from "Maritana." Supplement Editor Sam Rous wrote:

"'Maritana' is one of the brightest and most melodious of all modern English operas and contains several beautiful and expressive ballads, notably this favorite 'Happy Moments.' Mr. Turner being an English baritone of wide experience in opera, is quite at home in these ballads, and sings this number in the finished style familiar to those who have heard him in his beautiful rendering of 'The Heart Bowed Down.'"

This was the first time Victor patrons had been told that Turner was English and had had "wide experience in opera." "Happy Moments" probably was the last remaining record of those he had made for Victor during his 1905-06 American incursion. Eleven months had passed since the first was issued, and in that less than a year the baritone had become established as a Victor recording stalwart. True, his discs didn't sell in the huge quantities of "run-away" song hit discs by such artists as Billy Murray, Ada Jones, Henry Burr, Harry Mac-Donough, Collins and Harlan and Bob Roberts, but neither did their sales slow to a crawl as the more pronouncedly "popular" types often did after their novelty wore off. They continued to be steady, if modest sellers, and most remained in the catalog year after year, even after many were combined into double faced couplings.

Not only did Turner's opera arias and old standard ballads, together with an occasional popular song such as "Genevieve," do well, but he won a good personal following. Some record buyers considered him their favorite singer. During one of my visits to New York City at some time in the 1940's, many years after Turner had ceased recording, I met one of his admirers when I went into a second-hand store. As I looked through racks and stacks of old records I stood beside an elderly man who proudly showed me two Columbia records by Alan Turner which he had just found. (His Columbias seem harder to come by than his Victor's.) "Been looking for these for years," he said, "but never came across them until just now. Sure am glad to get 'em. Alan Turner is my favorite singer." No doubt there were many others who rated Turner equally high.

II Later Single-Faced Victor's

More than a year elapsed before Alan Turner's name again was seen in a Victor record list. It reappeared in February, 1908, exactly two years after his initial pair of discs had been issued. During this period the makers of Sterling cylinder records in England advertised that Turner was exclusive to them for all types of talking machine work, but, as I have already speculated, this may have referred only to the British Isles. However that may have been, Sterling, which had enjoyed good sales for a couple of years, was on the verge of bankruptcy at the beginning of 1908. Its downfall resulted chiefly because Thomas A. Edison's National Phonograph Company had reduced the English price of its two-minute cylinders from a shilling and sixpence (about 38 cents in American money) to one shilling (a quarter), in order to meet the competition of Sterling, Edison Bell, Pathé and other companies which undercut Edison. Since Edison cylinders were much better recorded and had smoother surfaces than any other brand, it was impossible for most English companies to compete successfully against the American product, after prices were equalized. When the February, 1908, Victor supplement said Turner had "just made a flying visit to America," the reference of course was to his traveling by ship, not plane:

"Mr. Turner has just made a flying visit to America for the purpose of making a series of records for the Victor. This engagement resulted in some very fine impressions, the first three of which are now offered. Ernest Ball's new ballad is delivered with much expression, both verses being sung, and the exquisite 'Evening Star' is given in English in a manner which shows Mr. Turner to be a finished singer.

"In wide contrast to these numbers is a manly and spirited rendition of the famous 'Rule Britannia,' the stirring words and martial melody of which make it a favorite not only with our English and Canadian friends but with many others. The number is given with a rousing male chorus which makes it doubly interesting."

The "rousing male chorus" almost certainly was the Hayden Quartet, and I wonder if "Bill" Hooley, the quartet basso, who was an embattled professional Irishman, consented to sing it with the Englishman. The late John Bieling told me that when the Quartet went to England in 1902 it gave a number of concerts, and Hooley obdurately refused to sing "God Save the King."

WAS HE "EXCLUSIVE"? During the period in which Alan Turner's single-faced Victor records were made, he supposedly had an exclusive contract with the Russell Hunting Record Company, of London, which produced Sterling cylinders, but the contract probably applied only to the British Isles. The cylinder firm was founded by two Americans, Louis Sterling (left) and Russell Hunting, "The Original Michael Casey," right. After it was liquidated, Hunter became head of the French Pathe Company's world-wide recording activities, and Sterling eventually rose to be top official of the English Columbia organization. This photo was taken in his old age, when the one-time boy from the East Side of New York City was a millionaire many times over and had presented so much money to charity that he was knighted and given the title of Sir Louis Sterling.

The "new Ball ballad" was "As Long As the World Rolls On." After Ball wrote one of the sensational ballad hits of all time, "Love Me and the World Is Mine," he and his lyricist, Dave Reed, Jr., decided to continue working such a productive vein and collaborated on a series of "world" songs. I don't think I can name them all, but among them were "To the End of the World With You," "Roll On, Beautiful World, Roll On" and one that extended the subject matter from the world to the universe and issued one of the tallest orders ever specified in a popular ballad: "Turn Back the Universe and Give Me Yesterday." In 1912 Turner recorded another Ball ballad, "Till the Sands of the Desert Grow Cold," which was written for a bass voice, and it became one of his best sellers.

Ernie Ball really was a melodic genius. John McCormack, for one, said his gift of writing beautiful melodies was akin to Franz Schubert's. "The Evening Star" of course was one of the popular operatic arias that Turner recorded over and over, but "Rule Britannia" seems not to have been among the favorite numbers in his repertoire.

In March, 1908, Turner was back with three offerings: "The Bravest Heart May Swell," from "Faust," which he recorded repeatedly; the Prologue from "Pagliacci," which he did not record so often, although his superb interpretation of the number had added greatly to his reputation, and a then new popular ballad, "Goodbye, Sweetheart, Goodbye,"

(Continued on page 127)

A RARE ITEM YOU'LL ENJOY WILL OAKLAND GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY

1904-1954

Will's own production for personal friends, recorded shortly before his death. He talks, sings, reminisces. Includes old-timers and early recordings. Added final tribute by a member of his last engagement troupe! Will's show, our first offering, is a treasure!

Please specify cassette or reel/reel.

Either, postpaid, $6.00.

MERRITT SOUND RECORDING
223 Grimsby Road
Buffalo, New York 14223 jae

MISCELLANEOUS MUSICAL ITEMS

LARGE SHOWROOM and display salon of nickelodeons, orchestrions (automatic self-playing orchestra), circus organs, music boxes, etc. Superb selection! Excellent values! Open Wed. thru Sat. 9 to 12; 1 to 4. Visit us! Or send your name for my price list. Also available: "Encyclopedia of Automatic Musical Instruments," 1008 pages, thousands of illustrations and descriptions, weight 7 pounds! Latest edition $30 postpaid. Satisfaction guaranteed. — Terry Hathaway, 1717A Stanford, Santa Monica, CA. 90404. Tel. (213) 828-2886. n68262

AUTOGRAPHS: Opera, Theatre, Ballet, Signed Letters, programs, photos, Bought-Sold. Catalogues issues.—La Scala Autographs, 814 Milan, Coral Gables, Fla. 33134 jae3873

HOLLET and CUMSTON of Boston Piano, built 1860-1870 in good condition. — E. Hemstreet, 204 S. Edward Street, Mt. Prospect, Ill. 60056 n1891

REGINA MUSIC BOX CO. Theiford Center, Vt. 05075 Telephone (802) 785-2669

OFFERS

NEW 15½ REGINA MUSIC BOXES, with long running spring wound movements

Single Comb $675.00
Double Comb Models $975.00 each 6 tunes,
150 tunes to choose from including 12
Xmas tunes. Restored Antique models to choose from. Repair service on all types music boxes backed by 40 years experience.

Thousands of parts for sale, plus special tools for dampening, putting teeth in combs, points in combs in 5 minutes.
New catalog and brochures not offered before, pictures and parts list, 27" Automatic #33 #34 36 pages. $10.00 The Regina and Reginaphone 20 pages $3.00 practical instructions for operating, oiling and repair of Regina boxes. 12 pages $3.00.

PLUS 19 other Regina motors. $2.00 2-page list Regina springs for all 74 clock works motors $3.00.

#3 Our instruction classes on care and restoration of musical boxes has been so beneficial and enthusiastically received. We will continue them year round offering week end classes in Hartford, Connecticut this winter and weekly classes in Vermont Summer '76.

Lloyd G. Kelley

dc

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Refeathered

Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

tfc

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

OLD FLUTES—Wood, Metal. Description, manufacturer, photo. — Kornblit, 902 Frostwood, Houston, Texas je12639

USED MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS — Bought — Sold — Iammarino, 9265 S.W. 43rd St., Miami, Fla. 33165 d3802

PHONOGRAPHS

PHONOGRAPHS repaired: New spare parts for Edison phonographs. Send stamp for list. Phone: (201) 748-8046. — Gerichten, 23 Waldo, Ave., Bloomfield, N.J. 07003 jly124851

"DIRECTORY OF Phonograph and Record Collectors," lists 250 collectors and their wants. $3.50 postpaid, satisfaction guaranteed. Two stamps for free list of antique phonograph catalogs, books, magazines. — Allen H. Koenigsberg, 3400 Snyder, Brooklyn, N.Y. 11203 mh66921

★ ★ ★

World's Largest Selection of

MUSIC BOXES and NICKELODEONS!

World's largest wholesale selection—over 500 in stock!—of music boxes, nickelodeon pianos, orchestrions, circus organs, etc. Huge catalogue illustrates, prices, describes our inventory—just $2 postpaid, or $10 for next 6 issues. Satisfaction guaranteed.

Also can supply the latest printing of the mammoth 1008-page, 8-pound "Encyclopedia of Automatic Musical Instruments," by Q. David Bowers. Thousands of illustrations. Learn all about instruments, various types and models, and their history. Book autographed and inscribed to you by author. $30 postpaid. Money back if not delighted! Over 6,000 copies sold. Awarded "one of the most valuable reference books" award by the American Library Association.

Huge selection of instruments available for immediate low-cost shipment from storage points in America and Europe! Get acquainted with us today!

Write to us in the U.S.A. at: MEKANISK MUSIK MUSEUM, Box 1869, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90210, or to our headquarters in Europe. 28 cents postage required for airmail to Europe. Send for your copy of our catalog today!

MEKANISK MUSIK MUSEUM
VESTERBROGADE 150
COPENHAGEN, DENMARK
Telephone (01) 22-21-22 nc

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 37)

which was destined to become one of his most overworked numbers, ranking almost on an equality with "The Heart Bowed Down," "In Happy Moments" and "The Evening Star." All three records were 10-inch, which means the Prologue was somewhat abbreviated, with a large cut being made in the introductory orchestral passages. Of the "Faust" aria the supplement said:

"Valentine's noble air in the second act of Gounod's Faust, and one of the most enjoyable numbers in the whole baritone repertory. Mr. Turner renders it most effectively, singing with emotion the pathetic lines referring to Valentine's sister, and infusing much spirit into the martial strain which closes the aria."

Of the Prologue:

A finished record of the famous Pagliacci number, sung in English in an admirable manner by this accomplished baritone. . . . The "Evening Star" from Tannhauser, issued last month, has been greatly admired. Many persons prefer to hear these airs in English but they are seldom sung so that the text can be plainly understood. The Victor has been fortunate in the selection of artists who pronounce the words very distinctly."

After I began this article I was visited by Albert Via, of South Boston, Va., and I played for him, this 10-inch Prologue, which I had only recently obtained, on an Orthophonic Victrola. "Jack" was amazed and almost spellbound at the beauty and expressiveness of Turner's voice and the marvelous realism with which the 67-year-old record was reproduced. Alan Turner seemed to be in the room with us, and my friend said: "I just couldn't have believed that a record made that long ago could have such volume and realism. Alan Turner was a great singer and that is a great piece of recording."

One thing about Turner's Prologue amuses me. At the end he sings of course the famous closing lines: "Ring down the curtain!" but instead of pronouncing "curtain" to rhyme with "certain," he shouts "Cur-TAIN!" as though it rhymed with "pertain," which, according to the rules of orthodox English pronunciation, it doesn't. But perhaps it was easier to get a clear, ringing tone by slightly distorting that one word.

As to "Good Bye, Sweetheart, Good Bye," the supplement said, and still says:

"Not the familiar old song by (J. L.) Hatton, but a new ballad by Arthur Lamb and Albert Von Tilzer, which is meeting with great success. It is a really beautiful song, which Mr. Turner sings with admirable taste. Both verses are given."

I wonder why the baritone became attached to this song and why in succeeding months he recorded it so extensively. He was not much accustomed to singing the current popular songs of the day, but he latched onto this sentimental effusion with both hands and a full set of vocal chords and during 1908 recorded it for any number of companies, most of them in England. He may be said to have "owned" it, as Arthur Collins was sole possessor in this country of "The Preacher and the Bear" for vocal recording purposes. I can't recall that any other singer made a record of "Good Bye, Sweetheart." I have a copy of the Victor version, but probably hadn't played it for more than 30 years and had not the slightest recollection of what it sounded like when I put it on the Orthophonic to try to ascertain why Turner had considered it worthy of so much attention. To me it seems an ordinary popular love song of its period except that the music calls for considerably more range than the average Tin Pan Alley production. At some points Turner's voice rises to a tenor and at others he descends to bass. Perhaps he liked the ballad and talked companies into recording it because it displayed the unusual flexibility and compass of his normally baritone voice. When I was operating the mythical Walsh Talking Machine Company at the age of ten and for a few years afterward, I didn't list Turner as one of my imaginary artists. That was because of the dislike I had taken to his Victor record of "Annie Laurie." But for another singer, a baritone with good high notes, I originated the descriptive title of "baritenor," a combination of baritone and tenor. Perhaps "baritenor" is what Turner should have been called.

DISGUISED ZONOPHONE DISC. Quentin Riggs was startled a few years ago when he found this single-faced Zonophone record by Alan Turner with a "Standard" label superimposed on it. He had previously believed that all Standard records were made by Columbia, unless some were made for a short time by Leeds and Catlin, but this disc shows that around 1907 or 1908 the Standard firm was buying to some extent from Zonophone.

III Last Single-Faced Victors

In 1908 the heyday of Victor Black Label single-faced records was drawing to a close, although some would be issued in diminishing quantities for another half dozen years. But when Victor reluctantly began to produce double-faced records in the fall of 1908, the eventual doom of the single-faced type had been decreed.

Alan Turner continued to make them, however. In April came two more of the most frequently recorded numbers to which he was addicted — Tosti's "Venetian Song" and the Toreador Song from "Carmen." He recorded the Toreador Song almost as often as he did "The Heart Bowed Down" and "The Venetian Song" was not far behind in his personal popularity poll. Of the "Venetian Song," the supplement said:

"Mr. Turner sings it in a finished manner, and with the sympathetic and well balanced accompaniment it will prove to be one of the most pleasing vocal records of the year."

This was the description of the Toreador Song:

"The fifth of our Grand Opera records in English, a series that is attracting much attention. This always popular 'Toreador Song' is given a spirited and vigorous rendering by this sterling baritone, whose new records are in great demand."

The May records included another of Turner's perennial favorites, Teresa Del Riego's "Brown Eyes" and, in 12-inch, an old song which I don't recall his having recorded elsewhere, "The Colleen Bawn" from Benedict's opera, "The Lily of Killarney." It probably was one of Turner's poorest selling Victors, although my guess is that the worst seller of all was "The White Squall," issued on double-faced No. 16006, with for its coupling "The Standard o' the Braes o' Mar," by Harold Jarvis "Brown Eyes" was described as:

"One of the most beautiful records we have ever issued. Mr. Turner sings this fine Del Riego song admirably, and an exquisite accompaniment is furnished by Mr. (Walter B.) Rogers. Altogether the record is a remarkable example of the perfection attained by the Victor in the reproduction of the voice and orchestra."

The supplement writer said Turner had often appeared in "The Lily of Killarney" in England, "and no one has ever filled the role of Hardress quite as well as this fine baritone." This is more evidence that he had had ample training and experience in operatic singing.

In July Turner recorded the British national anthem, "God Save the King," as a companion to his earlier "Rule Britannia." Again I quote the supplement:

"In response to many requests . . . for a record of this noble old melody with the words used in Great Britain, we have requested Mr. Turner to sing it. This favorite baritone is a loyal British subject and delivers it spiritedly and from his heart."

No male chorus was introduced, so "Bill" Hooley was spared the indignity of being asked to sing along with a "Limey" baritone in his spirited rendition of the Hooley-hated "God Save the King."

During this period our baritone friend recorded another patriotic number, Canada's "The Maple Leaf Forever." This was one of a series of records not intended for nation-wide sale, but prepared for regional distribution only. In this instance, the selling probably was confined almost entirely to Canada, but perhaps some copies were disposed of in States adjoining our good neighbor to the North.

Came October, and Turner was represented by one of the prime favorites in his recording repertoire, "The Tempest of the Heart," from Trovatore:

"The famous air from the first act of Trovatore, which as 'Il Balen' has long been a favorite Red Seal record, is now given in English by Mr. Turner; and his splendid singing, together with the fine accompaniment furnished by the orchestra, combine to make the record one of the best in the popular-priced grand opera list."

Next in numerical order came my once detested "Annie Laurie," but I cannot find a description of it. In December, after the first list of 100 double-faced Black Label discs had been introduced, Turner was represented by a 10-inch and a 12-inch single-faced, in both of which he had the assistance of the Hayden Quarter, presumably including Mr. Hooley. The smaller size was "Here's to the Girl!" from "The Girls of Gottenburg" and we are told that Mr. Turner sang this light opera number "with spirit and the refrain is given by the quartet in lively fashion." By way of contrast, the 12-inch was "Some Day," which was even then considered an old-time song. The supplement said it was "a favorite ballad with very many persons, who will be delighted at the opportunity of obtaining such a fine record of this dear old song. Mr. Turner sings the verses with much expression and just the right degree of pathos, while the refrain . . . is effectively given by the quartet, the arrangement used being a most beautiful one."

I have now found a description of "Annie Laurie" which was belatedly issued in the June, 1909, supplement, together with the 12-inch "Thy Sentinel Am I." There is an interesting statement in this paragraph:

"Two more fine records by this favorite baritone, who has just returned to England to fill an operatic engagement. Mr. Turner's exquisite singing of 'Annie Laurie' and his spirited delivery of Piusotti's famous old song cannot but be admired by all."

Obviously, the baritone had sailed to England to appear with the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company, for we have already seen a letter which a man living in Kent, England, wrote to the Sound Wave, telling of having heard Turner sing with the Rosa organization in 1909 and asking for Amberol four-minute cylinders of his renditions of the favorite "Bohemian Girl" and "Maritana" arias. But you will remember the supplement said early in 1908 that Turner had paid a "flying visit" to this country to fill a Victor engagement. Had he stayed over here throughout most of 1908 or had he returned to England, then come back to the States to do still more recording? The later is more likely, for 1908 seems to have been his most active year of making records for English companies. All his Pathés, for instance, were made that year.

Subsequently we shall have something to say about his double-faced Victors, but not in the detail with which his single-faced have been discussed.

IV Zonophone, Edison and Columbia

Space limitations do not permit giving extended analysis of Turner's Zonophone and Columbia discs and Edison cylinders, which were contemporaneous with his Victors. Nor is such detailed reference necessary, since the selections he sang for the other companies more or less paralleled what he did for Victor. (A complete list will be found in the concluding installment of this article.)

It is worth noting, however, that the baritone's first Zonophone record, in April, 1906, was "I'll Be Waiting in the Gloaming, Sweet Genevieve," which he had already made in a 12-inch size for Victor. The Zono supplement said:

"Mr. Turner is a singer new to our catalog. He has a magnificent voice with wonderful range and power. We feel sure his records will become very popular. He has rendered this ballad in a most excellent manner"

BOTH SANG "GENEVIEVE." — Albert Campbell (above) and Alan Turner made competing recordings of "I'll Be Waiting in the Gloaming, Sweet Genevieve." Jim Walsh considers this photograph of "Clancy" Campbell, which probably was made in 1915, to be the brightest and clearest he has ever seen of the pioneer tenor. It was found by Miss Pamela Ochojski, of Monsey, N. Y., in a "flea market," and she kindly lent it to Jim for him to have this copy made.

—Photo from Quentin Riggs

In the same list was good old "In Happy Moments," which brought this comment:

"In this selection from 'Maritana' we hear Mr. Turner's voice at its best its soft and low tones and shading effects are excellent."

Passing on to Edison, we find that Turner made his first appearance in a monthly Standard two-minute cylinder list for July, 1906. The description of the record in The New Phonogram mistakenly calls him a tenor, and — could you guess it? — his initial selection was "In Happy Moments":

"Mr. Turner makes his formal bow to the Phonograph public in this well known ballad from Wallace's opera, 'Maritana.' That Mr. Turner's splendid tenor voice will make him a favorite cannot be doubted. In this record Mr. Turner embellishes the finale with a special passage which shows off his voice and artistic style to perfection. 'In Happy Moments' is Mr. Turner's first record in the monthly list, but he has made over for us No. 7010, which has already appeared in our catalog."

"No. 7010" was "Love's Old Sweet Song," which also took high priority in the number of times Turner recorded it. Perhaps Edison's engaging him to remake this cylinder, which had earlier been recorded by two other baritones, gave him the idea that he could do well singing it for a variety of companies. He made only two other Edison two-minute cylinders, the omnipresent "Queen of the Earth" and "Goodbye, Sweetheart, Goodbye." Both came out in 1908. He also did a four-minute Amberol of another of his favorites, "For All Eternity," and Blue Amberols of the inevitable "Toreador Song" and "Venetian Song." His list of Indestructible cylinders was longer. It consisted almost entirely of his favored standbys, but in 1918, surprisingly enough, he sang for Indestructible "There's a Long, Long Trail" and "When the Great Red Dawn is Shining." He also made the latter for Victor.

The first Columbia record by Turner appeared in January, 1909, shortly before or after he had returned to England to join the Rosa Company. It was — of all things! — "The Heart Bowed Down" and was rather incongruously coupled with a Theodore Morse ballad, "I Love You as the Roses Love the Dew," sung by Frank Staney and Henry Burr. Concerning "The Heart Bowed Down," the supplement said:

"Alan Turner has a splendid conception of the requirements of the song and renders it with rich flowing tone, admirably adapted to the spirit of the well-loved composition."

Indubitably, it was one of which he should have had "a splendid conception"! Columbia's few remaining Turner records, issued in ensuing months, were largely of titles he recorded prolifically for other companies.

(To Be Continued)

VICTORIAN HOUSE IN MINIATURE

(Continued from page 121)

longed to my paternal great grandmother. It has been said that the chairs were brought by her via covered wagon from New Hampshire to Michigan but were carried by my great grandfather on his back the last hundred miles for there was only a path on which to travel.

"Building the house was a labor of love. The only outside help I received were the balusters for the staircase and the wrought-iron cresting for the top of the tower roof made by Al Atkins.

"The interior of the house has an entrance hall, parlor, dining room, butler's pantry, kitchen, utility room and pantry on the first floor. Upstairs there are four bedrooms, a dressing room, sewing room and bath. All of the bedrooms have closets except one child's room. I changed that one so it would open into the upstairs hall for a linen closet. Access to it, besides the hall, is through a door on the back of the house. It is made to blend in with the rest of the house so it hardly shows. There is a maid's room in the attic with a window seat. There are four fireplaces plus the enclosure for the kitchen stove.

"The period is Victorian, of course, but would be about 1885 since the bathroom fixtures and kitchen sink are of a later date than the time the house was designed. Perhaps the doll family who live in the house modernized the bath and kitchen. The furnishings are mostly Victorian or at least I have tried to keep them all of that period."

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

ALAN TURNER

PART III

By JIM WALSH

I. Research in England

Last month's portion of this Alan Turner story was devoted mostly to discussion of his early American cylinders and the single-faced discs he made for various companies, with the Victorians considered most important. Consideration of his double-faced discs, chiefly for Victor, must be postponed until another time. For the present, we must cross, in spirit, the Atlantic, to Turner's native England, and chronicle the results, mostly negative, of research undertaken there.

Let us then call on the celebrated opera soprano, Dame Eva Turner. In an earlier section I expressed belief that this renowned lady might have known Alan Turner, since they had appeared, at different periods, with the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company. I even thought that, because both lady and gentleman were born in Lancashire, they might have been related.

This surmise, however, was wrong. Quentin Riggs, who never tires of helping in my investigatory activities, settled that by writing to Dame Eva and asking if she had known the baritone whose last name was the same as hers. She replied that she could not recall having ever heard of him. In a letter dated July 25, 1975, Miss Turner said:

"... I note all you tell me concerning a friend of yours, Jim Walsh, who is doing research on the operatic and concert baritone, Alan Turner. I must confess that I really don't know anything about this man. You say that from 1927 to the mid-1930's he had his own company. During that period I was out of this country and living in Italy, making my own career, and I know nothing about the opera company of which you speak. I regret I am not able to help you further and I am somewhat at a loss as to whom you could contact for further information, alas! I do hope that both you and your wife are well and cheery and that everything progresses in the best way possible for you. With kindest thoughts and all blessings, Sincerely yours, EVA TURNER."

So now we know that Miss Turner never sang with Alan Turner and that, although they were born a few miles apart, but with 20 years or more difference in age, they were not, so far as Dame Eva knows, related. I appreciate nevertheless the great lady's interest in this research and intend to send her copies of HOBBIES containing the Alan Turner series.

Another English lady who has been graciously helpful is my dear friend by correspondence, whom I wish I could meet in person, Miss Marjorie Pillars, assistant secretary of the Dickens Fellowship at the Dickens House in London. Marjorie came into the picture when Quentin told me that a man named Alan Turner was listed in the London telephone directory and that the directory showed him living in that part of London in which the quarters of the Alan Turner English Opera Company used to be. I didn't think it likely that the man in the phone book could be the erstwhile baritone, Alan Turner, who must now be close to the century mark if still alive (I am almost certain he isn't, for George Baker, another baritone who is still living and active, though past 90, has informed Quentin he believes Turner is dead), but it occurred to me that he might be a son or other relative of the singer. So I wrote to Marjorie, requesting her to phone to the gentleman whose number appeared in the directory and to reply by air mail, for "time was of the essence."

The day Marjorie received my letter she made the call and she reported the result of her efforts in a reply written that same day, Aug. 7:

"Dear Jim: Regarding the Alan Turner business. I telephoned today and a man with a very nice elderly speaking voice answered (and I thought 'this is our man!'). Though very polite he was not the singer and no connection, and knew nothing about singing or recording. So that's that. At least we can eliminate him."

"Enclosed is a photostat of all the (A) Turners in the London telephone directory. A Roneoed circular letter to all of them might bring some information. But he might well be living in the country outside London or any other town in the U. K. — or the world! In the meantime, I will keep a bright look forward and let you know if anything turns up!"

Well, it was worth being disappointed for the sake of receiving such a charming letter. By "Roneoed" I presume Marjorie refers to a British equivalent of Xerox or other duplicating methods known in the States, but I'm afraid I couldn't undertake to circularize the approximately 200 Turners, first names beginning with A., who are listed in the London telephone directory. The Alan Turner to whom Miss Pillars talked lives at 62 Northchurch Road, N1, and his telephone number is 01-226-2053. I assume that since he knows nothing of the baritone whose name he shares, nobody on the American side of the Atlantic will pester the gentleman by undertaking a long distance phone call. My warmest thanks to Marjorie for her sympathetic cooperation.

And now let's abandon the negative and accentuate the positive by quoting a rare document that tells something about Alan Turner as he was nearly 70 years ago.

II. A Rare Biological Sketch

In 1905 two young American men who had decided that England would be a profitable field for their talents decided to form a partnership and go into the phonograph record business. One was Louis Sterling, a Jewish native of New York City's East Side, who had come to Great Britain to become manager of the International Zonophone Company's operations in London. The other was Russell Hunting, who had won fame in the States for his "Casey" talking records. He had an excellent recording voice and was an expert in all the phases of record making which had then been developed.

Hunting and Sterling joined forces and the result of their efforts was the formation of the Russell Hunting Record Company, which began to produce a cylinder called the Sterling, thus publicizing the names of both men. Their advertising boasted that some Sterlings were 4 3/4 inches long—half an inch longer than the ordinary wax cylinder and that the added length gave more music — perhaps 15 or 20 seconds more — than the ordinary two-minute "roller." Sterling cylinders sold for a shilling, then the equivalent of the American 25 cents.

Hunting and Sterling had some ingenious advertising ideas and for a couple of years their business prospered, although there was a great deal of cut-throat competition in the cylinder field. The prosperity came to a halt when, in order to meet lower-priced competition, Edison records, which sold for a shilling and sixpence — about 38 cents — were reduced to a shilling. Since Edison recording was unmistakably better than that of any competing firms, Sterling, Edison Bell, Pathé, Columbia and others found their cylinder business rapidly declining. Some, in desperation, reduced their prices to the unprofitable figure of ninepence (18 cents) in an effort to undercut Edison. But that's getting ahead of the story.

The August, 1906, issue of the American Talking Machine World told of one of Hunting and Sterling's successful advertising schemes. They sent up a balloon, from which 5,000 coupons were dropped. Each entitled the finder to any Sterling cylinder of his choice. Within three days 3,500 of the coupons had been returned and a record claimed, by Alan Turner or some other Sterling artist. The World said, "Each recipient of a record gave his name and address and thus many valuable names were added to the list of prospects." The English Talking Machine News published one picture of the huge balloon taken while it was preparing to ascend, and another, depicting it high in the air.

Just as, in the States, Victor published The Voice of the Victor as a trade organ for its dealers, Columbia issued The Columbia Record and Edison, The Edison Phonograph Monthly, so Sterling had a monthly publication called The Sterling Recorder. My interest was great when Quentin Riggs wrote me that his friend and mine, Ernie Bayly, who publishes a record collectors' magazine, the internationally circulated Talking Machine Review, had sent him a picture of a page from the June, 1907, issue of The Sterling Recorder, which contained the first part of an interview with Alan Turner! He said that Mr. Bayly, who lives at 19 Glendale Road, Bournemouth, BH6, 4JA, England, would, he was sure, send me the remainder of the extremely rare interview — so rare that probably no American collector had ever seen it — if I requested it. I made the request, and Ernie obligingly did.

With the second half of the article, Ernie sent a letter, saying:

"Dear Jim: Here is what I think to be the part of the Alan Turner article which you lack. The first part included his picture. I have no idea how long the magazine, 'Sterling Recorder,' ran. I have seen only a few copies of years 1907-08. It could not have lasted much longer, because Louis Sterling sold to Columbia (his discs) and Edison Bell (his cylinders) in November, 1909. I seem to be the only one who has heard of the magazine outside the man having only three issues. It listed Sterling cylinders, Fonotipia and Odeon discs, Linguaphone discs and cylinders, for all of which Louis Sterling was agent. His old premises were destroyed in World War II and a new warehouse smolders the site. . . Best wishes, ERNIE."

As Ernie's letter indicates, Hunting and Sterling, besides manufacturing Sterling cylinders expanded within a year or so to representing the Italian Fonotipia company, which made mostly "classical" records by famous opera singers, and the Odeon Company of Germany, which was affiliated with Fonotipia. The pair also, recorded, in London, English artists whose records were listed under Odeon disc label. This is referred to in the Turner interview. That article, incidentally, is couched in the most roundabout style of writing — one that was extremely common 70 years ago and which I call "going all around Robin Hood's barn." The writer, perhaps paid by the line, used five words where one would be better. His article could profitably be rewritten and condensed, but since it is so extremely rare I have decided to quote it with all its stylistic oddities. It was said to be Number Eight in a series called "Stories of Successful Artists."

(To be continued)

286 THE TALKING MACHINE NEWS.

WINNERS.

Some of the 51 Double Records
OF THE
SEPTEMBER ISSUE.

See Record Supplement for Full List.

	2391 Have you seen our John? (Comic) Jerry Jeremiah	H. Cove T. Yorke
<small>HERR GOTTLIEB, Conductor of the Royal Orchestra at all great British Festivals.</small>	2392 My German Lily (Yodie Song) (The Old Windmill)	Bert Terrell
	2393 The Flash of Steel (Two-step) Pattering Feet	Gottlieb's Orchestra
<small>GWYNN WOLEY, The celebrated Welsh Tenor.</small>	2394 The Trail of the Lonesome Pine (Comic) (Oh you Wonderful Girl)	H. Cove Chief Kawhawgan
	2395 A Telephone Story (Talking) The Whistling Stammerer	Owen Marston G. H. Snazelle
<small>D. BRAZELL, The Favorite Welsh Baritone.</small>	2396 Hey ho! can't you hear the Steamer? You're my Baby (Ragtime Song)	H. Cove & T. Yorke
	2397 My Old Dutch Flo (Yodie Song) Permission from Farber	Bert Terrell
<small>D. BRAZELL, The Favorite Welsh Baritone.</small>	2398 Take me in your arms and say you love me Dance your troubles away	T. Yorke
	2399 My Queen Waltz Secrets, Intermezzo	Royal Court Orchestra
<small>D. BRAZELL, The Favorite Welsh Baritone.</small>	2400 Marche Lorraine National Emblem March	Royal Guards' Band
	2401 A Hunting Scene A Sailor's Life	Descriptive
<small>D. BRAZELL, The Favorite Welsh Baritone.</small>	2402 Plant y Cedryl (Welsh Duet) Blodwen (Welsh Duet)	Gwynn Woley & David Brazell
	2403 Y Idiau Forw Y Idiau Arwr	" "
<small>D. BRAZELL, The Favorite Welsh Baritone.</small>	2404 The Land of I-dunno-where The Songs my Mother sang	Robert Carr
	2427 Even Bravest Heart (Faust) She alone Charneth my Sadness (Remde Saba)	Alan Turner R. Carr

YOU KNOW THEM—THEY WIN EVERY TIME.

Every Respectable Agent and Dealer in the Country sells them.

THE WINNER RECORD CO., LTD., WILLOWBROOK GROVE, CAMBERWELL.

FEATURED—Alan Turner is one of the featured artists in this advertisement of Edison Bell Winner records, published in the September, 1913, Talking Machine News.

VETERAN BARITONE—George Baker, who began making records in London in 1911, is still living, though past 90. He recently told Quentin Riggs he believes Alan Turner is dead. Baker made many more records than Turner and had one of the longest careers of any recording artist.

SHE MARRIED A TURNER.—This photo of Maud Powell, distinguished American violinist (1868-1920), was taken in London. Miss Powell, whose Victor records were popular for many years, married an Englishman, H. Godfrey Turner. Turner was an important musical name in England, but it is not known whether Alan and Godfrey Turner were related.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

ALAN TURNER

PART IV

By JIM WALSH

III. The Alan Turner Interview

"One of the chief characteristics of our popular artist, Mr. Alan Turner, is his enthusiasm. It is, of course, not suggested that other artists are not enthusiastic, but few yield such prima facie evidence of a confidence in the future of their art as does Mr. Turner. Few impress one as he does with a desire to surpass previous achievements, to go one better today than yesterday.

"It may be thought that this is but a trivial point to bring out as a personal attribute of a singer, but in reality it is the secret of the true artist's success, and especially so when the artist sings for posterity. The success of the operation of making a record lies in the artist's hands, so to speak; all the skill and mechanical appliances of the recorder are useless if the owner of the voice does not do his part. So, the more enthusiastically the singer enters into his work the better the record, and the more satisfying for the public. And if an artist be content today with his standard of yesterday, of what avail is all the progress on the manufacturing side?

"It is artists of the calibre of Mr. Alan Turner who, with their never-ending determination to do better, make the endeavors of those engaged in the mechanical improvement of records worth while.

"When Mr. Alan Turner entered into the glorious company of those whose mission it is to satiate the craving for home music, it was a day of days for music lovers. And how it came about is worth relating in due season. First a word as to our subject's career.

"Gifted with a love of every form of music, Alan Turner found pleasure in singing — found pleasure, though little if any pecuniary profit. At last he made up his mind to take a course of tuition, but at the same time formed a typical determination that he would not do anything of the kind except under one who came up to his definition of a good singer. Eventually, and this was about nine years ago, he went to the College of Music at Manchester, and there studied for a short time under Mr. Andrew Black. Beyond this tuition, Alan Turner can claim to be practically self-taught.

"Soon after this, the young singer came to London for the first time — he was a Manchester man by birth — and found but little difficulty in securing an engagement in comic opera. He toured on more than one occasion in 'The French Maid' and then accepted an offer to play principal baritone parts in the Moody-Manners Opera Company. Successive engagements took him to the Alhambra, and through both grand and comic opera. After his return from a South African tour with the Moody-Manners Opera Company, 1904-05, Mr. Alan Turner found it more profitable to devote his time to oratorio and concert singing, and was obliged to decline further contracts with the Moody-Manners Company, as well as to refuse an offer from the Carl Rosa Opera Company. That briefly is Mr. Alan Turner's stage career, except that we may add, in allusion to his versatility, that his scope extends from grand opera and arias down to the simple home ballad, his services being in constant demand for all three of these styles.

"What is your experience of recording?" we asked.

"Well, my experience has made it very easy. To sing in the way one would in public is, of course, not quite possible. While singing on the stage or concert platform, an artist can get whatever effects he feels are necessary for the proper interpretation of his song. But while singing for recording one must alter the manner of vocal production to suit the capabilities of the instrument and secure a record free from blasting. Then, though the actual art of recording is practically easy to me, the task itself is pretty hard work — at least I find it so. It takes more out of me than singing in the concert room or on the opera stage. When I have made, say, ten records I feel as if I had done as much work as would be required in a stiff role in grand opera. I make strong voice records, and when I have finished I feel I don't want any more singing."

"You are very emphatic, Mr. Turner," we said, as he paused.

"Am I? Perhaps it is because I have frequently observed the difference between singing to an audience I can see and one I cannot see. In the theatre one can feel what part holds the sympathy of the audience, and the feeling is such a decided incentive to taking pains. In making records there can be no encouragement except the cheque at the end. Seriously, however, the sympathy of the audience, which is so helpful to a public singer, is lacking in the business-like atmosphere of the recording room. Then the placement of the voice, which may sound so well in the theatre, may go wrong on a record. Mezzo-voice parts, of which I make a great point in my singing, cannot be given the same value in a record; their volume must be sensibly increased.

"Do you feel that your audiences are familiar with your work through the records you have made?" was our next question.

"Undoubtedly. Only a week or so back, a gentleman, in the course of conversation, remarked that he had heard me singing in Scotland a few days before. As I was not within a hundred miles of Scotland at that time this puzzled me, until it dawned upon me that he must be referring to some of my records. My best record? Let me see — well, in my own opinion, and from an artistic point of view, I select my Odeon record of 'In Happy Moments.' It is a simple ballad; still, as a work of art, I consider it the best I've done. 'For All Eternity'? No, your choice does not coincide with mine. 'For All Eternity' is a plain, straightforward piece of music, good of course, but without any scope for the expression of the singer's own individuality. 'Happy Moments,' on the other hand, offers scope for artistic handling, and from a singer's standpoint it is unquestionably the better record of the two."

"Does that selection also stand as your favorite in your entire repertory, Mr. Turner?"

"No, I think that of all I sing I like the Prologue from 'Pagliacci' as well as any. That essentially is one that enables an artist to infuse his own personality into his work."

"You record for both cylinders and discs. Which do you prefer for results?"

"An awkward question to answer. My Sterling cylinders are very natural and quite unmetallic in tone, while the Odeon discs undoubtedly yield results of power, brightness and vim. Perhaps discs are better suited to my voice, and I must say that the Odeon records are some of the best I have ever done, particularly the later ones. My opinion of talking machines? Well, they have come to stay, of that there can be no question. Indeed, it was because I at first believed it to be a passing craze that I resolutely declined to make a record until twelve months or so ago."

"Have you any suggestions to offer, Mr. Turner?"

"Suggestions? On the mechanical side of the talking machine — no, I must leave that to those whose business it is. Perhaps I may say a word to dealers on the speed at which they run records. Most of my records, for example, are intended to be run at a slow speed, but many dealers, unwittingly, no doubt, speed them high, which ruins them. It is a huge mistake to run all records at the same speed. It alters the colour and character of slow records, and in the dealer's own interests I would like to see this fact carefully impressed upon him. As a baritone my records should be played so that they sound like a baritone. I do not think I have anything to add to that."

"Mr. Alan Turner has made the following 'Sterling' and 'Odeon' Records, and others will of course be listed, month by month. Both cylinders and discs by Mr. Turner are good stock, and it is a noteworthy fact that once a customer has purchased these baritone records he is continually asking for more like them."

So ends the 68-year-old interview. I am not copying the list of Turner's Sterling and Odeon records, for the same information will be provided in the comprehensive list of his recordings which will end this series. However, Ernie Bayly added a footnote, which should be included:

"If the same song appears on both Odeon and Sterling, they would appear to have been made both at the same session, for Louis Sterling was at that period boss of Sterling and Chief English Agent for Odeon, so, once having the artist in the studio with the accompaniment, he made the most of the opportunity! I have checked several artists out where the song is the same, and the accompaniment sounds the same, as is the overall acoustic property. The duration of the song is often different, though."

Who wrote the Turner interview? Perhaps the author was Russell Hunting, who for a few years had edited and published an American talking machine trade paper, The Phonoscope, before leaving somewhat suddenly for England in 1899. No doubt, whoever the writer was, he has been dead for years. But, whatever his faults of style, I regard his interview as a treasure, for it reveals Alan Turner as a living, flesh and blood man, rather than a lifeless stiff-as-starch photo in ancient record catalogs. For this reason I am truly grateful to the unidentified author. At the same time a few points in his article appear to call for comment.

For instance, there is the reference to Turner's having taken vocal instruction from the famous Scotch baritone, Andrew Black, who preceded him by a few years as a prolific recording artist. Black was born in Glasgow January 15, 1859, and died in Sydney, Australia, where he settled in 1913, on September 15, 1920. He was a Gramophone and Typewriter Company recording standby from 1902 through 1906. Robert Bauer, who lived in Italy and compiled in the 1920's a reference book of vocal records that he considered historically important, listed 40 of Black's Gramophone discs.

Bauer also gave four of Turner's G&T records historical accreditation, though it is hard to see why he thought them more significant than discs of the same songs that the baritone had made for many other companies. They are: "In Happy Moments," "The Toreador Song"; "The Heart Bowed Down," and the 12-inch Pagliacci Prologue. He dates them all as being recorded in 1906.

The reference to the Moody-Manners Opera Company's touring South Africa makes me wonder if it returned by way of the United States and may have been responsible for Turner's visiting America in 1905 and beginning to record for one company after another. Possibly the troupe played some American engagements. The mention of Turner's having begun his stage career in comic opera reminds me that he was not a comedian and that, aside from taking part in a few Gilbert and Sullivan operatic excerpts, humor was alien to his repertoire, unless a couple of songs of World War I, which he recorded in 1918 for Victor's Canadian branch, may be considered in the comic category.

Another field in which Turner was sparsely represented is that of duet singing. He recorded just a few duets with English male singers and only one or two women. When singing in America, he did no duet work at all, (perhaps American and English accents would not have blended well!) but had the assistance of a male chorus in two or three of his Victor discs. It is amusing to have his opinion of the relative merits of "The Heart Bowed Down" and "Forever and Forever," both of which he must have recorded to the point of boredom, and it's good to know that he considered the Prologue one of the best numbers for the display of his artistic attainments.

Turner's statement that records should not all be played at the same speed would be wrong if all discs and cylinders of the various companies had been taken at identical speed, but it happens that he was right. British companies were more honest in this respect than American. The Gramophone Company, for instance, indicated in its catalogs when a selection had been recorded at other than 78, but Victor for many years advised customers to set their speed regulator for 78 revolutions and never to change it.

"You will, of course," the Victor catalogs said, "meet the man who insists on . . . changing the speed with each record he plays. Don't imitate him. He is wrong. Only at a speed of 78 can you hear the actual tones of the singer or player, just as they were recorded."

The truth is that until Victor adopted 78 as a standard speed in 1908, most of its records had been made at 76 or slower, and hundreds of the 76RPMs remained in the catalogs for years after the change-over. Moreover, in spite of all the later pious talk about 78 being the one right speed, individual artists were recorded differently. Billy Murray, for instance, told me that when he recorded the turntable was nearly always slowed to run at 75 or 76. Played at 78, the records he made at the slower speed sound flat and nasal. Run as they should be, his fine tenor voice emerges as its natural self. Therefore, Alan Turner knew what he was talking about and his advice to the dealers should have been heeded. And, although the interview said Turner declined an offer from the Carl Rosa Opera Company, we know that he was a member of that group in 1909.

IV. More Sterling History

In August, 1906, just as Alan Turner was beginning to be widely known as a recording artist in both England and the United States, the Talking Machine News published an article saying:

"Mr. Louis Sterling is to be Managing Director of the new Sterling and Hunting Company, Ltd. . . . An entirely new building will be erected in City Road to house the two companies (Sterling cylinders and Odeon discs), so that they may be under one roof. The new premises will be twice the size of the present ones. . . . The coming together of the two companies will mean the addition to the Odeon Repertoire of such artists as Eli Hudson, Harry Dearth, Ernest Pike, Hamilton Hill, J. C. Doyle, George Alexander, Will Terry, David Brazell, Mark Sheridan, W. G. Webber, Albert Whelan, Albert Pearce, Ben Albert, Harrison Latimer, Ernie Chester, and Misses Florie Forde, Gladys Roberts, Marguerite Broadfoote, Sheila McNeill and Madame Pasquali."

In the same issue, a review of Sterling cylinders said: "Among the vocal records will be found some of exceptional merit. This especially applies to Alan Turner, whose voice is full and clear with a charming, sympathetic ring."

It is a surprise to see the American baritone, George Alexander, listed as a Sterling artist, or artiste, whose services would now be available to Odeon, but Alexander, whose real name was Clifford Wiley appears to have gone to England on a record-making expedition, just as Turner periodically visited the States. I suspect, perhaps wrongly, that Marguerite Broadfoote was the Brooklyn-born operatic contralto who later became known as Eleonora De Cisneros, for I recall reading somewhere that the diva's family name was Broadfoote. During this same period a Sterling advertisement announced: "We have . . . English opera records and ballads by Mr. Alan Turner, the renowned operatic baritone."

In the September issue of the T. M. N. was published, under the heading of "A Correction," this letter from Louis Sterling:

"Sir: In your issue of August 1, page 275, you mention a number of artistes who will be added to the Odeon catalog, and amongst them are several, namely Ernest Pike, Hamilton Hill, Will Terry, Albert Whelan and Miss Florie Forde, who have exclusive contracts with the Gramophone and Typewriter, Ltd. We wish to explain that we can only add to the Odeon catalog artistes with whom we hold exclusive talking machine contracts, not exclusive cylinder contracts—namely Eli Hudson, Harry Dearth, David Brazell, Alan Turner, Ella Retford, etc. Yours truly, RUSSELL HUNTING RECORD CO., Ltd., Louis Sterling, Managing Director."

Again, it is puzzling to see Turner listed as exclusive to the Russell Hunting firm for all types of records, considering the fact that he had already done, and was to do, considerable singing for Victor and other American companies and, in England, for Gramophone. However, I believe I have previously suggested that the term "exclusive" may have applied only to his work in the British Isles and left him free to record for any or all companies in the States.

As was previously indicated, things went well with the Hunting and Sterling partnership for a couple of years, but then the Sterling cylinder met its death blow when the price of Edison two-minute cylinders was reduced, to be followed by introduction of the four-minute Amberol, and other firms cut the price of their "rollers" to ninepence.

In the November, 1908, Talking Machine News, two dealers, Herbert W. Holmes and G. Bowron, advertised they had bought the manufacturer's entire stock of 500,000 Sterling cylinders and were offering them, according to length, at five and six shillings per dozen. In December a news story said that Hunting had gone to Paris to take charge of Pathé recording activities, and Sterling had founded the Rena Record Company. (Rena discs were manufactured for Sterling by Columbia from that company's masters, but had different couplings than the Columbia and in some instances the names of artists were changed. They sold for two shillings and sixpence against Columbia's three shillings, but were the same quality, as the record buying public soon detected, to Columbia's damage. After a couple of years Columbia and Rena consolidated, and Sterling eventually became head of the English Columbia organization.)

The end of the Sterling Company's complex, troubled affairs was told in the T. M. N. for July, 1912, under the heading, "The Last of a Famous Company." I skip some uninteresting details of the proposed final settlement with creditors to quote:

" . . . The position of affairs will be placed before creditors at a meeting to be convened in a few week's time, and we understand that the final wind-up of this company will then soon follow. Reflection carries us back to the palmy days of 1905-06, when . . . the Russell Hunting Record Co., Ltd., was incorporated. The prime movers were Mr. Louis Sterling, now British manager of the Columbia Phonograph Co., Genl., and Mr. Russell Hunting, whose sphere of activity is mainly on the Continent as recording director for Messrs. Pathe Freres, Ltd. As a cylinder record, the Sterling . . . from the start made a pronounced success, and during the first two years of the company's existence handsome dividends were paid. Following on the reduction of the Edison record from 1s. 6d. to 1s., and the introduction of 9d. cylinder records, business declined so appreciably that the company were forced to consult their creditors."

Many of the Sterling artists, perhaps including Turner, had bought stock in the firm and were losers by its bankruptcy. As Ernie Bayly said, rights to the Sterling name were sold to Edison Bell, which issued some Sterling cylinders of E. B. manufacturer for a comparatively short time. Sterling's going out of business, of course, left Alan Turner free to record for all other English companies, and 1908 probably was the most active year of his record-making career.

(To be continued.)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

ALAN TURNER

PART V

By JIM WALSH

I. Turner's Records Reviewed

With a long list of Alan Turner's discs and cylinders waiting to conclude this series, I shall not undertake a comprehensive discussion of his English recordings or of the records he made in America for Victor after the introduction of the double-faced type. I shall especially avoid extended analysis of the English productions, since no matter what company he worked for, his recorded repertoire consisted largely of the same stereotyped songs.

Instead of giving endless detail about the various records, I shall quote reviews from English publications to indicate how highly he was regarded by the critics of his time. These comments should be of particular interest to American readers who believe that because of his relatively few operatic recordings Turner was not a singer of high artistic accomplishments.

But before quoting from the Talking Machine News and the Sound Wave, a few notes seem called for.

It is odd that Turner seems to have made no H. M. V. Gramophone records after 1908, his most active recording year, although he continued occasionally to sing for the lower-priced Gramophone affiliate, Zonophone, and, of course, made double-faced records consistently from 1908 through the early part of 1918 for the Gramophone Company's American associate, Victor.

His Pathé records were all made not later than 1910. Turner discs issued by Pathé's American branch were all taken from the original English matrices.

It is intriguing to find the "baritenor" in a 1913 list of Marathon records, although there are only two titles to his credit. Marathon was a hill-and-dale record with narrow grooves, played with a steel needle. It was the first real long play record. Running at a speed of 80, some of the 12-inch discs played for slightly more than eight minutes a side. I have the remains of one which, unfortunately, I broke, that played, counting both sides, for 16 minutes and 25 seconds. On one side Tom F. Kinniburgh, the Scottish basso, sang "True to Death" and "In Cellar Cool," for an aggregate of eight minutes and 25 seconds. On the other face, Kinniburgh favored with "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep" and "In Sheltered Vale" for exactly eight minutes. The basso also made a 10-inch Marathon of "The Bell-ringer" and "The Village Blacksmith," which played, respectively, six minutes and 40 seconds and five minutes and 45 seconds. The reproduction on the 12-inch I broke was excellent, with plenty of volume despite the fine cut.

VICTOR BOOK OF THE OPERA—IL TROVATORE

ACT I

SCENE I—Vestibule in Altafiera Palace

As befits a tragic work, Il Trovatore opens in an atmosphere of romance and mystery. The retainers of Count di Luna await the arrival of their master, and to beguile the time Fernando relates the history of the Count's childhood and the loss of his brother.

Abbiotta zingara (Swarthy and Threatening)

By Torres de Luna and La Scala Chorus (In Italian) *62416 10-inch, $0.75

The brother, as an infant, came under the evil eye of a witch, who was seized and condemned to the stake. This witch had a daughter, who determined to avenge her mother's fate, with the result that the Count's younger son disappeared; and after the witch's burning there was discovered upon the pile of charred embers the bones of a child. This story is told in the Abbiotta to a fierce rhythmical tune, expressing all shades of horror.

ALAN TURNER AS THE COUNT (COVER ARTIST: GUSTAVO, MILANO, ITALY, OPERA, CHICAGO OPERA, IL)

In the second part Ferrando concludes his narrative, which is mingled with the comments of the listeners, who tell of the reputed appearance of the witch in ghostly shape.

Sull' orlo dei tetti (As a Vampire You May See Her)

By Torres de Luna,
Basso, and La Scala
Chorus

*16655 10-inch, $0.75

To the voice of the narrator is added the awe-stricken whispers of the chorus, which afterwards swell into a cry of fierce denunciation. The foreboding bell and an instru-

FERRANDO:
With two sons, heirs of fortune and affection,
Liv'd the Count in enjoyment;
Watching the younger for his safe protection
A good nurse found employment.
One morning, as the dawn's first rays were shining,
From her pillow she rose—
Who was found, think ye, near the child reclining?
(Impressively.)
Sat there a gypsy hag, witch-like appearing;
Of her dark mysteries, strange symbols wearing.
O'er the babe sleeping—with fierce looks bending,
Gaz'd she upon him, black deeds intending!
Horror profound seized the nurse at that dark vision;
And the dark intruder was soon expelled.
Soon they found the child was fading,
Coming darkness appal'd him,
The hag's dark spell enthral'd him!
(All appear horrified.)
Sought they the gypsy, on all sides turning,
Seiz'd and condemn'd her to death by burning.
One child, accursed, left she remaining,
Quick to avenge her, no means disclaiming.
Thus she accomplished her dark retribution!
Lost was the Count's child; search unavailing!
But on the site of the hag's execution
They found, 'mid the embers,
The bones of a young infant,
Half consumed and burning!

LARGE IL TROVATORE ACT I, SCENE II

*Double-Faced Record—See page 530

520

IN OPERA COSTUME—Photos of Alan Turner enacting operatic roles appear to be scarce. The one shown here is taken from the 1915 edition of the Victor Book of the Opera and depicts Turner as the grotesquely garbed Count di Luna in Il Trovatore.

Since Tom Kinniburgh has been brought into this, I believe it well to mention that Quentin Riggs has learned from an English friend, George Frow, that the basso is still alive, living in Hampshire on the Southern coast of England, and sometimes goes to London to visit the Savage Club, for members of the theatrical profession. The December, 1910, Talking Machine News said that the then young singer had "seen only 24 summers," which, according to my arithmetic, means he is now 89. He had a long career and I am sure could be made the subject of an interesting article.

Back to Alan Turner: Although his recording activity in England tapered off after 1908 without ending completely, many discs sung by him were issued, on low-priced labels, from 1912 to 1914 by a conglomerate of German firms that were trying to take over the English record market by unscrupulous methods. They appear to have obtained matrices, some badly worn, of records Turner had made years before for other companies and represented them as new recordings. These German-origin records constitute much of the latter portion of the list of his discs.

Now let's turn to the reviews of Turner's Sterling cylinders of the 1907 period. The Talking Machine News said of "I Fear No Foe": "Powerful and impressive. A faultless record," and of "The Old Lock": "His tenor (!) rings out clear and pure." "Ora Pro Nobis" was described as "without a fault" and "Thy Sentinel Am I" as "A fine record. The strong even tone of the singer and the passionate fervor with which he renders some of the passage makes this record equal to any operatic cylinder we have heard."

A year or so later Turner's Columbia record of "The Rosary" was said to be "impressively sung . . . Mr. Turner, who was a success from the start as a maker of records, may be considered one of the best of our baritone vocalists." Of a Columbia double-faced coupling of two Turner standbys, Schubert's "Serenade" and Tosti's "Venetian Song," the critic observed:

"Alan Turner, baritone, is responsible for two particularly fine records . . . Lovers of good vocalization will appreciate the splendid timbre of his recording of the Serenade, whilst the Venetian Song is given with a verve which it would be difficult to excel."

Concerning a Pathé double of those perennial Turner war horses, "The Heart Bowed Down" and "Forever and Forever," the verdict was: "His fine baritone voice was never heard to better advantage than in these."

In October, 1910, the Sound Wave said of Turner's Beka record of "The Toreador Song":

"Mr. Alan Turner, one of our foremost English baritones, gives a spirited rendering of this, the most famous vocal number in 'Carmen' — that is to say, in the aspect of popular appreciation. He is recorded in a splendidly vigorous manner."

In the January, 1913, Talking Machine Review, Turner's Edison Bell Velvet Face coupling of "The Distant Shore" and good old "In Happy Moments" drew this eulogium:

"Mr. Turner needs no trumpeter nowadays. Just listen to the familiar air from 'Mariana' and mark the finished vocalist that is shown there. His resonant baritone voice is equally well suited to both of these popular ballads. When he bids his sweetheart to be of good cheer in the former title, the words would carry comforting conviction to the most callous heart of maiden; and the reminiscently effective words from Wallace's opera are cleverly sung. Both standard titles, and both worthy of any phono collection, in our opinion."

Then, to conclude this brief review of reviews, in March, 1913, the T. M. N. although again referring to Turner as a tenor, said of his Marathon discs of "John Peel" and "The Farmer's Boy" — two much less hackneyed songs than he usually sang:

"In these old-world favorite songs, Mr. A. Turner gives us an intelligent interpretation that will give him a hearty welcome to lovers of the old ballads."

In March, 1913, referring to his 12-inch Velvet Face record of "The Wolf" and "The White Squall," the comment was:

"Mr. Turner sings with spontaneity of feeling and reliance which places him in the foremost rank of baritones."

Within another year came World War I and, as I said earlier, I have been unable to find that Turner made any British recordings during that four-year period or was even in England. My unconfirmed belief is that he probably stayed in the United States and Canada for the duration of the conflict.

II. Double-Faced Victors

Turner's double-faced Victor records may be dismissed with a minimum of verbiage. His first, which was announced in the October, 1908, list of the first 125 Victor double-faced discs, was No. 16006, "The White Squall," which we have just seen the T. M. N. writer reviewing in its Velvet Face form. It was coupled with "The Standard o' the Braes o' Mar," sung by Harold Jarvis, the Detroit tenor. Both these British numbers were unfamiliar to the great majority of Americans, and the disc was probably Turner's poorest selling Victor record. It stayed in the catalog through 1912, but I have never seen a copy of it and don't know of anyone else who has.

Following "The White Squall" came a long list of other double-faced Turner numbers issued in 1909-10, but these were all couplings of his earlier single-faced records until "The Yeoman's Wedding Song" was issued in 1912. And then, for the next few years, appeared a long list of standard titles in the Turner repertoire—such things as "Oh, Promise Me," "For All Eternity," "Forever and Forever," "I Fear No Foe," "The Rosary" and "The Evening Star." The two latter titles, formerly single-faced, were coupled on No. 17446 and the record was a consistently good seller. In 1924, however, Victor had Royal Dadmun remake it under the name of Ralph Crane — the only Turner record to be done over by another singer.

In 1917, the British baritone sang an Irving Berlin song hit written in slow waltz time, "How Can I Forget (When There's So Much to 'Remember?)" and in 1918 he recorded two popular numbers of World War I, "There's a Green Hill Out in Flanders," and "When the Great Red Dawn Is Shining," which someone has said is "the perfect title for a popular song." I was startled when I observed that he had also recorded "There's a Long, Long Trail" and "Red Dawn" for the Long Trail and "Red Dawn" for the small Federal company, which was still making Indestructible cylinders, although they were sold almost entirely through mail order catalogs. During this final period of the war, he seems to have been doing more recording for Canadian Victor than for the parent company in the States, and virtually all his Canadian discs were of a type not usually associated with the Turner name; for instance, "Hit the Trail to Mother," "When the Bonnie, Bonnie Heather is Blooming," "Up in the Air Over There" and "Good Bye—ee!" After that, so far as new records were concerned, Alan Turner's name disappeared from record lists, both here and abroad.

When electrical recording took over in 1925, all Victor Turner recordings were dropped, even though most had been excellent sellers. Two years later, however, Victor had received so many calls for the return of favorite acoustically recorded numbers to its catalog that it issued a booklet of records of Historic and Personal Interest . . . restored to the public by the public's own demand." It seems very scarce nowadays. The following were "restored" and remained available through special order for a year or two, although they were not reinstated in the yearly record catalog: 16404, "Kathleen Mavourneen"; 17536, "O Sole Mio" and "La Paloma"; 17564, "Crossing the Bar," and 18352, "How Can I Forget?" "The Rosary" and "The Evening Star" also came back, but in the Ralph Crane version.

While I was busy upon an earlier portion of this Alan Turner story, I received a letter from a New Hampshire HOBBIES reader, Robert B. Stone, who had learned that I was writing about the baritone. Unfortunately, I can't find that letter, but I recall that Bob expressed his pleasure at the prospect of reading about Turner, whom he praised as an operatic singer of high rank. I remember too, he said that Turner had deserved to be a Victor Red Seal artist as much as "Emilio De Gorgonzola" — a statement with which I agree.

When I replied, confirming the report that I would soon have a Turner series ready to publish, Bob wrote again, with a quoted comment of something so amusing that I feel I must get it into print before saying farewell to Alan Turner, the man and the musician:

"... Except for the photograph in the Victor catalog, the only picture of Turner I have ever seen is in the Victor Book of the Opera. In the role of the Count di Luna in Il Trovatore. In an article on how not to stage Trovatore, Bernard Shaw writes:

"There is only one costume possible for the Count di Luna. He must wear a stiff violet velvet tunic, white satin tights, velvet shoes, and a white turban hat, with a white puggaree falling on a white cloak. No other known costume can remove its wearer so completely from a common humanity. No man could sit down in such a tunic and such tights; for the vulgar realism of sitting down is ten times more impossible for the Count di Luna than for the Venus of Milo."

Then Mr. Stone comments:

"Turner must have read that description and taken it literally, for that is a perfect inventory of his costume as the count, except that the puggaree is dark. Meanwhile, I await your articles with ill-concealed impatience."

After that, I'm going to have to consult the dictionary and find out what the heck a puggaree is! I found the photograph of Turner of which Bob Stone speaks in the 1915 Victor Book of the Opera and am submitting it in the hope that it can be reproduced herewith.

I also trust this series has interested some HOBBIES readers in the life and recordings of Alan Turner, and I especially hope that if any reader in England, or anywhere else, knows anything about him that I have been unable to learn, he will write and tell me, so that the information may be shared later with other Turner admirers. Next month we will print the list, as comprehensive as I was able to make it, of the Alan Turner recordings.

— 0 —

Since this article was submitted, Quentin Riggs has written to Tom Kinniburgh, but his letter, I am sorry to report, was returned, marked "deceased." I had hoped the venerable basso was still living.

And Dame Eva Turner has written me that there were "quite a few errors" in the references to her in a preceding installment. She says her birthday was March 10, 1892, and not October 10, 1898, as it was printed. Her teacher was Edgardo Levi, not Levy, and her maestro was Albert Richards-Broad, not Broads. She also never studied in Italy.

"I went to audition in 1924," she says "at La Scala, for Mon. Toscanini, Panizza and Gui, the conductors at that time. I was engaged for the following season at La Scala. I was never a licentiate of the Royal Academy of Music, but I am a Fellow, as I am of the Royal College of Music and an Honorary of the Guildhall School of Music and Drama."

I apologize to Dame Eva for the errors, which were not primarily faults of my own. The erroneous statements were taken from Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians, supposed to be the most authoritative work of its kind, and from a book of musical biographies, but I sincerely regret them.

(To be continued)

THE CURIOUS HISTORY OF MUSIC BOXES

Tells: About the first automatic musical instrument in wide use. How the music box was finally invented. Describes and illustrates great rarities in mechanical musicology, such as: action scene pocket watches, music playing watches, musical snuff boxes, musical dolls, clocks, singing birds, plus all types of cylinder and disc music boxes. There is a checklist of U.S. patents and manufacturers plus a bibliography. 242 pages with 133 halftone illustrations. 9 x 12" Hard-bound.

STILL ONLY $5.00 POSTPAID
Order from:

Lightner Publishing Corp.
1006 SO. MICHIGAN
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS 60605

World's Largest Selection of MUSIC BOXES!

Music boxes! Nickelodeon pianos! Circus organs! Reproducing pianos! Orchestrons! Hundreds of antique automatic musical instruments for sale at wholesale prices. Send $2 for a fascinating large illustrated catalog. You've never seen another catalog like it! Satisfaction guaranteed. Or, send $10 for subscription to next six issues. Over 500 instruments are now in stock—the world's largest selection. Complete facilities for low cost shipping to you from our American or European warehouses (our European office is directed by Claes O. Friberg, Mekanisk Musik Museum, Vesterbrogade 150, Copenhagen, Denmark). Our network of buyers in America and in Europe give you the best selection at lowest prices—there are no middlemen or agents to pay. It is no wonder that we are America's and Europe's main wholesale source. Our California showroom is open Wednesday—Saturday 9 A.M. to noon and 1 to 4 P.M. Visit us the next time you are in the Los Angeles area. A wonderland of instruments awaits you! We can also supply the seven-pound, 1,008-page, illustrated "Encyclopedia of Automatic Musical Instruments" for $30 postpaid—the standard reference book in the field. Over 7,000 copies sold. Satisfaction guaranteed. For the best deal in buying or selling automatic musical instruments think of us. Directors of American International Galleries are: Terry Hathaway, Claes O. Friberg, Bonnie Tekstra, and Q. David Bowers.

American International Galleries

1717A Stanford St.—Dept. J
Santa Monica, Cal. 90404
Tel. (213) 828-2886 jec

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

OLD FLUTES—Wood, Metal. Description, manufacturer, photo. — Kornblit, 902 Frostwood, Houston, Texas jcl2639

USED MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS — Bought — Sold — Iammarino, 9265 S.W. 43rd St., Miami, Fla. 33165 d12639

PHONOGRAPHS

PHONOGRAPHS repaired: New spare parts for Edison phonographs. Send stamp for list. Phone: (201) 748-8046. — Gerichten, 23 Waldo, Ave., Bloomfield, N.J. 07003 jly124851

"DIRECTORY OF Phonograph and Record Collectors," lists 250 collectors and their wants. $3.50 postpaid, satisfaction guaranteed. Two stamps for free list of antique phonograph catalogs, books, magazines. — Allen H. Koenigsberg, 3400 Snyder, Brooklyn, N.Y. 11203 mh66921

MISCELLANEOUS MUSICAL

THEATRE Pipe Organ Nostalgia—Memorabilia Wanted. — Alden Miller, 3212 34th Avenue South, Minneapolis, Minn. 55406 jcl20801

ANTIQUE MUSIC BOXES & PHONOGRAPHS REPAIRED

MISSING PARTS CUSTOM MADE

IN OUR MACHINE SHOP

MIKE EVERETT

Machine 1144 E. Washington Blvd.

(312) 629-0608 Lombard, Ill. 60148 jep

PRESENTING MISS ADA JONES

"First Lady of the Phonograph"

Comedienne, Master of Dialects, Renowned Pioneer Recording Artist, in an HOUR LONG CONCERT of stellar performances from 1904 to 1922, NARRATED by Miss Jones' devoted researcher, Mr. Milford Fargo.

A MARVELOUS PROGRAM for your enjoyment. Please specify reel/reel or cassette . . . either is $6, postpaid.

MERRITT SOUND RECORDING

223 Grimsby Road
Buffalo, New York 14223

(Will Oakland 50th Anniversary
Still Available) mhc

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Re feathered

Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806 tfc

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

ALAN TURNER

PART VI

By JIM WALSH

TURNER SUCCESSOR — The late Royal Dadmun, famous American baritone, made over in 1924 one of Alan Turner's most popular discs, which combined "The Rosary" and "The Evening Star," from Tannhauser. Dadmun's re-make was issued under the assumed name of Ralph Crane.

VICTOR SINGLE-FACED

(All records 10-inch, except those with numbers beginning with 31, which are 12-inch) (also made in 8-inch.)

- 4567 Bohemian Girl—The Heart Bowed Down
- 4676 The Rosary.
- 4903 Maritana—In Happy Moments.
- 5336 Tannhauser—The Evening Star.
- 5342 Rule Britannia (with male chorus.)
- 5350 Venetian Song.
- 5351 Goodbye, Sweetheart. Goodbye.
- 5359 Pagliacci—Prologue.
- 5376 Carmen—Toreador Song.
- 5413 Brown Eyes.
- 5428 The Maple Leaf Forever.
- 5479 God Save the King.
- 5564 Trovatore—Tempest of the Heart.
- 5610 Annie Laurie.
- 5611 Girls of Gottenburg—Here's to the Girl (with Hayden Quartet)
- 5658 Kathleen Mavourneen
- 31481 I'll be Waiting in the Gloaming. Sweet Genevieve.
- 31495 The Village Blacksmith.
- 31565 There is a Green Hill Far Away.
- 31690 Faust—The Bravest Heart May Swell.
- 31693 As Long as the World Rolls On.
- 31699 Lily of Killarney—The Colleen Bawn.
- 31718 Some Day (with Hayden Quartet).
- 31719 Thy Sentinel Am I.

VICTOR DOUBLE-FACED.

(All are 10-inch except those numbers beginning with 35, which are 12-inch.)

- 16006 The White Squall. Reverse: Standard o' the Braes o' Mar (Harold Jarvis).
- 16134 Rule Britannia. Reverse: God Save the King.
- 16157 Pagliacci—Prologue. Reverse: Brown Eyes.
- 16289 Dorothy—Queen of My Heart. Reverse: Come Back to Erin (Hayden Quartet).
- 16404 Kathleen Mavourneen. Reverse: Tenting on the Old Camp Ground (Hayden Quartet.)
- 16407 Bohemian Girl—The Heart Bowed Down. Reverse: Trovatore—Home to Our Mountains (Corinne Morgan and Harry Macdonough.)
- 16417 Venetian Song. Reverse: The Wanderer's Night Song (Frank C. Stanley and Henry Burr).
- 16521 Carmen—Toreador Song. Reverse: Trovatore—Tempest of the Heart.
- 16552 Maritana—In Happy Moments. Reverse: Faust—Kermesse Waltz Scene. (Arthur Pryor's Band.)
- 16675 Annie Laurie. Reverse: Roses in June (Reed Miller.)
- 17182 Yeoman's Wedding Song. Reverse: Song of Steel (Wilfred Glenn.)
- 17189 Robin Hood—Oh, Promise Me. Reverse: Dearie (Elsie Baker.)
- 17190 Arrow and the Song. Reverse: The Lass With the Delicate Air (Olive Kline.)
- 17234 For All Eternity. Reverse: The Rosary (John Barnes Wells.)
- 17273 Thy Beaming Eyes. Reverse: When I Know That Thou Art Near (Elsie Baker and Frederick Wheeler.)
- 17288 Forever and Forever. Reverse: My Laddie (Sue Harvard.)
- 17301 Absence. Reverse: Ritournelle.
- 17304 The Maple Leaf Forever. Reverse: Canadian National Airs Medley March (Sousa Band).
- 17422 I Fear No foe. Reverse: Thy Sentinel Am I.
- 17446 The Rosary. Reverse: Tannhauser — The Evening Star.
- 17473 Bedouin Love Song. Reverse: In Old Madrid (Frederick Wheeler.)
- 17536 O Sole Mio. Reverse: La Paloma.
- 17564 Crossing the Bar. Reverse: One Sweetly Solemn Thought (Elsie Baker.)
- 17933 Juanita. Reverse: 'Tis Not True.
- 18352 How Can I Forget? Reverse: Just As Your Mother Was (Henry Burr).
- 18411 There's a Green Hill Out in Flanders. Reverse: Say a Prayer for the Boys Out There (Peerless Quartet.)
- 18415 When the Great Red Dawn is Shining. Reverse: When You Come Home (Elizabeth Spencer).

- 5100 In Happy Moments. Reverse: The Heart Bowed Down.
- 5383 I'll Sing Thee Songs of Araby. Reverse: I'll Be Waiting in the Gloaming. Sweet Genevieve.
- 5384 Yeoman's Wedding Song. Reverse: Love's Old Sweet Song.
- 5442 Let Me Love Thee. Reverse: Tannhauser—the Evening Star (Thomas Chalmers).
- 40112 Pro Peccatis. Reverse: Il Profeta—Sopra Betra. l'amor mio (Orazio Cosetino, tenor).

PATHE RECORDS ISSUED IN AMERICA (11½-inch, 1914.)

- 937 Maritana—In Happy Moments. Reverse: Bohemian Girl—The Heart Bowed Down.
- 961 Star Of My Life. Reverse: Let Me Love Thee.
- 963 Goodbye, Sweetheart, Good Bye. Reverse: Carmen—Toreador Song.
- 5175 The Distant Shore. Reverse: The Irish Emigrant.
- 5176 The Rosary. Reverse: O Lovely Night.

PATHE RECORDS (1918.)

All 12-inch except 10027, 10-inch.

- 10027 Bohemian Girl—The Heart Bowed Down. Reverse: Goodbye, Sweetheart, Goodbye.
- 30062 Star of My Life. Reverse: Let Me Love Thee.
- 30063 Goodbye, Sweetheart, Goodbye. Reverse: Carmen—Toreador Song.
- 30073 The Distant Shore. Reverse: The Irish Emigrant.
- 30074 The Rosary. Reverse: O Lovely Night. (NOTE.—The second group of recordings is evidently the same as the first except that the numbers have been changed. "In Happy Moments" has been dropped, and "Goodbye, Sweetheart," issued in two sizes.)

EDISON TWO-MINUTE STANDARD CYLINDERS

- 7010 Love's Old Sweet Song
- 9291 Maritana—In Happy Moments.
- 9843 Goodbye, Sweetheart, Goodbye.
- 9876 Dorothy—Queen of the Earth.

EDISON FOUR-MINUTE AMBEROL CYLINDER

- 246 For All Eternity.
- EDISON FOUR-MINUTE BLUE AMBEROL CYLINDERS
- 1640 Venetian Song.
- 2227 Carmen—Toreador Song.

INDESTRUCTIBLE TWO-MINUTE CYLINDERS (1908-10)

- 685 For All Eternity.
- 686 Maritana—In Happy Moments.
- 951 Goodbye, Sweetheart, Goodbye.
- 975 Beauty's Eyes.
- 999 Bohemian Girl—The Heart Bowed Down.
- 1007 Carmen—Toreador Song.
- 1029 O Promise Me.
- 1071 Dorothy—Queen of the Earth.
- 1218 Let Me Love Thee.

INDESTRUCTIBLE FOUR-MINUTE CYLINDERS (1918)

- 3412 There's a Long, Long Trail.
- 3421 When the Great Red Dawn is Shining.
- COLUMBIA 10-INCH SINGLE FACED (1908)
- 3947 Love's Old Sweet Song.

COLUMBIA 10-INCH DOUBLE FACED (1909)

- A607 Bohemian Girl—The Heart Bowed Down. Reverse: I Love You as the Roses Love the Dew (Frank C. Stanley and Henry Burr).
- A609 Love's Old Sweet Song. Reverse: Elfin Dance (Jaroslav Kocian, violin).
- A659 For All Eternity. Reverse: I'll Sing Thee Songs of Araby.
- A669 Blow, Blow, Thou Winter Wind. Reverse: Venetian Song.
- A671 Serenade (Schubert.) Reverse—Attila —Praise Ye (Metropolitan Mixed Trio).

IMPERIAL 10-inch single-faced (1907-08)

- *45545 Maritana—In Happy Moments
- *45553 For All Eternity

- 35062 Pagliacci—Prologue. Reverse: Come Into the Garden, Maud (Jarvis.)
- 35010 The Village Blacksmith. Reverse: Song of a Heart (Percy Hemus.)
- 35011 As Long as the World Rolls On. Reverse: I'll Be Waiting in the Gloaming.
- 35049 The Lost Chord. Reverse: There is a Green Hill Far Away.
- 35061 Anchored. Reverse: Aida—Celeste Aida (John Finnegan.)
- 35259 Till the Sands of the Desert Grow Cold. Reverse: Beautiful Isle of the Sea (Frank Combs.)
- 35310 Anchored. Reverse: The Diver (Wilfred Glenn.)

CANADIAN VICTOR (1914-1918)

- 17565 We're from Canada. Reverse: Strike for the Grand Old Flag.
- 216020 Take Me Back to Dear Old Blighty. Reverse: Sussex By the Sea.
- 216026 Hit the Trail to Mother. Reverse: When the Bonnie, Bonnie Heather is Blooming I'll Return, Annie Laurie to You.
- 216037 Up in the Air Over There. Reverse: Good Bye-ee!
- 216040 My Ain Folk. Reverse: Mickey (Henry Burr).

AMERICAN (March, 1906)

- 031306 Veronique—Letter Song. 10-inch single faced

10-INCH AMERICAN ZONOPHONE (1906-08)

- 411 I'll Be Waiting in the Gloaming. Sweet Genevieve
- 413 Maritana—In Happy Moments
- 449 Bohemian Girl—The Heart Bowed Down
- 469 I'll Sing Thee Songs of Araby
- 533 Give Me Thy Hand, Love
- 598 Yeoman's Wedding Song
- 946 Love's Old Sweet Song
- 1209 Let Me Love Thee
- 12594 Stabat Mater—Pro peccatis (sung in Latin)

AMERICAN ZONOPHONE 10-inch double-faced (1903)

45556 Tannhauser—Star of Eve.
 45560 Carmen—Toreador Song
 45561 I Fear No Foe
 45575 Let Me Love Thee, Mary
 45585 Goodbye, Sweetheart, Goodbye
 ("accompanied by Imperial Symphony Orchestra")
 45604 The Rosary
 45605 Forgotten
 45607 Out on the Deep
 (Records marked * were described as unusually loud and "specially made for outdoor use.")

LEEDS 10-inch single-faced

4170 Tannhauser—Evening Star.
 4171 Still As the Night. (It is not certain these are by Turner.)

PURITAN (PARAMOUNT) 10-inch double-faced (1920)

9021 Oh, Promise Me. Reverse: Come Where My Love Lies Dreaming (Peerless Quartet).

INTERNATIONAL 10-inch single-faced (1906)

3026 Down the Vale
 3027 Schubert's Serenade
 3028 The Heart Bowed Down
 3029 Oh, Promise Me
 3126 Love's Old Sweet Song
 3127 Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep
 3128 The Village Blacksmith
 3172 I Fear No Foe
 3173 Toreador Song
 3174 Bedouin Love Song

OPERAPHONE 8-inch double-faced hill-and-dale (1916)

1055 Heart Bowed Down. Reverse: Melody in F (cello solo by Altschulter).
 2009 Heart Bowed Down. Reverse: Celeste Aida (Charles Harrison).
 1050 The Bandolero. Reverse: Thais—Meditation (Fred Landau, violin).
 1057 Maple Leaf Forever. Reverse: One Wonderful Night (O'Connell and Bliss).
 1064 Banjo Song. Reverse: Overture Isabella (Concert Band).
 1077 Pagliacci—Prologue. Reverse: Tannhauser—Evening Star.
 1080 Lost Chord. Reverse: Venetian Song.
 ROYAL 10-inch double-faced (1908)
 140 The Soldier's Song. Reverse: unidentified number by Peerless Quartet.

REN 10-inch hill-and-dale (1916)

5291 Bedouin Love Song. Reverse: When Shadows Gather (Charles Harrison).

STERLING CYLINDERS (1906-1908)

507 In Happy Moments
 508 Love's Old Sweet Song
 525 Schubert's Serenade
 526 The Heart Bowed Down
 534 Toreador Song
 535 Star Of My Life
 555 For All Eternity
 556 O, Promise Me
 568 Queen of the Earth
 601 Bid Me to Love
 602 Soldier's Song
 645 Star Of My Soul
 673 Rose Of My Heart
 674 Killarney
 767 Let Me Love Thee
 772 I Fear No Foe
 813 The Old Lock
 831 Some Day
 832 Colleen Bawn
 857 The Irish Emigrant
 858 Thy Sentinel Am I
 865 Blow, Blow, Thou Wintry Wind
 878 Ora Pro Nobis
 879 Maritana—My Courage Now Regaining
 889 Goodbye, Sweetheart
 894 Brown Eyes
 908 A Dream of Paradise
 909 Face to Face
 912 Dream Faces
 938 Close to the Threshold
 950 Pinafore—The Englishman's Song (with Harry Dearth and Chorus)
 968 Mona
 971 At the Ferry
 998 A Dream of Paradise
 1003 River of Years

ODFON 10 1/2 double-faced discs (1907-10)

A379 Maritana—In Happy Moments. Reverse: The Geisha—Star of My Soul (Sidney Jones)
 551 Queen of the Earth. Reverse: Star of My Life.
 563 For All Eternity. Reverse: Bohemian Girl—The Heart Bowed Down.
 564 Serenade (Schubert). Reverse: Oh, Promise Me.
 636 Bid me to Love. Reverse: Killarney.
 A405 The Irish Emigrant. Reverse: The Old Lock.
 672 Honor and Arms. Reverse: The Deathless Army.
 A244 I Fear No Foe. Reverse: Thy Sentinel Am I.
 A168 Let Me Love Thee. Reverse: Venetian Song.
 611 A Soldier's Song. Reverse: Carmen—Toreador Song.

H. M. V. GRAMOPHONE

10-inch single-faced (1906-08)

3-2453 Maritana—In Happy Moments.
 3-2455 Carmen—Toreador Song.
 3-2477 Bohemian Girl—The Heart Bowed Down.
 3-2785 Love's Old Sweet Song.
 3-2945 Venetian Song.
 4455 Waltz Dream—Piccolo. Piccolo (duet with Eleanor Jones Hudson).
 4456 Waltz Duet from "The Waltz Dream." (with Ernest Pike).
 4473 Pinafore—Now Give Three Cheers.
 4477 Pinafore—Never Mind the Whys and Wherefores (with Eleanor Jones-Hudson and Thorpe Bates).
 4479 Pinafore—In Uttering a Reprobation.
 12-inch single-faced (issued February, 1907)
 02081 Pagliacci—Prologue.

10-inch double-faced

B340 Waltz Duet from "A Waltz Dream" (with Ernest Pike). Reverse: Trovatore—Miserere (Jones-Hudson and Pike).
 B437 Pinafore—Now Give Three Cheers. Reverse: Pinafore—Chorus.
 B439 Pinafore—Never Mind the Whys and Wherefores (with Jones-Hudson and Bates). Reverse: Things Are Seldom What They Seem (Amy Augarde and Thorpe Bates).
 B440 Pinafore—In Uttering a Reprobation. Reverse: Kind Captain (Peter Dawson and Thorpe Bates).

ENGLISH ZONOPHONE

10-inch single-faced (1908)

X42641 For All Eternity.
 X42654 Hearts of Oak.
 X42655 For All Eternity.
 X42746 Goodbye, Sweetheart, Goodbye.
 X42748 Brown Eyes

ENGLISH ZONOPHONE

10-inch double-face (1913-14)

3 Queen of the Earth. Reverse: Star of My Soul.
 509 For All Eternity. Reverse: Hearts of Oak.
 510 In Happy Moments. Reverse: Goodbye, Sweetheart, Goodbye.

TWIN 10-inch double-face (1908)

22 Revenge. Reverse: A Father's Love.

ENGLISH COLUMBIA

10-inch single-face (1908)

26427 The Rosary.
 26430 Blow, Blow, Thou Winter Wind.

ENGLISH COLUMBIA

10-inch double-face (1908)

D105 Schubert's Serenade. Reverse: Venetian Song.
 D214 Oh, Hear the Wild Wind Blow. Reverse: Blow, Blow, Thou Winter Wind.
 D252 Beauty's Eyes. Reverse: The Rosary.
 D272 For All Eternity. Reverse: The Heart Bowed Down.

REGAL 10-inch double-face (1914)

G6295 Love's Old Sweet Song. Reverse: The Heart Bowed Down.

RENA 10-inch double-face (1908)

1038 Serenade. Reverse: Venetian Song.
 1039 Oh! Oh! Hear the Wild Wind Blow. Reverse: Blow, Blow, Thou Winter Wind.
 1130 Love's Old Sweet Song. Reverse: The Heart Bowed Down.

PATHE 8 1/2-inch double-faced (1908)

1468 Star of Eve. Reverse: For All Eternity.
 1489 Star of My Life. Reverse: Let Me Love Thee.
 1490 Thy Sentinel Am I. Reverse: O Promise Me.
 1491 Goodbye, Sweetheart, Goodbye. Reverse: Toreador Song.

PATHE 10 1/2-inch (October, 1908)

961 Let Me Love Thee. Reverse: Star of My Life.
 962 Thy Sentinel Am I. Reverse: O Promise Me.
 963 Goodbye, Sweetheart, Goodbye. Reverse: Toreador Song.
 S002 Heart Bowed Down. Reverse: For All Eternity.

PATHE 10 1/2-inch, (February, 1918)

20835 The Rosary. Reverse: O Lovely Night.

DIAMOND double faced, vertical cut (Jan., 1915)

067 The Heart Bowed Down. Reverse: Goodbye, Sweetheart, Goodbye

MARATHON 12-inch hill-and-dale "Packman" cut (February, 1913)

204 Auld Lang Syne. Reverse: Miner's Dream of Home (F. Gregory)
 226 John Peel. Reverse: The Farmer's Boy

FAMOUS 10-inch double-faced (1914)

320 Mother Machree. Reverse: It's a Long, Long Way to Tipperary (Jack Charman).
 324 Irish Emigrant. Reverse: Soldier's Song.
 325 Venetian Song. Reverse: For All Eternity.

HOMOPHONE 12-inch double-faced

(October, 1913)

2052 Queen of My Heart. Reverse: In Happy Moments.

HOMOPHONE 10-inch double-faced (1908)

409 Oh, Promise Me. Reverse: Venetian Song
 410 Annie Laurie. Reverse: Love's Old Sweet Song
 414 I Fear No Foe. Reverse: Brown Eyes
 415 There is a Green Hill Far Away. Reverse: Land of Hope and Glory
 416 Tannhauser—Star of Eve. Reverse: Toreador Song
 417 Out on the Deep. Reverse: Lost Chord
 418 Glorious Devon. Reverse: Hear the Wild Winds Blow
 425 Excelsior. Reverse: Life's Dream is O'er (Duets with Fred Wilson)
 433 Let Me Love Thee. Reverse: Bohemian Girl—Heart Bowed Down (Harry Thornton)
 437 Friendship. Reverse: Love and War (Duets with Fred Wilson)

HOMOCORD (In July, 1914, 11st)

G4005 Annie Laurie. Reverse: Loch Lomond (Leo Stormont.)

4225 Land of Hope and Glory. Reverse: Star of Eve.

LYCEUM 10-inch (October, 1913)

079. The Heart Bowed Down. Reverse: Toreador Song.

PELICAN 10-inch (October, 1913, 11st)

P43. Until. Reverse: Your Eyes Have Told Me So.

P47. O Star of Eve. Reverse: In Happy Moments.

PIONEER 10-inch double-face (1913)

B11 Your Eyes Have Told Me So. Reverse: When the Convent Bell is Ringing (Robert Carr).
 B13 Until. Reverse: Queen of the Earth.
 B18 She is Far From the Land. Reverse: Love's Old Sweet Song.
 B20 Toreador Song. Reverse: Yeoman's Wedding Song.
 B22 Star of Eve. Reverse: In Happy Moments.
 B24 Star of Bethlehem. Reverse: The Rosary (Carr).
 B25 For All Eternity. Reverse: When Dull Care (Tom F. Kinniburgh).
 B28 For All Eternity. Reverse: My Dreams (Gwilyn Richards).
 B35 Venetian Song. Reverse: The Irish Emigrant.
 338 Queen of My Heart. Reverse: O Promise Me.
 POPULAR 10-inch, double-faced (1913)
 141 She is Far From the Land. Reverse: In Happy Moments.
 322 A Soldier's Song. Reverse: A Joviah Monk (Glandon Lewys).
 326 Tempest of the Heart. Reverse: Semele—Where'er You Walk (Albert Watson).
 388 Toreador Song. Reverse: Simon, the Cellarer (Harry Thornton).
 392 Queen of the Earth. Reverse: Rigoletto—Le Donne e Mobile (Wilfred Virgo).
 393 In Happy Moments. Reverse: The Merry Maiden (Miss H. Mulligan).
 394 The White Squall. Reverse: Blow, Blow, Thou Winter Wind (J. H. Scotland).
 403 Thy Sentinel Am I. Reverse: Love, Could I Only Tell Thee (Thomas Jackson).

EDISON BELL WINNER, double-faced, .. lateral cut (1913)

2381 The Distant Shore. Reverse: Anchored.
 2382 In Happy Moments. Reverse: O Promise Me.
 2427 Even Bravest Heart. Reverse: She Alone Charmeth My Sadness (Robert Carr).

EDISON BELL 12-inch, lateral cut (1913)

602 The Bridge. Reverse: For All Eternity.

EDISON BELL 10-inch velvet face (1913)

1196 Even Bravest Heart. Reverse: She Alone Charmeth My Sadness (Carr).
 1209 O Promise Me. Reverse: The Arrow and the Song.
 1210 The Distant Shore. Reverse: In Happy Moments.

BEKA 10-inch single-faced (1908)

G40351 The Soldier's Home (possibly a mistake for "The Soldier's Song.")
 G40355 Tempest of the Heart.
 G40356 Toreador Song.
 G40357 Messiah—Why Do the Nations?
 G40362 Elijah—It Is Enough.

BEKA 10-inch double-faced (1908)

40352 Heart Bowed Down. Reverse: Beauty's eyes.
 40353/40355 Heart Bowed Down. Reverse: Tempest of the Heart.
 40357/40362 Why Do the Nations? Reverse: It Is Enough.

BEKA double faced 10-inch (1913)

130 Soldier's Song. Reverse: Toreador Song.
 132 Heart Bowed Down. Reverse: Tempest of the Heart.

- 133 Forever and Forever. Reverse: My Dreams (Phillip Rittle).
 342 Beauty's Eyes. Reverse: The Bell Ringer.
CLARION 10-inch double-faced discs (1908)
 1006 In Happy Moments. Reverse: The Irish Emigrant.
 1007 For All Eternity. Reverse: Love, Could I Only Tell Thee (Vincent Hards)
DIPLOMA 10-inch double-faced (1913)
 B51. Love's Old Sweet Song. Reverse: Queen of My Heart.
 B52. Until: Reverse: Your Eyes Have Told Me So.
 B53. Yeoman's Wedding Song. Reverse: In Happy Moments.
 B58. Oh, Star of Eve. Reverse: She is Far From the Land.
 B67. Irish Emigrant: Reverse: Soldier's Song.
 B68. Venetian Song. Reverse: Bedouin Love Song.
 B77. Toreador Song. Reverse: The Trumpeter (Archle Anderson)

P. S. Since this list of Turner records was compiled and submitted to HOBBIES some months ago, I have obtained additional information about some Sterling cylinders as well as discs of Pathé origin from Ernie Bayly and from Len Watts, of Twickenham, Middlesex, England. Because inserting the numbers and titles in their proper places would involve extensive type resetting, I am simplifying matters by adding this postscript.

The Sterling list should include No. 895, "My Courage Now Regain-ing," from "Maritana." There is also a listing of "Brown Eyes" as No. 994. My list shows it as 894. It is unlikely that two versions were offered with almost identical numbers, so I suspect I made a typographical error in preparing my listing. About 1920, Pathé No. 963 was reissued in 11-inch size as No. 5246, and No. 5176 as 5446, with paper labels.

In my Diamond Double Disc listing I did not include No. 0182, "Carmen—Toreador Song" (again!) and "O, Lovely Night."

During the World War period, around 1917-18, Pathé reissued some of its older records under 11-inch "Rooster label." No. 20633 included "Goodbye, Sweetheart" and the "Toreador Song"; No. 20634, "The Distant Shore" and "The Irish Emigrant"; and No. 20635, "The Rosary" and "O, Lovely Night."

I thank my English friends for their help. Alan Turner, however, was such a prolific recorder there almost certainly are other records by him that this research has not brought to light.

—Jim Walsh.

— o —

ANTIQUE MUSIC BOXES & PHONOGRAPHS REPAIRED

MISSING PARTS CUSTOM MADE

IN OUR MACHINE SHOP

MIKE EVERETT

Machinest 1144 E. Washington Blvd.

(312) 629-0608 Lombard, Ill. 60148
jep

THE CURIOUS HISTORY OF MUSIC BOXES

Tells: About the first automatic musical instrument in wide use. How the music box was finally invented. Describes and illustrates great rarities in mechanical musicology, such as: action scene pocket watches, music playing watches, musical snuff boxes, musical dolls, clocks, singing birds, plus all types of cylinder and disc music boxes. There is a checklist of U.S. patents and manufacturers plus a bibliography. 242 pages with 133 half-tone illustrations. 9 x 12" Hard-bound.

STILL ONLY $5.00 POSTPAID
Order from:

Lightner Publishing Corp.
1006 SO. MICHIGAN
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS 60605

World's Largest Selection of MUSIC BOXES!

Music boxes! Nickelodeon pianos! Circus organs! Reproducing pianos! Orchestrons! Hundreds of antique automatic musical instruments for sale at wholesale prices. Send $2 for a fascinating large illustrated catalog. You've never seen another catalog like it! Satisfaction guaranteed. Or, send $10 for subscription to next six issues. Over 500 instruments are now in stock—the world's largest selection. Complete facilities for low cost shipping to you from our American or European warehouses (our European office is directed by Claes O. Friberg, Mekanism Musik Museum, Vesterbrogade 150, Copenhagen, Denmark). Our network of buyers in America and in Europe give you the best selection at lowest prices—there are no middlemen or agents to pay. It is no wonder that we are America's and Europe's main wholesale source.

Our California showroom is open Wednesday—Saturday 9 A.M. to noon and 1 to 4 P.M. Visit us the next time you are in the Los Angeles area. A wonderland of instruments awaits you! We can also supply the seven-pound, 1,008-page, illustrated "Encyclopedia of Automatic Musical Instruments" for $30 postpaid—the standard reference book in the field. Over 7,000 copies sold. Satisfaction guaranteed. For the best deal in buying or selling automatic musical instruments think of us. Directors of American International Galleries are: Terry Hathaway, Claes O. Friberg, Bonnie Tekstra, and Q. David Bowers.

American International Galleries

1717A Stanford St.—Dept. J
Santa Monica, Cal. 90404
Tel. (213) 828-2886 jec

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

OLD FLUTES—Wood, Metal. Description, manufacturer, photo. — Kornblit, 902 Frostwood, Houston, Texas jel2639

USED MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS — Bought — Sold — Iammarino, 9265 S.W. 43rd St., Miami, Fla. 33165 d12639

PHONOGRAPHS

PHONOGRAPHS repaired: New spare parts for Edison phonographs. Send stamp for list. Phone: (201) 748-8046. — Gerichten, 23 Waldo, Ave., Bloomfield, N.J. 07003 jly124851

"DIRECTORY OF Phonograph and Record Collectors," lists 250 collectors and their wants. $3.50 postpaid, satisfaction guaranteed. Two stamps for free list of antique phonograph catalogs, books, magazines. — Allen H. Koenigsberg, 3400 Snyder, Brooklyn, N. Y. 11203 mh66921

MISCELLANEOUS MUSICAL

THEATRE Pipe Organ Nostalgia—Memorabilia Wanted. — Alden Miller, 3212 34th Avenue South, Minneapolis, Minn. 55406 ial26801

WANT RCS Victor Advertising Dog, Edison Idelia Phonograph, coin operated phonographs. — Ken Blazier, 2937 Elda St., Duarte, CA 91010 f122151

CLASSIFIED AD RATES

9c per word; three months for the price of 2; twelve months for the price of 8. Larger type (8 pt.) is 15c per word.

(Except for change of address, no changes permitted on the low three and twelve months rates.)

All advertisers who submit copy for the first time are requested to furnish therewith banking or other satisfactory references.

PRESENTING MISS ADA JONES

"First Lady of the Phonograph"

Comedienne, Master of Dialects, Renowned Pioneer Recording Artist, in an HOUR LONG CONCERT of stellar performances from 1904 to 1922, NARRATED by Miss Jones' devoted researcher, Mr. Milford Fargo.

A MARVELOUS PROGRAM for your enjoyment. Please specify reel/reel or cassette . . . either is $6, postpaid.

MERRITT SOUND RECORDING
223 Grimsby Road
Buffalo, New York 14223
(Will Oakland 50th Anniversary
Still Available) mhc

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Refeathered

Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806

lfc

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

"Cowboy Song" Recordings

PART I

By JIM WALSH

I. "The Dying Cowboy"

When I was a boy I hated school. I felt I was wasting time in a classroom when I could be adding to the record catalog of my imaginary Walsh Talking Machine Company.

But a cherished memory from my school days recalls a few minutes of happiness. One cold winter morning the heating system refused to function properly and the only fairly warm place in the building was the second floor auditorium. To keep us pupils from freezing, all grades were instructed to march upstairs. No effort was made to hold classes, but boys and girls from the first grade through the fourth year of high school were given the opportunity to mount the rostrum and "entertain" their shivering fellow students.

I speculated as to what was about to happen when a tall, gangling, unprepossessing looking boy slowly walked to the raised platform and offered to oblige with a recitation. When he said that the title would be "The Dying Cowboy" I hugged myself with anticipatory glee, for I was pretty sure of what was coming. The teen-age lad, who was charitably described around town as "not exactly bright," was locally noted for his addiction to dime novels, "poetry" and anything else in printed form that glorified the cowboys and Indians of the old West. He couldn't master any other subject, but his fund of misinformation about pioneer Western days was unequalled.

As soon as the youth solemnly began speaking his piece I knew that my expectations would be realized. My father never belonged to any fraternal order, and neither have I, but a few months before I had found in the post office a discarded copy of a magazine issued by a well known organization, and it had contained the doggerel that "Savannah" was intoning now.

The poem told a sad story that brought tears to the eyes of some of the easily affected students. It described a cowboy, who had been mortally wounded in an accident, lying on his deathbed while his solicitous fellow cow-punchers grouped about him, offered rough and ready sympathy. The dying man expressed the conventional pious wishes that he could once more see his sister, sweetheart and, most of all his dear old mother. Knowing a meeting couldn't be arranged before "death's dark angel" came, he said he hoped to meet them in "the great round-up in the sky." Then he told his comrades he was dying in peace of mind, because he was insured in the Woodmen of the World, and his relations and friends wouldn't have to shell out for his funeral expenses. His breath came fainter and fainter, but with his dying gasp he told the weeping cowpokes that if they wished to be at ease when their time came, "follow my example, boys, and join the Woodmen of the World." Having said which, he said no more.

"DENVER NIGHTINGALE."—Billy Murray, who lived in Denver until he left home when he was 16 to join Harry Leavitt's "High Rollers" show troupe, had a near monopoly of recording "Cheyenne" and other cowboy songs.

This "verse" had struck me as deliciously ludicrous when I first read it, but it seemed 10 times more so now that the slow-witted boy had painfully committed it to memory and stood now reciting it with the utmost seriousness to a large audience of boys and girls. The idea of ending a "pathetic" poem about a cowboy's death with a sales pitch for a secret order's insurance program was, to me, almost unbearably funny. It didn't, however, seem to strike any of the other listeners that way.

In spite of my best efforts a few unholy snickers escaped me, and I heard one boy ask another: "What's the matter with Ulysses, laughing at that sad poem that way?" The disgusted reply was, "Aw, you know he's crazy!" And "Savannah" finished his tear-jerking recitation to generous applause.

I mention this long gone incident because it shows how, generations after the cowboy had ceased to be an important figure in the American West's expanding economy, the average boy—and man—still had a nostalgic yearning for the days when cattle were driven in huge herds across the plains. And that longing still prevails, as witness the popularity for the past 60 years and more of the novels of Zane Grey and other Western story writers and, most of all, the attraction that cowboy movies never lose for millions of viewers.

Probably this preoccupation with the Old West was even greater back in 1906 when two young fellows, who had worked their way to the top in Tin Pan Alley's galaxy of song writing stars, decided there would be money in a song about the love life of an old-time cowboy.

II. "Cheyenne" Sets the Pace

The hard working, gifted, ingenious and successful young men were Harry Williams and Egbert Van Alstyne. Williams, who wrote the words of the hundreds of songs the pair originated was born in Faribault, Minn., on August 29, 1879. After being educated in public and military schools, he met Van Alstyne, and they traveled for a time with a circus. Going to New York in 1900, they began writing songs while living on Van Alstyne's small salary as pianist for a music publisher—probably the J. H. Remick Co., which distributed most of their songs. After the team became successful, they toured in vaudeville both in the United States and abroad.

Williams and Van Alstyne worked in partnership for more than 10 years. Then Williams founded his own music publishing business. When it proved unsuccessful, he went to Hollywood to be a movie director. He died in Oakland, Calif., of tuberculosis, on May 15, 1922.

"The ASCAP Biographical Dictionary" says Egbert Anson Van Alstyne was born March 5, 1882, in Chicago, where he died July 9, 1951, but I believe this birthdate is wrong. Sigmund Spaeth's "History of American Popular Music" gives the year as 1878 and the birthplace as Marenco, Ill. (It's hard to find two reference books that agree on places and dates!) In my opinion, 1878 is the right year, for it would make Van Alstyne 25 or 26 when he wrote his first, hit, "Navaajo," and 26 or 27 when he composed the immortal "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree." By the ASCAP account he would have been only 18 when he went to New York after having attended Chicago Musical College and Cornell College, in Iowa, traveled with a circus, and been a pianist and director for traveling musical companies. His musical career had begun at the age of seven when he played the organ in a Methodist church at Marengo. I now serve notice that I am planning to pay Van Alstyne a centenary tribute in HOBBIES for March, 1978.

The composer's mother, by the way, was something of a personality in Chicago. For years in the 1930's, she conducted a physical fitness program from radio station WLS and was known to listeners as "Aunt Em." She must then have been in her 80's.

Williams and Van Alstyne had already proved their versatility when they began looking for a new subject in 1906. They had written a fairly successful comic "coon song," "Back, Back, Back to Baltimore"; had turned out a great "Indian song" hit with "Navajo"; had written a ballad, "Why Don't You Try?" with the Atlantic City boardwalk as its locale, and had produced what may have been the biggest hit in history, the already mentioned "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," which is the favorite sentimental ballad of many famous singers. (I am not a singer, but it is also mine.) In later years they were to prove their mastery of comic numbers with "I'm Afraid to Come Home in the Dark," "I Used to be Afraid to Go Home in the Dark," "It Looks Like a Big Night Tonight" and "What's the Matter With Father?"; ragtime, with "Oh, That Navajo Rag" (a follow-up of their Indian song of 10 years before) and "That Slippery Slide Trombone"; and they contrived "When I Was 21 and You Were Sweet 16," the theme of which was almost a dead ringer for Percy Wenrich's "Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet," even to the clip-clop of horses' hooves. (Through a mix-up, the label of the Victor record, as well as the catalog, credited the music of "When I Was 21" to Harry Von Tilzer, instead of Van Alstyne.) But now they felt the time had come for something new. The result was "Cheyenne."

Despite the long run of "Indian songs," the cowboy had not heretofore been successfully celebrated in American popular music. There had of course been songs dealing with the hard-riding herdsmen of the plains, but they had largely originated among the cowpunchers themselves—such now accepted classics of "Western country music" as "Oh Bury Me Not on the Lone Prairie," "The Dying Cowboy," "When the Work's All Done This Fall," "Git Along, Little Dogies" and "Jesse James." I will discuss such typically lugubrious effusions briefly toward the end of this article. But so far as I can find, no Tin Pan Alley artisans had come through with a successful musical depiction of bygone life on the Western plains before "Cheyenne" made its advent. The nearest approach to a cowboy recording before Williams and Van Alstyne busied themselves probably was Columbia disc No. 1548, issued in January, 1904, and called "Cheyenne Joe's Tavern." The brain child of Len Spencer and Charles A. Prince, it was played by the Columbia Orchestra, directed by Prince, narrated by Spencer, and was described as "a representation of the Rocky Mountain Tavern at the Pan-American Exposition" of 1901-02.

Another somewhat similar descriptive sketch with a "trace of cowboy" was "Down the Pike," played by Arthur Pryor's Orchestra and issued by Victor in November, 1904, as 10-inch M. 4059 and 12-inch 31301. Here is the amusing description:

"Echoes of a stroll down the celebrated 'Pike' at the St. Louis Fair. We are first conscious of the confused babel of voices from the thousands who are thronging the Pike; then the leather-lunged yarker is heard picturing the attractions of the Blarney Castle, while the Irish Band strikes up a rollicking air. A little farther along, picturesque Fair Japan is reached, and the Mikado's musicians play a characteristic strain. Next, we reach 'Old St. Louis!' 'See the cowboys and cowgirls picking up money while riding at breakneck speed!' The Cowboy Band is heard, accompanied by wild yells from the performers. It is Michigan Day, and a party of jolly college boys give their college yell and are heard pathetically singing, 'How Dry I Am,' concluding with 'We Want! Beer!' The baby incubators come into view, and amidst the feeble wails of the infants, a rural voice is heard to ask if 'them be the same babies I saw at the Pan American Exposition?' Amid the laughter of the crowd we pass along to the Oriental section, where a lecturer is picturing the delights of the 'Sun Dance,' as performed before Anthony and Cleopatra, while seductive Oriental strains come from the Turkish Band."

No writer's credit is given, but this sounds like something that originated in Len Spencer's fertile brain. I'd like to find copy of the 12-inch version of this historically valuable skit.

In writing "Cheyenne," Williams and Van Alstyne gave lovers of popular music something that, in its unassuming way, is a masterpiece. I consider it, from the standpoint of harmonious wedding of clever words to an irresistible melody, the perfect popular song. From my boyhood, although I was never, unlike the gangling boy who recited in the school auditorium, a devotee of Western dime novels and have never been able even to read Zane Gray with patience, Billy Murray's Victor version of "CHEYENNE'S" COMPOSER—Egbert Van Alstyne, above, wrote the first successful cowboy popular song, "Cheyenne." He also composed the music of "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," "Navajo," "I'm Afraid to Come Home in the Dark," "Memories," and scores of other great hits, and deserves to rank as one of the greatest American song writers.

"Cheyenne" has had a stronger tug at my heart strings than any other old popular record. Its popularity seemed to insure its staying in the catalog forever, which made me weep when it was dropped and the space it had occupied was filled by Paul Whiteman's fox trot version of "Chicago (That Toddling Town)," which I considered trash. A few years later I rejoiced when it was included in the Victor catalog or records of historical and personal interest.

The interesting points of "Cheyenne" are many. It tells what came to be the familiar tale of a cowboy and his sweetheart riding away to be married, and is perhaps the first song in which a reluctant girl is told "you will, or you'll walk home!" ("Shy Ann," the heroine of "Cheyenne," had traveled on horseback, and not in a car, but she was "beneath the little church's dome" when she began to doubt whether she was wanted to wed.)

Since the copyright expired years ago, I think it will be permissible to quote the words, in which Williams maintained a high standard as a lyric writer:

"Way out in old Wyoming long ago, Where ky-oats lurk while night winds howl and blow,
A cowboy's lusty voice rang out, 'Hello!
And echoed through the valley down below.
Then came back a maiden's answer, sweet and clear.
Cowboy tossed his hat up in the air!
Said he: 'I've come to take you right away from here!
Cheyenne, they say, is miles away, but they've a preacher there!'
Then she just drooped her eye—she was so very shy—so shy,
oh my!

And then he made reply—'Oh! Oh! Oh!'
(REFRAIN)

"'Shy Ann, Shy Ann, hop on my pony!
There's room here for two, dear, but after the ceremony
We'll both ride back home, dear, as one,
On my pony from old Cheyenne!"

They rode that night and nearly half the day.
Cheyenne was sixty-seven miles away.
But when at last they galloped up the street,
The cowboy's pride was really hard to beat.
On his arm his future bride a-carrying,
But beneath the little church's dome,
She said: 'I feel like turning back—not marrying!'

His face got red and then he said: 'You will or you'll walk home!
'If you ride back today you'll honor and obey!'
'I will!' she cried; then he was heard to say:—
(REPEAT THE REFRAIN)

Perhaps a comment or two on the lyric will be in order. "Ky-oats" was the average cowboy's pronunciation of "coyotes." Since the couple had already ridden 67 miles to Cheyenne to be married and apparently intended to return to the ranch as soon as the ceremony was performed, the thought intrudes that they probably were suffering from saddle sores by the time they reached home!

"Cheyenne" had a sub-title, "Shy Ann," and it appears obvious that the shy characteristics of the heroine were suggested by the name of the cattle town. The song began to be a hit as soon as it was published. Most phonograph companies lost no time in issuing it, but Columbia was first. In June, 1906, it came out with 10-inch disc 3389 and cylinder No. 32944, both sung by Billy Murray. The Columbia list said "Cheyenne" was sung in a musical comedy, "The Earl and the Girl." When Columbia that the people who sold him the stuff are no longer around, and conventional stamp dealers, whom he would have been wise to have contacted in the first place, are not at all interested.

(Continued on page 130)

The ads for these tempting contrivances are seldom in the collectors publications. Those readers are generally too smart to fall for them. Instead, they are sometimes in the catalogs of the mass mail order houses. For example, one mail order house offers 50 U.S.A. stamps for $2.49, including one over 100 years old. That supposed rarity is a 3c green, which still wholesales for about 20c per 100, and every one of the others can be found in a dealer's penny box. Retail for the 50 stamps is at most $1; how much of an investment is this at $2.49?

Collecting first day covers is a popular branch of the hobby. The American First Day Cover Society has carried on a campaign against the overpriced covers offered sometimes by prestigious publications. They ask as much as approximately $20.00 for a dozen or so covers, sweetening the brew with a $2 album, and an impressive certificate—as if possession of the covers were not enough. Sometimes similar deals can be obtained from a professional first day cover dealer for a fraction of that sum.

There is a book, happily once again available, that pulls no punches in trying to show newer collectors how they can get more out of philately pleasurewise; and also how they can build up a nest-egg that at some later day can prove as useful as a bank account. And in fairness, we must add that when we first saw the need for a book of this kind a decade and a half ago, our publisher suggested to us that we should write it . . . and we did.

"Fun and Profit in Stamp Collecting" is the book's name, and the first printing sold out in a matter of weeks. The second and third did not last much longer. The fourth printing was on book dealers' bookshelves until two years ago. Now, Hawthorn Press, specialist in paper backs, has taken over the rights from the original publisher, Meredith Press, and a card cover edition is available.

The book has been brought up to date with an appendix summarizing market conditions for every phase of United States collecting, and for various countries of the world. And in the 10-chapter text, the suggestions and conclusions, true as they were 14 years ago, are even more so now, since they have been tried and tested by the experience of the 30,000 collectors who have bought the book.

As a service to readers of HOBBIES, we have a supply of the book, and we will be glad to supply them at the regular price of $3.50, postpaid, to all who wish them. If autographed copies are desired, it will be a pleasure to oblige. We have conducted this column in HOBBIES for more than a third of a century, and we are happy to regard its readers as special friends.

As Helmuth Conrad wrote in the Chicago Tribune "... the most sensible, useful and lively book ever written on the myriad ins and outs of stamp buying and selling."

Another prominent stamp writer said in reviewing an earlier printing, "... surely the finest book of its kind, for the experienced collectors, intending stamp dealers, or the person knowing nothing at all of the hobby who wishes to get maximum education in minimum time."

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 36)

introduced its "A" series of double-faced discs in 1908, "Cheyenne" became No. A319, coupled with "Little Girl, You'll Do," sung by Albert Campbell.

Victor's single-faced version came along a month later, in July, 1906, as No. 4719, and was in every respect a superior record to the Columbia. The recording, complete with cowboy "yips" and the sound of a trotting horse, was better, and Murray's singing improved on his Columbia effort. The Victor supplement described its offering as:

"A jolly 'cowboy' song telling of the wild ride of the cowboy and his sweetheart to Cheyenne, sixty-seven miles away, in search of a preacher to marry them. At the threshold 'Shy Ann' has a fit of shyness and proposes to go back. 'If you do you walk,' says Mr. Cowboy, and at the thought of a sixty-seven mile tramp the lady blushing consents. Splendidly sung by Murray, with descriptive effects by the orchestra."

In the same supplement and numbered 4720—just one digit higher than "Cheyenne's" 4719—was perhaps the most popular "descriptive specialty" ever recorded by Ada Jones and Len Spencer — "Peaches and Cream." When Victor followed Columbia's 1908 example of beginning to make double-faced discs, "Cheyenne" and "Peaches and Cream" were coupled as No. 16102, and because both sides were so attractive the record sold steadily for many years.

(To be continued)

STAMP PACKETS

Over 1500 STAMP PACKETS FROM WORLD WIDE COUNTRIES A TO Z. Packets from 10 stamps to 40,000. Send long, self addressed stamped envelope for list. Or, send $10.00 for special introductory $15.00 value. Satisfaction guaranteed. You'll like the quality and value of these stamps. We handle coins and a large variety of hobby, prospecting, and recreation items. White's Detectors, Esewing tools, books etc. Specify interests.

PENDLETON STAMP & COIN

P.O. Box 1553

Pendleton, Oregon 97801

tfc

THE POSTAGE STAMP

There was a little Postage Stamp
No bigger than my thumb;
But still it stuck right on the job
Until its work was done.
They licked it and pounded it
Till it would make you sick;
And the more it took a licking
The better it would stick.
Let's all be like the Postage Stamp
In playing life's rough game;
And just keep a sticking
Though we hang our heads in shame.
The stamp stuck to the letter
Till it saw it safely through;
There's no one can do it better
Let's keep sticking and be true—

Author Unknown

LINCOLNIANA INTEREST GROWS

Each year, February 12, is well-remembered as the birthday of one of the world's greatest humanitarians. And February 12, 1976, was no exception. Educational institutions and the press gave generous attention to the celebration of Lincoln's birthday.

Among the collectors groups honoring Lincoln's memory was the Abraham Lincoln Association, Springfield, Ill. The annual Lincoln day program started at 1:30 p.m., on February 12 in the Hall of Representatives of the Old State Capitol. Listed on the program were papers to be presented by Professor Emory M. Thomas of the University of Georgia and Professor Phillip S. Paludan of the University of Kansas.

Clyde C. Walton of Northern Illinois University was the moderator.

Following the imposing afternoon session, members and other visitors gathered for a dinner meeting at 7:30 p.m. At this meeting, the program listed the following:

"Lord Longford of Great Britain—a former Oxford don and government minister, champion of social welfare causes, head of a famous literary family, and chairman of the prestigious London publishing house of Sidgwick and Jackson—will speak on "Lincoln and Kennedy." Lord Longford is author of several books, including "Abraham Lincoln" (1974), a biography to which the perspective of distance and time lends interest and charm."

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

"Cowboy Song" Recordings

PART II

By JIM WALSH

(This article is dedicated to the memory of the late Fred Harrington, of Traverse City, Mich., who read it in manuscript and looked forward eagerly to seeing it in print. Unfortunately, that was not to be, but Fred will long be remembered as a loyal friend and for his dedicated research concerning old records and pioneer recording artists.)

By Aug. 1906, the breezy Western song "Cheyenne" had gained so much popularity that Leonard W. Lillingston, the editor of the Talking Machine News, published in London, was chiding English record manufacturers for not issuing it. "How is it," Lillingston asked, "that we have no records listed as yet of 'Cheyenne,' the cowboy love song, which is booming so well in the States just now?"

Back on this side of the Atlantic, Edison missed out on the "boom." It never did announce a cylinder of "Cheyenne" as a complete song. Such short-sightedness seems unbelievable, but perhaps Mr. Edison didn't like the number! In August, the same month in which Mr. Lillingston published his complaint, American Zon-o-phone issued No. 503, a single-faced disc called "Cheyenne — Medley March and Two-Step," which was played by the Zon-o-phone Concert Band, and conducted by Fred Hager. Besides the name song, the medley included "Why Don't You Try?" and "The Little Chauffeur."

Trailing badly, Zon-o-phone in October placed a vocal version on sale. It was No. 565 and was sung by Murray. This was coupled in 1908 with Murray's rendition of Williams and Van Alstyne's great comic hit of that year, "I'm Afraid to Come Home in the Dark."

I do not now have access to a 1906 catalog of Imperial records, which were made by Leeds & Catlin, but I formerly owned one. It was sent for binding to the Library of Congress in Washington, and apparently was lost there, for it has never been returned. I have an impression that it contained a record of "Cheyenne," sung by Arthur Collins, but my memory may be tricking me. If Collins did not sing such a record, then, so far as I know, Billy Murray was the only artist who made "Cheyenne" as a vocal solo.

In fact, "The Denver Nightingale," who was just then surging into his —Music from Lillian and Dulcinea McNeill BIGGEST "COWBOY SONG" HIT. "Cheyenne," whose cover is reproduced here, was published in 1906 and, owing largely to records by Billy Murray, became the first and greatest hit dealing with romance on the Western plains. It is still well remembered, and Jim Walsh terms it "the perfect popular song."

enormous popularity as a recording artist, came to have almost a monopoly of American recordings of cowboy songs. This perhaps was only appropriate since, although he was born in Philadelphia, he was taken as a baby to Denver and spent his boyhood there. In consequence, he had a thorough knowledge of the Old West. His nickname was acquired when Sam Rous, the Victor catalog editor, asked if he could suggest some amusing tag by which he might be identified. Billy facetiously replied that it might be appropriate to call him a "Rocky Mountain Canary" — a name by which the braying donkeys of that area were known. Instead of adopting this proposal, Rous, with Jenny Lind, "the Swedish Nightingale" in mind, changed it to "The Denver Nightingale," and referred to Murray by that term in a good many supplement write-ups. From personal experience, the "Nightingale" was well acquainted with both Indians and Cowboys.

Some years ago, I have just recalled, I played the Victor record of "Cheyenne" for Donald L. Leavitt, now assistant chief of the Library of Congress' musical division in Washington, D. C. Don, a skilled musician, was much impressed by both the song and the singer, and pronounced Billy Murray to have had "the perfect voice for recording by the acoustic method." He termed Billy "the Caruso of comic songs." It is often said that Caruso, of all operatic singers, had the perfect recording voice and so, on a different plane, did Billy Murray, in Don Leavitt's opinion.

Mr. Murray, having made a smashing success with "Cheyenne," was called on to record a "Cheyenne Parody,"

MISCELLANEOUS MUSICAL

THEATRE Pipe Organ Nostalgia—Memorabilia Wanted. — Alden Miller, 3212 34th Avenue South, Minneapolis, Minn. 55406 jcl20801

WANT RCS Victor Advertising Dog, Edison Idelia Phonograph, coin operated phonographs. — Ken Blazier, 2937 Elda St., Duarte, CA 91010 f122151

Sheet Music, Cylinders, 78S, 45S, 33-1/3S. Research done on all fields of music. Send me your want lists.—A. M. Walton, 4 Wexford Rd., Gibbstboro, N.J. 08026 mhl20843

World's Largest Selection of MUSIC BOXES!

Music boxes! Nickelodeon pianos! Circus organs! Reproducing pianos! Orchestrons! Hundreds of antique automatic musical instruments for sale at wholesale prices. Send $2 for a fascinating large illustrated catalog. You've never seen another catalog like it! Satisfaction guaranteed. Or, send $10 for subscription to next six issues. Over 500 instruments are now in stock—the world's largest selection. Complete facilities for low cost shipping to you from our American or European warehouses (our European office is directed by Claes O. Friberg, Mekanisk Musik Museum, Vesterbrogade 150, Copenhagen, Denmark). Our network of buyers in America and in Europe give you the best selection at lowest prices—there are no middlemen or agents to pay. It is no wonder that we are America's and Europe's main wholesale source. Our California showroom is open Wednesday—Saturday 9 A.M. to noon and 1 to 4 P.M. Visit us the next time you are in the Los Angeles area. A wonderland of instruments awaits you! We can also supply the seven-pound, 1,008-page, illustrated "Encyclopedia of Automatic Musical Instruments" for $30 postpaid—the standard reference book in the field. Over 7,000 copies sold. Satisfaction guaranteed. For the best deal in buying or selling automatic musical instruments think of us. Directors of American International Galleries are: Terry Hathaway, Claes O. Friberg, Ronnie Tekstra, and Q. David Bowers.

American International Galleries

1717A Stanford St.—Dept. J
Santa Monica, Cal. 90404
Tel. (213) 823-2886 jec

which was issued in 10-inch size on Victor 4974 in February, 1907, and under the same number, as an 8-inch, in March. This was in the days when Upton Sinclair's "muckraking" novel, "The Jungle," had focused nationwide attention and aroused widespread indignation because of the insanity and inhumane conditions under which animals were slaughtered in the Chicago stockyards. One half of the parody must have been inspired by the book. To those of us who love animals the thought seems gruesome rather than funny, but the words told of an agent for the "beef trust" buying, for 30 cents, "a sick old pony named Shy Ann", and exulting:

"Shy Ann, Shy Ann, you sick old pony,
We'll take you and make you and bake you into bologna.
And the fools who eat you won't know You're that pony from old Cheyenne."

No doubt that is very funny — if you look at it the "right" way.

This, incidentally, was not the only parody Murray recorded for Victor. I have often wondered who

(Continued on page 127)

GREAT NEWS!

"The Old Record Box" Programs Now Available

28 delight-filled quarter hour shows from cylinder records . . . excellent narration by the late Fred C. Harrington. Arrange your own choices by titles and order in multiples of four programs.

Here are the titles:

Introduction; Over There; The Golden Years; Courtin'; Home Sweet Home; Drifting & Dreaming; Smartaleck; The Auld Sod; A Wee Bit o' Scotch; Lets Dance; Listen to the Band; Naughty! Naughty!; Children's Day;
A Few Favorites; Sampler; Sunday; Indians; Show Biz; Something Different; Love; Polpourri; To The Ladies; Song & Patter; Poor Lost Souls; The Home Front; Singalong; The Lively Ones; A Few More Favorites.
Specify reel, cassette, or 8-Track and enclose $6 for each four programs desired.

MERRIT SOUND RECORDING

223 Grimsby Road
Buffalo, New York 14223 tfc

MUSIC BOXES

Antique Swiss Music Boxes restored like new. All wheels, worm gears and pinions made right in my shop on NEW SPECIALLY DESIGNED MACHINERY. NO WORK "FARMED OUT" hence you are money in pocket when you get my low prices for guaranteed work.

Hundreds of Music Boxes of every conceivable type right in stock. Just ask for any specific item and I'm sure I will have it. Every item offered rebuilt like new, as to those who know, all machines need plenty of work on them to be in flawless condition.

Music Box and Bird Cage Bellows Restored and Birds Re feathered

Barrington—GEORGE A. BIDDEN—Rhode Island 02806 tlc

ANTIQUE MUSIC BOXES & PHONOGRAPHS REPAIRED

MISSING PARTS CUSTOM MADE

IN OUR MACHINE SHOP

MIKE EVERETT

Machinest 1144 E. Washington Blvd.

(312) 629-0608 Lombard, Ill. 60148 jcp

Send $1 (refundable first order) for our latest big catalog—it's jammed with all sorts of neat goodies! Service manuals, books, catalog reprints, LP records music boxes, funny signs, etc. having to do with:

Theatre organs, player pianos, gambling machines, old cars, juke boxes and stuff that hobbyists love.

THE VESTAL PRESS

P.O. Box 97

Vestal 2, NY 13850

(publishers of "Jesse Crawford: Wizard of the WurliTzer") sc

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

OLD FLUTES—Wood, Metal. Description, manufacturer, photo. — Kornblit, 902 Frostwood, Houston, Texas jcl2639

USED MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS — Bought — Sold — Iammarino, 9265 S.W. 43rd St., Miami, Fla. 33165 d12639

PHONOGRAPHS

PHONOGRAPHS repaired: New spare parts for Edison phonographs. Send stamp for list. Phone: (201) 748-8046. — Gerichten, 23 Waldo, Ave., Bloomfield, N.J. 07003 jly124851

VICTOR TALKING MACHINE Repair Manual, illustrated, 64 pages, Fascimile Edition, only $4.95 ppd. Send 2 stamps for free lists of other Antique phonograph and record memorabilia. — Allen H. Koenigsberg, 3400 Snyder, Brooklyn, N.Y. 11203. s60621

AN HONEST TO GOSH 1926 MUSIC STORE. Plus a few more items covering everything from EDISON TO ELVIS. Vintage phonographs, Victor, Edison, Columbia, Brunswick & other floor and table models. We carry needles, dust-ers, and books, discographies, and thousands of 78's, cylinders, and our prices are 1926 style. Sheet music, band charts and out of print LP's. Put your Wants on a 3x5 card for our files and we'll try to help. Try the — Olde Tyme Music Scene in Boonton, located at 917 Main St. That's New Jersey, folks. Phone 201-335-5040. Closed Monday and Tuesday. d96705

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 36)

wrote those "take-offs" on popular songs, for no author's name was given, but I didn't think to ask Billy for the information when he was available for questioning. His other parody discs included 4385, "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," and No. 5006, issued in March, 1907, "Parodies on Three Popular Songs" — "Why Don't You Try?" "Dearie" and "Waltz Me Around Again, Willie." The "Dearie" parody was made available separately on eight-inch No. 5065, while the other two were included in eight-inch 5066. The one on "Dearie" is particularly amusing. It tells of how a young man rode 90 miles on an Erie Railroad train (even in those days the Erie had a reputation for lack of speed) and developed whiskers that touched his knees by the time he reached home. When his friends inquired, "Where did you get the fungus?" he replied:

"On the Erie, the Erie!
That's how my whiskers happened to grow.
Going from New York to Buffalo!!
On the Erie, the Erie,
And now I believe that Adam and Eve built the Erie!"

(To be continued)

OBITUARY

DOROTHY ROSE

Dorothy Rose, a longtime antique dealer in New York City, passed away suddenly on February 27. According to her husband, Murray, she had been contemplating a visit westward with a stopover to greet old friends at HOBBIES Magazine in Chicago.

Mrs. Rose had been a display advertiser in HOBBIES for almost 20 years, starting when she had an open shop at 49 East 12th St., New York City.

She specialized in a general line of art glass when her early ads appeared in HOBBIES. Her first listing offered "a Daum Nancy vase, 16" high, 4" at base, black base, amber brown background, slender and tapering, carved leaves and trees, $40; Daum Nancy vase, 13" high, 4½" top and bottom, shaped like hourglass, representing bark of tree, gold carved autumn leaves, top has one-fourth gold band, $65; Galle vase, 14" high, 3" at base, 2½" at top, purple base shading into orchid, carved leaves and irises, tall and slender, $40."

Although the years have passed, these descriptions are passed along in the hope that the present owners will read this and feel a tinge of nostalgia while enjoying the artistry of their treasures.

In later years, Mrs. Rose has dealt almost exclusively in glass paperweights.

ADA JONES AND LEN SPENCER (1906) play in the window of the Altona store a Columbia Phonograph Company has attracting a great deal of attention, par- a BI graphophone and connecting w axes of the machine, by blue and wh bones, was a dove bearing in its claws

"COWBOY" RECORDERS. — Len Spencer and Ada Jones (above) recorded a Western sketch, "Broncho Bob and His Little Cheyenne." Arthur Collins (below) made a U.S. Everlasting cylinder of "The Last Shot Got Him" and may have made an Imperial disc of "Cheyenne." This snapshot, taken in 1921, shows Collins in the garden of his home at Hempstead, Long Island, N.Y.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

“Cowboy Song” Recordings

PART III

By JIM WALSH

(This article is dedicated to the memory of the late Fred Harrington, of Traverse City, Mich., who read it in manuscript and looked forward eagerly to seeing it in print. Unfortunately, that was not to be, but Fred will long be remembered as a loyal friend and for his dedicated research concerning old records and pioneer recording artists.)

III. “Broncho Bob and His Little Cheyenne”

We are not yet through with “Cheyenne.” The song came to the favorable attention of that versatile genius, the great Len Spencer, who was always alert for novelties to be used in the amazingly clever “vaudeville sketches” he recorded with the legendary Ada Jones. These sketches were marvels of skilled compression. Running from two to four minutes, they really constituted miniature plays.

Len saw that a skit built around “Cheyenne” had excellent possibilities, so he wrote one, which he called “Broncho Bob and His Little Cheyenne.” It amounted to a dramatization of the action described in the song, with Bob riding down to meet his girl friend, and persuading her to mount his broncho for their nuptial trip to Cheyenne. A “cowboy band” strikes up the music of “Cheyenne”, and “Shy Ann” sings the refrain before joining Bob on his mount and riding into the sunset toward Cheyenne.

By popular song standards the Williams-Van Alstyne number was fairly old when Leonard Garfield Spencer honored it with his attention, but Victor and Columbia issued the sketch in December, 1907, and so did Edison, which thereby atoned somewhat for its earlier neglect of the parent song. The description in Edison's New Phonogram is entertaining:

“A highly original diverting Western sketch, which is crowded with human interest and will certainly be a big seller. The scene opens with the whinny of a horse, and Cheyenne (Ada Jones) rides into camp, her horse blown, to marry Broncho Bob (Len Spencer), who carries her off to the parson on his own horse to the accompaniment of the cowboys' band, which plays ‘Cheyenne,’ a verse of which is appropriately sung by Miss Jones at the earnest request of her lover. This record is out of the common, and is going to make a big hit.”

Which brings up the question: If the Edison experts were so sure the sketch would be a “big seller” and “a big hit,” why hadn't they recorded the song in the first place?

The Edison cylinder was No. 9720. The 10-inch Victor record was No. 5286, and it was issued in January, 1908, under the same number, in the eight-inch size. It was not taken into the double-faced catalog. The Columbia single-faced disc was No. 3734 and the cylinder, 33206. The disc was combined in double-faced form on No. A432, with Steve Porter's “The Laughing Spectator.” Somewhere along the way, the sketch was issued as Indestructible cylinder No. 651, and Zon-o-phone made it as a single-faced disc, but I can't find its number. In double-faced form it was on Zono No. 5405, coupled with “Peaches and Cream” — the same Jones and Spencer specialty that was doubled with Victor's “Cheyenne.”

IV. “Lyster and Cooke”

We still have not done with “Cheyenne,” which appeared too early for the author, composer and publisher to profit from sales of its recordings. Had Williams and Van Alstyne waited three years longer to write the song, they would have had the benefit of the copyright act of 1909 and shared royalties with the publisher.

The “cowboy songs” vogue came at a time when the cylinder phonograph was still more popular than the disc, and Edison was sometimes obliged to refrain from issuing any new records for a month in the hope of catching up with unfilled orders. By 1912 the cylinder was in decline, but in 1906-07 it was still riding high, cowboy style.

In the Talking Machine World for February 15, 1906, as an example, there is a statement that Knoxville, Tenn., then a city of a little more than 30,000 population, contained 4,000 cylinder phonographs within its corporate limits but only 15 disc instruments. Frankly, I find this disproportion incredible. It seems unlikely that a community of 30,000 would possess 4,000 talking machines of any description, and the ratio of 4,000 to 15 simply seems too high to be accepted, even though there can be no doubt that the cylinder instrument 70 years ago still was more popular than the higher-priced disc. The article added, however, that Memphis and Nashville, Tenn., were, unlike Knoxville, “distinctly disc towns.”

Perhaps some of the English recording companies acted on Leonard Lillingston's scolding suggestion that they should make vocal records of “Cheyenne,” but I have not found any mentioned in the pages of the Talking Machine News. However, toward the end of 1907, English Pathé, which by this time had abandoned cylinders in favor of discs (one indication of how the tide was slowly turning), issued a “Cheyenne Medley,” played on “silver chimes and organ” by “Lyster and Cooke,” and coupled with “My Old Kentucky Home.” This record stayed popular for years and was listed in the 1915 American Pathé catalog as No. 956. A renumbering system went into effect in 1916 and it became 30061. In January, 1908, the “Cheyenne Medley,” played by the same artists, was issued on Clarion two-minute cylinder No. 88. Lyster and Cooke may perhaps have also made it for other British companies, since they recorded for nearly all the British-based firms, but I have not found references to it if they did.

I have the Pathé record. It begins with a rather familiar sounding tune, but which I have not so far been able definitely to identify, although it reminds me of “Coming Home From Coney Isle,” which was used by Ada Jones and Len Spencer in some of their skits. The second number is George M. Cohan's great 1905 evergreen hit, “Give My Regards to Broadway.” “Cheyenne” concludes the disc. The music is charming and brilliantly recorded with that “larger than life” effect that Pathé's methods sometimes gave.

The Sound Wave, a rival to the Talking Machine News, contained in its April, 1910, issue the following reference to Lyster and Cooke:

“Messrs. Lyster & Cooke, who have made some excellent records for the Jumbo Company, will shortly be appearing at the Tivoli. We append a list of the Jumbo records of these high-skilled performers on the bells and silver chimes: 158. ‘Will You Love Me In December As You Do In May?’ and ‘My Old Kentucky Home.’ 183. Two Hymns — ‘Holy, Holy, Holy’ and ‘Nearer, My God, to Thee’; 184. ‘Almost Persuaded’ and ‘Abide With Me’; and 282. ‘Cupid's Garden Intermezzo’ and ‘Selection of Waldteufel's Waltzes.’”

It is obvious from the use of “Messrs.” that the Sound Wave thought “Lyster and Cooke” were two men, but the truth is that the chimes and bells player was an Australian, Alfred Charmion, using the stage name of Lyster, and “Cooke” was his wife, who had been Violet Cooke before her marriage. They toured in vaudeville and music halls throughout the English-speaking world and appear to have made several visits to the States before they finally decided to settle in this country.

I have forgotten how I learned that "Alfred Lyster," otherwise Charmion, was living in Belpre, Ohio, but the news may have come from Joe Belmont, the world famous whistler, who was a friend of Charmion's, and whom I had talked with in 1947 and 1948. At any rate I wrote to Charmion and received an interesting pencil-written reply, dated March 4, 1949. He was then operating the Belcraft Studios at 105 Main St., Belpre and, his letterhead said, did furniture refinishing, upholstering, cabinet work and repairs. It began bluntly, "Jim Walsh," then continued in an informative vein:

"Your letter came as a bombshell, but a welcome one at that. I am on the sick list at this time so please forgive me for not answering in detail, as I will later. I would like a record of the chimes I did if it is possible . . . The enclosed is just a jumble, but if you can get a story out of it so much the better . . . Violet Cooke died 10 years ago.

"I had learned all about recording from Hausman of Columbia, and went to London, England, and showed them how to make records. I had the technique of Vic and George Emerson, and that was something in those days.

"I was living at 12B Holland Road, Brixton, London, S. W., time about 8 a.m., a knock at the door. I open it. Who stands there but Joe Belmont. (Belmont lived in England for a few years, before returning home to the U. S. A.—J. W.)

"What are we going to do, Joe?" "We are going to make over my whistling records and make over the Albert Campbell-Belmont duets — 'The Whistler and the Bird,' 'The Robin and the Wren,' etc." Says I: 'I never sang a duet in my life.' Joe: 'Here's where you do.'

"And we did, with a 60-piece Grenadier Band as a background. My alto was lousy. That was a Columbia record. George Brookes (a dramatic actor) was then manager for Columbia records. A Mr. Heise was manager for Edison Bell (cylinder). (Note. — This was "Teddy" Hesse, Edison Bell recording manager, who died in January, 1933.—J.W.) Bill Johnstone was manager of Clarion Records (cylinder.)"

Mr. Charmion then went on to say that in this country he had made blue American records for Hawthorne, Sheble and Prescott of Philadelphia. He had also recorded for Leeds and Catlin, and American Columbia. In England, Zon-o-phone and Gramophone & Typewriter were among the companies for which he made records. He said he didn't believe he made any Sterling cylinders in England for Russell Hunting and Louis Sterling. American musicians whom he said he had known included Patrick Sarsfield Gilmore, the band leader; Frank P. Banta, Edison pianist and father of the recording star, Frank E. Banta; Charles D'Almaine, violinist; Fred Hager, violinist, band and orchestra leader and composer; Elizabeth Spencer, soprano; Marguerite Newton, early Edison recording soprano; Billy Murray, Will Oakland and Byron G. Harlan. His statement that he knew Gilmore puzzles me, for the band leader died in St. Louis, Sept. 24, 1892 — a long time ago. Gilmore's death had occurred more than 56 years before Charmion wrote to me, which would seem to render it impossible that they had met or automatically put my correspondent into the extremely elderly class.

I have never heard from Alfred Charmion since he wrote 1949 letter and doubt that he is still alive, but I thought it sufficiently interesting to interrupt the flow of the "cowboy songs" narrative and include it. Now, back to Harry Williams and Egbert Van Alstyne, and their next "cow-punch" composition, "San Antonio."

V. "San Antonio"

Being enterprising young men,
(Continued on page 116)

MISCELLANEOUS MUSICAL

THEATRE Pipe Organ Nostalgia—Memorabilia Wanted. — Alden Miller, 3212 34th Avenue South, Minneapolis, Minn. 55406 jcl20801

WANT RCS Victor Advertising Dog, Edison Idealia Phonograph, coin operated phonographs. — Ken Blazier, 2937 Elda St., Duarte, CA 91010 #122151

Sheet Music, Cylinders, 78S, 45S, 33-1/3S. Research done on all fields of music. Send me your want lists. — A. M. Walton, 4 Wexford Rd., Gibbstown, N.J. 08026 mh120843

World's Largest Selection of MUSIC BOXES!

Music boxes! Nickelodeon pianos! Circus organs! Reproducing pianos! Orchestrions! Hundreds of antique automatic musical instruments for sale at wholesale prices. Send $2 for a fascinating large illustrated catalog. You've never seen another catalog like it! Satisfaction guaranteed. Or, send $10 for subscription to next six issues.

Over 500 instruments are now in stock—the world's largest selection. Complete facilities for low cost shipping to you from our American or European warehouses (our European office is directed by Claes O. Friberg, Mekanisk Musik Museum, Vesterbrogade 150, Copenhagen, Denmark). Our network of buyers in America and in Europe give you the best selection at lowest prices—there are no middlemen or agents to pay. It is no wonder that we are America's and Europe's main wholesale source.

Our California showroom is open Wednesday—Saturday 9 A.M. to noon and 1 to 4 P.M. Visit us the next time you are in the Los Angeles area. A wonderland of instruments awaits you! We can also supply the seven-pound, 1,008-page, illustrated "Encyclopedia of Automatic Musical Instruments" for $30 postpaid—the standard reference book in the field. Over 7,000 copies sold. Satisfaction guaranteed.

For the best deal in buying or selling automatic musical instruments think of us. Directors of American International Galleries are: Terry Hathaway, Claes O. Friberg, Bonnie Tekstra, and Q. David Bowers.

American International Galleries

1717A Stanford St.—Dept. J
Santa Monica, Cal. 90404
Tel. (213) 828-2886 jec

ANTIQUE MUSIC BOXES & PHONOGRAPHS REPAIRED

MISSING PARTS CUSTOM MADE

IN OUR MACHINE SHOP

MIKE EVERETT

Machinest 1144 E. Washington Blvd.

(312) 629-0608 Lombard, Ill. 60148 jep

Send $1 (refundable first order) for our latest big catalog—it's jammed with all sorts of neat goodies! Service manuals, books, catalog reprints, LP records music boxes, funny signs, etc. having to do with:

Theatre organs, player pianos, gambling machines, old cars, juke boxes and stuff that hobbyists love.

THE VESTAL PRESS

P.O. Box 97

Vestal 2, NY 13850

(publishers of "Jesse Crawford: Wizard of the WurliTzer") ac

GREAT NEWS! "The Old Record Box" Programs Now Available

28 delight-filled quarter hour shows from cylinder records . . . excellent narration by the late Fred C. Harrington. Arrange your own choices by titles and order in multiples of four programs.

Here are the titles:

Introduction; Over There; The Golden Years; Courtin'; Home Sweet Home; Drifting & Dreaming; Smartaleck; The Auld Sod; A Wee Bit o' Scotch; Lotsa Dance; Listen to the Band; Naughty! Naughty!; Children's Day; A Few Favorites; Sampler; Sunday; Indians; Show Biz; Something Different; Love; Potpourri; To The Ladies; Song & Patter; Poor Lost Souls; The Home Front; Singalong; The Lively Ones; A Few More Favorites.

Specify reel, cassette, or 8-Track and enclose $6 for each four programs desired.

MERRIT SOUND RECORDING

223 Grimsby Road

Buffalo, New York 14223 ttc

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

OLD FLUTES—Wood, Metal, Description, manufacturer, photo. — Kornblit, 902 Frostwood, Houston, Texas jcl2639

USED MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS — Bought — Sold — lammarino, 9265 S.W. 43rd St., Miami, Fla. 33165 d12639

PHONOGRAPHS

PHONOGRAPHS repaired: New spare parts for Edison phonographs. Send stamp for list. Phone: (201) 748-8046. — Gerichten, 23 Waldo, Ave., Bloomfield, N.J. 07003 jyl24851

VICTOR TALKING MACHINE Repair Manual, illustrated, 64 pages, Fascimile Edition, only $4.95 ppd. Send 2 stamps for free lists of other Antique phonograph and record memorabilia. — Allen H. Koenigsberg, 3400 Snyder, Brooklyn, N.Y. 11203. #60621

AN HONEST TO GOSH 1926 MUSIC STORE. Plus a few more items covering everything from EDISON to ELVIS. Vintage phonographs, Victor, Edison, Columbia, Brunswick & other floor and table models. We carry needles, dust-ers, and books, discographies, and thousands of 78's, cylinders, and our prices are 1926 style. Sheet music, band charts and out of print LP's. Put your Wants on a 3x5 card for our files and we'll try to help. Try the — Olde Tyme Music Scene in Boonton, located at 917 Main St. That's New Jersey, folks. Phone 201-335-5040. Closed Monday and Tuesday. d96705

CYLINDER & Disc Phonographs, parts and related items. Desc. & price. — Reader, 18300 Locust Ave., Patterson, CA 95363 myl26921

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 36)

Williams and Van Alstyne were not the type to let any grass grow beneath a Western broncho's feet. "Cheyenne" having set the nation to singing about romance on the plains, they decided a sequel was imperatively needed. So they "thought up" another cowboy song, "San Antonio," and records of it began to appear within less than a year after "Cheyenne" first came to public notice. Up to that time, no other song writers had begun to get into the Western act, or if they had their efforts were not recorded.

"San Antonio" was in the same pattern as "Cheyenne," though hardly so good a song. There was one "switch" of plot in Williams' lyrics, however. This time the cowboy's sweetheart didn't swing up behind to go and marry him. Instead, although she mounted a pony, she rode away, on her erstwhile lover's steed, with a "tenderfoot" named Tony. (Writers of Western songs liked the name of "Tony," because it rhymed so easily with "pony.") She was as faithless as "Shy Ann" was demurely staunch.

For comparison and contrast, here are the words of "San Antonio":

"Just as the moon was peeping o'er the hill
After the work was through.
There sat a cowboy and his partner, Bill.
Cowboy was feeling blue.
Bill says: 'Come down, pal; down into town.
pal. Big time for me and you!
Don't mind your old gal; you know it's cold, pal. If what you say is true.
Where is she now?' Bill cried:
And Cowboy just replied:

REFRAIN

'San Antoni-Antonio! She hopped upon a pony
And ran away with Tony!
If you see her just let me know
And I'll meet you in San Antonio!

'You know that pony that she rode away —
That horse belonged to me.
So did the trinkets that she stowed away —
I was the big mark-ee!
I don't resent it; I might have spent it.
Plunging with Faro Jack;
If she's not happy there with her chappie.
Tell her I'll take her back.
No tenderfoot like him
Could love her like her boy, Jim!"

REPEAT REFRAIN

If Williams' lyrics for "San Antonio" fell beneath the standard of "Cheyenne," they were still better than those of the average "pop song." Rhyming "Tony" and "pony" was not so trite then as the efforts of Williams' imitators later made it, but "I was a big mark-ee" is weak. I'm not sure what it means, unless Cowboy Jim was telling Bill that he had been an "easy mark" for his fickle girl friend. On the other hand, the young lyricist scored a brilliant stroke by rhyming "rode away" and "stowed away."

One thing that impresses me in the "story" told by Williams' rhymes is the remarkably forgiving nature of Cowboy Jim, who didn't resent the girl's stealing his pony as well as unspecified trinkets. He was willing to forgive and forget, even to the extent of taking her back, if she was "not happy there with her chappie" — another weak rhyme — in San Antonio. According to legend, the average cowpoke would have been more likely to strap on his .44 and go hunting Tony and the girl.

The reference to "Faro Jack" probably means that Jack, whoever he was, operated a gaming house in which Jim would have lost his money. About a year after "San Antonio" became popular, Williams and Van Alstyne produced another number which was not really a cowboy song, but had a Western flavor. It was called "My Rosy Rambler" and was sung by Billy Murray on double-faced Victor No. 16035, as well as being introduced in minstrel records. One of its principal characters was a professional gambler — "Big Jim" Wheeler, the "faro king." He loved a guitar — playing "Spanish maid" who lived in a canyon far below his gambling joint, but their romance came to grief when somebody who objected to cheating detected Big Jim trying to "hide an ace." The words are of the serio-comic type, purporting to be serious, but with a touch of humor intermixed:

"Way out in Arizona there lived a Spanish maid.
She sang the 'La Paloma' while her guitar
she played.
Far up above the canyon, Big Jim, the faro king.
Sighed for a sweet companion, so ev'ry evening to her he'd sing:

REFRAIN

My Rosy Rambler, climb up to me.
If you're a gambler I'll play with thee;
You draw a heart and my hand you'll see —

My Rosy, Posy, Rosy Rambler!
Somewhere a faro dealer sleeps in a lonely place.
It's said: 'Here lies poor Wheeler. He tried to hide an ace!
Each night a dark-eyed scrambler climbs up the canyon wall.
And as she plants a rambler above her gambler, you'll hear her call:

REPEAT REFRAIN."

Williams was seldom guilty in his versifying of resorting to assonance — using two words that sound alike but don't really rhyme. He did it, however, by coupling "Arizona" with "La Paloma." And, since "la" is Spanish for "the," the effect is awkward when he says the Spanish maid played "the 'La Paloma.'" "Dealer" and "Wheeler" sound contrived, and I don't like the intrusion of the archaic "thee," which seems out of keeping with the flavor of the song. "Canyon" and "companion," though, are excellent and so is the picture of the "dark-eyed scrambler" climbing up the wall to plant a rambler on the gambler's grave. On the whole, it is an excellent, out of the ordinary song, although it did not make a big hit.

Returning to "San Antonio," its first appearance on records seems to have been in April, 1907, when it was introduced into Zon-o-phone and Columbia records made by the Rambler Minstrel Company, composed of Arthur Collins, Byron G. Harlan, Billy Murray and Steve Porter. The Zon-o-phone disc was No. 720 and the monthly supplement described it as a "selection of mirth and melody. Opens with 'In the Good Old United States,' by the entire company, followed by bright jokes, concluding with the song, 'San Antonio,' by Billy Murray and Quartet." This was called "Rambler Minstrels No. 1." It was combined with No. 2 on double-faced disc No. 5135.

(Parenthetically, Porter was always the interlocutor in the Rambler Minstrel records while either Murray or Collins sang the featured solo. Harlan had little to do except occasionally joining in the joke telling and singing in the choruses.)

The Columbia cylinder was called "Record E" and was No. 33104. It differed from No. 3531, which was "Record E" in the disc series, for in that Murray sang "Crocodylle Isle." Columbia did, however, issue a "San Antonio" Minstrels" in single-faced form, but I have been unable to find the listing. It was combined in double-face on No. A459, its companion being Harlan's famous rendition of "Where the Morning Glories Twine Around the Door." Columbia also made available a 12-inch "San Antonio," Medley March and Two Step," played by Prince's Orchestra. Its mating, by the same ensemble, was "Valse Caressante."

In May, Edison issued, on No. 9547, cylinder of "San Antonio," sung by Murray and a chorus. It was described as the "new cowboy song by Egbert Van Alstyne (music) and Harry Williams (words), that has rapidly achieved popularity from coast to coast. As a record it is exceptionally entertaining and tuneful."

That same month, Victor offered, on No. 5098, "Christy Minstrels No. 2," in which Murray obliged with "San Antonio." (The Christy group was composed of Murray and the Haydn Quartet of John Bieling, Harry Macdonough, S. H. Dudley and William F. Hooley.)

Not only was the minstrel version listed, but on No. 5099 Victor also presented "San Antonio" as a Murray solo. It was strangely enough, made only in the eight-inch size. Even stranger this small record contains two verses and two refrains, and plays for two minutes and 40 seconds — as long as the average ten-inch, with no apparent loss of clarity or volume. This seems to indicate that virtually all ten-inch Victor records could have been compressed into the smaller size, if the company had wished.

So far as my research indicates, Billy Murray was the only American singer who made a record of "San Antonio," and I haven't come across any by British artists.

VI. "The Last Shot Got Him"

By way of making a comparison and pointing out a contrast, I shall now interrupt the chronology of this narrative by five years and move up to 1912, for discussion of a highly amusing ditty, whose expressive title was "The Last Shot Got Him." It was known during the days when it was popular as "The Great BLOOIE Song."

It probably will surprise most readers to learn that this hard-boiled cowboy concoction was the work of two black song writers—Richard C. McPherson, who used the pen name of Cecil Mack — and Chris Smith. McPherson was born in Norfolk, Va., Nov. 6, 1883, and died in New York, Aug. 1, 1944. He received medical training at Lincoln University in Lincoln, Pa., but found writing song lyrics more to his taste. After becoming associated with Bert Williams and George Walker, he was active in song writing and set up his own publishing house.

Smith, born in Charleston, S. C., October 12, 1879, was by trade a baker. He died in New York Oct. 4, 1949. As a boy he learned to play the guitar and piano, then began to compose songs. Between them, Mack and Smith wrote such successes, nearly all with a "coon song" flavor, as "Good Morning, Carrie," "Shame On You," "The Right Church But the Wrong Pew," "He's a Cousin of Mine," "Down Among the Sugar Cane," "Beans, Beans, Beans," "There's a Big Cry Baby in the Moon," "I've Got My Habits On," "Please Go 'Way and Let Me Sleep," "All In, Down and Out," "In the Shadow of the Pyramids" and that evergreen dance favorite, "Ballin' the Jack." Mack, I should add, did not write the words of all these songs. The lyrics of "Ballin' the Jack," for instance, are by Jim Burris.

"The Last Shot Got Him" was a successful change of pace from Mack and Smith's usual blackface comedy numbers. It was combined in June, 1912, on Victor 17071, with "Lingering Love," which was sung by Ada Jones and Billy Murray. The artist who rendered "the Great Blooie Song," was, in my opinion, one of the best of all recording comedians, Eddie Morton, "The Singing Policeman," whose life story was told here in September, October and November, 1952. Nobody else could have done it better, but Arthur Collins probably also did a good job of singing it on U.S. Everlasting cylinder No. 483.

Mack's words tell of a falling-out between a "cowboy named Tony; cow-girl named Mona, 'way out west in Arizona." Mona caught Tony flirting with an Indian squaw and, full of outraged indignation, objected. She thereupon drew her weapon and took off in pursuit of the faithless cowboy, with these results, narrated in the first refrain. "Mona" is speaking:

"My first shot BLOO-IE! missed him by a nose.
And my next shot BANG! tore right through his clothes!
When he saw I meant it and was mad as sin,
Lord, he started 'cross the prairie like a gale of win!
But my fourth shot BING! grazed him on the cheek,
And my fifth shot BOOM! scared him for a week,
But my last shot got him, that friend of mine,
Right between his breakfast and his dinner time!"

The song is punctuated by the crash of cymbals wherever "BLOO-IE!" "BANG!" and the like are heard.

In the second stanza, Tony, having recovered from the free course in ventilation which he had received at the hand of Mona, discovers that another young man has been making love to the gun-toting lady. In righteous indignation, he goes after the interloper who had "sperled his plans for matrimony," as Morton sings it. "Ev'ry cowboy bet his pony that the winner would be Tony," and he was. The second refrain quotes his account of what he did to his rival, in the same words as those already uttered by Mona, except that the last two lines are changed to:

"But my last shot got him that afternoon, Right between his pantry and his dining room."

Mack is guilty of the sin of assonance in the concluding lines of both versions of the refrain, but this can be forgiven, perhaps, for the sake of the humor involved in the phrases, "between his breakfast and his dinner time" and "between his pantry and his dining room." "The Last Shot," since it subordinates sentiment for humor, is certainly one of the most amusing cowboy songs.

In 1925 Okeh issued an instrumental version of a foxtrot number called "The Last Shot Got Him," recorded in Dallas, Texas, and played by "Chenoweth's Cornfield Symphony Orchestra." Despite the title, it is an ordinary hill-billy style dance number, and I can find no resemblance between its music and that of the Mack-Smith masterpiece.

Next month we'll take another trip into the long gone past and consider more cowboy songs.

P. S. Since writing this article I have been surprised to find I have a 16-inch radio transcription, made in the 1940's on which Aileen Stanley, the favorite recording comedienne, sings "Cheyenne" and a number of other songs. Another interesting transcription is one on which Irving Kaufman is heard in several fine songs, including Teddy Morse's classic "Down In Jungle Town" and "By the Beautiful Sea."

(To be continued)

THE COLLECTOR READS:

The WORLD OF ANTIQUE ARTS, Orville Bourassa Rhoades. Gives a grasp of the antique arts from antiquity to yesterday. Covers 50 broad fields of collectors' arts in short, swift moving chapters. Comprehensive. Concise. Full of fascinating facts for collector, writer, student, business man, and housewife. Excellent for quick reference on the antique arts, their history, processes, qualities. Gives features to consider in collecting your antiques. Over 235 illustrations of museum pieces, many full page. Explanatory captions for each picture add valuable information. Extensive bibliography lists books by the masters of these antique arts. Excellent for shop, club, or home library. Basic. Informative. Cultural. Will not get out of fashion. Blue cloth binding. Gold decoration and lettering. An ideal gift, $7.50.

THE ARTS OF THE TIFFANYS, by Gertrude Speenburgh. A warm human interest story about the Tiffanys, and their artistic wares. It is Americana that will appeal to the casual reader, but for the collector it is a must. It contains such chapters as Art of Silversmithing, The Tiffanys — Men of Many Facets, Louis C. Tiffany & The Painter, The Story behind Favril Glass, Art of True Stained Glass, Art of Jewelry and Enamels, Louis Comfort Tiffany, Laurelton Hall — Art of Magnificent Living, etc. The story is told concisely in 120 pages, with about 27 illustrations of views of Tiffany collectors items, and Laurelton Hall, $5.

THE CURIOUS HISTORY OF MUSIC BOXES, Roy Mosoriak. The first book written about the first automatic musical instrument of wide use in the world. Tells how the music box was finally invented, how the makers, inventors and craftsmen of several countries competed to perfect the music box and thus bring music into the homes of thousands of people where it had never been before. Describes and illustrates great rarities in the antiquarian world: Mechanical action — scene pocket watches, music playing watches; musical snuff boxes; gold gem-studded miniatures and mechanical action scenes and music; musical dolls, clocks, mechanical musical singing birds; all types of cylinder and disc music boxes which antedated the phonograph or "speaking-machine" invented by Thomas A. Edison. Checklist of clockmakers, watchmakers, makers of automata and inventors; checklist of all U.S. Patents for music boxes; music box musicology; checklist of manufacturers, bibliography, index, 242 pages, 133 half-tone illustrations, many items never before pictured, 232 pp. size 9x12 inches, $5.00.

HOBBIES MAGAZINE
1006 S. Michigan
Chicago, Ill. 60605

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

“Cowboy Song” Recordings

PART IV

By JIM WALSH

(This article is dedicated to the memory of the late Fred Harrington, of Traverse City, Mich., who read it in manuscript and looked forward eagerly to seeing it in print. Unfortunately, that was not to be, but Fred will long be remembered as a loyal friend and for his dedicated research concerning old records and pioneer recording artists.)

I. “In the Land of the Buffalo”

Last month's discussion was devoted largely to the compositions of Harry Williams and Egbert Van Alstyne, whose “Cheyenne” gave “cowboy songs” their first surge of popularity throughout the English-speaking world.

This month the work of other writers who followed in the broncho tracks of Williams and Van Alstyne will be considered. There still remains, however, another successful Williams-Van Alstyne production to which attention must be called.

What appears to have been the last cowboy song by these skilled writers was “In the Land of the Buffalo,” which Victor issued in September, 1907, on 10-inch single-faced disc No. 5196. It came out in October on Edison two-minute cylinder No. 9668. Both were sung, as you should be able to guess, by Billy Murray. Victor and Edison seem to have been the only two important American companies that recorded the song. The Victor supplement described it as:

“A semi-pathetic cowboy song which seems to possess all the elements of a popular success—some breezy Western humor, a touch of pathos and a pretty melody.”

The Edison supplement said:

“The latest ‘Cowboy Song’ by the writers of ‘San Antonio.’ . . . It has all of the elements that give a song wide popularity . . .”

“The Land of the Buffalo,” unlike “San Antonio” was not incorporated into minstrel recordings and miscellaneous medleys. This may have been because the story told by the lyrics is complex from a popular song point of view and if only part had been sung the “plot” would have been left dangling in mid-air. Williams' words described a grizzled cowpuncher going to a presumably distant city and meeting an old friend, who seems to have been a ranchman at one time, but who departed for the city, accompanied by a young lady known as “Flo.” When the old-timer inquires about this lady, the city dweller makes it clear he has parted from her and doesn't care about seeing her face again. His friend then reveals that “Brother Lou” had loved Flo all the time and is still grieving for lack of her. If the city chap knows where she is now, the old-timer will gladly pay her fare to the place where Brother Lou is sorrowing. It isn't made clear, not, at least, on the Edison cylinder, whether the offer was accepted, and Flo and Lou eventually became man and wife.

COWBOY SONG'S NAMESAKE—Prof. Plum Duff Walsh, Ph.D., Jim Walsh's intellectual cat, is known to friends and admirers as “Pony Boy” because he looks like a tiny gray and white pony when he trots down the street.

Once more it seems worth while to quote the words of a now almost forgotten Williams and Van Alstyne song:

“See that old time ranchman as he saunters from the train.
Oh, oh, what glad surprise!
See that hearty handshake as he greets his friend again.
Tears dim his beady eyes!
‘Lord, them lights do shore look pretty!
Long time since I've seen the city!
Where's that gal you brought away with you?’
City chap says: ‘Don't mind her! I don't want to ever find her!
Cowboy, tell me where's your brother Lou?’
He swelled his chest, brushed his vest, pointed West!”

REFRAIN

“‘In the Land of the Buffalo, where the western breezes blow;
Where the goodnight kiss of sunlight sets all the plain aglow—
It was there you discovered your Flo.
In the days of long ago,
But you never knew Brother Lou loved her, too.
In the Land of the Buffalo!’
“‘He's alone out there tonight, and pal, he's getting gray!
You know the reason why.
Where the howling Ki-oats seem to laugh at him and say:
‘Oh, oh why don't you die?’
She to him was eighteen carat, but he says he'll grin and bear it,

That perhaps the girl was meant for you;
But as long as you have thrown her and you say that you don't own her,
Can't you find her for my Brother Lou?
I'll pay her fare, on the square,
‘way out there!’”

REPEAT REFRAIN

Somehow I have a feeling that Brother Lou should have left well enough alone and contented himself with being deprived of “Flo's” companionship!

Although there are weak spots in the words, Williams achieves some brilliant effects, as with “he swelled his chest, brushed his vest, pointed West.” There is a genuine touch of poetry, too, in “Where the goodnight kiss of sunlight sets all the plain aglow” although it is completely out of character, coming from the lips of a rough-and-tough old ranchman, who has already spoken naturally by saying, “Lord, them lights do shore look pretty!” On the other hand, the line about “she to him was eighteen carat” seems painfully contrived, and “I'll pay her fare, on the square, ‘way out there” appears dragged in just to make a triple rhyme. But who am I to be discussing an old-time Tin Pan Alley song about the long gone “Wild West” as if it were a contribution to American literary history!

“In the Land of the Buffalo” was only moderately successful and if Williams and Van Alstyne wrote any more cowboy songs afterwards I can't recall them.

(Continued on next page)

II. "Ida-Ho!" and "Broncho Buster"

In order to consider successively the Williams and Van Alstyne cowboy songs, "In the Land of the Buffalo" was discussed slightly out of chronological order. Now, let's go back to March, 1907, by which time Harry Von Tilzer, then considered the top American song writer, had invaded Harry and Egbert's cowboy songs monopoly and written "Ida-Ho!"

The Von Tilzer number was not destined to be a smashing success, but in March, Zon-o-phone issued it (on No. 683) not as a vocal number, but as a "march and two-step" played by Fred Hager's Orchestra. Said the supplement:

"Breezy catchy two-step typifying the wild free life of the Western cowboy. The clatter of the Broncho's hooves and the yells of the Cowboys make this indeed a realistic number."

When the double-faced records were introduced, Zon-o-phone coupled "Ida-Ho!" with "My Kickapoo Queen," by the Zon-o-phone Orchestra, on No. 5279. Perhaps it should be mentioned that the name of "Hager's Orchestra" was dropped when the double-faces came out, and Zon-o-phone Orchestra was substituted.

In April, Edison announced a cylinder, No. 9520, of "Ida-Ho!" sung by Billy Murray, who was holding on to his cowboy songs monopoly, but assisted by the Edison Male Quartet, which was known as the Haydn on Victor discs. The New Phonogram, in describing the cylinder, quoted the refrain. It certainly doesn't make intellectual reading:

"A Western song called the 'Melodious Cyclone,' that has been sweeping the country and is now popular from coast to coast . . . The chorus runs thus:

"Ida-Ho! whoa! don't go so fast, dear;
My horse won't last, dear, so please go slow
My Ida-Ho, I'll kiss you if I catch you—Won't you stay, dear? Don't run away, dear—
My Ida-Ho!"

Columbia also issued "Ida-Ho!" on two-minute cylinder No. 33113, sung, of course, by Billy Murray, but if the number appeared on a disc I have not been able to find a reference to it. Victor passed it by.

In October, 1907, another tenor was given a chance to relate the adventures of a dashing cowpuncher, when Victor issued No. 5224, "Broncho Buster," which was sung by Harry Tally, lead tenor of the famous Empire City Quartet. This record has puzzled me, because the Victor catalog attributed its composition solely to "Madden." Edward Madden was well known as a lyric writer for Theodore Morse and Percy Wenrich, but I had not heard of his composing music.

Yet in this instance he seems to have done so. The ASCAP Index of Songs written by its members says Madden contrived the music of "Broncho Buster" and Dorothy Jardon, who was his wife, the words. This is rather surprising, because Dorothy Jardon had a successful career as an opera and concert singer. I doubt that she ever appeared with the Metropolitan, but she sang soprano roles for the Chicago Opera Company. She was also one of the first Brunswick recording artists. The name Jardon, doesn't sound Hebraic to me, but the singer probably was Jewish, for she recorded "Eili Eili" and "Jahrzeit." With this background it is at least intriguing to find her writing the words of a cowboy ditty, whose refrain begins, "Broncho Buster, why don't you trust her?" then continues: "She's no shy goose—jump on your cayuse, carry her off to Denver town!" (Those last two words, "Denver Town," may have suggested the title of a song which will be discussed later.)

The words tell of how the bashful

Your Treasured Antique Music Box DESERVES THE BEST

We offer complete repair service. Teeth properly installed & tuned to scale. Cylinders repinned promptly (no more months or years wait). Worn parts replaced. These rare instruments restored to original condition by experts. All work guaranteed.—Free estimates & lists.

BORNAND MUSIC BOX SPECIALISTS

Originally Established Switzerland—1825

139 4th Ave., Pelham, N.Y. 10803.

914 PE. 8-1506
my77c

MISCELLANEOUS MUSICAL

THEATRE Pipe Organ Nostalgia—Memorabilia Wanted. — Alden Miller, 3212 34th Avenue South, Minneapolis, Minn. 55406 jsl20801

WANT RCS Victor Advertising Dog, Edison Idelia Phonograph, coin operated phonographs. — Ken Blazier, 2937 Elde St., Duarte, CA 91010 f122151

Sheet Music, Cylinders, 78S, 45S, 33-1/3S. Research done on all fields of music. Send me your want lists.—A. M. Walton, 4 Wexford Rd., Gibbstown, N.J. 08026 mh120843

Send $1 (refundable first order) for our latest big catalog—it's jammed with all sorts of neat goodies! Service manuals, books, catalog reprints, LP records music boxes, funny signs, etc. having to do with:

Theatre organs, player pianos, gambling machines, old cars, juke boxes and stuff that hobbyists love.

THE VESTAL PRESS

P.O. Box 97
Vestal 2, NY 13850
(publishers of "Jesse Crawford: Wizard of the WurliTzer") so

PHONOGRAPHS

PHONOGRAPHS repaired: New spare parts for Edison phonographs. Send stamp for list. Phone: (201) 748-8046. — Gerichten, 23 Waldo, Ave. Bloomfield, N.J. 07003 jly124851

VICTOR TALKING MACHINE Repair Manual, illustrated, 64 pages, Facsimile Edition, only $4.95 ppd. Send 2 stamps for free lists of other Antique phonograph and record memorabilia. — Allen H. Koenigsberg, 3400 Snyder, Brooklyn, N.Y. 11203. d60621

AN HONEST TO GOSH 1926 MUSIC STORE. Plus a few more items covering everything from EDISON TO ELVIS. Vintage phonographs, Victor, Edison, Columbia, Brunswick & other floor and table models. We carry needles, dusters, and books, discographies, and thousands of 78's, cylinders, and our prices are 1926 style. Sheet music, band charts and out of print LP's. Put your Wants on a 3x5 card for our files and we'll try to help. Try the — Olde Tyme Music Scene in Boonton, located at 917 Main St. That's New Jersey, folks. Phone 201-335-5040. Closed Monday and Tuesday. d96705

CYLINDER & Disc Phonographs, parts and related items. Desc. & price. — Reader, 18300 Locust Ave., Patterson, CA 95363 my126921

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WANTED

OLD FLUTES—Wood, Metal. Description, manufacturer, photo. — Kornblit, 902 Frostdwood Houston, Texas jsl2639

USED MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS — Bought — Sold — Iammarino, 9265 S.W. 43rd St., Miami Fla. 33165 dl2639

JIM WALSH SPEAKS—BILLY MURRAY ENTERTAINS

Tape—Cassette—8-Track

Two completely different one-hour programs narrated by "Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists" author, Jim Walsh. Lots of great Billy Murray recordings with authoritative background information.

A rare and unique production well recorded, quality produced.

Specify program 1 or 2 and tape, cassette, or 8-track cartridge.

Each Program $6.50, Postpaid

Both Programs $12.00, Postpaid

MERRITT SOUND RECORDING

223 Grimsby Road

Buffalo, New York 14223

SC

(Continued on page 117)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 36)

Broncho Buster at the urging of his fellow cowboys kissed a seemingly puritanical cowgirl who drew her .44, made him convey her on the cayuse to Denver, and then compelled a parson, at gunpoint, to marry them. One of the rhymes is, "Go on and lasso her; somebody else will woo her," showing that the author pronounced "lasso" as "lass-soo." We shall meet this pronunciation again.

"Broncho Buster" did not fare particularly well as a solo recording, for only Victor seems to have made it so available. It was used, however, as the "opening chorus" of "Victor Minstrels No. 9," issued in March, 1908, as No. 5363. The principal song in this miniature minstrel offering was "Pride of the Prairie," whose turn is coming to be considered in detail. This record was by the group known as the Rambler Minstrels on Columbia and Zon-o-phone records—Murray, Porter, Collins and Harlan—and the supplement said:

"A new aggregation of comedy talent which introduces itself with a bright, witty and musical three-minute minstrel entertainment. These 'condensed minstrels' are among the most popular records in the whole Victor list."

In April, an eight-inch version was offered, with the same number, and the ten-inch eventually became one side of No. 16763, when it was coupled with "Victor Minstrels No. 8." Zon-o-phone issued "Broncho Buster" as part of Rambler Minstrels No. 9, combined with No. 10 on double-faced disc 5139, and the song was the opening chorus of the Edison "Model Minstrels," No. 10135, announced in May, 1909.

Madden's "Broncho Buster" was not the only composition of that name. In the autumn of 1908 Victor issued a "Broncho Buster March" as one face of No. 16308. The composer was Albert C. Sweet, a gifted musician who made cornet records for Edison from about 1899 to 1902, and who for many years had his own band, which traveled extensively as a feature of Chautauqua programs. The coupling was another instrumental number, "A Terrible Turk," composed by our familiar friend, Egbert Van Alstyne. Arthur Pryor's Band played both sides of the Victor disc.

Somewhere around the same time, there appeared on an Indestructible cylinder a march played by the Indestructible Military Band. The title is given in the late Dr. Duane D. Deakins' listing of Indestructible cylinders as "Broncho Bill," but the doctor was guilty of a great many typographical errors, and I suspect this should have been "Broncho Buster" and that it was Sweet's brain child. The number was 1021.

In the years that have followed there have been several others of the same or similar names, including "Broncho Bust," by Don Gillis, and two numbers called "Broncho Busters," one written by Louis and Howard C. Applebaum, and the other by the distinguished "brother act" of Ira and George Gershwin. There has also been a "Broncho Charlie," by Walter Melrose.

After having done fairly well with "Ida-Ho!" Harry Von Tilzer hit the Western trail again with "Sacramento," which Harry Tally sang in November, 1907, on Victor 5260. For the same supplement Tally recorded on No. 5258 another Von Tilzer number, "Bye-Bye, Dearie," a ballad that was especially popular as sung by the Empire City Quartet. A photo of the quartet appeared on the sheet music cover. "Sacramento" sold well enough to be taken into the double-faced catalog as No. 16156, combined with "The Stars, The Stripes and You," by Harry Macdonough, but its popularity was short-lived and it was cut out after 1911.

I have not found that any company except Victor made a record of "Sacramento." In June Victor came through with still another cowboy song, No. 5448, "When It's Moonlight on the Prairie," credited to S. R. Henry (his real name was Henry R. Stern and he was born in New York City, June 23, 1874, and died in Dallas, Tex., March 13, 1966, just a bit short of his 92nd birthday) and sung by Harry Macdonough and the Haydn Quartet. The supplement described it as:

"A breezy Western love story set to music and sweetly sung by this favorite Victor tenor, with quartet refrain."

Mr. Macdonough and the quartet had another ballad in the same listing—the amazingly popular Ernest Ball classic, "Love Me and the World is Mine." It far outsold "Moonlight on the Prairie."

(To be continued)

THE COLLECTOR READS:

THE WORLD OF ANTIQUE ARTS, Orville Bourassa Rhoades. Gives a grasp of the antique arts from antiquity to yesterday. Covers 50 broad fields of collectors' arts in short, swift moving chapters. Comprehensive. Concise. Full of fascinating facts for collector, writer, student, business man, and housewife. Excellent for quick reference on the antique arts, their history, processes, qualities. Gives features to consider in collecting your antiques. Over 285 illustrations of museum pieces, many full page. Explanatory captions for each picture add valuable information. Extensive bibliography lists books by the masters of these antique arts. Excellent for shop, club, or home library. Basic. Informative. Cultural. Will not get out of fashion. Blue cloth binding. Gold decoration and lettering. An ideal gift, $7.50.

THE ARTS OF THE TIFFANYS, by Gertrude Speenburgh. A warm human interest story about the Tiffanys, and their artistic wares. It is Americana that will appeal to the casual reader, but for the collector it is a must. It contains such chapters as Art of Silversmithing, The Tiffanys — Men of Many Facets, Louis C. Tiffany & The Painter, The Story behind Favrite Glass, Art of True Stained Glass, Art of Jewelry and Enamels, Louis Comfort Tiffany, Laurelton Hall — Art of Magnificent Living, etc. The story is told concisely in 120 pages, with about 27 illustrations of views of Tiffany collectors items, and Laurelton Hall, $5.

THE CURIOUS HISTORY OF MUSIC BOXES, Roy Mosoriak. The first book written about the first automatic musical instrument of wide use in the world. Tells how the music box was finally invented, how the makers, inventors and craftsmen of several countries competed to perfect the music box and thus bring music into the homes of thousands of people where it had never been before. Describes and illustrates great rarities in the antiquarian world: Mechanical action — scene pocket watches, music playing watches; musical snuff boxes; gold gem-studded miniatures and mechanical action scenes and music; musical dolls, clocks, mechanical musical singing birds; all types of cylinder and disc music boxes which antedated the phonograph or "speaking-machine" invented by Thomas A. Edison. Checklist of clockmakers, watchmakers, makers of automata and inventors, checklist of all U.S. Patents for music boxes; music box musicology checklist of manufacturers, bibliography, index. 242 pages. 133 half tone illustrations. Many items never before pictured. 232 pp size 9x12 inches, $5.00.

HOBBIES MAGAZINE
1006 S. Michigan
Chicago, Ill. 60605

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

“Cowboy Song” Recordings

PART V

By JIM WALSH

(This article is dedicated to the memory of the late Fred Harrington, of Traverse City, Mich., who read it in manuscript and looked forward eagerly to seeing it in print. Unfortunately, that was not to be, but Fred will long be remembered as a loyal friend and for his dedicated research concerning old records and pioneer recording artists.)

IV. “Pride of the Prairie”

We come now to a special favorite of mine — one of the best of all cowboy songs. Musically, it is the equal of “Cheyenne.” The melody may be even a bit more haunting. The words, however, are not the equal of Harry Williams’ clever composition, and this alone keeps me from rating it on a par with the earlier number that obviously inspired it.

The lyric of “Pride of the Prairie” was by Henry J. Breen, who was not above indulging in assonance, such as matching “own” with “home,” and using such hackneyed rhymes as “home” and “roam.” The tune was by George Botsford, a composer with a thorough knowledge of music, who for several years wrote the arrangements of songs recorded by such popular male quartets as the Peerless, American and Haydn. (John Meyer afterwards did the Peerless arrangements.) One thing that gives the “Mary” song its ear-arresting quality is that it is mostly written in a minor key. Incidentally, Breen was not the only lyric writer to whom the idea of combining “Mary” with “Prairie” had occurred. In 1907 somebody named A. Trevelyan came out with an unsuccessful effort called “Mary of the Prairie.”

I have particularly personal associations with “Pride of the Prairie” because when I was a tiny tot visiting my grandparents, my aunt Ruby Wrenn, who was my mother’s half-sister as she cooked supper would lustily sing the cowboy ballad, which she had learned as a girl. I can see her now, singing and occasionally lifting one foot to kick the oven door shut. I was so small that when she caroled, “Out on the wild and woolly prairie . . . there lived a little girl named Mary,” my imagination brought before me a female child about two years of age and wearing a red dress. I certainly didn’t imagine Mary being old enough to run away and marry a cowboy.

Let’s set down the words of “Pride of the Prairie” for comparison with “Cheyenne”:

“Out on the wild and woolly prairie,
Not far from old Pueblo town,
There lived a little girl,
Blue eyes and tresses of brown.
From o’er the plains there rode a cowboy
Who said, ‘Please name our el in’ da’.
She bowed her head and whispered, ‘Now, boy!’ Then on their broncho they rode away.
They rode away, one summer’s day.”

REFRAIN

“Pride of the Prairie, Mary, my own,
Jump up beside me, ride to my home!
My heart’s been lassoed, no more we’ll roam Pride of the Prairie, Mary!”

For a brief analytical disquisition concerning the lyrics, I will point out that the second line, “not far from old Pueblo town,” is metrically defective. To keep the rhythm going the singer is obliged to pronounce the name of the town in three syllables as “Pyou-EB-lo,” when the correct pronunciation, as Billy Murray, who grew up in Colorado, certainly knew, is “Pweb-lo.” On the other hand, Billy oddly pronounces “lassoed” as “lassooed,” as Harry Tally, had in “Broncho Buster,” although Webster’s New International and other dictionaries give “lass-so” and “lass-sowed” as the only approved versions. I wonder if there was a time when some Westerners said “lass-soo,” or whether it simply “sang better.”

Perhaps Breen’s best touch is matching “cowboy” and “now, boy.” The “own,” “home” and “roam” business is certainly weak, but John Howard Payne was guilty of rhyming the latter two in “Home, Sweet Home” and thousands of other scribblers have committed the same offense, often with “foam” thrown in for un-

(Continued on page 53)

PREMIER QUARTET

Their Records Are Always Popular Numbers in the Edison Catalog

INITIAL RECORDING — “Denver Town,” a cowboy song by George L. Botsford, was the first song waxed by this group, known as the Premier Quartet on Edison records and as the American on Victor.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 34)

wanted good measure. The "plot," of course, is a "steal" from "Cheyenne" — the same old cowboy riding up on a bronco, asking the girl to marry him, obtaining her shy consent, and their riding away together in search of a man of the cloth to cement their union.

Victor seems to have been ahead of any other company in recording "Pride of the Prairie." It, however, was not issued as a separate selection, but as part of the already mentioned "Victor Minstrels No. 9," with the verse sung by Billy Murray assisted by a chorus in the refrain. As was said when discussing "Broncho Buster," the 10-inch size came out in March, 1908, and the eight-inch in April.

Columbia's versions by the Columbia (Peerless) Quartet, with the solo taken by Frank C. Stanley, were announced in the quarterly record supplement for June, July and August, 1908. The cylinder was No. 33227 and the disc, 3769. The description boldly proclaimed the number to be the best cowboy song thus far published. It said:

"The best song of the Western plains that has been produced. It is full of the fine, broad swing of 'cowboy' music, which is rapidly becoming the leading feature of the big musical successes. It is strong, tuneful and lively."

The single-faced version was made available just before double-faced Columbia records were introduced, and was soon combined on A433 with Arthur Collins' inimitable rendition of George M. Cohan's "coon song," "If I'm Goin' to Die I'm Goin' to Have Some Fun."

The Peerless also sang "Pride of the Prairie" for Zon-o-phone, and it was listed in August, 1908. Proclaimed the supplement writer:

"1124 . . . A little love episode of the Western prairie, splendidly presented, the several voices being clear and distinct."

Zon-o-phone's "Pride" was combined on No. 5424 with "Tenting On the Old Camp Ground," also sung by the Peerless. The quartet likewise recorded the number on Indestructible cylinder No. 748.

Zon-o-phone included "Pride of the Prairie" in No. 1172, "Popular Chorus Medley No. 3," issued in October 1908, just before double-faced records came in. The medley includes the refrains of a Teddy Morse song, "Santiago Flynn"; "New Tipperary," "Pride of —" as a bells solo; "My Dream of the U. S. A." and "All She gets From the Iceman is Ice." It was combined on 5292 with "Isle of Spice Medley."

Edison did not offer a cylinder of George Botsford's bewitching Western tune until October, 1908, when it took its place in the list as No. 9968, sung by Billy Murray and Chorus. The following appeared in The New Phonogram:

"The past summer brought out some clever popular songs, but none to take the public fancy more than 'Pride of the Prairie.' It is just the stripe of song that sets the gallery whistling. Billy Murray and chorus sing it with a whirlwind flourish that rivals the speed of the broncho on which Miss Mary and her cowboy lover rode away."

V. English Versions

English record companies did not as a rule go in strongly for recording "cowboy songs," but they let down the barriers when "Pride of the Prairie" came along. Far more than its counterparts, it became a British hit and remained a favorite for a surprising number of years, long after its American vogue had died. Such things happened fairly often to American songs in England. As an example, after Richard Gerard and Harry Armstrong composed the immortal "You're the Flower of My Heart, Sweet Adeline" (usually referred to by the last two words of the title), they wrote a successor a couple of years later for which they hoped equally good things. It was called "You're My Heart's Desire, I Love You, Nellie Dean," but the name for obvious reasons was shortened to "Nellie Dean." Unlike "Sweet Adeline," this ballad never became more than moderately successful in the States, but it was a big hit in England and remains a favorite today.

The same thing was true of "Pride of the Prairie." It was more popular in the British Isles than in the States, and more extensively recorded.

No doubt there were English records of Botsford's Western tune that I haven't discovered. The first detailed reference I have unearthed was in the Sound Wave for January, 1910, when Zon-o-phone No. X42962 was reviewed. This interpretation of "Pride of the Prairie" was sung by Ernest Pike under the assumed name of "Herbert Payne." Pike was then the most popular tenor making records in England, as Henry Burr was over here. The review went:

"Out on the wild and woolly prairie . . . there lived a little girl named Mary. Hardly needful to remark that the 'Fairly Prince' in due course entered the enchanted Palace — of her affections — in guise of a Cowboy (on a mustang, we presume, though not mentioned.) The verses are set to a distinctly ear-arresting tune, 6-8 time, in the minor mainly. Sung with much taste and excellent reproduction. It can hardly fail to be as great a 'record' success with the public as in the now-running 'pantos.'"

The latter sentence may be interpreted for American readers as meaning that the song was a great success in that peculiarly English form of entertainment known as "the pantomime." The reviewer must not have listened closely or he would not have referred to a "mustang" not being mentioned. True, that word was not used, but the cowboy was mounted on the broncho upon which he and Mary rode to be made man and wife.

I was interested to note that in February, 1910, an English comedian, Fred Vernon, sang "I Want to Go to Idaho," which was for many years a favorite with the late G. H. Elliott, "The Chocolate - Colored Coon," as he styled himself, who frequently recorded it. I am not familiar with the words but the name at least suggests some cowboy association. Another favorite song in England, which mentioned Idaho, was Leslie Stuart's "Little Dolly Daydream." "Dolly" was "the pride of Idaho," just as Mary was "the pride of the prairie." Is it possible that "Dolly Daydream" helped to give Breen and Botsford the idea for their "Prairie" song, which seems so closely modeled, thematically, on "Cheyenne"? Other English records of "Pride of the Prairie," included Homophone 700, sung by Vernon and coupled with "Put On Your Old Green Bonnet"; Columbia 26791 by another popular British comedian, Harry Fay, and combined on Rena 1311 with Fay singing, "Meet Me Where the Lanterns Glow"; and HMV 1505, pairing a rendition by an unnamed "vocal quartet" with that beloved old "chestnut," "Silver Threads Among the Gold." No doubt "The Pride" was first made available in single-faced form, for there were no double-faced HMV vocal records when it first came out.

But perhaps the most interesting version was the one on Zon-o-phone double-faced record No. 72. It had originally been issued on the short-lived "Twins" record and was taken into the Zon-o-phone catalog when the Zono and "Twins" labels were combined. Described as a "solo and quartet," the disc was sung by Misses Mary Evans and Florence Saville and Messrs. James Bell and Arthur Gray — presumably soprano, contralto, tenor and baritone or bass. No indication is given as to who sang the solo. On the reverse side was "Comrades in Arms," by the "Twins" Male Quartet, concerning whom I have no information. Apparently the single-faced version by Payne was dropped from the Zono catalog in favor of this. And it is possible that the "vocal quartet" that made the HMV record was the same as the "Twins"—Zono group.

English pantomime and music hall audiences are proverbially faithful to veteran performers and continue to applaud them as long as they are able to stand. The same thing seems to have been true of record buyers. That mixed quartet rendition of "Pride of the Prairie" remained in the Zon-o-phone catalog for more than 20 years and was still there, half a dozen years after electrical recording took over. And then what happened? Why, instead of discontinuing "Pride of the Prairie," the company had it re-made electrically by the Zon-o-phone Concert Quartet, composed of Esther Coleman, Megan Thomas, Herbert Thorpe and Foster Richardson. It was issued in the new form in March, 1931 as No. 5821. By that time it had been close to 20 years since "Pride of the Prairie" could be found in any current American record list. The coupling remained "Comrades in Arms," and was also sung by the Zon-o-phone Concert Quartet, which was, or who were, described as "wireless favorites." Presumably the electric re-make remained in the catalog as long as the Zon-o-phone, or

(Continued on next page)

Regal-Zon-o-phone, label was still being used for 78RPM recordings.

VI. "Denver Town" and Others

By the time "Pride of the Prairie" appeared the "cowboy song" vogue was passing its peak, but was not yet over. In July, 1908, Edison issued a Standard two-minute cylinder, No. 9882, of a song called "Topeka," sung by Frederic H. Potter, tenor, and a male quartet, but, despite its name, this dealt with an Indian brave and his lady love rather than with, as I imagined, a cowboy and his girl heading for Topeka, Kansas, with wedlock in mind.

In November, 1908, Edison came through with a song which had been written to give Western ditties a humorous twist. The number was 9984, "I'm a Yiddish Cowboy," with words by Edgar Leslie and music by Halsey K. Mohr and Al Piantadosi, and it was sung by Edward Meeker on No. 9984. The New Phonogram remarked:

"A dandy new cowboy song with Indian effects galore. Among them—the tom tom, cowboy chorus, cowboy and Indian yells, hoof beats etc. — and all so plain and realistic that one can almost smell the alkali. . ."

Songs in Yiddish dialect were seldom popular with record buyers, and "Yiddish Cowboy" was no exception. It flopped. I know of no recording of it other than Meeker's.

The first four-minute Edison Amberol cylinder whose title suggests that it falls into the cowboy genre was issued in July, 1909. It was No. 157, "My Rancho Maid," composed and sung by Mabel McKinley Baer, who was a niece of President William McKinley and called herself Mabel McKinley for stage purposes. She was the composer of the great Indian song hit, "Anona," and also wrote other successes, including "Karama — a Japanese Rhapsody" and "Golden Rod." Quoting from The New Phonogram:

"Another of Miss McKinley's own compositions and as pleasing in words and melody as her others. Her rendition of this song is as charming as that of 'Golden Rod' and 'Anona,' given in the May and June lists. . ."

In an old scrapbook I found a picture of Mabel McKinley. It apparently had been clipped about half a century ago from some newspaper's Sunday rotogravure section. How long that old clipping has remained quietly there, I do not know! "My Rancho Maid" fell far short of being a hit.

Shortly before Miss McKinley's record was announced, Breen and Botsford had decided that since "Pride of the Prairie" had done so well it should have a follow-up. So they gave vent to a variant—the already mentioned "Denver Town" — whose title must have been suggested by the last line of the refrain of "Broncho Buster," "carry her off to Denver Town." The refrain of the later song concluded: "Tell your pony that your heart is lonely. He'll take you flying into Denver Town." The indebtedness appears obvious.

As for the "story" of "Denver

Mabel McKinley Baer, niece of President McKinley, "who sang at the American Memorial last Sunday."

"GIT ALONG LITTLE DOGIES." Victor's first recording of a traditional cowboy song was "Whoopie Ti Yi Yo," announced in the monthly supplement for July, 1923. It was sung by the eminent basso, Wilfred Glenn, and a male chorus.

Town," it tells of a "cattle king" who "lived alone in his glory." Then a maiden from Denver invaded his neck of the prairie. Her pony fell as she neared the ranchman; they fell in love; eventually rode to Denver to be married, and "now there's a little cattle king," to whom his father sang the refrain of the song. I hope he apologized to his son for Mr. Breen's bad rhyme of "pony" and "lonely," though perhaps some would find this a relief as a switch from "pony and Tony."

Although "Denver Town" fell short of the success of "Pride of the Prairie," it was recorded by Victor, Edison, Columbia and U. S. Everlasting, and has a bit of historical importance as the first record made by the male voiced ensemble that was known as the American Quartet on Victor records and the Premier on Edison cylinders. (Victor revived the American Quartet name, which had been used from about 1900 to 1902 by another group consisting of Albert Campbell, first tenor; W. T. Leahy, second tenor; S. H. Dudley, baritone, and William F. Hooley, bass. The new American Quartet was John Bieling, first tenor, Billy Murray, second tenor; Steve Porter, baritone, and Hooley, bass.)

"Denver Town" was announced in the Victor supplement for May, 1909, in these words:

"A new organization of male voices which makes its bid for favor with a 'cowboy' number now quite in vogue. No praise for this new quartet is needed here, as the record speaks for itself, the voices being well balanced, the words distinct and the music sung with spirit and precision."

Soon afterward it was proclaimed that the American Quartet made discs only for the Victor. This was true because Murray, Bieling and Hooley all were under exclusive Victor contract for the "flat" records. Porter was at liberty to free-lance. A year or so later "Denver Town" was combined on double-faced record No. 16524 with the old favorite descriptive specialty, "A Night Trip to Buffalo," which had been re-made by the American group. Do you suppose "The Denver Nightingale" felt homesick when he recorded the song about his "old town"?

Edison's two-minute cylinder, No. 10155, came out in June, and The New Phonogram writer seems to have been guilty of an odd slip in saying:

"Another cowboy song, telling how a cowboy wooed and won his bride. It is sung by a new combination of artists, including WILL OAKLAND, John H. Bieling, (Sic!), Billy Murray and W. F. Hooley. . ."

Surely the annotator meant to say Steve Porter instead of Will Oakland, for who ever heard of a male quartet consisting of a counter-tenor, a first tenor, a second tenor and a bass? I haven't heard the Edison cylinder, but Porter instead of Oakland certainly sings in the Victor disc. And the combination that included Porter made the Premier Quartet cylinders for the next five years, until Bieling's place was taken by John Young.

Columbia's version of "Denver," sung by the Columbia (Peerless) Quartet, was listed in June, 1909, coupled with "Dancing Sunshine," sung by Henry Burr and Frank C. Stanley, and described as "the best Indian song since 'Rainbow.'" Concerning "Denver Town" the supplement said:

"A rollicking cowboy song with the breezy spirit of the West shining from its every note. After a few preliminary shouts which punctuate the orchestral introduction, the 'cow-punchers' gather and set a lively pace to the end of the selection, which is in quartet form throughout."

The U. S. Everlasting cylinder, No. 218, was sung by William H. Thompson, a baritone who was prominent in musical productions and a prolific recorder in the early days of the phonograph. He served briefly as recording partner for such singers as Albert Campbell, Frank M. Coombs and Will Oakland. Will told me that his duets with Thompson were not especially successful, because Thompson's voice was too heavy to blend well with his high counter-tenor tones.

(To be continued)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

"Cowboy Song" Recordings

PART VI

By JIM WALSH

(This article is dedicated to the memory of the late Fred Harrington, of Traverse City, Mich., who read it in manuscript and looked forward eagerly to seeing it in print. Unfortunately, that was not to be, but Fred will long be remembered as a loyal friend and for his dedicated research concerning old records and pioneer recording artists.)

VII. "Pony Boy" and "Ragtime Cowboy Joe"

Many cowboy songs, of course, were written but not recorded. They, however, are not being much considered in this survey. And by the time 1910 arrived the torrent of cowboy tunes had slowed to a trickle.

Even so, late 1909 brought a real hit in "My Pony Boy"—nearly always referred to simply as "Pony Boy"—the words of which were written by Charlie O'Donnell, and the music by Bobby Heath. I have a peculiarly personal association with this composition, because my intellectual cat, Prof. Plum Duff Walsh, Ph.D., (see illustration, July issue of HOBBIES) is familiarly known to his friends as "Pony Boy." They say he looks like a little gray and white pony when he comes galloping down the sidewalk after going up the street to call on his friend, "Siamese" Marshall. ("Siamese's" given name is Ming).

I'll guess that Columbia was first with a "Pony Boy" record. My file of 1909 Columbia supplements is incomplete, and I don't have one in which the song is listed, but its number, A713, appears to indicate it came out in, or about, September. The coupling was "Good Night, Moonlight," one of Theodore Morse's melodious march numbers, and both sides were sung by the Columbia Quartet. At around the same time, "Pony Boy" was made by the quartet on Indestructible cylinder No. 1198.

Edison's four-minute Amberol cylinder version, by Ada Jones, came out in October, 1909. "The New Phonogram" termed it:

"A cowboy song with all the characteristic effects. The song gives Miss Jones another opportunity to display her wonderful versatility. A chorus of male voices adds to the attractiveness of the record."

Victor's "Pony Boy" was No. 16356 and was announced in November. It, too, was by Ada Jones and a male chorus, and its mating was "When

POPULAR HARMONIZERS—This greatest of very early recording quartets was known as the Haydn on Victor discs and as the Edison Male Quartet on Edison cylinders. For Victor it sang a cowboy song, "When It's Moonlight On the Prairie."

"I Marry You" Medley," by the Victor Orchestra. The supplement's description was brief:

"A new cowboy song, given by Miss Jones with quartet chorus and incidental effects, doubled with a lively medley of four popular song hits, given in this order: 'When I Marry You,' 'I Wish I Had a Girl,' 'Take Me Out for a Joy Ride' and 'My Wife's Gone to the Country.'"

"Pony Boy" today is better remembered than most of the cowboy songs that preceded or followed it.

Next, in our procession of cowboy songs and skits, we resurrect the unforgettable Len Spencer, who in 1907 had written "Broncho Bob and His Little Cheyenne," and in 1910 elected to have another crack at the cowpokes. In November that year, Edison issued a four-minute Amberol record of Spencer's sketch, "A Cowboy Romance," in which he had the assistance of Ada Jones and the Premier Quartet. "The New Phonogram" gave it an enthusiastic send-off:

"A descriptive record, reproducing with the aid of clever effects, an episode of the prairie—an exciting race in the moonlight for the hand of an Idaho maid. Leading up to the thrilling climax, which is made wonderfully realistic by the clatter of hooves, the whinnying of horses and the 'yippling' of the cowboys, there is a bit of comedy, some male quartet work and a serenade song (tenor) with banjo accompaniment . . ."

The record has the group of imaginary cowboys racing against "Ida," the ranchman's daughter (Miss Jones), with the understanding that if anyone overtakes her she will marry him. Billy Murray is cast as "Bill," the winning suitor, and Spencer gives details of the race as it progresses. The late John Bieling told me that the sketch had to be done so many times before a satisfactory record was produced that he acquired a throat irritation from the repeated "yippling" and was hoarse for several weeks. He said he attributed the beginning of the voice ailment which caused him to give up record making in 1914 to the strain put upon his throat in making this cylinder.

"A Cowboy Romance" remained in the Edison catalog until the Blue Amberol cylinders were introduced

(Continued on page 127)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

(Continued from page 35)

late in 1912, then was dropped. But, seven years later, Edison dug out the old moulds and the skit appeared in the December, 1919, Blue Amberol list. Probably, seeing Len Spencer pop up in the monthly supplement, a good many Edison fans wondered if the stories they had been hearing for years, about his having died in December, 1914, were false. They were not. Spencer was dead, but a number of his old cylinders were dusted off and remade.

Cowpunchers and cowgirls descended from their bronchos in the popular songs of 1910-11 and took a back seat in the ranch house or elsewhere. Almost nothing with a cowboy flavor was recorded. In August, 1911, Edison issued an Amberol, No. 748, of a talking specialty by Murry K. Hill, "Back to Arizona," but I can't tell from the description whether it had anything to do with traditional cowboy topics.

Then, as a sort of expiring gasp, there came, in 1912, one of the best of the cowpoke tunes—a comic number which is still popular with Western style and "hill-billy" string bands—"Ragtime Cowboy Joe"—written by those veteran Broadway Westerners, Sam M. Lewis, Lewis F. Muir and Maurice Abrahams. The latter became the husband of Belle Baker, the vaudeville singing star. Victor's version of the song about the "rootin', tootin' son of a gun from Arizona," was issued as No. 17090 in July, 1912, and was sung by Bob Roberts, whose recording popularity by that time was in decline. Roberts, by the way, when "Cheyenne" started the craze for cowboy songs in 1906, was baritone of a popular vaudeville attraction, the Big City Quartet. He must have had a busy time, singing in vaudeville as well as making records for all the important American phonograph companies. He also sometimes competed in automobile races.

After "Ragtime Bob" had made scores of Edison cylinders and had been one of the company's most popular singers, he tried out late in 1914 or early in 1915 for a place on the Diamond Disc recording staff. In January, 1915, Mr. Edison turned him down with the surprising verdict: "No! Can't interpret; can't sing." Yet Roberts had given satisfaction on Edison records for many years previously.

With all due respect to Thomas A. Edison, I emphatically disagree with his verdict and consider Bob Roberts, like Eddie Morton, to have been one of the best comedians who ever recorded.

The Victor record of "Ragtime Cowboy Joe" had "That Slippery Slide Trombone," sung by the American Quartet, for its companion. This was the work of our inexhaustible friends, Harry Williams and Egbert Van Alstyne, and came just before the end of their partnership. It is an extremely amusing and catchy number, with some wonderful work for the slide trombone and it, so far as I can judge by his purrs, is the favorite record of Professor Plum Duff Walsh, Ph.D. The supplement said:

"Here is one of the funniest numbers Williams and Van Alstyne have ever written, and being just suited to the American bunch, they simply cut loose and sing the number as though they really enjoyed it. On the other side, Bob Roberts gives a new cowboy song, which looks like another 'Pony Boy.'"

Edison seems to have issued an Amberol cylinder, No. 1140 of "Ragtime Cowboy Joe," sung by Edward Meeker, but it was announced in October, 1912, the same month that Blue Amberols were introduced, and can have had only a negligible sale. It was not taken into the Blue Amberol list, which means that it was discontinued almost before it was catalogued. This was strange treatment for so popular a song. It seems that it would almost automatically have become a Blue Amberol big seller. Another surprise is that Columbia didn't issue a "Ragtime Cowboy Joe" record. Among 1912 versions, the Victor stands virtually alone, and Bob Roberts sings it as well as anybody could.

It amuses me that in 1926, Al Bernard and Sammy Stept wrote a song called "Yodelin' Cowboy Joe," which was openly modeled on the ragtime cowboy of 11 or 12 years before, although Joe the Yodeler lived in Idaho instead of Arizona. Bernard and Frank Kamplain sang "Yodelin' Cowboy Joe" on Okeh record No. 40793 to Stept's piano accompaniment. The other side, "We'll Go Up in Dose Mountains," was another rendition by, and composition of, "The Record Boys," as Bernard, Kamplain and Stept were known. Kamplain did the yodeling on both sides.

A facetious item in a 1926 "Billboard" asserted that the principal pastime of the Record Boys was arguing on every conceivable subject. The writer jokingly said that he was putting Kamplain's name before Bernard's and Stept's because he knew that would touch off a violent discussion as to why the yodeler had been mentioned first. Perhaps this alleged arguing was the reason why the trio broke up late in 1927, shortly after "Yodelin' Cowboy Joe" was issued, and was reorganized with Kamplain as manager. The two new members were Lew Cobey and Tom Ford, who was better known on records as Lester O'Keefe.

"Ragtime Cowboy Joe" having proved a smash success, Maurice Abrahams decided on a follow-up. This time the lyricists were Edgar Leslie and Grant Clarke, and the song — not exactly a cowboy song, but built around a related theme — was "At That Bully Woolly Wild West Show," which Victor issued in February, 1914, on No. 17514, by the Peerless Quartet. The back-up was "The Pussy Cat Rag," by Ada Jones and the Peerless, who also made it for Columbia discs and Edison discs and cylinders. The cat ditty was more popular than its companion, which never acquired hit stature, and was not widely recorded. Pathé, just beginning its American activities, issued it, however, on B5040 as a one- or two-step by the Pathé Dance Orchestra. This was an 11½-inch disc, with "Do They Love It?" as its coupling. There was also a 14-inch, B8018, by the same orchestra, with "Peg o My Heart" for its teammate. In 1915 or 1916 the record numbers were changed to 30178 and 70091, respectively.

COWBOY COMEDY — Eddie Morton, known in vaudeville as "The Singing Policeman," made a fine record of a cowboy comic song classic, "The Last Shot Got Him."

At about the same time as "Ragtime Cowboy Joe" came out, a number of other cowboy songs were published but not recorded. I seem to remember one, in a 1912 William W. Delaney Song Book, written by some little known person and called "Alkali Ike." There was also an effort by a feminine composer, whose name I can't be sure of now, and I can't find the old song book to check. The writer may have been Edna May Williams, but I have a vague feeling that Blossom Seeley was involved. Anyway, the title was "Texas," and I remember the refrain rhymed "Texas and solar plexus"—something about "Texas, beneath my solar plexus there's a heart that's beating —" (The accuracy of this dimly remembered quotation is not guaranteed.) Of course there were hundreds or thousands of other unsuccessful efforts to perpetrate cowboy song hits.

Among them, Harry Von Tilzer published in 1912 a song called "Missouri Joe," whose name sounds as if it might have had a cowboy theme, but I am not familiar with it. Then, in 1929, Bob Miller, the Jewish composer of hill-billy tunes, recorded on Columbia 15529, under the name of Bob Ferguson and His Scalawaggers, an effusion also called "Missouri Joe." Miller gets credit on the label for writing the song, but I wonder if he may have revived the old Von Tilzer number. However, his record deals with the exploits of a Western hold-up man instead of a cowboy.

VIII. Traditional "Cowboy" Songs

This light-hearted survey was not begun with the intention of dealing extensively with the songs that arose among the cowboys themselves, but rather with the Tin Pan Alley epidemic that Williams and Van Alstyne inaugurated by writing "Cheyenne." Neither was it intended to deal with the "Western" music of the 1930's and 1940's, which was made popular by such singers as Gene Autry and remains popular today — things like "The Last Round-Up," "Leaning On the Old Top Rail" and "Don't Fence Me In." Names of similar outpourings could be listed indefinitely, but I have neither time, inclination nor space.

(Continued on next page)

Nevertheless, there should be at least a bow in the direction of the traditional cowboy songs. These became popular with buyers of "country style" music when they were electrically recorded in the 1920's by such artists as Vernon Dalhart, who grew up in Jefferson, Texas, and knew ranch life at first hand.

Research shows that the cowboy's ancient enemy, the American Indian, received recognition on records long before the cowpuncher's own mournful, nostalgic tunes were recorded. This was true also of popular music, for many songs with an Indian theme — "Hiawatha," "Anona," "Navajo," "Tammany" and uncountable others — were highly popular and widely sung before "Cheyenne" appeared. The Indian vogue lasted to some extent into the World War I period and beyond. There were even songs, such as "Indianola" and "Big Chief Killahun," about heap big chiefs enlisting in the American army and going abroad with the announced intention of tomahawking "old Kaiser Bill." I don't recall any about cowboys planning to rope and brand the Kaiser, but there may have been some. Of course, the country was flooded with compositions about black men volunteering to help make the world safe for democracy, and there was even one about "Bobby, the Bomber," a baseball pitcher who used his hurling skill to lob explosives at the "Huns."

In 1904 Victor issued a dozen seven-inch single-faced discs by Ho-Nü-Ses, an Iroquois brave, on which he sang Indian ceremonial songs. In 1914 the Glacier Park Indian singers made a few Victor records, and Geoffrey O'Hara, a composer as well as student of Indian music, recorded a sung and spoken Victor disc and an Edison Blue Amberol cylinder of the red man's tunes. Concert arrangements of native Indian themes by such composers as Charles Wakefield Cadman and Thurlow Lieurance were extensively recorded, some of them by Princess Watahwaso, a daughter of a Penobscot Indian chief. The princess died March 20, 1969, in a hospital in Bangor, Me. She was 86. Such "concertized" songs included "By the Waters of Minnetonka," "From the Land of the Sky Blue Water," "The Moon Drops Low," and "The White Dawn is Stealing."

In February, 1920, Columbia issued, on 12-inch disc No. A6131, two orchestrated versions of native Indian music arranged by Charles Sanford Skilton. One side contained the "War Dance" of the Cheyenne Indians and the other the "Deer Dance" of the Rogue River tribe. Both were played by the Columbia Orchestra. This was followed in October by A3092, on which Os-ke-non-ton, described as a Mohawk, sang a "War Song" and an "Every-Day Song," to drum accompaniment. The chief must also have recorded for Canadian Victor (he was a native of Canada), for HMV in England announced two recordings by him on No. B2083, apparently made about 1926. They were "Invocation to the Sun God" and "Peyote Drinking Song." HMV called Os-ke-non-ton a Navajo. A group of Hopi Indians made some electrically recorded Victors in the 1920's. These are merely characteristic examples and not a complete list.

The first disc of "handed-down" cowboy songs appears to have been issued by Columbia in September, 1919. It was No. A3085, and contained Bentley Ball's renditions of the time-honored "Jesse James" and "The Dying Cowboy." Mr. Ball was versatile. He also sang on A3083 some Omaha, Iroquois and Ojibway Indian songs, and on A3086, three Negro songs of the antebellum era — "Go Down, Moses," "O Graveyard" and "Peter, Go Ring Dem Bells." The supplement description of these records is worth quoting:

"Probably the most authentic collection of genuine American Folk Songs ever collected, and certainly ever recorded, is the following list of Columbia records by Bentley Ball. Mr. Ball has traveled over the entire country, collected these songs at their sources, and has sung them in his 'Song-a-Logues' throughout the United States. Mr. Ball is a singer of fine talent, a student of American Folk Songs, and the following records will have unusual interest to every American, whether young enough to be thrilled by 'Jesse James,' Indians and cowboys, or old enough to enjoy the genuine Negro spirituals and old minstrel songs. . . . The songs of our border days are less known but even more interesting than the songs of our Indians. 'Jesse James' and 'The Dying Cowboy' are genuinely thrilling 'ballads' of cowboy life in frontier days."

As best I recollect, Mr. Ball sang the two cowboy numbers more as a concert artist interpreting "art songs" than in the true rough and ready ranch house vein.

Victor's first authentic cowboy recording was not sung by a cowhand but by the eminent basso, Wilfred Glenn, assisted by the Shannon Quartet. It was issued on 19059 in July, 1923, and had the better known levee song, "I've Been Workin' on de Railroad," harmonized by the Shannon Quartet, for its backing. The Glenn side was called "Cowboy Song — Whoopee Ti Yi Yo," which most of us today probably know better as "Git Along, Little Dogies," but which a vast number insist on calling "Git Along, Little Doggies." Supplement Editor James E. Richardson's description was, as always, felicitous:

"Victor educational policies don't contemplate the over-loading of the juvenile—or the adult—brain. These are educational records, yes, but one is a genuine cowboy song, such as few Americans ever have heard of, much less heard; the other is a Mississippi work song. They are not products of the music markets, they belong with the sea-chantey and the 'come-all-ye'; as such, they are true American folk songs, and no American, born or adopted, has a right to ignore them."

"Whoopee Ti Yi Yo," arranged by Henry

S. Sawyer, has a curious galloping rhythm, as though it had actually been composed in the saddle at the lope. (Its) harmonies are unusual to the ear long fed with compositions written to order from fragments of older ones. The "Levee Song" is comparatively simpler—though there is nothing complex or obscure in either; how could there be? These are true 'hundred per cent' American songs."

I have an album labeled "Cowboy Songs," which contain some representative specimens of the traditional, as opposed to the popular, tunes. It does not include my records by Vernon Dalhart and other highly popular singers whose discs are filed elsewhere under the artists' names, but the following will give you an idea of the names of some of the songs: "Home On the Range," "The Days of Forty-Nine," "The Zebra Dun" and "The Gal I Left Behind Me," by Jules Allen, "The Singing Cowboy"; "Jesse James" and "The Dying Cowboy," by Bentley Ball; "The Lavender Cowboy" and "The Cowboy's Lament," by Ewen Hall; "The Cowboy Minstrel"; "Cowboy Love Song," "Following the Cow Trail," "The Cowboy," "Cowboy's Prayer," "O Bury Me Not on the Lone Prairie," "The Cowboy's Dream," "Bad Companions" and "When the Work's All Done This Fall," all Victors by Carl T. Sprague. Then there is Okeh No. 45057, "Pistol Pete's Midnight Special" recorded 49 years ago in St. Louis by Dave Cutrell, accompanied by "McGinty's Oklahoma Cowboy Band," and coupled with "The Cowboy's Dream," by the same band directed by Otto Gray. Most of these indigenous cowboy tunes are morbidly mournful and I shall probably infuriate folk music purists by saying that, personally, I'd much rather listen to "Cheyenne," "Pride of the Prairie," "The Last Shot Got Him" or "Ragtime Cowboy Joe" than to "The Dying Cowboy!"

(The End)

P.S.—The Rev. John A. Petty, of Rutherfordton, N. C., reminds me that at least one English recording was made of "Cheyenne." In April, 1907, it was issued on White cylinder No. 163, sung by Peter Dawson. I had known of that cylinder, but forgot it in writing this series. Dawson was a consummate singer, but songs such as "Cheyenne" were not his metier, and I doubt that his rendition was half so effective as Billy Murray's.

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Addison Dashiell Madeira

PART I

By JIM WALSH

(This biography of A. D. Madeira is dedicated to my old friend, Quentin Riggs, of Huntington Beach, Calif., without whose painstaking, ingenious and enthusiastic research efforts it would have remained unwritten.)

I. An Unfamiliar Name

Eyes, I imagine, will be blinked and eyebrows raised at sight of the words, "ADDISON DASHIELL MADEIRA," in large letters running across the top of this page. A typical comment of the average reader is likely to be:

"Who is he? I never heard of him."

It is true that the name of Addison Dashiell Madeira — always called A. D. Madeira in record catalogs is known to only a small percentage of the many thousands of present-day collectors of old-time phonograph records, but in his time—which was more than 75 years ago—Madeira was a reputable and respected baritone who made many Edison cylinders and Victor discs. Obviously, however, in those days of comparatively small sales he could not win a huge personal following like that of some of the other performers who had longer careers. By contrast with the extended recording spans of such singers as Billy Murray, Henry Burr, Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan, Madeira's period of activity was brief. He appears to have begun making records in 1899, but by 1902 had retired from the competition. In the March, 1902, edition of The Phonogram, issued to publicize Edison cylinder records, the editor, Herbert Shattuck, who was Edison's advertising manager, wrote:

"Many people have asked me lately, 'Where's Billy Golden? What has become of Mr. Madeira? Why don't we hear Mr. Albert C. Campbell's melodious voice any more on Edison records?'"

"My friends, I will tell you all I know. Billy, I believe, is running a typewriter's hotel in Washington, D. C., and Madeira is in the typewriter business in St. Paul, Minn., while Mr. Campbell's voice—well, to speak in baseball parlance, he has a 'glass arm.'"

By saying that Campbell had a "glass arm," the Phonogram editor evidently meant that Al's delicate throat had suffered from the strain of making too many records and was, for the time being, not in good condition. It was this sensitive quality that eventually led the man with the beautiful lyric tenor voice to give up making solo records and to confine himself to duets with Henry Burr and harmonizing as first tenor of the Sterling Trio and Peerless Quartet. "Clancy" Campbell did not abandon solo singing, however, until around 1908-09. Meanwhile, in the June, 1902, Phonogram, Mr. Shattuck retracted to a considerable extent his "glass arm" remark:

ENTERING MIDDLE AGE — This photo shows A. D. Madeira in his early forties, after he had begun making Edison cylinders but had not yet sung for Victor discs.

"A correspondent writes, 'I was very sorry to read in a recent number of the Phonogram, that Mr. Madeira had gone out of the business of making phonograph records. The other man's 'glass arm' can continue for all I care.' To which I reply, 'Tut, tut.' Mr. Campbell came in to see me recently, and his melodious voice is certainly in very fine condition. He tells me that he has never been so busy in his life making records for the different talking machine companies. Such of my readers as want any of his records can easily procure them, as records by him are listed in many record catalogs."

It was, incidentally, Shattuck's mention of Madeira's being in the typewriter trade in St. Paul that led to Quentin Riggs' tracking down the baritone's long past activities nearly three quarters of a century later and making it possible for me to write this article.

Quentin, then a teen-aged strip-ling, was with me when I called on the famous pioneer recording artist and whistler, Joe Belmont, in September 1947, at his bird shop on the concourse of Radio City in downtown New York. During an engrossing chat Joe recalled many of his former recording associates, and for years I have seemed to remember his saying that A. D. Madeira was of Spanish Jewish descent and was born on the Rock of Gibraltar. My memory must have tricked me, however, for when I published an article about Belmont in HOBBIES for March, 1948, I said:

"He (Joe Belmont) told us that a briefly popular male quartet some 40-odd years ago was the Big Four, composed of Arthur Collins, Byron Harlan, A. D. Madeira and Joe Natus. Madeira was a native of Minneapolis, Minnesota."

I wish I could find the notebook in which I recorded Joe's remarks so I could tell more of what he related about Madeira. Apparently, he didn't say the baritone was Jewish and from Gibraltar. But he did tell me that about somebody, and who was the artist I have confused with Madeira?

Incidentally, the Madeira family was of Spanish descent.

A survey of old catalogs of Edison cylinder records shows that five two-minute records by the Big Four were issued, from March through May, 1901. (Madeira's first Edison solos, it will be revealed later, came out in November-December, 1899.) First of the quartet records was "Goodbye Dolly Gray," No. 7728. Then followed 7765, "My Charcoal Charmer"; 7766, "There's Where My Heart is Tonight"; 7767, "Ben Bolt," and 7781, "Cornbread."

I know of no Big Four records for other companies, but perhaps the quartet did some vaudeville work and stayed together longer there than in its Edison association. That, however, is mere speculation. And why did it break up? I suspect the answer lies in Madeira's decision to quit singing in favor of being a business man and leaving the quartet to start that typewriter business in Minneapolis - St. Paul.

These quartet cylinders, like Madeira's solos and discs, were made before Thomas A. Edison had devised a system of producing a permanent "master," from which moulds could be taken and result in the production of a virtually unlimited number of salable copies. Madeira, like other artists who recorded as the Nineteenth Century gave way to the Twentieth, must have worked by the "round" and been paid a dollar or so for each time he sang a selection. Usually about 40 "rounds" of a song were made in order to provide enough cylinders for copying by a pantographic method. As Billy Murray once remarked, "When you had sung forty times you had made all of $40!"

(Continued on page 127)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 35)

Whatever the reason for the short life of the Big Four Quartet, the active span of its records was equally brief. None of the five was made over in gold moulded form and they were all gone by the time Edison published the record catalog dated "fall, 1902."

II. Madeira's Edison Solos & Duets

Until I buckled down to writing this article, I thought I recollected that every one of Madeira's Edison solos and duets also was gone by the time that fall, 1902, cylinder catalog appeared. I was wrong, however. True, all the solos were out, but a number of his duets with Byron G. Harlan remained. These likewise, were not long lived. They appeared for the last time in the list for April 1, 1903. In July, 1903, some of the titles were still there, but they had been remade by Harlan and Frank C. Stanley, whose popularity as a recording artist was greater than Madeira's had been. Probably the moulds from which the cylinders were made had begun to have defects and it was necessary to make them over. With Madeira half-way across the continent, in Minneapolis, another baritone had to be found to sing with Harlan, and Stanley was the obvious choice.

I believe it would be as well to give what I hope is a complete list of Addison Dashiell Madeira's Edison cylinders and Victor discs before proceeding with the story of his later years, as brought out of obscurity by Quentin Riggs' intelligent, dedicated research. Toward the end of 1899 Edison began issuing two-minute solo cylinders by Madeira, and this continued until June, 1901, when his total stood at twenty. In numerical order they were:

7288 Last Night. 7289 Thursday. 7290 The Postilion. 7291 Celeste. 7292 Maritana — In Happy Moments (a number that a few years later was a favorite offering of the English baritone, Alan Turner). 7363 Old Jim's Christmas Hymn. 7400 You're It. 7437 The Sun Will Shine Again. 7481 Beauty's Eyes. 7513 I'd Rather Be Poor With You. 7547 Polly and I Were Sweethearts. 7579 London Bridge. 7650 The Fog Bell. 7658 Beyond the Gates of Paradise. 7695 Russian National Hymn. 7701 Little Tin Soldier. 7777 Resurrection. 7778 Jerusalem. 7793 Arise, Marie. 7817 Trovatore—Tempest of the Heart.

You will observe that four of Madeira's Edison solos were of Christian hymns, which militates against my former impression that he was a Spanish Jew. Not only that, but in its place it will be shown that his father was a Presbyterian minister. Little comment need be made upon Madeira's Edison solo records. Mostly, they were of a "standard" nature — the sort of thing that Alan Turner and other baritones were to record prolifically years later. There were few, if any, songs that can be identified today as turn of the century popular tunes. "Beauty's Eyes" is, I suppose, the well known Tosti ballad. I wonder why it was felt there would be a demand for the Russian National Hymn in English. Some of the titles are virtually forgotten now — among them "Celeste," "You're It," "The Sun Will Shine Again" (how many ballads have been written on that theme?) and "I'd Rather Be Poor With You," which does have a Plebeian "popular" flavor.

DEDICATED RESEARCHER AND PAL. Shown here is Quentin Riggs, whose diligent efforts made it possible for Jim Walsh to write the life story of A. D. Madeira, with his pet cat, "Bo." Mr. Riggs took the picture himself with a timing device that allowed him to set the focus, then get into the scene.

I have never heard any of these Edison solos, which were made on the soft brown wax records, so cannot attempt judgement on them. Undoubtedly, few, if any, copies remain. In fact, whether on discs or cylinders, Madeira's must be among the rarest of all records of 75 years and more ago.

Madeira's Edison duets with Byron G. Harlan were less numerous than his solos. There were fourteen:

7343 He Carved His Mother's Name Upon a Tree. 7346 Sweet Antoinette. 7347 In the Shadow of the Pines. 7382 While the Leaves Came Drifting Down. 7383 My Old New Hampshire Home. 7475 Where the Sweet Magnolias Bloom. 7475 I Left Because I Love You. 7540 Baby's Prayer. 7603 Sweet Antoinette. 7611 A Picture No Artist Can Paint. 7676 Medley of Popular Songs. 7896 A Bird in a Gilded Cage. 7792 When We Parted at the Gate. 7823 Little Black Me.

Until I refreshed my memory by doing research for this survey I had the impression, as I have already mentioned, that all the Harlan and Madeira duets were discontinued when gold moulded cylinders were introduced. I was, however, wrong. Six were carried over in the new style. These had a brief life in gold moulded form: "While the Leaves Came Drifting Down," "Where the Sweet Magnolias Bloom," "In the Shadow of the Pines," "I Left Because I Love You," "Baby's Prayer" and "Sweet Antoinette." These titles remained in the catalog for July, 1903, but in new versions by Harlan and Stanley. They obviously were good sellers, for all kept their places until December, 1908, when "Sweet Antoinette" was dropped.

No doubt, by the way, you will have observed that Harlan and Madeira made two records of "Sweet Antoinette," No. 7346 and 7633. The latter was the one remade by Harlan and Stanley. I have done some puzzling as to why "Sweet Antoinette" was offered under two different numbers and reached a conclusion, which may be wrong, that one was with piano accompaniment and one with orchestra . . . No, apparently I was wrong, for the version with the higher number would be the more likely to have orchestra backing, but the fall, 1902, catalog says No. 7633 has a piano accompaniment. By February, 1910, "I Left Because I Love You" had received its comeuppance, but the other four were still hanging on. "While the Leaves Came Drifting Down" went into outer darkness in September, 1911, but the other three continued to be available until two-minute cylinders were discontinued in the autumn of 1912. This looks as if Harlan and Madeira, or the Edison recording experts, knew how to select sentimental ballads that would sell steadily over a long term of years.

I'd almost forgotten that Madeira made seven of the large "concert" or "grand" cylinders that had some vogue before the introduction of the gold moulded record. These were supplemented by five duets with Harlan. The solos were all of Protestant gospel hymns and were of selections not duplicated in the small standard records: B256 "Let Us Stand Up for Jesus"; B257 "The Shepherd True"; B258 "Come Home"; B259 "I Am Redeemed"; B260 "The Comforter Has Come"; B261 "I Need Thee Every Hour," and B262, "Rescue the Perishing." The Harlan-Madeira duets in concert size duplicated five of their popular standard records: B423 "He Carved His Mother's Name Upon a Tree"; B424, "In the Shadow of the Pines"; B425, "While the Leaves Came Drifting Down"; B426, "My Old New Hampshire Home" (which was later made in gold moulded form by Albert Campbell and James F. Harrison), and B427, "Where the Sweet Magnolias Bloom."

Undoubtedly any Edison cylinders sung by A. D. Madeira are scarce since an average human lifetime or more has passed since they were made, but this does not mean that they are extremely valuable and worth a lot of money. I mention this to prevent readers from writing to me, saying they own one or more Edison or Victor records by Madeira and asking whether they are worth a small fortune or a large. I have nothing to do with buying, selling, estimating the value or finding a purchaser for old records and dislike to receive letters from would-be sellers, for I hate to dash their extravagant hopes.

This I can say, however: Quentin Riggs, who obtained most of the information for this article, is a Madeira enthusiast, and will be glad to hear from anybody with one or more Madeira records for sale at a reasonable price. His address is 21171 Greenboro Lane, Huntington Beach, Calif. 92646.

III. Madeira's Victor Solos & Duets

As I put together this attempt to tell A. D. Madeira's life story a thing that puzzles me is: Why did he record duets entirely with Byron G. Harlan for Edison and with only Harry Macdonough for Victor? There seems no reason why he should not have used Macdonough's help as much on the cylinders as he did on the discs. Macdonough's first Edison engagement had been on October 17, 1898, when he was an employee of the Adams Express Company, and, by the time Madeira began recording, the Canadian tenor, whose legal name was John Scantlebury Macdonald, was being called on for more solo work than any other Edison artist and should have been available for duets.

The best I can do after all these years is guess, with no way of knowing whether my surmise is correct. Harlan's first Edison cylinders, and apparently his first records for any company were No. 7218, "Stories That Mother Told Me" and 7219, "Please, Mr. Conductor, Don't Put Me Off the Train," better remembered today as "The Lightning Express." It is fabled that the tenor-comedian was the manager of a theatrical troupe that appeared at an Orange, N. J., theater, in which Thomas A. Edison was one of the audience. If this story is to be credited, Edison was impressed by Harlan's singing, thought he would have a good recording voice and invited him to come to his laboratory and make tests. I question this legend, because Thomas A. Edison was not a theater-going man. He was the sort who would prefer to make experiments in his laboratory rather than attend a public entertainment. Not only that, he was so deaf it would have been virtually impossible for him to hear a man on the stage well enough to know whether he sang well or didn't.

Whatever the truth of the story, Harlan did do some experimental Edison recording. The two cylinders just mentioned were issued somewhere around September 1, 1899, and as the years went on the portly tenor, his wife and daughter became close friends of Thomas A. Edison and his family.

Very well, then. Harlan's first records appeared two or three months before Madeira's. Isn't it likely that George Byron Harlan had something to do with obtaining a recording engagement for the baritone? Perhaps they were old friends and stage associates and Harlan recommended Madeira as a baritone with probably a good recording voice. They sang together a little later, you will remember in the Big Four Quartet.

But, assuming this to be true, why didn't Madeira make Victor duet records with Harlan? Why was Macdonough used instead? One answer is that Madeira didn't begin working for Victor until after his Edison engagements had begun, but that was still at a period before Harlan had sung for any Victor discs. He made none, in fact, until after Madeira had journeyed to Minnesota in the hope of finding fortune, if not fame, as a dispenser of typewriters. (I wonder what brand and whether they were "invisible" or "visible.")

Perhaps Harlan had an exclusive Edison contract from the time he began making cylinders in 1899 until 1902, when he formed his partnership with Arthur Collins, who had preceded him as a Victor artist. If he was unavailable for Victor discs in 1901, the obvious thing to do was to substitute a tenor whose services could be had, and Harry Macdonough admirably filled the need.

Turning to the Victor record catalog for February, 1902, I find on page 30 that A. D. Madeira is listed as a bass, which he wasn't, for his rather high baritone lacked the basso profundo quality. There were nine solo discs to his credit. Four were offered only in seven-inch: V754, "Little Tin Soldier"; V757, "You're It"; V758, "Old Jim's Christmas Hymn," and V759, "Celeste."

Two of Madeira's Victors were available only as 10-inch Monarchs: M3298, "The Lost Chord" and M3302, "Polly and I Were Sweethearts." That leaves three which could be had in either size: No. 755, "Calvary"; 756 Alan Turner's later favorite, "In Happy Moments," and 760, "My Drowsy Babe."

On page 38 the ardent researcher finds eight duets by Macdonough and Madeira. I have two of these and gave another to Quentin. All are announced by Madeira, and I suppose he "emceed" all eight. He probably also announced the Harlan-Madeira cylinders. None of the eight was issued only in seven-inch, but three were solely in ten-inch Monarchs: M3308, "Little Black Me"; M3310, "Lost, Proscribed," from "Martha," and 3311, "Where the Sweet Magnolias Bloom."

The remaining five could be bought in both seven and ten-inch: No. 761, "While the Leaves Came Drifting Down"; 762, "In the Shadow of the Pines"; 763, "Medley, 'Those Are the Songs I Love'"; 764, "Baby's Prayer," and 766, "I Left Because I Love You."

And that, so far, as I know, constitutes a complete list of Madeira's cylinders and discs. I imagine you have noticed that his Victor repertoire bears a close resemblance to the Edison, and that his duets with Macdonough are in some instances the same songs he sang for Edison with Harlan.

Have you also observed that the numbers of the baritone's Victor records come in such close numerical sequence as to suggest they were made within a few days of one another? This impression, however, might be misleading. Scrutiny of the 1902 catalog makes it clear that Victor at that time was using a "block system," as Edison had done for a few years — that is, assigning a certain block of numbers to records by a given artist and numbering them within that sequence. The Victors which were made in two sizes begin with 761 and continue through 766, except that 765 is missing. I wonder what record No. 765 was — whether it was an unissued Macdonough-Madeira or what? After turning through the catalog I have not found any disc with that number. And I wonder, too, if Victor's "Medley — 'Those Are the Songs I Love'" is the same as Edison's "Medley of Popular Songs," which I should much like to hear. Madeira's solos began with 754 and continued through 760.

When Addison Dashiell Madeira gave up the recording ghost, Victor apparently divided higher numbers in the block that had been given him between Macdonough and S. H. Dudley, an operatic baritone who succeeded Madeira as Macdonough's duet partner. He had however, been singing with Macdonough in the Haydn and Edison Male Quartet, before the tenor and Madeira started working together. Number 769 was given to Silas Leachman's "coon song," "I've Got Money Locked Up in the Vault."

Now, here's an odd thing: Just beneath the list of the Macdonough-Madeira duets is one of eight by Macdonough and Dudley, and this duplicates some of the titles by Macdonough and Madeira. No. 1075 is "While the Leaves Came Drifting Down," which, in double-face, stayed in the catalog through 1922, and 1076, is "In the Shadow of the Pines." Why have Dudley and Macdonough duplicate records by Macdonough and Madeira but keep both in the catalog? The question is academic, for when the August 31, 1904, catalog was issued, Madeira's name had vanished and none of his solos or duets were available.

Meanwhile, you may be wondering, what had happened to A. D. Madeira while his records were taking their place among the "lost books" of the earth? Had he prospered in Minneapolis-St. Paul or had he betaken himself to other presumably greener pastures? And what is known of his family background and history?

Those are matters to be brought forward when next we meet. It should be made clear at this point, how-will notice that the stamp is canceled with a meter marking which resembles a cancel. It is a Spanish meter of course, and it is the meter that has paid the postage on the letter.

(Continued on page 130)

Unsuccessful revolutionaries have issued stamps to finance their operations. This is nothing new. Following the Spanish-American War in 1898, a revolutionary named Emilio Aguinaldo in the Philippine Islands turned from fighting the Spanish to fighting the United States, seeking the independence he thought the Islands would get when the war ended. It took the Americans weeks to defeat the Spanish but several years to defeat Aguinaldo. During that time, his government occupied large portions of the country, set up a post office, issued stamps, had its own currency. But ultimately the Revolution failed, and a Government more acceptable to this nation was installed in Manila.

Examples of Aguinaldo stamps properly used on cover during the Philippine Insurrection are both rare and valuable. There is no reason why these are not listed in the Scott Standard catalog, as unused examples are relatively common and often encountered. But the Government was not a legitimate one, at least from our standpoint, so the stamps are not listed. (They can be found in an abbreviated listing in the Scott Specialized United States Catalog, but no idea of their scarcity properly used on cover is given in the catalog user.)

Other countries often found with purported issues of stamps which are not catalog-listed since their legitimacy is questioned are the Principality of Thomond (reputed to be part of Ireland); Atlantis (there have been several of these); Tanna Touva (some of whose issues are listed), and Indonesia, which has issued many legitimate stamps, but which also provided many illegitimate ones during its Revolution following the close of World War II.

One of the most quoted statements in philately is that "there is no substitute for knowledge." That, as well as entertainment, is the prime function of this feature in HOBBIES, which will soon celebrate its fortieth birthday.

... the most sensible, useful, and lively book ever written on the myriad ins and outs of stamp buying and selling.

—Helmuth Conrad, Stamp Editor, Chicago Tribune

"FUN AND PROFIT IN STAMP COLLECTING"

By Herman Herst, Jr.

This book, written by the Stamp Editor of HOBBIES for more than 40 years combines a world of experience for the newer collector. Over 30,000 copies have been sold, and now for the first time, it is available in paper back. The Market Guide, brought up to date to reflect today's conditions is one of its most useful features.

Autographed copies are available from the author at $3.75 each, postpaid.

HERMAN HERST, JR.

P.O. BOX 1583

BOCA RATON, FLA. 33432

tfx

HISTORICAL TAPE RECORDINGS

(Continued from page 60)

she ever did, here's my favorite. This is a Savitt classic, made even more so by Carlotta Dale's fine vocal. Here's Carlotta to sing: "The Weekend of a Private Secretary."

SAVITT ORCH: WEEKEND OF A PRIVATE SECRETARY. Bluebird B7493 (3/18/38)

GIVENS: From the original Bluebird, no less. That's circa 1938. Carlotta Dale. I had a partner, Jack Pyle, when I was at KYW, Philadelphia, myself, and he, too . . . he just liked to say the name, Carlotta Dale. (pauses) Beautiful guy. All right, Carlotta Dale with Jan Savitt and the Orchestra. We've met now the staff side of the vocal roster. And, in just 30 seconds, we'll meet one of the all-time greats, the man by the name of George Tunnell. You know Mr. Tunnell by the name of Bon Bon. (COMMERCIAL)

(The recording dates, which appear next to the label number, were not as easy a reference mark prior to 1975 when Brian Rust's AMERICAN DANCE BAND DISCOGRAPHY appeared. We credit Bill Givens with having to do it the hard way. But you must remember, Bill had been involved with the big bands for a good number of years. And he remembered these statistics.)

GIVENS: And we turn from Carlotta Dale to George Tunnell. He was a cousin of the former New York Giants football player; but you probably don't recognize the name George Tunnell. On the other hand, I'm sure you do recognize the name Bon Bon. This man was always one of my all-time favorite, big band vocalists. He was, without question, the Jan Savitt band's prime attraction. Bon's true name, as I say, is George Tunnell. But even today, if you check out the Philadelphia main-line phone directory, you'll find the listing in Yeaton under the name of Bon Bon Tunnell. He's a representative of the Miller Brewing Company—High Life—and, as a matter of fact, his territory includes parts of Western New York; you may know who he is . . . you may not, Murray Bloom, who is the Decca distributor out of Buffalo, tells a story that—on occasion, when a distributorship holds a dealer meeting or a party of some kind—it's not unusual that they have strolling musicians and Bon will set the key and all of a sudden from out of literally nowhere you'll hear the very fine voice of George Tunnell singing "720 in the Books." "It's a Wonderful World." . . . and, an ever, that the singer was Addison Dashiell Madeira II (or Jr.) and that his minister father was A. D. Madeira, Sr. In his turn, the baritone had a son who was Addison D., the third. I don't know why Addison was chosen as a family name, but Dashiell came from the maiden name of the Rev. Mr. Madeira's mother.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 128)

Addison III died in France of influenza during World War I. Dashiell, as in the name of Dashiell Hammett, writer of mystery novels, is pronounced "Da-sheel."

Incidentally, I am not sure whether that middle name should be spelled as "Dashiel" or "Dashiell." The death certificate of the singer's venerable father gave it as "Dashiel" and, as I have just mentioned, said that was his mother's family name before marriage. On the other hand, the baritone's death certificate spelled it "Dashiel," and so did a newspaper obituary notice. After anxious consideration, I have decided to go along with "Dashiell," but to disavow responsibility if I have chosen the wrong version.

(To be continued)

enjoyable and very pleasant surprise for the people gathered. Possessed of one of the finest personalities I've ever encountered, this is one beautiful, beautiful man. And, again, George T. Simon cites as particularly noteworthy Bon's efforts on "It's a Wonderful World." "Vol Vistu Gally Star," and "720 in the Books," all of which will be included between now and 6 p.m. in Rochester, but I thought as our vocal lead-off for Bon Bon this, sure to be recognized by the true Savitt buffs, is perhaps Bon's all-time classic. His great 'skit-scal' version of "Paper Picker."

SAVITT ORCH/BON BON: "PAPER PICKER." DECCA Blue label #2738 (Recorded 8/29/39, NYC)

GIVENS: That, in addition to being one of Bon Bon's classics, is considered to be among the best of the Big Band flagwavers . . . of its kind, of its type for that particular era. Drums of Russ Isaacs and, of course the vocal of Bon Bon. A classic! No question about it. There's Bon and . . . "Paper Picker." He was very versatile, was this stellar vocalist and fine person. And . . . we'll go to the ballad side, having gone from the rhythm side . . . the skit-scal side of Bon Bon; the ballad side of George Tunnell in just 60 seconds. (COMMERCIAL) A WHAM documentary in sound and holiday treat for you; our first Sunday of the month of September . . . tribute to the Big Bands and the good music they play . . . and this weekend, a tribute to Jan Savitt.

From this point I shall paraphrase Bill Givens ad lib remarks and list the recordings he played.

He refers to the ballad style as "absolutely superb" in calling upon the Bon Bon vocal to "Last Night." (NO commercial recording listed indicating this probably was taken from a radio transcription.)

Next, Bill introduces a March 18, 1938 recording for Bluebird featuring "a good vocal group" . . . the Three Toppers (Charlotte Kaye, Dorsey Anderson and Jack Carlton). "Stop! And Reconsider." (Bluebird B-7493) (The "flip" side of "Weekend of a Private Secretary.")

Bill refers to the last time this particular documentary was presented on WHAM. That was August 1, 1970. He says he has added new material for this broadcast. His theme, "720 in the Books" appears to be that recorded for Thesaurus transcription service, a division of NBC. (I'm preparing a story on the radio transcriptions for you. I hope to have material from collectors including Larry Kiner of Redmond, Wash., Roger Paulson of Needham, Mass., from a new reader at the University of Ohio and from Cathie Heinz and Joyce Lockwood at the Broadcast Pioneers Library in our nation's capitol, as well as Howard Brenner.)

Bill mentions that with this broadcast, he begins his fifth year on the series "Music for a Sunday Afternoon," and thanks those who have taken the time, over the years, to correspond with him.

He says:

" . . . I would be most remiss if I were not to thank so many of you who have taken the time to correspond, to offer comments, suggestions, criticisms. You've been a very fine audience; I enjoy a very great empathy with all of you. And it's been very gratifying for me, over the past four full years to have had the association with you, my audience . . . my listeners . . . and I've enjoyed it very, very much to know that you have enjoyed the series. Thanks enough from me. And I hope we can continue for five more years on this WHAM's program of "Music for a Sunday Afternoon."

(Please turn back to page 119)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Addison Dashiell Madeira

PART 2

By JIM WALSH

I. In Quest of the Obscure

As was emphasized in a preceding installment, I have been able to write this biographical sketch of A. D. Madeira only because of the intensive research of Quentin Riggs, who did not rest until he had found out all about the turn of the century baritone that it seemed possible to learn. The part of this article already published dealt primarily with listing Madeira's Edison and Victor records. Now it becomes time to make use of Quentin's genealogical spadework and relate what there is known about the man, his father, and other members of his family.

But first, may I say that Quentin Riggs is fascinated, as he seemingly is by nothing else, at the thought of artists who made records 75 years or more ago, but whose personalities today are virtually unknown? The longer ago a singer made records and the less known about him or her today, the more Quentin wants to know and the harder he works to pierce the veil of mystery resulting from the obliterating effects of time. Mention such names as Minnie Emmett, Mina Hickman and Roger Harding and his eyes light up. Recently he has been preoccupied with a desire to learn something about the mysterious Fred Rycroft, who for a brief period sang first tenor in the historic Haydn Quartet, and the even more baffling Charles Belling, who held the second tenor post in or around 1900.

They long have been top-ranking mysteries although a National Gramophone record list dated December, 1899, said:

"Since our last catalog two new tenors have been added to the Haydn Quartet. The comedy and lighter records are still sung by the old Quartet, but the sacred and standard selections are sung by Messrs. Rycroft and Belling, tenors of Trinity Church Choir, and Messrs. Dudley and Hooley, basses."

I assume that "the old quartet" was composed, besides Dudley and Hooley, of John Bieling, first tenor, and Jere Mahoney, second. Harry Macdonough was second tenor longer than anybody else, but he didn't begin making records until October, 1898, and probably had not begun his Haydn association when the 1899 catalog was issued. He succeeded Mahoney when ill health compelled the latter to give up singing. To me this is strange: I knew John Bieling personally and corresponded with Dudley and Macdonough before their deaths—

MYSTERY MELODRAMA. Evil doings seem afoot in this scene from an unidentified light opera or musical comedy in which Addison D. Madeira appeared, presumably after his recording career ended. He is the short, stocky man to the right. Identity of the bewhiskered character, who seems to be holding a bomb, is unknown. If any reader can say from what production this scene was taken, Jim Walsh and Quentin Riggs will be grateful.

—(Photo from William M. Peters)

voluminously with Dudley - but not one of those three surviving members of the quartet ever mentioned Rycroft or Belling to me.

Within recent weeks, however, Quentin has discovered that in the early 1900's and probably for some years earlier, Rycroft was the professional manager of the Witmark music publishing company and was responsible for "Sweet Adeline" being introduced to the public and becoming one of history's greatest song hits. A book, "From Ragtime to Swingtime," by my old friend, the late Isaac Goldberg, tells of a male quartet, the Quaker City Four, coming into Witmark's and asking to have some new songs demonstrated. One number after another was played, but none suited the vaudeville singing group.

Then "Sweet Adeline," which had been written by Richard Gerard and Harry Armstrong more than a year before, occurred to Rycroft. The song had been languishing on stockroom shelves because it was considered "too slow and too old-fashioned," but, nearly desperate at being unable to please the Quartet, Rycroft called to Armstrong, "Harry, you may as well go and fish out 'Sweet Adeline.'" Armstrong produced this song from the top shelf, played it, and Harry Ernest, manager of the group, exclaimed at the end, "Why, that's just the song we have been looking for!" What happened after that is history. The Quaker City Four sang it in Vaudeville, and "Sweet Adeline," though with no alcoholic connotation, became the booze-fighters' close-harmony national anthem.

(Continued on page 127)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 35)

Quentin writes: "Rycroft is also mentioned in connection with a moving picture made of a minstrel show. The performers were the Spooks Minstrel Quintet, which Geoff O'Hara told me was the same group that recorded the Edison two-minute cylinder of 'The Rosary' as the Knickerbocker Quintet. Rycroft helped rehearse the performers for this project."

A few days ago my California friend asked me if I could tell him who wrote the mournful old-time song, "The Letter Edged in Black," which Vernon Dalhart made popular on records in the 1920's. I replied that it was composed in 1897 by a woman named, or who called herself, Hattie Nevada. She also wrote one of the numbers Madeira recorded, "While the Leaves Came Drifting Down." I felt sure I would receive Quentin's undivided attention when I added that I believed Hattie's husband was the operator of the Kansas City Talking Machine Company, one of the small cylinder record manufacturing businesses of the 1897-1900 period, and that she recorded 25 or so soprano solos for that firm. I'm betting that even now Quentin is writing to his Kansas City library friends, who, as you will see, were so helpful to him in his A. D. Madeira research, and asking them to send him all the information they can find about Hattie Nevada.

And, speaking of Kansas City, that seems our cue to return to the story of A. D. Madeira.

II. Madeira in Minneapolis

Addison Madeira was not a youngster when he began his career as a recording artist; rather, he was just entering middle age. He was born in the autumn of 1858, about two and a half years before the first shots were fired in the American Civil War, and he became 40 in the year in which the Spanish-American War was fought. He was almost 41 when he sang for his first Edison records.

In a group photo of 42 Edison artists taken near Thomas A. Edison's West Orange, N. J., laboratory in the summer of 1900, Madeira appears as a seemingly somewhat short, man holding a straw hat and whose hair has begun to thin. It looks, but I am not sure, as if he has a small mustache. His duet partner, Byron Harlan, is standing behind him, and Senorita Maria Godoy, who, like Madeira, had Spanish forbears, is sitting to his right. Also within touching distance is Frank S. Mazziotta, the piccolo player. Madeira was approaching his 42nd birthday when this picture was taken by a photographer who did a good job, but whom I have never seen identified. And he was 43, or not far from it, when he decided to give up living in New York and engaging in a musical career to move to Minneapolis and enter the typewriter business.

TURN OF CENTURY "TALENT." This photo of 42 men and women who made Edison cylinder records was taken in 1900 near Thomas A. Edison's laboratory in West Orange, N.J. A. D. Madeira is No. 33, at the extreme left of the front row. This reproduction was made from Madeira's copy of the original print, kindly provided by his grandson, William Peters. Another copy of the photo was published in January, 1971, HOBBIES, and readers wishing the names of all the artists may obtain that information by referring to the 1971 issue.

Over and over I have speculated as to how and why this came about. What made Madeira think he would be better off as a Middle Western typewriter salesman than as a singer? How did he come to select Minnesota as his new "stamping grounds?" Had he perhaps, in his travels with theatrical companies, met some typewriter company representative who assured him he would be a whiz at selling writing instruments and that there were especially good opportunities in Minneapolis and its sister city, St. Paul? I don't know the answer and I doubt that anyone now alive does. If Madeira were still living I'd ask him, but he'd now be about 120 years of age and hardly competent to elucidate.

Whatever the reason, to Minneapolis he and his family went at some time after he made his last record in 1901.

And here I shall begin to quote freely from the results of Quentin Riggs' research. Quentin took his first giant step toward solving "the Madeira Mystery" when he wrote to the Minnesota Historical Society in St. Paul and asked if there was any information in its files or in Minneapolis-St. Paul city directories about A. D. Madeira, a one-time noted singer and recording artist who turned typewriter dealer after going to Minnesota.

On April 23, 1975, Patricia Harpole, the Society's assistant chief librarian, replied that she had found no record of an obituary notice for Madeira, but he was listed in the St. Paul section of the 1902 directory as manager of the General Typewriter Company, with his residence in Minneapolis.

Similarly, under Minneapolis for 1902, he was recorded as manager of the General Typewriter Company, with his business at 405 Dayton Building. He and members of his family were living in flat six of an apartment building at 1508 Third Avenue, south.

Other Madeiras, all with the same address, were Fay L.; Fred R., who had the title of secretary of the typewriter company, and Pauline L.

Now here we are confronted with more Madeira mysteries. Since her name comes second to Addison's, it would be logical to assume that Fay was his wife, but on his death certificate and in newspaper obituary notices, to be quoted later, Mrs. Madeira's name is given as Callie W. Yet this is a name that never appears in Minneapolis and Kansas City directories of the Madeira family. Fay's name is present only for the year 1902. So what happened? Were Addison and Fay husband and wife, and did she die during their first year in Minneapolis? And did he many years later take Callie as his second wife? This question has me scratching my head and guessing.

Fred Madeira I know was the singer-typewriter man's brother. As for Pauline, I don't know. She may perhaps have been one of his sisters or daughters.

In 1903, A. D. apparently had had enough of typewriters. He was listed as a music teacher at 409 Dayton Building, two doors from his former writing machine address. He was now living at 1803 Tenth Avenue, south. (The Madeiras, like many other families in large cities, seem to have moved almost every year.) His brother Fred was in charge of the typewriter business, but at 616 Bank of Commerce Building, and his home was not with Addison, but on the same street, at 1827 Tenth Avenue.

In 1904, A. D. was still a music teacher, but now was conducting his classes in the Lyceum Theater building. His home address was flat C, at 209 South Twelfth Street. The only other occupant of the flat apparently was his son, who is listed as Addison Jr., but should have been Addison Madeira III. Presumably, he had just become old enough to rate a directory listing. Fred continued to have his typewriter business in the Bank of Commerce building, but was now living at Excelsior, Minn.

The next year, 1905, Addison was again a music teacher, but at 412 Evanston Building. He and Addison III were still together in the flat on Twelfth Street. The boy, previously designated as a student, is now called an actor.

Since he obviously was so young there is room for speculation as to what kind of acting he was doing or hoped to do.

In 1906, the directory reported that Addison D. Madeira had moved to Kansas City, Mo.

Quentin was exultant when, thanks to Ms. Harpole's helpfulness, he received this information, for it now became possible, he hoped, to find out something about Madeira's life and activities in Kansas City. Up to that time he and I had not known that the singer had a Kansas City association. Now, with the benefit of hindsight, it becomes evident that he returned to Kansas City because his father was a prominent minister there and because he, the son, had lived there as a boy. What induced him, however, to become involved in a slate manufacturing business is something else. But that was still some years in the future.

III. Research in Missouri

The long gone baritone singer would, I am sure, be both startled and flattered if he could return to life and learn of the great amount of energy and effort such a researcher as Quentin Riggs has expended in an effort to learn more about him. He no doubt would find pleasure in knowing that although he has been away from this world for almost half a century he is not forgotten and there are still admirers of his voice as it is preserved by recordings of 75 to 80 years ago.

In August, 1975, Quentin wrote to the State Historical Society of Missouri at Columbia, and asked for any information concerning Addison D. Madeira and his family that might be found in the Kansas City directories. With promptness that was as gratifying as surprising, the reference specialist, Karen M. Duree, replied on August 14 in a letter of more than two pages:

"In response to your letter received August 12, I found several entries for Addison D. Madeira and his family in the Kansas City Directories." She then proceeded to list the entries from 1907 through 1917 - a feat of considerable good will. The singer was mentioned in 1907, with "music" given as his profession. He was living at 2715 Olive, with his son, again called Addison D. Madeira, Jr., but which correctly would have been III. No other Madeira was listed at that address, but Fred R. also had left Minneapolis and was manager of the Superior Carbon and Ribbon Company at 406 Century Building. He lived at 16 East 35th Street. As in Minneapolis, Addison III was identified as an actor.

The story was much the same in 1908, only now the musical father and his actor son were living at 2928 Brooklyn. Fred was still handling typewriter supplies, but perhaps not the machines, and had moved from 406 to 415 Century Building. His home was 811 Linwood Boulevard.

When the 1909 directory appeared, Addison Jr. and III were still "singer" and "actor," respectively, but had moved to 2010 Linwood Boulevard. Fred was yet at 811 Linwood, but apparently had married, for Eleanor Madeira appears for the first time at that address. His office remained at 415 Century.

In 1910 Addison, Jr., was no longer termed a singer. Instead, he was called a "collector for Baker and Lockwood Manufacturing Company," and his namesake son was a "vocalist." They were still at the Linwood Boulevard address. Fred and Eleanor's address was also unchanged, as was that for Fred's business, but he now called himself a "manufacturer's agent."

The following year the Madeira men had entered upon a business enterprise in which, a grandson of the baritone singer has told Quentin Riggs, his grandfather "lost his shirt." This was the National Slate Company. The 1911 directory identified Addison, Jr., as this concern's sales manager; Addison III as a salesman, and Fred as its treasurer. All were still living at their 1910 addresses, but their place of business was 320 Reliance Building.

By 1912 Fred apparently had withdrawn from the firm and left Kansas City, for he and Eleanor are not in that year's directory. Addison, Jr., had now become the slate company's treasurer and Addison III remained as a salesman. For the first time the directory listed the elder Madeira's daughter, Harriett, whose son, William Peters, made the comment about his grandfather's losing heavily in the slate business. In 1913 Addison Jr. was still living on Linwood Boulevard, with Harriett, but Addison III had disappeared from the volume.

(Continued on next page)

A year later, in the 1914 edition, Addison Jr. was both president and treasurer of the National Marble Company (a change of name for the slate company?). He and Harriett I. still abode in Linwood Boulevard, but his place of business had been changed to "49th, northeast, corner of Cole Avenue."

Came 1915 and the father of the family was the only Madeira still listed. Perhaps Harriett had married and Addison III had taken to the stage. Addison II was now president, but not treasurer, of the National Marble Company, the address of which had changed to 40th and Cole (with Leeds in parentheses.)

In 1916 Addison II was still president of the marble company, with the same business address, but his home was at 6139 Brookside Boulevard. Addison III was back and listed as a sales manager, but the book doesn't say of what.

We come now to 1917 and the last year in which Addison D. Madeira II appeared in a Kansas City directory. He was still at 6139 Brookside Boulevard, but with no occupation mentioned. Addison III of the same address was once more a "sales manager."

Ms. Duree ended this series of directory listings by writing:

"I quit looking for Addison D. Madeira after the 1917 directory. At that time he had not been mentioned for some years. (This is confusing, because she had just quoted his name as being in the 1917 directory. Perhaps 1917 is not the year she meant to write.—J. W.) If you could establish the date of death of Madeira it may be possible to find an obituary for him in the Kansas City newspapers. We have some of the Kansas City papers on microfilm here in the library, but we could only check two or three papers for a specific date. If you would like to have someone perform an extensive search for you, I suggest you write directly to Mrs. Fred Meinershagen, 1103 Falcon Dr., Columbia, Missouri 65201.

"I was unable to find any more information about Madeira or his family. The 'Yellow Pages' of the Kansas City Directories did not seem to list Madeira as a singer, vocalist or music teacher in the years I tried."

Madeira must have bought the home on Brookside Boulevard, for it was still his address when he died. It is puzzling, however, that his name ceased to appear in directories after 1917. My guess is that Ms. Duree, became confused between the Rev. Mr. Madeira and his son, who was being listed as a business man rather than as a singer, and that it was the father's name that ceased to appear after his death in 1915.

IV. Madeira's Father and Daughter

On September 12, 1975, indomitable researcher Riggs was able to write to me and report some genuine progress. He had not yet learned when A. D. Madeira, the baritone, died, in order to try to obtain his death certificate, but had obtained that information concerning the singer's father, who had lived into prolonged old age, and his daughter, Harriett. Quentin's letter expressed unbounded gratitude to the library and historical society workers in Minneapolis, Columbia and Kansas City who had so obligingly assisted him. I shall quote from it:

"Dear Jim: I am enclosing copies I have typed of three articles from Kansas City newspapers Xeroxed and sent to me by the Kansas City Public Library. They are obituaries of A. D. Madeira's father and his daughter, but they couldn't find an obit of A. D. himself. . . . Virginia M. Wright, of the Library, wrote: 'He was listed in the 1909 city directory as a singer and actor, then as working for the National Slate Company, and in 1917 as the president of the National Marble Company, evidently retiring in that year. We could find no obituary for him, or any articles about his music. We tried tracing the grandchildren through the city directories and through people connected with the Peters Serum Company. One contact person told us there was only a stepson (this should have been grandson—J. W.) living, Bill Peters of Kansas City. Therefore we are enclosing a list of the Peters in the current telephone directory in case you would wish to write to him. It just might be that he would have scrapbooks or other information about Madeira.'"

Quentin commented happily: "I am overwhelmed by the kindness of the people in Minneapolis, Columbia and Kansas City I have contacted to request information about Madeira. Several people have been very helpful and have turned up some valuable information. I shall try to get in touch soon by phone with the son of Madeira's daughter. For years Madeira was just a name to me and a face in the group of Edison artists whose photos were taken in 1900. But when you sent me that record of his I got an urge to learn more about him. I can't believe I have turned up so much information simply by writing a few letters to some newspapers, libraries and historical societies in Minnesota and Missouri. Hope I can get some specific information about the baritone's death in the near future. Your pal, QUENTIN."

Such specific information was nearer at hand than Quentin then realized. Meanwhile, what was learned about A. D. Madeira, Sr., and his granddaughter, Harriett, was interesting in itself. In particular, there were some surprises in details about the life of baritone Addison Dashiell Madeira's father. It's a shame to keep you waiting another month to read them, but with space running out I fear that's the way the record spins. Next time, then, you shall be enlightened concerning Grandfather Madeira, Harriett and, finally, A. D. Madeira II himself.

(To be concluded)

MORE ABOUT RUFFO

(Continued from page 37)

soned diva. Filled with admiration for his courageous youthful partner, Ruffo presented her with a warmly inscribed portrait of himself. The success was complete, the debutante immediately embarked upon a brilliant career, starting in provincial opera houses. In 1908, her association began with Moscow's Bolshoy, which lasted for many successful years. Her roles were as numerous as they were varied. For example, she did equally well Judith and Carmen, Aida and Amneris, Musetta and Isolde, Amelia and Marina, to mention but a few. Following a long career, she remained active in the capacity of vocal coach. It appears that in 1913 Balanovskaya recorded for Pathé selections from "Sadko," "Tannhauser," "La Gioconda," "Tristan und Isolde," "Un Ballo in Maschera" and "Aida." I'd love to hear them all, the "Gioconda" Suicidio in particular.

Bicentennial Celebration Offering

As a sequel to my June "America, the Beautiful," O.A.S.I. promptly released a Long Play disc with old-time favorite singers honoring this year's Bicentennial celebration. The record came out before July 4, and I wrote this article soon after. I'm sorry it took so long to appear in print, but that's "writing biz."

However, the year is not over yet, and neither is the spirit none of us will again experience in our lifetime. O.A.S.I. 619 is a lovely disc to listen to and treasure as a remembrance of our Nation's most solemn holiday. I'm glad my suggestion had something to do with the record's production, and on every patriotic occasion from now on, I shall open my windows wide and treat my neighbors to a unique concert, appropriate for the event. This LP may be ordered from William Violi, 1231 60th St., Brooklyn, N.Y. 11219. Price $5.50 plus 75c for packing and postage for U.S. orders.

Bicentennial Celebration Offering

(1776-1976). O.A.S.I. 619:

Side A — 1. LUCY MONROE: Star Spangled Banner (Scott Key-Arnold) VE17815-A. 2. JOHN McCORMACK: The Battle Hymn of the Republic (Howe Arr. Johnson) HMV DA1808. 3. MARY LEWIS: Dixie (Emmett) VE1345-B. 4. JOHN CHARLES THOMAS: Home on the Range (Gulon) VE1525-B. 5. LOUISE HOMER: America, the Beautiful (Bates-Ward) V1074-B. 6. LUCY MONROE: America (Carey) VE17815-B. 7. JOHN McCORMACK: God Bless America, (Berlin) HMV DA1808. (All electric, except band 5.)

Side B — 1. GERALDINE FARRAR: Star Spangled Banner (Scott Key-Arnold) V87247. 2. MABEL GARRISON: Dixie (Emmett) V64637. 3. RICCARDO STRACCIARI: There's a Long, Long Trail (Elliott) C149517. 4. ROSA PONSSELLE: Keep the Home Fires Burning (Novello) C19585. 5. ENRICO CARUSO: Over There (Cohan-Delamarre) V87294. 6. EMILIO DE GOGORZA: The Unknown Soldier (Johnstone-O'Hara) V1107-B. 7. ERNESTINE SCHUMANN-HEINK: Taps (adapt. Pasternack) V87299. (All acoustic.)

The major part of the program consists of selections I had in my June article. The added numbers are: Thomas' "Home On the Range," Stracciari's "There's a Long, Long Trail," Ponselle's "Keep the Home Fires Burning," Caruso's "Over There," Gogorza's "The Unknown Soldier" and Schumann - Heink's "Taps."

It seems to me that Caruso's "Over There" hardly belongs over here. Had he recorded "The Star Spangled Banner" (something surprisingly he failed to do during World War I), it would be the main attraction on this LP. Incidentally, a dealer in antiques, long ago, swore high and low that he sold a test-

(Continued on next page)

Favorite Pioneer Recording Artists

Conducted by JIM WALSH

Addison Dashiell Madeira

PART 3

By JIM WALSH

I. Singer's Father and Daughter

Addison D. Madeira, Sr., attorney at law turned Presbyterian preacher father of pioneer recording artist A. D. Madeira, Jr., was born a long, long time ago and has been dead a long time, after having lived into advanced old age.

The death certificate which Quentin Riggs obtained for the patriarchal Madeira reveals that he was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, on April 21, 1828 — something like 150 years ago. His father was Jacob Madeira and his mother's maiden name was Mary Yellott Dashiell, a sufficiently unusual one, but one which provided a succession of Madeira men with their middle names.

His father was born in Pittsburgh and his mother in Baltimore.

When he died at 5 a. m. on June 23, 1915, the minister was 87 years, two months and two days old. His length of residence in Missouri was given as 46 years. Death occurred in his home at 3829 Broadway, in Kaw Township of Kansas City. The attending physician reported that pulmonary edema was the cause of death, with senility and a recent fall to the floor as contributing factors.

Both the Kansas City Star and Journal published news stories about the aged minister's life and death. On June 23, 1915, under a heading of: "THE REV. A. D. MADEIRA DEAD—VETERAN PRESBYTERIAN PASTOR LEAVES A WIDOW AND SEVEN CHILDREN," the Star said:

"The Rev. Addison D. Madeira died this morning at his home, 3829 Broadway. He had been in a dying condition several days. Failing health was hastened by a fall he suffered at his home several weeks ago.

"Dr. Madeira was born in Cincinnati 87 years ago. He was educated at Shurtleff College, Alton, Ill., and was graduated with honors. He studied law and at the age of 21 was admitted to the bar. He was the first city attorney of St. Joseph, Mo. He studied theology under the guidance of the Rev. W. J. Worrall of Covington, Ky., and at 32 years was ordained a minister of the Presbyterian Church. His first call was to Keokuk, Ia. From there he went to St. Louis, remaining there for several years. From St. Louis he came to the Central Presbyterian Church of this city. . . . He organized the Westminster Alliance and was its president ten years. Twenty-seven years ago he was called to the pastorate of the First Presbyterian Church of Independence & continued there 14 years.

"For the last thirteen years Dr. Madeira has lived in retirement in this city. He is survived by his wife and these children: A. D. Madeira, Jr., a business man of Kansas City, who is well known as a singer; Frederick, living in Minnesota; the Rev. Earl E. Madeira, rector of an Episcopal church at St. Petersburg, Fla.; Mrs. Leander J. Talbot, Mrs. John C. Sherwood and Mrs. Price Bryant of Kansas City; Mrs. W. M. Whitelaw of New York; and Mrs. Charles A. Carroll of Independence."

MORE MYSTERY. Another scene from an unidentified offering in which A. D. Madeira points an admonitory finger at two of the other characters.

The Journal's obituary notice appeared a day after the Star's and contained much the same information, though with some variety in the details. For one thing, it gave the impression that Frederick R. Madeira, instead of being in Minnesota, as the Star said, was living in Kansas City, and the name of Mrs. Price Bryant was changed to Trice Bryant. And it included one unexpected and surprising piece of information that I found fascinating. Here are excerpts from the Journal article:

"Dr. Madeira organized the Minister's Alliance of Kansas City and was the presiding member for a term of ten years. At Independence, Mo., where he conducted his last pastorate before retiring from the active ministry, he organized the Ministers' Alliance of that city also. His life work seemed to be that of harmonizing and amalgamating the different church forces into a working body, and wherever his ministry took him he formed alliances and unions in the religious world. . . . He was at different times pastor of the Choctaw Presbyterian Church of St. Louis and of the Mt. Kisco Presbyterian Church of New York City. Shortly after the Civil War Dr. Madeira was called to the Central Presbyterian Church of Kansas City, where he remained for 13 years. Later he occupied the pulpit of the First Presbyterian Church of Independence, Mo., which he held until his retirement."

Now here comes the surprise to which I referred:

"AT THE TIME OF THE OUTBREAK OF THE CIVIL WAR DR. MADEIRA BECAME PRIVATE SECRETARY TO GENERAL (ULYSSES S.) GRANT. ALTHOUGH HE HAD A BROTHER IN THE CONFEDERATE ARMY.

"As an early pastor of Kansas City he officiated at many of the weddings of Kansas City's business men of today, and later performed the marriage ceremony for their children. Funeral services will be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Sherwood, 100 East 38th Street, tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock."

(Continued on next page)

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

(Continued from page 35)

I found it startling, but most interesting, that the senior A. D. Madeira had been private secretary to General Grant. And I wonder if, while he was preaching in Independence, he knew a small, cocky boy who was to grow up and become Harry S. Truman, president of the United States.

The statement that Dr. Madeira's father was born in Pittsburgh and his mother in Baltimore seems to dispose effectually and finally of the impression I had somehow brought away from my meeting with Joe Belmont that the Madeira family was from Gibraltar and that A. D. Madeira II had been born there. It is obvious that, on both the paternal and maternal sides, they had been domiciled in this country long before A. D. Madeira, the pioneer recording baritone, was born.

Now we have for consideration a clipping from a newspaper, which was found by the Kansas City library staff, but the name and date of the paper are unknown. The article tells of the death of Mrs. Harriett Peters, daughter of A. D. Madeira II, the singer, and the heading goes: "MRS. WILLIAM PETERS. HER LATE HUSBAND WAS A SERUM MANUFACTURER. A GRANDFATHER WAS A PRES-BYTERIAN MINISTER AND HER FATHER WAS A METROPOLITAN OPERA BARITONE".

"Mrs. Harriett Madeira Peters, 60, wife of William G. Peters, president of the Peters Serum Company, and a daughter of the late Addison D. Madeira, a baritone with the Metropolitan Opera Company and one of the first singers to make phonograph records, died last night at her home, 6758 Pennsylvania Avenue. She lived in New York when a girl and returned to Kansas City when her father retired from the opera about 1910. She had resided here since.

"Her grandfather, Dr. Addison D. Madeira, was pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church from 1869 to 1881 and was later pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Independence. Part of the family belongs to the Episcopal Church, not the Presbyterian, and Mrs. Peters was a member of St. Paul's Episcopal Church here. An uncle, the Rev. E. E. Madeira, was a composer of sacred music.

"As a widow, she was married to Mr. Peters 32 years ago. A son by her first marriage, Robert M. Nourse of the home, survives. The Peters Serum Company also has a place in the history of Kansas City, for the late Mason S. Peters, father of William G. Peters, was the first manufacturer of hog cholera serum. The father, a former congressman, was instrumental in demonstrating to the industry the value of the serum.

"Besides the husband, Mrs. Peters is survived by another son, William M. Peters of the home, and a sister, Mrs. John J. Flood, Fort Worth, Tex. A brother, Addison Madeira III, died of influenza in France while serving as a member of the A. E. F. in World War I."

Although this notice is undated, it is obvious that Mrs. Peters died after World War II began in 1939, for up to that time the 1914-18 conflict had been referred to merely as "the World War," not World War I.

II. Madeira of the "Met"

Research Specialist Quentin Riggs was as much startled at reading that A. D. Madeira, the turn of the century Victor and Edison recording artist, had sung at the Metropolitan Opera as I was on learning that his father had served as secretary to Ulysses S. Grant. He immediately began an investigation of the opera singing report.

The progress Quentin made in this research, as well as in his efforts to learn when Madeira died may be interestingly traced in excerpts from his letters to me during the next few weeks, beginning with one dated September 15, 1975:

"Dear Jim: I have just written to the Division of Vital Records at Jefferson City, Mo., in hopes that they can locate A. D. Madeira's death certificate. After getting the obituaries of his father and daughter the other day I feel that we are on the right track.

"The singer's daughter, Harriett, first appeared in the Kansas City directory in 1912, so she was probably about 18 years old then. That means she died around the 1950's. I shall write to the librarian who kindly sent me the clippings to see if she can give me the date of Harriett's obituary. The article said that Harriett was survived by a son from her first marriage, and a sister. Will check out these people in the telephone books of Kansas City and Fort Worth, Tex. I was surprised to see in the article that Madeira sang at the Metropolitan Opera. I have checked a reference book about the history of the Metropolitan, but there is no reference to Madeira. Perhaps he sang in the chorus when he first began his career."

On September 28 I again heard from the enthusiastic and dedicated investigator:

"Dear Jim: This afternoon I had a long conversation with A. D. Madeira's grandson, Bill Peters. He seems extremely friendly and good natured, but couldn't supply very much information about his famous grandfather. He mentioned several times that A. D. sang at the Metropolitan Opera, but under an assumed Italian name. Unfortunately, he couldn't remember the alias. If he had I could have checked it out in some of the reference books on the history of the Met at the library.

"He said that Addison was 70 or 75 years old when he died. Bill's aunt, who lived in Fort Worth, Tex., is dead. He said she had some of her father's records and effects, but wouldn't share them with other members of the family.

"Bill who is a bachelor and a lover of cats, especially blue Persians, said he has some old photos of his grandfather down in the cellar, and I hope he will let me borrow them to copy. He remembers one of Addison in costume as Koko in 'The Mikado,' which he sang on the stage with the Andrews Opera Company. I promised to send him a tape of the one Madeira record I have as well as a copy of the 1900 photo of Edison artists in which he appears."

Notes Quentin took during the telephone conversation quote Mr. Peters as saying that he was somewhere between five and ten years of age when his grandfather died, and that the singer turned business man had a great deal of family pride and was rather formal in his manners. Mr. Peters recalls his grandmother as being between 80 and 85 when she

(Continued on page 120)

WHAT GOES ON HERE? Another scene from an unidentified melodrama, light opera or musical comedy in which A. D. Madeira appeared at some time, somewhere, during his career. The photo was graciously lent by his grandson, "Bill Peters," of Kansas City. Is the top-hatted character with the glasses down on his nose holding a horseshoe? And is the woman about to snatch it and hurl it at Madeira, to the left? Jim Walsh suggests the possibility that the play may have been "The Geisha," "San Toy" or "A Chinese Honeymoon," but would appreciate specific information.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTIST

(Continued from page 36)

died. He couldn't recall the exact year. She was sensitive about her age and wouldn't tell anybody just how old she was. He said that Harriett, his mother, died 20 years or so ago, around 1955, and had a fine sense of humor. His grandfather, he has heard, was "perfect" as Koko in "The Mikado." He sang in a production of "Pagliacci" with an operatic Company. In one performance the lead tenor was so drunk he was unsteady on his feet and Madeira held him up while he sang "Vesti la giubba."

The following is quoted from a letter Quentin wrote October 1:

"Bill said that Addison sang at the Metropolitan under an Italian name, since you had to have an Italian name to get anywhere in opera in those days. I checked some reference books with no success. There was an Alfonso Mariani who sang at the Met during the 1894-95 season. The initials are A. M. and there are the same number of letters in Mariani's first and last names as in Madeira's. However, that may not mean anything . . ."

Doubtful, but hoping that Mariani and Madeira might have been the same baritone, Quentin wrote to the Metropolitan and asked if its archives confirmed his guess.

I now divert from the chronological order of his letters to quote one written November 29 in which he told of hearing from Mrs. John DeWitt Peltz, the Met archivist, and being gently rebuked for his presumption in thinking the two men might be the same:

"Dear Jim: I finally heard from the Metropolitan Opera, and they have nothing at all in their files about Madeira. I mentioned in my letter that a bass named Alfonso Mariani sang at the Met for one season and suggested that might have been a likely disguise for Addison. The letter I received was obviously written by an English woman, judging by her handwriting and the letter's layout. She wrote:

"In answer to your letter of October 18, I must protest that to guess at the identity of Alfonso Mariani just because his name has the same number of letters and the same initials as Addison Madeira seems to me ill-advised. Mariani sang the King in Aida at his debut, November 23, 1894, and later was heard as Pistola in Falstaff, Ferrando in Trovatore, Lodovico in Otello and Sparafucile (in Rigoletto). Perhaps these roles ring a bell with your Mr. Walsh. Regretting that I cannot be of more assistance, I am, Faithfully yours, MARY ELLIS PELTZ (Mrs. John DeWitt Peltz, archivist.)"

Quentin commented: "I don't believe that Madeira was Mariani, but I just suggested the possibility so the archivist could check out Mariani."

Now I'll backtrack to October 14, and quote from an interesting Riggs letter:

"Dear Jim: I got a letter from Bill Peters the other day . . . Saturday I was delighted to get a large box containing a bunch of photos that Bill sent me. Addison looks quite a bit older in them, so I imagine they were taken after he went back to Kansas City. There are several of them in Japanese costume in scenes from a play of a comic opera. Bill said that he appeared as Koko in 'The Mikado,' but I have seen 'The Mikado' several times and am sure these photos are not from that opera. There was also Madeira's own copy of the 1900 group photo of Edison artists, mounted on a large piece of cardboard and all the artists' names were printed at the bottom.

"Madeira was of Spanish descent, and his daughter was quite proud of the Madeira coat-of-arms, which she displayed in her home . . ."

Here, for the moment, I cease quoting to make some comments of my own. I am submitting some of the photos which Mr. Peters sent to Quentin to be reproduced with this article. I agree with him that the scenes are not from "The Mikado," but suggest that perhaps they may be from two musical comedies by Sidney Jones, which were sometimes called "the successors to 'The Mikado.'" One was "The Geisha" and the other "San Toy." Both were first produced in the 1890's. Unfortunately, I am not familiar with the music or the plots of these productions and have not obtained much information from reference books.

There was also a popular musical comedy called "A Chinese Honeymoon," which may be a possibility. The character in some of the pictures who looks as if he is threatening to toss a bomb appears more Chinese than Japanese to me, and more French than either. And Madeira, though he appears to be wearing a kimono, has a hair-do that might have been intended for a pigtail. Can any reader who knows something of "The Geisha," "San Toy," and/or "A Chinese Honeymoon," enlighten us as to the possibility of the photos being from one of them?

I agree with Quentin that the pictures must have been taken after the end of Madeira's recording career. In the 1900 Edison group picture his hair appears to be thinning, but he seems almost bald in the other photos. The Edison has already been reproduced in HOBBIES for January, 1971, but since the copy that Quentin made for me from Madeira's original is clearer than any other I have seen I am sending it to be used again.

III Finally, the Facts about Madeira

The climax of Quentin Riggs' "Madeira madness" was near at hand. On October 20 he wrote to tell me that the baritone's death certificate at last had been found:

"Dear Jim: I was delighted to receive a copy of A. D. Madeira's death certificate today! . . . Madeira's grandson, Bill Peters, was mistaken when he said his grandfather died in 1934. It was really 1930. And his middle name was Dashiell. You were right when you said you thought Madeira was 40 or 45 when the Edison photo was taken in 1900. He was 41 or 42.

"Bill said that he was not very successful in business, and lost his shirt in the marble business he was involved in after he went back to Kansas City. He probably was unsuccessful in Minneapolis with the typewriter company, since he stayed with them only one year. I imagine he used his initials on records because his full name might be easily misunderstood as announced on the wax cylinders of the 1890's . . ."

The death certificate, of which Quentin sent me a copy, revealed that Madeira died October 8, 1930, at his home, 6139 Brookside Boulevard, Kansas City. His age was 71 years, 10 months and 23 days. His wife, as has already been mentioned, was Caddie W. Madeira. His birthplace was given as Covington, Ky., and his occupation as "retired." His mother, Louise Izette Versailles, was a native of Kentucky. The attending physician's statement said that he had attended on Madeira from January, 1928, to the day he died, and that his death occurred at 10:30 p.m., October 8, 1930. It was attributed to uremia, from which he had been suffering for three days. Arteriosclerosis of five years duration was cited as a contributing factor. Burial was on October 10 at Elmwood Cemetery. Information on the certificate was provided by the singer's son-in-law, John J. Flood.

IV. In Conclusion

Quentin's thirst for information, however, was not satiated, as is shown in his letter to me of November 14:

"Dear Jim: I recently wrote to the Kansas City Librarian, Virginia M. Wright, to express my gratitude for the help she has given me in tracking down information about A. D. Madeira, and also to express my surprise that she was able to send me newspaper articles reporting the deaths of the singer's father and daughter, but not of the baritone himself. I was delighted to hear from her again yesterday and to learn that she has found the singer's obit at last!

"One obvious error in the obit is the statement that Madeira was born in Kansas City. His death certificate says he was born in Covington, Ky., and his father's obit confirms that the family was living there at the time of his birth. The obit also says he was a Metropolitan Opera artist for 15 years. That would mean he was with the Met from about 1885 to 1900 . . . This article said he returned to Kansas City '20 years ago' (1910). Of course we know he returned there in 1906.

"I was interested to learn that Addison attended Westminster College at Fulton, Mo., where Winston Churchill made a historic speech during, I think, the 1950's. My brother, Richard, went to school there for a year or two . . ."

Quentin enclosed a copy of an article from an unspecified newspaper, but probably the Star, telling of the singer's death. It was headed: "ADDISON D. MADEIRA DEAD . . . FOR FIFTEEN YEARS KANSAS CITIAN WAS A METROPOLITAN BARITONE," and the remainder of the news story went:

"Addison D. Madeira, 71 years old, former baritone of the Metropolitan Grand Opera Company (Sic), died last night at his home, 6139 Brookside Blvd. He was widely known in musical circles here and in the East.

"Mr. Madeira, son of the late Dr. A. D. Madeira, pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church here, had been ill some time. He was born in Kansas City, and had lived here all his life, except for the 15 years he was with the Metropolitan Company in New York. He retired about 20 years ago and returned to Kansas City.

"After receiving his grade and high school education here, Mr. Madeira attended Westminster College at Fulton, Mo., and William Jewell College at Liberty, Mo. He was the first student to enroll in the Woodland School, 8th Street and Woodland Avenue. He later was one of the first singers to make phonograph records . . . Funeral services will be held Friday at the Stine & McClure Chapel, 3235 Gillham Plaza. His only son, A. D. Madeira III, died of influenza in France while he was serving as a member of the first A. E. F. unit."

I have omitted the list of Madeira's surviving three sisters and his brother, who have already been mentioned in his father's death notice.

And so we have arrived at the conclusion of Quentin Riggs' successful efforts to learn as much as possible about the life and achievements of the baritone singer, Addison Dashiell Madeira. I am grateful to my friend for sharing his knowledge and mak-

(Continued on next page)

THE TOLEDO MUSEUM OF ART

Glass is to Toledo, Ohio, a busy midwestern industrial city densely populated with factories, what beer is to Milwaukee or steel is to Pittsburgh. A good percentage of the city's 350,000 citizens derive their livelihoods from the manufacture of glass, and a good many others work for the many companies servicing the glass industry.

Toledo is the "home town" of three giant American glass manufacturers — Owens-Illinois, Libbey-Owens-Ford and Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corporation; and the city proudly proclaims itself the "Glass Capital of the World."

But in Toledo, glass is more than just a product. It also represents in the world-famous glass collections at The Toledo Museum of Art an important cultural heritage.

The Toledo Museum of Art opened its new John D. Biggers Glass Study Room, in September. It now has one of the finest and more comprehensive collections of glass in the world. The more than 5,000 pieces of glass contained in its collection span the entire history of glassmaking — from the ancient civilizations of Egypt, Greece and Rome through the Renaissance and Age of Enlightenment into modern times.

The Museum has a rich collection of European glass, and the room contains important examples of glass from Belgium, France, Germany and Central Europe, Great Britain, Holland, Italy, Spain, Sweden and Switzerland. There are many contemporary European works including some glass crafted in Israel.

The American glass shown in the Room includes historical flasks and paperweights. Arranged alphabetically by state, within each state category it is sorted by factory or area of origin. Among the examples of glass objects made in Connecticut, Massachusetts (New England Glass Company and the Boston and Sandwich Glass Company), New Jersey, New York (Tiffany and Steuben), Ohio (Libbey) and Pennsylvania (Stiegel). Three cases are devoted to the display of Libbey Glass, which was made in Toledo after 1888.

The most important examples of glass in the Museum's collection are housed in its dramatic Art in Glass Gallery, a two-story "museum within a museum" containing more than 1,800 objects of glass. The gallery, which attracts tens of thousands of visitors each year, was opened in 1970. It was the gift of the late Harold Boeschstein, the Museum president and chairman of Owens-Corning Fiberglas, and his wife.

Museum International Glass Center
The Toledo Museum of Art has been recognized as an international center for the creative exhibition and study of glass since it was founded 75 years ago by Edward Drummond Libbey—a man who found fortune in glass-making. Much of the Museum's ancient glass collection was given by Mr. Libbey who avidly collected both glass and paintings (which he also gave to the Museum).

The Museum also was the pioneering force behind the revival of glass craftsmanship in this country, and it organized a series of seminars and special exhibitions devoted to this art form during the 1960's and early 1970's. Many of today's leading glass craftsmen, such as Harvey Littleton and Dominick Labino, first learned their skills in Museum seminars. They and other glassmakers gained national recognition through Museum-oriented exhibitions such as the American Glass National series which circulated throughout the United States.

The Toledo Museum has also organized a number of important historical exhibitions on glass including two covering the output of the New England Glass Company and its successor the Libbey Glass Company and most recently an exhibition of Steuben glass which also traveled to eight other American museums including the Smithsonian Institution, the Corning Museum of Glass and the Boston Museum of Fine Arts.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTIST

(Continued from preceding page)

ing it possible for me to write what, in my opinion, is one of the most interesting articles I have produced for HOBBIES — an opinion that I hope some readers will share. I concur, too, in his gratitude to the helpful historical society and library workers in Minneapolis, Columbia and Kansas City, who provided much of the information on which this biographical sketch is based, and to Mr. Madeira's grandson, Bill Peters, for his generous aid. (By a coincidence, Bill lives at 9340 RIGGS St., Shawnee Mission, Kan. 66212!) Without their help the life story of A. D. Madeira could not have been written — and, especially, if it had not been for Quentin's burning interest it still would be an untold tale.

The End

Postscript. — Since this article was completed, William Peters has told Quentin Riggs that Fay Madeira, who appeared in the 1902 Minneapolis city directory, was A. D. Madeira's eldest daughter, who married John J. Flood and died in Texas around 1946. He is unable to identify Pauline Madeira, who was also in that directory. His mother, Harriett Peters, was born in 1894 in Trenton, Mo. As a child she appeared on the stage with her father in "The Bohemian Girl." Mr. Peters believes that "Caddie" was a nickname for his grandmother, but says he doesn't know her real name. She has been dead 30 years or thereabouts, and was "somewhere between 80 and 85," he believes, when she died.

This footed, cut glass punch bowl is one of the treasures in the world-famous glass collections of the Toledo Museum of Art. This fine production was made about 1902 by the Libbey Glass Company. It is cut with "geometrical rosette motifs," and has a diameter of 14½ inches, and a height of 12¾ inches.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward G. Kirby gave the piece to the museum.